South Side enclave drawn into spotlight

By William Lee
Chicago Tribune

If Jackson Park Highlands — the posh but tiny 16-square-block neighborhood of elegant, regal homes sitting at the foot of Jackson Park — is still a secret to most outside of the South Side, resident and businesswoman Alisa Starks said she doesn't expect it to be for much longer.

The glare of the coming Obama Presidential Center and the proposed multimillion-dollar Tiger Woods golf course in Jackson Park have reflected brightly on nearby communities like hers, though she thinks the Highlands should be well-known for other reasons.

New homeowners receive more than just a literal welcome basket when they arrive in the tree-lined and neatly manicured Highlands. They're introduced into an insular network where residents — professionals, academics and retirees — discuss neighborhood concerns, organize events like the annual Halloween party that draws hundreds of children, and alert neighbors when they're leaving town on vacation.

"If someone's gate's open, we close it. If someone's sick, I make a pot of soup — it's that type of neighborhood. That's who we are," said real estate agent Mary Ellen Holt, who moved to the Highlands in 2003 and has raised two daughters there. "With all of these amenities, when you add them all up, there's no place like this."

More and more people have begun to discover the small enclave. Its proximity to the site of the Obama center plus a University of Chicago homeownership assistance program have boosted interest, and home sales are booming. Doctors, professors, lawyers and others say they have been attracted to the large

1963 Loyola basketball team not known only for winning, but also for breaking down barriers

By Shannon Ryan

Loyola forward Jerry Harkness didn't fully grasp the significance of the game about to be played on March 15, 1963, when he stepped to center court and shook hands with his white opponent.

"I get there and you see these flashbulbs — pop, pop, pop — and I thought, 'Hmm, this is more than a game,' " said Harkness, who is black. "It just felt more like this is history."

The landmark contest later was named the "Game of Change" because it featured an all-white Mississippi State team that defied its state governor's orders banning it from crossing state lines to compete against the integrated Ramblers.

Memories of Loyola's historic role are being recalled as the current Ramblers embark on their first NCAA tournament in 33 years. The squad from 55 years ago won the NCAA tournament championship, the only team from Illinois with that distinction.

Harkness was at center court again last week celebrating with the 2018 Ramblers in St. Louis as they earned an automatic tournament bid with their Missouri Valley Conference championship. He beamed holding the gold trophy and shaking hands with each player.

"That is the ultimate change, when you talk about integration," Loyola coach Porter Moser said. "As I hugged Jerry Harkness, I told all those guys how much the past is part of our future. The '63

Downstate gains sway in race for governor

Candidates in both parties see importance of winning rural votes

By Rick Pearson
Chicago Tribune

At a recent Democratic governor candidate forum, J.B. Pritzker dropped some local touchstones into his opening remarks.

"I've been listening to people all across the state of Illinois, especially those here in central Illinois, and how neglected you all have been," he told the audience at the University of Illinois at Springfield. "Specifically, I've listened to the students and faculty here at UIS, to parishioners at Union Baptist Church, the farmers at the Farm Progress Show in Decatur and to early childhood educators in Champaign."

The church has a predominantly African-American congregation, dating to 1871. The farm show is the Lollapalooza of the agriculture business. And Pritzker mentioning them was a way to demonstrate his Downstate bona fides.

For rival Daniel Biss, earning credibility in that region has meant regular stops on college campuses with a vow of free tuition as he tries to capture the youth vote. Chris Kennedy also has made regular appearances Downstate and has proposed a statewide public works program to help create construction jobs throughout Illinois.

It's not just the Democrats. State Rep. Jeanne Ives has been traveling the state, hitting small towns where she hopes to pile up big margins in her Republican primary challenge to Gov. Bruce Rauner. For his part, the governor has spent recent weeks in Downstate media markets attempting to sell his re-election bid.

Kennedy borrows a line from Harold Washington

Chris Kennedy has taken a page out of the late Mayor Harold Washington's playbook in talking about all the cash J.B. Pritzker is throwing at black ward organizations.

Pritzker needs to buy forgiveness after those insulting comments he made about African-American politicians were caught on FBI tape and made public in the Tribune last month.

Since then, Pritzker has been meeting privately with black ministers and writing checks to black ward organizations — and I figure some walking-around cash, too — to buy some love.

A whole lotta love.

"Since J.B. Pritzker started his apology tour for those comments about African-American leadership, he's given $374,000 to political organizations across the state, more than $159,000 of which went to committeemen in the Cook County Democratic Party," Kennedy said. Pritzker recently put $7 million more of his own money into his campaign for governor.

"With the addition of $7 million just two weeks before the election, he is poised to spend approximately $500,000 a day to try and buy victory," Kennedy said Friday. "He's taken pay-to-play politics and amplified the system from pay-to-play to fund-to-forgive and fee-to-forget. He's buying off the leadership."

Pritzker is the candidate of Boss Madigan and Mayor Rahm Emanuel, and has spent an obscene $63 million for the primary alone so far, and he's still polling only in the low 30s.

That's political malpractice.

In the last days of this Democratic campaign, the key to victory — as it always has been for Democrats — will be found in black neighborhoods, with black votes.

Many voters are undecided. The Kennedy name is strong in the African-American community, particularly among voters who were there in the civil rights struggle. They remember Kennedy's father, Sen. Robert Kennedy, assassinated in 1968.

And so, after that FBI tape where Pritzker counsels then-Gov. Rod Blagojevich on ways to find the "least offensive" black candidates to support, in order to handle "your African-American thing," Pritzker needs love from African-American ward organizations.

So Kennedy invoked the memory of Harold Washington in his final campaign days before the March 20 Democratic primary for governor.

"If you're in a nursing home and they ask you to support J.B. Pritzker, ask them if they got a government contract from the state of Illinois. If your ward organization urges you to vote for Pritzker, ask the leadership if they took money from him. If your pastor says vote for Pritzker, ask if they took money from J.B.

"And then remember the words of Harold Washington — take his money, just give me your vote."

I remember the words of Washington, Chicago's first black mayor.

I was there covering Washington's stunning mayoral campaign against incumbent Mayor Jane Byrne and Cook County State's Attorney Richard Daley, who would later become mayor or himself.

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Back in Harold's day, white candidates would load trucks full of hams and turkeys, deliver them to black Democratic ward committeemen to pass out in African-American neighborhoods.

The Democratic machine organizations operated much the same way as Pritzker is operating now, by "reaching out" to pastors and black ward organizations. Back in Harold's day, white candidates would load trucks full of hams and turkeys, deliver them to black Democratic ward committeemen to pass out in African-American neighborhoods.

The hams, the turkeys, the cash, were tokens of political love from the machine.

Washington knew that voters — and ward organizations — wouldn't turn down free money, or free poultry and pork, even from a political machine once commonly thought of as racist. So Washington would tell the people to "take the hams, take the turkey, take the money, and vote for Harold."

And they did just that.

Kennedy made his remarks standing in the cold outside 111 W. Washington St., the offices of the Illinois Democratic Party, whose chairman is the Pritzker guy, Boss Madigan.

Kennedy has slammed Madigan for his indifferent handling of sexual harassment complaints against women, and for making a fortune in a private tax reduction law business that Kennedy and most others see as a blatant conflict of interest.

And the liberal Democratic wing led by another leading candidate for governor, Dan Biss, has been pressuring Madigan as well.

Madigan has been so unnerved that he asked Sen. Dick Durbin to make robo calls on Madigan's behalf. The idea is to shore up Madigan's hold on the Democratic Party as its Illinois chairman.

In the calls, Durbin ridiculously refers to Madigan as a "true progressive," which is the most laughable line of this entire political cycle.

If Pritzker fails after spending $63 million or more, it will be because of the African-American vote going to Kennedy. And that spells danger for another Pritzker ally, Rahm Emanuel.

The mayor will have trouble enough holding onto City Hall. The last thing he needs is to lose Pritzker, and see black voters energized going into the 2019 mayoral campaign.

At Kennedy's news conference, he was told black Democratic ward committeemen were upset at his suggestion they could be bought off by Pritzker cash.

"Did they take the money?" Kennedy said.

Yes, they took the money.

"I'd say they took the money. When you take the money, you took the money. And then you've been taken," Kennedy said.

Clearly, Pritzker wants the voters' love.

"But love isn't enough," an African-American Democratic ward committeeman told me when Pritzker's black apology tour began. "J.B.'s got to show us some glove."

"Glove? G-l-o-v-e, glove?

"Yeah, 'glove,' " he said with a laugh. "That's love with a 'g' on it. You understand?"

Aykroyd is on a mission from Kennedy

The Kennedy family name still has sway in Hollywood, it seems.

Not only have comedian Larry David and diva Barbra Streisand donated to Chris Kennedy's gubernatorial campaign fund, but now Dan Aykroyd has cut a "Blues Brothers"-themed ad for Kennedy.

"The Blues Brothers had to break many laws in order to pay the Cook County property assessor's office $5,000 for Sister Mary Stigmata, to save their Catholic orphanage," Aykroyd says in the ad, in which he is filmed working under the hood of a police squad car. "Thirty-eight years later, the Cook County assessor is still ripping off Chicagoans. Dirty politicians have made a fortune by enforcing unfair tax assessments.

"Now you know I love Chicago, and I know that the only way that corruption will end is if Chris Kennedy is elected governor of Illinois on March 20. Please, end the racket!"

The ad plays on the cult movie, which ends with characters played by Aykroyd and John Belushi paying a Cook County property tax bill to a clerk portrayed by Steven Spielberg just in time to save an orphanage.

KENNEDY FOR ILLINOIS

Actor Dan Aykroyd filmed a "Blues Brothers"-themed ad for Democratic governor candidate Chris Kennedy.

A campaign spokesperson for sitting Cook County Assessor Joseph Berrios, who is up for re-election this year, declined to comment.

But Kennedy isn't the only candidate in Illinois' Democratic primary for governor with Hollywood connections. State Sen. Daniel Biss on Friday is scheduled to campaign with "The Social Network" star Jesse Eisenberg, who was nominated for an Oscar for his portrayal of Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg.

Biss also this week scored the endorsement of Russian punk activist band Pussy Riot.

Records show David gave Kennedy's campaign $1,000 last May. Streisand also gave $1,000, in June. The Aykroyd ad will play digitally statewide, but there are no plans to use it on broadcast TV, the Kennedy campaign said.

Kennedy and Biss' main opponent for the Democratic nomination, J.B. Pritzker, has not announced any celebrity endorsements. His campaign spokeswoman Galia Slayen said, "We focus on getting endorsements from Illinois residents."

Gov. Bruce Rauner is not known to have any celebrity backers, though his primary rival, state Rep. Jeanne Ives, claims the support of nationally syndicated conservative talk radio host Mike Gallagher. The Rauner campaign did not respond Friday.

Curling's Matt Hamilton has 'stache for fun

Gold medalist Matt Hamilton and his U.S. curling teammates often were characterized as the "everyman" Olympians.

Well, how's this for everyman: His day job as a research and development technician for consumer goods company Spectrum Brands brings him to Chicago for the International Home and Housewares Show at McCormick Place on Sunday and Monday.

Hamilton chatted with Inc. about his Pyeongchang experience, his job as a product tester, comparisons to Nick Offerman's Ron Swanson character and more.

RICHARD HEATHCOTE/GETTY

On who would play him in a movie: "I think Nick Offerman or Danny McBride would do a really good job. Offerman because the mustache is perfect and McBride from 'Eastbound and Down' as Kenny Powers would be pretty awesome. ... I love 'Parks and Rec.' I love all of Nick's stand-up. It's really cool to know that he knows me and knows what I'm doing. ... It wasn't like (Ron Swanson) was the mustache inspiration, but it confirmed to me that mustaches can be very good-looking."

About that glorious 'stache: "I only do the mustache every curling season for fun. ... It's kind of like a look and you gotta own it if you're going to rock it. And I was like, I can own that. Remington, (one of) Spectrum Brands, said keep it for the year. ... (They) wanted to hire me out to their Beard Boss team, which is like their personalities that go around, do appearances and go to like beard competitions, social media and whatnot. ... Part of the Beard Boss team is that you can't lose the beard/mustache. That's fine by me, but my wife's going to have a problem."

On suddenly becoming a household name and face: "To be honest, it's very unusual for the kind of attention I'm getting being recognized. We went up to New York for a smaller media stint and we were pulled aside on the street with people saying, 'Hey, we watched your game at 4 a.m. here.' "

On the 'everyman' label: "It can go both ways for sure. There's a meme that the U.S. men's Olympic curling team looks like a bunch of dads trying to get away from their families for the weekend and found themselves up at the Olympics. It's hilarious. I get it, people think that we are, like, normal guys. When they think Olympics they think of like these chiseled, thick, super-in-shape athletes. You know, I might not have the six-pack, but I challenge anybody to sweep the way I do for 18 games, which is what I did at the Olympics, and tell me it wasn't taxing."

On his job with Spectrum Brands, which will feature him at its booth at the housewares convention: "So I do research and development for the home appliance division — pretty much anything you put on your counter (such as blenders) is something that I would test. So we test repeatability, we will test speed and timing and other models. ... It's about consistency and routine, which to me in my line of work outside of Spectrum Brands, in curling, is super important."

On getting the VIP treatment in Hollywood: "Multiple people (have approached them about movie rights and deals). As we speak, I'm packing up some of my stuff from the lovely Justine Bateman's house, who kind of harassed us on Twitter. ... She told us her vision for a potential movie on this."

■ The Sunday Travel section includes a story that mentions Cancun, Mexico, and the U.S. State Department's stance on travel to this popular resort area in the state of Quintana Roo. On March 7, the State Department issued a security alert for the Caribbean resort city of Playa del Carmen, roughly 40 miles from Cancun. The alert cites an unspecified "security threat" in Playa del Carmen and prohibits U.S. government employees from traveling there until further notice. The local U.S. consular agency also has been closed. The Associated Press reported that Mexican officials say Playa del Carmen is safe, despite the U.S. security alert. The State Department suggests that Americans "exercise increased caution" when traveling in Quintana Roo.

Nasty political ads sway me — against source

MARY SCHMICH

Several political flyers have arrived in my mailbox recently that have been very effective in helping me decide how to vote for the next governor of Illinois.

According to the return address, they're paid for by JB FOR GOVERNOR and they've almost convinced me — not to vote for J.B. Pritzker.

Until the flyers started arriving, I had an open mind. I don't assume all billionaires are bad or that rich people can't care about the poor, and in Pritzker's ubiquitous Facebook ads — the man advertises more on Facebook than Gwyneth Paltrow's Goop — he talks the right talk, in the manner of an affable, feisty uncle.

But I believe the flyers. Not what they say, but what they reveal. And what they reveal is a man too ready to play nasty.

Flip the flyer over and there stands "Doris C., Registered Nurse," a middle-aged blond woman wearing a stethoscope and a white lab coat.

Another flyer features "Katie K., Math Teacher."

"The real Dan Biss?" tsks Katie, "I don't trust him to stand up for me and my family."

"Yvette D., Construction Worker" — arms crossed, yellow hardhat — is also disgruntled.

"The real Dan Biss?" Yvette warns. "Not for the middle class. Not someone I trust."

Nowhere on these flyers is there a whit of information about J.B. Pritzker.

In fact, the name Pritzker never even appears. If it weren't for the "JB" in the return address, a person might think these were truths handed down from on high, like the Bible or the yoga sutras.

I'm not here to advocate for Biss. I haven't ruled him out, but he has indulged in some negative advertising himself, notably a TV ad accusing Pritzker and Chris Kennedy, the other viable Democrat in the race, of tax scams.

But at least Biss appears in his ad — and he hasn't blasted my mailbox with negativity.

(By the way, when I went to watch the Biss ad Friday as part of an online news report, I had to first watch a paid ad for Pritzker — a canny counterattack.)

Negative ads aren't new, and conventional wisdom says they work. According to one study, they light up some part of the human brain that also responds to snakes, spiders and other creepy things that make you want to turn and run.

If you're made to see a candidate as a snake, apparently, you'll want to flee that candidate and run toward the less deadly creepy-crawler.

But I know I'm not alone when I say that nasty ads have the opposite effect on me: They make me want run away from the person who made or sent the ads.

Most candidates rely on attack advertising at some point, and I've voted for some politicians whose ads made me wince. In those cases, however, the candidate had some strong compensating virtue, and in virtually every case, their opponents' ads were at least as distasteful.

But when I've been ambivalent, a candidate's nasty ads have swayed me — against him or her.

In 2006, when Rod Blagojevich, the Democrat, was running for governor against Judy Baar Topinka, the Republican, I voted for Topinka.

Why? Because the flyers I kept getting from the Blagojevich campaign seemed unusually mean. Anyone who would play that dirty wasn't someone to be trusted.

To this day, I'm grateful to Blagojevich's nasty flyers for sparing me the regret of voting for a governor who would wind up in federal prison.

Politics is grounded in disagreement. How to make the world better? Tax cuts or tax hikes? What kind of health care? How much tax relief for mortgages? Who should be taking care of whom?

Disagreements inevitably get disagreeable.

But we've become too conditioned to the idea that politics has to be ugly, that we have no choice but to reward the nastiness.

While my mailbox has filled with Pritzker's attacks on Biss, I've also received flyers from two candidates in a different race that will be decided in the March 20 Illinois primary.

Neither of them attacks the other. Instead, they note a few things they've accomplished and make it clear some principles they stand for, which deserves this testimonial:

"Thanks for the positivity!" says "Mary S., Average Voter."

Plea deals for gun charges common in crush of cases

Suspect in Chicago cop's slaying got break in '09 while facing felonies

BY MEGAN CREPEAU
Chicago Tribune

Shomari Legghette in booking mugs, from left, in 2009, 2014 and 2018. The four-time felon was formally indicted Friday on dozens of counts in the shooting of Cmdr. Bauer.

Nine years before his arrest for allegedly gunning down Chicago police Cmdr. Paul Bauer in the Loop, Shomari Legghette appeared before a Cook County judge poised for a trial on gun and drug charges — serious felonies he had been charged with while on parole two years earlier.

Instead, at the last minute, prosecutors offered a deal, allowing Legghette to plead guilty to the least serious charge in return for a three-year prison sentence. Because he had already been in custody for more than a year, he walked free just a few weeks later.

Veteran lawyers say the deal handed Legghette in 2009 wasn't anything particularly unusual. For decades, in fact, the Cook County court system — indeed, criminal courts in big cities around the country — has faced a crush of felony cases every year, leaving little choice but to plea-bargain the vast majority to keep the system from collapsing.

"They're looking to get rid of cases," said longtime criminal-defense attorney Barry A. Spector. "Most judges' attitude is, well, if the parties think this is right, who's going to complain? Until you (allegedly) shoot a cop."

For the 3,378 unlawful use of a weapon cases resolved last year in Cook County, about 70 percent ended in a guilty plea, compared to just 14 percent that went to trial, according to data recently released by State's Attorney Kim Foxx's office.

In some more serious cases, that rate fell. For instance, guilty pleas in homicide and attempted homicide cases made up about 53 percent of the dispositions, while 37 percent went to trial.

The rest of the cases were resolved in a combination of ways — many thrown out, some found unfit for trial.

In the days after Bauer's killing outside the Thompson Center on Feb. 13, Legghette's record was scrutinized from every angle. Critics said a four-time felon like him shouldn't have been out on the street in the first place. A Police Department chaplain at Bauer's funeral compared Legghette to a leper, too toxic to be among the public.

At a news conference after Legghette was charged in Bauer's slaying, Chicago police Superintendent Eddie Johnson called the shooting "a devastating reminder" that too many repeat gun offenders remain on the streets.

Johnson also cited Legghette's arrest in 2007 — the same charges that ended in his enviable plea deal two years later — as evidence that he was a dangerous person who should be locked up.

Legghette was still on parole after completing about half of a 16-year prison sentence for armed robbery when Chicago police stopped him while he was driving the wrong way on a one-way South Side street in November 2007, according to an arrest report.

Police alleged an officer spotted Legghette put a chrome revolver on the floor of the car and a plastic bag full of heroin under the driver's seat. A search of the van also turned up a black bulletproof vest, according to the report. He was charged with unlawful use of a weapon by a felon with body armor, possession of heroin with intent to deliver and possession of a weapon with a defaced serial number — all felonies.

For two years, the case dragged on at the county courthouse in south suburban Bridgeview — another common byproduct of a seemingly overwhelmed court system.

Over that time, Legghette was in and out of custody. He was returned to state prison for a time since his arrest violated his parole. Then after his release from custody, he was arrested on a drug offense — a violation of his bail bond that sent him back to jail. However, he was released again after the drug charges were dropped.

Finally, on Oct. 8, 2009, his drug and gun case was set to go to trial in Judge John Wasilewski's Bridgeview courtroom, records show.

The transcript shows Wasilewski ready to go to trial that day because of how long the case had been lingering and because other trials set to go that day had already fallen through.

But a prosecutor told the judge, the transcript showed, that a new lawyer was set to defend Legghette, likely signaling that the trial would need to be continued. Worse, the new lawyer had told the prosecutor that he was unable to make it to court because he was on his way to a chiropractor after hurting his back, according to the transcript.

"If they're not guilty, they should get out. If they're guilty, they should start serving their sentence. I'm trying to move my call. It's a very heavy call."

— Retired Cook County Judge John Wasilewski, about the realities of a crowded docket

The judge then passed the case to presumably deal with other matters on his court call.

When the case was called again that same day, Wasilewski announced a dramatic change in plans: In the interim, prosecutors had reached a plea deal with Legghette. There would be no trial.

Without further delay, Legghette was sentenced to three years in prison after pleading guilty to possession of a weapon with a defaced serial number, the least serious charge he faced. The weapon and heroin charges were dropped.

Legghette was given credit for the year and three months he had already spent in custody on the charges. Within a few weeks, he was released on parole, records show.

While lawyers interviewed by the Tribune said there were too many variables at play to predict what sentence Legghette realistically could have faced if he had been convicted of the most serious charges at trial, those Class X felonies potentially carried sentences of as much as 30 years in prison or more.

In an interview with the Tribune, Wasilewski, who retired from the bench in 2010, did not recall the charges against Legghette — one of as many as 1,000 cases he said he routinely disposed of annually at the time.

After reviewing a transcript of the guilty plea, Wasilewski said the record clearly showed he was fine with the case going to trial but that the lawyers suddenly reached a plea deal.

The judge acknowledged, though, that he had an incentive to move cases toward resolution, and if the trial was delayed, the case would have likely been further delayed, perhaps for many months.

"I used to use the analogy, it's like an airport, either you land today or you're going to the back of the line," he said.

"I'm not going to give a continuance on the day of trial to bring in a lawyer who says they're not even going to be ready for trial," Wasilewski said. "So then we're going to try the case four years (after it was charged)?"

"If they're not guilty, they should get out. If they're guilty, they should start serving their sentence. I'm trying to move my call. It's a very heavy call."

Multiple attorneys agreed, saying that in a high-volume courtroom, all the parties might be inclined to end a 2-year-old case still lingering on the docket.

They also said it isn't particularly unusual to work out a plea deal on the day of a scheduled trial.

Any number of developments could have caused the about-face.

Sometimes, attorneys feel waiting to work out a plea deal until the eleventh hour strengthens their hand.

"Both sides have prepared their case. They truly know the strengths and weaknesses," said criminal defense attorney Adam Sheppard. "Sometimes it takes ... seeing the whites of the eyes of the other side."

Given the volume of cases that grind through the system, the whole operation would slow to even more of a crawl without the plea deals.

"If everyone went to trial, it would be impossible," said Dawn Projansky, also a criminal defense attorney. "To say, let's tie up the system, go to trial on everything, wouldn't be correct for a lot of clients. ... If it's a close call, then it's scary because the sentencing can be so high. So sometimes the offer can't be refused."

Proposal: Give civilians control of police

Cops dismiss panel that would have power over policy, superintendent

By Annie Sweeney
Chicago Tribune

A seven-member civilian board would have the power to fire Chicago's police superintendent and set department policy under a far-reaching proposal by some of Chicago's leading community organizations that quickly drew criticism from police.

The long-awaited report from the Grassroots Alliance for Police Accountability calls for Mayor Rahm Emanuel to also retain the ability to fire a superintendent. But extending that authority to a civilian commission would be a dramatic change in a city where City Hall has long held tight controls over what happens at police headquarters.

Under the proposal, the superintendent and command staff would continue to run day-to-day operations, but the commission would have final say on policy decisions.

The mayor's office had no immediate comment, but police Superintendent Eddie Johnson, at a recruitment event Saturday, sharply criticized the proposal, saying no one from the alliance met with him or his staff over the last year and a half of its work.

"We're in the middle of a serious crime fight, and we're finally making real progress, so I don't know how you can turn over crime strategy and every policing decision to some group of people who have absolutely no law enforcement experience," Johnson told reporters. "The two most important things to me are the safety of the people of this city and the necessary reforms we are making to strengthen trust.

"I would have been happy to share my thoughts with this group, but in the entire 18 months they were gathering input, they never bothered to meet with me or with anyone at CPD," he said.

Some 13 community groups, including longtime grass-roots and neighborhood organizations from all over the city, began their work in 2016 after the Mayor's Police Accountability Task Force recommended that the city create a community oversight board.

The proposal calls for the creation of a Commission for Public Safety and Accountability to guide leadership, direction and policy on policing in Chicago. Its oversight would extend beyond the Police Department to the Civilian Office of Police Accountability, which investigates police misconduct allegations, and the Chicago Police Board, which decides discipline.

It also calls for councils to be set up in each of the city's 22 police districts that would serve as the "eyes and ears" of the commission and also select its members.

Police reform has been a critical issue in Chicago since November 2015, when Emanuel was forced by a judge's order to release video of white Officer Jason Van Dyke shooting Laquan McDonald, a black teen, 16 times. The 2014 video sparked sustained street protests rooted in decades of complaints about police brutality and misconduct, particularly among African-Americans. Then-police Superintendent Garry McCarthy was fired, Cook County State's Attorney Anita Alvarez lost re-election, and Van Dyke became the first Chicago cop in decades to be indicted for first-degree murder for a fatal on-duty shooting; he awaits trial.

The group's report and recommended ordinance are the result of some 100 community meetings and research into cities that have already turned to civilian oversight, said Adam Gross, director of justice reform at Business and Professional People for the Public Interest, a public policy institute that advised the organizers.

Gross said Ald. Roderick Sawyer, 6th, and Harry Osterman, 48th, have signed on to sponsor the ordinance and that alliance members have met with 22 aldermen. The group hopes the ordinance will be introduced at a City Council meeting later this month.

The draft ordinance poses a political conundrum for the City Council and Emanuel, who is seeking a third term next year. There has been a sustained and vocal outcry from numerous activists and civil rights attorneys for department reform, many of them buoyed by a U.S. Department of Justice finding in 2016 that the Police Department engaged in decades of civil rights abuses in minority neighborhoods.

But the idea is likely to be met with intense scrutiny and debate considering the massive changes proposed. Many rank-and-file police officers are likely to bridle at the idea of a new layer of outside oversight by civilians.

"It's a fairly big transition from the history of policing in Chicago," said Lori Lightfoot, who heads the Chicago Police Board and also chaired a special city task force that issued a report calling for civilian oversight. "Many cities have some kind of a city body that has oversight. It is just never something that has been done (here).

"That is a big change, and, as drafted, it is intended to take a lot of control out of the hands of the mayor. That is a major departure. ... I view this as a milestone in a very important community discussion that will continue after the ordinance is introduced."

The Chicago Fraternal Order of Police, the union representing rank-and-file officers, issued a statement by email that called the proposed changes "ludicrous."

"The political leaders of the city should stop building their political power on the backs of police officers who risk their lives every day and instead provide money for enough officers and equipment to allow them to protect the public," the statement said.

The reports' authors say they are prepared for pushback and welcome debate. They also value the coming election cycle.

"The best time to push a hard issue like this is in the window before an election," Gross said. "Because it's harder for people to run away from issues."

Samuel Walker, a national policing expert, said a groundswell of support for public oversight in policing has grown as more and more troubling police shootings and incidents of abuse against people of color have been caught on video. There is a growing acceptance, he said, that those historically charged with guiding and monitoring police — city councils and mayors — have failed.

"We are in the midst of a significant period of change," said Walker, a professor emeritus at the University of Nebraska who twice came to Chicago to meet with the alliance. "We need to bridge our gap, our racial divide and (create) the process where people from neighborhoods that are almost entirely African-American and Hispanic will have representation."

Under the proposal, three community members would be elected every two years to councils set up in each of the city's 22 police districts. These "district councils" would focus on improving relations between police in the neighborhoods and also take on the critical role of selecting commissioners for four-year terms on the overarching civilian board.

Commission applicants would be required to live in Chicago and hold extensive work experience in fields including law, public policy, mental health, social work, law enforcement and community organizing. The proposal also mentions seeking advocates who have worked on behalf of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community and those with disabilities. At least two members must be lawyers with at least 10 years of experience practicing civil rights or criminal law.

The commission would be charged with helping name a superintendent by selecting three finalists for the mayor to consider. This task is currently left to the city's Police Board, a mayor-appointed panel, though Emanuel bypassed that process in selecting Eddie Johnson as the current superintendent.

While the mayor would retain the ability to fire the superintendent, the commission would also gain the authority to remove the superintendent "for cause," according to the proposal. The decision requires 30 days' advance notice to the superintendent and allows for an appeal to the City Council, which could overturn the decision by a two-thirds vote.

The power to remove the superintendent, the report said, would be "narrow."

"That is defined to include reasons like incompetence, neglect of duty, or misconduct that could impeach or undermine public confidence in the Superintendent," the report said.

While the proposal gives the commission no authority to review individual disciplinary decisions by COPA, it would have the power to hire and fire the head of that police oversight agency as well as the head of and members of the Police Board. Those hiring decisions would be subject to City Council confirmation.

The proposal calls for a $2.8 million budget to pay for a 15-member staff, including an executive director and policy analysts. Commission and district council members would be paid stipends.

The group relied on Los Angeles' Board of Police Commissioners as a guide in its design for the proposed Chicago commission. The Los Angeles commission functions as a board of directors, setting policy and hiring the police chief. In one key difference, however, the LA commission members are appointed by the mayor and approved by the City Council.

Seattle established an advisory community oversight board in 2013 under a consent decree the city reached with the Justice Department following a finding of unconstitutional policing there. The board has 21 members — seven each picked by the mayor, the City Council and the commission itself. Three of those positions are designated for members of the Police Department.

According to the draft ordinance in Chicago, police officers could apply for a spot on the commission only after they had been off the force for at least three years.

Walker, the policing expert, applauded Seattle's decision to include officers on its board. "That is an extremely important innovation," he said. "They haven't had a seat at the table in decades of police reform. ... They need to be part of the discussion. They can have a voice in shaping policy."

What civilian oversight in Chicago could look like has been the subject of intense questions for some time.

A few months after the release of the McDonald video, Emanuel's handpicked policing task force recommended in a report the formation of a community oversight board that would monitor the Police Department and police disciplinary bodies.

In October 2016, the City Council passed the Emanuel-backed ordinance establishing a better-funded COPA to replace the often-ineffective Independent Police Review Authority. The ordinance also put in place a new deputy inspector general for public safety in the city inspector general's office.

The ordinance did not, however, include the community oversight board. Emanuel vowed to create the board but deferred to community groups' requests that they help design it. Those groups have spent nearly two years holding public forums and hammering out their proposal.

And now they are ready to shift the conversation to City Hall.

"We are delivering, and if the mayor and aldermen are true to what they've said about wanting that community process to develop, we should be getting public hearings on this ordinance," said Luis Carrizales, associate director of city and county policing for the Community Renewal Society, which works to eliminate race and class barriers and is part of the alliance.

"If they have other ideas about what might work better, those should be included in that public debate."

According to Redfin.com, Jackson Park Highlands is one of the hottest neighborhoods in Chicago — defined as an area with homes that are likely to be sold within two weeks.

homes that cost the same as two- or three-bedroom condos in other communities.

"I think it's certainly kind of a hidden secret that this place is here," said Charlie Barlow, director of Roosevelt University's Policy Research Collaborative, who moved into a three-story, 13-room American Foursquare-style home in the Highlands with his family and their boxer mix Baxter in July 2016. "(The Obama center) was announced after we moved in, so it was very exciting for us to know that that was coming to the neighborhood."

The Obama Foundation announced Jackson Park as the site of the presidential center in July 2016. The following year, Woodlawn, the closest neighborhood to the proposed site, was declared a hot neighborhood by Redfin.com, a national real estate brokerage.

Now, Redfin.com says, the Highlands has joined Woodlawn as one of the hottest neighborhoods in Chicago — defined as an area with homes that are likely to be sold within two weeks. By that standard, the Highlands is comparable to the city's other hot neighborhoods, including Bridgeport, Beverly, Hyde Park and even the Gold Coast. But the number of Highlands homes available is far more limited than in other hot neighborhoods.

Since 2015, nearly 30 Highlands homes (11 percent) have been sold, according to property records.

Infused with new life and energy from new homeowners, some Highlands residents like Starks are hopeful that the presidential center could be the catalyst to revitalizing the struggling business corridor along East 71st Street, which could, in turn, help heal the troubled greater South Shore community, of which the Highlands is a part.

Resident Charlie Barlow said he believes stakeholders are responsible for ensuring investment in the area benefits all.

The president of the local homeowners group would like to see a revival of the 71st Street business corridor, but he remains skeptical that the Obama center will be the catalyst.

Historic homes

An anomaly among South Side neighborhoods, the Highlands is a diverse, active, upscale community with massive homes that are a throwback to the decades when South Shore was a getaway for the rich in the 1900s. A swampy farmland during the time of early settlers, the Highlands was built as an 80-acre subdivision starting in 1905 by attorney and Chicago Ald. Frank Ira Bennett, and was one of three planned communities within the expanding city. Because of its collection of homes designed by notable architects, the Highlands was designated a historic district in October 1989.

The Highlands' homes are an inventive mix of architectural styles — from English Tudor and Greek Revival to French Provincial and Spanish Colonial — sitting on wide lots that would easily top $1 million in other neighborhoods. The area has also been home to a number of notable Chicagoans, including Nobel Prize-winning physicist Enrico Fermi, bluesman Bo Diddley, playwright David Mamet and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, along with two of his sons.

In recent decades, the Highlands has lived in the shadow of South Shore, which has had its share of struggles since the steady erosion of the black middle-class base beginning in the 1990s. South Shore was also hit hard by the foreclosure crisis and has since been flooded with low-income renters with subsidy vouchers. These are two elements that residents have linked to street crime. And then there's the loss of neighborhood staples like the Urban Partnership Bank, formerly ShoreBank, and the Dominick's grocer at 71st Street and Jeffery Boulevard, that has yet to be replaced.

A Highlands landmark district sign thanks Barack Obama, who at the time of installation was a state senator.

Russell Pike, president of the Jackson Park Highlands homeowners association, one of the oldest in the city, would like to see a renewed business corridor along 71st Street between Yates Boulevard and Stony Island Avenue, but he remains skeptical that either the Obama center or the golf course would be the spark the area needs.

"I'm not sure if the golf course is going to create an avenue of businesses wanting to develop in that area. I'm not even sure if the Obama center will do it as well, since (it's) going to be" at least a mile north, he said. "What's going to motivate someone to come another mile south?"

Pike also said he believes the spike in home sales lies not in the proximity to the presidential center, but to area beaches and lake trails, public transit and the area's increased diversity.

"I wouldn't say that a lot of these changes has to do with the Obama center. I don't know how far in advance people think, 'Well, I'm (going to) buy a house over here because in three years there's going to be the Obama center,' " said Pike, 67. "I think the selling point is we're very community-oriented (and) the neighbors look out for each other."

Even so, Highlands residents have found themselves increasingly on the front lines of heated discussions over the Obama center as fault lines between communities have emerged. The question is whether the center dedicated to the nation's first black president will have a positive transformative effect on poorer communities. Some fear that the Obama center will cater to elite, highly educated blacks while working-class families will be left out.

Barlow, whose work with Roosevelt involves partnering with community groups to address social inequality, said he has felt some pushback from some of his new neighbors after he questioned the possible negative impact the Obama center could have on those most in need.

"I think we all have a responsibility — whether it's local government, or elected officials, policymakers or the residents that live here — to hold ourselves to account and ensure that investments, whether it's amenities, the proposed golf course, or the Obama Presidential Center, is beneficial to every resident that lives in South Shore," Barlow said.

Development resurgence

Starks, a lifelong South Shore resident who moved into the Highlands as a new mom in 1997, is hoping to be part of the resurgence with plans to build an entertainment complex that includes a dine-in movie theater, restaurant and bowling alley on the site of the old ShoreBank branch on Jeffery Boulevard in May 2019.

But the businesswoman, who was part of the team that founded the former ICE movie theaters in Chatham and Lawndale, said some of her hardest work has come after she was drafted to chair a special business development task force within the homeowner's association. She and other Highlands residents are trying to learn what type of businesses and services their neighbors want while challenging them to get actively involved.

Highlands residents are insulated not only from the violence of the outer community, but they're also unaffected by the lack of options many other South Shore residents face, Starks said. Most if not all Highlands residents drive and can travel to Hyde Park and other places for grocery shopping and dine-in restaurant service, while poorer residents must rely on public transportation.

Starks blamed much of the disconnect between the Highlands and the outer community on a lack of communication, involvement and shared purpose between Highlands residents and community organizations.

"We're complaining (about the disconnect). We're sitting here watching it happen. We're letting it happen!" Starks said.

Despite the difficulties in getting all of the communities on the same page, South Side real estate agent Sarah Ware said buzz from the Obama center can bring only positive attention to the area.

"Whether (the Obama center is) coming or not — that remains to be seen — we all want to believe in it. Just some hope is better than none at all."

Ramblers pioneers for social change

team, that goes way beyond basketball."

Loyola's victory over Mississippi State was symbolic for a country struggling with racial divides and social shifts.

It was a rare team that ignored the unwritten agreement among schools that no more than two black players per team should play at the same time, maybe three if a team trailed significantly. The Ramblers started four black players and sometimes played five.

Coach George Ireland wasn't moved so much by progressive values as winning, players said.

"The idea of starting four was a new experience," said Rich Rochelle, a reserve center. "Five black players at one time, that was unheard of."

Loyola's integrated team — an emblem of equality — inspired abuse from opposing fans and intimidating letters from the Ku Klux Klan.

"It was addressed to my dorm on Sheridan Road," recalled Harkness, a senior captain. "I started thinking, 'These guys are talking like this and they know where we live. What else do they know? They could wait out there and ambush me.' I was afraid."

Team members focused on basketball and academics, but the swirling unrest was hard to ignore in 1963 — the bloodiest year of the Civil Rights Movement.

Four black girls were killed in a Birmingham church bombing. Martin Luther King led the March on Washington and wrote "Letter from a Birmingham Jail." Civil rights activist Medgar Evers was assassinated.

A massive Chicago Public Schools boycott for overcrowding at predominantly African-American schools and a refusal to integrate with white schools made local headlines.

And here was Loyola — starting four black players and competing against a white team from the South.

"We were in the middle of all of that," Harkness said.

They were about to make another dent in a changing nation.

"That's when it began to turn," center Les Hunter said. "Nobody had ever heard of us and we're showing up with black players and winning like that? It taught people that if you're going to compete, you're going to have to learn acceptance of black athletes."

CHRIS WALKER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Former Loyola basketball player Rich Rochelle says he and his teammates were victims of abuse from fans.

The game

Loyola players were mostly unaware of the game's historic weight.

As the No. 3 team, its most pressing concern was whether its opponent would show for the NCAA tournament regional semifinal game in East Lansing, Mich.

Mississippi Gov. Ross Barnett was a vocal segregationist who forbade the Bulldogs from competing against black players.

But Mississippi State fans had grown tired of staying home while teams like Kentucky competed for trophies. University President Dean Colvard decided to allow the team to play in the tournament anyway — even after Barnett ordered an injunction that barred it from leaving the state.

Colvard devised a plan sending coach Joe "Babe" McCarthy to Memphis as he went to Alabama for a speaking engagement to avoid being served the injunction. An assistant coach sneaked players onto a private plane to Nashville, where they reunited and flew to Michigan where Loyola awaited.

"They were under pressure too," Harkness said.

Before tipoff, Harkness shook hands with forward Joe Dan Gold — and an iconic photo was snapped.

Loyola won 61-51. The contest was without racial incidents. Mississippi State's team returned to a surprisingly welcoming campus. Nobody was fired.

In 2013, Loyola was the first team inducted into the National Collegiate Basketball Hall of Fame and had a White House meeting with President Barack Obama.

"I knew it was important to win, to show superiority on the court and to make a statement that we can play with anybody," Hunter said. "I kind of felt when we ran up the scores on teams that were all white that it was a statement. I was conscious of it."

The "Game of Change" is overshadowed by the 1966 NCAA tournament championship between between Texas Western's (now University of Texas at El Paso) five black starters versus an all-white Kentucky team — told in the movie "Glory Road." Even in Chicago, Loyola's season is remembered in black-and-white photographs — a footnote in sports history.

But players' experiences during that season offer a window into the Civil Rights Movement — and reveals their bravery.

'We knew it was there'

Houston was particularly hostile. Fans hung over arena railings, screaming racial slurs and launching ice and water as black players entered and exited the court.

In New Orleans, white and black players took separate transportation to games. Rochelle said fans hurled coins at them.

In St. Louis, they were turned away at restaurants.

"One place we went into, sat down and waited and nobody came to us," Rochelle said. "Someone walked in off the street and said, 'We (won't) eat here. They serve (n-----s).' It was not unusual to be treated as second-class citizens. We didn't accept it. But we knew it was there."

Letters from the Klan arrived as word spread about the team with four black starters.

"I can still see Ireland running over to the dorms," Harkness said. "One (letter) said, ' '(Slur) you don't have any right to be playing against white ball players.' It was probably worded tougher than that. Ireland took all the letters and we didn't see them again."

Mississippi State's Stan Brinker, left, shakes the hand of Loyola's Vic Rouse before the tipoff of the "Game of Change" in the 1963 NCAA tournament.

John Egan, the team's white starter, grew up in Marquette Park, a predominantly white South Side neighborhood where in 1966 — three years after Loyola's title — Martin Luther King Jr. marched for equal housing and was struck by rocks as a riot ensued and 30 people were injured.

"When I would come back (to the neighborhood) while I was still in school, they were curious," Egan said. " 'What are you doing on that team?' Then some guys would try to come to my defense, (and say), 'Well, he's the one running the show.' Then I would correct them and say I'm not running the show. The guy playing center (Hunter), the biggest blackest guy on the team, is running the show.' "

Egan said he never had had a black friend, let alone a teammate, before Loyola. The seven surviving teammates remain in touch.

"I didn't know what it would be like to develop a friendship," Egan said. "I think we had a mutual respect."

No. 1

Loyola's championship game against Cincinnati was nearly as momentous as the "Game of Change." With Cincinnati's three black starters, and Harkness, Hunter, Vic Rouse and Ron Miller starting for Loyola, it was the first time the championship featured a majority of black starters.

The defensive-minded Bearcats had won the two previous championships. No. 3-ranked Loyola, which finished 29-2, was a high-scoring squad that set a still-standing NCAA record for margin of victory with a 111-42 first-round defeat of Tennessee Tech. In the final at Freedom Hall in Louisville, Loyola rallied from a 15-point deficit for a 60-58 victory in overtime decided on Rouse's last-second put-back of a Hunter miss.

"We could score a whole bunch of points in a short amount of time. I was waiting on that," Hunter said. "I felt it was going to happen. I was always positive about that."

A throng of fans greeted them home at Midway Airport. The team bus arrived on campus as students and Rogers Park neighbors celebrated nearby on Sheridan Road.

"It was the most cheered thing in my life," Harkness said. "It wasn't probably like it is today, but for its time, it was pretty good."

'The direction of good'

Harkness, who is writing a memoir called "Connections," was inspired to take up basketball as a high school senior thanks to a chance meeting with Jackie Robinson, who complimented him at the Harlem YMCA. Later, Harkness met King and became a civil rights activist.

A consensus first-team All-American as a senior, he also played briefly for the Knicks in the NBA for one season after college and three years later played two seasons with the ABA's Pacers.

Harkness appreciates modern athletes' outspokenness on social issues, seeing a tie to Loyola's 1963 team.

"A person has to look at their strengths and ask where can they make a change?" Harkness said. "If we can't voice that things are not right for the average African-American, who will? You do it where it can make a difference. If you're on the stand and you can raise your fist and let people know blacks are not treated right, that makes a difference. And we have that right to do that."

The current political climate hearkens back to the 1960s. Harkness calls events like August's white supremacist march in Charlottesville, Va., "painful."

"We've allowed politicians to grab a spotlight that stokes the fires of racism again," Hunter said. "I hate to see some of these things starting up. I don't think America is going to continue to let that stuff happen. It takes awhile for our country to move but it will move in the direction of good."

The '63 team sees its legacy in sports — from college to professional — where players of various races competing together and against each other is the norm.

The players are eager to see how far the current Loyola team can go. The Ramblers (28-5) find out where and against whom they will play when the NCAA tournament brackets are revealed on Selection Sunday.

"I'm absolutely loving it," Rochelle said. "This group of guys is just fantastic. The idea that we were a national championship team from this little commuter school on the North Side of Chicago, it was hard to believe. I hope the same thing happens for this team."

As Loyola reaches the March Madness spotlight, the 1963 team will be remembered as more than former champions.

"You don't realize at the time what you have done — even a little bit — for black-white relations," Harkness said. "That comes later on."

Kennedy: Pritzker is 'buying off' officials with donations

By Rick Pearson and John Byrne
Chicago Tribune

Democratic governor candidate Chris Kennedy on Friday accused rival J.B. Pritzker of "buying off" elected officials, including local African-American leaders, as part of an "apology tour" over 2008 remarks about potential black successors to Barack Obama's U.S. Senate seat.

Pritzker's campaign quickly responded with a news conference featuring three African-American aldermen who support Pritzker and said they were insulted by Kennedy's remarks.

Kennedy's comments came as Pritzker, a billionaire heir to the Hyatt Hotels fortune, has given more than $700,000 to local Democratic organizations and the campaign accounts of officials across the state, State Board of Elections records showed.

Pritzker gave $110,000 on Wednesday to political funds controlled by Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle. Another $40,000 went to the Cook County Democratic Party, which endorsed him in August. And $35,000 went to Cook County Recorder of Deeds Karen Yarbrough, who also is Proviso Township Democratic chair. Pritzker's campaign sent $29,500 to Ald. Carrie Austin and her 34th Ward organization; $27,500 to Ald. Emma Mitts' 37th Ward organization; and $16,000 apiece to campaign funds controlled by 24th Ward Ald. Michael Scott Jr. and to funds controlled by 8th Ward Ald. Michelle Harris.

In addition, Pritzker made contributions of between $5,000 and $10,000 to funds controlled by eight other aldermen.

Kennedy said Pritzker gave the money "in hopes they will help voters forget who he is really is — someone who was caught on FBI wiretap tapes with Rod Blagojevich, asking for political favors and ingratiating himself with the disgraced governor by making comments disrespectful of the African-American leadership in our state."

"He's taken pay-to-play politics and amplified the system from pay to play, to fund to forgive and fee to forget. He's buying off the leadership," Kennedy said outside the Loop headquarters of the state Democratic Party.

In February, Pritzker issued an apology after the Chicago Tribune published a November 2008 conversation between the candidate and then-Gov. Rod Blagojevich in which the two discussed possible Obama successors in the Senate and the political optics of appointing an African-American to the vacancy.

In the conversation, Pritzker labeled Secretary of State Jesse White as the "least offensive" of the possible African-American contenders and used blunt language to describe the others being considered. The conversation was recorded on government wiretaps that were part of the federal corruption investigation of Blagojevich.

But in the Pritzker campaign's response, Scott; Ald. Roderick Sawyer, 6th; and Ald. Walter Burnett Jr., 27th, all said they had received money from the Pritzker campaign to help them get out the vote on election day.

The three said there was nothing unusual in that and the funds weren't tied to any attempt by Pritzker to apologize or engage in pay-to-play politics.

"They can try to pull all the desperate B.S. stuff they're trying to pull up, try to play the race card, try to play the Blago thing, it's all B.S.," Burnett said. "It's a sign of desperation because they know that they are going to lose. And they know that J.B. got the right guys working for them and we're gonna kick their butts. That's what it's all about."

Scott said he based his support on Pritzker's willingness to repeatedly come to his West Side ward to talk about issues facing those neighborhoods. And he said it's costly for a ward organization to get campaign workers to stand outside polls and do other work in a post-patronage Chicago.

"It costs at least $10,000 to open up on a day of operation for an election," Scott said. "I do count on candidates such as J.B., candidates that are out here trying to get their word out, to work through me, and that, again, costs money."

Sawyer, chairman of the City Council Black Caucus, said he was confused by Kennedy's attack because if Kennedy gets the nomination, he'll need help from ward committeemen to get out the vote against the Republican nominee.

"The primary's March 20th. March 21st, there's going to be a Democratic nominee. We are expected to support that Democratic nominee through to the November election," Sawyer said.

Kennedy, an heir of the iconic Massachusetts political family, is counting heavily on support from African-Americans. Kennedy's father, the late U.S. Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, and uncle, the late President John F. Kennedy, were major figures in the struggle for civil rights.

Among Kennedy's major supporters is U.S. Rep. Bobby Rush. The Kennedy campaign has paid $26,354 to the congressman's brother, Marlon Rush, and $17,120 to a son of the congressman, Jeffrey Rush, state election records showed.

Daniel Biss, from left, Chris Kennedy and J.B. Pritzker are vying for Downstate votes as they compete for the Democratic nomination for governor in the March 20 primary.

Downstate's votes could be key

in both parties hailing from the Chicago area, how the contenders relate to Downstate voters could go a long way toward making or breaking their chances on March 20.

Christopher Mooney, a political scientist at the University of Illinois' Institute of Government and Public Affairs, said there is a risk factor for candidates who fail to devote time and resources Downstate in favor of the more heavily populated city and suburbs.

"One percentage point can make a difference in any race," Mooney said. "It's all about the margins you need to get across the state."

The Democrats

By the numbers, the ballots cast in the 96 counties outside Chicago and the suburban collar counties make up a small percentage of the Democratic primary vote. Only 23 percent of the nearly 2.1 million ballots cast in the 2016 Democratic presidential primary came from Downstate.

Numbers alone can be misleading, however, particularly in a six-candidate contest where the winner only needs the most votes, not a majority.

During the 2002 Democratic governor primary campaign, the former Chicago Public Schools chief rarely traveled Downstate. At the time, he was afraid of flying.

In the six-county Chicago area, Vallas held a narrow lead over former Attorney General Roland Burris, while then-U.S. Rep. Rod Blagojevich was a more distant third. Blagojevich, however, won 93 of the 96 Downstate counties, where he had campaigned extensively. He ended up winning the nomination by about 25,000 votes — or a scant 2 percentage points — over Vallas, changing the course of Illinois political history.

Kennedy, who helped Vallas' campaign, called the Downstate effort then a "disaster."

In the current campaign, Downstate is "very significant and likely to be the determining factor as it has been in a number of significant races," said Doug House, the Rock Island County Democratic chairman who also heads the Illinois Democratic County Chairs' Association.

In October, the group backed Pritzker. Since then, he's given nearly $50,000 to the group, which is now airing ads Downstate to promote his candidacy.

"The Downstate region has a lot of media markets and a lot of opportunity for retail politics," House said. "Somebody who has spent the time, got around and talked to people can do themselves a lot of good getting to be known by the people down there."

Pritzker has had the money to air TV ads statewide for months, and his deep pockets have assisted county organizations with contributions. That organizational starting point "is maybe a secret weapon," Mooney said.

"When you have a lot of organization, you can work with the ground troops and with the various county associations. They may not be all that strong in every county, but they exist in every county," he said.

An added benefit, he said, is that such a network can also provide political intelligence gathering.

"That's one of the great things about having those people around the state. If there's a problem somewhere, you're going to hear about it through those people," Mooney said.

But Democratic demographics Downstate have changed greatly over the years, particularly in deep southern Illinois. Gone are the big union-labor coal operations and manufacturing. The area also has transformed from socially conservative Blue Dog Democrat to Republican.

Across the Mississippi River from St. Louis, the onetime Democratic-voting Metro-East monolith made up of Madison and St. Clair counties is no more.

Madison County has evolved into a bedroom suburb that favored President Donald Trump over Hillary Clinton 55 percent to 39 percent in November 2016. Clinton won St. Clair County, but got just 50 percent over Trump's 45 percent. Still, Pritzker has pumped $200,000 into the St. Clair Democratic organization.

Kennedy, who was chairman of the University of Illinois board, called the Downstate vote "super important."

"I've spent a ton of time Downstate. I went Downstate every week of January and the first half of February," he said.

The Republicans

The evolution in Downstate political party support toward Republicans also was in evidence in the 2014 GOP governor primary, where the number of votes was split almost equally between the Chicago area and Downstate.

That gives the 96-county region significant influence in this month's one-on-one contest between Rauner and Ives, where the winner needs to score a majority of the votes.

TV ad time costs less Downstate, and personal visits play a role in gaining support. That's why Ives' recent schedule found her at GOP gatherings in small towns of about 1,200 people such as Toledo, which is south of Charleston in Cumberland County, and Milford in Iroquois County in east central Illinois — or Altamont, nearly double the population, in Effingham County in southern Illinois.

In the 2016 presidential election, those three counties accounted for a combined 36,000 votes. But Trump won Iroquois with 75 percent of the vote, Cumberland with 76 percent, and Effingham with 78 percent.

Even though the total number of votes is small, there's the chance to roll up wide margins, and Ives has been actively pursuing Trump's local voters.

Ives' message "hits a lot of the buttons" of socially conservative Downstate Republicans, said Mooney, who cited the candidates' opposition to abortion, transgender and immigrant rights as well as her attacks on Chicago. "She gives the movement conservatives Downstate something to love."

But Rauner has the money and organizational support to deliver his message. After winning the primary for governor four years ago, the former private equity investor spread money around to county organizations as he rebuilt the state GOP into an adjunct of his political operation.

Rauner also has had a heavy schedule of visits to Downstate communities, including the media markets of Decatur, Moline and Bloomington. He has been touting his state budget goal to create a path for a tax cut — though the concept is widely viewed as politically unrealistic among Republicans and Democrats — as a financial counter to Ives' social messaging.

Regional disparities on social issues are a predominant feature of the Republican race. Ives has railed against Rauner's approval of measures expanding taxpayer-funded abortion and immigration rights.

That also may be a reason Rauner has not taken a definitive stance on proposed firearm restrictions in the wake of the Feb. 14 Parkland, Fla., high school shooting that left 17 dead. Support for gun rights is a major Downstate issue.

On Friday, Rauner was asked at a stop in Moline whether he supports the gun dealer licensing bill that's on his desk, and he raised points also made by those who oppose the plan.

"The federal government already regulates these gun dealers, and we've got to be careful about putting too much redundant regulation, it won't really change or improve anything but it may actually hurt small businesses in Illinois. So we've got to evaluate the issues and we're in the process of doing that."

Quincy issue

One Downstate issue has had an elevated profile in the governor's race: an outbreak of Legionnaires' disease at the Illinois Veterans Home in Quincy, where 13 people died and dozens more were sickened following an outbreak in cases that started in 2015.

"It's literally made Adams County, in some respects, the center of the universe," said House, the head of the state Democratic county chairs organization. "All of the officials and all of the candidates are, whether you're the incumbent, whether you're challengers, whatever primary — it makes no difference. It's an important issue."

The Rauner administration's handling of the outbreak, as well as its own internal messaging, has come under fire from the governor's critics following reports from WBEZ-FM 91.5. Last month, Rauner told Crain's Chicago Business "we've handled it exceptionally well and we would not do anything different," but this month he appointed a top deputy to oversee the administration's response to the issue.

Beyond the concerns of voters statewide over the treatment of military veterans, the problems at the aging Quincy home also underscore and aggravate long-standing regional concerns: a feeling that Downstate is neglected in favor of Chicago, and worries over the fate of state institutions — including universities and prisons harmed by the state's historic budget impasse — that have now become the last major employers for some towns.

Pritzker has accused Rauner of "fatal mismanagement" at the Quincy home. Kennedy said it was time to build a new facility because "we need to defend them as they grow older just as they have defended us in their youth." Biss called the administration's actions at Quincy "grotesque." Ives asked, "What the hell is wrong with this governor?"

The lone Downstate candidate in the governor's race, Democrat Bob Daiber, the Madison County regional superintendent of schools, said "poor infrastructure in our buildings" was to blame for Quincy's problems.

"If you don't have an improvement plan for a facility, it's what you wind up with," said Daiber, who is being vastly outspent in his bid to become the first Downstate governor nominee since Glenn Poshard lost to Republican George Ryan in 1998.

"It's good to push the can down the road. It's good to eliminate things in your budget and try to cut taxes. But the end result is, you have people die ... and that's what happened at the Quincy veterans home," Daiber added.

Young Chicagoans feel support in anti-violence push

Fla. peers raising awareness about a longtime struggle

By Vikki Ortiz Healy
Chicago Tribune

D'Angelo McDade understands the urgent desire to end gun violence, the kind of change that students in Parkland, Fla., are fighting for after the fatal mass shooting at their high school last month.

McDade, an 18-year-old from Chicago, felt that desire too. It started last summer, when he spent weeks learning how to talk people out of conflicts that often lead to gunshots in his North Lawndale neighborhood. He felt it again a few weeks later, when he, his grandfather and cousin were sprayed by bullets intended for others while sitting on the front porch.

As the Parkland students attract national attention, a White House visit and letters of support for their demands for gun reform, McDade and other Chicago teens whose lives have been affected by gun violence say they aren't envious that they haven't experienced a similar spotlight.

"It was never a feeling of jealousy," said McDade, a senior at North Lawndale College Prep High School, who will lead some 600 classmates in a walkout Wednesday to show their support for the Parkland students' mission. "It was a feeling of, 'We can leverage from this.' "

As teens nationwide finalize plans for school walkouts this week, Chicago students are welcoming the chance to spotlight a problem they've been living with, and working to end, for years.

In Chicago communities ravaged by gun violence, students, anti-violence advocates and activists in the Black Lives Matter Chicago movement say they are energized and inspired by the way Emma Gonzalez, a senior at Parkland's Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School who has been a leader in the student movement, has mentioned cities like Chicago in her vocal pleas for gun reform.

Last weekend, Gonzalez hosted several Chicago students, including McDade, at her Florida home for a daylong discussion that focused on learning from each other's perspectives and recognizing that they are all fighting the same battle.

The gathering echoed what she has expressed in social media posts and in an essay published last month in Harper's Bazaar: "This started with, has been about, will always be for, all of us. And who are we? We are the people who died in the freshman building on Valentine's Day at Douglas High, and the people who died in every mass shooting in U.S. history. We are everyone who has been shot at, grazed or pierced by bullets, terrorized by the presence of guns and gun violence in America."

Chicago activists are observing with high hopes and say they believe the nationwide youth movement will bring new supporters and resources in the struggle to end the city's violence.

"I really do feel that this is different," said Charlie Ransford, director of science and policy for Cure Violence, a Chicago-based organization that works to implement public-health approaches to violence. "If the (young activists) keep going, they just have a ton of power and influence that can push for solutions for preventing mass shootings and for violence in cities like Chicago."

Yet other anti-violence advocates and those in the Black Lives Matter movement say the attention given to Parkland students shows that white, more affluent students are more relatable to the mainstream than African-American kids from Chicago.

"We definitely stand in solidarity with the Parkland students and all the students who had to suffer from school shootings," said Kofi Ademola, an organizer for Black Lives Matter Chicago. "But then I also have to wrestle with the contradiction that it seems that black and brown people aren't as valued."

For many Chicago teens, gun violence is part of daily life and something they've been fighting for years.

Students at Perspectives Charter Schools' three Chicago campuses have participated for the last four years in a peace movement that includes classes designed to develop independent thinkers and ethical leaders, a radio show, and peace talks in which students are welcomed to openly grieve or share stories about loved ones lost to gun violence, said Diana Shulla-Cose, founder and president of the charter school.

For Kray Butler, an 18-year-old senior at Perspectives Charter School, the approach has helped him to cope with the death of two cousins and an uncle killed by gunfire in Chicago. It also inspires him to try to eliminate the kind of violence he sees on everyday walks to school.

"I know it's very likely for me to be shot when I'm going home, but it's one of those things I don't like to think about," said Butler, who helps his school organize an annual Peace Walk in the neighborhood each spring. "I know I'm trying to resolve that problem."

Similarly, Jailene Balenuela, a senior at Josephinum Academy of the Sacred Heart in Wicker Park, was one of several students who went through 80 hours of peace-building training and community activities last year aimed at teaching students how to live with and foster tolerance. Seeing the students from Florida champion Chicago students' struggle and efforts, Balenuela said she feels lifted up. "I see the power of community, and what the students are doing at Stoneman Douglas is really powerful."

At Cure Violence, Ransford said they are already capitalizing on the renewed public interest in gun reform by publishing articles about public-health approaches to curbing violence and educating the public about actions that don't require legislation.

"Now that we're talking about what we can do as a nation, I feel like it should hopefully unlock some resources that Chicago can then take advantage of," Ransford said.

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Police officers guide the casket of James Eric Davis Sr. toward a hearse after a service for him and his wife, Diva, at Broadview Missionary Baptist Church in Broadview on Saturday.

Hundreds attend funeral for couple slain in son's dormitory

By Matt McCall

Davis Sr.

Diva Davis

As James and Diva Davis' caskets closed Saturday morning, a young woman's sobs from the front row echoed in Broadview Missionary Baptist Church, where hundreds came to pay their respects to the couple allegedly killed by their 19-year-old son in his dorm room March 2.

James Eric Davis Jr. appeared in court Tuesday after his arrest on two counts of murder and a weapons violation. He allegedly shot his parents after they came to pick him up at Central Michigan University following his earlier hospitalization for erratic behavior.

Authorities said surveillance video shows Davis Jr. leaving his dorm to retrieve a handgun belonging to his father, a part-time Bellwood police officer and Illinois National Guard veteran who served in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

After the shooting, the young man's brother, Russell Davis, posted a message on Facebook asking for privacy and for the public and media not to judge his brother. Davis Jr. is being held on $3 million bond.

At the funeral, the weeping woman in the front row was led through a door behind the altar by family members bracing her as more than 200 police officers, firefighters and military personnel stood at attention. The ceremonial American flag draped over James Davis' casket was folded and presented to his eldest son, Russell.

Addressing the crowd, Bellwood Mayor Andre Harvey recalled his adolescence in Bellwood with James Davis. He said the Davis house was the biggest on the block and that he and Davis had the same baby sitter and went to the same schools. "He was my hero," Harvey said. "And if he was a hero, Diva was, and I just made this word up, a heroess."

Diva Davis, a real estate broker and breast cancer survivor, was the rock in her husband's life, Harvey said. Her uncle called her the embodiment of love.

James Davis Sr.'s cousin said the two were supposed to attend the funeral of a mutual friend before the shooting, but he missed his flight to Chicago. If he had made it, he said, Davis might have asked him to go with him to Michigan instead of his wife. "It could very well have been me up here," he said, motioning to their caskets.

The somber reflections were broken up by moments of religious exaltation. As Pastor Justin Williams energetically sang for the mourners, they clapped and praised.

Pastor Bruce L. Douglas of Walking in Grace Community Church in Plainfield recounted the biblical story of Jesus raising a man from the dead. He compared the stone that Lazarus' sisters moved away from the tomb to life obstacles, and he encouraged mourners to embrace faith to overcome them with God's aid.

Pastor Timothy Brown reflected on the notion that if people are good, the world is good back to them. "In lived human experience, this is not always so," he said. "Sometimes bad things happen to good people. That is the true theology."

Coach accused of assaulting students

By Rick Kambic
Pioneer Press

An assistant soccer coach at Vernon Hills High School was charged Friday with criminal sexual assault in relation to at least 12 encounters with two male students, according to Vernon Hills police.

Cori Beard, 28, of Vernon Hills, was taken into custody for questioning Thursday evening shortly after a parent contacted a school employee, who then contacted police, said Vernon Hills police Chief Patrick Kreis.

Beard

A third student has been identified but is not part of Friday's charges, Kreis said. Police say there could be other victims, and Kreis encourages parents and students to contact the police or a school official.

"The investigation is still ongoing and fluid, and when it involves juvenile victims, we deal with things in the most sensitive ways possible," Kreis said. "If people have hesitancy to contact the Police Department, we encourage them to go to a teacher or counselor or some other third party. They should talk to someone."

Police do not believe the 12 acts occurred on school property, Kreis said.

"Elements of these offenses include the fact that she was in a position of trust at the school, and there are high standards that come with that trust," he said.

The sexual acts took place between December 2016 and February 2018 and some occurred while one or both students were younger than 17, according to Kreis.

The Lake County Children's Advocacy Center assisted in interviewing the students, Kreis said.

Beard has been an assistant coach for both the boys and girls soccer teams since 2013, according to a statement from High School District 128.

"Upon learning of her possible criminal conduct involving a student, the administration, working cooperatively with the police department, took measures to assure that Beard would have no further contact with students or staff," the school statement says.

"The District 128 Board of Education will take action on Beard's dismissal at its next meeting."

Charges were approved by the Lake County state's attorney Friday. Beard appeared in court Saturday morning and was remanded to the Lake County Jail on a $1 million bond.

She is set to appear in court again Tuesday.

Trump administration sued over splitting of families

REX W. HUPPKE

There's another child in Chicago who shouldn't be here, another child who should be with his mother.

For more than a week I've been writing about a 7-year-old Congolese girl who was separated from her mother four months ago after the pair arrived in California seeking asylum. The question at the heart of that case, the question that has made my gut clench since this all started, was:

Are there more kids like her here, kids inexplicably removed from their parents by our government?

We now know of at least one more, and there are bound to be others. Friday morning the American Civil Liberties Union filed a class-action lawsuit against the Trump administration, claiming the Department of Homeland Security is separating hundreds of families at the border without cause.

In just one of four sworn statements entered along with the lawsuit, Michelle Brane, an attorney and director of the Migrant Rights and Justice Program at the Women's Refugee Commission, says "we have been able to identify separation of parents from children at the border in at least 429 cases collected from our own experience, legal service providers, attorneys, and social service agencies around the country. While the Women's Refugee Commission acknowledges that the separation of an immigrant child from an adult with whom they are traveling may be appropriate in certain cases where there is substantiated reason to suspect that the adult and child are not in fact related, or reason to suspect that the child is in imminent physical danger from the adult, this has not been shown in any way to be the case in the above referenced identified cases. The children in these cases range from toddlers to young teenagers."

The two examples given to represent the class in the ACLU's lawsuit are Ms. L. — the mother in the case I've been writing about — and a mother identified as Ms. C., a Brazilian woman who arrived seeking asylum and was separated from her 14-year-old son last August. The son, identified only as "J.," is being held at a facility here in Chicago, just like Ms. L.'s daughter.

Per the lawsuit: "Ms. C. is desperate to be reunited with her son, who has been having a difficult time emotionally since being separated from his mother. Ms. C. worries about him constantly and does not know when she will be able to see him. They have only spoken on the phone a handful of times since they were forcibly separated."

The lawsuit describes the class as "the hundreds of other parents whom the government has forcibly separated from their children and continues to separate" who "all came to the United States with their children and were subsequently detained; all have since been separated from their children without any allegation or showing that they present a danger to their child; none have been given a fair process in which to contest any allegations that they are an unfit parent."

Immigration officials have to carefully screen asylum seekers, particularly with concerns about human trafficking. And many who flee their countries fearing death or persecution arrive with few, if any, documents.

But what seems to be happening, based on this lawsuit and on other media reports and statements from immigrant advocacy groups, is that many parents and children are being separated without cause, even after they have passed an initial asylum screening that shows they have a strong case.

Homeland Security officials have denied that this is the department's policy.

I reached out for comment on this case, but a spokesman said the department won't comment on pending litigation.

And I've previously reached out and asked for details on the department's protocol for handing asylum seekers who arrive here with children — they won't tell me anything, which means there is no written protocol or there is one they don't want the public to see.

Given the evidence coming forward, and given the fact that White House chief of staff John Kelly, when he was head of Homeland Security last year, openly spoke about separating families to deter people from coming here, it seems difficult to believe this is all a series of mistakes or coincidences. The Trump administration's open hostility toward immigrants has cost it the benefit of the doubt.

And understand this: The ACLU is not asking the government to grant these people asylum or allow any who sneaked into the country to stay. All the lawsuit wants is for the government to reunite these families and let them stay together while their cases are heard.

"Defendants have ample ways to keep Plaintiffs together with their children. There are shelters that house families (including asylum-seekers) while they await the final adjudication of their immigration cases. If, however, the government feels compelled to continue detaining these parents and young children, it must at a minimum detain them together in one of its immigration family detention centers."

Why is that unreasonable?

We now know the trauma Ms. L. has been going through is shared by Ms. C.

The Brazilian mother, just like Ms. L., entered the United States and informed a border guard she was seeking asylum. She passed what's called a "credible fear interview," meaning immigration officials believe she has reason to fear death or persecution if she returns to her home country.

Despite that, according to the lawsuit, Ms. C. was separated from her son and prosecuted for entering the country illegally. The 14-year-old was taken to an Office of Refugee Relocation facility for unaccompanied minors here in Chicago.

The mother served a 25-day sentence and then was sent to a detention facility in El Paso, Texas. That was in September. In January, she was transferred to another Texas facility where she remains awaiting a decision on her asylum case.

She has spoken with her son by phone only a handful of times in the six months they've been apart. Imagine having your child taken away from you for six months.

At the very least, in this case, mother and son should have been reunited after she served her 25-day sentence.

As the lawsuit states: "Every day that J. is separated from his mother causes him greater emotional and psychological harm and could potentially lead to permanent emotional trauma. The government has no legitimate interest in separating Ms. C. and her child. There has been no evidence, or even accusation, that J. was abused or neglected by Ms. C. There is no evidence that Ms. C. is an unfit parent or that she is not acting in the best interests of her child."

As I've reported, Ms. L. is now free in California and there is hope she will be reunited with her daughter soon, though the daughter is still detained here in Chicago.

The same should happen with Ms. C.

And the same should happen with any other families split up by our government. That's not how America should treat people, under any circumstances.

It's shameful. It's cruel. And I'm embarrassed that my country is letting this happen.

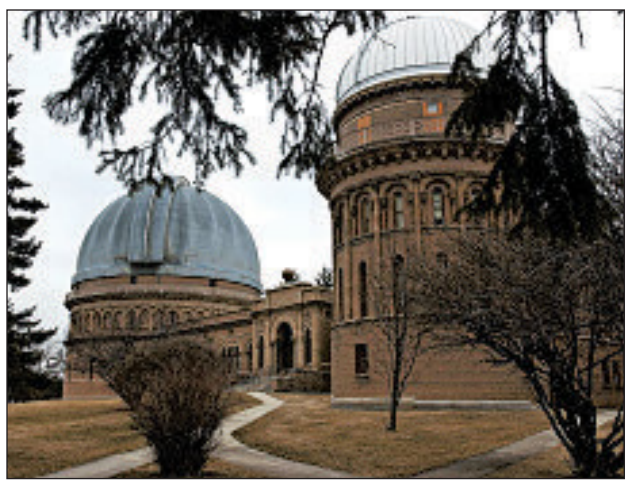
CHICAGO WEEK



MICHAEL TERCHA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The University of Chicago is considering selling the Yerkes Observatory and surrounding 77 acres in Williams Bay, Wis.

A foundation that gave $100 million to the University of Chicago to study global conflict resolution is suing the Hyde Park school, saying it hasn't used the money properly. U. of C. officials dispute the claim of the Pearson Family Members Foundation, saying the center funded by the gift is "flourishing."

Three day care workers in Des Plaines were accused by authorities of giving 2-year-olds melatonin gummies to calm them down.

A high-ranking aide to Cook County Sheriff Tom Dart collected nearly $90,000 in health benefits over five years while on leave to work on his private security business. Dart's chief policy officer called it "an honest mistake in a large bureaucracy."

Foxconn, the manufacturing firm set to build a huge plant in southeastern Wisconsin, will seek to draw 7 million gallons of water a day out of Lake Michigan. Great Lakes states guard the water under a 2008 pact that gives priority to areas of the Midwest that drain into the five lakes. Those familiar with the pact are split on whether Foxconn's bid violates the spirit, if not the actual language, of the agreement.

Chicago has joined a number of governments across the country that have filed civil cases against opioid distributors. The city's federal lawsuit argues the addictive drugs were unlawfully circulated in the city.

Mayor Rahm Emanuel must give a sworn deposition in lawsuits stemming from the 2015 police shooting of a bat-wielding teenager and a 55-year-old innocent bystander, a judge ruled. City lawyers had fought to prevent Emanuel and police Superintendent Eddie Johnson from having to give sworn statements in the case, but the judge said both must do so.

A former comptroller for south suburban Harvey who committed suicide in 2016 secretly recorded conversations with officials including Donald Luster, a consultant who had been given influence over economic development in Harvey by Mayor Eric Kellogg, court records show. The FBI is investigating allegations that Luster demanded tens of thousands of dollars in kickbacks from developers, those records show. Luster denied any wrongdoing; the Harvey law department said Kellogg "will fully cooperate."

Concordia University Chicago is accused of negligence and failing to protect its student-athletes in a lawsuit filed by a former student against the school's former head baseball coach. The coach, Spiro Lempesis, was sentenced to 10 years in prison after being found guilty in December of sexually assaulting a teen who later became one of his players at the River Forest school and is now the plaintiff in the lawsuit.

University of Chicago is shutting down its 121-year-old Yerkes Observatory in Williams Bay, Wis., saying the place known as the birthplace of modern astrophysics "no longer makes any sense for the university from a programmatic or cost standpoint."

PERSPECTIVE

JUNG YEON-JE/GETTY-AFP

A news report of a meeting between President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un flashes on a train station TV screen in Seoul, South Korea.

Trump's North Korea gambit could be a big deal, for good or ill

STEVE CHAPMAN

It's not Richard Nixon's opening to China. It's not Neville Chamberlain's journey to Munich. But President Donald Trump's announcement that he's willing to meet with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un is one of those decisions that could produce important results, good or bad.

The administration portrays this as a triumph for Trump's tough approach, which has allegedly forced the enemy to the negotiating table. But one-on-one negotiations are something North Korea has offered before.

Barack Obama declined an invitation. George W. Bush rejected the idea even though the Pyongyang regime, under Kim Jong Il, said it was ready to discuss giving up its nuclear arsenal.

The U.S. has always seen this gambit as an attempt by the North to gain equal status with the world's preeminent superpower and to separate us from our allies in the region. Kim Jong Il, said Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice in 2006, preferred bargaining solely with Washington "because he doesn't want to face the pressure of other states that have leverage."

Trump has essentially taken the offer that Bush thought was too accommodating. Bill Clinton tried direct bilateral talks, which yielded an agreement for North Korea to give up its nuclear facilities and the possibility of developing nuclear weapons. That accord, however, eventually collapsed.

South Korea and Japan have to worry that not being at the table, they will be on the menu. Trump, after all, has shown little interest in upholding alliances, and he fulminates about spending so much to defend other countries. It's not hard to imagine his making concessions that would leave South Korea and Japan vulnerable. "America First," right?

The concerns are magnified by the shortage of expertise on the U.S. side. Trump has yet to even nominate an ambassador to South Korea, and the State Department's special envoy for North Korea just retired. Our diplomats also have very little time to prepare for a meeting whose consequences could be enormous.

It would be a great understatement to say Trump has no demonstrated grasp of the complex issues involved in trying to forge a deal with North Korea. Before going to China, Nixon was a serious student of foreign policy, and he entrusted the groundwork to his formidable national security adviser, Henry Kissinger. Trump's short attention span, impulsive nature and taste for self-promotion are grounds to wonder if he can handle these talks without losing his shirt or starting a war.

Kim, meanwhile, gains just from sitting down with the most powerful person on the planet. All he had to do in return was to say he would stop testing nuclear weapons and missiles and consider full denuclearization. Had Obama agreed to such a session on these lax terms, he would have been vilified as an appeaser.

Maybe Kim can be coaxed or coerced into giving up his entire nuclear arsenal — which the Trump administration has repeatedly said is the only outcome it will accept. But it's hard to imagine what Trump could offer that would bring about this capitulation.

Saddam Hussein, who lacked nukes, was toppled by a U.S. invasion after Iraq was placed on Bush's "axis of evil." The Pyongyang regime, which had them, was left alone.

Kim knows the bomb is his best insurance against a U.S. attempt at forcible regime change. If Trump demands all or nothing, he'll probably get nothing.

But if he's willing to settle for great progress instead, he might succeed. Kim doesn't need hundreds or even dozens of nuclear warheads to deter attack. Nor does he need to test more long-range intercontinental ballistic missiles.

Just as the Soviet Union agreed to downsize its stockpile to get parallel U.S. cuts, North Korea might settle for strict arms limits if we would provide meaningful security guarantees, scrap economic sanctions, reduce our troop strength or normalize relations.

The implications of this summit go beyond East Asia. The government in Tehran is bound to realize something Trump may not: He can't hope to reach a nuclear deal with North Korea if he tears up the one with Iran. Trump has to show he is prepared to abide by agreements even if they fall short of perfection. Walking away would confirm that U.S. commitments are empty words.

Whether he has any idea what he's gotten himself into is open to question. Trump has conducted his presidency like a TV reality show. But things are about to get real.

Illinoisans could use instant-runoff voting

Voters in Santa Fe, N.M., saw five candidates on the ballot when they went to the polls Tuesday to elect a mayor.

But instead of simply picking a favorite and moving on, they were able, for the first time in city history, to rank their preferences from first to last.

Political scientists call this "instant-runoff" or "ranked-choice" voting. When no candidate receives more than 50 percent of the first-place votes — which happened in Santa Fe — the candidate who receives the fewest votes is eliminated from the field and the second-place votes of his or her supporters are added to the first-place totals of the remaining candidates.

If there is still no candidate with more than 50 percent of the votes — which also happened at this stage in Santa Fe — that round's lowest candidate is eliminated and his or her second-place votes (or third-place votes, if the second-place vote went to the already-eliminated candidate) are added to the first-place totals of the remaining candidates.

And so on, until one candidate finally claims a majority.

In Santa Fe, it took four elimination rounds for entrepreneur Alan Webber to go from a 39 percent lead to a conclusive 66 percent of the vote, for victory over second-place finisher Ron Trujillo, a member of the City Council.

The first-round winner in Santa Fe was also the ultimate winner of the election, but results don't always shake out so neatly. After the first round of the 10-candidate Oakland, Calif., 2010 mayor's race, conservative Democratic former state senate president Don Perata had 34 percent of the vote for a comfortable lead over the second-place candidate, city councilwoman Jean Quan, who had 25 percent of the vote. But Quan had played nicer during the campaign with the other "anybody but Don" candidates, according to news reports, and after nine elimination rounds she squeaked to victory over Perata with 51 percent of the vote.

MORGAN LEE/AP

Candidates' supporters wave signs Tuesday in Santa Fe, N.M., where voters go to rank preferences for mayor.

A just result, I'd argue, in that the consensus of a majority of voters was that they'd prefer Quan over Perata if given the choice between the two, and that this was an example of what promoters of the idea refer to as "instant democracy."

I bring up the topic now because I've heard recently from would-be Democratic voters in Illinois whose heads and hearts are in conflict about how to vote March 20 in the six-candidate gubernatorial primary and the eight-candidate attorney general primary.

Given that a mere plurality of votes (theoretically as low as 17 or 13 percent) could win these nominations, how should voters resolve any conflict between heart and head?

Your heart tells you to vote for the candidate you believe will best represent and advance your values. But sometimes your head tells you that your favorite candidate is only a spoiler and that you should vote instead for one of the top two candidates in the polls.

Ranked-choice voting reconciles that conflict by eliminating the fear of spoilers. You no longer have to worry about "throwing away" your vote on a long-shot (ahem — Jill Stein) and inadvertently contributing to the victory of the candidate you prefer least.

A ranked-choice election is far cheaper than a conventional top-two runoff election — used when no candidate gets a first-round majority in some state elections in 10 states and in many local elections, such as the one for mayor in Chicago. It also samples far more voters, given the usually dramatic drop in turnout for separate runoff elections.

Ranked-choice systems discourage negative campaigning — would Democratic gubernatorial front-runner J.B. Pritzker be so harshly attacking state Sen. Daniel Biss if he hoped to be the second choice of Biss supporters? Would Biss be spouting such rabid nonsense as "electing J.B. Pritzker governor is literally the worst thing we could possibly do," as he did in a March 1 interview, if he had his eye on winning second-choice votes from supporters of the other candidates?

I say no. Literally no.

The introduction of ranked voting in Santa Fe promoted a "famously gentle" mayor's race, reported the Santa Fe New Mexican. The paper noted, however, that the traditional overt mudslinging "was done surreptitiously, turning the campaign into a show of harmless, homogeneous stump speeches."

Critics of the idea make the plausible argument that attack ads are more useful than political pandering. They also complain about the complexity of the process — though offering the opportunity to rank candidates tends to engage voters and spark healthy turnouts, according to FairVote, a nonpartisan organization that champions the idea — and they complain that it violates the "he or she who gets the most votes wins" tradition in American politics (so already flagrantly violated by the Electoral College).

Critics also complain about the cost and difficulty of setting up ranked-choice voting systems, a hurdle that delayed implementation in Santa Fe for 10 years after voters OK'd the idea and is still delaying implementation in several other cities such as Memphis, Tenn., and Sarasota, Fla.

Usually unspoken is an objection from incumbents, who, with their superior name recognition and often bigger campaign bankrolls, benefit from the presence of spoiler candidates who dilute the strength of challengers.

In any case, instant-runoff systems have been fairly slow to catch on in the U.S., though the idea does seem to have "a certain momentum," according to FairVote Executive Director Rob Richie. "We believe the case for it has never been stronger," he told me Friday. "The plurality system is related to knee-jerk tribalism and tension within the parties ... (Ranked-choice voting) promotes consensus."

The first statewide test will occur in June, when voters in Maine will cast ranked votes in primary elections for the U.S. Senate and House, the state Senate and House and for governor. At the same time, they'll vote on whether to continue using ranked voting.

If that test is a success, can Illinois be far behind? Well, yes, of course it can be far behind. Who are we kidding? This is Illinois.

But when I'm ranking my political dreams, this one's right up there.

Chicagoans in Great War

Stories of valor and love amid conflict with an estimated 29 million casualties

By Ron Grossman

A century ago, Lt. Arthur Keating, who hailed from Van Buren Street on Chicago's West Side, led an infantry platoon in a raid on enemy-held trenches in northern France.

"Hey, Arthur, don't you know me?" one of the captured Germans said in the English of a Chicago street-corner boy. The two of them had been schoolmates at Austin High School.

When World War I began in 1914, Keating's prisoner returned to his native Germany. Keating joined the U.S. Army.

Military historians observe that all wars, whatever their scale, are essentially composed of myriad clashes between small units — like the one Keating described in a letter to his wife, written from a field hospital where he was recovering from his wounds, in November 1918.

Keating's wife passed his tale on to the Tribune, where it appeared among the daily dispatches chronicling the Great War, as it originally was known. After years of bloodshed and destruction, it seemed that the end of the war must be near. Yet it was far from certain which side would win.

Some Tribune stories of 1918 described the maneuvers of major formations, like the 8th Infantry Regiment of the Illinois National Guard, an all-black regiment from Chicago's Bronzeville neighborhood. Others, like the picaresque adventures of another Chicagoan, Bronislav Platkowski, provided a human-scale view of a war with casualty lists beyond comprehension.

An estimated 29 million people were killed, wounded or missing in action, according to the National World War I Museum and Memorial in Kansas City, Mo., before Germany threw in the towel and the fighting stopped on Nov. 11, 1918.

Just before World War I, Platkowski traveled from Chicago to a Polish-speaking district of the German empire. He'd gone to see his aging and ill father, but to the local authorities, he was cannon fodder. Impressed into the German army, he served for two years on the Russian front, the site of massive artillery duels. "I was buried by shells three times," Platkowski told the Tribune.

Troops are welcomed in Chicago. Initially, the U.S. struggled to stay out of the conflict, but eventually entered it in 1917.

"Several times I was picked up unconscious on the field and taken to hospitals."

Surrendering to the Russians, he escaped a prisoner of war camp and slowly and surreptitiously made his way back to Chicago, he said, where his sweetheart, Rose Skeaja, was waiting for him. The thought of her kept him determined to survive the ordeal.

"He expects to recuperate from the long warfare, marry Miss Rose, and settle down in a cottage in Chicago," the Tribune reported on June 13, 1918.

Platkowski's soldiering days were over by the time the United States entered the war with Germany. Initially, the U.S. struggled to stay out of the conflict, which pitted Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey against England, France, Italy and Russia.

But provoked by Germany's submarines sinking ships with Americans onboard, President Woodrow Wilson asked Congress to declare war on Germany on April 2, 1917.

"There are, it may be, many months of fiery trial and sacrifice ahead of us," Wilson told the senators and representatives. Four days later, Congress declared war.

Indeed, it took some time just to form and train an expeditionary force, America not having much of a standing army.

Edgar Lee Masters, a Chicago lawyer and a noted poet, traveled to Camp Lee, Va., to report on the process for the Tribune. There he met a nurse who had experience in other wars and had volunteered to go to France with the troops. She didn't think she would survive. Then, Masters asked her, why go?

"You see ... I have no relative, no one in the world, no home. I have never been married, and I feel towards these soldiers like a mother. They are my boys, all of them, and the war draws them so much closer to me."

Others felt a similar impulse. A Tribune report of Chicago-area casualties included: "Ernest Miller Hemingway (wounded and cited)." A recent graduate of Oak Park High School, he served as a Red Cross volunteer on the Italian front. Wounded by an Austrian shell while handing out chocolates to Italian soldiers, he recuperated in a hospital — an experience he drew upon for his novel "A Farewell to Arms."

In the spring of 1918, Germany launched a last-ditch effort to win the war by breaking through the French lines. Caught in the middle of the battle was a group of volunteers from Smith College, a women's college in Northampton, Mass. One was Chicagoan Ruth Joslyn.

As the Tribune explained in a story with a dateline indicating it was written "Somewhere in France," Joslyn and her schoolmates "were sent by the alums to engage in the rehabilitation of the Somme district," devastated by years of being fought over. The young women remained faithful to their mandate, even as they had to retreat from one town to the next, as the German army advanced.

"They set up a temporary children's hospital in a Montdidier hotel, borrowed a big stove, and installed it in the court yard, cooking for and serving every hungry refugee and soldier who passed."

While casualties were high on both sides during the First Battle of the Somme, the toll proved fatal for the Germans. They were out of replacements, while French losses were offset by American troops, now arriving by the hundreds of thousands.

Near Montdidier, where the Smith students set up a soup kitchen, the Tribune noted that 1,850 Germans were captured, including 52 officers, on July 23.

In Italy, airplanes flew over disembarking American forces, "dropping colored papers on which was printed: 'Viva Wilson.' "

By then, the Tribune was not just reporting the war but taking a bow for its participation. "This paper is unusual among newspapers in the fact that it has two editors, and may also be unique in that both are entering the war," the Tribune noted.

One of them, Maj. Robert R. McCormick, was fluent in French. So he initially served as translator for Gen. John Pershing, who commanded the American forces. Then he led an artillery unit during fighting near Cantigny, after which he would later name his Wheaton estate. At the Tribune, he was afterward referred to as "The Colonel," his highest military rank.

In August 1918 in France, McCormick's cousin and co-editor, Capt. Joseph Medill Patterson, had just dismounted his horse and was inspecting the artillery battery he commanded when a German airplane dropped a bomb. "An immense crater marked the spot where the animal had stood," the Tribune reported.

Yet the paper didn't hold back on coverage of the "doughboys," as the ranks were known. One Tribune correspondent, Charles N. Wheeler, noted an unexpected phenomenon. "The color line has about died in the American army — in France," he wrote in October 1918. "They play together, they sing their songs together — the blacks and the whites — and they go over the top together."

The generals planned to use African-American units, like the 8th Infantry Regiment of the Illinois National Guard, as dockworkers. But the French needed fighting men to shore up their lines and were relatively free of racial prejudice.

"I have seen scores of white children holding the hands of colored boys and trudging along on the march with them," Wheeler wrote.

So black companies were parceled out among French formations and distinguished themselves by their valor. A battle report from May 1918 noted "the heroic fight of two American Negro soldiers, both wounded, who withstood a raiding party of 20 Germans and saved comrades from surprise and capture."

Still, Wheeler appended a note of caution to his dispatch from that November. The bloody clashes of Chicago's 1919 race riot would shortly prove his words prophetic: "How this will work out after the war no one can foresee, of course."

Michael Madigan, the #MeToo mansplainer

House Speaker Michael Madigan faces a threat to his rule of Illinois Democrats in the form of the #MeToo movement. Madigan isn't accused of inappropriate behavior, but he recently cut ties with two top campaign aides after complaints about their behavior and has failed to regain trust in his leadership.

Why is Madigan struggling? Because he hasn't taken decisive action to fix the culture of harassment and bullying in government and politics: He hasn't agreed to an independent investigation of his political fiefdom. Instead, Madigan is mansplaining the moment, acting as if he knows best how to solve a societal injustice. His latest step was to order House Democrats to behave better. Wow, simple. "I expect each of you to treat staff with respect and keep your relationships strictly professional," he said. Then shifting to dad mode, Madigan warned: "If I become aware of any complaints against a member by staff, or another member, I will personally get involved to put an end to it."

Tough talk, yes, but inadequate measures by a man who still needs to answer questions about the management of his own staff. Certainly, Madigan should hold lawmakers in his caucus to the highest ethical standards. And his basic point is correct: The General Assembly is an untraditional workplace, where it may be unclear who is a peer and who is a boss. Therefore all lawmakers should consider themselves de facto supervisors of all staff members, and should act that way.

Madigan may be calculating that those kinds of statements prove his righteous commitment and will end the crisis.

> One more time: Where's the independent investigation?

If Madigan's rope-a-dope works, it says more about his ability to intimidate challengers than about the importance of this issue in his realm. Hollywood, the news media and Silicon Valley continue to confront these deep-rooted issues. The same should be true for government and politics.

The #MeToo movement arrived in Illinois last fall amid accusations of bad behavior by state Sen. Ira Silverstein, D-Chicago. Madigan shepherded anti-harassment legislation through the General Assembly, but he failed to take swift action against Kevin Quinn, one of his political operatives, who was accused of sexual harassment. Madigan dismissed Quinn only as the Tribune was readying a story. A week later Madigan cut ties with Shaw Decremer, another campaign aide, who was accused of bullying behavior.

How deep do these problems run in Madigan's camp? Is he the right leader for these times? Those are legitimate questions for Democrats — legislators and other party leaders — that Madigan hasn't answered satisfactorily. On Feb. 27 he released a list of nine sexual harassment, discrimination and retaliation complaints received by his Springfield office as evidence of his responsible stewardship. But the descriptions were vague and the list didn't include his political operations, where Quinn and Decremer worked.

The smartest suggestion we've heard about what should come next came from state Rep. Kelly Cassidy, D-Chicago, who called for an independent investigation of Madigan's government and political operations as part of a larger examination of behavior and abuses in politics.

"I really just wanted to get the full picture in one piece so that we could stop this cycle and bring some closure to the folks who thought this was in their past and focus more on solutions," Cassidy told us Thursday. She proposes an investigation by House Democrats because that's her caucus, but House Republicans and members of the Senate should take similar action for their caucuses.

The key, Cassidy said, is that investigations must be independent — conducted by a law firm or consultancy without ties to Illinois politics. That means Madigan must not be involved beyond cooperating, but he hasn't agreed to that. He appointed several Democratic allies to examine the future of women in the party. As for Cassidy's proposed investigation, Madigan said he wants his own lawyer to assist. No way.

If the speaker wants to protect his credibility, he'll support this investigation and submit to its authority.

Democrats should push him; jokes about "The Silence of the Dems" are commonplace.

Trump's cave to elephant and lion hunters

"I watched him beating his bunch of grass against his knees, with that preoccupied grandmotherly air that elephants have. It seemed to me that it would be murder to shoot him. At that age I was not squeamish about killing animals, but I had never shot an elephant and never wanted to."
— George Orwell, "Shooting an Elephant"

Well, some people do want to shoot elephants, for reasons that are all but impossible to fathom. Their meat doesn't appeal to Western palates; they aren't so abundant that their numbers must be reduced; and taking part in a guided hunt costs tens of thousands of dollars. But the Trump administration, after some delay, has sided with the shooters against the prey.

Elephants are unusually intelligent creatures with rich social lives and elaborate means of communication. They are also under unending siege. In the past three decades, the number in Africa has plummeted by two-thirds, leaving just 400,000. About 20,000 are killed each year for their tusks.

Some African governments allow them to be taken by trophy hunters. One of those sportsmen is Donald Trump Jr., who in 2012 was photographed holding the bloody tail of a slain elephant.

Under President Barack Obama, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service tried to discourage this macabre pastime by outlawing imports of elephant trophies from specified countries. African elephants are listed as "threatened" under the Endangered Species Act, and the law says their body parts may be brought in only if "the killing of the trophy animal will enhance the survival of the species."

YASUYOSHI CHIBA/GETTY-AFP

About 20,000 elephants are killed in Africa each year for their tusks.

In Zambia and Zimbabwe, the agency was not convinced that the governments' policies served the purpose of conserving elephants. So Americans who wanted to shoot an elephant so they could bring back its head to hang on the wall were out of luck.

Last year, the agency announced it would lift the ban. But the decision sparked furious criticism, even from some conservative commentators — and prompted President Donald Trump to block it temporarily.

The president tweeted that he would be "very hard pressed to change my mind that this horror show in any way helps conservation of Elephants or any other animal."

Now, however, his administration has quietly given its sanction to the practice — not just for elephants but also for lions. Instead of forbidding trophies from Zambia and Zimbabwe, the FWS said it would grant permits on a case-by-case basis, under criteria it has yet to state.

How Trump squares this step with his previous objections is hard to guess. The latest FWS move followed a ruling from a federal appeals court that the Obama administration failed to use required procedures in issuing its ban. But that verdict didn't require abandoning the policy. The agency could have started over and followed the rules as spelled out by the court.

The biggest threat to these beasts is not legal trophy hunting but killing by poachers who want to harvest their tusks for the ivory trade. The good news is that progress has been made in suppressing that commerce.

Last year, China said it would stop all sales of ivory, and Hong Kong moved to ban them all by 2021. The black-market price has dropped sharply since 2014, reflecting a decline in demand.

But legal trophy hunting doesn't help, because it gives a sheen of legitimacy to the whole business of slaughtering elephants for their body parts. In January, Trump proudly said, "I didn't want elephants killed and stuffed and have the tusks brought back."

It's not too late for him to stop it.

REASONS TO FIRE ASSESSOR BERRIOS

Voters, don't be complicit in punishing poor communities

Should Cook County voters re-elect Assessor Joe Berrios? No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no. Today, the Tribune Editorial Board offers the first of 10 reasons to defeat Berrios in the March 20 primary.

Reason 1: Voters who pull Democratic ballots can end taxpayers' complicity in Berrios' unfair property valuations. A Tribune and ProPublica Illinois series called "The Tax Divide" showed how Berrios' assessment system punishes minority and low-income communities while benefiting wealthier ones. In many cases, low- and middle-income families don't have the resources to appeal their assessments and seek reductions. Wealthier homeowners do. So the system tilts in their favor.

Berrios disputes conclusions drawn by the series. But even an independent study commissioned by his ally, Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle, showed essentially the same results: error-ridden assessments, feeding a regressive system that penalizes disadvantaged parts of the county. Under Berrios, wealth and clout win.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Chicago Tribune's front page on March 1, 1968, after the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders released its final report.

"Hip" is out, "woke" is in.

"White flight" is out, "gentrification" is in.

Changes in our social and political conditions are revealed in our social and political vocabulary. Fifty years ago, President Lyndon Johnson's landmark National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders released its final report, known as the Kerner Report, which famously declared our nation to be "moving toward two societies, one black, one white — separate and unequal."

As gloomy as that declaration sounded at the time, it sounds almost too optimistic or too pessimistic 50 years later, depending on your point of view.

Among those who had hoped for more progressive change since then, it has become a mantra to say that we're still two societies — or even that race relations have gotten worse.

I appreciate the sentiment, but it's a dangerous oversimplification.

The doubling of the black middle class since the mid-1960s and the election of an African-American president do not signal the arrival of utopia, but they are not insignificant matters, either. Even as the Kerner Report — named for the commission's chairman, Illinois Gov. Otto Kerner — was being written, Johnson-era civil rights reforms were opening doors of opportunity for a new black middle class.

For example, the percentage of U.S. college students who are black increased from 10 percent to 15 percent between 1976 and 2012, according to the National Center for Education Statistics, while the percentage who are white fell from 84 percent to 60 percent.

Yet tragic gaps persist. Last year the number of black children living in poverty overtook the number of poor white children for the first time since the U.S. Census Bureau began tracking the number in 1974, the Pew Research Center reported, even as white children outnumber black children in this country by 3 to 1.

Black men were more than five times as likely as whites to be incarcerated in 1960, according to the Pew Research Center. In 2010, according to the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics, black men were more than six times as likely as white men to be incarcerated. Police brutality against blacks might not always be the primary cause of a riot, the Kerner panel pointed out. But it quite often has been the straw that broke the camel's back.

Black progress today must be assessed in light of President Donald Trump's surprisingly successful appeal to mostly white working-class and middle-class anxieties in economically uncertain times.

But in some ways the Kerner Report may have helped widen the racial divide it described, as the panel's last surviving member, former Democratic Sen. Fred Harris of Oklahoma, told my Chicago Tribune columnist colleague Mary Schmich. "My dad was a small farmer, third-grade education," Harris said. "He loved me, but the way he heard the Kerner Report was, 'Mr. Harris, out of the goodness of your heart you ought to pay more taxes to help poor black people rioting in Detroit.' My dad's attitude was: 'To hell with that, I'm paying too much tax already and I'm not rioting.' "

That attitude echoed throughout the "white backlash" that fueled Alabama Gov. George Wallace's renegade populist campaign in the 1960s. It pushed Republicans to the right on race, especially in the South and in some white ethnic urban enclaves, and pushed Democrats further left — and today's increasingly polarized political landscape took shape.

Ironically, the Kerner Report had limited impact because Johnson tried to ignore it. After reluctantly convening the body, he saw it as a distraction from his own anti-poverty and civil rights agenda.

Yet its emphasis on racism as the principal cause of urban unrest opened a new divide between those who saw the riots as a law enforcement issue and those who viewed it as a poverty and police brutality issue.

That divide also persists today, colorizing a variety of issues along lines of race, whether the racial issue is appropriate or not.

Recall, for example, that the crack cocaine epidemic of the 1980s, which victimized mostly nonwhite communities, was treated as a law enforcement issue and led to a mass incarceration crisis. By contrast, the more recent opioid crisis, which disproportionately plagues poor white communities, has been treated as a public health problem.

In fact, the heartbreak of drug abuse is both a public health and law enforcement problem that crosses racial lines. Fifty years after Kerner, we need to remember an old saying from the civil rights era: We came here on different ships, but we're in the same boat now.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Out of touch

I heard that gubernatorial candidate J.B. Pritzker has spent over $60 million of his own fortune on his campaign. Haven't the citizens of Illinois been down this road before? I believe Gov. Bruce Rauner and President Donald Trump both self-funded much of their campaigns, and look where we are as a state and country today. While I applaud Rauner for taking on House Speaker Michael Madigan and his Democratic machine, his huge misstep supporting state-funded abortions — and lying to Cardinal Blase Cupich — was the breaking point for me.

Pritzker will "buy" the governorship of Illinois if we let him. Past millionaires and billionaires have bought their governmental positions only to fail miserably because they have no clue about the challenges that lower- and middle-class citizens face every day. Some would say that Illinois can't get any worse, so why not give Pritzker a chance? That attitude will lead us all further down the rabbit hole that is Illinois politics. And after how Pritzker degraded the black community in his taped conversations with ex-Gov. Rod Blagojevich, I am hard-pressed to believe he would garner the support of any African-American residing in the state of Illinois.

Be careful what you wish for, Illinois. Money does not make great leaders; that has already been proved.

— Mark Zavagnin, La Grange

Looming debt

What if politicians in Illinois were only permitted to serve two terms? Would that eliminate the mismanagement and patronage abuses we are faced with today? Our looming debt cannot be justified by those elected to protect our interests over their own. No wonder many leave office as millionaires through such "lifetime tenure." Their garb alone bespeaks of such largess. I don't want a fashion show, I just want to see results for myself, my children and grandchildren.

We revolted centuries ago to abandon royalty, not enhance it, as we have today with fiefdoms, patronage and what amounts to lifetime tenures. No wonder our debt looms for our grandchildren to inherit. Manipulation of voting tactics and appointments resemble a monarchical system over the democratic system we created from judges, clerks and elected officials. An overhaul is needed.

The sooner the better. We cannot afford a future of malfeasance in the wake of such disparity and political promises.

— Vincent Kamin, Chicago

A bad trade-off

If President Donald Trump wants to address the overproduction of Chinese steel, he should work with our allies instead of against them.

Trump's tariffs on steel and aluminum imports will hurt American manufacturers in multiple ways. They'll pay artificially higher prices for these metals, while their products will have to compete with those of foreign manufacturers made from less-expensive materials.

Other nations will retaliate with tariffs of their own. Manufacturing, agriculture and coal exports are all likely targets — hurting the kinds of jobs that Trump has vowed to protect. American consumers will pay more on everything from cars to beer cans.

If Trump wants the world to cooperate on trade or anything else, he's going about this the wrong way and turning our friends into adversaries. Trump's approach to world trade is like doing surgery with a hand grenade.

— Mike Mosser, Chicago

Economics 101

The newest job-saving steel and aluminum tariff recently adopted may save some of the 140,000 jobs in the steel-producing industries in the U.S.; however, in return, the millions of workers in the U.S. manufacturing industries that use steel material will suffer. Same for aluminum users.

We compete in a world market and increasing your prices without improving your product is a sure path to second place — while the winners in international competition start with lower material prices. The loss of jobs due to even marginal impacts on our steel- and aluminum-using industries will far outweigh the benefit to the steel-producing industries.

In addition, U.S. consumers will now pay higher prices for products using steel or aluminum. Higher raw material costs increase the cost of goods sold. We will all pay for this.

Tariffs are taxes, and taxes do not improve the economy or increase our standard of living. They do the opposite. Our history of Herbert Hoover-esque protectionist thinking coupled with the imposition of tariffs has consistently led to failure and eventual repeal.

Was this an unintended consequence? Or did those in power ignore basic economic principles?

For region on rise, roads a downfall

Amid economic boom in Mich., crumbling roads, leaking sewers plague local officials

By Noah Bierman
Washington Bureau

FRASER, Mich. — Warnings begin as soon as you arrive. Beware of the potholes.

They're everywhere in this Michigan city near Detroit, rattling travelers' teeth and popping tires, making for a lunar-like obstacle course.

"It's out of control," said Todd Faulkner, 45, who runs a lawn fertilizer business.

The problem is not just above ground. Faulkner and his family were evacuated on Christmas Eve 2016 after a giant sinkhole swallowed one neighbor's house and forced another to be demolished. Then the Faulkners suffered through months of foul odors as crews repaired aging sewer mains. Nearby beaches on Lake St. Claire closed for weeks over the summer because of fecal contamination from overflowing sewers.

Such decay is one reason President Donald Trump found such a receptive audience here and in other industrial cities in the Midwest when he described aging airports, lead-tainted water systems and crumbling roads and bridges as evidence of a country that had lost its way, thanks to feckless leaders of both parties who'd neglected the basics. The celebrity businessman was the one to fix things, he boasted.

Here in middle-class Macomb County, where more than half of the 1,500 lanes of road are deemed in poor condition, local business and political leaders say fixing the infrastructure is also essential to fulfilling another Trump vow: restoring the country's manufacturing base. An industrial renaissance is brewing here, they say, with billions of dollars in investment and thousands of new jobs, but the roads needed to test self-driving cars and carry workers and heavy trucks are falling apart.

Trump's failure to gain traction on the infrastructure issue has not received the same attention as last year's health care failure. Yet falling short could have broad consequences in undercutting his economic vision.

"We have a situation in this country and in this town, and one way or another we'll have to address it," said Mike Brzoska, president of Chardam Gear Co., which builds gears and assemblies for the aerospace industry.

Brzoska voted for Trump, despite his concerns over global warming, hoping that an experienced businessman could fight for fairer trade and better fiscal policies. His plant is the type of business Trump loves to promote.

Brzoska doubled his workforce to 135 over the last decade and takes pride in the salaries and health benefits he gives to his employees, who stood with him during a past downturn. He is excited to show off the expanding factory floor, full of the skilled workers needed to cut precise teeth in the cylinders or shave just enough heavy metal off a part to meet specifications.

CLARENCE TABB JR./DETROIT NEWS 2017

A house in Fraser, Mich. is demolished to help clear the way for repairs to a broken sewer line. Officials say Fraser's infrastructure needs could hold back economic growth.

He is less eager to show off the eight-lane highway, Mound Road, which leads to his plant.

"I don't want to break your neck," he says before opening the door to his Jeep. The passenger window has a big crack left by road debris Brzoska encountered recently.

Then begins a tour full of swerves, bumps and sudden stops. Asphalt crews are everywhere, spreading temporary fill into holes as fast as they can in a sort of never-ending whack-a-mole game. Brzoska points out the old rebar jutting from the crumbling road and the cracks between holes.

"What do you do with this?" he says at a familiar ditch. "This has been patched two weeks ago."

From the decrepit road, the signs of economic development are all around — factories, parking lots full of workers' cars and warehouses for some of the world's biggest manufacturers. According to county data, the Big Three automakers have invested $10.3 billion in factories along Mound Road since 2010, after the recession-era bailout of President Barack Obama's first year. General Motors is testing its self-driving car in one, Fiat-Chrysler plans to begin assembling Dodge Ram 1500 trucks in another.

Brzoska passes a massive Frito-Lay distribution center, a robotics plant for the German company KUKA, a General Dynamics campus and more. Commerce parks and engineering firms feed off this economic ecosystem.

It all slows down, however, when the heavy trucks and the commuters hit the road.

Hours before Brzoska's wild drive, the county executive, Mark Hackel, kicked off the latest effort to fix at least part of Mound Road, a $10 million plan that's considered a stopgap.

Local officials and businesses have proposed a more ambitious plan that depends on nearly $200 million from the federal government to revive 12 miles of crumbling corridor that connects with Detroit, which Brzoska hopes will link with that city's own rebound. It's the type of investment Trump encourages — public investment with tangible private-sector benefits.

This is a crucial location for Trump to make good on his talk. Macomb County remains famous politically as the home of the "Reagan Democrats" — blue-collar union members, traditionally Democratic, who became swing voters, leaning Republican in presidential contests. Trump's ability to win the county, which supported Barack Obama's reelection in 2012, and others like it, was essential to his surprise Electoral College victory.

Policy experts, however, say Trump's multi-year, $200 billion infrastructure plan, unveiled last month, falls far short of what's needed for Macomb County and the rest of the nation. The president's figure is a fraction of the $1 trillion in direct spending he promised during and after his campaign, and would not come close to producing, as he claims, a total of $1.5 trillion by attracting investors for public-private partnerships.

Trump's budget proposal, released in February along with the infrastructure outline, would eliminate many of the popular grant programs that counties like Macomb were depending on. Among them is the TIGER grant, a popular initiative of the Obama-era economic stimulus program that the county looked to for a major portion of the cost of the Mound Road rebuilding. While Congress is unlikely to approve such cuts, Trump's proposals have flummoxed local officials who have been traveling to Washington to lobby.

"It's confusing," said Hackel, the Macomb County executive and a Democrat. "We're trying to figure out what we are chasing. It's a moving target."

What's ahead in landmark Trump-Kim summit

By Kim Tong-Hyung
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — After a year of threats and diatribes, President Donald Trump and North Korean dictator Kim Jong Un have agreed to meet face-to-face for talks about the North's nuclear program.

It remains to be seen whether a summit, if it takes place, could lead to any meaningful breakthrough. North Korea tested its most powerful nuclear weapon to date and test-launched three intercontinental ballistic missiles theoretically capable of striking the U.S. mainland.

Will there be a breakthrough? Failure?

Here's a look at what may lie ahead and the challenges that remain:

GETTY-AFP

After a provocative year between North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, left, and President Donald Trump, many wonder if a summit could lead to any meaningful breakthrough.

Why now?

Analysts say Trump's decision to accept Kim's invitation for a summit and to do it by May could be linked to a desire to claim a significant achievement in his most difficult foreign policy challenge before the U.S. midterm elections in November.

Kim, on the other hand, seems desperate to save a sanctions-battered North Korean economy.

Both leaders have interests in striking a big deal, said Cheong Seong-Chang, a senior analyst at South Korea's Sejong Institute.

Should such a get-together happen, the May summit between Trump and Kim will come shortly after a planned meeting between Kim and South Korean President Moon Jae-in during April.

It's likely that North Korea will also push for summits with China, Russia and Japan later in the year to further break out of its isolation, Cheong said.

Trump will likely try to achieve something dramatic in his meeting with Kim, said Hong Min, an analyst at Seoul's Korea Institute for National Unification. Possibilities include an exchange of verbal commitments on the denuclearization of North Korea and a peace treaty between the two countries.

Where to meet?

The United States and North Korea will likely be talking quite a bit in coming months and maybe even exchanging high-level delegations to set up the logistics of the summit.

One of the biggest questions is where it will take place.

The United States would prefer Washington, while North Korea will want Trump to come to Pyongyang, its capital.

Unless the countries agree to a third-country location, which would likely be South Korea, experts see it as more likely that Trump will fly to Pyongyang.

While no incumbent U.S. president has ever set foot in North Korea, Trump might be willing to become the first because it would fit the strong-willed, in-your-face type of leadership he tries to project, Hong said.

It's hard to imagine Kim going to Washington because he is much less diplomatically experienced; the planned meeting with Moon in April will be his first with any state leader since he took power in 2011.

They could also meet in the truce village of Panmunjom in the Demilitarized Zone between the rival Koreas or, Hong said, the southern South Korean resort island of Jeju.

What will Kim want?

A big question will be whether Trump can accept a freeze of North Korea's nuclear weapons program rather than its elimination, said Koh Yu-hwan, a North Korea expert at Seoul's Dongguk University.

Kim will likely want to keep some nukes as a deterrent, but that might be hard for Trump to tolerate when he spent so much time criticizing his predecessor, Barack Obama, for allegedly standing by and watching as North Korea became a nuclear threat.

Still, Kim might express a firmer commitment to denuclearization to Trump, including giving a full report on the North's nuclear weapons arsenal and allowing thorough international verification once the denuclearization process takes hold, said Choi Kang, vice president of Seoul's Asan Institute for Policy Studies.

While some experts speculate that North Korea might ask for a halt of annual military drills between the United States and South Korea or even the withdrawal of U.S. troops from the Korean Peninsula, Choi said it's meaningful that Kim, at least according to South Korean presidential official Chung Eui-yong, said he understands that the joint military exercises between the allies "must continue."

This signals an important departure from the past when the North thoroughly rejected the U.S.-South Korea alliance.

Trump said he believes North Korea will abide by its pledge to suspend missile tests while the sides prepare for a summit.

Trump noted in a tweet that North Korea has refrained from such tests since November and said Kim "has promised not to do so through our meetings."

"I believe they will honor that commitment," Trump wrote Saturday.

Sessions: U.S. prosecutors won't take on small-time pot cases

By Sadie Gurman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal prosecutors won't take on small-time marijuana cases, despite the Justice Department's decision to lift an Obama-era policy that discouraged U.S. authorities from cracking down on the pot trade in states where the drug is legal, Attorney General Jeff Sessions said Saturday.

Federal law enforcement lacks the resources to take on "routine cases" and will continue to focus on drug gangs and larger conspiracies, Sessions said. The comments come after the Trump administration in January threw the burgeoning marijuana legalization movement into uncertainty by reversing the largely hands-off approach that prevailed during the Obama administration, saying federal prosecutors should instead handle marijuana cases however they see fit.

The Obama-era policy allowed the pot trade to flourish, with eight states legalizing marijuana for recreational use.

The reversal added to confusion about whether it's OK to grow, buy or use marijuana in states where pot is legal, since longstanding federal law prohibits it. And it caused concern that prosecutors would feel empowered to jail individuals for marijuana possession.

"I am not going to tell Colorado or California or someone else that possession of marijuana is legal under United States law," Sessions said, answering student questions after a speech at Georgetown's law school. But, he added, federal prosecutors "haven't been working small marijuana cases before (and) they are not going to be working them now."

Of particular interest are problems that federal authorities have tried for years to tackle, like illegal marijuana-growing operations on national parklands and gangs that peddle pot along with more harmful drugs. Some law enforcement officials in pot-legal states argue the legal trade has caused unintended problems like black-market marijuana growing and dealing by people who don't even try to conform to the legal framework.

It remains to be seen whether prosecutors will seek to punish state-sanctioned pot businesses. Some have indicated they have no plans to do so.

"Those are the kinds of things each one of those U.S. attorneys will decide how to handle," Sessions said.

‘Brain drain’ fears strike West Wing

Cohn’s departure sparks concerns of coming exodus

By Zeke Miller and Jonathan Lemire
Associated Press

JABIN BOTSFORD/WASHINGTON POST

Chief economic adviser Gary Cohn is the latest to announce his exit. He has clashed with the president over trade policy.

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump once presided over a reality show in which a key cast member exited each week. The same thing seems to be happening in his White House.

Trump’s West Wing has descended into a period of unparalleled tumult amid a wave of staff departures, yet the president insists it’s a place of “no Chaos, only great Energy!”

The latest to announce his exit is Gary Cohn, Trump’s chief economic adviser, who had clashed with the boss over trade policy.

Cohn’s departure has sparked internal fears of an even larger exodus, raising concerns in Washington of a coming “brain drain” around the president that will only make it more difficult for Trump to advance his already languishing policy agenda.

Multiple White House officials said the president has been pushing anxious aides to stay on the job.

“Everyone wants to work in the White House,” Trump said during a news conference Tuesday. “They all want a piece of the Oval Office.”

The reality is far different.

Vacancies abound in the West Wing and the broader Trump administration, with some jobs never filled and others subject to repeat openings.

The position of White House communications director is soon to be empty again after the departure of its fourth occupant, Hope Hicks.

“That kind of turnover creates a lot of disruption,” she said, noting the loss of institutional knowledge and relationships with agencies and Congress. “You can’t really leave those behind to your successor.”

Turnover after a year in office is nothing new, but this administration has churned through staff at a dizzying pace, and allies are worried the situation could descend into a free-fall.

One White House official said there is concern about a potential “death spiral” in the West Wing, with each departure heightening the sense of frenzy and expediting the next.

Multiple aides who are considering departing, all speaking on condition of anonymity to discuss internal matters, said they didn’t have a clue about whom the administration could find to fill their roles.

They said their desire to be team players has kept them on the job longer than planned.

Some said they were nearing a breaking point.

“You have situations where people are stretched to take on more than one job,” said Martha Joynt Kumar, director of the White House Transition Project.

She cited the example of Johnny DeStefano, who oversees the White House offices of personnel, public liaison, political affairs and intergovernmental affairs.

“Those are four positions that in most administrations are each headed by an assistant to the president or a deputy assistant,” Kumar said.

The overlap between those qualified to work in the White House and those willing to take a job there has been shrinking too, according to White House officials and outside Trump allies concerned about the slow pace of hires.

Trump’s mercurial decision-making practices, fears of being drawn into special counsel Robert Mueller’s Russia investigation and a stalled legislative agenda are keeping top-flight talent on the outside.

“Most of all, President Trump hasn’t demonstrated a scrap of loyalty to current and former staff, and everyone knows it,” said Michael Steel, a former aide to onetime Gov. Jeb Bush, R-Fla., and ex-House Speaker John Boehner, R-Ohio.

Trump acknowledged that he is a tough boss, saying he enjoys watching his closest aides fight over policy.

“I like conflict,” he said Tuesday.

Since his days on the campaign, Trump has frequently and loudly complained about the quality of his staff, eager to fault his aides for any mishaps rather than shouldering responsibility.

His attacks on his staff have sharpened in recent weeks, and he has suggested to confidants that he has few people at his side he can count on, according to two people familiar with his thinking who were not authorized to discuss private conversations publicly.

Hicks’ departure will leave a gaping hole in the president’s inner circle. She served as both media gatekeeper and confidante.

A number of other aides have expressed worry about the legal implications — and steep bills — they could face if ensnared in Mueller’s probe. It has had a chilling effect on an already sluggish White House hiring process, according to officials, and there is wide concern that working for Trump could negatively affect career prospects.

Hopes for significant governing achievements in the coming years, along the lines of the tax cuts passed in December, are growing fleeting, as Republicans face a daunting electoral environment this fall.

Morale has plunged among West Wing aides in recent weeks. Some point to the departure of staff secretary Rob Porter in mid-February as beginning the tailspin.

Porter was a popular figure, but his departure undid some of the progress made on streamlining the White House’s chaotic policy process. Allegations of domestic violence against him stunned co-workers. A permanent replacement has yet to be named.

Chief of staff John Kelly’s shifting explanations for how he handled the Porter matter — including, in the eyes of some, outright lies — damaged his reputation among staffers who had seen Kelly as a stabilizing force in a turbulent West Wing.

The administration has been understaffed from the onset, in part due to the president’s refusal to consider hiring even the most qualified Republicans if they opposed him during the campaign, according to a White House official not authorized to speak publicly about personnel matters.

But some aides insisted that Trump would not have trouble finding qualified replacements.

“At the end of the day, I liken what goes on here to a football team like the New England Patriots, right?” Peter Navarro, the director of the White House’s Trade and Manufacturing Policy office, said on Bloomberg TV.

“Like every year, the Patriots win the division, but they do it with different players. What doesn’t change is the coach and the quarterback, and that’s what we have in Donald Trump.”

Among those under consideration for Cohn’s job are CNBC commentator Larry Kudlow, and Office of Management and Budget Director Mick Mulvaney, according to a person familiar with the discussions.

Bodies pile up as state funding falls short

By Alanna Durkin Richer

STEPHAN SAVOIA/AP

Funeral director Peter Stefan buries dozens of unclaimed bodies a year in Massachusetts.

WORCESTER, Mass. — Who takes care of the unclaimed dead, the people who were homeless or estranged from family members, or who outlived all their kin, and left no assets behind?

The answer is usually funeral homes that get reimbursed by state or local governments for the cost of cremation or burial.

But payments are not keeping up with ever-rising expenses in some places, like Massachusetts, meaning the number of funeral homes willing to shoulder the burden is dwindling.

In at least one state, West Virginia, drug overdose victims have used up nearly all the money set aside for the unclaimed dead.

"These are human beings, someone's mother, father, sister, brother," said Peter Stefan, a funeral director in his 70s who buries dozens of unclaimed bodies a year in central Massachusetts. "What do you do with these people? If I leave this place this way, the poor won't have too many options."

The $1,110 reimbursement for funeral directors who bury the indigent and unclaimed in Massachusetts hasn't risen in 35 years. The total cost for their time, the casket, transportation of the corpse and a burial plot can be double that, they say.

Cremation is cheaper, but that's impossible if, as is required in some places including Massachusetts, funeral directors can't find kin to sign off. That leaves them scrambling to find discounts or covering some costs themselves.

"As long as you have two or three funeral homes that are willing to do this, it's not a problem," said Robert Lawler, a Boston funeral director who buries about 100 unclaimed bodies a year. "But what happens when we decide we can't do it anymore?"

Directors recently became eligible for an extra $1,000 if they accept bodies from the Massachusetts medical examiner's office, which investigates suicides and suspicious and accidental deaths. But that accounts only for some bodies.

About 15 states provide some funding for unclaimed body burials or cremations, while the rest have pushed the cost to local governments, said Scott Gilligan, general counsel for the National Funeral Directors Association.

Ohio used to pay $750 before shifting the burden to local governments. Now, some communities offer a set fee, while some smaller towns often won't even budget for it, and funeral directors have to fight to just get paid $350, Gilligan said.

"A lot of times, they just do it as good citizens," he said.

In West Virginia, there will soon be no money for the cremation or burial of the poor and unclaimed. The state fund that pays for them is set to run out of money at the end of this month because of drug overdose deaths, said Robert Kimes, executive director of the state funeral directors association.

Directors who bury the indigent and unclaimed from March on will have to try recouping money from the state later, but there's no guarantee, Kimes said.

In northwestern Georgia's Floyd County, Coroner Gene Proctor last year was calling five or six funeral homes every time he had an unclaimed body before he could find one willing to bury it for the $1,250 the county provided.

"I couldn't blame them because they're a business, and they have to make money to survive, and here I am asking them to cost themselves money," said Proctor, who handled about 90 unclaimed sets of remains last year.

He recently persuaded the county to pass an ordinance that provides for the cremation of the unclaimed. Now, funeral homes get $750, and every director in the county is stepping forward, he said.

In Massachusetts, Stefan wants lawmakers to require local health boards to approve cremation when relatives don't come forward within 30 days.

Stefan, who arranged the burial of Boston Marathon bomber Tamerlan Tsarnaev, is often the go-to funeral director for police, nursing homes and hospitals. He smoked from a wooden pipe as he explained how the body of James Oram, 82, arrived at his Worcester funeral home hours after dying at a nursing home in January.

Oram's body spent about a month in an unfinished basement in a large refrigerator where Stefan can keep three bodies as he looks for relatives, money and burial space.

Stefan eventually discovered that Oram died with about $2,000, money that paid for his burial instead of the state.

On the unusually warm February day, Oram was laid to rest. A funeral director read the 23rd Psalm as cemetery workers put his simple blue casket adorned with white and yellow flowers into the grave and covered it with dirt.

"These people were born, grew up, went to high school," Stefan said. "What happened in the middle? Who knows?"

A woman kisses a member of the U.S. Coast Guard during the Saint Patrick's Day Parade in Savannah. The Army wants the smooching to stop to preserve military decorum.

Army: No kissing parading soldiers on St. Patrick's Day

By Russ Bynum
Associated Press

SAVANNAH, Ga. — The Army wants to halt a favorite St. Patrick's Day shenanigan in Savannah that for decades has left marching soldiers with cheeks smeared in bright red lipstick.

Roughly 200 soldiers from nearby Fort Stewart plan to take part in the March 17 parade, which organizers say could draw 500,000 or more revelers to Georgia's oldest city. Savannah's Irish immigrants and their descendants have marched on St. Patrick's Day since 1824. The sprawling celebration is now one of the South's largest street parties after Mardi Gras.

As the parade winds around Savannah's oak-shaded squares, women in the crowd traditionally slather on red lipstick as they wait for the uniformed troops to approach in formation among kilt-wearing pipe bands and floats pulled by shamrock-decorated pickup trucks. Then they dart into the street to plant messy kisses on the soldiers' faces.

But Fort Stewart commanders and organizers of the Savannah parade want the soldier smooching to stop. Parade adjutants posted along the route are being asked to help turn back any would-be kissing bandits.

"They need to look like soldiers when they march, they need to look professional," Fort Stewart spokesman Kevin Larson said Thursday. "It's hard to look professional as a soldier with red lipstick on your cheeks. Red lipstick is not part of the uniform."

Kissing the troops, Irish or not, has been a St. Patrick's Day pastime in Savannah for at least 40 years.

Brian Counihan, chairman of the Savannah parade's organizing committee, said he recalled seeing it when he marched in the parade in the 1970s as a teenage cadet from Benedictine Military School.

"It was sporadic, a few of your girlfriends and your moms would run out," Counihan said. "In the last six or eight years, it's come to a point where the military's almost halted. It's a fun thing, but it's gotten out of hand."

Counihan, a deputy commander for the local sheriff's department, said having random spectators dash up to the moving parade raises safety and security concerns. Organizers also want to avoid any appearance of sexual misconduct at a time when the #MeToo movement has heightened awareness.

"People can take it the wrong way," Counihan said. "Somebody could run up and grab an individual and it could be considered sexual harassment if it's done improperly."

It's not unusual for organizers to make tweaks to promote safety. Throwing beads and candy from floats was banned long ago in Savannah.

The Army and the parade committee aren't seeking penalties for any parade watchers who slip through and land an illicit kiss.

"We can't control other people's behavior," Larson said. "We're simply asking them to police themselves and do right by our soldiers."

Cholesterol drug touted as more insurance-friendly

The makers of Praluent said they would work with insurers on pricing to get the medicine to those most in need.

ORLANDO, Fla. — A newer cholesterol drug, used with older statin medicines, modestly lowered heart risks and deaths in a big study of heart attack survivors that might persuade insurers to cover the pricey treatment more often.

Results on the drug, Praluent, were announced Saturday at an American College of Cardiology conference in Florida. It's the first time a cholesterol-lowering drug has reduced deaths since statins such as Lipitor and Crestor came out decades ago. "It's the ultimate outcome; it's what matters to patients," said study leader Dr. Philippe Gabriel Steg of Hospital Bichat in Paris.

But the benefit was small — 167 people would need to use Praluent for nearly three years to prevent a single death. "That's a high cost" that may still hinder its use, said one independent expert, Dr. Amit Khera, a preventive cardiologist at UT Southwestern Medical Center in Dallas and a spokesman for the American Heart Association.

The drug's makers, Sanofi and Regeneron Pharmaceuticals, sponsored the study and said they would work with insurers on pricing to get the medicine to those who need it the most.

About the study: Doctors focus on lowering LDL, or bad cholesterol, to prevent heart problems. Statins are the main drugs for this, but some people can't tolerate or get enough help from them. Praluent and Amgen's Repatha work in a different way and lower cholesterol much more. Patients give themselves shots of the medicine once or twice a month. The drugs have been sold since 2015 but cost more than $14,000 a year, and insurers have balked at paying without proof that they reduce health problems, not just the cholesterol number.

Last year, a study showed Repatha cut heart problems but did not improve survival. The new study tested the rival drug, Praluent, for a longer time and in patients at higher risk — nearly 19,000 people who in the previous year had a heart attack or chest pain serious enough to put them in the hospital.

All had LDL over 70 despite maximum statin use. Half were given Praluent and the rest received dummy shots. Praluent was started at a lower dose and increased if LDL did not drop below 50. After nearly three years, 9.5 percent of those on Praluent and 11.1 percent of those on dummy medicine had suffered a heart attack, stroke, heart-related death or serious chest pain; 3.5 percent on Praluent and 4.1 percent on dummy medicine died.

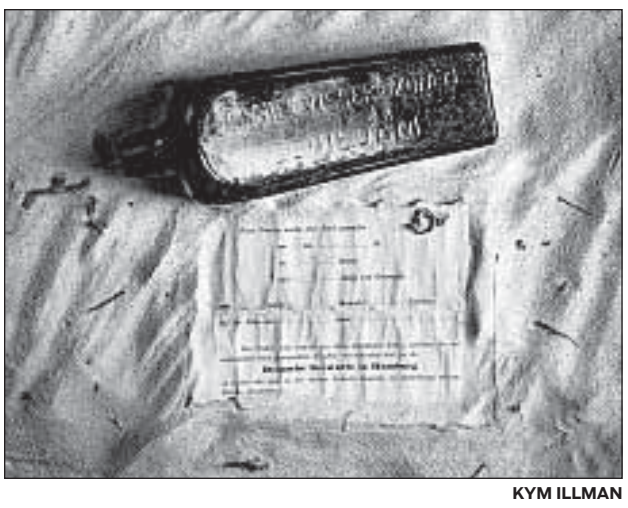
That worked out to a 15 percent lower risk with Praluent. Benefits were greater for those whose LDL was 100 or more at the start of the study. The drug had no major safety issues.

What doctors say: "We need to reset our expectations" and realize that benefits for any new drug are going to be fairly small when added to already good treatments such as statins, said Dr. Jeffrey Kuvin, conference leader and cardiology chief at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center. The new drugs clearly help people at high risk and are not aimed at people at low risk, such as those who have high cholesterol but have never had a heart attack, he said.

"I've been unconvinced" of the drugs' benefits but now may prescribe them for certain very high risk patients, said Duke University cardiologist Dr. Christopher Granger. But preventing fewer than one heart problem a year at the drug's current price is not cost-effective, he said.

Pressure on price: An independent group, the Institute for Clinical and Economic Review, on Saturday released a new range for what Praluent should cost, based on the new results — $2,300 to $3,400 per year for people like those in the study. A price of $4,500 to $8,000 per year would be justified for patients at higher risk, with LDL over 100.

From 300,000 to 400,000 people in the U.S. each year fall in that second category. Praluent's makers say they will aim for those price ranges for insurers that remove barriers to coverage for people at the highest risk.



KYM ILLMAN

1886 message in a bottle found in Australia

By Theresa Vargas
The Washington Post

Before there were computers and GPS beacons to track the ocean's whims, there were slips of paper and bottles.

Or more specifically, slips of paper in bottles.

The world's oldest message in a bottle was recently discovered on a beach in Australia 132 years after it was tossed into the Indian Ocean as part of an experiment on ocean drift patterns, according to experts who call it "an exceedingly rare find."

A report released by the Western Australia Museum details how the bottle was found and what its message reveals about science and history.

The bottle, which measured less than nine inches long and three inches wide, was found in January north of Perth by Tonya Illman, according to a museum news release this month. She and a friend were walking along the dunes when she saw it near where her son's car had become bogged in sand.

Not knowing if what they found was "historically significant or a very inventive hoax," the family brought the discovery to the museum.

Experts found two significant details on the paper: the date June 12, 1886, and the name of a ship, "Paula."

The museum's report links the bottle to German scientist George von Neumayer who implemented a drift bottle experiment from 1864 to 1933 that involved thousands of bottles being thrown overboard with pre-printed message slips inside. Ship captains were expected to write in details on one side of the paper and those who found the bottles were asked to fill out the back and return the notes to to the German Naval Observatory in Hamburg or the nearest German Consulate.

Only 662 message slips were returned. Before the latest discovery, the last one was found in January 1934.

Jesse Osborne, seen in court last month, had declared that he'd "probably most likely kill around 50 or 60."

'Like shooting fish in a barrel'

S.C. teen accused of killing 2 aimed for fame, psychiatrist says

Six days before he allegedly opened fire on an elementary school playground, the eighth-grader returned to his Instagram group chat to fixate, yet again, on his most intense interests: guns and bombs and the mass murder of children.

"My plan," wrote Jesse Osborne, who had turned 14 three weeks earlier, "is shooting my dad getting his keys getting in his truck, driving to the elementary school 4 mins away, once there gear up, shoot out the bottom school class room windows, enter the building, shoot the first class which will be the 2d grade, grab teachers keys so I don't have to hasle to get through any doors."

He had been researching other school shooters for months and, determined to outdo them, learned exactly how many people they'd murdered: 13 at Columbine High; 26 at Sandy Hook Elementary; 32 at Virginia Tech.

"I think ill probably most likely kill around 50 or 60," Jesse declared. "If I get lucky maybe 150."

On Valentine's Day, at the same time police say another angry teen, Nikolas Cruz, slaughtered 17 people at a Parkland, Fla., high school with a semiautomatic AR-15, Jesse was sitting in a South Carolina courtroom, waiting to find out if he would be tried as an adult for a 2016 rampage that left his father and a 6-year-old dead.

The two teens have much in common. Both, investigators say, tortured animals, obsessed over guns and bragged of their deadly intentions on social media. And in the hours after Cruz's alleged killing spree, as the nation began, once again, to ask why, a group of detectives, prosecutors and psychiatrists were providing answers about Jesse, now 15. He'd detailed his motives in dozens of online messages, in his 46-page confession and in lengthy interviews with doctors who evaluated him, offering extraordinary insight into the mind of an American school shooter.

For Peter Langman, one of the country's leading experts on the subject, the teen's calculated approach and lack of empathy called to mind Eric Harris, one of the Columbine killers Jesse idolized.

"The coldbloodedness, the callousness of the attack — not only before but afterwards," said Langman, who was not involved in the case but has reviewed Jesse's confession. "Even having done it, he's not struck with horror or guilt."

In fact, James Ballenger, a psychiatrist who interviewed Jesse for a total of nine hours, found that the teen reveled in what he'd done.

"He wants to talk about how dangerous he is," Ballenger testified. "He wanted people to know."

At the five-day hearing that began Feb. 12, prosecutors pushed for Jesse to be tried as an adult because if he remained in the juvenile system, he could only be held until age 21. Jesse's defense team, meanwhile, tried to portray him as a lost but misunderstood child, alleging that he had been bullied by kids at school and mistreated by his father at home.

Jesse, who had grown up on his family's chicken farm, liked to shoot guns, but so did many boys his age in Townville, a rural community 40 miles southwest of Greenville. He camped with his grandparents, whom he adored, and watched the movie "Frozen," one of his favorites. An avid reader of history, he told his family he wanted to fly to space when he grew up.

At odds with that portrait were Jesse's own words, captured in dozens of messages he'd exchanged in his private chat group, which the teen claimed included users from around the world.

"I HAVE TO BEAT ADAM LAZA . . .," he wrote nine days before the Sept. 28, 2016, shooting in a misspelled reference to the Sandy Hook killer, Adam Lanza. "Atleast 40."

Two days later, he debated whether he should attack his middle school, from which he'd been expelled, or his elementary school, just up the road. He decided on Townville Elementary, because it was closer and had no armed security. Jesse, who considered himself the victim of an unfair world, announced online that he would kill kids he didn't know and had never met "before they bullie the nobodys."

"Itll be like shooting fish in a barrel," he wrote his friends, whose identities remain unclear, along with whether the FBI has tracked any of them down. The agency declined to comment, citing Jesse's open case.

In the chat, he said he had researched police response times for the area and found that it would take them 15 minutes to get there, and maybe 45 for SWAT. He said he would throw pipe bombs into each classroom before he got in a shootout with police and killed himself with his shotgun. He said he had been planning a massacre for two years.

A detective later discovered that Jesse, then a 6-foot-tall, 147-pound wispy-haired blond with a voice that tended to crack, had used his phone to Google these terms: "deadliest US mass shootings," "top 10 mass shooters," "youngest mass murderer," "10 youngest murderers in history."

Seven hours after he was pinned to the ground outside Townville Elementary by a volunteer firefighter, Jesse acknowledged in an interview with investigators that he'd shot far fewer kids than he'd intended. The problem, he explained, was the weapon. He'd only had access to the .40 caliber pistol his father kept in a dresser drawer. It had jammed on the playground, just 12 seconds after he first pulled the trigger.

The weapon Jesse really wanted, the one he'd tried desperately to get, was, the teenager believed, locked in his father's gun safe: the Ruger Mini-14, a semiautomatic rifle much like the gun that, 17 months later, was fired again and again at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High, during one of the deadliest school shootings in American history.

His obsession began, he said, with a song that mentioned Columbine.

Jesse wanted to know what it meant, so he asked his father, who told him about the April 20, 1999, attack that became a seminal moment in the evolution of modern mass shootings.

"And so I researched more," he said during his confession. "Then I looked up all these other ones."

Through much of his childhood, Jesse had seemed no different from any other kid in the Southern community of 4,000 people. Before he attacked Townville Elementary, Jesse had gone there through fifth grade, doing well in his classes and hardly ever getting into trouble. He played catcher on a rec-league baseball team. He got invited to birthday parties.

It wasn't until he moved to a middle school in a neighboring county that his "other side," as one psychiatrist put it, became clear. He pulled the legs off crickets and smashed frogs against the ground and habitually watched a video of kittens being mutilated. He also posted Instagram videos about Columbine that some at the school considered a potential threat. The teen grew more volatile, insisting that he'd been bullied, a claim investigators later questioned.

"When I come back with a rifle, you're going to be the one I shoot," he recalled to Ballenger, who noted in court that Jesse "loved how much it scared the boy."

Then, one day, he brought a hatchet and a machete in his backpack. When another student spotted the weapons and reported him, Jesse was expelled and arrested, serving a brief stint in juvenile detention before being placed on probation.

It was then, as a home-schooler, that he became consumed with violent fantasies, the court evidence showed. How much his parents knew about them remains unclear, but at least once, the couple came across internet messages he'd written that they found disturbing, and his mother acknowledged to investigators that he'd become increasingly difficult to raise.

Jesse spent long stretches alone in his room, where he played first-person shooter games for hours and scoured the internet for information on firearms. Beneath one YouTube video reviewing guns, The Washington Post found that he'd asked about the quality of a Hi-Point 9mm Carbine, an affordable semiautomatic rifle.

In response to a question about gun licenses on another video, he wrote, "depends on your state. here in south caralina we dont need a lisense for anything except explosives or machine guns which are crazy expensive." At least once, he commented on a video titled "Active Shooter in the School - Plans and Drills."

Jesse told police that he had also discovered the "true crime community" on Tumblr, where fans of serial killers and mass murderers gather to delight in their shared devotion. Through that, his fascination with other school shooters, especially Eric Harris and Dylan Klebold, bloomed. His Instagram username included "nbk," for the movie "Natural Born Killers," and "kmfdm," for a German industrial band — a pair of pop-culture references that appeared frequently in the writings of the Columbine killers.

The pair's influence over the past two decades has been enormous, said Langman. He noted that Jesse was at least the 33rd gunman to cite Harris and Klebold asinfluences.

"Knowing about a school shooter doesn't cause someone to become a school shooter," Langman once wrote. "For people already at risk or on a path toward violence, however, external influences in the form of other mass attacks may be a factor in spurring them on toward committing their own attack."

That was clearly true for Jesse, who mentioned Lanza and Harris in his messages and Seung-Hui Cho, the Virginia Tech gunman, in his confession.

On the morning of the shooting, he preloaded a magazine for his dad's handgun, writing to his chat group that he would soon "be on the news." When his dad, whom Jesse accused with little evidence of being an abusive drunk, "started fussing" at the boy, he retrieved the pistol, came down stairs and shot his father in the back of the head.

He said goodbye to his dogs and gave his favorite rabbit, Floppy, a kiss, he told investigators, before putting on a vest, packed with more than a dozen extra rounds, and heading to the school, where he arrived at 1:41 p.m.

"The first shot I hit someone. Second I hit a window," he told his interrogators.

"The first shot you hit someone?" one of them asked.

"I think. I just seen red pop up, so I just assumed."

And had his gun not jammed, they asked him, what would have happened?

"God knows," he said.

Near the end of his confession, Jesse announced, "Now I have a life. Probably won't get a job, but I'll — I'll at least have a life."

That sounded bizarre for a teenager who knew he would likely face decades in prison, but, as the experts who would analyze him soon discovered, the comment spoke to Jesse's chief motivation.

Ballenger, a psychiatrist with 40 years of experience, had already analyzed Dylann Roof, the white supremacist who killed nine African-Americans in a Charleston church in 2015, and Jared Lee Loughner, who killed six people and wounded Democratic Rep. Gabrielle Giffords in Arizona in 2011. What he saw in Jesse was a young man who killed not because of bullies or abuse or a fractured mind, but because he wanted to attain the life and status he'd envisioned.

"He was going to be famous, the best shooter ever," Ballenger testified. "He was going to be worshiped for a long time — worshiped."

But Jesse didn't kill as he wanted, and in a country that barely notices school shootings in which just a single child dies, his brief assault garnered only momentary attention outside South Carolina.

For Townville, though, those 12 seconds of gunfire were devastating, leaving children, parents and teachers overcome with guilt and post-traumatic stress, as detailed in a Post story last year.

A teacher and a student survived their bullet wounds, but one round Jesse is accused of firing took the life of Jacob Hall, a bespectacled 6-year-old who was the smallest child in first grade. Hundreds attended his funeral, where his body laid inside a miniature gray casket topped with a Ninja Turtles figurine. He was dressed in a Batman costume.

Jesse showed almost no remorse, according to experts who analyzed him. He mocked his victims and once suggested that he'd done Jacob "a favor."

In court, prosecutors presented evidence that Jesse's preoccupation with violence never receded. After a 15-year-old killed two students and injured at least a dozen other people at a Kentucky school on Jan. 23, Jesse looked up the incident on a computer at the detention center. He also repeatedly searched for the lyrics of a vicious rap song, "One Shot Kill."

"My observations of him in this courtroom over the last few days have been that he is still a hundred percent in that mind-set," Ballenger testified, saying that he'd seen Jesse smile, over and over, as his crimes were discussed. "He's very comfortable in this hearing."

That's apparently not what Jesse had wanted to convey, though. After his arrest, he'd researched the symptoms of autism and schizophrenia, and in interviews with doctors, he talked of hallucinations that included seeing blue people and the cartoon character Scooby-Doo. His evaluators testified that, without question, he was lying.

Ballenger concluded that Jesse was at high risk for developing antisocial personality disorder, often called sociopathy, which cannot be diagnosed before age 18. He recommended that the teen be tried as an adult, and the judge agreed when he issued his Feb. 16 ruling.

Never far from the courtroom discussion was the horror of what might have happened if the pistol he'd taken from his father's dresser drawer hadn't jammed or, even worse, he had used the semiautomatic rifle. Once, Jesse had pretended that he was texting on his phone as he tried to film his father typing in the code to the gun safe. Another time, he'd put dish soap on the buttons, hoping it would reveal fingerprints.

Jesse could have killed so many more children, he knew, with that Mini-14. "To the media, it's called an assault rifle," he told interrogators before lamenting, for a second time, that it remained locked away.

But he was wrong.

Soon after the shooting, investigators searched the teen's home for evidence. In his parents' bedroom, they looked in the closet, and there, outside the safe and just feet from his father's dresser, was the weapon Jesse coveted.

Russia's sons a footnote in Syria war

Parents grieve over men they say used as mercenaries

KEDROVOYE, Russia — For Russian mother Farkhanur Gavrilova, the blow came last month when an acquaintance called her to say that her son was killed in a U.S. airstrike in Syria that pitted Russian and U.S. combatants against each other for the first time in the Syrian war.

Gavrilova's son, 37-year-old Ruslan Gavrilov, was one of seven men in this central Russian village of 2,300 who are thought to have joined a private military company called Wagner. The company reportedly was involved in a Feb. 7 attack on U.S.-backed Kurdish fighters in Syria and suffered devastating losses in a U.S. counterstrike.

On the morning of Feb. 8, she said, her son's colleague called to say he was told by an unidentified caller that Ruslan had died in the Feb. 7 airstrike.

"He was torn to pieces," the 67-year-old woman said, speaking in her sparsely furnished apartment recently. "If he was alive — he is a plucky guy — he would have tried to call."

The Russian Foreign Ministry for the first time has acknowledged that five Russians had been killed by the U.S. strike in Syria, emphasizing they weren't on active military duty.

Previously, Russian and U.S. officials said they had no information on Russian casualties in the clash.

Russian forces are supporting the Syrian government in the fight against opposition groups, some of which are backed by the United States, and elements of both sides are fighting the last remnants of the Islamic State group in Syria.

Moscow and Washington long have feared a collision between Russian and U.S. combatants in Syria and sought to prevent it by maintaining a regular communications link between the militaries.

Observers blame the Feb. 7 clash on a lack of coordination between the Russian military and private military contractors in Syria.

Along with the Russian military, thousands of Russians have also reportedly fought in Syria as private contractors.

That allows the Kremlin to keep the official death toll from its Syrian military campaign low, helping to avoid negative publicity as President Vladimir Putin runs for re-election in Russia's March 18 presidential vote.

Gavrilova said she had tried to dissuade her son, who was remodeling apartments, from going to Syria, but he was lured by a promise of high wages.

"Why did they leave? Because of poverty, to make money," Gavrilova said.

Russian law forbids the hiring of mercenaries or working as one.

Putin declared victory in Syria on a visit to a Russian military base there in December, and ordered a partial pullout of troops. Many Russian politicians and commentators long have assailed the Kremlin for failing to acknowledge the Russian contractors' presence in Syria.

A push for oil assets appears to have been the top mission for Russian private contractors in Syria. The Associated Press last year obtained a copy of a contract between a Russian company and the Syrian government that would give the Russians a 25 percent cut of the proceeds from the oil fields they capture and guard.

Unlike many other military contractors with previous experience of fighting alongside Russia-backed separatists in eastern Ukraine, Gavrilova's son hadn't even done his military service.

"I thought they went there to do some odd jobs," Gavrilova said. "They did not even undergo medical tests. He called me from Krasnodar and asked: 'Mother, what is my blood type?' "

The Krasnodar region in southern Russia hosts a training base for the Wagner company on the grounds of a Russian Defense Ministry installation, according to social media evidence and testimony of the relatives.

Gavrilova and a relative of another Wagner fighter said the men from Kedrovoye all traveled to Krasnodar before traveling to Syria.

Asked if she knew anyone else in the village whose family members were fighting in Syria, Gavrilova pointed at a two-story house just across the yard. Yevgeny Berdyshev, interviewed there, quoted his half-brother Alexander Potapov as saying he was driven to go to Syria by "patriotic sentiment."

"He would say: 'Putin is waging the right war. He's killing IS fighters, but I understand, of course, that he didn't have a choice," Berdyshev said.

Potapov, a 54-year-old father of two, had fought in two separatist wars in Chechnya. Yet work was hard to come by, especially because he was no longer young, had a hand injury and a criminal conviction, Berdyshev said. Potapov worked at a sawmill before he left in October last year with Gavrilov.

Starved of reliable information about Russians in Syria, the residents in Kedrovoye, 880 miles east of Moscow, are getting together, compiling lists of who went to Syria and exchanging any news they get from the men's associates.

Potapov's brother showed a piece of paper with six names of other locals now in Syria.

One more, Igor Kosoturov, originally from the nearby town of Asbest but linked to Kedrovoye people, is also thought to have been killed in Syria. Natalya Krylova, a local legislator in Asbest, confirmed Kosoturov's death.

Krylova, who has been friends with him for several decades, said the 45-year-old Kosoturov went to fight alongside Russia-backed rebels in eastern Ukraine in 2015 and received the town's award for a "humanitarian mission" there.

Oleg Surnin, head of a paramilitary Cossack group in Asbest, said by phone it was "evident" that Kosoturov and another Asbest resident, Stanislav Matveyev, were killed in the U.S. airstrike Feb. 7, but he wouldn't elaborate.

The grieving families are waiting for those who survived the U.S. strike to come home and describe what happened to the others.

"At first, everyone was weeping out loud, but how long can you cry?" Gavrilova said. "It's the uncertainty that's gnawing at me."

She said she couldn't understand why Russian men ended up on a battlefield in Syria if they were not part of the Russian army.

"Why were they taken away? Why does this organization exist?" she asked.

Berdyshev is indignant about the Russian government's refusal to even acknowledge the existence of the private contractors.

"They do exist," he said. "The government sends in troops, it is responsible for its actions. They sent in the troops, they sent back the troops, but actually there are still some (Russians), and it's all secretive."

Wine debate seeps into French life

Health minister points out health risks, even as Macron defends national drink

By James McAuley
The Washington Post

LUDOVIC MARIN/GETTY-AFP

Agnes Buzyn, the minister of health in France, says "the real message we should be sending today is that alcohol is bad for your health."

PARIS — In France, wine is not a drink; wine is a way of life.

A crisp sauvignon blanc. A light pinot noir. A mature Bordeaux, deep and dark and wise with age. These are all pillars of national identity at least as much as they are beverages. With the tannins comes a trace of the terroir, and with the terroir comes the taste of tradition.

But wine also poses a health risk — or so say the country's health minister, Agnes Buzyn, and a host of doctors who have rallied behind her. They have launched a bitter debate that has shocked a multi-billion-dollar industry and divided ranks even within the French government.

For Buzyn and her allies, the point is not to attack wine but to share the veritas about the vino, so to speak. Her goal is to raise public consciousness about a type of alcohol that can have, in excessive quantities, the same deleterious effects as any other.

"The wine industry today claims wine is different from other types of alcohol," she said last month on French television. "In terms of public health, it is exactly the same thing to drink wine, beer, vodka, whiskey. There is zero difference."

President Emmanuel Macron begs to differ.

Macron reassured his compatriots that he enjoys wine every day with lunch and dinner and that, yes, there is a difference between wine and other types of booze.

"There is public health scourge when young people get drunk at an accelerated speed with alcohol or beer, but that's not the case with wine," Macron said last month. He added that he did not support any heightened regulations that industry leaders feared Buzyn would pursue.

Rising to Buzyn's defense, however, nine prominent doctors published an open letter in France's Le Figaro newspaper Monday, arguing that "what matters in terms of toxicity is the amount of alcohol drunk" and that "French consumption of alcoholic beverages, although declining for half a century, remains one of the strongest in Europe."

They also took Macron to task for disseminating what they see as false information and bad advice, given that they cited alcohol as a leading cause for 50,000 deaths in France.

French people over the age of 15 consume 3.2 gallons of "pure alcohol" per capita each year on average, according to the latest statistics from the World Health Organization. In Germany, the average rate is 3.1 gallons. In Britain, it's 3 gallons, and in Sweden, the rate is 2.4 gallons — the same as in the United States. On the upper end, the Russian average is 4 gallons.

"Pure alcohol" refers to the portion of a beverage that is 100 percent ethanol.

"A large majority of French people drink wine for pleasure, but we must remember that alcohol is the most dangerous psychotropic," Michel Reynaud, a signatory of the Figaro letter and an addiction expert in France, said on French radio.

But the letter also cites the dark side of France's national drink.

"Alcohol, especially wine, is the source of domestic violence, marital violence and street violence, binge drinking, a significant proportion of mental illnesses, suicides and accidental road deaths."

The wine industry was not pleased.

In another letter, also published in Le Figaro, several members of France's Academie du Vin voiced their displeasure. (The Academie is an institution devoted to "the defense of French wines and the fostering of their understanding, the fight against frauds, deceptions and even ignorance, which could harm the esteem of these wines.")

The title of their letter: "Stop Demonizing Wine, Which is Part of French Civilization!"

Likewise, Joel Forgeau, head of the Vin et Societe wine lobby, told the French news magazine L'Express that producers and their business could be affected by a potential shift in consumer practices. French exports of wine and spirits reached a record $15.9 billion in 2017, the Federation of French Wine and Spirits Exporters, a trade body, announced in February.

Producers "feel stigmatized, as they have been engaged in promoting responsible consumption for several years now," Forgeau said.

But despite the public outcry, Buzyn's line has been firm. " 'In moderation' shouldn't be used anymore," she said. "The real message we should be sending today is that alcohol is bad for your health."

At the same time, the government has been trying to douse the flames where it can.

After conceding the potential dangers of alcohol consumption, Edouard Philippe, Macron's prime minister, put this question to the French Parliament: "Do you honestly think this government will take measures against winemakers and wine culture?"

Re-entry of China's space station expected in coming weeks

By Amy B Wang
The Washington Post

Heads up, Spain and Portugal. And France. Maybe you, too, Greece.

China's 9 ½-ton space station, Tiangong-1, will come falling from space soon, and it's predicted to head in that general direction.

For the uninitiated, Tiangong-1 launched in 2011 as China's first space laboratory, a prototype for what the country hoped would eventually be a permanent space station. For about five years, it did just that, orbiting the Earth and acting as a base for three missions (two manned, one unmanned) for the Chinese National Space Administration.

In September 2016, however, Chinese officials announced that they had lost control of the station, meaning Tiangong-1 (literally "heavenly palace") would eventually defy its name and come hurtling back to Earth.

Exactly when or where it would do so was a mystery.

At first, Chinese scientists ventured that the "uncontrolled re-entry" would take place sometime in the latter half of 2017. That window was pushed back to sometime between October 2017 and April 2018.

In January, the California-based nonprofit Aerospace Corp. predicted that Tiangong-1 would re-enter in mid-March, give or take two weeks.

Last week, the European Space Agency gave a more specific time frame — between March 29 and April 9 — and narrowed the re-entry locations to "anywhere between 43°N (e.g. Spain, France, Portugal, Greece, etc.) and 43°S."

It is worth noting that the new predictions come with enough caveats (see: "etc.") to make a cable appointment seem exacting. The current estimated window is "highly variable," the European Space Agency cautioned. Areas outside the given latitudes could be excluded — but the forecast is still being updated weekly, it added.

"At no time will a precise time/location prediction from ESA be possible," the agency said. Popular Mechanics notes that, given the station's path of orbit, it could also re-enter the atmosphere in the Southern Hemisphere near 43 degrees latitude.

"Parts of the United States, the Iberian Peninsula, China, the Middle East, South America, Australia, and New Zealand are all potential re-entry locations," the magazine reported.

Still, there are several reasons not to panic. First and foremost, much, if not all, of the roughly 19,000-pound laboratory is expected to disintegrate upon re-entry.

"In the history of spaceflight, no known person has ever been harmed by reentering space debris," the Aerospace Corp. stated in January. "Only one person has ever been recorded as being hit by a piece of space debris and, fortunately, she was not injured."

The nonprofit included a map that illustrated zones where Tiangong-1 could fall, noting that even for people in the "worst-case location," the chances of being struck by debris are "about one million times smaller than the odds of winning the Powerball jackpot."

MOSCOW — President Vladimir Putin says he doesn't care about alleged Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election because the actions weren't connected to his government.

In an interview with NBC News that aired Saturday, Putin also suggested that some of the 13 Russian nationals indicted by the United States may not be ethnically Russian.

"Maybe they are not even Russians, but Ukrainians, Tatars or Jews, but with Russian citizenship, which should also be checked," he said.

Putin responded brusquely when Megyn Kelly asked if he condoned the interference that was alleged in last month's indictment.

"To me it absolutely makes no difference because they do not represent the government," he said, according to the transcript posted Saturday by the Kremlin.

British security official: 'Too early' to pin blame in spy case

LONDON — British government security ministers held an emergency meeting Saturday to discuss the poisoning of a Russian who spied for Britain as police backed by soldiers continued to search the English town where he was attacked with a nerve agent.

Home Secretary Amber Rudd said it was still "too early" to say with certainty who was behind the poisoning that left former Russian military intelligence agent Sergei Skripal and his daughter in critical condition.

Rudd said the investigation has involved more than 240 pieces of evidence and 200 witnesses.

Police are looking to what sickened Skripal, 66, who in 2006 was convicted in Russia of spying for Britain, and his daughter, Yulia, 33. They were found unconscious March 4 on a bench in Salisbury.

Justice Dept. makes legal push to prohibit bump stock devices

WASHINGTON — The Justice Department has proposed to ban bump stocks, devices that modify semi-automatic rifles to allow them to be fired more rapidly, making good on a promise by President Donald Trump after last month's massacre in Parkland, Fla.

The agency submitted its proposal to the Office and Management and Budget, it said Saturday. The ban would be achieved by clarifying the definition of "machine gun" under U.S. law.

"President Trump is absolutely committed to ensuring the safety and security of every American and he has directed us to propose a regulation addressing bump stocks," Attorney General Jeff Sessions said.

YOUNTVILLE, Calif. — Three women who devoted their lives to helping traumatized veterans were killed by a patient who had been recently kicked out of their treatment program, authorities said.

A daylong siege at The Pathway Home ended Friday night with the discovery of four bodies, including the gunman. He was identified as Albert Wong, 36, a former Army rifleman who served a year in Afghanistan in 2011-2012 and was highly decorated.

Investigators were still trying to determine why Wong killed two executives and a psychologist at The Pathway Home, a nonprofit post-traumatic stress disorder program at the Veterans Home of California-Yountville in the Napa Valley wine country region.

Jennifer Golick, 42, Jennifer Gonzales, 29, and Christine Loeber, 48, were killed. Loeber was the executive director of the nonprofit. Golick was a clinical director and Gonzales, who was seven months pregnant, a clinical psychologist with the San Francisco Department of Veterans Affairs Healthcare System.

Gov. Jerry Brown ordered flags flown at half-staff at the state Capitol.

Yountville Mayor John Dunbar said the employees will be remembered as beautiful people and called the gunman "one of our heroes who clearly had demons."

Dunbar also serves on the board of directors for the Pathway Home, a treatment program for veterans from the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Dunbar said the Pathway Home will continue to operate.

Man held after standoff leaves 1 cop dead, 1 hurt

POMONA, Calif. — Authorities arrested a man Saturday accused of shooting two Southern California police officers, killing one of them, after a standoff in an apartment that lasted more than 15 hours.

Authorities say Pomona police officers chased the suspect into an apartment complex after the man led them on a pursuit Friday night.

The suspect fired through the door and shot one of the officers. A second officer who tried to pull his wounded comrade to safety was shot in the face.

Los Angeles County coroner's Lt. Dave Smith identified the Pomona officer as Gregory Casillas, 30, of Upland. The wounded officer was expected to recover.

Pomona police Chief Michael Olivieri said Casillas started with the police department as a records clerk in 2014 and became a police officer in September.

France, India to work on sea freedoms in Indian Ocean

NEW DELHI — India and France pledged Saturday to work together to ensure freedom of navigation in the Indian Ocean and signed a deal to expedite construction of a nuclear power plant in India by a French firm.

After talks with French President Emmanuel Macron in New Delhi, Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi also highlighted a solar alliance and cooperation between the two countries in defense, security, technology, space and counterterrorism.

The space agencies of the two countries signed an accord to help them monitor sea vessels.

The U.S. considers India a critical anchor in a regional strategy for the Indian and Pacific Oceans to blunt an increasingly assertive China. India is rallying support of countries, including France and Australia, on the maritime security front.

Home alone: Three children who were home alone died Saturday in a suburban Detroit house fire, authorities said. Killed were two boys, ages 8 and 9, and a 4-year-old girl in Eastpointe. An official said five children lived at the home, but two were not there when the fire broke out. Two adult sisters also were not home.

Sick day: Secretary of State Rex Tillerson canceled scheduled events Saturday in Kenya after a brief illness. He is expected to resume his schedule Sunday. He arrived in Kenya on Friday for the third stop on his five-country tour of Africa. He was up the previous night working on a U.S.-North Korea summit.

Syrian troops grab up new ground in Damascus suburbs

By Bassem Mroue
Associated Press

BEIRUT — Syrian government forces succeeded Saturday in their deepest push yet into the eastern suburbs of the capital Damascus, cutting off a major highway that made it hard to move between three parts of the rebel-held area, and inflicting a major blow to opposition fighters who have vowed not to surrender.

Syrian state media and an opposition monitoring group said government forces have laid siege to the rebel-held town of Harasta, cutting it off from the rest of the suburbs known as eastern Ghouta.

Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said government forces have also cut off the main highway that links northern Ghouta with its southern parts, isolating the town of Douma, the largest in the area.

The government-controlled Syrian Central Military Media said troops captured the Kilani gas station on the main highway linking Douma with Harasta and those two areas with the rest of eastern Ghouta. Residents will have to rely on unpaved roads to move in eastern Ghouta, but that is difficult because of the intensity of shelling and airstrikes, activists said. "The regime has cut Ghouta into three parts by cutting the main roads linking them," said the Observatory's chief Rami Abdurrahman.

The government and its Russian backers, determined to wrest eastern Ghouta from rebel control after seven years of war, recently intensified the shelling and bombardment to clear the way for its troops to advance on the ground.

Nearly 1,000 people have been killed in the past three weeks of relentless bombardment.

SCMM said troops on Saturday reached the center of the town of Misraba, adding that opposition fighters are crumbling amid the offensive. Syrian state TV aired footage from inside the town and saying troops are less than 0.6 miles from troops on the western side. Reaching them would physically cut northern parts of eastern Ghouta from its southern parts.

TV footage later showed dozens of men, women and children crowded in a basement in Misraba after troops captured the area. The TV station said authorities will move the nearly 60 people to a safe location with shelter and food.

Turkey: 'NATO, where are you?'

Speaking to reporters, he asked, "Hey NATO, where are you?" and accused the military alliance of double standards.

Erdogan said NATO-member Turkey sent troops to conflict zones when asked but did not receive support in return.

Turkey launched a solo military offensive against the Syrian Kurdish People's Protection Units, or YPG, on Jan. 20 to clear them from Afrin in northwestern Syria.

The country considers the YPG a terror organization, but its NATO ally, the U.S., backs the fighters to combat Islamic State.

Evanston pharmacist shared his love for music

By Graydon Megan
Chicago Tribune

Don Hoos made a living as a pharmacist, starting in his family's legendary Evanston drugstore, Hoos Drugs, but he made a life out of music, especially bluegrass music, listening to it, recording it and sharing his enthusiasm for it with others.

"Don was a kind of mystic musical elf," said musician and music writer Stuart Rosenberg. "He had the most remarkable storehouse, both of musical knowledge — not just about bluegrass — but about the entire breadth of American vernacular music."

"You'd walk in and he had the music playing," said musician Harris "Chip" Covington, who worked in the store while he was in high school in the late 1960s.

The store, which closed in 1994, drew students from nearby Northwestern University, many lured more by its liberal check-cashing policy than by its eclectic

Rosenberg said Hoos could recognize fellow travelers in the quest for interesting new music. "Don knew who else had the virus he had," Rosenberg said. "It was a little community and he was our ringleader."

Hoos, 81, died of natural causes on Feb. 25 in The Grove of Skokie, according to his daughter, Delaine Staffen. He had lived in Wilmette for about 55 years.

Hoos was a graduate of Evanston Township High School and went on from there to the University of Wisconsin in Madison, where he earned an undergraduate degree in 1958 and completed pharmacist training in 1959, his daughter said.

From there, he went into the family business, then run by his late father, Ken, and his brother Bill, who died in 2003. Covington said the store was a community hub, close to Northwestern at Clark Street and Sherman Avenue in a strip that also included a burger place, a music store and a student bookstore.

Hoos' nephew K.C. Hoos said the store for years had a soda fountain with hamburgers, milkshakes and even a special "shake" that pharmacists whipped up as a local version of baby formula.

A big draw for students was what a 1994 Tribune story called the "low pressure" check-cashing policy for customers not known for carrying large checking account balances. The store would cash a $20 personal check in return for a 50-cent purchase. So students were often seen scouring the aisles looking for a small cheap item to buy. Chapstick was very popular.

Hoos and his brother Bill bought their father out in 1974. Don Hoos sold his share of the business to his brother around 1989. He continued to work as a pharmacist, including occasionally filling in for his brother and working for larger pharmacies for several years. But his first love was music.

Hoos met Rosenberg through the store. Rosenberg was studying music with Kenneth Burns, whose stage name was Jethro and who with Henry "Homer" Haynes formed the famous country musical duo Homer and Jethro. Burns lived in Evanston.

"I wandered into Hoos Drugs and Don knew who I was," Rosenberg said. "He had heard I was studying with Jethro. That was the beginning of a relationship that continued on for the rest of Don's life."

Hoos had a special fondness for bluegrass, the music he usually had playing in the store. But his tastes were wide-ranging and his collections included music from the '60s, swing, old vaudeville tunes and more.

"A South American string ensemble or some traditional Cajun music, something you'd never imagined," Rosenberg said. "He'd see you, his hand would go under the counter and he'd come up with a couple of cassettes. No matter what it was, Don had it."

Hoos cataloged his collection in notebooks full of information on the music, noting the title and performer and where and when he came by it, including details of the many live recordings he'd made, often nearly one-of-a-kind.

"He had a recording of (Jethro) Burns with Bill Monroe, the father of bluegrass," Covington said.

Hoos not only gave away cassettes, but also traded recordings he had for others that interested him. This, of course, was all in the days before file sharing and internet streaming.

"He wanted everyone to understand how incredibly wonderful and transcendent were the (musical) experiences he had," Rosenberg said. "He found people that understood music as he did and he imbued them with the love, the knowledge — and the cassette."

K.C. Hoos said the store's location at Clark and Sherman was marked with a plaque about 10 years ago.

In addition to his daughter, Hoos is survived by his wife Elaine; his son, David; and three grandchildren.

Goone, Patricia Joan

Goone, Patricia Joan (nèe Sodaro) died peacefully at home on March 8, 2018, one day before her 85th birthday, following a long, heroic battle with cancer.

Patricia was predeceased by her beloved husband of 42 years, Norman Goone, her parents, Joseph and Betty (Markowitz) Sodaro and her brother Gerald (Doris) Sodaro. Patricia was the proud mother of Joanne (Craig) Leslie, Pamela Owens and Steven (Debbie) Owens and loving step mother to Marla (Harvey) Yellen and Mitch Cary; most adored Nonnie of Matthew (Ann) Simcoe, Maggie (Justin) Waite, Daniel (Ellie) Simcoe, Shawn (Angelica) Owens, Elisabeth Owens, Ellyn and Aryn Harmon, Justin, Kevin (Kristina) and Kyle Owens, and Derek (Amanda), Luke and Brent Cary; beloved great-grandmother of Winona and Beatrix Waite, Charlotte Simcoe, Nora and Jack Simcoe, and Hope and Logan Owens.

Patricia was born at home on March 9, 1933 and grew up on the West Side of Chicago and had many life-long friends from The Old Neighborhood. Pat learned to read before she started school and that love continued throughout her life - reading several books a week to her last days. She was valedictorian of her 8th grade class at John Marshall Elementary School, (where she was double promoted – twice!) - as well as her graduating class at St. Paul Commercial High School.

Pat proudly worked as an Executive Secretary, starting out at The American Brake Shoe Company, and later at Motorola and The Chicago State Hospital, finally retiring after spending over 25 years at Sears Roebuck National Headquarters – where she played an important role in the monumental move of Sears from the West Side to The Sears Tower, where you can find her signature on the beam that topped off the building. Many will remember Pat as a strong, compassionate mentor and champion to several generations of women in the workforce.

Pat was forever exploring new horizons – riding horses in Riverwoods and then taking up Golf and Bridge when she moved to Antioch. Pat served as the chairperson for Arts & Riverwoods and hosted many artists and exhibited their work in her home. She was a proud member and former officer of the Antioch Women's Club, The Drama Club at Victory lakes (originating the role of Snow White in "Snow White and Windy Black") and she played a mean game of Wii Bowling.

Pat travelled the world, visiting family that lived overseas and having adventures with her friends, including trips to Bahrain, Spain, Ireland, England, Italy, Japan, Paraguay, and Morocco. She rode a donkey in Greece, climbed Machu Picchu in Peru and rode horses on the beaches in Brazil. Pat could shop in any language and her home was filled with the treasures she collected abroad.

Wherever she went, Pat was always glamorous and elegant. She loved dressing well and took great pleasure in introducing her granddaughters to Chanel, Hermes and the cosmetic counters at Marshall Fields.

Pat was a good friend to many and especially treasured Fern Brown of Riverwoods, Kay Blake, and sweet Leroy Braun who brightened her final days. Pat was known to host the best parties - especially at the holidays, where she often had 50 people for marvellous sit-down dinners! Her Derby Day Parties were the hit of the season and served as the occasion to teach at least one grandchild how to clean shrimp, serve grapes (only in small bunches) and properly set up a bar.

And never one to miss a party, Pat decided that she certainly did not want to miss out on the Celebration of Her Life, which was held on October 29, 2017. Pat wanted to be there to share the stories, the pictures of her wonderful adventures, all the hugs and kisses, and to raise a glass with her beloved friends and family.

At Pat's request no other services will be held, but she would be pleased to know you stopped for a moment to think of her the next time you ride a horse, spend a day on the links, shuffle the cards or gather with friends and family for a party – knowing she will always be with you in spirit. Arrangements were entrusted to the STRANG FUNERAL HOME OF ANTIOCH, 1055 Main St. Antioch, IL 60002. For additional information, call 847-395-4000. Please sign the online guestbook for Patricia at www.strangfh.com.

Johnson, Imogene 'Gene'

September 3, 1930 – March 3, 2018

Imogene "Gene" Powers Johnson was a remarkable woman whose intelligence, humility, grace and beauty were matched equally by her strength of character, boundless compassion and lifelong passion for education and learning. She was a loving daughter and sister, a devoted wife, as well as an incredible and devoted mother, grandmother and great-grandmother.

Her determination and persistence were forged as a child growing up against the backdrop of post-Depression struggles and World War II uncertainties. School was her solace and where her dreams took root. She attended Cornell University on academic scholarships from the Standard Oil Company, graduating in 1952 with a B.S. in Mathematics. After graduation, she was employed at Ryan Aeronautical in San Diego, California as an Engineer's Mathematician, working on the development of the world's first aeronautical computer. In 1954, she married her college sweetheart, Sam Johnson, and moved to her new home of Racine, Wisconsin. Theirs was an extraordinary partnership built on a shared love of fun and adventure, and unwavering commitment to family, community and to "giving back more than we take from the world." Gene believed there is no greater tool of empowerment than education and devoted her life to advancing educational opportunities for children. In 1965, she founded The Prairie School in Racine, Wisconsin with the sole purpose of bringing out the best in every child, of being a place where children are inspired to learn, thrive as individuals, who care about each other and about making the world a better place. Together with Sam, Gene provided foundational support for the development and launch of the 21st Century Preparatory School, Racine's first independent charter school. She was also instrumental in the development of the River Bend Nature Center wildlife refuge, securing and donating much of its 80 acres, and providing ongoing support for its environmental education programs and outdoor recreational opportunities. She quietly and generously supported many regional museums and institutions to enhance community-wide educational opportunities. In her spare time, she was an amateur astronomer, horticulturalist, rockhound, avid birdwatcher and unapologetic nature lover.

In addition to serving as Chairman and Director of The Prairie School, she was a presidential councillor at Cornell University and Director of The Imogene Powers Johnson Center for Birds and Biodiversity at the Cornell Lab of Ornithology, member of the Board of Trustees for the Johnson Foundation and a Life Trustee of The Adler Planetarium in Chicago. She was awarded an Honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters from Carroll College in Waukesha, Wisconsin and an Honorary Doctorate Degree from Carthage College in Kenosha, Wisconsin.

"First and foremost a huge thank you to my beloved husband Michael, for standing beside me in my decision to pass as I wish, at home on my terms, my way with only him beside me. I was not a perfect person. I hurt many people I shouldn't have, but I have tried to make amends and move on. I wish only happiness for all.

I leave behind my husband Michael, sister Sophie (late Don) Zellak, brother Peter (Rosemary) Prodyma, Sister Kathy (late Joe) Speciale, my deceased sister Mickey (Pat) Salach, my deceased God son Daniel and my other nieces, nephews and family members. An extra special thank you to Steve, Joyce, Karlene, Nina and Greg for their understanding love and support during my journey. Michael had always made me feel LOVED, TRUSTED, SECURE, SAFE and SUPPORTED beyond question. Michael let me be me. When others might have walked away he stood by my side. Everybody should have a Michael. I wanted to do good in my life, not always accomplished, but I tried. I wanted to leave my world better than I found it. It has taken me many years to realize my truth wasn't your truth, my beliefs weren't your beliefs, but my life was my life."

Schlax, Sr., Peter E.

Lewiston-- Peter Edmund Schlax, Sr., 79 died peacefully on February 14, 2018 at Androscoggin Hospice House in Auburn, Maine, surrounded by his family.

Pete was born on January 26, 1939 in Chicago, Illinois, the son of Edmund Schlax and Julie Riordan. He grew up on the rough streets of the South Side of Chicago. He graduated from the Chicago Vocational High School with training as a mechanic. After high school graduation, Pete began working for American Airlines, where he served as an airplane mechanic. He then went to work at Amtrak, where he worked his way up to the position of Manager of Locomotives at the Chicago Amtrak yard. He retired from Amtrak in 2001. Pete also proudly served his country in Vietnam, having been drafted as a helicopter mechanic before the US was officially engaged in the war.

Pete was committed to education and was the first in his family to graduate from college. As an adult, he attended night and summer classes to earn his Bachelor's degree from the University of Oklahoma in 1983. He was also an ardent student of US military history, including visiting national historic sites across the country. He loved discussing politics and current events, reading, and building model planes and boats. At 7:30, you could always find him yelling out answers while he was watching Jeopardy, his favorite TV show. Pete was fascinated by animals of all kinds and loved watching squirrels and cuddling with his dogs; Pepper, Bear, and, as he spelled it, Sonny.

He was a lifelong learner and an enthusiastic teacher. His four children are all skilled at home and auto maintenance and know a great deal about US history because of their father's influence. He was a hard-working and devoted provider for his family and his strong work ethic is another legacy he has left with his children.

Pete was an unusually kind and loving husband, father, and grandfather. He was a great storyteller and used memorable phrases and colorful language. His phrases, in addition to the great love and pride he showed for his children, children-in-law, and grandchildren, will certainly live on.

In 2013, Pete and his wife, Josie (Monroe), moved to Lewiston for a more rural life and enjoyed living near his children and grandchildren in Maine. Pete leaves behind his beloved wife of 58 years, Josie, his four children and spouses Jeannine and Lee Pisarczyk of Elgin, IL; Peter, Jr. and Paula of Lewiston, ME; Michael and Liz of Yarmouth, ME and Denise of Elgin, IL. He is also survived by four granddaughters he adored and of whom he was incredibly proud, Sarah, Norah, Elena, and Jillian. He will be sorely missed by brother-in-law David Monroe, wife Cecilia, and their family and by his close friends and former neighbors, Roger and Darlene Diveley and their family. Pete was predeceased by his parents and his sister, Jean and his best friend, Joe Komensky.

There will be a family gathering to celebrate Pete's life later in the spring.

In lieu of flowers, please consider giving to the Greater Androscoggin Humane Society (www.gahumane.org) or to the Brookfield Zoo (www.czs.org/Brookfield-ZOO/Home).

Washburne, John 'Jack'

WW II VETERAN; MARRIED FOR 72 YEARS

John "Jack" Washburne, born December 5, 1922, formerly of Chatham Township, New Jersey, where he lived for 47 years, passed away peacefully on Tuesday, March 6, 2018, at the Addolorata Villa in Wheeling, Illinois.

Jack was the oldest son of Willard Haynes Washburne (1892-1962) and Marie Nicolau (1900-1984). On his paternal side, Jack was the eleventh generation Washburn(e) male to live in America and a direct descendant from Mayflower pilgrims who arrived at Plymouth Rock in 1620. His mother's family migrated from Italy to the United States, via Sao Paulo, Brazil, in 1901. The Washburnes raised their two sons, Jack and Jerry, in Chicago.

Jack attended Chicago public grade schools and Morgan Park Military Academy for high school where he excelled. He graduated in December 1940 from Morgan Park as the highest-ranking cadet in his class. Upon graduation, Jack continued his studies at Morgan Park Junior College on scholarship in hopes of a later appointment to West Point. However, like many of his Greatest Generation, Jack's plans changed due to the events of December 1941. On December 5th, 1941, Jack celebrated his 19th birthday and two days later the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor occurred.

On February 5, 1942, Jack enlisted in the United States Army as one of the youngest commissioned officers to serve during WW II. Jack reported for training on June 17, 1942 at Camp Edwards in Massachusetts. On October 1, 1942, he was activated for duty and served more than thirty-four months overseas as a member of the 542 Corp of Engineers, where Jack saw combat in the South Pacific.

During his time overseas, Jack began writing to a young woman, LaVerne O'Toole, he dated in high school in Chicago. He proposed marriage via mail and she wrote back "yes" to his question. At the time of their engagement, Jack was serving in combat duty in the Philippines that would last until Japan finally surrendered in August 1945. Jack would later be part of the American occupational forces in Japan.

The following year, Jack and LaVerne were married in Chicago. The last entry of Jack's Army diary recorded the following: "February 16, 1946: Married LaVerne and lived happily ever after! ! ! The End!"

It was not the end, but rather another beginning. While Jack never did enroll at West Point after the war, he did continue to serve in the Army Reserves reaching the rank of Major. Under the G.I. Bill, Jack also attended Illinois Institute of Technology in Chicago, graduating in 1949 with a degree in Engineering.

Jack was hired by Illinois Bell Telephone Company in their building construction department. During the early years of his career, Jack and LaVerne lived in Chicago, Madison (NJ), and Deerfield (IL). They also had five children: Diane, Karen, John, Brian (1954-1954) and Mark.

After retiring from AT&T in 1978, Jack was president and part owner of a solar energy business before becoming involved with the construction of the World Headquarters of Beneficial Finance Company in Peapack. After the construction of the Peapack building, Jack served as the Vice President of Beneficial's facilities. Jack also volunteered his engineering services in the construction of Corpus Christi Catholic Church in Chatham Township.

He also leaves behind 10 grandchildren: Laura (Todd Beeby) House Beeby; Susan House; Molly House; Katherine House; Thomas (Kozue) House; Meaghan (Jaime) Escareno; Kevin House; Brian (Ginny) Washburne; Daniel (Krista) Washburne; Amy (Michael) Williams.

He also leaves behind 12 great-grandchildren: Soren Beeby; Francis Farmer; Ossian Farmer; Alia Daugird; Kayla Daugird; Elizabeth Escareno; Michael Washburne; Owen Washburne; Kellan Washburne; Elijuah Warren; Jackson Williams; and Madison Williams.

A memorial service in Jack's honor is being planned for Memorial Day weekend in Illinois.

SUNDAY, MARCH 11 NORMAL HIGH: 45° NORMAL LOW: 28° RECORD HIGH: 74° (1990) RECORD LOW: 3° (1979)

Northerly winds to reinforce cold till midweek

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW

■ As high pressure recedes to the east and low pressure moves east out of Texas through the Gulf Coast states, onshore easterly winds pick up locally.

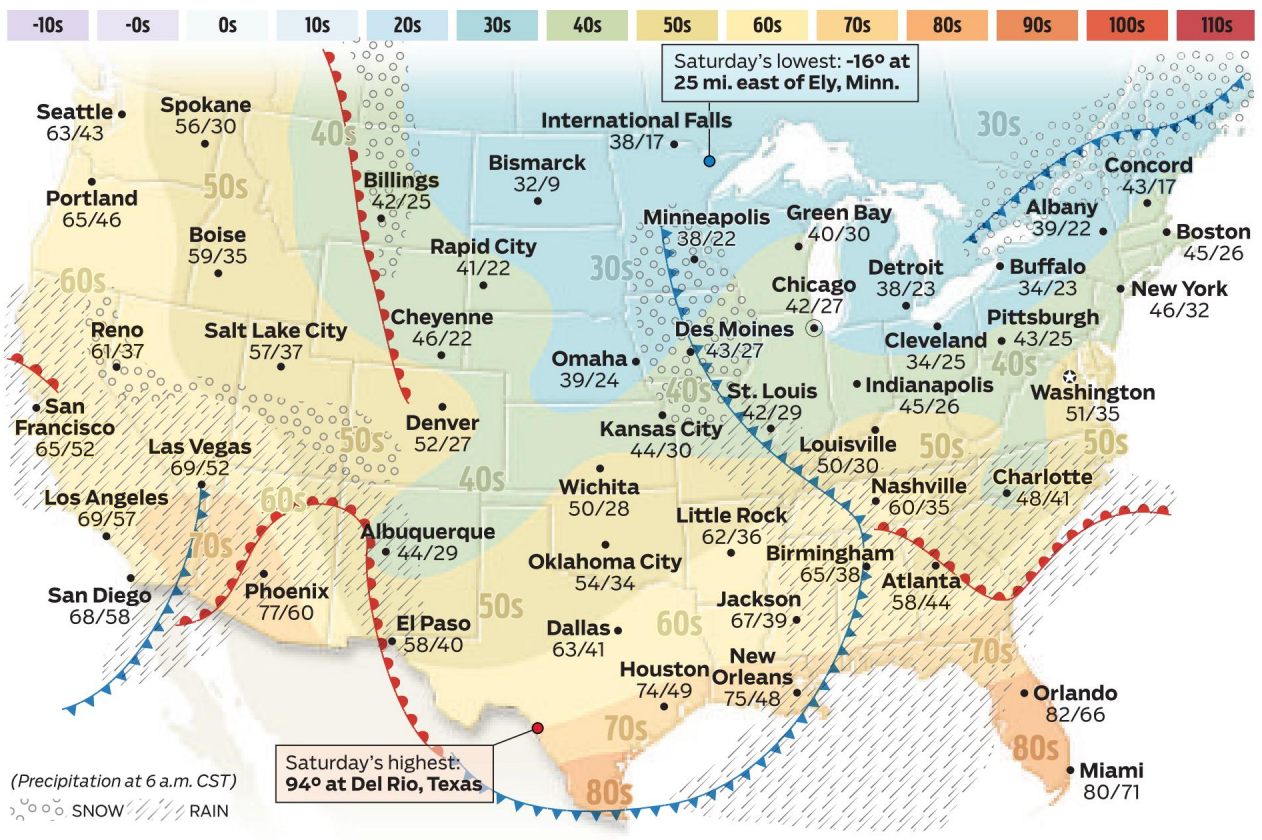
■ Clouds increase and thicken before noon, then tend to thin later in the afternoon. Afternoon highs in the upper 30s to lower 40s and even colder readings along the lakefront due to an onshore easterly breeze.

■ Partly cloudy skies overnight as winds shift to the northwest.

NATIONAL FORECAST



With high pressure building over the Plains, a strong northerly wind is expected to flow the length of Lake Michigan early this coming week. Reinforcing surges of cold air will keep daytime highs here in the 30s to, at best, lower 40s into Wednesday, with the likelihood of snow showers developing around the south end of Lake Michigan into northwest Indiana beginning later Monday.

The blocking upper-air pattern responsible for the persisting northerly flow over the Great Lakes and Midwest is expected to finally break down midweek, allowing warming southwesterly winds to boost temperatures across the Chicago area well into the 50s Thursday and lower 60s Friday. The mild air could be tempered somewhat by possible showers on St. Patrick's Day.

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

I saw palm trees growing in southwestern England when I visited there. That area is not considered tropical, is it?

— William Steers

Dear William,

England's weather is considered to be "maritime" rather than "tropical." The tropics is confined to the area between the tropics of Capricorn and Cancer, 23 degrees either side of the equator. England sits above 50 degrees north latitude, as far north as Canada. That's not tropical!

The warming influence of the Gulf Stream, an ocean current with its origin in the warm Caribbean Sea, sweeps coastal southwestern England with temperatures in the 50s and strongly moderates temperatures there. That explains how palm trees (but a different breed than tropical palms) survive in south England's Penzance, the Isle of Wight and the Isles of Scilly.

Time 'springs forward' — St. Patrick's Day just ahead

Starting Sunday, Chicagoans will begin capturing more daylight into the evening hours by sacrificing some early morning daylight as we switch to Central Daylight Savings Time (CDT). Saint Patrick's Day will be celebrated the following Saturday, and we're used to a wide range in temperatures and weather in general during this mid-March transition from late winter into early spring. High temperatures have ranged from 82 to 11 degrees, and we have experienced as much as 4 inches of snow on that date. Looking at the available 147 years of data (1871-2017) — if we have an "average" St. Patricks Day — the high would be 44, the low 28, and there would be only a 30 percent chance of measurable (0.01-inch) precipitation during the full 24 hours.

Steve Dahl, once morning DJ at "The Loop," does a farewell broadcast for WLUP-FM. Dahl's WLS-AM show was simulcast Friday on the FM station, which is changing its format.

Digital audio factors in swan song to rock

'Loop' switches to Christian pop ahead of $21.5M sale

By Robert Channick
Chicago Tribune

Chicagoans who have their clock radios set to WLUP-FM 97.9 were in for a rude awakening Saturday as songs like AC/DC's "Highway to Hell" gave way to "Jesus I Believe" by Big Daddy Weave, the top song last week on K-LOVE, the station's new Christian pop format.

BIG BREAKS, BIG RETURN?

By Lauren Zumbach | Chicago Tribune

Amazon's most visible presence in Illinois in 2015 was the stream of brown boxes it shipped to customers' doorsteps.

Three years later, the company has 10,000 full-time Illinois employees, a corporate office and bookstore in Chicago, and 17 distribution facilities across the state, including nine distribution centers with a collective footprint bigger than all 110 floors at Willis Tower.

In exchange, Amazon received state tax incentive deals potentially worth millions of dollars linked to the openings of distribution centers in Aurora, Joliet and Monee.

Skeptics urge agencies offering incentives to carefully weigh the costs and benefits due to the uncertainty over how much fulfillment centers really boost the local economy — or whether incentives are truly needed, given Amazon's push to build out its distribution network and shorten delivery times.

That advice holds true for another Amazon project likely to draw offers of much larger sums: the company's planned second headquarters, which 20 cities and regions — including the Chicago area — are competing to land.

But economic development officials in towns Amazon now calls home say the warehouses lining Illinois highways deserve more credit for adding jobs, bringing in development and boosting entry-level

Hostess yet to detail plans for Cloverhill facility on NW Side

By Greg Trotter
Chicago Tribune

Hostess Brands has begun the work of turning around the troubled, money-losing Cloverhill bakery on Chicago's Northwest Side, but it's unclear exactly what that will mean for its hundreds of workers.

The plan, according to Hostess executives, is to improve operations at the bakery, making it more efficient and profitable, and to use the facility to grow Hostess' breakfast pastry business. Last month, Hostess — maker of Twinkies, Ding Dongs and other brands — bought the bakery and its brands from Cloverhill's Swiss parent company Aryzta for about $25 million after an immigration crackdown decimated Cloverhill's workforce and sales.

But there's also much unknown. Hostess, just a sliver of the company it once was, closed its Twinkie plant in Schiller Park just a few years ago, laying off 400 workers in the process.There's been no word of layoffs at the Cloverhill bakery in the Galewood neighborhood, though some analysts say that remains a possibility if Hostess increases automation at the plant.

Meanwhile, some of the bakery's workers are speaking out, alleging poor working conditions, mismanagement and racial discrimination, among other complaints. They're calling on Hostess, as the new owner, to fix those problems.

"As far as Hostess, I'm very hopeful. ... Obviously, they know there's problems and you can't really blame them yet. We have to see what their steps are first as far as what they're going to do to get us adequate training and whatever needs to be done," said Willie Salinas, 45, a machine operator since August.

Arytza also sold another Cloverhill facility in Cicero in February to Bimbo Bakeries; the sale price on that deal hasn't been

State Farm cuts nearly 900 jobs

State Farm is cutting about 890 information technology positions at its Bloomington, Ill., headquarters as part of a "realignment" and downsizing of the department. Affected employees are being offered the opportunity to apply for openings in other departments or for approximately 380 IT jobs that are moving out of state. The State Farm Bloomington workforce will remain at about 15,000 employees and will still be the largest IT office for the insurer.

United grounds employee bonus lottery: United Airlines reversed plans to begin awarding employee bonuses through a lottery system that angered workers. Scott Kirby, president of the Chicago-based airline, said United was "pressing the pause button" on changes that would have handed out much larger bonuses — including vacations and luxury cars — but to only a fraction of its workers. The lottery-style system would have replaced a program that allows each employee to receive a bonus of up to $300 per quarter if the company hits certain operational targets.

McDonald's to roll out fresh beef burgers nationwide this spring: McDonald's plans to introduce fresh beef burgers in all U.S. restaurants by early May. Quarter Pounders and Signature Crafted burgers will be made with patties that are cooked upon ordering. All other burgers, including the Big Mac, will continue to be made with patties that are prepared in advance and then frozen. The announcement follows 18 months of testing in order to refine the cooking process so it doesn't result in longer wait times for customers, said Chris Kempczinski, McDonald's USA president.

Chicago AT&T call center to add 200 to staff: AT&T is creating hundreds of new jobs at a newly renovated call center on Chicago's Northwest Side. The Dallas-based telecommunications giant announced that it has added 300 workers since the fall, with plans to hire 200 more to staff the customer service operation.

CDC sees surge in opioid overdose visits: Illinois emergency rooms experienced a 66 percent jump in opioid overdose visits last year, according to a new report that suggests the epidemic of heroin and prescription painkiller abuse continues to worsen in some states. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention released state ER data in a report that encourages hospitals and health departments to do more to combat outbreaks and prevent repeat overdoses.

Aspen Dental bringing 250-job office to Chicago: Aspen Dental Management is opening a facility in Chicago that will be like a second headquarters and employ about 250 people, the dental clinic company said. It plans to start moving in June to the new Fulton Market district office. The East Syracuse, N.Y.-based company provides administrative and business support to more than 660 dental practices in 36 states.

Guaranteed Rate layoffs hit Chicago: Chicago-based mortgage lender Guaranteed Rate has laid off about 180 employees around the country — including about 30 in Chicago — after the amount of new mortgage loans the company funded dipped in 2017.

Lawyers take law to new reality

Virtual firms work in cloud, practices save on office costs

By Joyce M. Rosenberg

Virtual firms are gaining traction, says Marlene Laro, whose group is based in Washington but has lawyers in 17 states.

NEW YORK — There's no wood paneling or plush carpet at Culhane Meadows — the law firm's 52 attorneys practice out of their homes or rented work spaces.

Culhane Meadows is one of many law firms without dedicated office space that now operate virtually using software, email, videoconferencing and the internet to work and connect with clients.

Attorneys at virtual firms say that without the trappings and overhead of a traditional practice, they can charge lower fees, work for a variety of clients and have more say over their work/life balance. Practicing virtually can also mean taking extra steps to ensure that communications of all sorts remain confidential, including working in spaces designed to protect clients' privacy.

"When you take away all those things as part of this virtual model, you can pass along that value to your clients," says Haughian, who works out of her home in Niceville, Fla. The hourly rates at Culhane Meadows are what a lawyer with four or five years' experience would charge at a larger firm. Clients include Fortune 100 companies that don't want to pay ultra-high fees and much smaller businesses.

Culhane Meadows, whose attorneys are based in seven metropolitan areas, was founded in 2013 by lawyers who had worked at big traditional firms or large corporations. The attorneys, some of whom are licensed in multiple states, can gather, either themselves or with clients, via videoconferencing. When they need an in-person meeting, they rent conference rooms.

Law firms, especially very large ones, are known for adhering to traditional ways of working and have been slow to adapt to new technology. A few firms pioneered the virtual model in the past decade and the idea is gaining momentum, says Marlene Laro, chief operating officer at the Potomac Law Group, which is based in Washington, D.C., but has lawyers in 17 states. Soaring legal fees are one reason why.

"There's certainly a lot of interest among general counsels in major corporations to reduce their legal spending and try something different," Laro says. Like Culhane Meadows, the 7-year-old Potomac Law Group uses videoconferencing, email and other services to communicate, and lawyers rent office space as needed.

Attorneys are also interested. At big firms with high overhead, there is pressure to work and bill for a minimum number of hours, making for extremely long workdays and workweeks and little personal time. At some virtual firms, including Potomac, attorneys have more autonomy to set fees and their hours.

"It enables them to feel more comfortable with the way they're practicing law," Laro says. She says she gets inquiries from attorneys with 20 or more years at big firms who are interested in a different way of working.

The idea is particularly attractive to younger lawyers who grew up with technology and who prefer simplicity over tradition. Nicole Swartz knew when she was in law school that she wanted a virtual practice.

She started her firm, Sprout Law, after graduating three years ago, and practices out of co-working spaces in New Orleans. She plans to expand to Los Angeles in the summer with another attorney and the same setup.

Swartz's practice focuses on women entrepreneurs, with most of her clients age 25 to 35 and comfortable texting and emailing with their attorney, or with meeting at co-working locations.

"I don't see what a traditional office would bring us that we don't already have," she says.

Virtual firm attorneys hear few complaints from clients about their setup. For one thing, most interactions are by phone or email. And, "clients big and small walk into fancy office spaces in lavish office buildings and are frustrated that the legal fees they're paying are going to such lavish offices," Laro says.

Still, some clients are unsure about a law firm that doesn't, well, look like a law firm. Tricia Meyer recalls one client who had reservations about her 8-year-old virtual firm.

"I can't just pop into your office whenever I want and you're going to be there," he told her. But he ended up hiring Meyer Law, which specializes in helping technology companies with matters including contracts, patents and setting themselves up as corporations. It's work that adapts easily to a virtual model.

Virtual firms do have some concerns to deal with. One is their technological vulnerability — law firms of any sort can be attacked by hackers or have important data stolen, but the more a firm relies on technology, the more vulnerable it can be.

Megan Porth educates herself about the relative safety of the software, data storage and other technology products that her firm, Your Contract Shop, uses. The firm has programs that encrypt files so they cannot be read by hackers, and firewalls that help prevent potential invasions.

"The reason why it does concern me is the perception of a virtual office as opposed to a brick-and-mortar one, not that we are actually, legitimately more prone to cybersecurity issues," says Porth, whose Phoenix-based firm, launched in 2016, has two attorneys and expects to hire another soon.

Some co-working spaces cater to the need for confidentiality. The spaces where Swartz works have soundproof rooms so phone calls can be kept private.

In more than half the states, attorneys must maintain a level of competence with technology and an awareness of the risks it poses — whether they practice virtually or in a traditional office.

"A lot of lawyers don't realize what an enticing target they are to hackers and crooks," says Gregory Touhill, a division president at cybersecurity company Cyxtera Technologies who was a chief information security officer in the Obama administration. He describes the legal industry, because it has custody of clients' personal, financial and competitive information, as a "hot target" for cyberthieves.

Silicon Valley braces for trade war

By Elizabeth Dwoskin
The Washington Post

SAN FRANCISCO — Forget aluminum and steel. The real trade war may be waged in Silicon Valley.

At first blush, President Donald Trump's aluminum and steel tariffs, imposed Thursday, have little to do with the cutting-edge technologies being built in the United States' innovation hub.

But some Silicon Valley executives fear that the protection of an old-school industry, one that accounts for just 2 percent of global trade, could be a prelude for a much broader clash with China over the theft of technologies that are driving the future of the global economy. Such a conflict would have a profound impact on how Silicon Valley does business with a critical, if elusive, trading partner.

The dispute is already underway. In August, the Trump administration initiated a sweeping investigation into Chinese trade practices, including whether Chinese firms are investing in U.S. companies to steal their technology and whether they are forcing joint ventures, pressuring American companies that invest in China to transfer technology to a Chinese partner, or hacking U.S. companies' software.

If the investigation finds that China violated trade laws, the executive branch could issue sanctions against China that go far beyond tariffs. The results of the Trump administration's investigation could change what many Silicon Valley companies, striving to do business in China, have long seen as the price of entry.

"The amount of money at stake with the steel and aluminum dumping looks like penny slots compared to the claims of China's technology theft that the administration is investigating," said Lori Wallach, director of Global Trade Watch for the government watchdog group Public Citizen.

Michael Wessel, a member of the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission, a watchdog panel set up by Congress in 2000, said that "there's no question they will find violations."

Experts say the resignation of National Economic Council Director Gary Cohn — a free-trade proponent who had taken issue with the inquiry, known as a Section 301 investigation — could speed things up, and the results are expected in the next several weeks, according to a person familiar with the matter.

Sanctions, which are issued by the executive branch, could go beyond tariffs to include heightened review or possibly barring Chinese government officials, state-owned enterprises or any investor receiving money from the Chinese government from acquiring an interest in a U.S. company with sensitive technology.

They could even go so far as requiring U.S. stock exchanges to limit who can list in a U.S. market. Penalties would be more severe if they found that the Chinese government was complicit in the actions of its companies.

Will millennials kill credit cards next?

Shaped by recession, generation is reluctant to pile up debt

By Lisa Fu
Bloomberg News

Millennials have been accused of disrupting many industries, from newspapers to bricks-and-mortar stores. Credit cards appear to be next in line.

Just 1 out of 3 millennials carries plastic, according to a Bankrate.com survey. In addition, a Fed survey found the 18-to-24 demographic preferred to pay cash more than others do. And if they do carry a card, it tends to be of the prepaid or debit variety, TD Bank found.

None of that bodes well for banks like JPMorgan Chase or payment networks like Visa and Mastercard, since the fees they earn from debit card transactions are less than those earned via credit cards. The 2008 global financial crisis and ballooning college tuition also may have scared some millennials away.

"They experienced the Great Recession just as they were beginning school or starting their career, pondering about buying a home," said Erin Currier, director of financial security and mobility at Pew Charitable Trusts. "They're very sensitive to this life experience."

Millennials are more likely than older generations to have student loans to pay. About 41 percent of them held such debt, according to a 2015 Pew report. That compares with, at their peaks, 26 percent for Generation X; 13 percent for baby boomers; and 3 percent for the older, so-called silent generation.

And the burden is heavier, too: From 1990 to 2015, money owed for the typical college bachelor's degree increased about 164 percent, according to Education Department data.

Those big obligations could explain millennials' aversion to borrowing, Currier said. Over time, they may never grow as comfortable with credit cards and debt as previous generations have, she said.

TransUnion confirms millennials carry fewer cards and have lower balances than Gen-Xers did when the latter group was aged 21-34, thanks in part to legislation limiting the marketing of credit cards on campus and the subsequent boom in the use of debit cards. Millennials have also increased the use of auto and personal loans, TransUnion found, at the expense of credit cards.

Take Bo King, a 26-year-old who applied for his first credit card about a year ago. He grew up cautious after watching friends and family pile up thousands in debt. King, who works in retail, has been using a debit card since turning 18, but knew he would need a credit history to be able to buy a house.

"I've always been skeptical about getting a credit card," King said. Eventually, though, "I saw it as a necessary evil."

It's an evil some millennials will shift to from prepaid and debit cards as they get older, according to a study by payment processor TSYS Merchant Solutions, which shows credit cards becoming the preferred method of payment after age 25.

That's the saving grace for the card companies. A breakdown of balances by age suggests that the older people get, the more they rely on credit cards. A FICO study showed 18- to 24-year-olds had an average balance of just over $2,000. With 25- to 34-year-olds, the number almost doubled, said Ethan Dornhelm, vice president of Analytics and Scores from FICO.

"As millennials grow older and more affluent, the ownership of credit cards and the need for and desire for credit cards will increase," said Solana Cozzo, VP of prepaid and financial inclusion at Mastercard.

They're not only expected to change their spending habits when they have children, but they're also more likely to be in tune with the awards credit card companies bestow, like airline miles and cash back on purchases.

Perhaps the issuers should tie rewards to student loan debt. Sam DeMario, a 20-year-old finishing his undergraduate degree, has been putting off getting a credit card until he can earn a bit more money and start paying off his school bills. "Once I've been accepted into a graduate program and have a stipend that I can report as income, I don't see a reason not to have one," he said.

Cigna hopes deal helps tame costs

Express Scripts purchase latest bid to streamline care

By Robert Langreth
Bloomberg News

Under pressure from ever-increasing health care costs, the companies that help millions of Americans manage their medical care are wagering that they can be stronger and simpler by joining forces.

Cigna's proposed $54 billion acquisition of Express Scripts Holding, announced Thursday, is the latest sign that the medical supply chain — in which multiple companies are responsible for different aspects of care — has become too cumbersome.

Health care spending is inexorably rising, accounting for an estimated 18 percent of the U.S. economy last year. Critics such as billionaire Warren Buffett, who has called soaring health costs a "tapeworm" sapping the country's strength, view the complexity of the system and its large number of middlemen as a culprit.

Insurers, drug benefit managers, drug distributors, pharmacies and large medical groups currently all get a cut of the profits from caring for patients. Bringing more of those businesses under one roof might help streamline some of those costs and improve care, at least in theory.

"We saw this as the beyond-a-shadow-of-a-doubt best strategic proposition," said David Cordani, chief executive officer of Cigna, on a conference call discussing the deal. He said the companies are focused on lowering costs and "removing complexity in the health care system."

Executives offered few details on how merging would help their patients and clients while boosting their own profits. But the deal could help Cigna compete with UnitedHealth Group, which has clinics, drug benefits and insurance business, and CVS Health Corp., which agreed to buy Aetna for about $68 billion, linking its pharmacies and drug benefit plans with the insurer's coverage.

"This transaction is yet another proof of ongoing vertical integration of health care providers and payers," said Brian Tanquilut, an analyst with Jefferies Group.

Employers are increasingly restless over their high health care bills. Amazon.com plans to team with Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway and JPMorgan Chase & Co. on a new venture aimed at lowering costs and improving care for their employees.

While a combined Cigna-Express Scripts would have substantial bargaining power over drug prices, it remains to be seen whether that muscle would reduce costs for the employers and patients who ultimately pay the bill.

The deal "doesn't mean health care costs are going to go down," said Michael Rea, of Rx Savings Solutions, which helps patients lower their drug costs.

Pharmacy benefit managers have come under particular pressure from critics of the health sector's inefficiencies. The harshest attacks have been aimed at a system of rebates that critics say obscure a drug's true cost and often don't benefit patients.

President Donald Trump's Council of Economic Advisers, in a report last month, criticized the companies' market power and the opacity of their drug price contracts. On Wednesday, Food and Drug Administration Commissioner Scott Gottlieb called drug plans' business a "rigged payment scheme."

Express Scripts is the largest of the remaining independent pharmacy benefit managers. The company had previously touted the benefits of staying independent.

On a conference call, executives said the deal provided an opportunity to help manage spending on costly medicines for cancer and other complex diseases. Management of the use of those drugs has often been split between insurers and PBMs, and the merger could make their use more efficient.

In an interview, Cigna CEO Cordani denied that the deal was designed to keep up with competitors such as Aetna or to balance a potential threat from Amazon and its partners.

"It is not a defensive move by any stretch of the imagination," Cordani said.

The talks started after Express Scripts chose Cigna to provide benefits for many of its employees last fall, and Cordani and Express Scripts CEO Tim Wentworth had a follow-up dinner in late October. That led to talks of a merger.

The agreement comes as Express Scripts is set to lose its biggest client. Last year, health insurer Anthem said it would set up its own pharmacy benefit management unit, after earlier accusing Express Scripts of overcharging by billions of dollars.

Earlier in 2017, Anthem's planned takeover of Cigna was blocked on concerns it would undermine competition, ending an almost two-year battle to combine two of the biggest health insurers in the U.S.

Cigna agreed to pay $48.75 in cash and 0.2434 shares of stock of the combined company per Express Scripts share, the companies said in a statement. The terms represent a roughly 31 percent premium to Express Scripts' closing price on Wednesday, according to the statement.

Cigna will assume approximately $15 billion in Express Scripts debt, which the companies said will put the total value of the deal at $69.6 billion.

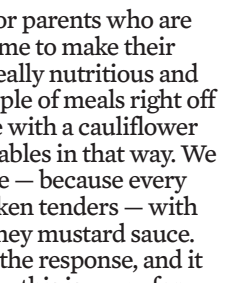
Eat Purely CEO pledges healthy food in 20 mins.

By Samantha Bomkamp | Chicago Tribune



Meal kits have surged in popularity in recent years, allowing apprehensive or busy cooks to prepare chef-designed meals at home, while food delivery has also taken off. Eat Purely, under CEO and co-founder Jeremiah Green, is aiming to provide the best of both worlds: a rotating selection of fully prepared healthy meals delivered to your home in 20 minutes.

The Chicago-based service, founded in 2015, recently launched kids meals and is gearing up for a major expansion as it moves into a new facility on the Near West Side from its far smaller plant and office in the West Town neighborhood.

Q: Give me an overview of what Eat Purely does and how it's different from other options.
A: Eat Purely makes healthy all-natural meals delivered in about 20 minutes from our mobile app. The thing that's different about what we do is the food is made fresh every day, and you can order it up to a week ahead of time, or on-demand if you want. You may think you have a choice in what you can eat; you really don't. You either go to the grocery store, or a restaurant, and in both of those options, it's very difficult to find a healthy option. Seventy-three percent of everything on the shelves in the grocery store has artificial flavors, colors and preservatives that extend the shelf life but are really not good for you. And restaurants — you know what they do — they lace things with fat and sugar to bring you back. We're the third option that exists, where you can get actual healthy chef-made meals delivered in no time. We removed the barriers for you to access this type of food in an immediate way, so it makes it super easy to eat well.

Q: Why did you start offering kids' meals and how has it gone so far?
A: We wanted to offer something for parents who are very busy and don't have enough time to make their kids something that they felt was really nutritious and healthy. So we came out with a couple of meals right off the bat: We make a mac and cheese with a cauliflower cheese sauce — we sneak the vegetables in that way. We also have chicken tenders, of course — because every child in their right mind loves chicken tenders — with this really delicious homemade honey mustard sauce. We did that as an initial trial to see the response, and it has been great. At the end of the day, this is a way for parents to not feel guilty about what they're serving their kids because we use all-natural, really high-quality ingredients.

Q: What are the opportunities with the new production facility?
A: This is a state-of the art facility. It is perfectly designed for what we're doing. This is exactly how we would have designed it if we had four walls and just a table. So from a cooking perspective, the food is going to be way more consistent, it's going to taste better because we're going to have way more control over it, and even though our food is very safe right now, it's actually going to improve the safety of what we do, which is the center point of all food manufacturing facilities.

Q: What are your goals for future expansion once the operation settles in here?
A: Some of the new priorities as we get into the new facility here in 2018 are to expand to the suburbs, expand our lunch business to have a greater selection of cold items that are ready to eat, as well as moving into a really cool rotating guest chef program, where we're having really well-known local chefs come in and make different types of recipes for all different types of folks in our customer base. Also, on top of that, this facility enables us to be regulated in such a way that we will be able to ship meals across state lines and expand nationally. And for us, that's a key part of our reason for being and where we're headed in 2018, 2019 and 2020.

Alexa randomly laughs, and nobody knows why

By Hayley Tsukayama
The Washington Post

ELAINE THOMPSON/AP 2017

Amazon said the laughter could be due to Alexa hearing accidental orders.

Several people who own Amazon's Echo speakers have reported a strange bug: The Alexa voice assistant has been laughing for no reason.

Some users on Twitter and Reddit say the outbursts have been entirely spontaneous. Others have said that Alexa has laughed after being asked to turn on the lights — and may have misheard the command.

"Having an office conversation about pretty confidential stuff and Alexa just laughed," Twitter user @DavidSven wrote recently. "Anybody else ever have that? It didn't chime as if we had accidentally triggered her to wake. She simply just laughed. It was really creepy."

Said another Twitter user, @taylorkatelynne: "(So) my mom & I are just sitting in the living room, neither of us said a word & our Alexa lit up and laughed for no reason. she didn't even say anything, just laughed. we unplugged her."

Amazon said in a statement that the outbursts are due to its smart speakers hearing accidental orders. "In rare circumstances, Alexa can mistakenly hear the phrase 'Alexa, laugh,' " Amazon said. To fix the issue, Amazon is disabling that command and changing the trigger phrase to "Alexa, can you laugh?" Amazon is also changing Alexa's response to that command: Rather than have it laugh right away, it will be preceded by, "Sure, I can laugh."

Amazon did not say how many people have been affected or why the speaker would laugh when no one is talking.

ZBIGNIEW BZDAK/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Amazon opened an 850,000-square-foot fulfillment center in Monee in August. The village set up a tax increment financing district for the project.

wages — even if Amazon is only the most visible piece of the broader transportation, distribution and logistics industry driving the growth.

Kevin Daly, economic development director in Monee, said that's the case in his Will County community, where Amazon opened a 850,000-square-foot fulfillment center in August. It's the first in Illinois that uses robots to fetch racks of items picked up and packed by human workers.

"(Amazon) made other businesses feel more comfortable to do business here, to know that we met the criteria Amazon will look for and know the village has been able to facilitate it and see it through in a timely fashion," Daly said. "It makes my job easier."

But researchers at the Economic Policy Institute, a left-leaning Washington, D.C.-based think tank, say there's little evidence the e-commerce giant's fulfillment centers contribute to overall job growth in the counties where they open.

To study the impact on local job growth, researchers looked at whether employment in 34 U.S. counties where Amazon opened fulfillment centers rose relative to counties without them. While employment in a county's transportation and warehousing sector grew substantially in the two years after an Amazon fulfillment center opened, researchers didn't find clear evidence showing that translated into overall private-sector employment growth, according to the institute's report.

The results don't indicate why that's the case. Amazon could be filling its ranks with workers who would have found employment elsewhere, said Janelle Jones, an economic analyst at the institute. Another possibility is that the gains could be offset by job losses in other industries, or they could be too small to move the needle on countywide job figures, Jones said.

Researchers also did not see signs Amazon fulfillment centers boosted average wages for warehouse workers in the surrounding county.

Jones argues the lack of concrete evidence showing fulfillment centers promote broad-based job growth suggests government agencies should be cautious about offering incentives to lure those projects. "Our first step for local economic development can't be giving out millions to national employers," she said.

Only some of Amazon's Illinois sites got state tax incentives. Amazon has incentive agreements through the state's Economic Development for a Growing Economy program for fulfillment centers in Aurora, Monee and Joliet, but not for those in Waukegan, Romeoville and Edwardsville.

Collectively, the deals require Amazon to create 7,200 new jobs at those three sites, and they grant the company tax credits worth an estimated $82.7 million over a 10-year period if it continues to meet the agreement's requirements, according to the Illinois Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity.

Amazon has so far received $1.88 million in tax credits for the 2016 tax year for 3,788 jobs in Joliet.

Monee set up a tax increment financing district, which uses property taxes generated from new development to fund certain site and infrastructure work. In Edwardsville, near St. Louis, Amazon is in an enterprise zone that offers incentives including property tax abatement and sales tax exemptions on locally purchased building materials to encourage development. In both cases, local officials said Amazon was treated like any developer proposing a project of similar scale.

Amazon issued a statement in response to the Economic Policy Institute study that noted its 200,000 U.S. employees. The company also said counties where it invested saw their unemployment rate drop by an average of 4.8 percentage points over the past five years, though unemployment was also falling nationwide over that period. Fulfillment center positions are "good jobs that offer competitive pay and comprehensive benefits," Amazon said.

The company also said that because institute researchers looked at only employment figures through 2015, the data "are not demonstrative of our current network, community impact, and both the direct and indirect job creation near fulfillment centers."

In recent years, Amazon has been opening fulfillment centers at a faster pace, spokeswoman Shevaun Brown said. A bigger network means faster delivery and better service, which can drive more customer orders and increase the need for warehouse workers, she said.

Because Amazon's first fulfillment center in Illinois opened in late 2015, the report doesn't fully capture how employment in the surrounding counties changed after the centers arrived.

Economic development officials near Amazon warehouses in Will County and Edwardsville, a city of roughly 25,000 about 20 miles from St. Louis, said they were happy to have Amazon's warehouses but agreed they were only a piece of broader growth.

Will County had a sizable transportation and distribution industry years before Amazon's arrival, and it has seen growth in other sectors too, said John Greuling, CEO and president of the Will County Center for Economic Development.

"There are a lot of good-paying jobs not at all related to Amazon," Greuling said.

In Edwardsville, too, Amazon was "just following the trend," said City Administrator Tim Harr, who estimated a new warehouse of at least 1 million square feet had been built in the city each of the last 10 years. He credited warehouse construction with helping to occupy the construction industry when homebuilding took a hit during the Great Recession and said distribution center jobs may have helped replace lost industrial jobs.

But even if Amazon was part of a wider trend, Greuling said the company's rapid ramp-up in Illinois made its impact more visible, particularly in Will County, where its five distribution facilities quickly made it the county's biggest employer.

Other distribution centers, retailers and companies in the hospitality industry expressed concerns about competition for workers, he said, and he credited Amazon with forcing up entry-level wages. Job ads for full-time workers in Amazon's Waukegan warehouse posted wages of $12.25 to $12.75 an hour, compared with $13 to $14 an hour in Joliet.

Some growth in wages should be expected since for years pay for distribution center workers hadn't been keeping up with inflation, said Brian Devine, senior vice president at staffing firm EmployBridge.

Daly, the Monee official, said he thinks Amazon may have a bigger impact on the village that might be obscured by countywide statistics. Monee had warehouses before Amazon, but the industry seemed to grow faster in nearby Joliet, Romeoville and Bolingbrook.

Both Monee and Joliet, the site of Amazon's first Illinois fulfillment center, are in Will County. But Monee is much smaller, with about 5,500 residents to Joliet's 148,000.

Amazon's incentive agreement with the state says it must create 2,500 jobs in Monee to qualify for tax credits, a head count that would double the bedroom community's daytime population and exceed its working-age population, Daly said.

"For a community like this, it was really shocking," he said. "There were certainly growing pains, learning to adapt to the increased traffic volume and demands on infrastructure, but they're what we like to call good problems."

The two-lane road outside the entrance to Amazon was widened to add turn lanes, and two stoplights were added at intersections that residents on the sprawling properties near Amazon's facility used to breeze through. The sheriff's department helped direct traffic early on, and suburban transit service Pace created a bus route that connects the Harvey Transportation Center and Amazon's parking lot.

In the wake of Amazon's arrival, third-party logistics company Kenco announced plans to fill a Monee warehouse that had been vacant for about five years and is advertising warehouse associate wages of $16.75 per hour. Monee's village board also recently approved plans to redevelop an 890,000-square-foot warehouse.

Retail options are thin in the area around Amazon, so it's unlikely its employees have been a major new source of spending in the community. But Daly said he hopes to use their presence to help bring in retailers that would otherwise dismiss the town as too small, like the grocery store residents have been hankering for. Monee doesn't currently have one, and the nearest supermarket is a Walmart about 6 miles away in Richton Park.

It's hard to draw conclusions about how much local economies gain from fulfillment centers and whether incentives are warranted from the experience of individual towns or counties, said Tim Bartik, senior economist at the Michigan-based W.E. Upjohn Institute for Employment Research.

Fulfillment centers likely do benefit the surrounding community, but the gains may be modest compared with other types of economic development projects that could generate more business for local companies, Bartik said. The jobs have modest wages, limiting the amount workers would potentially spend at local retailers, and warehouses generally don't patronize local suppliers, he said.

Amazon said it has created jobs outside the company, including an estimated 7,000 in Illinois, and supports business owners who use its services to sell products. The company did not provide detailed information on those outside jobs.

There's also the question of whether states and communities need to offer incentives to get Amazon to come, given its desire to put fulfillment centers close to major population centers to shorten delivery windows, Bartik said.

That's not an issue when it comes to a different Amazon project generating incentives talk: HQ2, Amazon's planned second headquarters. The company sought proposals in September, and there has been fierce competition among the 238 cities and regions vying to land HQ2. The field of contenders has been winnowed to 20, with Chicago still in the running.

The HQ2 spillover benefits to other local businesses would likely exceed those of a warehouse because the headquarters project is expected to employ far more people, at higher wages — a stronger argument for incentives, Bartik said. But if most of those jobs go to people moving to the headquarters city specifically for a career with Amazon, a bigger population could put more stress on public services like police and fire protection and public transit, he said. That means any agency offering incentives needs to factor in the potential for new costs as well as new tax revenue, Bartik said.

He advocates states form "nonaggression pacts" to contain costs of incentives that simply shift jobs from one part of the country to another, though he acknowledges those pledges are unlikely to stick.

"The next company comes along, and they decide it's an exception," Bartik said. "We haven't seen one that's really survived."

To Jones, at the Economic Policy Institute, Amazon's HQ2 project points to a different way government agencies can spend cash that would otherwise go to incentives: investing in things that attract companies like Amazon, such as quality infrastructure and a well-educated workforce.

"There are ways cities can invest in economic development without giving away public dollars."

Nearly a dozen Chicago radio stations are run by owners in or on the brink of bankruptcy as listeners and ad dollars migrate to streaming platforms like Pandora and Spotify.

“Radio’s product offering and business model is under attack,” said Larry Miller, a radio veteran and director of the Steinhardt Music Business Program at New York University. “It is facing very stiff competition from (digital services) that didn’t exist a decade ago.”

Miller wrote a recent report painting a bleak picture of radio’s future as the car dashboard — once the exclusive province of AM and FM stations — taps into a world of digital platforms.

Traditional radio, he said, is in danger of becoming irrelevant to a new generation of listeners.

“Listenership is declining and aging, a little bit every year,” Miller said. “Younger people are discovering and consuming music in other places.”

Those places include streaming services with customized playlists, podcasts, YouTube videos and Apple’s iTunes, all of which are integrated in the connected car through systems such as Apple CarPlay and Android Auto.

California-based Pandora rolled out its service in 2005, offering listeners a personalized digital radio experience over the internet. Last year, the publicly traded streaming service generated nearly $1.5 billion in revenue, with about 75 million active listeners, according to financial documents.

Spotify, based in Sweden, had 159 million active users and generated about $5 billion in revenue in 2017, according to a registration form filed last month with the Securities and Exchange Commission in advance of an initial public offering.

Both Pandora and Spotify offer free and subscription services. While neither company is profitable, they have taken a bite out of traditional radio revenue, which has been stagnant for several years.

ABEL URIBE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Steve Dahl simulcasts his WLS-AM afternoon show on WLUP-FM Friday as a farewell broadcast to rock on “The Loop.”

“(Radio) listenership is declining and aging, a little bit every year. Younger people are discovering and consuming music in other places.”

— Larry Miller, director of the Steinhardt Music Business Program at New York University

Over-the-air radio revenue peaked at about $18 billion in 2006, but it fell precipitously during the Great Recession and has never really recovered. While the radio industry is seeing some growth in online advertising, over-the-air revenue remains flat, generating about $14.1 billion in 2016, according to media research firm BIA/Kelsey.

Atlanta-based Cumulus Media, the nation’s second-largest radio chain in number of stations, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in November. In Chicago, Cumulus owns WLS-AM 890 and WLS-FM 94.7 and operates WKQX-FM 101.1 — and, until the end of Friday, operated WLUP — under a marketing agreement with owner Merlin Media.

Meanwhile, iHeartMedia, the nation’s largest radio chain, may declare bankruptcy as early as Monday after creditors last week extended the deadline for avoiding default. The Texas-based radio chain owns seven stations in the Chicago market, including WVAZ-FM 102.7 (“V103”), WLIT-FM 93.9 (“Lite FM”) and WKSC-FM 103.5 (“Kiss FM”).

Fred Jacobs, founder and president of Michigan-based Jacobs Media, the nation’s largest rock radio consulting firm, said the industry is still in pretty good shape, despite the high-profile bankruptcies and ongoing erosion from digital competition.

“People look at those two companies and say that’s the state of the radio industry,” Jacobs said. “But the reality is, in a market like Chicago, there’s a lot of other companies doing quite well.”

Jacobs pointed to his client, Hubbard Radio, whose Chicago stations include WTMX-FM 101.9 (“The Mix”) and WDRV-FM 97.1 (“The Drive”), as thriving in the current environment.

He said the emotion connected with The Loop’s demise contributes to the perception, particularly in Chicago, that the industry is in a downward spiral. Jacobs said the station that listeners are mourning went away a long time ago.

“Nostalgia is a powerful force, and The Loop had a lot of that going for it,” he said.

The FM frequency at 97.9 signed on in the 1950s as WEHS and morphed into rhythm and blues outlet WHFC in 1963 under Leonard Chess, the legendary Chicago record company executive. In a subsequent incarnation as WSDM, it shifted to jazz and rock, at one point featuring an all-female air staff.

WLUP launched in 1977, and the station quickly became the place “Where Chicago Rocks,” which was emblazoned on black Loop T-shirts worn by an army of passionate listeners.

While morning man Steve Dahl personified the irreverence that shattered the norms of Chicago radio, afternoon drive host Sky Daniels was all about the music.

“When I first got there, the whole idea was to bring a rock ’n’ roll attitude to the airwaves,” said Daniels, who now runs a noncommercial Los Angeles rock station. “They really encouraged us to go deep and to break rules. And we did.”

Daniels’ tenure at The Loop spanned 1979 to 1985, and he also served as assistant program director as the format took off. The Loop scored its highest ratings in the summer of 1979, with a 7.3 share, placing it third among all stations.

“The summer of ’79, everywhere we went, everything we did, there would be 5,000 people showing up,” Daniels said. “The station had a hold on that marketplace, particularly with 16- to 24-year-olds.”

The most notorious moment in station history came in July 1979, when fans stormed the field at Comiskey Park during Disco Demolition Night, a promotion where Dahl blew up disco records between games of a doubleheader with the Detroit Tigers, forcing the White Sox to forfeit the second game.

Nostalgia for The Loop was in full force Friday, as Dahl, who currently hosts afternoon drive on WLS-AM 890, simulcast his show on The Loop for a farewell broadcast. Meanwhile, the station had a run on black Loop T-shirts, selling 3,000 online at $20 a pop by Friday afternoon, said Marv Nyren, market manager for Cumulus Chicago.

Daniels said the new owners of WLUP may have a hard time inspiring listeners to the degree The Loop once did.

“The impact The Loop had on their sensibilities was profound,” Daniels said. “It really made them true believers in rock ’n’ roll. It really did create a generation of true believers.”

Workers hopeful Hostess takeover a positive move disclosed. It paid more than $670 million for both Cloverhill facilities in 2014, according to Dealogic.

Less than four years later, Aryzta was ready to move on. An Immigration and Customs Enforcement audit of a temporary worker agency in 2015 resulted in the loss last year of about 800 Cloverhill workers, roughly one-third of the workforce.

As a result of that loss, there was “a significant decrease in the labour efficiency and production volumes, as well as an impact on increased waste levels at these facilities,” according to Aryzta’s 2017 annual report.

So far, Hostess has not communicated its plans for the Cloverhill bakery to workers, Salinas said. A spokeswoman for Hostess, headquartered in Kansas City, Mo., declined interview requests and didn’t answer questions sent via email.

The company expects the bakery to continue losing money in the first half of the year until improvements yield results, Hostess executives told analysts on a recent earnings call.

Hostess CEO Bill Toler, speaking on an earnings call, described the acquisition of the Cloverhill plant as a “vintage” deal for Hostess Executive Chairman Dean Metropoulos, the billionaire turnaround artist known for reviving faded food and beverage brands for sizable profits.

“We go in and find opportunity and we buy value and we create huge upside from being able to run clients more efficiently, staff them differently, plan them differently, get rid of (products) that don’t make money, manage the assets in an aggressive way,” said Toler, who’s retiring at the end of the month.

Toler made no specific mention of job cuts.

“I didn’t get the sense that they have definitive plans on the workforce side, but given their focus on efficiency during the earnings call, it seems that the cut option is very much on the table,” said Zain Akbari, a Morningstar analyst who covers Hostess.

Hostess would seem to represent an unlikely source of hope for Chicago-area workers. In 2014, the company closed its Twinkie plant in Schiller Park after 84 years. That closing was only about a year after Metropoulos and private equity firm Apollo Global bought Hostess out of bankruptcy for $410 million and just a few months after most of the Schiller Park workers voted to unionize.

Akbari cautioned against reading too much into the Schiller Park closing as it relates to the Cloverhill bakery.

“(The) situations are different and at different times for the company. But fundamentally, there’s uncertainty that’s difficult to really clear up with the information that is publicly available at this early stage,” Akbari said.

The new Hostess is nearly unrecognizable from its former self. The company’s Chapter 7 liquidation in November 2012 meant layoffs for thousands of workers. Hostess products were pulled from store shelves, prompting premature eulogies for Twinkies. Then Metropoulos and Apollo swooped in, bought the company’s core brands and recipes, and restarted operations without the old company’s debt, pension obligations and union contracts.

As a result, Hostess is a much leaner and more profitable operation with far fewer workers and a cheaper distribution model. Today — not counting the Cloverhill acquisition — Hostess runs five bakeries and employs 1,350 people, according to its 2017 annual report. Only about 27 percent of workers are unionized.

Before the liquidation, Hostess operated 33 bakeries and 18,500 workers, more than 80 percent of whom were unionized, according to Morningstar research.

The Chemical and Production Workers Union Local 30 represents some of the Cloverhill workers. Union representatives didn’t return calls seeking comment.

Business has been good for the sugary treats.

Hostess sales were more than $687 million in the 12-month period ending Jan. 28, a 7.3 percent increase from the same period a year ago, according to data from Chicago-based market research firm IRI, which do not include sales at Costco or via e-commerce. That revenue was third-highest in the baked snacks category behind McKee Foods, parent company of Little Debbie Swiss Rolls, and private label products.

NANCY STONE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bakery worker Willie Salinas, left, said he has hope things will change for the better.

Hostess is a “wonderful cash machine,” Metropoulos said on the recent earnings call.

At the Galewood bakery, though, Hostess will also have to address the unease it inherited.

A community petition with more than 200 signatures — circulated by Black Workers Matter, Communities United and the Coalition Against Segregation of Employees — is calling on Hostess to “work with us to address the issues we have been raising.”

More specifically, the petition asks Hostess to end racial discrimination in hiring and treatment at the plant, provide better training and supervision, and offer optional — not mandatory — overtime, among other requests.

Under Aryzta, Cloverhill bakery used a “segregationist employment model” that hired immigrant workers through temporary work agencies and paid them lower wages as a way of repressing wages for all workers — a divide-and-conquer strategy that’s common in Chicago industry, said Dan Giloth, project manager for the Coalition Against Segregation of Employees.

A spokesman for Aryzta did not respond to questions for this story.

Latino and black workers have also been treated and paid differently in some cases at the bakery, particularly after the ICE audit resulted in large number of Latino workers being replaced by African-Americans, workers say.

“The expectation is that Hostess should come to the table, sit down and tell us how things are going to be different. And by us, we mean this network of workers, community organizations and elected officials who have been paying attention to the particular history of Cloverhill,” Giloth said.

Outside the Trinity Galewood Church on a recent morning, the sweet smell of danishes wafted down the street from the Cloverhill bakery. Inside, about 20 workers, activists and community leaders gathered to air their concerns and hopes for the new ownership. Two chairs reserved for Hostess representatives remained empty.

In an email to the organizers, Hostess Chief Administrative Officer Michael Cramer said company representatives couldn’t make the event on short notice. But Hostess has no interest in running a plant “with a foundation of discriminatory intent or actions,” he said.

“We expect it will take us a few months but we will turn this plant around and in the process we will provide stable employment for many people with good pay and benefits,” Cramer wrote. “That is how we run our business and that is how we will run this plant.”

Restaurant reverts to more efficient staff amid demand

By Peter Holley and Marwa Eltagouri
The Washington Post

He was supposed to revolutionize a California fast-food kitchen, churning out 150 burgers per hour without requiring a paycheck or benefits.

But after a single day of working as a cook at a CaliBurger location in Pasadena last week, Flippy the burger-flipping robot has stopped flipping.

In some ways, Flippy was a victim of his own success.

Inundated with customers eager to see the machine in action this week, Cali Group, which runs the fast-food chain, quickly realized the robot couldn't keep up with the demand. They decided instead to retrain the restaurant staff to work more efficiently alongside Flippy, according to USA Today.

Temporarily decommissioned, patrons encountered a sign Thursday noting that Flippy would be "cooking soon," the paper reported.

"Mostly it's the timing," Anthony Lomelino, the chief technology officer for Cali Group, told the paper. "When you're in the back, working with people, you talk to each other. With Flippy, you kind of need to work around his schedule. Choreographing the movements of what you do, when and how you do it."

The robot, or more specifically, a specialized industrial six-axis robotic arm bolted to the kitchen floor, was supposed to work lunchtime shifts at the international burger chain. The robot is designed to take burger orders through a digital ticketing system, then flip the burger patties and remove them from the grill. It uses thermal and regular vision, as well as cameras, to detect when the raw meat is placed on the grill, then monitors each burger throughout its cooking process.

But those worried about a robot takeover of food-industry jobs can find comfort in knowing that Flippy still needs a human guide to place the patties on the grill. The robot also displays the burgers' cooking times on a screen so that its human co-workers know when to top the patties with cheese and to start dressing them with lettuce and tomatoes, according to Miso Robotics, the Pasadena-based company that developed the "world's first" burger-flipping robot.

In addition, Flippy can rotate through spatulas for raw meat and cooked meat (to prevent cross-contamination) and clean those spatulas while the burgers are cooking. Another skill: using a scraper to keep the surface of the grill in good shape.

Flippy could be the answer to solving the high employee turnover rate in the fast-food industry, which sees as much as 50 percent of staff at a given restaurant leave within a year. While these workers might leave because of low wages, the industry as a whole spends about $3.4 billion annually in recruiting and training.

Replacing a line cook's job with a robot could eliminate problems such as work-related injuries, including burns, which are sometimes improperly addressed. Violence in the fast-food industry is also a problem, as roughly 1 in 8 workers in 2015 reported being assaulted at their fast-food jobs during the previous year, according to a survey on fast-food workers' safety.

But Flippy also raises questions about U.S. job loss. About 80 percent of job losses in American manufacturing over the past 30 years, for example, were the result of technological displacement, and recent studies indicate that the pattern will spread across other industries. As much as 40 percent of the U.S. workforce could see those jobs absorbed by technology by the early 2030s, according to a 2017 report.

Flippy's developers say it is designed to operate in an existing commercial kitchen layout alongside other workers, to "safely and efficiently fulfill a variety of cooking tasks." The robot was customized for the CaliBurger kitchen and is exclusive to the chain for six months. After the six months, Flippy will sell for $60,000 to other fast-food vendors. It is expected to rise in price as it develops more sophisticated features, The Washington Post's Gene Marks reported in September.

"The kitchen of the future will always have people in it, but we see that kitchen as having people and robots," David Zito, co-founder and chief executive of Miso Robotics, told KTLA in Los Angeles. "This technology is not about replacing jobs. We see Flippy as that third hand."

SEARCH TIPS

Supercharge your resume

So what do you do when you want to spruce up your resume but you don't have much time at all? Don't panic — it's doable! Let's walk through some of the best things you can do to supercharge your resume in no time flat.

Choose a format — and stick to it. If you had more time, you could play with different formats and see what works best for your skills and experience. No time for that today, so choose your path quickly.

If you have a lot of work experience in your field go with the traditional reverse-chronological format, where you put your work experience section prominently up front and work backwards through your jobs.

Don't reinvent the wheel. You've only got 30 minutes, so unless you're really attached to the idea of creating a resume from scratch at breakneck speed, work with something that already exists. That may be your current resume, but if it's really outdated or not great then there are lots of pre-existing templates where you can drop in your information and go from there. Using a resume library template can be a major time-saver, especially when you've only got a few minutes.

Focus on the short, sweet elements. You don't have a lot of time to pore over your experience bullets, but you can spend your time making sure that some of the shorter, punchier parts of the resume are in good shape. For example, make sure you have an effective, attention-grabbing headline. Your headline helps you set the narrative yourself. And this is where having less time can work in your favor: you want to focus on the most important, relevant parts of yourself as an applicant for this particular job, without overthinking it too much.

Similarly, a good summary can help you really focus on your most important strengths as a candidate and what you want to say in your resume.

Use bold action words. You want your supercharged resume to be potent, not wordy, so it's all about the word choice. Instead of using long bullet points to develop a point, use a targeted action verb to get the point across faster. It's not only more effective, but also cuts down on your writing and editing time. Some examples of strong action verbs that look good on your resume:

Chaired
Executed
Headed
Implemented
Maximized
Operated
Orchestrated
Organized
Outperformed
Overhauled
Oversaw
Planned
Produced
Redesigned
Streamlined

Saying more by taking up less space is something you can do pretty quickly that has a big impact on the quality of your resume. You're using your limited time to make sure that parts of your resume pop instead of using the same old verbs that pass unnoticed as a reader skims your resume.

Don't skimp on editing. The final proofread can be the first thing to go when you're in a rush. It's done, it needs to be out the door…it's probably fine, right? Not so fast. If you're only taking half an hour with your resume, make sure you slot five minutes at the end to do a careful read of the final doc before you hit send. Ideally, you'd have someone else look at it to make sure everything reads well and there are no glaring errors, but if you truly don't have enough time to do that, use your own critical eye. You may only have half an hour to work on your resume, but you don't want your resume to look like it.

Make it look nice. Again, since you don't have time for the deep resume dive, focus on as many of the aesthetics as you can. Is your layout clean and easy to read? Are there blocks of uninterrupted text that could be broken into reader-friendly chunks? Is your resume free of odd formatting that might not work on a computer or device screen? A quick pass to make sure your resume looks appealing should be one of the last things you do before you send.

Whether you've got 30 minutes or 300, you want to put out the best resume possible. After all, it can be your first step to a new job, and you want to make sure you're presenting yourself in the best possible way. If you're crunched for time, it's important to accept that you don't have time to finesse every detail — but you do have time to pick the most important points and shine them up so the reader never knows you had such a tight timeline.

4 ways to manage emotions as a nurse

Find a supportive colleague. This bit of advice is valuable in all professions, but it's especially important for nurses to find a friend on the job who they can turn to and trust when things get intense. Nurses, don't discount the value of venting your feelings when you're feeling frustrated or overwhelmed — it can be a great tool for getting a handle on your emotions on particularly stressful days.

Find a safe space. Just as important as having a trusted colleague to turn to when you're feeling emotionally overwhelmed is having a safe space to get away from the chaos for a few moments and let yourself deal with your emotions. It's normal to feel all sorts of conflicting emotions — both good and bad — when working in the sort of high-stress environments that nurses typically find themselves — the key is to have a comfortable place where you can take a little time to breathe, relax, and collect yourself, and move on with your work day in a healthy and productive way.

Know yourself. All nurses are unique individuals, with different likes, dislikes, motivators, and passions — as well as things that relax and ground them. Find the little things in life that relax you, whether it's deep breathing, soft music, exercise, essential oils, meditation, yoga, or something completely different and unexpected, and be sure to incorporate them into your life in times of emotional volatility or stress to help keep things under control. Schedule it on your calendar if you have to — these individual self-care acts are important to your day, so force yourself to make the time for them. When that calendar alert goes off, it's time to focus on your well-being.

Talk to a professional. Although there are a variety of things you can try on your own in an effort to better manage your emotions as a nurse, the truth is that sometimes it isn't enough — and a little extra help is needed. The Nurse.org article sums it up: "Nursing can be intense. We have people's lives in our hands every day. Being able to talk to someone about emotions and get professional feedback is beneficial — you can go through your insurance's website to get connected.

WORK CULTURE

Could you pretend to like someone at work if your job depended on it?

There are always going to be people in our lives who we just don't like.

"Absolutely," says Jerome Blaine, a mortgage specialist in Lexington, Kentucky. "When I was a kid, my mom used to tell me I had to like everyone, that I had to find something — even if it was something stupid like the way they signed their name — to like about everyone."

And now?

"Forget it," says Blaine, 37. "I can name 10 people I don't like right off the top of my head."

Blaine says he held on to his mom's find-good-in-everyone advice for years. "All the way through high school and college," he says.

But Blaine says that changed on his first day of work out of college. "I was working for an insurance office outside of Dayton, Ohio, and some guy called me 'Li'l Abner,'" Blaine says. "I laughed because I didn't know who that was, but when I told someone about after work, they told me he was basically calling me a hillbilly, a hayseed. I just met the guy. What kind of person does that?"

Blaine learned to answer that question many times. "A jerk," he says. "That's the kind of person who does that. A jerk."

Blaine worked with that "jerk" for four years and says he never warmed up to him — a situation that exemplifies many interoffice relationships, according to Darlene Evans, a social worker and workplace consultant based in Rochester, New York. "We think of our coworkers as our extended family, which they are," Evans says. "And just like in a family, there are going to be people we just don't like."

Evans says the difference is that as adults, we don't have to see family members we don't like on a daily basis. "You can't avoid your coworkers, especially if you're in the same department or involved in the same project," Evans says. "It's not like your sister-in-law, who you only have to see on Thanksgiving and Christmas. You have to work with these people. You can't escape them."

Work through it

There are ways to get past your inherent dislike for your coworkers. Here are her suggestions:

Keep your distance: "You don't have to hang with everyone in the office," says Evans. "It's possible to coexist with a coworker who isn't your particular cup of tea."

Be professional: "You're working together, not planning your wedding," Evans says. "As long as both parties remain cordial and respectful, it's possible to accomplish work-related tasks without tearing each other to pieces."

Don't take everything in the relationship so seriously: Remember, you'll go home to your family and friends at the end of the workday, so there's no need to clench your teeth all day while you're working.

Use the relationship to your advantage: People who dislike each other work together for years — and in many cases are successful because of, not despite, their differences. "There can be a competitive advantage to working with people who aren't in your circle of friends," Evans says. "Some people will continually push themselves to outdo their peers, so in some settings, a little discord among coworkers can be a good thing."

Keep your feelings to yourself: "Work gossip is the worst," Evans says. "Not only does it plant seeds of ill will with your coworkers, it ruins relationships and impacts others. If you don't like someone, there's no need to broadcast your feelings."

Seek help: Sometimes HR will help clashing employees work through their problems. "If there is a lot of money at stake, your company is going to want to help you work things out," Evans says. "It's possible to work with a third party to help negotiate strategies, boundaries and more."

MOVE ON

GET PAST RESENTMENT WHEN OTHERS ARE PROMOTED

We reward incompetence.

That's the phrase Tom A. suggested when his company was looking for a new slogan. "They put out little boxes in the kitchen and in the reception area and asked employees to suggest new slogans," says the Chicago-based sales representative, who didn't want his last name used. "They got new slogans, that's for sure. Mine was probably the tamest of the bunch."

Despite promising to hold a vote on the suggestions, the boxes were quietly removed the following week, and the slogan search was never mentioned again.

Tom says his slogan was based on the feelings of several coworkers who recently learned that the "weakest link in the chain," according to Tom, was promoted to sales manager and would soon be their supervisor.

"We're talking about someone grossly incompetent," says Tom. "Someone who didn't grasp the basic responsibilities of the job and a person who spent more time talking than doing. We were shocked."

Still, Tom admits that his promoted peer did one thing right. "He made all the right friends and said all the right things, and ultimately, that got him promoted," Tom says. "It was all about the shiny person he projected on the outside and had nothing to do with the smarts and guts he needs to be a successful sales rep on the inside."

Within weeks of the promotion, two of Tom's coworkers left the company, but he stayed put. "My dad told me bad managers value good employees more than anyone because they need someone to make them look good," Tom says. "His theory was that I could make him look good, and he'd have to pay me what I deserved to keep me around."

And?

"My dad was right," Tom says. "And I found out that my boss is a better manager than a sales rep. It was still a bogus deal that he got the job, but I can't say he'd be any better or worse than anyone else. And we replaced him with a woman who actually knows how to sell, so we're coming out ahead on our numbers, which helps all of us."

Getting beyond bitterness

Joan Vernon, a Seattle-based career coach, says less talented people have been rising through the corporate ranks for years. "Sometimes it's based on a feeling a manager has when he or she hands out a promotion. Other times it's because managers may not understand the big picture. They don't put a lot of thought into who they promote and give it to the squeakiest wheel," Vernon says.

While an undeserved promotion can prompt office gossip and an employee backlash, workers who've been passed over need to deal with their anger quickly and move on. "A staff that's filled with whiners and schemers is going to be labeled as one bad apple. "The group will be judged by the actions of its individuals," says Vernon. "If you see that happening, you'll need to be the professional and gently guide your coworkers to move past their perceived injustice."

Vernon suggests asking others — and yourself — to focus on the tasks at hand and wait to see how the new promotion affects everyone before defaulting to anger. "Things tend to work themselves out," Vernon says. "Incompetent people don't last long when they get increased responsibilities. Sometimes you have to take a wait-and-see approach."

And if it doesn't work out, Vernon says you won't be the first person who left a job because you thought you were treated unfairly. "That's probably the No. 1 reason people leave one job for another," she says. "They think they deserve more money or more power than the next guy, so they look for a new job to validate that perception."

More to the story

For Robert Trenton, a retired Milwaukee school administrator who now lives in Hinckley, Illinois, "perception" is the key word any time an employee feels slighted. "When I was a teacher, I saw things my students didn't see. When I was a principal, I saw things my teachers didn't see. And when I was an administrator, I saw things principals didn't see," Trenton says. "I know the same can be said in reverse — that the person on the ground sees things the big-picture guy can't — but when a job requires you to take an expansive look at issues and find ways to solve them, you're going to make decisions based on a variety of factors, not just the ones that are obvious to others."

Trenton says employees who feel passed over for certain positions should ask for a meeting with a supervisor to address the issue. "You don't need to be combative, and you shouldn't make it personal, but it's perfectly acceptable to sit down with your boss and say, 'Hey, I'd like to keep moving up in the company. What can I do to make that happen?'" Trenton says. "You might be surprised at some of the answers. And if you're smart, you'll take those answers seriously and try to address them."

Loyola president embraces change that will come thanks to the Ramblers' success story

DAVID HAUGH
In the Wake of the News

Of the hundreds of words in the Yahoo Sports report on the scandal rocking college basketball last month, six made Loyola coach Porter Moser most restless.

University presidents should be losing sleep.

The thought of Loyola President Jo Ann Rooney tossing and turning over the issue of integrity in his sport bugged Moser enough to address it immediately.

"Right away I sat down and wrote President Rooney an email to say she could rest easily," Moser said. "I have four kids. No way I could come home and look them in the eye and say, 'I'm cheating.' It was important for me to reaffirm that to her."

It also was appreciated.

"When Porter reached out directly and we eventually had a long conversation about how, at the core of it, he tells his players it's all about hard work and determination, not giving up or taking shortcuts, that says a lot about his commitment to running a program the right way and brings you back to say, you know what, there are ways this can be done," Rooney told the Tribune.

"That sets an example."

A few questions for the NFL

Friendly reminder that this is the weekend we turn our snark ahead one hour:

Good news for those of you who feared the NFL might be losing some of its general despicability:

For the third time in five years at the NFL combine, a team asked a prospect about his sexual orientation.

But wait, there's more despicability, because in an NFL with a history of drafting, signing and enabling domestic abusers, there's always more:

The league office wrings its hands and talks tough about how there's no place in the game for such things, but this is the third time in five years that such questions have been asked, so nothing changes. If the league actually cared about ending this stupidity, it would take away a draft choice from the offending team. Bang, solved.

But don't expect it. Because the NFL gives you no reason to expect things to change. So, for those of you keeping score at home: Players taking a knee silently to protest racial inequality is bad; teams spitting out a question regarding a player's sexuality is good.

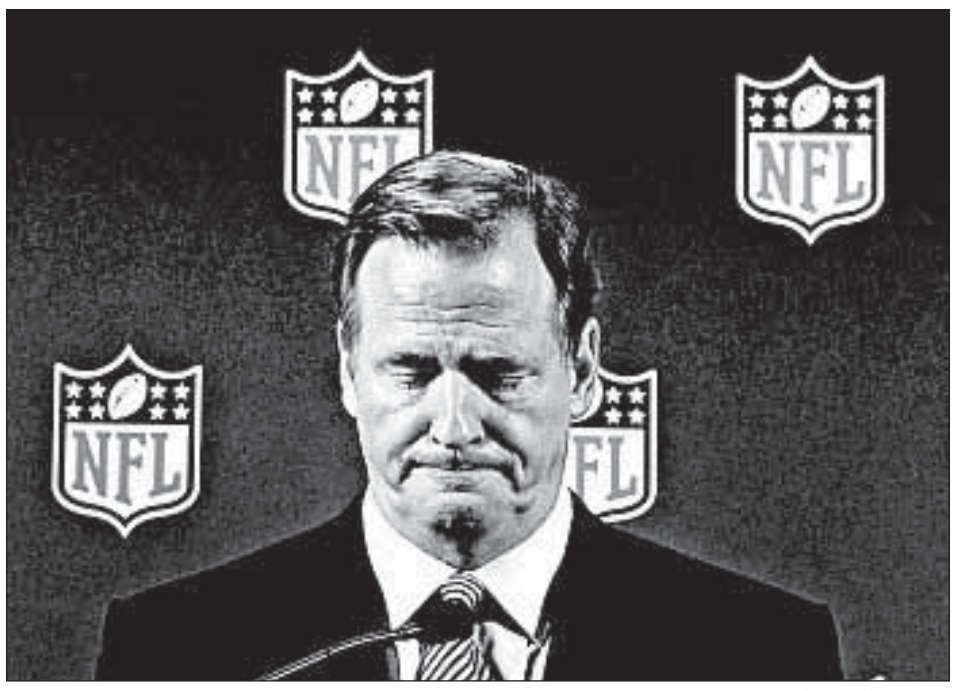
Matt Forte said he will sign a one-day contract and retire as a Bear, and I'm thinking, can he pass along that idea to Markus Wheaton?

Bears general manager Ryan Pace believes a team never can have enough pass rushers. Pace released two pass rushers in the last three weeks. Um ...

Theoretically, slapping the transition tag on Kyle Fuller cuts in half Pace's chances of starting cornerback mistakes in free agency.

The Bears have only 46 players under contract, which some people see as a problem. But I think it just cuts down on the number of guys who can't play.

The NCAA surpassed $1 billion in revenue in 2017. It did not, however, surpass squat in properly compensating the players on whose unpaid backs every dollar is generated. I would say college basketball players have a billion reasons to strike during the tournament this year.



JASON DECROW/AP

If you pick Virginia to win your bracket, you're rooting to be bored to death.

Illinois said results of a feasibility study launched last year indicate "growing excitement among the statewide hockey community to bring Div. I hockey to Champaign." Seriously? Excitement? Quick, someone show the hockey community what Illinois has done with Division I basketball and football programs.

Major League Baseball will not enforce a pitch clock this season, but please, just in case he's getting any big ideas, let's not tell Steve Trachsel.

The Oilers and Devils will play a regular-season game in Sweden next season, while the Jets and Panthers will play a regular-season game in Finland, the NHL said. There's no guarantee, however, the Blackhawks will play a postseason game. Again.

A poll the NHLPA conducted revealed most players want to play for Joel Quenneville, and I'm wondering, did that poll include players who were traded to the Blackhawks?

After Brandon Saad and Patrick Sharp face-planted this season and Johnny Oduya made a mess last year, if Stan Bowman brings in another former Hawk, then I'm trading for Dale Tallon.

And Teuvo Teravainen.

What's up, Michael Nylander?

A not-so-common practice

Bryce Harper pantomimed a swing, flipped his imaginary bat, pointed to where the home dugout would be and trotted around the bases while the 100 or so Nationals fans surrounding the practice field roared.

Spring training is a time for practicing the little things. At camp Saturday in West Palm Beach, Fla., that meant rehearsing walk-off home runs.

Position players began their day with baserunning drills on a back field. Before heading to another field for batting practice, they had a chance to practice a game-winning trip around the bases.

"I guess it can't hurt," said shortstop Trea Turner, who did a version of the Sammy Sosa double-hop leaving the box. "Why not practice, right?"

They're matinee idols

The Blackhawks will honor Olympic gold-medal hockey players Kendall Coyne and Alex Rigsby before Sunday's 11:30 a.m. game against the Bruins at the United Center.

The two locals helped the United States women's team win gold last month in Pyeongchang, South Korea, for the first time since 1998.

Coyne graduated from Sandburg High School and grew up in suburban Palos Heights, while Rigsby, a goalie, is from Downers Grove.

Coyne, a forward who also is a community liaison for the Hawks, had two goals and an assist during the Games.

CUBS

"There's a natural adrenaline factor every day when the team is good. It means something." — Cubs voice Pat Hughes

It's nervous time

Paul Sullivan
On the Cubs

MESA, Ariz. — Getting ready for his first Cactus League broadcast of the season recently at Sloan Park, Cubs radio broadcaster Pat Hughes insisted he had butterflies.

It was difficult to believe, considering Hughes' status among modern-day broadcasters and the meaninglessness of an exhibition game in which most of the regulars would leave after a couple of at-bats.

But Hughes insisted it was true, and when Pat Hughes is speaking one shouldn't doubt a single word.

"I always do," he said. "I have a little bit of butterflies whenever I'm going to do a performance, unless it's a ballgame after (I've) already done 40 or 50 for the year. And even having said that, when you get to the postseason, knowing the enormity of the audience and the importance of the ballgame, I still feel some anxiety.

"I don't think I'll ever lose it, and actually I like having a little of that because that means I care. It's part of me and I can't ever shake it. I don't ever want to mail it in, thinking, 'Oh, I can just wing it and do it.' I have to feel I prepare for it and I'm ready for it."

Hughes, 62, the only broadcaster in team history to call the final out of a Cubs championship, is entering his 36th year of broadcasting and 23rd in Chicago.

He has chronicled the best and worst of the Cubs over the years, from Kerry Wood's record-tying 20-strikeout game in May 1998 to a typical Edwin Jackson late-season start in 2013 — the low point of Theo Epstein's rebuild — to the World Series clincher.

Hughes' most famous call before the 2016 Series might have been the one in which he was drowned out by partner Ron Santo, who uttered those two memorable words — "Oh, no!" — when Brant Brown dropped a fly ball in Milwaukee near the end of the 1998 wild-card chase.

Broadcasting for a winner obviously is much more fun than doing so for a tanking team, and Hughes seems energized by the current club, which is expected to compete for a World Series again.

"It's never easy because for three (or) 3½ hours a day, you have no idea of what you're going to say or what's going to transpire in front of you," he said. "It's never easy, but it's more enjoyable, and there's a natural adrenaline factor every day when the team is good. It means something.

"And (when) you get to August and September and you're in a pennant race, these are some big games. You don't even need to worry about getting excited. You know when you get to the park and get all your notes together, you're going be excited once that first pitch comes down the pike."

A successful offseason for Hughes means doing nothing that involves traveling. He works out, reads, relaxes and tries to stay away from O'Hare. His kids are grown, and he devotes much of his offseason time to his projects, including baseballvoices.com. Hughes' latest subject is legendary Giants announcer Jon Miller.

Hughes also is selling autographed prints of his scorecard for Game 7 of the World Series, the only Cubs championship in our lifetime.

Across town, Hawk Harrelson's retirement is one of the bigger storylines of the season for the White Sox. Few announcers are as associated with their clubs as Harrelson, though Hughes is as revered on the North Side. He remains at the top of his game and said he has no plans to retire any time soon.

"I love working with Ron (Coomer), and (WSCR-AM 670's) Mitch Rosen is the best boss we've ever had," he said. "The Cubs are amazing. They give us complete freedom. They never interfere with what we do, and the team is good. We've been exciting to watch.

"If you retire, you better make sure you're done because if you leave and then want to come back a year later, you almost certainly would not get the same job. So you've got to be careful."

Cubs fans don't have to worry about that for a while. Hughes — and his butterflies — aren't going anywhere.

CUBS NOTES

Hendricks holds success in right hand with new curveball grip

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

MESA, Ariz. — Kyle Hendricks actually was a little disappointed Saturday after striking out seven White Sox in only four-plus innings because he wanted to induce contact earlier in counts.

But the Cubs right-hander was encouraged after using a new, more comfortable curveball grip during the 4-4 tie that he believes will be more effective.

"It came out of my hand sharper," Hendricks said. "And the feedback from the catcher (Victor Caratini) and even the swings and takes I got on it were good. That's a good sign.

"I've only been throwing that grip for 10 days, two weeks. It's a good sign. That's coming along quick for me."

Hendricks said he learned the grip — with his index finger pulled back to apply less pressure to the ball — from new pitching coach Jim Hickey, who also taught the grip to Cubs left-hander Mike Montgomery when both were with the Rays.

With his previous grip, "I felt I had to create spin," Hendricks said. "This one locks me into the right slot. It's the tightest it's felt ever spinning a curve overhand."

Hendricks said the new grip won't add pressure to his middle finger, in which he strained a tendon that forced him to miss six weeks last season.

Wait till Wednesday? Manager Joe Maddon intimated that second baseman Javier Baez might be held out through Tuesday as a precautionary measure. Baez's left hamstring cramped Thursday, and he underwent an MRI test that was "very minimal," according to Maddon.

"I'm not going to push this at all," Maddon said.

Baez will continue to perform baseball activities as Maddon wants him to stay sharp.

Extra innings: Reliever Pedro Strop was sent home due to flulike symptoms. The right-hander, who has been bothered by a sore calf, hopes to pitch in a game by the end of the week. ... Right-handed reliever Shae Simmons (shoulder tightness) has yet to resume throwing off a mound.

CUBS RECAP

Former Cubs prospect Eloy Jimenez hit a pinch two-run homer off Cory Mazzoni, but Cael Brockmeyer hit a solo home run in the bottom of the ninth that enabled the Cubs to forge a 4-4 tie with the White Sox at damp Sloan Park. At night in Glendale, Kike Hernandez hit a three-run homer in the seventh off Dillon Maples before Donovan Solano's sacrifice fly in the ninth off Alec Mills led the Dodgers to a 6-5 win.

At the plate: Jason Heyward struck out twice against the White Sox. Peter Bourjos came through with a two-run single in the fifth to snap a 2-2 tie against the Dodgers.

On the mound: Carl Edwards Jr. threw a perfect sixth and has struck out five while walking none in four innings. At night, Duane Underwood Jr. relieved starter Luke Farrell and induced Yasiel Puig to ground out with a runner at third to end the third.

In the field: Second baseman Tommy La Stella ranged far to his right and made an accurate, off-balance throw to retire Adam Engel for the first out of the third. Against the Dodgers, first baseman Efren Navarro made an over-the-shoulder catch of Austin Barnes' pop fly.

On the bases: Ryan Court stole second, then teamed with Kris Bryant for a double steal. At night, Bourjos beat first baseman Cody Bellinger's throw to second after breaking early on a steal attempt

WHITE SOX

WHITE SOX NOTES

Lobbying pays for Jimenez

By Paul Sullivan
Chicago Tribune

MESA, Ariz. — White Sox outfielder Eloy Jimenez was in manager Rick Renteria's ear all day Friday and Saturday morning, asking to return to action for Saturday's game against the Cubs, his former organization.

General manager Rick Hahn said Saturday morning Jimenez was "pushing Ricky hard," but they opted to give him an extra day to recover from the left knee tendinitis that had sidelined the top prospect since the opening week of Cactus League games.

"If it was a regular season game we probably would've handled it differently the last few days," Hahn said. "But why not take the time when we have it?"

Just when you thought the Sox had no sense of drama, Renteria finally acceded to Jimenez's wishes and put him into the game to pinch hit in the eighth inning. Jimenez responded with a two-run, opposite-field home run on an 0-2 pitch to give the Sox a brief 4-3 lead in a game that ended in a 4-4 tie.

So what happened?

"I wasn't (going to play)," Jimenez said through the Sox interpreter. "But I insisted to Rick and he said: 'You know what? Let's do it.' I think that was because the energy, the good vibe (at Sloan Park). I was hassling him during the whole game."

Jimenez was mobbed afterward in the dugout and later said he appreciated that "they didn't throw anything at me." Inside the clubhouse, Avisail Garcia and Jose Abreu greeted the home run with glee, and starter Lucas Giolito stopped his interviews with reporters to watch a replay.

"Pretty cool," Giolito said. "You see him in the dugout smiling over there. He's got an ear-to-ear grin. ... Awesome. When you go against your former club, there's always that little bit of fire in the belly."

Down time: Luis Robert became the fifth Sox prospect to miss time with an injury this spring, following Micker Adolfo (sprained UCL), Alec Hansen (forearm tightness), Jake Burger (torn Achilles) and Jimenez.

What's with all the prospects getting injured? Hahn tried to change the narrative.

"How about we go with if you have enough prospects, the odds will increase you have some prospects' injuries," he quipped. "We'll go with that. We haven't had these problems in the past."

Kopech watch: Michael Kopech is slated to pitch to Sox hitters on a back field Tuesday, but he hopes his Cactus League time isn't over.

"I would like to be here as long as I can," Kopech said. "I know they have their own plans, and I know Hahn has talked about me starting in Triple A. I'm willing to do whatever the team wants me to do, but I'd like to get as much as I can out of camp."

Hahn said Kopech is slated for at least one more start.

"After that we'll see," he said.

WHITE SOX RECAP

Lucas Giolito turned in the best outing of any White Sox starting pitcher this spring, and Eloy Jimenez cranked an opposite-field, pinch-hit, go-ahead, two-run home run in the eighth inning of a 4-4 tie against the Cubs.
On the mound: Giolito struck out the first four hitters and eight overall, allowing one run on two hits in four-plus innings. Rob Scahill served up a game-tying, ninth-inning home run.
At the plate: Third baseman Yolmer Sanchez went 3-for-4 with an RBI and is hitting .379 this spring. Leadoff candidate Yoan Moncada was 0-for-3 and is hitting .214.
The quote: "Coming out here, they sell out here for spring training, all the people on the lawn. It's kind of a louder atmosphere than most spring training games so it gets you going a little bit." — Giolito

Even after finishing second in the American League in 2017 with his .330 average, White Sox outfielder Avisail Garcia is not satisfied. He continues to work on correcting batting flaws during spring training.

He's keeping his head on straight

By Chris Kuc
Chicago Tribune

GLENDALE, Ariz. — Avisail Garcia held his hands about 10 inches apart.

"Like from here to here," the White Sox right fielder said as he demonstrated how much his head was moving while swinging a bat throughout the early stages of his major-league career.

With a hitter having just a split-second to react to a pitched ball, that movement proved detrimental to Garcia's development.

"When they threw me a fastball at 90 mph, I would miss it because I was leaning too far ahead and I was jumping," Garcia, 26, said. "You can't hit like that, so I made the adjustments. When you have more time, you can see the ball better and stay behind it."

The adjustments didn't come quickly or easily. There were plenty of video sessions and countless swings in the batting cage under the tutelage of Sox hitting coach Todd Steverson before Garcia was able to keep his head movement to a minimum.

"You must understand your body," Steverson said. "Some can feel it and some can't, but once you start to control your body to control your at-bats it (is) a lot easier. (Garcia) always had been a leaper, a jumper. I've had him for four years, and it was a process to get him to understand how to stay almost still — with movement, though. It's a weird phenomenon.

"There were some physical tweaks to help him that may not seem (as if) they were prevalent at the time, but they helped him understand the tempo of how he would move. You're facing 95, 96 mph, so you have 0.4 seconds, and when you're jumping at it and you have to uncoil — which takes 0.7 seconds itself — it's not that easy. His rate of contact went up and he can run, but just the ability to control (his) body and stay centered is huge."

The continued work with Steverson came to fruition last season, when Garcia started hot and remained that way to earn his first All-Star Game appearance. He finished the season second in the American League in batting at .330, a dramatic improvement from the two previous seasons, when he hit .245 and .257, respectively.

Not coincidentally, Garcia's contact rate rose from 72.2 percent in 2016 to 78.6 in '17. His average on balls put in play went from .309 to .392.

"That was big keeping his head still," general manager Rick Hahn said. "The less movement, the easier it is to track pitches and stay in the zone. There was also his hand movement becoming freer and easier that led to his success."

That success has carried over to the Cactus League this spring. In eight games, Garcia is hitting .333 with two runs scored and four RBIs in 24 at-bats. That bodes well for another stellar season.

"There are a few trends he'll have to overcome to continue to perform at a high level," Hahn said. "But given his work ethic, commitment and understanding of his swing and what his triggers for success are, there are reasons to be optimistic for it to continue."

Manager Rick Renteria, also a student of hitting, saw a more-controlled swing from Garcia in 2017.

"It wasn't as violent as it was in previous years," Renteria said. "But it's (in) increments, very subtle differences. Whatever he did in terms of adjustments that he made, I do know this: His routine was consistent throughout. A lot of his work was quality.

"From an emotional standpoint, or maybe just a maturity standpoint, last year was (when) he got beyond the All-Star break and continued doing as he had done previous to (it). As long as he continues to maintain his routine and trust the work he's doing, whatever adjustments he's making give him a chance to have success."

Garcia has not been sitting on his laurels. He continues to work in the cage and watch videos of his and others' swings "to see what all the consistent guys do. Everybody wants to get better and nobody wants to lose, so you have to make adjustments."

Thumb injury benches Robert

Sox prospect likely out until May after being hurt in slide

By Paul Sullivan
Chicago Tribune

GLENDALE, Ariz. — White Sox prospect Luis Robert is out for up to 10 weeks after spraining his left thumb on a slide Wednesday.

Robert's thumb will be immobilized for about six weeks, and the center fielder will be able to return in 10 weeks, according to general manager Rick Hahn.

"He's obviously done for spring training," Hahn said. "We would expect him to start off in extended games roughly in early May. Hopefully we can adjust that timetable for the better when the cast is off."

Robert, 20, said he felt like he was "getting into (his) rhythm" and "gaining confidence."

"Now this happened, and I feel bad," he said.

"Pretty impressive pain tolerance by the young man, and also speaks to the speed of the potential recovery here," Hahn said.

After he heals, Robert will go to extended spring training, where he probably will spend a couple of weeks before being assigned to Class A.

Robert made only one start this spring, going 3-for-10 with the grand slam. But Hahn said they got enough of a glimpse to see what they have.

"We didn't see a ton, but what we did see was very impressive," he said. "Not just in between the white lines during games, but the way he went about his business in drills, the way he fit in with his teammates in the clubhouse and his work ethic all spoke to a very professional approach."

Robert said he didn't have his hand in the correct position on the slide attempt. It was a feet-first slide, and the injury occurred on the back hand. Renteria said the thumb was under the fielder's spike.

"It was just an unfortunate, fluky thing," Hahn said.

Robert said he felt it right away, but said nothing.

"Because of the intensity of the game I didn't feel much pain," he said. "It wasn't until the next day, I was pretty sore."

Robert had a meniscus injury last year and rolled his ankle in a home plate collision. Hahn said it was a "small string of fluky in-game things," and "hopefully we're getting the bad luck out of the way early in his career."

Robert said he doesn't feel snakebit with injuries. He added his teammates comforted him after learning of the extent of the injury.

"They told me don't get crazy, don't get frustrated," he said. "They said these things happen in this sport. Just giving me a lot of support."

So, what does Robert take out of his first major-league camp?

"The thing I liked the most about this spring training was a chance to be part of a major-league organization," he said. "I think this was a unique experience for me. This was my first time and it was wonderful for me."

Bridges, Brunson clutch as Wildcats hold off giant killer Providence

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mikal Bridges scored 25 points and hit two 3-pointers in overtime while Stevenson graduate and Big East player of the year Jalen Brunson poured in a career-high 31 points to lift No. 2 Villanova to a 76-66 win over Providence in the Big East tournament championship game Saturday night.

The Wildcats (30-4) won their second straight Big East title and third in four years (losing in the 2016 final). They put the bow on a fantastic season that should have them earn a No. 1 seed in the NCAA tournament.

Villanova had rolled to a pair of dominant victories in the tourney and held off a pesky Providence team that played its third straight overtime game.

The fifth-seeded Friars (21-13) rallied in the second half from yet another double-digit hole and seemed set to pull off one more upset and earn the automatic NCAA berth. Providence erased a 17-point hole in the second half to beat top-seeded Xavier to reach the final. With one stunning rally on its resume, Providence nearly made it two.

Brunson tied it for Villanova with two free throws.

Providence missed a last-gasp shot at the buzzer and played in its third straight overtime game.

The Friars ran out of gas in OT. Bridges opened overtime with a 3 and hit another that helped stretch the lead for good.

Brunson proved his worth as the best in the conference. He hit four 3s and made 12 of 23 overall from the floor, showing on the national stage why he's a candidate for national player of the year.

Cartwright put Providence's comeback in overdrive when he hit a 3 that made it 51-46 and had Friars coach Ed Cooley smiling and clapping on the sideline. He loved it even more when Cartwright came right back and hit another 3 to pulled the Friars within two.

Drew Edwards flexed when he was fouled on a tying basket and had the crowd chanting "Let's Go Friars!" headed into a timeout. He sank the free throw to give Providence its first lead of the game, 52-51.

The Wildcats snatched the lead back and Bridges buried a 3 from the top of the arc that sent the team to their feet. Brunson was whistled next time down for an offensive foul. Eric Paschall hit a floater in the lane that seemed to steady the Wildcats.

Providence just kept on coming. The Friars had defeated three top-five teams this season and was soaring following two straight overtime victories over Creighton and Xavier to reach the final.

Diallo had 22 points and Cartwright 19 for Providence.

That reflected a mutual respect between coach and college president, harmony that will come in handy as Moser's basketball program and Rooney's university grow together after Loyola's first NCAA tournament appearance in 33 years. Around 5 p.m. Selection Sunday, when Loyola officially enters the field of 68, life on the Lake Shore campus never will be the same.

Rooney, who took over in May 2016 as the first lay leader in the Jesuit school's 148-year history, embraces the realities that accompany such change. That includes keeping up with the inflation of winning and rewarding a coach, Moser, so that he sees no reason to leave when bigger programs tempt him — and they will.

"We'd be foolish not to," Rooney said. "Generally, when you have great people in an organization that really show through performance they can build the kind of culture that will propel it forward, you want to retain them. We have thought about it. How can we stay true to ourselves yet be competitive with how we're approaching the program, with what we're willing to commit? Joining the Missouri Valley Conference (in 2013) was the first step in a long journey."

Rooney

In April, Loyola will break ground on an $18.5 million Alfie Norville Practice Facility for its basketball and volleyball teams funded by a donation from former Rambler player Al Norville and named in honor of his late wife. Last November, the university installed 10 state-of-the-art LED displays in the Gentile Arena, the sparkling home of the Ramblers that reopened in 2012 after a $26 million renovation project.

Whenever Loyola's special season ends, the challenge falls on Rooney to find the financial resources to retain Moser, who made a reported $420,000 last year on a contract that runs through 2021-22.

Illinois coach Brad Underwood and Northwestern coach Chris Collins, who both missed the tournament, make $2.7 million and $3 million, respectively.

"Porter talked about building a program, and part of that is making sure we're paying folks competitively without sitting back and we're always reviewing that," said Rooney, 56. "He is a valuable asset. We're hoping to keep him and his coaching team he's developed for as long as we possibly can because it's a great fit."

The investment in basketball for mid-major programs such as Loyola can pay dividends for the entire university once it becomes part of NCAA bracketology.

At Butler, after consecutive Final Four runs in 2010 and 2011, applications for admission increased 41 percent, from 6,760 to 9,682, according to the Indianapolis Business Journal. The school also doubled its annual giving total and, by one marketer's estimate, received more than a half-billion dollars in publicity.

Everywhere Moser appeared last week, from the Blackhawks game to the dozens of local and national interviews he conducted, it enhanced the Loyola brand by taking advantage of its basketball success.

A Bloomberg analysis of five years of tournament results showed a 4 percent jump in applications for all schools that participated in the NCAA tournament from 2010 to 2014.

"No matter how you advertise or how much you reach out to schools to connect with students and families, this has given us a very different level of exposure and the kind we want by showing this winning team and the selflessness of the players, but also, 'Did you realize Loyola athletics ranked second in (NCAA) Graduation Success Rate for the second year in a row?' " Rooney said. "You cannot buy that kind of exposure. The kind of students and families that resonates with are exactly the kinds of students and families we want to have at Loyola."

As a student at Boston University, Rooney enjoyed watching the Terriers' top-rated hockey team. As former president at Spalding University in Louisville, a school that transitioned from NAIA to NCAA Division III, she appreciated the way athletics could complement academics on a campus that strives for balance. As a competitive rower and triathlete, she possesses an insatiable appetite for activity that Moser says he "really connects with" and helps her relate.

> "You cannot buy that kind of exposure."
> — Loyola President Jo Ann Rooney on playing in the NCAA tournament

"I said to (athletic director) Steve Watson that I've been at quite a few starting lines throughout my life, and you get that adrenaline rush, but I don't think I was ever more nervous than watching our team at the MVC final — I'd rather be on the other side of that starting gun," Rooney said. "But what I find very heartening about this is I see our team represent the best of what Division I college basketball can be. Porter's team brings everybody back to what Division I college athletics can be if people are willing to work hard."

Believing that makes Rooney sleep just fine.

THE ALL-TIME BRACKET GREATEST TEAM

State of I

By Will Larkin and Tim Bannon | Chicago Tribune

With the nation's original March Madness (that would be the Illinois high school basketball tournament) upon us for the 111th time, we came up with an all-time bracket featuring the best champions in state history. We grouped our selections in four 16-team divisions: the top champions from the city, from the suburbs, from "downstate" — defined as anywhere in Illinois other than the city and suburbs — and the 16 best girls state champions. (The first girls state tournament was in 1977; the boys tournament started in 1908 at the Oak Park YMCA.) Other teams — such the mid-1990s Thornton juggernaut that was blocked by Peoria Manual's dynasty; the 1977 Westinghouse team that featured Mark Aguirre and Eddie Johnson but didn't make it out of the city playoffs; Edwardsville's mid-1950s teams with future Globetrotters Mannie Jackson and Govoner Vaughn; and the 1954 DuSable team that put Chicago basketball on the map — certainly belong in any discussion of the state's best all-time teams, but this list is for champions only. If a team repeated as champion, we tried to pick the better one — with the exception of the 1991 and '92 Proviso East teams that won with almost entirely different lineups. The Manual and Simeon four-peat teams got two each. So here they are: the best of the best from each part of the state.

CITY REGION

The Rams: They won perhaps the best state tournament ever, which had star-studded teams from Thornton, Farragut, Rock Island and Joliet.

The Crusaders: Goodwin was dominant while leading Althoff to state as a sophomore in 2015, and he was even better as a junior.

2016 Belleville Althoff Record: 32-2 | Class 3A | Coach: Greg Leib | Star: Jordan Goodwin | Others: Tarkus Ferguson, Brendon Gooch, Marvin Bateman — 9

Bulls are 8th worst in the NBA

Streak: Lost 1 | Last 10: 3-7

■ Seven of the Bulls' final 17 games are against teams in the bottom 10 of the NBA — with one of those coming Sunday against the Hawks.

THE LIST

Hit or miss from picks 7 through 11

With the Bulls sitting eighth in the tank standings — and a soft schedule down the stretch will make it difficult to move up — here's a look at the best players drafted from Nos. 7 through 11 over the last five years.

✓ 2017: It's early, but Dennis Smith Jr., drafted ninth by the Mavericks, and Lauri Markkanen, drafted seventh and sent to the Bulls in the Jimmy Butler trade, are the early standouts. Beyond their skill level, both players look unfazed by big moments.

✗ 2014: Julius Randle, picked seventh by the Lakers, has averaged nearly a double-double but still lands in the occasional trade rumor. Doug McDermott wound up with the Bulls after the Nuggets drafted him at No. 11 and traded his rights for Gary Harris and Jusuf Nurkic.

✓ 2013: C.J. McCollum, taken 10th by the Blazers, is the runaway standout from picks Nos. 7-11 — and that was even before he dropped 50 points on the Bulls this season. But the real winner is the Bucks, who landed franchise-changing talent Giannis Antetokounmpo at No. 15.

'Rest rules' a real challenge

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

In his seven games since the All-Star break, Zach LaVine is averaging 16.3 points on 36.8 percent shooting, including 30.3 percent from 3-point range.

In his eight games since the All-Star break, which coincided with the Bulls removing Robin Lopez and Justin Holiday as starters, Kris Dunn has averaged 13.4 points on 40.4 percent shooting and 4.8 assists.

Also in eight games, Lauri Markkanen has averaged 11.6 points on 39.6 percent shooting, including 27.2 percent from 3-point range, and 7.3 rebounds.

LaVine has played just 21 games after missing 11 months following left ACL rehab. Dunn is nine games removed from a monthlong absence to a concussion. And Markkanen has experienced a nonstop blur of demands since June, including a national team commitment as the face of Finnish basketball and fatherhood.

But those numbers also could be affected by, at best, the changing lineups exacerbated by the Bulls now using Lopez and Holiday for spot minutes to placate the league's new rest rules. And at worst, those numbers could be reflective of sagging spirit in response to the Bulls shifting to player development and trying different combinations over fielding the best lineup.

"It's tough. You can't get by it," Dunn said of the experimental lineups. "But we're all men. Just play basketball. That's our job. Don't try to get too involved with the other stuff that's going on. I just try to have positive energy and try to bring it every day. That's the only thing I can do."

From the first day of training camp, the Bulls have talked about building the right culture that started with strong September workouts led by, somewhat ironically, Lopez and Holiday. Hard work and effort were stressed.

That culture got tested by a 3-20 start. Back then, players fielded questions on how to avoid letting the rampant losing infect the positive vibes established by the buy-in and work ethic.

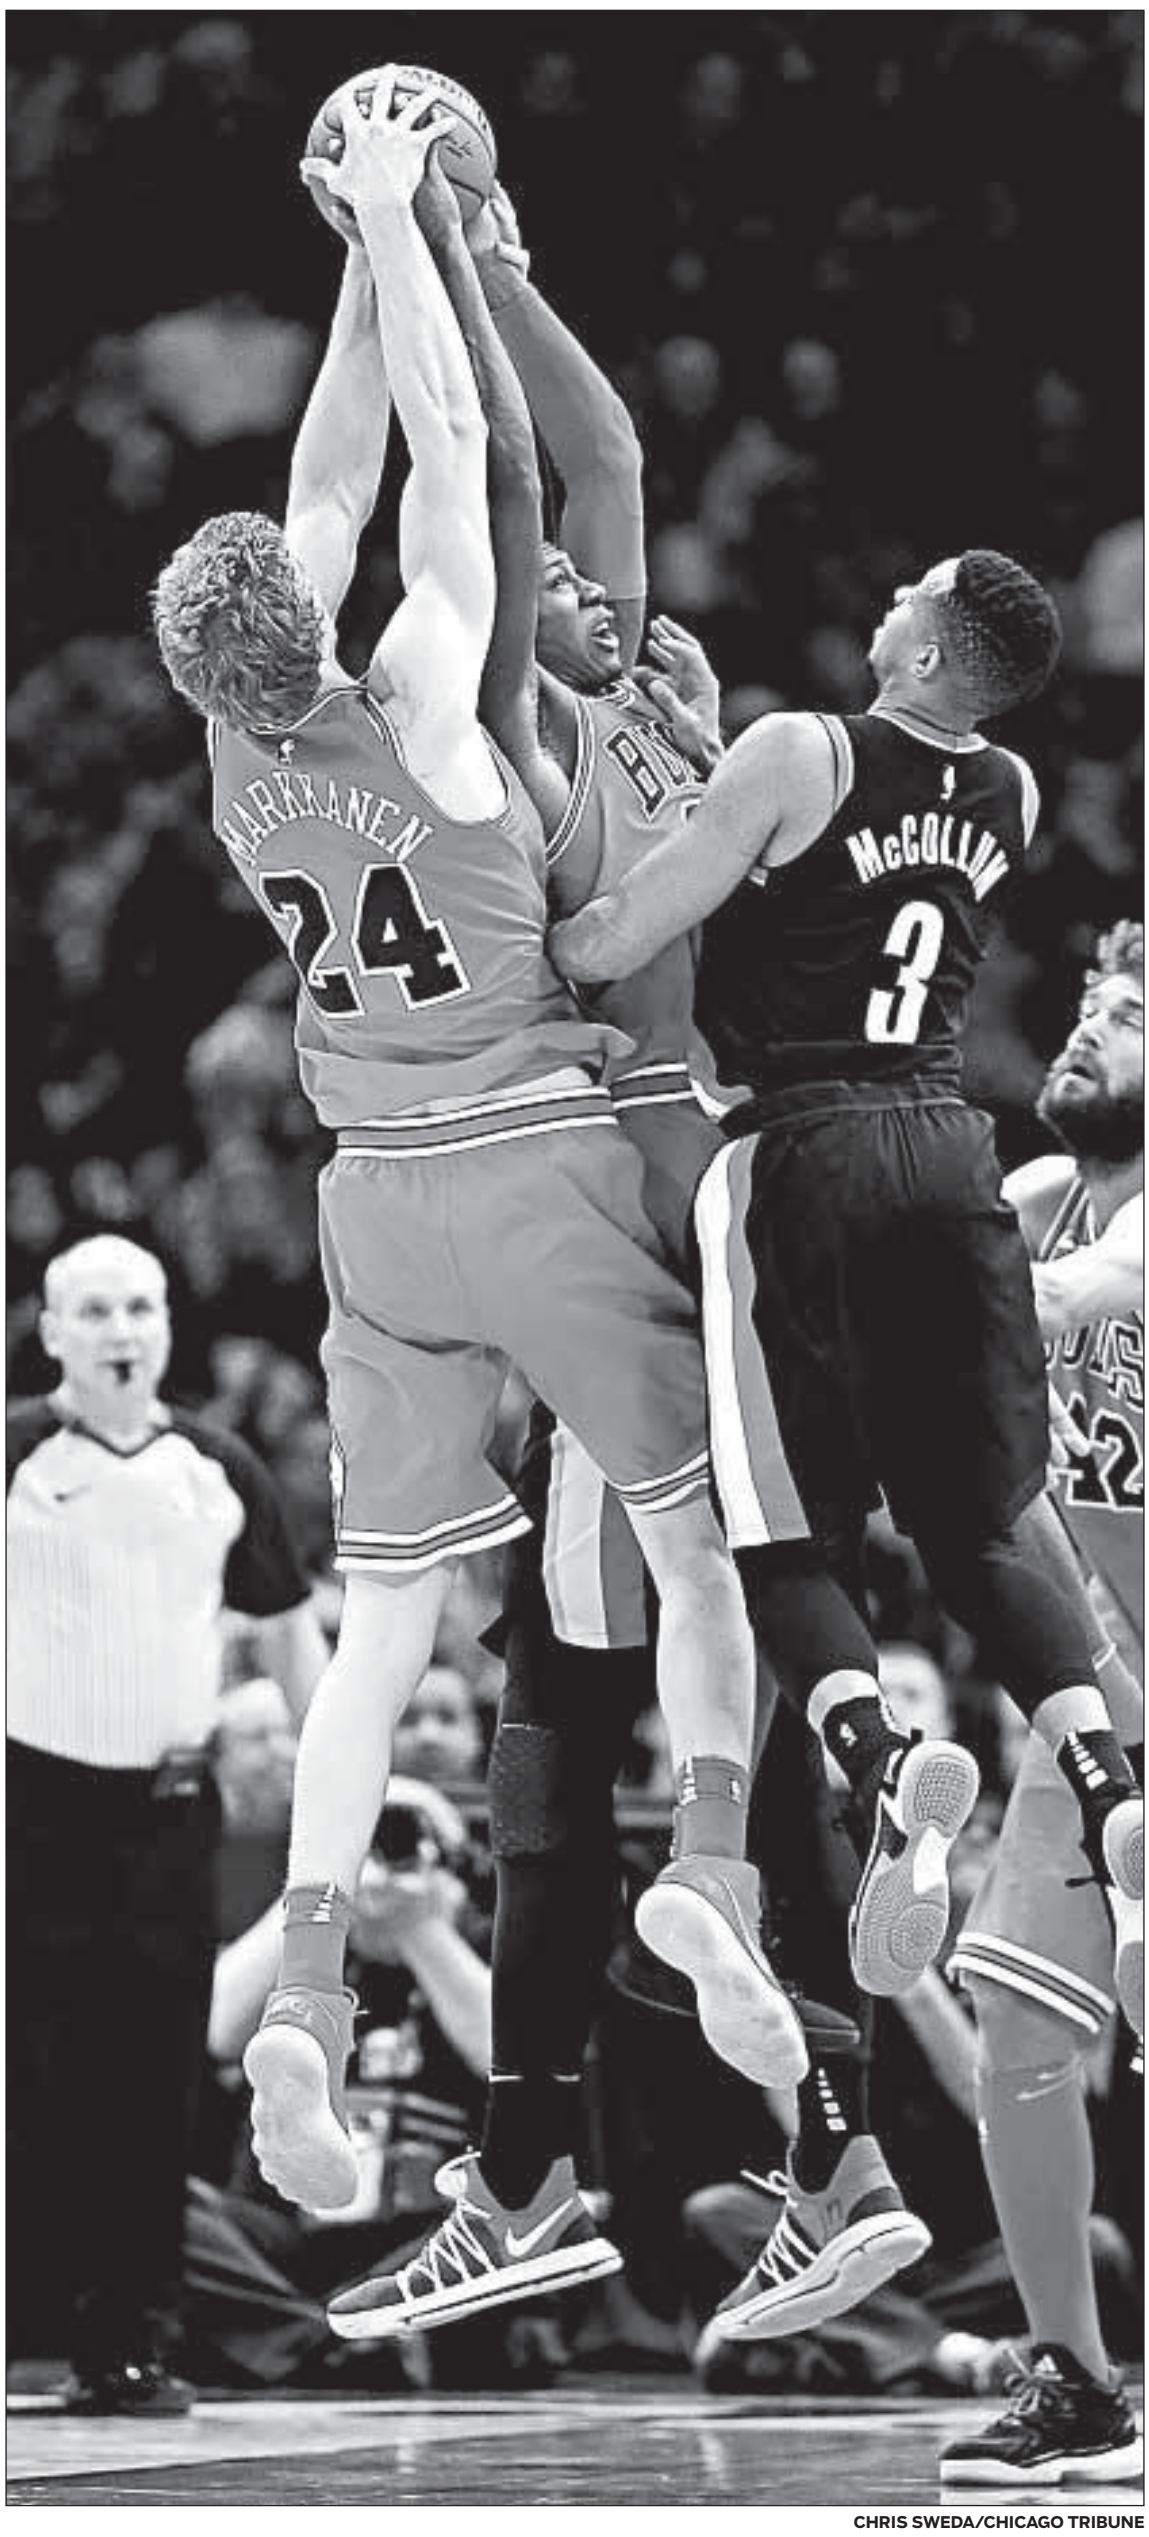
It's happening again, but this time it's being aided by the move toward experimenting with different lineups and playing Lopez and Holiday the minimum requirements to keep the league office and its rest rules at bay.

"It doesn't matter who's on the floor. You have to play with great effort and unselfishness," coach Fred Hoiberg said. "It is good for those (core) guys to have to figure it out. Those three guys are young players still trying to find their way. ... A big part of this is who is going to emerge as leaders."

Hoiberg was asked if his evaluation process for LaVine, Dunn and Markkanen changes because they're playing with less accomplished players than Lopez and Holiday.

"I don't think it matters," he said. "Obviously there are different skill sets with different players playing. When we were really playing well in December and January, a lot of that was with Robin and Kris really developing a nice chemistry with each other. That's what we're looking for for some of the other guys, develop that same chemistry with him.

"And now Zach is back in the lineup and we still get Lauri as involved as we can. A big part of this is seeing who can fit together in five-man units and get that figured out heading into the offseason and then have a great summer heading into next year."



CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The lineup of Dunn, LaVine, Holiday, Markkanen and Lopez has played just five games and 55 minutes together, with a net rating of minus-11.3. So even though those are the five full-time starters, it's not like the move to player development has broken up a juggernaut.

But it's true Dunn and Lopez found chemistry together during the Bulls' hot December. And Dunn has yet to establish that two-man pick-and-roll game with Bobby Portis or Cristiano Felicio.

"At some point, you have to be accountable for yourself," Dunn said. "If you want to be good in this league, you have to keep going hard, keep improving. There's beauty in the struggle. Adversity hits. But eventually good things are going to come. Trust me."

Lopez, who despite his forced inactivity has said he wants to return next season, is equally positive. Similar to words spoken when the Bulls sat at 3-20, Lopez is confident a positive culture can remain down the stretch.

So is LaVine, who turned 23 on Saturday.

"We're not down on each other," he said. "We've very encouraging."

BULLS NOTES

Confident Payne sure he can help

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Before Cameron Payne made his season debut Feb. 22, coach Fred Hoiberg emphasized Payne's need to look to make plays first and shoot second.

On Friday in Detroit, Payne tied a career high with 17 points on a night the Bulls shot 35.5 percent. But Payne, who did not register an assist, insisted the night reflected filling a need, not the norm.

"I've been balancing it well," Payne said of scoring and distributing. "I don't think it's a hard thing for me. I always look to score second. Getting my teammates involved, I feel it makes us play better as a group because everybody gets their feel. It helps us run when I get the ball up in transition. I'm just trying to take the shots that are open."

Payne has averaged 8 points, 2.9 assists and 1.4 steals in 18.3 minutes during his eight games since moving into the rotation. And while those numbers can't fully erase the poor perception that Payne's play last season created, they do represent progress.

Hoiberg said Payne is in better shape this season.

"I think I've played well," Payne said. "Obviously I had a couple bad shooting days. But I feel the second unit has been playing pretty good. But we're not winning so it really doesn't matter."

Five alive: Hoiberg said the Bulls are determining their starters and rotation on a "game-to-game" basis now as opposed to the five-game blocks that served as the original post-All-Star-break plan.

The league's new rest rules call for Robin Lopez and Justin Holiday to play road games, so expect limited minutes for those two Sunday in Atlanta.

"I give Justin and Robin credit for keeping themselves ready," Hoiberg said.

Play it again: Zach LaVine, who missed 12 of 15 shots in Detroit, said he has improved at letting bad games go and moving on to the next one.

"I'm a positive person, very confident," LaVine said. "Once it's over, it's over. I can look at what I did wrong or right. But it's not like I'm Adam Sandler. I wish I had a click remote and could go back in time and do it. But I can't do it."

LaVine is shooting 38.9 percent, down from his career-high 45.9 percent last season before he tore the ACL in his left knee.

THE LIST

Plenty of Hart Trophy candidates

Heading into the home stretch of the regular season, this year's Hart Trophy race appears to be wide open. Here are five leading candidates for the NHL's most valuable player award, listed in alphabetical order:

Taylor Hall, Devils: Can someone please explain why the Oilers thought trading Hall, the 2010 No. 1 pick, straight up for defenseman Adam Larsson was a good idea? Hall has been on a season-long tear for the surprising Devils. His candidacy hinges on the Devils hanging on to a playoff spot.

Nikita Kucherov, Lightning: When you weigh Hart Trophy candidates, start with the best player on the best team. With all due respect to teammate Steven Stamkos, at the moment that player would be Kucherov, who is leading the league with 88 points heading into Sunday's games.

Nathan MacKinnon, Avalanche: The No. 1 pick in 2013 is returning to the form he showed as a rookie. Despite missing time with an injury, MacKinnon ranks among the league's scoring leaders and is one of the reasons behind the Avs' late-season surge. His hopes depend on a playoff berth.

Brad Marchand, Bruins. Marchand can tick opponents off in a variety of ways, from embellishing a "penalty" (for which he was recently fined by the NHL) to throwing a vicious elbow (suspended five games in January) to scoring a soul-crushing goal (OT winners March 3 in Montreal, Tuesday in Detroit).

Pekka Rinne, Predators: The 35-year-old goaltender is having another fine season for a team that is a Cup contender. He might not get as much hype as some of his peers get (this means you, Carey Price and Henrik Lundqvist), but Rinne will be a playoff participant rather than a spectator.

By Paul Skrbina
Chicago Tribune

BOSTON — The Rockford IceHogs lost to the Boston Bruins 7-4 on Saturday.

At least that's what it seemed like. That's not necessarily bad for the Blackhawks, as far as assessing their future is concerned.

John Hayden, for instance, wasn't even supposed to be at TD Garden for the afternoon game, but he scored a go-ahead goal in the second period, a day after his emergency call-up.

Matthew Highmore, too, scored a go-ahead goal later in the second, the first point of his six-game NHL career.

Erik Gustafsson, who was called up from Rockford on Jan. 9 and signed a two-year contract extension last week, had his first career three-point game, which included a goal and two assists.

"(Hayden) was really good," Hawks coach Joel Quenneville said. "Thought he had an excellent game. Thought (Gustafsson) had an excellent game. (Highmore) scores his first goal. That's always encouraging."

In the end, though, the Bruins got the best of the Hawks and goalie Jean-Francois Berube, who was summoned from Rockford in mid-February and watched four pucks go by him in the third period.

By doing so, the Bruins polished off a 6-0 homestand — becoming just the seventh team in league history to accomplish such a feat — and won their seventh in a row overall at the Garden.

"For 40 minutes, we were decent," Quenneville said.

For the last 20, not so much.

Two of the four power-play goals the Hawks allowed came while Patrick Kane served a four-minute double-minor penalty for high-sticking.

The Bruins were a man down when Noel Acciari pushed a rebound past Berube after a Duncan Keith turnover in the first period to give the Bruins a 1-0 lead. Their first power-play goal soon followed.

Jonathan Toews redirected Gustafsson's shot to cut the deficit to one before Gustafsson scored one himself to tie it 2-2 with 5:04 left in the first.

"We could have prevented a couple of their goals," Quenneville said. "They have a good power play. Made some nice passes."

Hayden, who was wearing an IceHogs sweater in the Hawks dressing room Tuesday at MB Ice Arena after the AHL team practiced there, gave the Hawks a 3-2 lead early in the second.

His hasty change of scenery and wardrobe occurred because a family situation caused Vinnie Hinostroza to miss the game.

Hayden tried to pack the most he could into his stay, which could be extended because of a right leg injury suffered by Anthony Duclair, who was helped off the ice in the first period and did not return.

"The whole time I've been in Rockford, I felt I belonged in this league," Hayden said after his first NHL game since Jan. 5. "But that doesn't mean that I couldn't have a beneficial experience there. It was great for me from a developmental standpoint."

Less than six minutes in, Hayden ditched part of his Hawks wardrobe when he dropped his gloves to settle his differences with Sean Kuraly in what turned out to be a wrestling match.

Hayden went directly from Yale to the Blackhawks last season, and he began this year with the team before he was sent to Rockford. He had three goals and eight assists in 39 games before he was assigned.

"I did some things well," he said. "I could have taken care of the puck a little better a few times. But it was nice to get out there with these guys again."

And it was nice for him to do it in a Hawks sweater.

BLACKHAWKS NOTES

'Dirty' or not, collision sidelines Duclair

By Paul Skrbina
Chicago Tribune

BOSTON — Erik Gustafsson labeled the play "dirty."

Coach Joel Quenneville called it "tough to call," but he said Blackhawks forward Anthony Duclair will miss a week or two with a right leg injury he suffered after colliding with the Bruins' Brad Marchand in the first period of Saturday's 7-4 loss to the Bruins.

Marchand, who has been suspended six times by the NHL, leaped in what appeared to be an attempt to avoid running into Duclair. But at the last second he appeared to extend his arm and hit Duclair's helmet. Duclair had to be helped off the ice after landing awkwardly on his right foot and did not return.

"Yeah, I think it was a dirty play," Gustafsson said. "I think Marchand sees him coming, and I don't know if he did it on purpose or not, but Duclair got stuck in his feet when he hit the ice. Looked pretty bad."

Bruins coach Bruce Cassidy called it "incidental contact" between two players "trying like hell" to avoid a collision.

Duclair, a 22-year-old forward, has two goals and six assists in 23 games for the Hawks since he was acquired from the Coyotes in the Richard Panik deal.

"It was kind of away from the play," Quenneville said. "Some people might have thought it was a different kind of play because the ... injury was not part of the play. ... You could argue, but I didn't think too much of it."

He said it: "He's useful and he's got a real good awareness to the game, versatility of playing in the middle as well. Strong on faceoffs. A good, hard, honest-working guy that you appreciate." — Quenneville on former Hawk Tommy Wingels, who was sent to the Bruins on deadline day.

One-timers: Quenneville said "I don't know yet" when asked if he expected injured goalie Corey Crawford back on the ice soon. ... The Hawks are 3-9-1 in the second of back-to-backs. They face the Bruins again Sunday at the United Center.

PGA VALSPAR CHAMPIONSHIP

Woods knocking on door

Gallery 'very, very loud' as he stays in the hunt

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

PALM HARBOR, Fla. — Canadian rookie Corey Conners kept the lead in the VALSPAR Championship and had a clear view of what he faces in the final round.

Tiger Woods was right in front of him Saturday, and Conners could hear the roars all afternoon.

Conners, who ran off birdies in the early stretches of both sides at Innisbrook, saved par from the bunker on the 17th and kept his cool when his ball moved slightly on the 18th green to finish off a par for a 3-under 68.

Now comes the hard part.

He had a one-shot lead over Woods, Brandt Snedeker and Justin Rose as he goes after his first PGA Tour victory before a crowd rarely seen this side of a major. Thousands bordered on a delirium for just about every shot Woods hit, especially when he chipped in for birdie behind the ninth green, holed a 20-foot birdie putt at No. 10 and gave himself birdie chances inside 8 feet on the next two holes.

Woods missed them both to slow his momentum. He dropped only one shot and finished with four straight pars in his round of 67. It was his fifth straight round at par or better, his longest stretch in the same season since September 2013.

"Loud. Very, very loud," Woods said about the gallery. "I played myself right there in contention. It will be a fun Sunday."

Conners, in only his 17th start on the PGA Tour as a pro, was at 9-under 204.

He finished with a two-putt par from 20 feet and one nervous moment. As he was taking a few practice strokes for his 3-foot par putt, the ball moved ever so slightly without him touching it with his putter. He marked it and called over an official to confirm there is no longer a penalty for a ball moving even after a player has addressed if it was clear he didn't cause the ball to move.

Conners will be paired in the final group with Rose, who holed a wedge for eagle from 120 yards on the par-5 11th and followed with two more birdies for a 66.

"I kind of knew what was going on without even having to see it," Conners said. "But it will be cool. It's fun seeing (Woods) out there today, and I'm sure he'll be battling hard tomorrow. But hopefully, I can play my game and have a good day."

Snedeker, coming off a sternum injury that knocked him out of golf for the second half of last year, was equally impressive as the guy in his group everyone came to see. He twice matched birdies with Woods with 12-foot putts, and after falling two shots behind and the crowd getting louder by the hole for Woods, Snedeker battled back with a pair of birdies for a 67.

He will play with Woods again in the final round.

Woods has never been so close to winning since his last victory in the Bridgestone Invitational at Firestone in 2013.

It has been a remarkable return from his fourth back surgery, especially since he wasn't cleared to start hitting balls until five months ago.

In his sights are a shot at his 80th career victory on the PGA Tour and more momentum and madness as the Masters approaches.

"I can confirm he's back. The roars are back," Snedeker said. "It's fun to hear the crowd going crazy again and realize how excited we are in having him back out here and play the way he is. He's playing great."

SPORTING KANSAS CITY 4, FIRE 3

Fire's collapse spoils opener

Sporting Kansas City scores twice late in 2nd half for win

By Jeremy Mikula
Chicago Tribune

At first it seemed as if the Fire had rescued an improbable three points. Then Sporting Kansas City scored twice.

A pair of goals from Nemanja Nikolic and a goal from Aleksandar Katai weren't enough as the Fire fell 4-3 in their season opener Saturday night at Toyota Park.

The Fire turned a 2-0 halftime deficit into a 3-2 lead, only to see Sporting (1-1-0, 3 points) rally to grab the win.

"Ultimately, you look at the game, it's a frustrating day at the office," Fire captain Dax McCarty said. "You're 10 minutes away from the storyline being 'Chicago Fire show great character, make a fantastic comeback, win the game 3-2.'

"And yet, we are sitting here, somehow, losing that game — which is insane. It's totally insane."

Sporting midfielder Felipe Gutierrez opened the scoring in the ninth minute with a header. Forward Johnny Russell made it 2-0 in the 44th minute, finishing a low cross from Daniel Salloi.

The Fire made a tactical shift at the interval, moving Katai into a central role. The Serbian got on the scoresheet in the 70th minute, heading in a cross from Bastian Schweinsteiger.

Nikolic equalized just four minutes later with a tap-in and then gave the Fire a brief advantage by finishing a cutback from Brandon Vincent in the 82nd minute.

That lead lasted just one minute, however, before Sporting defender Jimmy Medranda equalized. Gutierrez scored his second goal of the game in the 86th minute to give Sporting all three points.

"What we learned today is that we have to get better in every aspect of the game," Fire coach Veljko Paunovic said. "We're not there, we didn't have a good game. (We made) a lot of innocent and naive mistakes that led us to drop not only a point, but three points."

"It was not the best game from me," he said. "I'm happy because of the goals ... but it does not mean a lot today."

For the Fire, who failed to register a shot on goal in the first half, the dropped points leave a bitter taste.

"You concede four goals at home, you're giving yourself a recipe to lose the game," McCarty said. "We showed a lot of character to come back from 2-0, but less than 10 minutes to go at home, you should be able to see the game out."

'26 Cup bid could hit a snag

Anti-Trump sentiment might hurt United effort

Kevin Baxter
On soccer

With the final applications for the 2026 World Cup bids due Friday, the restructuring last week of the group working to bring the tournament to North America indicates the joint U.S.-Mexico-Canada campaign might be in trouble.

In a letter to FIFA's 200-plus member associations, the three-nation United Bid Committee announced that former U.S. Soccer Federation President Sunil Gulati will no longer chair the effort. Instead, Steve Reed of Canada Soccer, Decio de Maria of the Mexican federation and Carlos Cordeiro, the new USSF president, will serve as co-chairs. Gulati will remain on the committee's board of directors.

The change apparently was inspired by Cordeiro's desire to become more visible in the effort to bring the World Cup back to the continent for the first time in 32 years and the need to sell the bid as something other than a U.S.-led effort.

The first reason is understandable and smart because it allows three co-chairs, with equal power, to join the well-connected Gulati in lobbying FIFA voters on behalf of the year-old United bid.

The second reason is worrisome because it suggests politics will be a major factor in determining who gets to host the tournament. Morocco is the only other country seeking the event. A vote on the competing proposals will be held June 13 during the FIFA congress in Moscow.

People close to the United Bid Committee confirmed last week that anti-U.S. sentiment is growing and many countries might use their World Cup vote to punish the country for the Trump administration's bellicose rhetoric toward developing countries as well as for the Justice Department's role in leading the investigation of FIFA corruption.

And though Trump will be out of office by 2026, for many countries the only chance they'll get to vote on his foreign policy will come in June.

It shouldn't be surprising, then, that the letter from the United Bid Committee emphasizes the group's "unified vision that transcends national borders and politics" and promises FIFA members the committee is "determined to listen to and learn from each of you."

"This is only really an extension of a reason that the joint bid was done in the first place," said Scott LeTellier, a Southern California attorney and one of the key members of the bid committee that brought the 1994 World Cup to the U.S.

"A fear of how a Trump presidency would be seen internationally is one of the key reasons that led to the decision in creating the United Bid Committee. And it only has become heightened by more international antipathy toward Trump."

There's more than national pride at stake. A Boston Consulting Group report said the World Cup could generate more than $5 billion in short-term economic activity and support 40,000 jobs across North America.

This shouldn't even be a contest. With the World Cup field expanding to 48 teams, the 2026 tournament will be the largest in history. And the North American countries are far better prepared to handle it.

The U.S., Mexico and Canada have combined to stage six World Cups, including the 1994 tournament, the most lucrative and best-attended in history. The biggest soccer event Morocco has hosted was this winter's 16-team African Nations Championship.

FIFA will require stadiums with at least 40,000 seats for all 80 matches of the 2026 competition. The U.S., which would play host to 60 of those matches, has 130 venues that size. Morocco, about as large as Texas, has six, none of them big enough to host the tournament opener or final.

It would take enormous investment for Morocco, which has shared few details about its fifth World Cup bid, to meet even the most modest FIFA standards.

NFL FREE AGENCY

Pace looking to move fast

Brad Biggs
On the Bears

If you're combing through what Ryan Pace said at the NFL scouting combine for clues to what the future holds for the Bears in free agency, zero in on his comments about the team's greatest offensive need — wide receiver.

"That's an area where you can get better quickly through free agency or the draft," the general manager said.

Then, keep in mind what he said about his prized acquisition from a year ago, quarterback Mitch Trubisky.

"I can sit back now and be happy we have a guy we feel good about — a young quarterback we want to build around." he said. "This is his team going forward."

Consider it proof the Bears are driven to surround Trubisky with talent that can help him succeed for new coach Matt Nagy a year after the team had one of the least productive receiving corps in the NFL. It's easy to play connect the dots for the Bears, who project to have more than $64 million in salary cap space when they release Mike Glennon after the new league year begins at 3 p.m. Wednesday.

The Bears can improve more rapidly through free agency than the draft. They have used two of their 20 draft picks the last three years on receivers and have gotten scant production from first-rounder Kevin White and seventh-rounder Daniel Braverman, who was released before last season.

The draft class might not have an option worth taking with the eighth overall pick and history shows draft picks can take awhile to develop at the position. But the Bears, who likely will tender an offer to restricted free agent receiver Cameron Meredith, can revamp their depth chart quickly when free agency opens and surely will be busy when the negotiating window, which permits teams to speak with agents, begins at 11 a.m. Monday. It's worth wondering if the team, which has been snubbed in pursuit of big-ticket cornerbacks the past two years, will be more aggressive with its offers.

No greater reminder of the pitfalls inherent with free agency is needed than the series of moves the team made recently, shedding unproductive previous signings. It's difficult to build a foundation for a roster in free agency and the Bears have reinforced that while Pace maintains they want to remain draft driven.

Allen Robinson of the Jaguars and Sammy Watkins of the Rams represent the most attractive potential free agents if they don't re-sign with their present teams. Robinson is coming off a torn ACL in his left knee suffered in Week 1 but it's believed he will be fully cleared by June and therefore will not need to start training camp on the physically unable to perform list.

The knee injury has to create at least some level of concern for Robinson, who produced 1,400 yards and 14 touchdowns playing with Blake Bortles in 2015. He's a big target — 6-foot-3, 211 pounds — who plays big and runs well. Robinson can challenge defensive backs on routes at all three levels of the defense and wins contested catches downfield.

Watkins would come healthy and is a speed merchant but he's less dimensional than Robinson. The Rams would like him back but opted to use their franchise tag on safety Lamarcus Joyner. Both wide receivers are only 24.

It's possible the Bears will target either Robinson or Watkins and look to pair their choice with Albert Wilson, the slot receiver from the Chiefs. Wilson would bring familiarity with the new offense and be an athletic upgrade over Kendall Wright.

MIKE EHRMANN/GETTY

The most productive target in the Chiefs' offense during Nagy's stay there was tight end Travis Kelce and the Bears need to replace their pass catcher at the position, Zach Miller. Someone will sign Trey Burton of the Eagles based on potential. Burton, best known for throwing a touchdown pass to Nick Foles in Super Bowl LII, had 60 catches for 575 yards and six touchdowns the last two years as the Eagles' third tight end. The Bears also could consider Seahawks tight end Jimmy Graham, who averaged less than 10 yards per catch last season for the first time in his career but remains a viable red zone target, something the Bears lack. Pace and director of player personnel Josh Lucas know him well from their time with the Saints.

The Bears need to consider a plan to replace left guard Josh Sitton but the belief is the club's primary focus is elsewhere — think wide receiver, cornerback and maybe tight end. Perhaps that changes but some believe they really would like to land Notre Dame guard Quenton Nelson with the No. 8 pick and if they pay good money to a free agent lineman, the chances of that happening would be reduced. They need other parts for the line, including a swing tackle, and eventually they will bring back some of their own free agents with Bradley Sowell a possibility for that role.

Pace indicated the Bears have interest in bringing back third quarterback Mark Sanchez but they could be in the market for another veteran at the position. Chase Daniel has experience with Nagy and Pace but he probably won't come cheap after the big deal he signed with the Eagles in 2016 that averaged $7 million per year. Daniel is not as athletic as Trubisky.

The Bears checked off their first order of business when they placed the transition tag on cornerback Kyle Fuller last week. The goal now is to sign him to a multi-year contract and then the Bears have to determine what to do opposite him and at the nickel position. Do they tender an offer to Bryce Callahan, who has had durability issues, or pursue a proven slot defender like Patrick Robinson? Some had linked them to former Seahawk Richard Sherman, who turns 30 later this month and played his final season at Stanford under defensive coordinator Vic Fangio, but Sherman agreed to a three-year, $39.15 million contract with the 49ers on Saturday.

They were No. 7 in the NFL in pass defense last season with Fuller and Prince Amukamara as primary starters and re-signing Amukamara figures at least to be a consideration. He knows the scheme, has good size and is strong in run support.

Outside linebacker is a key need too and it's worth wondering if they seek a reclamation project here. The marketplace is thin when it comes to proven and healthy options.

Pace has to continue the rebuild with players that fit what Nagy wants to do. Free agency hasn't been productive for the Bears but that doesn't mean their fortunes can't change this year when the goal will be to outfit Trubisky with players who can help the Bears score after they have ranked 29th, 28th and 23rd the last three seasons.

Not just a pretty face? Behind the scenes of 'Pretty Woman: The Musical'

By Chris Jones | Chicago Tribune

NEW YORK — In the mostly barren rehearsal room above 42nd Street, a large bed pulls the eye. What might transpire there, one wonders, as poised and beautiful men and women dance a seductive masquerade under the tutelage of a director who comprehends the symbiotic relationship of kinkiness and boots. The actors Steve Kazee and Samantha Barks move sensually through time and space and toward each other — and that bed — but not before you hear the unmistakable notes of Verdi's "La traviata."

If you happened to catch a Garry Marshall movie called "Pretty Woman" some 28 years ago — the one about a down-on-her-luck prostitute who attracts the attention of a bored, besuited businessman in search of an escort — you will know that the sequence is the one where he takes her to the opera. By plane. Just 'cause.

It's the scene where she wears a figure-hugging red dress — that dress, to hardcore "Pretty Woman" fans — accessorized with a $250,000 necklace on loan from her date. The scene where she realizes that life among the one-percentary really has much to recommend it over the old Hollywood Boulevard hustle.

You might recall a young Julia Roberts' eyes glistening in a way that would help make her career, or maybe her white-gloved hand gripping the edge of her opera box, or perhaps the impossibly boyish but emotionally unavailable Richard Gere offering up a sideways glance at his companion, which, apparently, was about all a male movie star needed to do on camera in 1990 to convey sufficient love interest to propel a movie to a worldwide gross of close to half a billion dollars. And, of course, to gain some company in that bed.

Luis Alberto Urrea's life seems like wild folk tale

By Christopher Borrelli
Chicago Tribune

Luis Alberto Urrea, whose name has the lofty ring of an artist you think you know but you can't place, and who has quietly built the kind of reputation that validates such feelings, is about to become, finally, arguably, after decades of books and trails of critical hosannas, a major figure. As in, a household name. That arguable part? It comes not so much from those already reading Urrea and more from the man himself: He looked into the bookshelves of his Naperville home and said that his new book, "The House of Broken Angels," a multigenerational saga about a Mexican-American family quite similar to his own, was his go-for-broke attempt to stand alongside his heroes. He nodded at Twain, he mumbled Steinbeck (whose work his veers closer to), then said that he would likely fail, but he wanted, for a moment, "to just exist in that same arena."

Inside the heart of a superhero

DAVID GIESBRECHT/NETFLIX

By Meredith Blake
Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — On the Upper East Side of Manhattan last summer, Jessica Jones was doing her thing.

The sardonic private detective played by Krysten Ritter was following a lead to a makeshift veterinary clinic and ended up in a verbal tiff with a snotty Goth staffer. The scene, which appears in the second season of "Marvel's Jessica Jones," involved no flying or feats of superhuman strength — just a few withering eye rolls, Jessica's weapon of choice.

Between takes, Ritter, clad in her character's version of armor — frayed blue jeans, a tank top and a leather jacket — laughed as she and director Jennifer Lynch contemplated what to have for lunch. No one fussed with Ritter's hair or makeup. For a series that made its much anticipated return to Netflix on Thursday, the effect was low-key; even the production name on the director's chairs and clapperboard was a discreet alias.

"Sometimes you forget it is a superhero show," says Ritter. "We don't do a ton of stunts, we don't do a ton of action. We spend so much time in Jessica's head and, in Season 2, in her heart. We keep her boots on the ground, and people gravitate and connect to her real-world problems."

When the series premiered in November 2015, the story of a prickly young woman with superhuman strength, a drinking problem and an acute case of PTSD resonated with viewers well beyond the Comic-Con crowd.

Created by "Twilight" screenwriter Melissa Rosenberg, "Jessica Jones" was praised for its depiction of its heroine, a survivor struggling to move on from a sexually and emotionally abusive relationship with the devious Kilgrave (David Tennant). A dashing but coercive sociopath, Kilgrave used his powers of mind control to turn tough-girl Jessica into a compliant sexual object. Without depicting rape on-screen, "Jessica Jones" tackled difficult subjects like consent and recovery, all while delivering the requisite genre thrills.

On location for the show at a working hospital, Eka Darville, who plays Jessica's drug-addicted friend Malcolm Ducasse, puts it memorably: The show is "a gritty, deeply analytical and poetic piece of storytelling that happens to be set against a backdrop where people can crush skulls with their hands."

"Jessica Jones" may be more relevant than ever, at a moment when the national conversation is focused on sexual abuse and harassment by powerful men. While she welcomes the conversations, Rosenberg says delivering a message was never the primary goal.

"We never started Season 1 with 'Here's the issues we want to attack.' " she says. "It was always, 'Here's this character, not defined by her gender, but informed by it. She has this encounter in her background with her assaulter, and that's part of the story.' I think that's why it played well, because it was really focused on a survivor versus the incident. That's how we always approach it: We're just telling stories for a character."

Inclusive upswell

"Jessica Jones" also returns at a moment when another Marvel adaptation, "Black Panther," is minting money at the box office, disproving long-held assumptions about black films and the appeal of inclusive superhero narratives.

"People didn't expect genre TV to tackle such a real-world problem in such a real-world way," says Jeph Loeb, head of television at Marvel Entertainment, citing the 2016 companion series "Marvel's Luke Cage," about a black superhero with bulletproof skin. The series felt more relevant with headlines about Black Lives Matter.

"Marvel works best when you take what's happening around us and you put it through the Marvel prism and it comes out as action-adventure that has characters who are developed, and issues that are relevant to people, but it doesn't feel like it's a soapbox," Loeb adds.

As Ritter recalls, the second season, directed entirely by women, was completed just days before the sexual misconduct scandal surrounding disgraced film mogul Harvey Weinstein broke. "I remember (costar) Carrie-Anne (Moss) and I texting each other at one point being like, this is so crazy that we did this story line," she says.

The timing is coincidental as Jessica continues to deal with the fallout from her entanglement with Kilgrave. Though now dead (she polished him off with a quick snap of the neck in the first-season finale), he continues to haunt her emotional life.

Survivor's struggle

Jessica finds herself falling "into a deeper, darker hole" as she struggles with the question, "Am I a murderer, or did I do the right thing?"

With help from best friend, child star turned radio host Trish Walker (Rachael Taylor), Jessica also probes her mysterious past in search of the truth about the origins of her superpowers.

Their close-knit yet complicated friendship, which endures through various failed romances and high-stakes investigations, is key to the story.

Relaxing in her trailer, Taylor praises Rosenberg's writing: "It's super enjoyable on the surface and dark, and then there's all these, kind of, subversive layers underneath."

She's particularly impressed by the drama's nuanced portraits of Jessica and Trish, imperfect women with often-messy lives. "There are a thousand notes to the way she comments on the female experience. ... She just lets it all exist."

Another critical part of "Jessica Jones'" appeal is Ritter, who blends palpable anguish with caustic wit.

"She has not only amazing dramatic chops, but she can also deliver a dry line," says Rosenberg, who views her lead actress as a full creative partner. "There can be some really dark storytelling, and you just always have to undercut it with levity, or it just becomes relentless. That was an absolutely essential factor in whoever was going to be our Jessica. Her performance has informed so much of our storytelling."

Ritter, an accomplished writer who published her debut novel "Bonfire" last year, says she and Rosenberg "have a very rare, unique, creative marriage that excites both of us endlessly. It's our relationship that allows the character to live and breathe as she does. I feel like we're co-owners. Jessica is half her, half me."

'Atlanta' actor Henry is on a roll

By Greg Braxton
Los Angeles Times

FREDERICK M. BROWN/GETTY

"To have this kind of breakout moment is fantastic."

— Brian Tyree Henry

Brian Tyree Henry has experienced a year in which he was featured in one of TV's hottest comedies (FX's "Atlanta"); earned an Emmy nomination for his work on one of TV's hottest dramas ("This Is Us"); worked on several films with a roster of top names, including Oscar winners Viola Davis, Jodie Foster and director Steve McQueen (who made "12 Years a Slave"); and is bound for the Broadway production "Lobby Hero," by acclaimed writer Kenneth Lonergan ("Manchester by the Sea").

"I've been doing this for 11 years, and to have this kind of breakout moment is fantastic," says Henry, who first made a splash originating the role of "The General" in the Broadway musical "The Book of Mormon." "I don't even want to call it a moment because I want it to last."

He's particularly pumped about "Atlanta," the series created and produced by Donald Glover about two cousins maneuvering awkwardly through the city's hip-hop music scene. Henry earned raves for his performance as rough-edged rapper Alfred "Paper Boi" Miles, who is armed with both a withering glare and a pistol.

The first season drew widespread critical raves and scored two major Emmy wins — lead actor and director for a comedy for Glover — as well as a nomination for outstanding comedy.

A key storyline in the first season revolved around Paper Boi's grassroots success. His celebrity factor was bolstered by street cred due to his involvement in a shooting. Seeing an opportunity to make money, his hapless cousin Earn (Glover), a Princeton dropout bordering on homelessness, becomes his manager.

In person, Henry is considerably more approachable and good-humored than his often ill-tempered, weed-smoking alter ego.

"When I first read the script and saw who Alfred was, I fell in love with him," says Henry, who graduated from Morehouse College and received his MFA from the Yale School of Drama. "I immediately knew who this guy is. He's like every cousin I have, like every best friend I still have. ... I also want to make sure I do him justice."

In a nod to the increase in robberies around the Christmas holidays when people are purchasing gifts, Season 2 has been dubbed "Atlanta: Robbin' Season," which exposes Paper Boi to the double-edged blade of celebrity.

Glover offers high praise for his co-star's performance. "I can't think of anyone who could have done as good a job as Brian has," Glover says. "He really brings a lot of humanity to this character. He can balance being intimidating and also being sweet and precious."

A masterpiece of Italian literature

By Joe Gray
Chicago Tribune

Editor's note: We asked Tribune writers to reflect on a piece of the larger cultural puzzle (a popular TV show, a movie, a book, etc.) they were missing — until now.

The book sat in the bookcase for years, maybe 10, even getting moved about a few times during reorganizations and culling. But it was never cut. I always thought I would read it, someday. And felt that familiar prick of guilt, the one that has touched all of us, each time I slipped the slim paperback onto the shelf again.

"The Leopard" by Giuseppe di Lampedusa is a masterpiece of Italian literature. "You'll love it," assured the friend who gave it to me, well aware of my love for all things Italian — from food to culture to history. She was right.

Published in 1958, the book opens nearly 100 years earlier and tells the story of Don Fabrizio, a Sicilian prince, as he struggles with the changes coming when Giuseppe Garibaldi lands on the island with 1,000 troops, the beginning of a campaign to unify the Italian peninsula. Fabrizio, head of a generations-old Sicilian noble family, sees in this Risorgimento, as the movement was known, the end of the ways for the ruling class.

Though I enjoy historical novels, I spurned the book for years, fearing its dense, formal prose. Picking it up for this challenge, the florid 19th century style proved such a slog that I became confused again and again, rereading sentences several times — I had to start the book over after 20 pages.

But then, quickly, I was hooked, mostly because of Don Fabrizio, this cynical prince struggling with thoughts of his mortality as he sees his way of life slipping away. Why didn't I read this before, I asked myself. "The Leopard" brings into focus blurry images I had about the Italian unification and the conflicting passions it stirred. Lampedusa, himself the last prince of a Sicilian family, based Fabrizio on his great-grandfather, writing the book, his first, at the end of his life, dying before it found a publisher. He left a fascinating historical portrait that peeks inside the Sicilian heart and the mind of all classes, from peasant to clergy to nobility.

Indeed, there's much to mine here, making it worthy of re-reading — ironic given that I waited so long to dive in.

'Ape' gets free rein to terrorize gala

By Sonaiya Kelley
Los Angeles Times

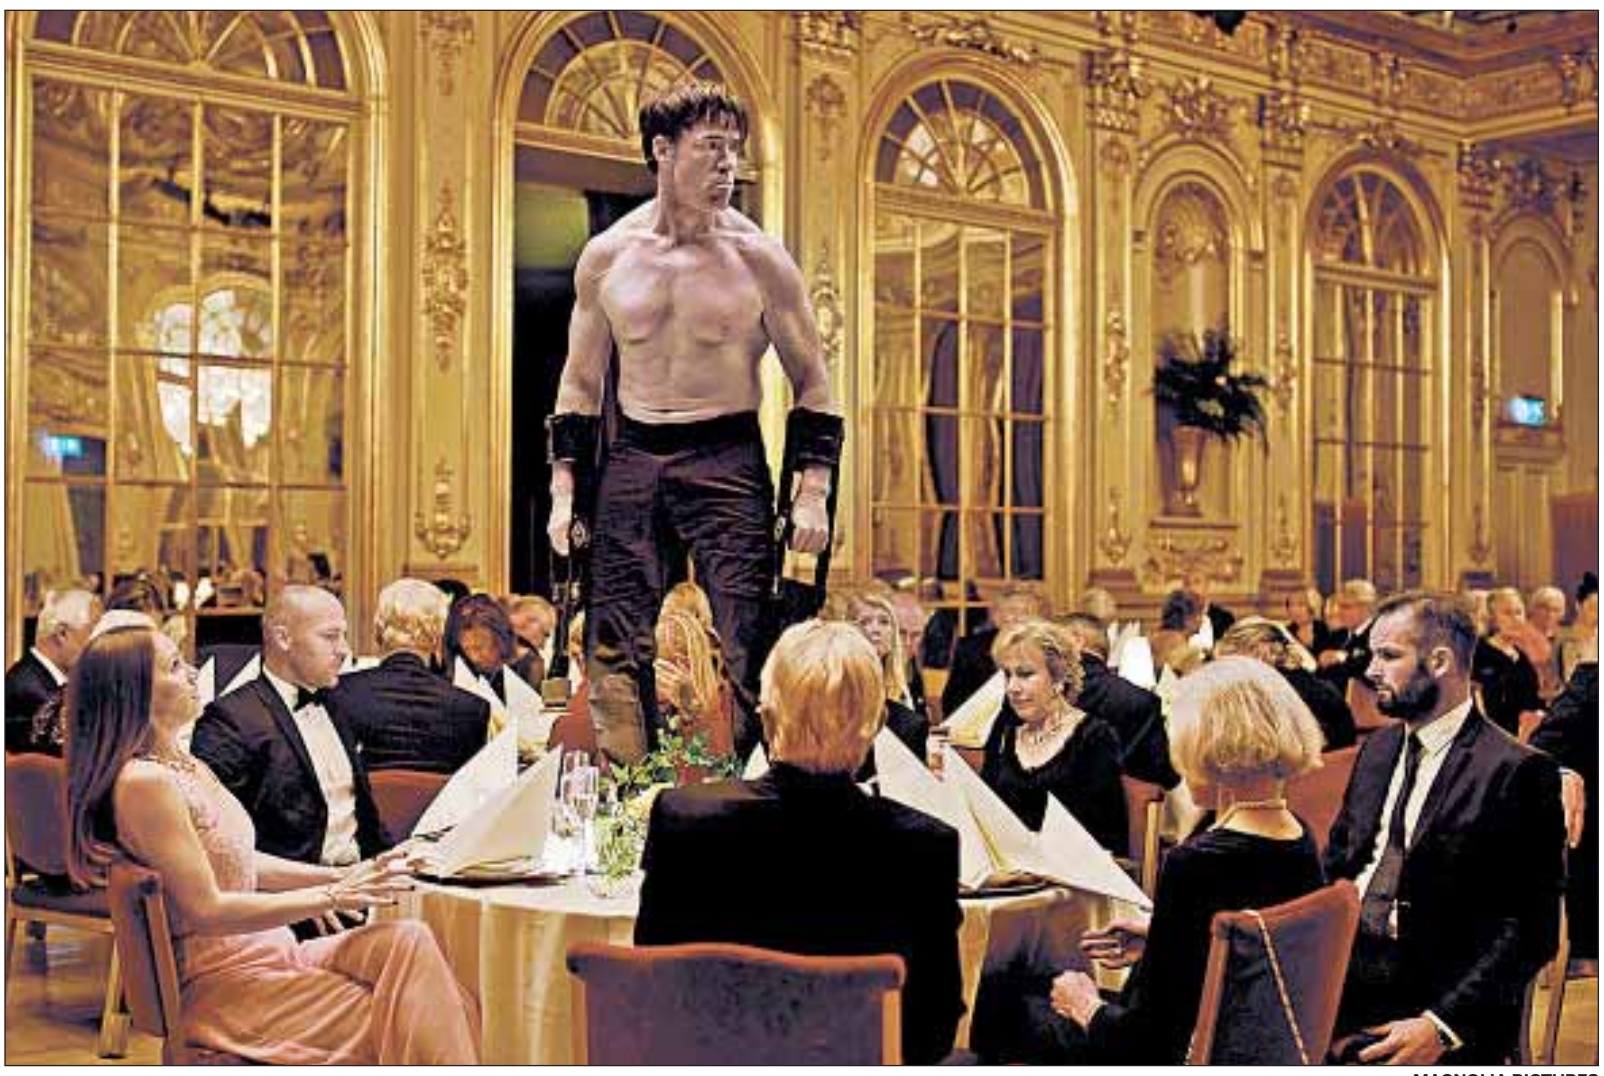
If you've seen Ruben Ostlund's wonderfully abstract sendup of the art world "The Square," which was nominated for a foreign language Oscar, one scene stands out. It takes place at a formal dinner gala full of billionaire museum donors, with an atmosphere of quiet desperation and a shirtless man impersonating an ape.

"Ruben called me up and said, 'I want you to come in and be a movement artist and an ape impersonator and terrorize this group of donors at this very fancy gala,' " says actor and movement coach Terry Notary, who plays performance artist Oleg in the film. "And I'm like, 'That sounds fun. That sounds like a challenge. Let's do it!' "

On set, the motion-capture actor and teacher was given relatively free rein. After all, playing an ape wasn't new territory for Notary. In addition to his work on "How the Grinch Stole Christmas," "Suicide Squad," "Avatar," "The Hobbit" films and more, he played displaced alpha chimp Rocket in the "Planet of the Apes" reboots and the ultimate great ape in "Kong: Skull Island."

Even so, there was an element of uncertainty Notary had to deal with in "The Square," mostly by design. He knew that the scene would last between eight and 12 minutes and wouldn't include any dialogue. But, Notary admits, "We didn't really know what we were going to do when we got there. There was an empty room with a bunch of tables, and the next day there were going to be 300 extras in there."

Ostlund wanted to rehearse a few takes in the empty room, but Notary had other ideas.



MAGNOLIA PICTURES

"I thought, 'You know what? We have to wait until the extras get here because I'm going to react to them. I'm not going to tell them what to do; their reactions are going to govern how I play the scene,' " he says.

But about those extras — Ostlund had his own surprise for Notary.

"He didn't tell me that all the people in the room were actual billionaire donors, gallery owners, artists and very well-to-do bourgeois art scene people," Notary says with a laugh. "It was only after the third (and final) day of shooting (that he told me)."

Once the extras arrived on set, Notary tried to elicit authentic reactions by keeping his plans organic.

"I didn't want to go in knowing, 'I'm going to do this to this person and that to that person,' " he says. "I wanted to go to all the people that didn't want to be picked. Because there were some people that would come up to me in the scene and go, 'Hey, pick me, we'll do a little fight if you want.' And I thought, 'Hmm, no, I'm not going to pick you. I'm going to pick that lady over there that doesn't want to be picked. She's been looking away from me all day.' Because then you get the real reactions, the real tension."

After sizing up the extras, he began to formulate a course of action in his head.

"I knew that I wanted to win their hearts in the beginning," he says. "And then gang up on the alpha male in the room, kick the alpha male out, become the alpha and then turn on everyone else who ganged up on him with me and say, 'OK, who's next? Now it's time to teach you what it feels like to be bullied or to be scared.' "

In the scene, Notary's character Oleg quickly identifies the alpha as a fellow artist named Julian, played by Dominic West.

"So Dominic — I'd never met him before," Notary says. "We did that take twice, and they chose the second take. The first take, when he went up the balcony, he actually picked up a vase full of flowers and water and threw it at me. And it shattered all over the stage, and I thought, 'That's got to be in the movie, that's going to be the one.' But (Ostlund) didn't pick it, and I was surprised because I thought it was a better take."

With the alpha taken care of, Oleg goes on to terrorize the rest of the guests to disastrous results for the gala.

"Ruben said, 'Why don't you take over, start pointing out how weak everyone is and then breed with the prettiest girl in the room?' " Notary says with a laugh. "And I was like 'Oh boy, OK. Now we're going to the next level.' "

The scene — which the camera lingers on unflinchingly — unfolds with such palpable discomfort and mounting tension that it feels even longer than its 12 minutes.

"The little story became its own mini three-part movie within a movie," Notary says. "It felt like a little tiny short within the film." That, the movement artist says, is part of the genius of Ostlund.

"One of the great things about Ruben is that he really lets things play out in real time, and he lets tense moments unfold as they would rather than trying to rush them and cut in quicker bites and pieces," Notary says. "He doesn't try to tell the story with too many camera angles. He just allows the moment to play out, and you sort of watch as a spectator."

ELMHURST HISTORY MUSEUM

ED WAGNER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 1979

PHIL VELASQUEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2011

WLUP was sold to Educational Media Foundation, a Christian broadcasting company, last week.

There's at least a double album and maybe even a box set of nostalgia in Chicago right now for "The Loop," the classic-rock radio station at 97.9 FM whose new owners were set to switch it over to a Christian format Saturday.

Out will be The Who, and in will be You Know Who. Out: Queen. In: Somebody even higher up on life's org chart. In this transition, all the cross imagery employed by the likes of Ozzy Osbourne, a Loop playlist stalwart, was merely foreshadowing.

But WLUP-FM, let's face it, hasn't really been The Loop of lore for a couple of decades. The people mourning its impending disappearance are mourning the memory of something past.

And to say so is not a vote of encouragement for the K-LOVE format (subtitle: "Positive & Encouraging") that new owners the Educational Media Foundation plan to promulgate via the 50,000-watt outlet, according to local media reporter Robert Feder, who broke the news of the sale this week.

You can acknowledge that The Loop of 2018 won't be that great of a loss without simultaneously rolling out the red carpet for such artists as the Afters, Third Day and Sidewalk Prophets. (Some others on the K-LOVE playlist: MercyMe, NEEDTOBREATHE, Chris and Conrad.)

My fascination with Christian rock band names aside, what Chicago is losing is not the maverick radio station that pushed the boundaries of taste and the strictures of format, the one whose listeners asserted their anarchic will, at the 1979 event known as "Disco Demolition," over no less an American institution than Major League Baseball.

That station was an oasis of free-form conversation, practically an entire lineup chasing the improvisational talk format pioneered by Howard Stern and by Steve Dahl and longtime partner Garry Meier. It drove station executives nuts, as deejays ignored commercial breaks in the quest for comic gold. Sometimes it drove listeners nuts.

But it was real, it was local, it was deeply personal, and it was specific, and when the peaks came, they were so much higher than anything else you could hear on the radio. It was also a perfect fit in the city where improv comedy was invented. (The music, in this format, was mostly just leavening, sort of a bass line to the station that kept the beat going while the singers made up lyrics.)

But that little Brigadoon had disappeared by the mid-1990s. Steve and Garry broke up, and Steve went over to an AM station. Jonathon Brandmeier, one of the few determinedly wacky morning guys who had genuine spark to him, left the station.

In the years since, most serious music listening has migrated to the digital space. And people who yearn for that old 'LUP format — which the radio industry, in its inimitable, benumbing fashion, reduced to the label "Hot Talk" — can find it amid the approximately 4,000 contemporary podcasts featuring comedians talking with their friends. Or they can tune in to WLS-AM weekday afternoons, where Dahl continues to chase the conversational moment.

The Loop of today (that is, The Loop of last week, and of last year) is the radio equivalent of a cover band, yet another station that's been squeezing the final pennies out of the biggest songs by the biggest bands of the 40-years-past album-rock era, a slavishly conservative format known as "classic rock."

Unofficial motto (and imagine the big radio announcer voice here): All the hits you've already heard thousands of times, played in a slightly different order today than yesterday! Rock hits of the '70s, but not far beyond — today!

Tuesday was the last day that the station asked one of its deejays to do an on-air shift. It was playing classic rock without personalities — metaphor alert — until this weekend's enlightenment.

Here's a sampling of the playlist from a 45-minute stretch on Tuesday: "Sympathy for the Devil," Rolling Stones; "Sweet Emotion," Aerosmith; "Baba O'Riley," The Who; "Rock and Roll," Led Zeppelin; "Comfortably Numb," Pink Floyd.

Presented with a phalanx of warhorses like that, you can be forgiven for thinking there must be a glue factory not far down the road. An analogy: A station with such antiquarian tendencies, in the 1970s, would have been playing all Benny Goodman and Tommy Dorsey. Comfortably numb, indeed.

Don't get me wrong. Each one of those is a great song and a classic for a reason. I give The Loop's principal (and still kicking!) competitor in the classic-rock space, WDRV-FM 97.1, a button on my car radio because sometimes nothing sounds better than the cowbell and then those first fat chords of "Honky Tonk Woman." (And because I need to make sure, as a responsible parent, that my kids know the Stones from Led Zep and that Pink Floyd was a band, not a guy.)

But when an enterprise exists entirely to serve the nostalgic impulse, it becomes the cultural equivalent of a tar pit. And that's a huge contrast to the real Loop, the adventuresome Loop, the one that we should have been missing and mourning not only this week but for years now.

Luis Urrea is going for broke

Luis Alberto Urrea shares family stories that inspired his book "The House of Broken Angels" at Sulzer Library in Chicago's Lincoln Square neighborhood.

When John Alba Cutler started teaching Latino literature at Northwestern University 10 years ago, his classes were full of students who hadn't actually read much Latino literature. "I would maybe get a student who read 'House on Mango Street' and that was it for familiarity with Latino literature," he said. "Now the majority have read Sandra Cisneros, Junot Diaz, Luis Urrea. They've laid groundwork. And Urrea, he's crossing over with a wider appeal, outside Latino classrooms. There's a proliferation of fiction about the U.S.-Mexico border, but he sits at the top."

The problem is, where do you begin with this guy?

With the sprawling historical fiction? Or the journalism, poetry, memoirs? The ballet? Worse, in telling Urrea's own story, where do you start? And stop? A day earlier, in a studio at WBEZ-FM on Navy Pier, Urrea was taping the NPR show "Fresh Air," and host Terry Gross, whose cool, soft voice came through headphones from her studio in Philadelphia, sounded exasperated with their limited time. They had talked for 90 minutes (which would be edited later into an hourlong interview) and the moment they were finished, off the air, Gross blurted: "Oh, your life has just been too eventful!"

Indeed, the story of Luis Alberto Urrea itself has a whiff of folk tale. He is a lot like his best-sellers, an epic mix of ancient and contemporary, a touch of magic realism here, a chunk of painful reality there, yet approachable, warm, not prone to literary pretense. (The Chinese-American family novels of Amy Tan, a friend of Urrea, is a fair approximation.) His Mexico, similarly, is not the monolith of political rhetoric, but generationally and ethnically diverse. Urrea himself has blond hair, blue eyes — his grandmother was named Guadalupe Murray. He speaks in conspiratorial tones, as if — despite a story crammed with incident and anecdote — there is always more left unsaid.

With good reason, his first books, which he has called "The Border Trilogy," were memoirs, stories of his own life growing up on the border. There is too much history here, funny, scary, random: His father, beloved in the Mexican government, had the license plate "MEXICO 2." As a child, Urrea had teeth drilled without Novocaine as a dentist swore in his face. He once took science fiction legend Ursula K. Le Guin to see "Star Wars." He had an aunt who became the national bowling champion of Mexico. He cleaned toilets for a living, made doughnuts, was a cartoonist for a nudie rag.

And on and on.

A friend of Urrea calls him "The Stuffer." Even success arrives in a pig pile. Walking to their car after the "Fresh Air" interview, his wife, Cindy, an investigative journalist, turned to Urrea: "The thing is, you wait your whole life for the kind of attention you're getting now, for everything to happen, and everything happens at once, in a mad rush." Urrea sighed. Once in the car, he perked up: Their oldest child was leaving for college soon!

Cindy: "Nothing ties us to Naperville!"

Urrea: "We're free!"

Then, like that final scene in "The Graduate," after Dustin Hoffman and Katharine Ross escape a wedding only to find themselves in the back of a silent bus, exhilaration faded back to reality. The car went quiet. Interview requests were piling up, a long book tour was starting. It had been the second time in as many days Urrea taped an NPR show. TNT was developing a TV series based on his 2009 novel "Into the Beautiful North," about a Mexican woman, inspired by "The Magnificent Seven," who sets out to protect her village from banditos; the book itself, selected in 2016 by the National Endowment for the Arts as its nationwide Big Read, already kept Urrea on an never-ending tour. And now the publisher Little, Brown was throwing its marketing weight behind "House of Broken Angels."

"It's dizzying," Urrea said.

Even as they arrived earlier that day at WBEZ, the room already buzzed. Cindy, who acts as a kind of de facto manager/researcher for her husband, was steamed at The New York Times: Urrea had written an op-ed about the wall that President Donald Trump wants to build, now weeks later, "now, suddenly, as he's about to go on Terry Gross, they need changes, and links to sources, right now, right now, and sorry but no — not right now."

Urrea just smiled.

He soaked in the hubbub. He settled into a chair at the soundboard, and when Gross came on, he brightened. He thanked her (off the air) for buying him a beach house — a "Fresh Air" interview is a publishing holy grail. Gross said if she asked anything too personal, let her know; but it's all in his books already. She said if he made a mistake, start again; yet he's so used to telling his story, he never fumbled.

Midway through the chat, Gross herself stopped: There was a wind tunnel in her studio, and a door swung open — hold a second. Headphones went silent as she shut the door.

Urrea leaned back.

"The ghosts of my ancestors," he said.

"The Devil's Highway," his disturbing, humane 2004 nonfiction account of the struggle for survival among 26 men crossing the border in 2001, a Pulitzer finalist (and his biggest seller so far), is headed into a 23rd printing. But most of his novels — and much of his work — addresses the relationship of working-class Mexicans with borders, real and metaphorical. "Luis has a million impulses co-existing, a constant awareness of possibilities, which is part of having lived on the border," said Steven Schick, music director of the La Jolla Symphony in San Diego; last month, they collaborated on a reworking of Stravinsky's "Soldier's Tale," using Urea's writing to tell "a story of people who cross the border daily." Even "House of Broken Angels" — set in San Diego, and not a border tale — is full of characters marked by it, including a U.S. veteran without citizenship.

It was only "eerie coincidence" the book was released the day after the Trump administration had planned to rescind the DACA program for young immigrants brought to the country without legal permission, said Ben George, senior editor at Little, Brown. "But I do think because of this administration, there is an urgency, so it's become the right moment for the book."

Urrea was born in Tijuana in 1955, into severe poverty.

His father, a personal assistant to the vice president of Mexico, and a military man, had fallen from favor; Urrea says his father refused to assassinate someone. His mother, a Staten Island native, served in the Red Cross during World War II; she took part in the Battle of the Bulge and returned with post-traumatic stress disorder and severe injuries. Her family owned an antique store in Manhattan; Albert Einstein was a regular. The Mexican side was stranger: Urrea had a spiritualist grandfather, and a great aunt, Teresita Urrea, "the Saint of Cabora," "the Mexican Joan of Arc," celebrated for her supposedly healing powers; she became the basis for his 2005 best-seller "The Hummingbird's Daughter."

His parents met and married in San Francisco. "My dad looked like Errol Flynn, and I think my mom thought she was moving into a hacienda," Urrea said, "but they lived on a dirt street in Tijuana, a house jammed with relatives, nobody speaking English, she didn't know a word of Spanish. She grew up well and was appalled and humiliated, terrified of anyone ethnic." They moved to San Diego in the late '50s, to treat Urrea for tuberculous. The family stayed and lived in the barrios, where he grew up "the mixed-race kid, the oddball," according to the best-selling author Jamie Ford, a close friend.

Urrea describes a neighborhood where pets were casually preyed on by street gangs, and where he once took a brass-knuckled kidney punch walking home from school. His parents were unhappy, financially strapped. Luis withdrew into monster movies, ghost stories and books. "I was torn between the Americanness my mom wanted for me and the Mexicanness my father wanted — they were wrestling for cultural influence over me."

He was an arty kid, headed for the University of California at San Diego, but things got worse: Before he graduated, his father drove to Mexico to withdraw $1,000 saved in a bank there (like many immigrants, he regularly sent money to his extended family). The money was a graduation present. But on the trip home, he was killed by Mexican police. Urrea — who says details remain "nebulous" — was sent to retrieve the body. The police, expecting a bribe, forced him to buy back the corpse. He did, using the $1,000 his father was carrying.

Later, police sent the family a bill for damages caused to the road when they ran his father off the road.

The unexpected did not cease: He went to college as a theater major and found himself working as an extra for months on "The Stunt Man" with Peter O'Toole, now a cult classic; director Richard Rush had heard of his father's death and kept the young Urrea on the payroll. Later, his writing had attracted the attention of Le Guin, then a visiting scholar at UCSD (she died in January at 88); she included his work in an anthology, and his career began.

But first he worked as a missionary in the dumps of Tijuana, where entire neighborhoods resided. "I was looking for something to alleviate the darkness in my family," Urrea said. He met a pastor who brought him to an orphanage near his grandmother's home in Tijuana. "The pastor would seduce kids with doughnuts and chocolate milk then hit them with Bible study, and I was having a personal religious resurgence. There's this little girl on the floor at my side who looked related to me. I mean, could be — my family are copulating fools. This girl, she's tough. Her name is America. Seriously. She begs me not to leave, said nobody spoke Tijuana Spanish in the orphanage like I did. I told her I'd return, and the pastor's waiting for me outside: 'Don't lie to my kids. That girl will wait years for you, wondering the whole time what she did wrong when you never show.' " So, he ended up staying in the dumps, on and off, from the late 1970s until 1987, translating, washing feet, combating lice.

And from there? He taught at Harvard.

Urrea says he contacted Lowry Pei, a former UCSD professor who was working at the Ivy League school, and begged for a janitorial job, anything to get out of the Tijuana dumps. Pei told him to send published work, so Urrea told friends that even janitors at Harvard need to be published. He says he misunderstood. Pei, now an English professor at Simmons College, says "Some of Luis' stories are hard to believe, and I don't remember if that story is true, but he did call, he was out of prospects — 'You got to help, I got to get out.' "

Today, decades later, Urrea lives in Naperville, on a middle-class street, minivan in the driveway, a house full of folk art; a statue of Bigfoot, purchased from SkyMall, occupies the living room. He has three kids (his son, Eric, is the drummer in the indie rock band Marina City) and pets. He has a spotty scruff, and a barrel chest. He wears "Hamilton" sweatshirts.

He is an image of suburban contentment.

Then he plops on a couch to listen to himself on "Fresh Air." Gross describes him as a "distinguished" professor, and Urrea, in his living room, pumps a fist. He says, proudly, "That's actually part of my title — 'distinguished.' "

He sounds genuinely surprised, still.

He moved to Chicago in the late '90s, to teach creative writing at the University of Illinois at Chicago. Now he's tenured. He counts literary stars (Neil Gaiman) and rock bands (Wilco, Los Lobos) as friends. Author Dave Eggers says Urrea gained a reputation as "one of our most important American public intellectuals," the kind of all-purpose man-of-letters "who can bring both humor and gravitas to any proceeding, who can explain the relationship between Mexico and the U.S. in all its tragedy and beauty."

But Urrea himself sounds restless.

He says "House of Broken Angels" — largely inspired by an older brother who, before he died of cancer, had a vast, melancholy birthday party in his final days — will be his "farewell to the border." His next book is inspired by his mother's Red Cross service. "Luis chafes at being placed in an ethnic box," Cindy said. "He wants to pull people up, but everyone wants him to be their Mexican, explain Mexico, the border, and Luis — Luis just wants to be Mark Twain."

He's a draw to the English department, but "still feels like an outsider," said David Schaafsma, an English professor at the school, "always the kid from the dirt road with no plumbing." Indeed, the school, said department chair Lisa Freeman, is mostly populated by Pell Grant recipients, many are first-generation college students, like Urrea. Besides, Cindy tells him he has a Jesus complex. He doesn't disagree. In a writing class the other day, a student said she didn't want to get too revealing.

He said she was not obligated to.

But then, lightly pressing, he said writing can exorcise the past. He told her he named his personal demon Mr. Smith, after a vile manager he once had. "Mr. Smith stands too close and cusses you out. He's the voice saying you're talentless, your voice is shrill, you're poor and screwed up."

The student's eyes moistened in relief.

Sometimes, he told her, your writing will be a moral act. "Remember that. People will take umbrage with that, but so? Writing is outreach, and writing — it can be your ministry."

WATCH THIS: SUNDAY

Jack Cutmore-Scott

"Deception" (9:01 p.m., ABC): Magic is very much on the menu in this new drama series, as Jack Cutmore-Scott ("Cooper Barrett's Guide to Surviving Life") plays a superstar illusionist who has a major fall from grace. He then uses his skills to help FBI agents (Amaury Nolasco, Laila Robins) capture particularly evasive criminals. Vinnie Jones and Lenora Crichlow also star in the show, created by Chris Fedak ("Chuck") and also including Greg Berlanti and Martin Gero ("Blindspot") among its executive producers.

"American Idol" (7 p.m., ABC): What's not-so-new is new again as this search for the next singing star switches networks after a two-year absence from television. Luke Bryan, Katy Perry and Lionel Richie form the new judging panel as Ryan Seacrest returns to host, again starting the process with auditions from cities around the country. Another episode airs Monday.

"2018 iHeartRadio Music Awards" (7 p.m., 9 p.m., TNT): DJ Khaled and Hailey Baldwin host this annual ceremony honoring fan favorites from the past year in music from The Forum in Inglewood, Calif. Performers during the special, which also is simulcast on TBS and TruTV, include Camila Cabello, Ed Sheeran, Cardi B, Charlie Puth, Maroon 5 and Backstreet Boys. Song of the Year nominees include "Despacito" (Luis Fonsi and Daddy Yankee with Justin Bieber), "Shape of You" (Sheeran), "Something Just Like This" and "That's What I Like" (Bruno Mars).

"Kingpin" (8 p.m., History): Each episode of this new four-part documentary miniseries takes viewers inside the heart of a different organized crime organization, starting with the saga of Whitey Bulger, the cunning Boston thug who took advantage of a local power vacuum during the 1970s to scheme and kill his way up the Beantown ranks. Ultimately, he became the most famous gangster in his city's history, leaving behind a unified Boston Irish mob.

"Ash vs Evil Dead" (8 p.m., 9:30 p.m., Starz): The evil Ruby (Lucy Lawless) finally reveals herself to Ash (Bruce Campbell) as she continues try to solidify her bond with Brandy (Arielle Carver-O'Neill) as part of her scheme to destroy the Prophesied One in the new episode "Father's Day." Elsewhere, Pablo and Dalton (Ray Santiago, Lindsay Farris) just keep sparring as the two men continue to size each other up.

"Timeless" (9 p.m., NBC): There's a very particular story to this fantasy-drama's return for a second season, which begins with "The War to End All Wars," since it was canceled and then — thanks in large part to an outcry from fans — "uncanceled." Abigail Spencer, Matt Lanter and Malcolm Barrett return as the trio who literally race across time ... in the case of this episode, to World War I, where Marie Curie (guest star Kim Bubbs) is enlisted to help save a wounded American soldier who is Lucy's (Spencer) great-grandfather.

"The Royals" (9:01 p.m., E!): Season 4 of the soapy royal melodrama picks up the action with the new "How Prodigal the Soul," which finds the duplicitous Prince Robert (Max Brown) now king of England. The recently dethroned Cyrus (Jake Maskall) finds an unlikely but willing ally in his nephew, Prince Liam, and they begin conspiring against their common foe. As Queen Helena seeks her own place in the royal regime, she struggles to keep her unruly brood in line.

Horoscopes

Today's birthday (March 11): Exploratory ventures reap fascinating and profitable results this year. Strengthen team bonds. You can find the money. Summer passion and fun cool down into a retrospective planning period before the action picks up. Community efforts flourish over winter. Pull together.

Aries (March 21-April 19): 8. Keep things practical and professional. Don't argue with a brick wall. Listen to a critic who might be right. Good news comes from far away.

Taurus (April 20-May 20): 7. Circumstances shift. An old method doesn't work in a new situation. Distant connections share a clue. Study the conditions, and do the homework.

Gemini (May 21-June 20): 7. Stay frugal to meet a deadline. Simple ingredients can make satisfying grub. Something that worked before doesn't now. Cut frills and elaborations.

Cancer (June 21-July 22): 7. Keep your patience even when someone else doesn't. Creativity is required to solve a problem with a partner. Provide motivation for powerful action.

Leo (July 23-Aug. 22): 8. The action is behind the scenes, and there's plenty. Make the moves you've been practicing. Ask a coach for feedback. You're gaining points.

Virgo (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): 8. You don't need to discuss much. Handle practical logistics before playing the game. Pursue familiar and relaxing activities with loved ones.

Libra (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): 6. Home and family require your attention. Make repairs, and clean up a mess. Hold back your criticism. Postpone a financial discussion. Sink into coziness.

Scorpio (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): 6. Accept a creative challenge. Make sure you know what's required. Use reliable methods and techniques. Gather information, and organize it into a clear summary.

Sagittarius (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): 8. Pay attention to cash flow to minimize leakage. You're getting the hang of this. Monitor the budget and shave unnecessary expenses to make envisioned improvements.

Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): 8. Your past work speaks well for you. Your positive attitude and optimism are especially persuasive. Get advice and then make your own personal choices.

Aquarius (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): 6. Don't take on too much. Slow down and recharge your energy. Step away from controversy or conflict. Success comes through diversity. Listen and reflect.

Pisces (Feb. 19-March 20): 7. Advance with help from your friends. Inspire others through your example. Together, you can move mountains. Stick to tested routines and tricks.

Canadian rock star and songwriter whose ballads (such as "Heaven," "Run to You" and "Here I Am") have, for more than three decades, dominated the nighttime playlists of all the LITE-FM, WARM-FM, WISH-FM outposts in the elastic music category known as adult contemporary.

Adams (usually with compositions co-written with his longtime songwriting partner Jim Vallance) has sold more than 75 million records over a career of remarkable longevity (he still sells out arenas, especially in Britain, where he lives). His hit "(Everything I Do) I Do it For You," written for the Kevin Costner film "Robin Hood: Prince of Thieves," sat atop the U.K. charts for a whopping 16 weeks in 1991. That's longer than the initial release of Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody."

"Darlin' you look beautiful tonight," Kazee sings, on this chilly February morning, partly recalling the Glen Hansard and Marketa Irglova music he sang with such emotional resonance in the musical "Once," but with his formidable voice also sounding soft-rock-vulnerable-gritty, not unlike Adams himself. "I can't remember ever seeing anything so right."

By now, Kazee, a kinder, gentler and inarguably sexier version of Gere, is looking right in the eyes of Barks, whose emotional fullness was very much on display in the movie version of "Les Miserables" (she played the tragic waif Eponine). Kazee, an actor known for prizing authenticity, does not traffic in Gere-like sideways glances. He's in all the way.

"In the magic of the moment, yeah" he sings, "There's no place I'd rather be/ I see the wonder of the world through your eyes/ To have you here beside me/ Makes me realize ev'rything is different, yeah/ Everything has changed inside of me."

There is an a-ha! moment at the end of that last line. "Pretty Woman" movie fans will recall that nothing much changed inside of Gere's Edward Lewis.

But that was 1990. That wouldn't work now.

"Pretty Woman: The Musical" will have a five-week run at the Oriental Theatre in Chicago before heading to Broadway.

Consider, for a moment, how carefully the needle must be threaded to craft "Pretty Woman: The Musical." The show begins preview performances this week at the Oriental Theatre for its pre-Broadway engagement in Chicago, following in the preferred path of such past Jerry Mitchell hits and hopefuls as "Kinky Boots," "On Your Feet!" and "Gotta Dance" (now retitled as "Half Time"). The show can't be seen to be poking fun at prostitutes, nor can it be seen to be objectifying them, and certainly not shaming them. (The movie, inarguably, did all three of those things in service of its comedy, but then the times were different, as that $500 million gross would attest).

On the other hand, a Broadway musical that pushes too far or too crudely into the R-rated, realistic world of sex work on the urban street is courting box-office disaster with the core demographic here, which, given the age and legacy of the movie, is suburban women over 40 years old (luckily, a demographic that buys the majority of tickets to Broadway musicals). These longtime fans of the film might well want to introduce the blockbuster movie they loved in their youth to their teenage daughters. And this is, after all, supposed to be a romantic love story with sexy power ballads by Adams and Vallance, the very rare original cast recording that might get played in the bedroom. By contrast, most millennial progressives will have to get past the film's history before they enter their debit card numbers. And no one from any demographic will be going in expecting HBO's "The Deuce." That is not the "Pretty Woman" franchise, and, let the record show, it is a massive franchise.

"This was the hottest script at the time," says J.F. Lawton, the highly successful screenwriter who wrote "Pretty Woman." "Every actress in Hollywood wanted to play that role."

At the time he wrote the film, Lawton was living in the part of Hollywood known for its streetwalkers. "I'd walk past them every day," he says, after coming in from 42nd Street. "I'd run into them in the doughnut shop. They used to hang out in the doughnut shop. A lot of the girls were from the Rust Belt; they had fathers who had lost their jobs after the factories closed and then would drift into alcoholism. So their daughters would head to Hollywood to try and get away from that world, and they'd end up in the doughnut shop. At the time, corporate raiders were big in the news, junk-bond guys were taking over companies. So, I thought, what if you created a story about two very different people affected by all this change."

At the time, Disney was looking for another vehicle for director Marshall, who had just made "Beaches," a huge hit. The initial script was gritty indeed: The weird title was "3,000," the Roberts character of Vivian Ward was a drug addict and although she fell in love with Edward, Edward certainly did not fall in love with her. But "3,000" was retooled as a romantic comedy and retitled "Pretty Woman," all basically at the bidding of the Disney executive Jeffrey Katzenberg, who wanted it pitched to Disney's Touchstone Pictures.

Still, even after all of that, Edward was almost played by Al Pacino.

"You could imagine what kind of film it would have been then," Lawton says, dryly.

But once Gere was cast, he and Roberts developed the kind of chemistry that started a 1990s resurgence of the rom-com.

"Once we saw that," Lawton says, "it would have been dishonest to make any other kind of movie."

But the times have changed. In the years since 1990, any story of a privileged rich guy scooping up some poor unfortunate from a lousy situation and buying her an expensive necklace risks a backlash for subscribing to what's often called a "savior" narrative. If Vivian is not seen to be fully self-actualizing and in charge of her own destiny, as well as her own sexuality, there might well be hell to pay. And when you think about it, given that "Pretty Woman" is basically a show about two people, there only is one way to make that work in a world increasing hostile to the "Pygmalion" myth: Edward will have to need Vivian as much as — ideally far more than — Vivian needs Edward.

Mitchell, clearly, has grasped all this from the start, and he has brought Lawton along with him. "I was always perplexed why the movie was such a big hit, and I know that a lot of these Broadway adaptations of movies don't work," Lawton says, "so, initially, I was content to say, go with God, Jerry, and do a musical that I do not see myself writing. But I liked the idea of the script evolving with the times. We're not a revival, we're an original adaptation of the source material. This is a fairy tale of sorts, an allegory of self-empowerment for women. Vivian was a free spirit in the film — but we now have run with that and extended and enhanced it. She asserts her own autonomy."

Paula Wagner, longtime professional partner of Tom Cruise, former agent at the Creative Artists Agency and now an increasingly busy Broadway producer, has been listening to all this conversation intently. She gets to the nub of what is being attempted here.

"She has to find her voice and her sense of self-worth. He has to find his soul. These two unlikely people connect," Wagner says. " 'Pretty Woman' has been crying out to be a musical right from the start. "

"We're not a revival, we're an original adaptation of the source material. This is a fairy tale of sorts, an allegory of self-empowerment for women."

— J.F. Lawton, writer of the "Pretty Woman" screenplay and co-writer of the book for the musical

"I have two nieces, aged 11 and 13," Mitchell says, during a lunch break, "and they will be coming to see the show in Chicago. I've always thought the character of Vivian was a strong female role model, someone who could be offered the car keys, the apartment, everything and still say no. Someone who wanted to learn things about herself. Someone who dreams of a better place for herself. But I think we can do a much better job with Edward than the film did, because in a musical, songwriters can write a closeup."

What Mitchell means is that in the world of film-to-musical adaptation, whenever the movie director lingered long on a closeup, usually indicating an intensity of feeling, that's a cue to write a song for that moment.

As long as you have actual songwriters, of course. In early iterations of the project, some kind of greatest-hits-of-the-1990s score was discussed. Understandably so, perhaps, in that the movie itself suggests that soundtrack.

But at this point in his career, Mitchell does not attach himself easily or readily to jukebox shows. And so when Wagner suggested Adams and Vallance pen a totally original score, he went for the idea. At the time, Mitchell was in London working on "Kinky Boots." Between his arena tour sell-outs, Adams rode his bike over to the West End theater and the two went out for pizza. By the end of the meeting, Adams had agreed to write three songs on spec. They were not on spec for long. And meanwhile, Marshall and Lawton were working on the new script under Mitchell's close eye.

The process was put back when Marshall died at age 81 in 2016. But it has continued under the same credits, and with the blessing, Wagner says, of Marshall's estate.

Clearly, the score to "Pretty Woman: The Musical" will be closer to the Adams/Vallance catalog than, say, the kind of music you might hear in "Dear Evan Hansen."

"My wish for 'Pretty Women,' " Vallance says, "would be that people will leave the theater and already be able to sing some of the choruses." Vallance has, of course, written many such sticky choruses. (Aside from his work with Adams, he had a quiet hand in most of Aerosmith's biggest hits, to cite just one example of his prowess.) In an interview, he seems a little bemused at how some theatrical composers eschew populism — respectful but, as one who has lived and died by how high singles charted, bemused nonetheless. "All of the best songs in the world ever have memorable choruses," he says. "They all have memorable lines. We have 23 songs. There are very tender moments. There are some rock songs. We've tried to serve the story, but we have also tried to make the songs memorable."

Adams and Vallance both say that the spots where their 20-odd songs will appear in the show have been selected by Mitchell, who, it is acknowledged by everyone here, is rather more than the director of the show. He's the guiding light, the person who has how the show should be built in his head.

"Both the gift and the challenge we faced is that the story is ironclad," Adams says. "There is no wiggle room. Jerry would be right on us whenever he felt we were not serving the story. You might say that he here solved the songwriter's mystery of what to write about. He says he wants the song to be you, but he also gives you a parameter."

Mitchell did much the same, of course, with another Broadway neophyte but brilliant hitmaker, Cyndi Lauper, and that worked out very well for "Kinky Boots," which followed a similar developmental path through Chicago, and even rehearsed in the same New York building. In Mitchell's recent years of popular success, this former dancer and choreographer has become something of a rock star-whisperer, a player-coach, a keeper of a show's road map.

Much of the score to "Pretty Women" was, in fact, written inside the Public Hotel in Chicago. Mitchell was here working on "Gotta Dance" and Adams quietly flew in from London during a break in his touring schedule. The three men would plan; Mitchell would go rehearse a different show; and Adams and Vallance would write. Fast. As is their wont.

As the show goes into final rehearsals and previews in Chicago, Adams and Vallance are in town, both clearly enjoying the classic Broadway songwriter job of standing ready to compose a new song.

If Mitchell says he needs that to happen.

WEDDING ADVENTURES

9 destinations get guests out of their comfort zone — often to spots seen on TV

By Kate Silver | Chicago Tribune

When Ali Phillips wants to know where the next destination wedding hot spot will be, all she has to do is turn on the TV.

"It's really ridiculous to admit, but if 'The Bachelor' or the Kardashians go somewhere, all of a sudden everyone wants to go there," says Phillips, president of Engaging Events by Ali. The Chicago-based wedding planning agency has helped many a couple organize nuptials in far-flung locales. She says she's seen destinations trend, including Tahiti ("Keeping Up With the Kardashians"), Aruba ("The Bachelor") and Iceland ("The Bachelorette").

When you think about it, destination weddings — which represent one in five weddings now, according to the 10th annual Knot Real Weddings Study from 2016 — are a kind of reality show, themselves. They generally revolve around a beautiful location, a shared purpose, and traveling with dozens of people who may or may not be complete strangers. The situation is ripe for drama.

The culture of destination weddings has evolved in recent years, says Alison Laesser-Keck, an event producer and designer with Alison and Bryan Destination Weddings, based in Santa Barbara, Calif. In the past, weddings that involved travel were often to a "safe" location, like a childhood home or near a college campus. Now, they're more about a group adventure.

"I think people are using their weddings as an opportunity to get people outside of their comfort zones a little bit, to experience something different and unique together," says Laesser-Keck.

And there's this: A destination wedding can be a good way to control the size and cost of the event, says Trisha Cranor, owner and lead planner with Working Brides in Washington, D.C.

"If you're at home, you're probably going to invite 100-plus people, whereas if you go on a destination wedding, you usually invite 20, 25, 50 people. Even if you invited more, truth be told, most of them are not going to come," she says. "So the wedding is just smaller, which of course does make it less expensive than if you were at home."

Italy

"Italy remains the No. 1 place, without a doubt. It's pretty crazy how many inquiries we get for Italy," says Laesser-Keck. She reels off a few of the reasons: remarkable food and wine; beautiful villas you can rent; incredible scenery, whether it's the beauty of Tuscany or the drama of the Amalfi Coast. Laesser-Keck says one of the quintessential wedding destinations in Italy is Lake Como — just getting there can feel like a romantic adventure. "You land in Milan, you get on a train, you get on a boat, and then you're taken out to what feels like the middle of nowhere, where it's just you and your friends," she says. "Even if you're not someone who can afford a multimillion-dollar wedding, it still feels special and your own."

Santa Barbara

It's no coincidence that Laesser-Keck's business is based in this place, aka the American Riviera. "There are viewpoints in the city where you swear you're in the south of France," she says. People fly in from around the world to say "I do" in this California town, nestled between the mountains and the ocean, about a two-hour drive from Los Angeles. Beyond the sheer beauty, it's popular because it's easy to get to, has a range of hotels to fit every budget, and offers top-notch food, wine and activities. That last point is important, because destination weddings are often full-weekend experiences, with planned hikes, sunset cruises and more. Bonus: The weather is usually cooperative, with average high temperatures in the 60s and 70s.

Portugal

For off-the-beaten-path options, Laesser-Keck loves Portugal. "It has somehow slipped under the radar, because a lot of people go to Italy, or a lot of people go to Spain or France," she says. Costs in Portugal tend to be less expensive than elsewhere in Europe. Plus, you can travel the country with ease and get a taste of everything: the fast pace of city life in Lisbon, hidden beaches along the coast and otherworldly sites at Sintra-Cascais Natural Park, stippled with cliffs overlooking the ocean, palaces and

Europe's best border-busting one-day trips

Rick Steves
Tribune Content Agency

With borders so close and transportation a delight, it's easy to throw a change of scenery and culture into your European itinerary. Here are some of my favorite cross-border day trips.

London to Paris. Zipping on the bullet train from London to Paris (or vice versa), deep below the English Channel (aka "Chunnel"), is exciting — and takes just 2.5 hours. Catch an early train, spend about 10 hours in the City of Light, and be back by bedtime.

This journey between two of Europe's greatest cities is almost as fun as the destination. At 190 mph, the train is so fast that when the tracks parallel the highway, the cars look as if they're standing still.

Dubrovnik to Mostar. While many travelers come to Croatia for Dubrovnik and the coast, for me, a trip inland to Mostar (Bosnia-Herzegovina), is one of Europe's richest experiences. Visiting these two pieces of the former Yugoslavia is like turning a history and politics textbook inside out, shaking its contents all over the earth, and then playing in it. Mostar is a haul from Dubrovnik (three hours by car — hire a driver, rent a car or join an excursion), but well worth the trip.

During the 20th century, Mostar was inhabited by Catholic Croats, Orthodox Serbs and Muslim Bosniaks, all enjoying an idyllic mingling of cultures. Their differences were symbolically spanned by a 400-year-old, Turkish-style stone bridge. But as the country unraveled in the early 1990s, Mostar became an icon of the Bosnian war, fought among those same peoples. Bombarded by (Croat Catholic) artillery shells from the hilltop above, the bridge collapsed into the river.

By 2004, the bridge had been rebuilt and the city began to thrive again. Surveying the town from the crest of the bridge is a powerful experience. The cityscape is a symbol of Mostar's past religious conflict. Minarets pierce the city's skyline like proud exclamation points, while the bell tower of the Catholic Church soars over them. On the hilltop above town stands a bold cross, marking the place from where Croat forces shelled the Bosniak side of the river.

Exploring Mostar is a delight. The city's Ottoman influence is evident, from traditional Turkish-style houses (including several open to visitors), to lively Coppersmiths' Street (with the flavor of a Turkish bazaar), to the call to prayer, echoing throughout the city five times a day.

Helsinki to Tallinn. A trip between the capital cities of Finland and Estonia gives a Baltic twist to a Nordic itinerary. Tallinn is just a two-hour boat ride from Helsinki, but a long way culturally. While Helsinki is more modern — a spruce-and-stone wonderland of stunning 19th- to 21st-century architecture — Tallinn is cobbled and quaint, with an Old World ambience and the best-preserved medieval center in the north of Europe.

CAMERON HEWITT/RICK STEVES' EUROPE

DOMINIC ARIZONA BONUCCELLI/RICK STEVES' EUROPE

The market in Tangier, Morocco, is a delight that offers a lively scene, fascinating people and a cultural education.

Tallinn's walkable Old Town, divided into lower and upper towns, is surrounded by a remarkably intact wall. On a one-day visit, explore the Old Town's cobblestoned lanes, gabled houses, historic churches and main square with colorful old buildings and touristy eateries.

For amazing views, head up to Toompea, the upper town, where you can climb some of the original wall towers and visit the Russian Orthodox cathedral. It's a beautiful building, but most Estonians don't like this church, as it was built to face the Estonian parliament building and clearly designed to flex Russian cultural muscles during a period of Estonian national revival. It's just one of the many layers that make Tallinn a fascinating destination.

Spain to Morocco. For me, the most exciting day trip in Europe is — to Africa. From the town of Tarifa in southern Spain, it's just 35 minutes by boat to Tangier, offering a legitimate taste of North Africa and an authentic slice of Islam. While guided excursions make things easy, I find them full of cliches, from belly dancers to snake charmers. I prefer taking the boat on my own, and hiring a local guide to meet me at the port.

Tangier is a feast for the senses. The old town (medina) is a twisty mess of narrow stepped lanes, dead-end alleys and local life spilling into the streets. Wander the colorful produce market (souk); check out the workshops of various artisans, from mosaic tile makers to tailors, and sip a mint tea on the little square called Petit Socco — the same place that drew Jack Kerouac and his Beat Generation buddies.

Recently, I stood at the edge of the Grand Socco — the bustling square between the new town and the old town — admiring this affluent, successful, peaceful Islamic city, just living its life the way it wanted to, successfully. It was a beautiful moment — and a reminder of how border-hopping can create new experiences and perspectives.

TRAVEL TROUBLESHOOTER

He tried to book a hotel, but got a timeshare pitch

By Christopher Elliott | King Features

I recently booked a room at a Holiday Inn in Orlando, Fla. — at least, I thought I did. After making the reservation, I was switched to a sales agent, who invited me to attend a one-hour presentation that would show me "a way to enjoy all the luxuries of a vacation" at a cost of $199, which would be fully refunded, along with a $100 rebate.

Within 10 minutes of receiving my confirmation, I realized that this was for a timeshare. I'm 87 and not a candidate for a timeshare.

I replied to the confirmation email, but received a response that said: "The email address you entered could not be found." I called the confirmation number and spoke to a woman who said, "OK, I'm canceling the transaction and putting a $199 credit on your Visa card."

The credit did not appear on my statement.

I then received another email saying, "You're on your way to Orlando," and if I had any questions, I should call. I spoke with another Holiday Inn representative, who told me that "my refund should be credited in a few days." She also told me to send an email to her, explaining what had happened, which I did.

My Visa was never credited. Bank of America attempted to obtain the credit, but was denied. Can you help me get my $199 back?

— George Feld, Boynton Beach, Fla.

A: Holiday Inn should have booked a hotel room for you, as you requested, instead of transferring you to a representative who pitched a timeshare. When you asked the company to reverse your transaction, it should have done what it promised. Instead, it looks as if Holiday Inn just tried to pocket your money.

I take a dim view of timeshares. While some travelers may benefit from them, many more are disappointed by their "investments" and complain to me about it. You need to carefully consider a timeshare before making a purchase. Clearly, at age 87, this wasn't the right real estate transaction for you, and Holiday Inn should have quickly given you the refund it had offered.

I'm also troubled by the way your call apparently was handled. If you called to make a reservation, why would anyone transfer you to a timeshare sales department? And why would they charge you to attend a sales pitch? I wasn't there, but I imagine someone asked you if you wanted to "save even more" and you said "yes." Who wouldn't?

Your case should serve as a warning for when you're dealing directly with a company: Make sure you're buying what you think you are. If you're unsure, work with a qualified travel agent, who can help you get exactly what you need. A travel pro would book your room through a reservation system, bypassing the labyrinth of telephone pitches.

If someone ever offers you a refund again, make sure you get it in writing: Holiday Inn's verbal promises weren't enough. A written promise is viewed as a debit memo by the dispute departments at some credit card companies. In other words, it's the equivalent of having money in the bank.

You also could have contacted someone higher up at the hotel. I list the names, numbers and email addresses of all the Holiday Inn executives on my consumer-advocacy website: www.elliott.org/company- contacts/intercontinental-hotels.

I contacted Holiday Inn on your behalf, and it refunded your $199, as promised.

CELEBRITY TRAVELER
LUNA BLAISE

Teenage star longs for return to Maui

By Jae-Ha Kim

Born and raised in Los Angeles, Luna Blaise has been juggling her burgeoning acting career ("Concrete Kids," "Fresh Off the Boat," "Surviving Theater 9") with concert dates to promote her latest single, "Camera Roll." One of the best parts of her job, she said, is getting to travel to so many different places. "I'm pretty adventurous when it comes to trying new food while traveling," said Blaise, 16. "I try street cart food sometimes. I love both sweet and spicy foods. I'm very open-minded."

An edited version of our conversation follows.

Q: If you've ever gone away for the holidays, which was the best trip?

A: I was actually in New York for Christmas! This was my first Christmas away from home, but I loved it. I was in New York already because I had just gotten off tour and was preparing to go on a second leg of touring with (singer) Jacob Sartorius. I met up with family friends to explore the city, visit museums and eat some great food like poke bowls.

Q: What was the first trip you took?

A: The first trip I remember taking was to Spain when I was a little girl on vacation with my family. I loved being near the ocean and eating yummy food on the boardwalk. We ate a ton of fresh fish there since we were on the southern coast. I remember eating this great pastry that was stuffed with fish and vegetables. After I tried it the first time, it's the only thing I wanted to eat the whole trip.

Q: What is your favorite vacation destination?

A: Maui. The last time I went to Hawaii was when I was a kid, but I want to go back so badly! I love being by the water and think it's such a beautiful tropical destination.

Q: What untapped destination should people know about?

A: I'm from Los Angeles, so there aren't too many untapped destinations here with all of the tourists and people who live here. An untapped destination that I would love to be able to visit one day would be the hidden ancient ruins buried in the rain forests of South America. I loved learning about it in school and would love to get to see it in person one day.

Q: What's the most important thing you've learned from your travels?

A: That it is so important to just experience things on your travels and not feel the need to always document everything. That being present is sometimes the most important thing to do.

Q: Where are your favorite weekend getaways?

A: I love going down south to Huntington Beach. My schedule is always pretty crazy between singing, songwriting, touring and acting. I love going there with my family when I do have some downtime. I've also been doing a lot of local activities in LA with my friends lately, like escape rooms or pop-up museums that come to the area.

Q: Where would you like to go that you have never been to before?

A: I would really love to go to Australia. The beaches look so beautiful. I would want to visit the Sydney Opera House and the zoo.

Q: What would be your dream trip?

A: I think my dream trip would be traveling in a private yacht around the Mediterranean Sea.

9 popular destination-wedding spots

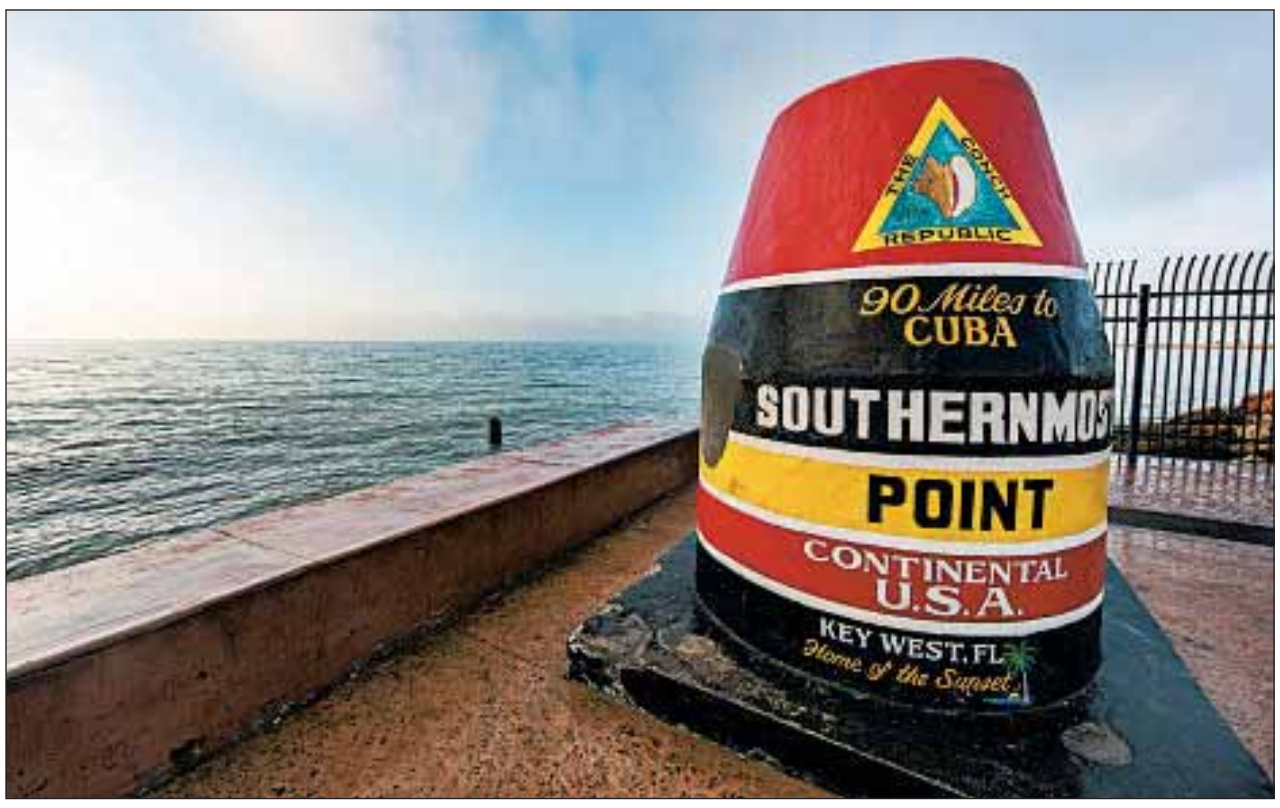
Cancun

Jamaica and the Bahamas have long topped destination wedding lists, says Cranor. More recently, she says, Mexico is giving those islands a run for their money. "I would say over the last five to eight years, Cancun has become amazing for weddings; it is just bustling." Cranor, who specializes in Indian and destination weddings, says that her clients choose the town, located in southeastern Mexico on the Yucatan Peninsula, for its sugar-sand beaches and aquamarine waters, incredible food and endless entertainment. (While the U.S. State Department cautions against travel to five Mexican states due to crime, there's no such warning for Cancun, Cozumel and other popular tourist spots in Quintana Roo; they're considered as safe as Spain and France, for example.) "There is so much to do there now," Cranor says about Cancun. "If you want nightlife, the nightlife is there. If you want to see ruins, you can go to Chichen Itza. If you want shopping, they have their own version of Rodeo Drive; all the high-end shops are there. If you want to have a good time with the kids, there's water parks." It's the kind of getaway that people dream of, she says, not just for a wedding, but for a vacation of their own.



GETTY

The Florida Keys feel like a Caribbean island getaway, but odds are your wedding guests won't need a passport.

GETTY

Costa Rica

Beaches, cloud forests, rainforests — Costa Rica is another off-the-beaten-path spot that has it all, and can be quite affordable. "The cost is amazing; it's priced right for people," says Cranor. Following the ceremony, wedding guests can sit in the sand and watch monkeys swing through trees at Manuel Antonio National Park on the country's Pacific coast, visit Animal Planet's "Meet the Sloths" at the Sloth Sanctuary on the Caribbean coast, splash in thermal springs near Arenal Volcano National Park and go off the grid for a spell. "It's just one of those places where people can get down and dirty, and really enjoy themselves, and at the same time have some luxury if they want — or not," Cranor says.

Charleston, S.C.

As for Phillips, she says she's seeing more couples planning destination weddings closer to home this year. One of the areas they're loving is Charleston, a beguiling city with Southern charm and a bustling food scene. (It also happens to be where Season 14 of "Top Chef" took place, Phillips notes.) "We had all these weird, out-of-the-box weddings for a couple of years, and now they're sort of traditional," she says. Charleston fits that traditional elegance like a silk glove. Phillips adds that couples are looking for outdoor options to entertain guests leading up to the wedding, and this port city has plenty of them, like paddle boarding through salt marshes, boat tours (including dolphin-watching adventures) and hiking.

Tennessee

Phillips says she's seeing a lot of interest in Tennessee too. "Price-wise, it's really attractive. There's that Southern hospitality. And people are really having fun with the food, you know biscuits and the brisket," she says. Cities like Memphis and Nashville are alive with music, and the outdoors beckon guests throughout the state. Right now, she's working on a wedding in Knoxville that's taking place at a woodsy lodge, where guests have the option of tubing down a river or hiking to a waterfall as part of the weekend itinerary.

Florida Keys

The Keys are a popular choice for couples who want to feel as if they're in the Caribbean, without actually leaving the U.S. — especially the farther south you go on this string of islands, Phillips says. "People don't have to get passports. It's fairly easy to get to. It still feels away." She says she loves planning weddings in the Keys because there are fun boutique hotel options, the laid-back culture puts guests at ease and the seafood is stellar.

Cayman Islands

The recently opened Kimpton Seafire Resort and Spa in Grand Cayman has made the island, already in high demand for destination weddings, even more of a draw, says Phillips, who's planned three weddings in the Caymans. The western Caribbean isles have picture-perfect stretches of sand (like Seven Mile Beach), unique attractions (like Stingray City, where visitors can wade onto a sandbar and encounter the rays) and a host of venue options.

"You can do a tent on the beach, a fancy Ritz-Carlton or a small villa," Phillips says.

Whether they're bound for a Tuscan villa or a backwoods lodge, Phillips says the couples she works with aspire to create a memorable event for everyone involved.

"You're taking people on an adventure," she says.

CHILLING OUT — AND WORKING OUT

By Josh Noel
Chicago Tribune

I have a confession. I love water aerobics.

That's why, though the grueling grind of a boxing class called to me just before 8 a.m. on a Saturday morning, I began my weekend of wellness at Midtown Athletic Club by slipping into a glistening pool for 45 minutes of high-intensity splashing.

Fourteen of us took over two lanes, including three men — so get that water aerobics gender bias out of your head — and we thrashed away, moving vigorously through the water for a full-body workout.

Deciding how to start my day was borderline agony. When checking in the previous evening at The Hotel at Midtown — the 55-room lodging perched above Midtown Athletic Club — the hotel manager made a point of emphasizing what is arguably Midtown's biggest draw, whether as a club or a hotel.

"We have 206 classes per week," he said brightly.

Those 206 classes, which take an astonishing number of forms, were what drew me to Midtown for a recent winter weekend of warmth and wellness. If I ever got bored, there were rows and rows of machines. But getting bored wasn't possible. And that was the idea behind Midtown's revamp late last year.

Founded nearly 50 years ago at the intersection of Fullerton, Elston and Damen avenues as Midtown Tennis Club, the property has been reinvented for a modern audience. The bottom three floors, which opened Labor Day weekend, make up the 100,000-square-foot Midtown Athletic Club (where 16 of the original indoor tennis courts remain). The top two stories, which debuted in November, house the hotel.

PHIL VELASQUEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

As a health club, it's impressive. As a hotel, it is without rival. As the architect told me during a tour a few months back, it's "6 percent hotel, 94 percent amenities" — a ratio you're unlikely to find elsewhere.

As a result, Midtown offers a very different sort of hotel experience. The focus isn't simply on a stay — it's on activity. And for the right audience, the concept is both charming and novel.

Our fifth-floor room — overlooking the Kennedy Expressway and rows of billboards and rooftops, followed by that iconic, brooding Chicago skyline — was simple and sleek, comfortable but with few frills. It was long on wood surfaces, and the decorative touches largely amounted to a broad, textured painting hanging above the bed. Four complimentary bottles of Midtown-branded water — refreshed each morning — sat in the mini fridge below the coffee maker.

I awoke that first morning, a Saturday, a little after 7, as a sherbet orange sunrise crept from behind the skyline. An occasional heavy thumping emanated from below. (Weights tossed around in the club? This is why I always travel with a white-noise machine.)

Fueled by half a cup of coffee and an energy bar, I headed to the pool, where a petite spark plug of energy named Ellyse Kummer stood at the water's edge.

"Is this anyone's first time?" she called out.

A handful of hands went up.

"What are you expecting? Are you expecting to sweat?"

Before anyone could answer, she said, "Let's go!" And we were warming up with arms and legs surging through the water. On we went to resistance and cardio work, then swam out to the 8-foot deep end to attempt the same exercises without the comfort of a floor below. Turns out you work a lot harder trying to stay afloat in 8 feet of water.

I had 90 minutes until my next class — finally, I'd lace up some gloves — which was just enough time to visit Chromium, Midtown's restaurant overlooking the club's snow-covered outdoor pool. The menu skewed more decadent than healthy, which forced me to think strategically about ordering ahead of a boxing class. I went with the sliced avocado, baked with an egg in each half. I devoured it as the restaurant slowly filled with people fresh off the tennis courts, treadmills and weight room. In that way, a Midtown stay suddenly felt like an odd hotel experience. I was in rest and relaxation mode; everyone else was just at the gym.

Belly full, but not too full, I headed toward my 11 a.m. boxing class. Midtown Athletic Club had become a hive of activity across its three floors: running, leaping, lunging, lifting, pushing, pulling, crawling, tossing, throwing, grunting and sweating. Even at monthly membership rates of about $200, the club was clearly not hurting for constituents.

Millennials and Gen Xers were in particular abundance: Lots of seemingly late 20s-through-late 40s folks peppered through classes with names such as Core Blast, BODYATTACK, SPRING, VOLTAGE and WERQ — nothing says "intense workout" quite like capital letters — plus ample yoga, water-based classes and Mindful Moment, a 15-minute meditation class.

But now, it was time for boxing.

Each of more than two dozen bags was claimed in Midtown's dim, narrow boxing studio. Our instructor, a wiry retired fighter named Julian Collins, walked up and back, barking out orders. Tattoos lined his arms. He talked to us like actual boxers — what punches to throw and in what sequence. The most experienced among us knew what to do. Those of us new to throwing jabs just did our best as the sweat poured out and our arms turned to concrete. It was a glorious unfurling of energy.

"Punch through your target!" Collins hollered. "Leave it all here!"

It was a timely thought. Leave it all here. A workout in the middle of the city is often about relief and escape — from work, from traffic, from the kids.

We finished just before noon, and I'd felt as if I'd climbed a mountain. Everything was heavy. My chest heaved. I felt alive.

That night, my wife and I headed out to dinner in Logan Square for an extra-delicious meal as a reward for my day of exercise. On the drive there, I realized it was the first time I'd been outside all day. I appreciated the fresh air but realized I hadn't missed Chicago in winter: the dirt, the traffic, the cold, the congestion.

I woke up sore the next morning. Must have been that boxing class. Back I went to the pool for water Pilates, which was followed by a packed spinning class.

It was a splendid conclusion to the weekend. My muscles were warm and sore. I'd worked hard. I could have used another day for recovery — more hot tub, sauna and steam. But it was time to return to the 2-year-old and the real world.

TIPS, TRIPS & DEALS

Food-focused cruise in Croatia

By Phil Marty | Chicago Tribune

Croatia is a popular travel destination these days, with many trips focusing on Dubrovnik and its baroque buildings and massive walls. Peter Sommer Travels has a different approach, with its eight-day/seven-night Gastronomic Gulet Cruise in Croatia. Gulets are traditional two- or three-masted wooden sailing vessels crafted in Turkey, and those used by Sommer carry no more than two dozen passengers. The itinerary for the Sept. 29 sailing explores the Dalmatian coast and its culinary attractions. On the island of Brac, for example, there's a visit to a farmstead where passengers help prepare dinner using a peka, which is a metal cooking bell common to the region. There are also visits to wineries, including one on the Peljesac Peninsula where the Plavac Mali grape is grown to produce Dingac, one of Croatia's most famous red wines. Another day features a cooking class by a local chef. Food isn't the sole focus. There's also time for leisurely swims in the blue waters of the Adriatic Sea or wandering the area's historic villages. The trip is priced from about $4,927 per person, double occupancy. International air is extra. Info: 1-855-443-3027, tinyurl.com/yb3bd782

Floating gardens

The French-owned cruise line Ponant will begin offering a series of themed cruises in 2019 called the Quintessential Collection. The sailings will include speakers and performances aboard the ship and shore excursions that embrace the local culture and theme. An example is the cruise Green and Gentle Lands: Exploring Gardens and Historic Sites. Holly Shimizu, who headed the U. S. Botanical Garden in Washington until her retirement, will be aboard. A pre-cruise program in London will visit Kew Gardens and Chelsea Physic Garden. Other garden stops are in Belgium and Norway. Info on all of the cruises in the Quintessential Collection is at tinyurl.com/ycwgb8v9.

If your idea of the perfect vacation includes luxuriating at a spa, you'll want to check out the recently announced listing of the Top 100 Spas of 2017 from Spas of America. Clock is chock-full of features

By Judi Dash
Los Angeles Times

Am I the only one whose cellphone clock cancels its alarm?

That's why I travel with a separate clock, and I've just discovered a doozy: the new Alarm Clock Radio from Magnasonic.

When activated, a swiveling arm projects the time in bright red LED numerals on the ceiling or wall. The clock also has a USB port for charging a cellphone or other device and a 3.5 mm jack.

Dual alarms let you and your companion each choose a wake-up time and either a buzz or preset radio station to get your eyes open. You can also cycle through a calendar and inside temperature display.

The clock's projection beam runs on a replaceable 3-volt lithium battery (included), which also provides battery backup in case the power goes out; $34.99, www.magnasonic.com.

Disney's Toy Story Land gets play date

MATT STROSHANE/WALT DISNEY WORLD RESORT

Oversized replicas of old-school toys are a defining feature of the land. Lampposts shaped like towering Tinkertoys, gigantic colored blocks, a Jenga tower and other massive playthings will make human visitors feel as if they've shrunk to the size of a toy.

A roller coaster called Slinky Dog Dash will be gentle enough for young children. Alien Swirling Saucers will tow guests in rocket-ship toys.

The land includes an existing attraction, Toy Story Mania, which allows guest to play games shooting at 3-D virtual objects.

The new land will also feature a walk-up eatery, Woody's Lunch Box.

Wave-hiking permit applications soaring

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Demand continues to rise for the 20 daily permits to hike a geological gem on the Arizona-Utah border called the Wave, featuring mesmerizing swirls of searing reds, oranges and yellow in bowl-shaped rock formations.

More than 160,000 people applied last year for the 7,300 yearly permits to take the 3-mile hike, which crosses the state border in the Paria Canyon-Vermilion Cliffs Wilderness area, The Salt Lake Tribune reported.

The number of applicants increased by 20 percent last year and is up from 87,000 in 2013.

The Bureau of Land Management issues the permits — half through a monthly online lottery at blm.gov and half through daily drawings at its office in Kanab. In the recent online lottery held for May hikes, about 2,800 people entered for the 10 permits on May 5 alone.

The bureau started requiring permits in the late 1980s in order to comply with the Wilderness Act, which limits visitation to protected areas. The number of applicants seeking permits has skyrocketed, boosted by the breathtaking images of the formations printed internationally in travel publications.

Applicants can request up to three days each month.

Artist Cory Cravatta has applied in the online lotteries for six months, and he has entered the walk-in drawings 24 times.

The Genoa, Ill., resident said he's wanted to do a series of landscape paintings from photographs he planned to shoot of the Wave.

With 36 people vying for 10 permits on a recent Tuesday, Cravatta's name was called.

The next day he hiked and photographed the formations.

"It was hard to get," he said, "but I'm glad it was hard."

FORK IN THE ROAD

ERIC RISBERG/AP

LOVE AND BREAD

Writer's obsession leads him and wife to San Francisco for their honeymoon

By Matt Kemp | Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Honeymoons: a chance to relax after the stress of a wedding by sitting on a beach with a cocktail and contemplating the start of a happy, married life.

Or, in my case, a chance to travel to America and meet a baker.

I am addicted to bread. Growing up in the United Kingdom — where the staple diet is laced with carbs and gluten — bread really is daily. And I am hooked.

In 2012, I went from avid consumer to obsessive creator thanks to a breadmaking course at a cottage deep in the English countryside. Nights out with friends have been canceled, weekend trips away postponed, as I became a slave to sourdough.

So, while Fiji was at the top of my bride's romantic getaway list, my mind went immediately to San Francisco. The Bay Area has a long history of making sourdough bread, and it's home to a plethora of sourdough bakeries. I also dreamed of meeting Chad Robertson, the man behind the city's highly acclaimed Tartine Bakery.

Fiji would have to wait. After our wedding, we embarked on a 5,300-mile trip to California. Despite jet lag, Kate and I headed straight to the city's oldest sourdough producers, Boudin Bakery near Fisherman's Wharf.

To make sourdough, flour and water are left to ferment for long enough that a natural leaven is created, allowing the baker to dispense with shop-bought yeast altogether. Legend, and Boudin's onsite museum, trace the company's mother dough, still used in each loaf, back to the California gold rush era.

The sheer scale of Boudin's operation is impressive. But while there's great pleasure in tearing the arm off a sourdough teddy bear, the scale is more industrial than artisanal with a flavor to match. This is not the dough I was looking for.

Next up, a trip to the Ferry Building Marketplace and an outpost of the Acme Bread Co. Founded in 1983, Acme is a major player in the city, providing bread to dozens of restaurants and grocery stores across the Bay Area. With a depth of flavor and a beautiful, blistered crust, the sourdough round I sampled was, to my palate, a step up from Boudin's.

Stop three: Tartine Manufactory, a light, airy space in the Mission District where the tangy, welcoming smell of sourdough invades your senses as you enter. It's bread nirvana.

As we arrived, Tartine Manufactory was a hive of activity with Robertson, who is recognized as one of the world's leading bakers, front and center, pulling crackling, burnished loaves from an enormous deck oven (a type of commercial oven with shelves) as his team buzzed around him.

While my wife settled down with a beer and a grilled cheese-and-zucchini sandwich, I indulged myself, watching the process I'd pored over in Robertson's book "Tartine Bread." I'd arranged for a chat with him and started off by asking whether my pilgrimage was unique.

"No, no. A lot of people come," the soft-spoken Texan said with a smile. "I'm always just hoping it's a good bread day when they show up. Every day there's new people. People definitely come from all over, and I love it. It's pressure. I just always hope that we are living up to people's expectations. It's not a bad thing. It's just a constant challenge."

An estimated 3 million Americans have celiac disease, and one of Tartine's other challenges is catering for the 1 in 133 people who is allergic to gluten.

However, as Robertson — whose wife, Tartine co-founder Elisabeth Prueitt, is gluten-intolerant — is quick to point out, there's a difference between having celiac disease and avoiding gluten as a lifestyle choice.

"Americans in particular are always trying to find a silver bullet — like, 'Oh, this is the problem' — and they've found that gluten intolerance is not the problem," he said. "Gluten-free has as much junk food as regular conventional crackers."

The economics of the gluten-free market aren't lost on Robertson either. "It's big business, so once the cereal companies see that this this a growing segment that they can produce food for, then it just keeps rolling on," he said.

Tartine is teaming up with pizza guru Chris Bianco for a new venture in Los Angeles, with plans underway for a New York outlet. It's a long way from Robertson's humble beginnings, spending years in front of a wood-fired oven in West Marin in "a solitary trance" trying to perfect his ideal bread.

As my baking hero headed back to his deck oven, I walked outside with a country loaf under my arm and immediately broke through its shattering crust to reveal the pearlescent, still-warm crumb inside. It's a revelation — moist and irresistible, with a complexity of flavor that changes daily during our remaining time in San Francisco. It's the sourdough that dreams, and honeymoons, are made of.

Workplace mentor falls down on job

Dear Amy: I am a mentee in a "future women leaders" program at my organization. I am paired with a director of a different department. She and I get along very well, but she is not on speaking terms with the director of my department, and has gone so far as to file a complaint against my immediate supervisor, a woman I respect greatly.

So far, my mentor has not reached out to me to organize our first mentoring session. Perhaps it is because she is very busy, but I suspect it is also because she is basically at war with my department, going so far as to instruct some of her subordinates not to speak to my colleagues (although they still speak to me).

I sent an initial, "Thank you, and I'm looking forward to working with you" email to her upon the human resources department informing us that we were paired. I have not reached out again and haven't heard from her. I am not sure how I would handle any discussions about my department should it come up. More generally, I have doubts about being mentored by a person who seems to have difficulties working with others, although I have no direct negative personal experiences with her.

On the other hand, I don't want to lose the opportunity to be mentored. What should I do?

— Missing Mentor

Dear Missing: You should contact your human resources department and ask to be paired with another "woman leader" in your organization. The mentor's lack of follow-through is reason enough to try to switch.

The prospective mentor you were paired with does not seem to exemplify the type of leadership you should choose to emulate. However, if you do end up paired with her, this presents opportunities for you. If you continue to demonstrate the sort of discretion and ability to get along with all colleagues (including her) that you demonstrate in your question, you may be qualified to mentor her.

I'll pass along great advice I received on my very first day in a professional job, delivered by my (female) supervisor: Don't trash anyone. Always keep your personal feelings about a colleague very close to the vest. Behave professionally, do your work, stand up for yourself and your work with confidence, take correction when you're wrong and direction when you need it and try to demonstrate that you can work with a variety of people. You might benefit from reading Facebook Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg's book "Lean in: Women, Work, and the Will to Lead," (2013, Knopf).

Dear Amy: I agreed to purchase some small cosmetic items from an acquaintance. They offered a wide variety of items via Facebook, and I agreed to purchase a few to give as "stocking-stuffer" gifts at Christmastime. I sent a check for the price of the items and shipping (the total was less than $10). I exchanged Facebook messages with the individual in reference to shipping the items, and they told me they were on the way.

I have received nothing.

My check was cashed, and after messaging the person again about a tracking number, I was blocked on all forms of social media. What should I do now? Just let it go or pursue it with the authorities, even over such a small amount?

—Scammed

Dear Scammed: You could post a query on Facebook (without naming the individual publicly): "I had an experience ordering some items from an FB friend before Christmas, and never received the items, despite paying for them. Has anyone else in my circle had this experience? If so, please message me privately." Others might have had the same experience with the same person, in which case you could consider contacting the police.

Dear Amy: The letter from "Three Simple Sisters" reflected such selfishness! Their big problem was family members kept in touch and invited them on group vacations (which the sisters couldn't afford). It is very easy to avoid emails. But these sisters were also missing a great opportunity to connect with family.

— Also a Sister

Dear Sister: I agree. A local reunion would be in order.

Philosophical musings on Stitch Fix

Shopping service a perfect fit, so why am I avoiding it?

ISTOCKPHOTO

Why would someone who hates to shop and has no spare time avoid a service that does the work for you?

You know how you search for an item online and suddenly you're bombarded with ads for that item at every turn?

I bought a replacement handle for our dryer door from eBay the other day, and now I can't so much as check email without dryer door handles populating my every screen. I just have the one dryer! I want to yell. It just has the one door! I'm all set!

I know it's an algorithm thing — today's Google search is tomorrow's ad on my news feed. But it always feels a little cosmic, as if I've alerted the universe that I am, in fact, open to accepting a new dryer handle into my life, and maybe the universe should send one or 20 my way.

So it has been with Stitch Fix of late.

You know Stitch Fix? It's an online clothing service. You sign up online, pay a $20 fee, answer some questions about your tastes, and a personal stylist sends you a monthly box of clothes and accessories to purchase or reject.

It's perfect for someone like me, meaning someone who hates to shop, is crunched for time and needs some clothes that she didn't yank off a sales rack at Target on her way to buy peanut butter.

Like dryer handles, Stitch Fix keeps popping up in various moments of my life — the Facebook friend posting about Stitch Fix, the lunch date crediting Stitch Fix for her outfit, the mom I recently drove to our daughters' athletic competition offering me the Stitch Fix signup link.

The universe clearly wants me to dress better.

But something has been stopping me from hopping aboard the Stitch Fix train, or one of its similar counterparts — Trunk Club, DailyLook, LeTote.

It's not outsourcing guilt. I'm a huge believer in paying others to do the things that chip away at our time, life's most precious resource.

In her 2010 book, "168 Hours: You Have More Time Than You Think" (Portfolio), time management expert Laura Vanderkam recommends identifying one or two things we like doing least and hiring them out, without a single thought to what our moms or sisters or co-workers would think. Hate cooking? Hire someone to cook occasional meals for your family, she suggests. Hate laundry? Ship it out. Hate cleaning bathrooms? Hire a weekly service to come in for an hour. Especially if that gives you more time with your kids, your parents, your church community — the people you value most.

"Money is a choice just like time is a choice," Vanderkam told me once. "We can examine how we're spending both and see if it matches up with our priorities."

Maybe that means canceling cable or finding other places to cut costs to outsource chores.

Anyway, I don't mind outsourcing.

I'm not worried about the quality of the clothing the styling service would send. As I mentioned, my current wardrobe comes mostly from places that also sell groceries.

It's not the cost that's deterring me. I've poked around the sites enough to know there are various price points, and I could find one that fits in my budget.

So what gives? Why am I hesitant to pay someone to dress me?

I think, after chewing on it a bit, I've determined that it's a matter of who I am bumping up against who I want to be.

In my imagination, I am the sort of person who isn't defined by her wardrobe, but who punctuates it, nonetheless, with carefully and lovingly selected pieces that hold meaning: a handmade scarf purchased at a local fundraiser, a bracelet passed down through the generations, a dress from that sun-soaked vacation where my husband and I strolled along the water's edge and sipped prickly pear mojitos by the light of the moon.

In my imagination, this is also how I decorate my home. A wall clock from my grandmother's home before it was sold, sand art created by Tibetan monks, an antique nightstand that I salvaged, sanded and stained to perfection.

I have none of these things. I have clothes from Target and housewares from Target and a nightstand from Target.

But we tell ourselves stories, don't we? About who we really are, deep down? About the sorts of choices we would make, the sorts of things we'd surround ourselves with, the sort of life we'd be living, if only we were younger/richer/working in a different industry/less strapped for time?

It's "A Wonderful Life." It's "Sliding Doors." It's "Family Man" and every other movie that touches on our fantasies and fears about what our lives might look like if only ...

Wow, you're thinking. You got all that from avoiding Stitch Fix?

I did. And I've decided it's a little silly to avoid it. It's a service that checks a box in my life that needs checking, and my reasons for leaving it unchecked aren't rooted in logic.

But I'm still not sure whether I'll give in. Maybe, instead, I should work on becoming a closer version of the person I imagine — the one who makes more space in my life for things with personal meaning and a little story behind them. Maybe it's not an either/or. Maybe I can do both: Stitch Fix and meaningful things.

Nothing wrong with making sure who you are lines up with who you want to be, right? (Especially if it means you finally plan that sun-soaked vacation with prickly pear mojitos by the light of the moon ...)

Custody arrangements in flux

Many couples making unconventional co-parenting work

By Danielle Braff
Chicago Tribune

Lucenda Jacobs' 13- and 15-year-old children have their own home in Houston, but they're never alone.

Every two weeks, Jacobs and her ex-husband swap in and out of their children's home. The two parents bought the home, which the family refers to as "the nest," following their divorce in 2016 after 15 years of marriage. It has two master suites, one for each parent. (Jacobs said she locks hers during her two weeks off.)

"Neither of us wanted to not be in our children's lives 100 percent, and we wanted stability," said Jacobs, a CPA and the author of "Nesting."

The Houston family has an untraditional custody arrangement, but they're not alone.

"The idea is that dad used to have alternative weekends and alternative Wednesdays — you used to see all the dads at Denny's on Wednesdays — but it's not the norm anymore," said Lynn Mirabella, partner at Mirabella, Kincaid, Frederick & Mirabella, based in Wheaton, Ill. "Now, we talk about what's best for the child, instead of what the family wants."

Mothers used to have all the power when it came to custody arrangements, but times have changed dramatically in the past few years.

When she started practicing divorce law about three decades ago, mothers automatically received primary custody, and fathers saw their children a few days each month, said Nancy Chemtob, New York-based partner at Chemtob, Moss & Forman.

But in 1999, Chemtob helped a father receive sole custody, and divorce cases began to shift, giving more and more equality to dads.

The Wednesday night dinner turned into an overnight visit, and the weekend at dad's turned into a Friday-to-Monday stay.

A 2017 study published in Science Daily backed up the dads' requests for time with their kids, finding that preschoolers had fewer psychological and behavioral problems if their divorced parents had joint custody — even if they bounced from house to house — than those who lived mostly or only with one parent.

Today, parents are modernizing custody agreements, and anything goes, as long as the children are happy.

"There is no 'one-size-fits-all' custody arrangement," said Loren Costantini, of the law offices of Lawrence Costantini. "The new trend in custody is a mindful approach, where the parents collectively and peacefully create a parenting plan that fits the needs and schedules of the family."

When lawyer Anne Mitchell, author of "They're Your Kids Too," realized that she had stepped into the same sphere as her clients, her first thought was how to make her son's life continue along as smoothly as possible after divorce. The answer: Do nothing that would affect him.

So Mitchell and her ex-husband continued living together but moved into different bedrooms. This arrangement lasted two years, until her ex had to relocate for work.

"It worked very well — we functioned as a family, and we co-parented in a cooperative manner," Mitchell said, explaining that they still ate dinner together as a family and hung out in all the common areas together without any difficulties.

Living together post-divorce and even eating family meals or sharing a home on alternating weeks takes a special, peaceful situation, said Libby James, a Charlotte, N.C., family attorney.

"I've seen situations where parents get so paranoid about their ex coming into their space that they lock drawers or closets," James said. "Another problem is a lack of balance in house cleaning: One parent might show up at Friday at 6 p.m. and discover the other parent has left the house a disaster. There can be fights over food and supplies too."

Today, parents are modernizing custody agreements, and anything goes, as long as the children are happy.

But a contemporary custody arrangement doesn't necessarily mean exes have to live together or share a space.

Amanda Garcia and her ex, David Carranza, live about 15 minutes away from each other on the Northwest Side of Chicago, and when they broke up about a year ago, they casually decided to split their son's time week by week with a Sunday to Sunday arrangement.

"It sucks having him gone for a week, but we both sat down and said, 'It's not really about us and our feelings,' " said Garcia, who is a stay-at-home mom to their 4-year-old son during her week and is in school studying to be a clinical massage therapist.

"His dad is very much a part of his life, and that's kind of how we wanted to keep it."

During the weeks that her ex has their son, Garcia said, she communicates with him virtually whenever she or her son want to chat.

He and his ex-wife originally left their son in their marital home, and they took turns moving back into the house to spend time with him.

"This was challenging, as you never knew the conditions of the house when you moved back in," Wenzel said.

"This worked best for the child, though, as he was in his element during difficult times."

But it didn't work for long for the parents.

So now, his ex-wife has their son Mondays and Tuesdays, while he has him Wednesdays and Thursdays, and they alternate on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays.

"There are no perfect solutions when dealing with custody agreements. The best thing you can do is to put the differences aside and focus on what's best for the child," Wenzel said. "They get one childhood, so do the best, so they can look back and say they enjoyed it."

Tips on surviving marriage from someone who's done it 53 years

By Alison Bowen

ERIN HOOLEY/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Judi Schindler, with her husband, Jack, wrote "Husbands: An Owner's Manual: How to Survive a 50-Year Marriage."

Judi Schindler is the first to tell you that marriage isn't easy.

Married at 22, she said she thought marriage to her husband, Jack, would be a bit like Cinderella and Prince Charming — gazing adoringly across the table at each other while enjoying a perfectly cooked meal. Instead, the first time she tried to cook a meal that her husband had once told her he enjoyed, veal Parmesan, he told her he'd forgotten to tell her that he didn't like veal Parmesan anymore. She slid the meal into the trash while crying.

But she soon realized, she said, "It was a gift." By that, the 76-year-old, a public relations consultant-turned-actor-turned-author, means she was relieved of expectations she'd brought into the marriage — that she should cook, that she should be responsible for the happiness of Jack, now 80, and he for hers. The two have been married for 53 years.

Schindler's book, "Husbands: An Owner's Manual: How to Survive a 50-Year Marriage," was published in December. It evolved from a one-woman show she performs, also called "Husbands: An Owner's Manual," but she doesn't want the title to seem as if it's from half a century ago. The book is a collection of tongue-in-cheek observations on marriage.

Her next act? In March, she will be performing in the Pride Arts Center's short play festival History Lezons, which pays homage to women. She will star in the festival's one-act play "In Transit," about a woman in a Chicago retirement home who has given up on life but meets a new resident who may derail her plans.

The Schindlers' home is filled with books and photos of their six grandchildren. Having a partner who shares decades of memories, she said, is ultimately one of the most satisfying pieces of a partnership. She offered some tips — and funny anecdotes — that have helped her during her marriage.

You have no idea what you're getting into. When you get married, just realize you don't know what to expect. If you are married particularly young, she added, you may not even realize just yet who you are. "How is it possible, at 22, to select someone that you can live with for the rest of your life?" she marveled. "You don't even know who you are at 22, let alone to be judging anybody else." When you get married, you're at the beginning of — and perhaps a nebulous part of — what will become a much longer journey.

Don't stay together all the time. Find one thing you each enjoy. She likes the theater; he likes watching wrestling on television. Early in their marriage, she found herself watching sports on television and asking herself, "Is this what I'll be doing for the rest of my life?" Again, she realized that the day they'd wed she hadn't vowed to watch sports on television in her free time, nor had her husband vowed that they would share enthusiasms. They appreciate and support each other's interests. Sometimes, they even go to a movie theater and watch separate movies.

Don't give advice. If her husband asks whether he should take Lake Shore Drive, she doesn't answer. She jokes that he just wants to blame her if they get stuck in traffic. But her advice to avoid advice is firm: "When you give someone advice, you're usually criticizing them, if they haven't asked you."

What works for others might not work for you. Each person is different, and a couple will find a way that their marriage works. For the Schindlers, finding different things they enjoyed was helpful. But it was only as they approached retirement that they felt, she said, it would be key to find something to do together. So if other couples love the same movies, but you and your partner split up at the theater, it's OK. "There is no cookie-cutter way for marriage to exist," she said.

Seeking justice after being shot by police

By Darcel Rockett

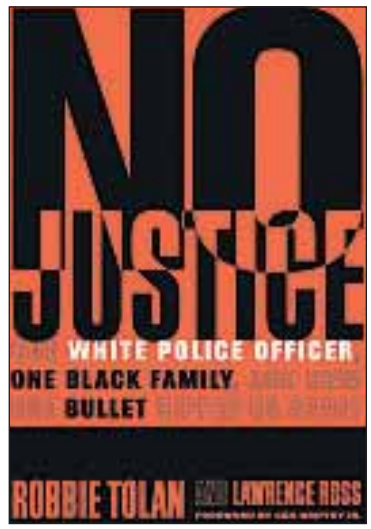
CENTER STREET

How do you pick up the pieces of your life as a young African-American man after a white police officer shoots you in your parents' driveway? Robbie Tolan explains what happened in the book "No Justice."



Amadou Diallo, 23, died in New York City on Feb. 4, 1999. The immigrant's identity was mistaken for another, and he was shot 19 times by four NYPD officers — all acquitted.

Victor Steen, 17, died Oct. 3, 2009, in Pensacola, Fla. The teen was riding his bike when an officer chased him down, shot him with a stun gun him from his patrol car window and ran over him. The officer returned to duty. The city paid the family $500,000 in a settlement.

Aiyana Stanley-Jones, 7, died May 16, 2010, in Detroit. The girl was asleep on the couch when the city's SWAT team came into her home. An officer fired a shot, hitting her in the back of the head. The team had the wrong apartment. Two trials later, the officer was cleared on all counts.

These cases of police-involved shootings made headlines, as did the Dec. 31, 2008, shooting of Robbie Tolan in Houston — what separates Tolan's story is he lived.

Tolan recounts his story in the recently released book "No Justice: One White Police Officer, One Black Family and How One Bullet Ripped Us Apart." In it, Tolan, the son of former major league baseball player Bobby Tolan, details being shot in the chest in front of his childhood home by white police officer Sgt. Jeffrey Cotton after officers mistakenly accused Tolan of stealing his own car.

The book chronicles his years-long journey for justice against the Texas city of Bellaire and its Police Department. In the end, his case, Tolan v. Cotton, went to the Supreme Court and set a precedent in the way judges are allowed to grant police officers qualified immunity. The bullet, to this day, remains in his liver.

"A lot of people outside of my immediate circle didn't know what we went through," Tolan said. "This isn't just my story; it's my parents' and my story. It's for all of us — for future families and for people who are on the fence who say, 'Let's give the officers the benefit of the doubt, since we don't really know what happened.' Now you can see the underbelly of the justice system."

The Chicago Tribune talked to Tolan about his experience with police brutality, racial profiling and its effect on black families like his own. This interview has been condensed and edited.

Q: What does something like this do to a family? What would you say to judges, juries, police and citizens?

A: I think people really underestimate the impact that it has on a family — not just the immediate family, but the extended family. My dad had a double bypass a week and a half after I was shot because of all of the stress. We're in the hospital at the same time; we're across the hall from each other. Can you imagine what that did to my mother? My mom has her husband and her son, and she's standing in the middle of the hospital hallway, and she doesn't know which room to go into. Unless you've gone through it, you don't know what these families go through — it's a lot, and it's really, really stressful.

Q: In the book you mentioned a reporter asking you: What advice would you give a good kid who feels that because something like this happens to a person like you, he's now lost faith in our law enforcement and justice system? Do you have an answer yet?

A: No, that question still gives me trouble. On the one hand, you don't want to say f--- the police and do what you want to do because that's not the way to go, but I think learning as much about the justice system as you can, knowing your rights is really, really important.

Q: Before the shooting, you were gearing up for a spot on a major league baseball team, but instead you spent most of your 20s dealing with the fallout from the bullet (rehab, depression, nightmares, financial concerns). How do you find normalcy?

A: I always wanted to be this famous baseball player, so I expected to be stopped on the street. But instead of the "Hey, great game last night," it's the "Hey, aren't you that guy that got shot?" God put me here for a reason; he spared my life for a purpose. I can't be selfish in this second chance that I've been given. I've been in rooms with Michael Brown's parents, I've been in rooms with Trayvon Martin's parents and all these families that lost their loved ones, and I'm still here. When you put it into that perspective, I have an obligation to speak for those who can't speak for themselves, so that's really where I found the strength. It really came from those other families.

Q: In the end, you don't hate cops. Explain.

A: Like anything else, there are good ones and bad ones. I do consider myself an advocate (for those who endured police violence), but I think any objective person could step back and look at the details of this case and say something went wrong here. I think it doesn't take much to be objective. You just have to think. If something doesn't smell right, then there's probably something wrong there.

What it really means to 'dress like a woman'

Book shows work attire over last century

By Heidi Stevens | Chicago Tribune

"Dress Like a Woman: Working Women and What They Wore" (Abrams) is a fascinating look at women's business attire over the last century — and a welcome reminder that women didn't "enter" the workforce in the 1970s, as we're so often told. We've been there all along.

Oh, and Roxane Gay writes the foreword. (Swoon.)

"In this collection," Gay writes, "you will see how women have dressed for their work, both in and beyond the traditional workplace. You will see how that dress has evolved as the role of women in contemporary society has evolved. And you will see that sometimes, dressing like a woman means wearing a pantsuit; other times, it means wearing a wetsuit, or overalls, or a lab coat, or a police uniform."

You may recall women flooding social media last year with photos after President Donald Trump reportedly said he preferred his female staffers to "dress like women." Supreme Court justice robes, an astronaut suit, boxing gloves: all things worn by women, all things that found their way to Twitter with the hashtag #DressLikeAWoman.

The book goes a step further, committing 300 beautiful photographs to print and, in so doing, celebrating the rich and layered history of female labor.

We see women welding at the Lincoln Motor Co. in early 1900s Detroit. We see Ella Watson, who mopped the floors at the Farm Security Administration building to support her family in 1942.

We see a factory worker balance a stack of cigarettes under her chin in 1962 Ireland and a Zambian electoral agent examining voter rolls as her fellow Zambians line up to vote in the 2015 presidential election. We see women laboring in Sri Lanka and Singapore, Iran and India, Saudi Arabia and Vietnam.

We see U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan address a House Judiciary subcommittee in 1978, Billie Jean King reach for a shot during a 1964 Wimbledon semifinal, Katie Couric anchor the CBS Evening News a decade ago and Hillary Clinton accept her party's nomination for president of the United States in 2016.

"Clothing is uniform and armor," New York Times fashion critic Vanessa Friedman writes in the book's introduction, "and in the workplace it represents the compromise between those two concepts as determined by the individual and as determined by the institution."

Or, as Gay puts it: "Dressing like a woman means wearing anything a woman deems appropriate and necessary for getting her job done."

The Tournament of Books

Read the comments for all the right reasons

By John Warner
Chicago Tribune

Whatever you do, don't read the comments.

This seems to be a nearly universal attitude among those of us who read things on the internet. The comments beneath an article are frequently cesspools of hatred, misogyny and racism, not to mention horrendous offenses to grammar and syntax. The comments on a YouTube video can be enough to make you fear for the future of the human race.

A number of publications (NPR, Popular Science, The Week and The Guardian) have either eliminated or curtailed comments, because the benefits of opening their pages to the vox populi were outweighed by efforts to police abusive behavior. In an analysis of its own traffic before ending comments, NPR found that only 0.06 percent of its users were commenting, and only 4,300 people were posting 67 percent of all comments.

I rather like hearing from readers, but as someone who writes for online publication, I have been told to do some things with myself that are unmentionable in a family newspaper.

However, I want to invite all book-loving people to an experience in which the comments might be the best part of the reading experience: The Morning News Tournament of Books.

The Tournament of Books is now in its 14th year and will run through the end of the month. Sixteen books are pitted against one another in a March Madness-style bracket, a different judge rendering a verdict on a different matchup each weekday. The favorites this year include George Saunders' Booker Prize-winning "Lincoln in the Bardo," and Jesmyn Ward's "Sing, Unburied, Sing," which nabbed the National Book Award.

There are also underdogs from indie publishers, such as my personal favorite, "So Much Blue" by Percival Everett.

Since the tournament's second year, I have served as co-color commentator with my friend Kevin Guilfoile, a Chicago-based writer. Our job is to offer a little informed pith about the books and the judgment before turning the arena over to our readers, who over the years have become what we call "the commentariat."

The commentariat are the superfans of the Tournament of Books, who attempt to read all of the competitors before the tournament's start, who are passionate about books and reading, and who aren't shy about expressing an opinion.

In other words, my kind of people.

At times, with certain books, or spurred on by a particularly provocative judge's verdict, the comments will reach into the hundreds, weaving in and out of different takes and opinions, at times threatening to overwhelm one's capacity to take in information — in which case I remind myself the comments will always be waiting for later.

Comments occasionally get heated or contentious, but one of the more amazing things I've witnessed over the years is how the commentariat tend to self-correct when things get out of hand. The editors of the the Morning News are on the job monitoring the action, but very rarely if ever do they have to call foul.

Sociologists and psychologists could probably help explain the phenomenon, how creating a sense of belonging prevents people from befouling the waters with free-floating cruelty and abuse.

The comments have become my favorite part of the tournament, partly because I gain fresh perspectives on the books and partly because when a book I wanted to win goes down in defeat, I know there will be others feeling similar pain.

So it is possible to have internet comment sections that aren't just lairs for haters. If you like books and good book conversation, check it out.

Leah Eskin

The chicken buttons her feathered lab coat, tucks a clipboard under wing and turns to her work: curing the common cold. Her efforts have yielded Chicken Soup, the standard of care in many a household. Served steaming hot, it reduces congestion and — by keeping the patient happily at home — cuts down on contagion. Important contributions to public health.

Big Pharma expands market share via diversification. Likewise Little Farma and its flock of researchers. Their signature product is available in Original, Matzo Ball, With Rice and now Extra Strength.

Roasted fennel elixir

Prep: 15 minutes Cook: 1 hour Makes: 4 servings

This soup will cure whatever ails you.

- 2 pounds bone-in, skin-on chicken thighs, about 5
- Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper
- 1 fennel bulb, trimmed, quartered and sliced ¼-inch thick, fronds finely chopped
- 2 lemons, halved the long way and sliced ¼-inch thick
- 1 onion, quartered and sliced ½-inch thick
- 1 small hot pepper, such as serrano, halved, seeded, thinly sliced
- 4 cloves garlic, whole, skin-on
- 1 teaspoon fennel seeds
- 1 star anise (optional)
- 4 ounces udon noodles

1 Roast: Rub chicken with 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Settle chicken, skin-side up, on a large baking sheet. Set aside ½ cup finely chopped fennel fronds. Heap all remaining ingredients (except noodles) onto the pan, and toss with 1 teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon pepper. Roast at 425 degrees, stirring vegetables occasionally, until they are beautifully caramelized, about 35 minutes.

2 Crisp: Pull pan out of oven. Avoiding garlic and star anise, portion half the vegetables into 4 large soup bowls. Scrape remaining vegetables and 2 of the chicken thighs into a large saucepan. Return sheet pan to oven and let remaining chicken crisp, about 25 minutes.

3 Simmer: Meanwhile, pour water into the saucepan to cover chicken by 1 inch. Stir to break up chicken. Bring to a boil, reduce heat and simmer, partially covered, 25 minutes.

4 Boil: Bring a medium pot of salted water to a boil. Stir in noodles; cook until tender but firm. Drain. Rinse under cool water to stop cooking. Portion a nest of noodles into each of the soup bowls.

5 Slice: When roast chicken is beautifully crisp, pull it out of the oven. Remove and discard bones. Slice meat into 1-inch-wide strips. Portion strips, skin-side up, into the soup bowls.

6 Serve: Strain broth, discard solids. Reheat and add salt if need be. Ladle hot broth into each bowl. Garnish with fennel fronds. Serve steaming hot. Feel better?

Dublin's Teeling aims to put a unique spin on Irish whiskey

By Zak Stambor
Chicago Tribune

It's a delicate line. How do you craft something that's recognizable yet wholly unique?

That was the question Alex Chasko, along with Jack and Stephen Teeling, asked themselves when they set about opening the first new distillery in Dublin in more than 125 years. They knew they wanted Teeling Whiskey to "challenge the norms of what it means to make an Irish whiskey," Chasko said. But what, really, did that mean?

The possibilities were vast. After all, the only limitations they faced were legal; the Irish Whiskey Act of 1980 mapped out the basic requirements for the spirit. The law is straightforward: An Irish whiskey must be made from a mash of malted barley (it may include other unmalted cereal grains); it must be mashed, fermented, distilled to no more than 94.8 percent alcohol by volume; it must be matured in wooden casks for at least three years in Ireland or Northern Ireland; it can't contain additives (other than water and caramel coloring); and it must be bottled at no less than 40 percent alcohol by volume.

Beyond that, they had free rein. And that led Chasko, a Portland, Ore., native who is Teeling's master distiller, to find ways to add a unique stamp to a portfolio of light, approachable whiskeys.

Take Small Batch, a blended whiskey that's the distillery's flagship spirit. It's an Irish whiskey made from casks that are blended, then matured in barrels that previously held rum for about nine months. It's a light, creamy whiskey packed with rum raisin, tropical fruit and honey notes. It's sweet but not cloying.

Similarly, Single Grain is a corn whiskey that's aged in California cabernet sauvignon barrels. It's a surprising spirit, in part because grain whiskeys are generally viewed as a "bulk spirit" produced to fill out a blend. "People tend to be put off by single-grain whiskeys, but we wanted to show people that they can be nice, unique and interesting," Chasko said.

It is. It's a gorgeous copper-colored whiskey that's soft and buttery with red berry and spice notes and a dry finish.

Teeling takes an experimental approach to whiskey-making, which is why it took nine months and 27 attempts to settle on the right blend for its Single Malt. Ultimately, Chasko settled on a multivintage spirit that melds whiskey that has been finished in port, sherry, white Burgundy, cabernet sauvignon and Madeira casks.

The whiskey's nose has notes of marzipan, white pepper and honey, and a complex flavor that's full of spice and cloves, citrus and vanilla.

Judith Martin
Miss Manners

Dear Miss Manners: Some old friends of mine are fond of giving large parties with an eclectic mix of guests reflecting various occupations: arts, education, business, etc. They have asked me to invite some of my interesting acquaintances to their next one.

I'm glad to do so, since I DO know a number of interesting people whom I think would enjoy meeting others. (Let me add that these occasions do not involve fundraising or sales, but are simply for socializing.) The hosts have told me I may invite as many as I wish; I plan to ask maybe four or five.

But I'm unsure how to extend the invitations to them without it sounding as if I were delivering them up to strangers as "fresh meat." Since some are couples, I can't bring them as my date, and since they don't all know each other, I can't herd them in a group like a Scout troop.

It seems incorrect for me to extend invitations to somebody else's private party. Should I give my acquaintances' names to the hosts, who can then add a note to their invitations along the lines of, "Mary suggested we invite you"? Or is there already some protocol for this kind of transaction?

Gentle reader: While it is generous of your friends to extend an open invitation, it is in everyone's best interest that they know who is being asked into their home.

What you propose, giving the pertinent names to the host and having them extend the invitation, is charming. Miss Manners is also immensely relieved to hear that these events are purely for socializing and do not have a price tag attached. Invitations to those, under the guise of meeting new people, are not so charming.

Dear Miss Manners: In today's "sharing" economy, there seems to be a level of expected niceties. I frequently find myself in a car on the way to an airport, wondering how to escape a lengthy, forced discussion. I imagine that the driver is also tired of the same conversations and would enjoy a chance for a moment or two of silence.

At times, I am working. At other times, I am communicating with whoever will be expecting me at my destination, or am coordinating my ID, boarding pass, etc. Earlier this week, I found myself forced to explain the medical details of why we were heading to a health care facility!

Is there any polite way to avoid these awkward conversations?

Gentle reader: Unfortunately, conversation seems to be a commodity in these ride-sharing programs.

Miss Manners has found that most of them have a ratings system where you can express your opinion of the driver — and it often includes rating your conversation. She urges you to share your opinion to the contrary with the company, but until the system is rectified, you may give its drivers polite, limited responses to their inquiries. If that does not work say, "I am so sorry, but I have to get some work done/take this call. Perhaps we can chat later."

Dear Miss Manners: I have been in my line of business for about 10 years, and am increasingly dealing with higher-level management clients at large companies. Clients can be more or less agreeable, but there have been two instances in my career that a client has crossed a line firmly into the unprofessional, becoming verbally abusive or shouting at my team and me.

Both times, I was so surprised that I did not know what to do, so I just stared at the client in great surprise, waited a beat, and then kept talking about the business issue. One time, the client apologized afterward; the other time, the client issued a half-apology.

I do not anticipate many such situations in the future, but does Miss Manners have a better way of responding to situations such as this? In retrospect, I wish I had told the client something that indicated I would not tolerate this behavior. I do not mind losing business if that is the outcome.

Gentle reader: You would be justified in saying exactly that, in measured tones that both model good behavior and make your point. But your previous method of a confounded and lengthy stare seems to have worked well, too.

You should not be deterred by the stare's half-hearted response. It seems to Miss Manners that anyone who is willing to become verbally abusive is not likely to do more than give a half-apology for that behavior. Quietly terminating the business relationship, however, will likely be even more effective.

How not to lose things

Techniques for keeping track of your stuff

MARCO SILVA NAVARRETE/GETTY

Check for places at home where you can easily and reliably park essentials, because having designated spots can reduce the likelihood of losing things, experts say.

"Ideally, you want everything you're going to use close to your fingertips."

— Stever Robbins, host of the "Get It Done Guy" podcast

By Elisabeth Leamy
The Washington Post

Two summers ago I lost my keys for a full week. As a hyper-organized person whom Freud would have labeled "anal retentive," this freaked me out. It was my then-9-year-old daughter who finally found the keys. I had slipped them into the pocket of her book bag while rushing frantically between assorted appointments. The keys had a relaxing week with Kelsea at pottery camp while I sweated and stewed over their absence.

All week long I wished I could "call" my keys as I do my cellphone when I need to find it. So I bought a gizmo to do just that. The product came in two parts: a little fob to attach to the item and a remote control to press so the fob chirps like a homing beacon. I attached the fob, stowed the remote somewhere I wouldn't lose it —wouldn't that be ironic? —and went about my life.

Last fall I lost my keys again. After searching for 20 minutes, I remembered the gizmo. "Yes!" I thought, pleased and proud of my foresight. I found the remote, pressed the button, and ... nothing.

The batteries in the remote, the fob or both had died. I'd chosen a system that required me to remember to change batteries. I had failed both.

There are now even higher-tech stuff-tracking-devices that integrate with your smartphone via Bluetooth. They, too, require batteries that can die. If you go this route, I suggest creating a calendar alert that reminds you to change the batteries annually. Of course, you'll need to find the little round batteries the device requires. And you'll need to remember to reset the calendar alert after you change them. You might as well just remember where you put your keys.

Since "smart technology" failed me, I decided to consult a smart person instead: Stever Robbins, a Harvard MBA and former CEO who coaches other CEOs on productivity. Robbins also hosts the "Get It Done Guy" podcast, where I first heard him talk about how to stop losing things.

"Bluntly, a major way to kill your productivity is to have to search for the things you need," Robbins said. "Ideally, you want everything you're going to use close to your fingertips. If it's lost, you have to move your fingertips to go find it."

Robbins offers three pointers for keeping track of your belongings.

1. Create a designated place for essentials.

Try this: Walk into your home with fresh eyes and look for a place where you can easily and reliably stow your essentials. Every time. If there is no such place, create one. For example, you might install a shelf with hooks beneath it near a power outlet. That way you can place your wallet and phone (plugged in) on the shelf and hang your keys from the hook. Having designated spots for true essentials like this will ward off the bulk of losses.

If you tend to lose things you use less often — say, your toolkit — the same principle applies: Create a specific place you will always keep it and then stick to it. Label the spot, if necessary, to remind yourself.

2. Create multiple places if needed.

Robbins knows our routines can vary. Maybe you enter your home through the back door when coming in from a run but through the front when coming in from your car. Stowing your stuff near the front door when you've just come in the back goes against human nature. So he suggests you create designated spots for your essentials near both doors.

"You want to limit the possible places where lost things can go to as few places as possible," Robbins said. That way you never need to check more than those one or two places to find something.

3. Scan places before you leave.

What about when you're out and about? First, Robbins quickly creates a temporary "designated place" wherever he is. At a coffeehouse, maybe he deliberately places his essential items on the table's right-hand corner: "Then, when I'm going to leave a place, first I scan the area that I designated as my homeless-items place."

Next he scans the entire room or, at least, wherever he has been in that room. For example, Robbins gathers all his luggage by the door before leaving a hotel room, then walks the room from wall to wall to see if he's forgotten anything. He may "waste" a couple of minutes doing that, but he saves many more minutes — calling the hotel, having his lost items shipped — when he finds something he forgot.

Robbins' guidance is gold. I decided years ago to put my wallet in the left outside pocket of my purse and my keys in the right — and I rarely lose them. But sometimes I do. What then?

I turned to certified NeuroLeadership coach Linda Cassell of Quantum Leap Coaching and Training, who has studied brain science extensively to help her clients be more effective executives — and people.

A neuroscientist's key question is, "Under what conditions do we lose things?" she said.

"There is an old adage that says 'never go to sleep when you are angry,' " Cassell said. "If you want to know how not to lose things, never put anything away when you are stressed." This explains why my own system was derailed when I was frantically rushing. "Even if you have the good habit of putting your keys in the same place every time," Cassell explained, "chances are, under those conditions, stress will void that habit."

We don't all have to practice yoga and meditation so we won't lose our keys. Cassell offered tips on quicker, easier ways to reduce and keep track of items.

Yawn

Cassell studied under Mark Waldman, a neuroscience researcher at Loyola Marymount University in Los Angeles, where she learned about the power of yawning. "Yawning can release approximately 1,200 stress-reducing chemicals," Cassell said. "Try worrying while you yawn. It's impossible. Yawning resets the brain. Put away your keys now, and you are likely to remember their location."

Stretch

Stretching your body while you yawn is even better, she said. Take a moment to stretch, starting with your neck and shoulders and moving to your arms and torso. The theory is that stretching causes your brain to communicate relaxing signals to your body, which, in turn, helps you make better decisions. In this case, you'll decide to put your keys in their designated spot.

Be present

Cassell suggests a quick and easy mindfulness exercise. "When you find yourself preoccupied, do something to bring yourself back into the moment," she said. "Rub the palms of your hands together, take a gentle breath or make a Mona Lisa smile. When you are present, you are in the driver's seat. ... You get to choose what actions you will take." The goal is to disrupt the "muscle memory" that allows our bodies to do things without our brains knowing what's going on.

Now that you are calm and conscious, put away your keys, wallet, cellphone or toolkit. Chances are, you won't lose them.

Balmy winter gives way to pink petals

By Adrian Higgins

The Japanese apricot variety Kobai in bloom at the U.S. National Arboretum in Washington, D.C.

The Japanese apricot is a small, twiggy tree that blooms in winter, even if no one is looking. By the time its cousin, the flowering cherry tree, blossoms, the apricot display is history.

The problem with winter flowering trees and shrubs is that they are jerked around by warmth and frigidity so that, at best, you get a trickle of blooms that lack overall punch. At worst, a tree bursts into full bloom only for the entire inventory to take a killing hit.

Some years are better than others. For the Japanese apricot, this winter has proved a banner year. The early freeze kept the buds tight and gave them the chilling period they need. The recent extended balmy spell produced an explosion of color and fragrance.

There was no danger this winter that it would bloom unseen. The show was on full display in the plant border near the entrance to the U.S. Botanic Garden's conservatory. Three small but mature trees had smothered themselves in so many carmine-red blossoms that I was hard-pressed to make out their branches. They were a variety named Matsubara Red, double-flowered but still wild-looking and strongly scented. The trees drew two types of visitors: human admirers and overwintering honeybees in need of fresh pollen and nectar.

Old Japanese apricots can get to 20 feet, but these red varieties were half that height and full of a spicy scent. The Prunus mume is so attractive a tree, so amenable to the small garden, that you wonder why everyone doesn't have it. Well, the answer is that most people notice tree varieties at garden centers when the merchandise is in full bloom. No one thinks to visit a garden center in February, even if it is open.

The Japanese apricot does produce fruit, by the way, but it's bitter and barely edible. The culinary apricot blooms a month later but is a needier plant.

Besides its spraying needs, the fruiting apricot points to the worry that comes with plants that flower at the tail end of winter. We remember the angst last year when a warm February was followed by a frigid March and threatened Washington's cherry blossoms.

But the Japanese apricot and its February ilk are of a different order. They have always taken their chances with midwinter freezes, and their precariousness is understood.

If you consider seasonal stirrings beyond winter bloomers, you get an even stronger sense that more than two months after the solstice, the natural world is awakening. Look closely at the buds on many shrubs and trees, and you will see their scale casings parting to make way for new growth. This is quite evident on rosebushes. (If you haven't done your annual pruning yet, grab some thick gloves and the pruners.)

But back to the Japanese apricot. There are a number of varieties with distinct blooms and growth habits, though they tend to be upright and arching and the blooms are smaller and less relaxed than flowering cherries, so the effect is a little stiffer. Some deft pruning would make them more graceful.

If the strong color of Matsubara Red is too much, a variety named Kobai is a more restrained red-pink with prominent stamens that quiet the color further. Among the soft pinks, Dawn is a popular variety. Hana Kami and Peggy Clarke each have layers of rose-pink petals, but the latter is fuller and softer.

The tree recedes in presence in the growing season, with reasonably attractive yellow fall color. There may be winters when you wonder why you lent precious space to a Japanese apricot, but not this year.

Edgeworthia is another East Asian beauty in need of greater use. Happy in full sun or partial shade, it is a brassy shrub that will grow to about 5 feet high but more than that across after a few years. Its blue-green foliage, when it leafs out, is both cooling and tropical in mood. It is now full of large and fragrant blossoms, with none of the coyness of the apricot's. The buds are conspicuous for weeks before they open as clusters of tubular florets in orange-yellow or red, depending on variety.

Another big-boned early bloomer should be used more. The Japanese cornel dogwood (Cornus officinalis) grows as a large twiggy shrub or small tree and in time develops peeling orange-tan colored bark. It blooms a little earlier than a better-known close relative, the cornelian-cherry dogwood (Cornus mas), and is smothered in globular yellow blooms. Finding retail sources of the apricot, edgeworthia and especially the dogwood may be challenging because of their blooming schedule, but the internet stands ready.

The quest is worth it. Each of them has the power to alter our perception of when the growing season begins, and to convey all the uplifting feelings of renewal, hope and anticipation that comes when life begins again.

Stop beetles before they kill your viburnum shrubs

By Beth Botts
Chicago Tribune

MORTON ARBORETUM

If you see tiny dots or bumps lined up along the underside of a twig on a viburnum shrub, they likely contain viburnum leaf beetle eggs. Now is the time to prune them out.

Hardy, resilient viburnums are among the most popular shrubs in Chicago-area gardens. Many species have fragrant fluffs of spring bloom and berries that attract birds. Now, however, they have an enemy that is hard to beat: viburnum leaf beetles.

These tiny pests can reduce all the leaves of an infested shrub to lace. "If they keep it up for two or three years, they can kill the plant," said Doris Taylor, plant clinic manager at The Morton Arboretum in Lisle.

The best way to combat this pest is to remove the egg cases during the winter or early spring, before the eggs hatch into larvae. "Inspect your viburnums for egg cases right away," Taylor said. "If you move fast, there's probably still time to prune them out before they hatch."

Pruning is effective anytime between November, when the shrubs go dormant for winter, and April, when the eggs hatch. It probably won't eliminate the pest entirely, Taylor said, but you can reduce the severity of an infestation and give your shrub a better chance to survive.

To find the eggs, examine the undersides of the small twigs at the ends of the branches. An egg case is a tiny, dark bump, often roughly the shape of a football, but smaller than a sesame seed. Usually the egg cases line up end to end like pearls strung on a necklace. They start at the twig tips but often extend for several inches down the branch.

Snip out every twig or branch that has an egg mass. For more information and a video that shows the egg masses and the pruning technique, see www.mortonarb.org/viburnum-leaf-beetle.

Be careful to collect all the snippings and destroy them. You can put them in paper bags and set them out for yard waste pickup, but "don't put any twigs in your own compost," Taylor said. "The eggs will survive and hatch, and the beetles will come back to find your viburnum."

The beetles feed only on viburnums. They have a special taste for arrowwood viburnum (Virburnum dentatum), possumhaw (Viburnum nudum), cranberry-bush viburnum (Viburnum opulus), and Nanum Farreri viburnum (Viburnum farreri 'Nanum'). However, they also will feed on many other viburnum species, including wayfaringtree viburnum (Viburnum lantana), blackhaw viburnum (Viburnum prunifolium), and nannyberry viburnum (Viburnum lentago).

What if you don't get the shrubs pruned in time? The eggs will hatch into one-third-inch-long yellow-green larvae, which will turn into small but voracious adult beetles in late June. Some insecticides may help reduce the populations of larvae or adult beetles, but it's important to choose the right product and apply it correctly. The arboretum's plant clinic can advise you on control methods.

If a viburnum is repeatedly infested, consider removing it and replacing it with a more resistant species of viburnum or another kind of shrub. Consult the plant clinic for suggestions.

Where to find hidden discounts

By Debbie Carlson

GETTY

When you're actually in a store, apps can help you find out if an item would be cheaper online or at a competitor.

You may consider yourself a savvy shopper when you search the Web for promo codes for free shipping or a for few bucks off an online purchase, but there are a host of less obvious discounts that can save you money.

These tips work either online or in physical stores and don't require spending money on a store membership or joining an organization that negotiates discounts for its members.

See what you already have. Jeanette Pavini, a savings expert for Coupons.com, said people should review all their credit cards' perks.

"Over all the years of consumer research I've done, it amazes me that people don't take advantage of what their credit cards offer," she said, noting many offer a discounted or free extended warranty for products, among other benefits.

Some medical insurance plans also have additional benefits attached, such as discounts on gym memberships or other wellness programs.

Library cards don't just let you check out books; many offer free museum or zoo passes and allow you to check out items like e-readers or even tools, she said.

"Credit cards, libraries — we know about them, but we never take the time to look to see what else they offer," she said.

Ask. Whether in physical stores or an online retailer's live chat, inquire whether there are any promotions, said Sara Skirboll, shopping and trends expert at RetailMeNot, and Kyle James, founder of Rather-Be-Shopping.com.

Skirboll said she always recommends checking with the associate at the cash register if there are any discounts. She said she's personally scored discounts on clothing by asking about specials. Sales associates may know of a coming sale and may be willing to give you the sale price that day, just to move product.

"It really does work. A smile and a polite ask goes a long way in the retail world, especially for these associates who sometimes have to deal with pretty difficult customers," she said.

James said that if an online retailer has a live chat, ask an associate about coupon codes. "It's worth to politely ask, as many of them are sitting there ready to offer them," he said.

When buying electronics or other big-ticket items in physical stores, ask about open-box or scratched products or floor models, Pavini said. She bought a flat-screen TV for $750 that normally sold for $1,500 because it was an open-box model.

"You have to ask them because they won't say it necessarily. (These products) are in working order, and the retailer may offer the same warranty," she said, adding that you should check about return policies and warranties.

Online deals. As e-commerce grows, apps and browser extensions are there to save you money. Pavini and James recommended browser extension Honey, which works with Chrome and Firefox. After downloading the extension, it will find working promo codes and automatically apply the best one for your purchase.

"One of the most frustrating things about using coupons online is (with many of the ones on) coupon websites, a lot of time they are expired. Honey verifies all the coupons, and they're all active. It's one of my favorites," James said.

James said he likes the Shop Savvy app. Users can scan a product's bar code, and the app will say whether the item is cheaper online or at a competing store. It's especially helpful if the store has a price-match policy, he said, as shoppers can show it to a sales associate to get the cheaper price without having to go somewhere else.

Most people think of gift cards as presents, but Skirboll said to consider buying discounted gift cards to save yourself money, especially for retailers that rarely have sales, such as Nordstrom or Sephora. Websites like Gift Card Granny offer discounts of 5 to 25 percent of the card's face value.

How we find new stuff to buy is changing

By Debbie Carlson

GETTY

Online shopping is not just for targeted buys. Knowing many consumers use social media, companies are embedding purchase links in images. And retailers use a shopper's data to personalize offerings — a way to get shoppers to impulse-buy and to lead them to new products.

Remember those days of going to brick-and-mortar stores to buy one item but coming home with a few other items you didn't know you needed but had to have?

That is happening online, too, as e-commerce is changing from simply buying a specific item to also discovering new products you didn't even know existed. Brands and retailers are leveraging new strategies to target shoppers, said Andrea Woroch, a consumer finance expert.

Some brands are using social media to drive awareness. Knowing many consumers use it to browse, companies are embedding purchase links in images. Shopping apps are becoming more popular as mobile shopping grows. Brands, retailers and shopping aggregators can use that data to personalize experiences, Woroch said.

"Consumers love using shopping apps which are designed to look more like catalogs on their mobile devices and come across goods they didn't necessarily set out to shop for in the first place. ... Some apps like ShopItToMe create personalized sale alerts based on your style, favorite brands and size. They then send you daily or weekly digests of discounts on clothing and accessories based on your personal data," she said.

April Foster, founder and chief executive officer of Inked Brands, an e-commerce company that works with social media influencers to sell goods, said Amazon has become a shopping search engine, more than Google. To encourage browsing and discovery, Amazon has its "interesting finds" stream.

"So many retailers are listing things on their own sites and on Amazon because Amazon is becoming a search engine," she said.

Although online shopping seems so ubiquitous, 90 percent of shopping still occurs in stores, said John Roswech, executive vice president of brand solutions for Criteo, which works with retailers. While much is made of people looking at products in store and buying online, the opposite is also occurring. Criteo's research shows 62 percent of people will research a product online and buy in a physical store.

Those purchasing patterns are important to retailers as they use a shopper's data, whether the person buys in stores, through apps or online. The retailer now will personalize offerings in complementary categories online, Roswech said.

"If you go to Walmart.com, you're going to get a different page experience than I am. Walmart is going to now look at your purchase history and your browsing history and your search history and elevate those types of products that you have looked at or researched or purchased in the past" on their site, Roswech said.

The recommendations for other products, such as "frequently bought together," are ways to get shoppers to impulse-buy and to lead them to new products, Foster and Roswech said.

Roswech said the health and beauty category and consumer electronics are the most successful at turning recommendations for complementary products into sales.

These tactics seem to be working. Roswech said 70 percent of U.S. consumers are making unplanned online purchases.

Like many things disrupted by technology, online shopping has become more fractured, with many tastemakers and influencers suggesting products, rather than everyone shopping at the mall. That's allowed niche brands to rise, Foster said.

But to gain a following, storytelling is important, Foster said. The brands she works with sell products to a like-minded community. For example, if one of their brands is selling a purse, the seller "will show you a million different ways to accessorize it, how to use it, so you ... can visualize how it will fit in your life, so you, too, feel like you need that product," she said.

Discovery shopping doesn't immediately lead to sales, Foster said, so many brands retarget consumers by reminding them about the product they viewed and encouraging them to revisit the site, for instance, with emailed coupons.

Retailers also embed tracking pixels in their sites. After you've been on a seller's site, you might then go to a social media site and see an ad pop up about the seller.

Trust and information are important parts of the discovery process online since buyers may not be able to see the product in person. Michelle Madhok, chief executive officer and founder of She Finds, said online reviews on sites like Amazon and Yelp are critical to help people make decisions.

"At some sites like J.Crew, (reviews) tell you whether it fits large or small, what's the quality like. The reviews really play into people's decisions. It's like a community buying event. You want to know how it worked for other people, so you don't make the wrong decision," she said.

As mobile shopping becomes more popular, it's likely the discovery process will change, Roswech said. Sellers like mobile shopping, especially apps, because there's even more data to collect and personalize what products they show consumers.

"You made a conscious decision to download that mobile app to your phone. You're generally that retailer's most valuable customer because all of your information is stored in there," he said.

Give your baby the moon — or an Eames treasure. Gifts inspired by art and design

By KT Hawbaker | Chicago Tribune

Having a baby changes everything, and that becomes especially apparent once the shower gifts show up.

Of course, there are the must-haves: diapers, bottles and itty-bitty onesies — and, then, there are the toys. Across the board, most baby shower gifts hoist up function over form and tend to lack a few points in the design department.

But, this is the perfect opportunity to help the new kiddo form a lifelong relationship with visual language. If you have an expectant loved one with an individual sense of style, consider showing up to the baby shower with something that exceeds plastic, swirly expectations and takes aesthetics into account. From a Keith Haring bedtime story to an Eames elephant, here are our top picks for baby shower gifts inspired by art and design.

Tips for spring's hot trend: Pattern mixing

Answer Angel

GIUSEPPE CACACE/GETTY-AFP

Pattern got plenty of play on the runway at Gucci's fall 2018 shows. But throwing patterns together can be intimidating.

Dear Answer Angel Ellen: I've finally worked up the nerve to try pattern mixing in my outfit choices. For a long time I have resisted the idea that you can wear — for instance — a plaid print blouse and a floral skirt and look "fashionable." But I'm slowly coming around to the idea that this looks modern and fresh.

First of all, am I right? And second, how to do it? The blogs and fashion bible magazines show these all the time, and they do look interesting, but I'm afraid to make a mistake. What are the rules?

— Betsy Anne K.

Dear Betsy Anne: Yes, this is definitely a trending, modern way to dress. If you had asked me a couple of years ago (when this all started), I would have told you that the key to pattern mixing is to pick up the color in one print and make sure the second print incorporates that color. But that hardly matters anymore.

Judging from the latest runway photos I've seen, even that tip doesn't apply. Just take a look at the Gucci fall 2018 outfits, and you'll see what I mean. But throwing patterns together is, I'll grant you, really intimidating, so here are some thoughts to get you started.

■ The easiest mix is two black-and-white prints of different scales — one big, one small.

■ Once you're comfortable with the black-and-white mix, try it with colors — for instance, a large floral and a more subtle dotted one that have a color or two in common.

■ Stripes are an easy add-on to the mixing bowl — consider your stripes a neutral. Same goes for leopard print, also considered a neutral.

■ Buy a "premixed" top or bottom. You'll see more and more shirts, skirts, blouses and pants that already incorporate two prints.

■ Look online for guidance. Every fashion blogger out there seems to have created a slide show of what works, so let those inspire you.

■ Remember that now, more than ever, in fashion there are no rules.

Dear Answer Angel Ellen: I like to wear my sneakers untied, but it's a pain to tie knots at the ends of the laces to keep them from becoming unlaced. And my kids' shoes are always becoming unlaced because they're not very good at tying a bow (yet). Any thoughts that will help?

— Pete G.

Dear Pete: I've never understood why it's considered fashionable (as opposed to just lazy) for adults not to tie their shoes, but yes, there's a solution. A quick Amazon search turns up a product I didn't know existed: Leazy no-tie elastic shoelaces ($9.95). Other companies make variations of no tie-laces also available from Amazon.

Dear Answer Angel Ellen: I saw a recent ad for designer Dolce & Gabbana clothes featuring a plain black dress adorned with mismatched buttons in a circle around the neckline and down the elbow-length sleeves. I'd like to try this look myself, adding cool random buttons to a little black dress. Will I look like a pathetic copycat or au courant?

Dear Ann: Genius idea. In fact, creative minds think alike. My friends at www.thriftstyleblog.com did the same thing, using a $3 black wool dress from a thrift store and buying fancy buttons from The Button Store in Los Angeles. The owner told the bloggers that they were the seventh shoppers on the hunt for buttons to (frugally) duplicate the Dolce & Gabbana look.

The ThriftStyle writers went a little crazy with the store's ethnic, hand-painted and enamel statement buttons (to the tune of an average $9.60 each for the 13 buttons), but you can try the sale portion of Buttons.com or your local fabric store. Or visit a thrift store on 50 percent off or $5-a-bag days, and pick out garments just for their buttons.

The blog shows how to tape down the buttons to create the best arrangement on the dress. It'll take you an hour-plus to sew them on.

Angelic readers

A challenge from Maggie D: "In your column response to Joe regarding his wife's (almost invisible) eyebrows, I'm surprised you didn't mention Maybelline's Brow Precise Fiber Volumizer. I have thinning, graying eyebrows, and the stuff is magic. It adds color and fibers at the same time, it's cheap at about $7, it comes in several shades, and one tube lasts a long time because a little goes a long way.

"Sometimes I don't have the time or inclination to do the whole eye thing, but my brows will always get done. And given that fuller and darker is all the rage now, I can go slightly heavier without looking 'made up' or just plain weird. I even create a bit of 'messiness' at the fullest part, which makes my brows look a bit younger and works for me. Try it."

Dear Maggie: You've convinced me. I will try this stuff and report back.

Reader rant

Sara M. makes a good point: "Belt loop sizes change almost seasonally. I began a new job this winter and purchased a few new items, including two pairs of nice slacks. The belt loops are too wide for my skinny belts, which float around, yet too narrow for wider, chunkier belts that would look really cute. Must I now find medium belts or new belt widths each time I buy new pants?!"

Now it's your turn

Stylist: Try out silver hair, even in your 20s

By Nara Schoenberg
Chicago Tribune

Lorraine Massey knows what you're hiding.

The veteran hairstylist estimates that 80 percent of women in their 40s have a significant amount of gray hair. She knows what you're spending: $860 a year, on average, for professional coloring every six weeks, $1,720 and up, if you frequent a high-end salon in a city like Los Angeles.

And she has a message for you: Going gray can be a great thing — for your spirit, for your bank account and, yes, for your look.

"In real life, all of us have beautiful shades of color in our hair," said Massey, the co-author of the new book "Silver Hair: A Handbook" and the proud possessor of a luxuriant mane of pewter curls.

"When we're kids, you see the beautiful tones, and if you see some teens who haven't done anything yet, they have these gorgeous tones in their hair. And then silvers — there are never two silvers that look the same. Every one is uniquely different. Some may have wider patches in the back, darker patches. We actually have really interesting hair if we allow ourselves to just take a look."

We asked Massey, author of the best-seller "Curly Girl: The Handbook," about the art and politics of going gray. The following interview has been edited for length and clarity.

Q: You had an "uncoloring epiphany," when you realized you wanted to go silver.

A: Oh, yeah, I went to (a high-end salon) to meet a friend, who was getting her eyebrows done. I just sat and watched, and it was a conveyor belt. Everyone who walked out of that place had the same highlights, same blowout, same clothes, same kind of look: Blowout. Clothes. Slightly anorexic. Blowout. Clothes. Slightly anorexic. But then, when they turned around, some of the ladies were in their 60s, and it was so unflattering. Everything they thought they were hiding, they were actually emphasizing.

Q: Who should consider going silver?

A: Well, look at Diane Keaton. She goes back and forth. I see her on TV, and her hair's silver, and then I see her on TV, and she's dyed it back to blond. So I'll take both pictures and put them together, and her face is brighter with her own, cooler tone of white. It's such a bright color, whereas the blond gets very yellowy, and then the skin tone looks really odd. And also because she's so silver, the blond — it doesn't look really blond anymore. Because it's adhering to the silver, it reads yellow, you know? You've got this yellow tone, whereas the platinum tone is so much more flattering, and it looks really stylish. Just to have brightness around the face — it's great for everybody.

Q: I have a friend who doesn't want to go silver; she says you look 10 years older with gray hair.

A: To me that's such an interesting, closed, one-size-fits-all statement. I totally disagree. If you're 40, do you want to look 30? I'm OK looking my age. Like, what's wrong with looking the age I am (if) I'm doing it with style and with grace, and I'm healthy, and I'm curious? That's one person's opinion.

Ten years older is so interesting these days because I'm in my 50s, and when I'm with my grandkids, (people) think I'm the mom. So what is 10 years back and forth? What does it mean? What would 10 years do for me, really? Who cares, really, if I look 10 years older or younger?

Q: A lot of women worry about the "line of demarcation" between dyed and undyed hair during the grow-out period. What can you do about that?

A: (Some women) say the only time they don't have silver hair is the day they get it colored, so I call them "quick silvers." Their color is going to grow out so fast if they allow it. Within five months or six months, you could be really near to your goal. But (with) the line of demarcation, we need about an inch, and then we can start putting some highlights throughout, especially if you're dark, to try to mimic the silver. It breaks that line up, so it's not so garish. And all you need to do sometimes is just the top few layers.

Q: What do women tell you about going silver?

A lady in the book — I saw her in the park one day. I accosted her, basically. I said, "Oh my God, your hair is gorgeous." And she said, "I'm growing it out." And I said, 'Well, I'm writing this book. Would you be interested?' It turned out she was coming out of a divorce, she was growing out her hair — and she's gorgeous. Beautiful young woman. And she just recently met the love of her life too, and she's never been happier. And the weird part about it — the guy she's in love with now, they have the same streak of gray, on two different sides.

Q: What was your response when you learned that?

A: I was like, "Well, of course."

Bear Necessities ball helps kids with cancer

The 25th anniversary Bear Tie Ball was a record-breaker, raising more than $900,000 to support the Bear Necessities Pediatric Cancer Foundation and its mission to fight childhood cancers and provide hope and support to those who are touched by it.

The Feb. 24 black-tie event at The Geraghty attracted more than 600 supporters and featured an awards presentation, silent and live auctions, inspiring testimonials and live entertainment by Ken Arlen's Front of House band.

Emcee Micah Materre of WGN-Ch. 9 welcomed the crowd and spoke about the nonprofit's reach and fundraising efforts. To date, Bear Necessities has provided more than $20 million for research and support services with a presence across the United States, Canada and Europe. Materre announced that the organization's Bear Hugs Program, which provides customized experiences for kids with cancer, recently launched at Golisano Children's Hospital in southwestern Florida.

BN founder Kathleen Casey spoke about her inspiration for Bear Necessities: her late son, Barrett "Bear" Krupa. Bear passed away at 8 years old after being diagnosed with Wilms tumor, a cancer of the kidney, that was discovered when he was 3. "While fighting for his life, Bear's main focus was trying to figure out ways to make life better for kids like him," she said.

Casey expressed her joy over this year's co-chairs, Courtney Krupa and Tiffany Marshall. Casey and her best friend, Tracy Scurto, co-chaired the first Bear Tie Ball in 1993, and now, 25 years later, their daughters were at the helm.

The William J. Casey Hope Award recipients were Greg Kosinski, Eric and Jeanine Lundstrom, the Palumbo Family Foundation, the Wakerly Family Foundation and the Rev. Paul White, who met the Caseys at Children's Memorial Hospital, where he ministered to Bear following his cancer diagnosis. "These sick kids show us the face of God every day," he said.

Annemarie Kill and her husband, John Duffy, spent thousands trying to repair their Oak Park home's wood-burning fireplace before abandoning the effort and installing a gas fireplace.

Some seemingly small flaws may point to a money pit

By Danielle Braff
Chicago Tribune

When Annemarie Kill and her husband, John Duffy, bought their first house in Chicago's Galewood neighborhood in 2003, the duo knew it needed some cosmetic work — in fact, they were excited to redo the bathrooms and kitchen to make the home their own.

Little did they realize that the back of the house had been sinking for the last 75 years, and they would spend hundreds of thousands on unexpected construction. Their inspector hadn't uncovered the rotting wood posts supporting the back of the house; the couple had no idea they'd eventually have to pour in new concrete to fix the issue, or that they'd have to replace the posts and jack up the back of the house a bit each week, causing the new windows and tile floors they'd installed to crack.

So when Kill and Duffy — along with their two children, now 11 and 14 — were house hunting in Oak Park in 2014, Kill said, they were determined not to land another money pit.

"We got our dream house," said Kill, a divorce attorney. They got an inspector, too, but didn't realize they should also consult someone who specialized in fireplace inspections. As it turned out, the lining inside their wood-burning fireplace was falling apart, as was the top of the chimney. If they lit a fire, they could get carbon monoxide poisoning.

A few months after buying the home — and $20,000 later — Kill, 48, and Duffy, 49, were forced to convert their wood-burning fireplace into a gas fireplace.

"It was just like dominoes falling," Kill said of the fireplace issue.

It would be helpful to know about money pits well before you fall in love with a home, spend the money on an inspector — costs vary depending on the size and age of the home and the region, but a typical inspection can ring up between $300 and $500, according to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development — and before you start to take on the major projects.

Regular people — that is, those who don't know anything about construction or inspections — can

Good news from IRS about home equity loans

Kenneth R. Harney
The Nation's Housing

It's official: Despite widespread fears to the contrary, the IRS has clarified that last year's big tax overhaul did not kill all interest deductions on home equity lines of credit, or HELOCs, and equity loans.

In a policy statement, the IRS said that it has received "many questions ... from taxpayers and tax professionals" about HELOCs and equity loans in the wake of the Tax Cut and Jobs Act of 2017, which passed in December. That legislation eliminated a section of the federal tax code authorizing interest write-offs on "home equity indebtedness" from 2018 through 2025. But as noted in this column in January, the law did not curtail deductions on all HELOC and equity loan interest payments. It depends on how you use the money you borrow.

Taxpayers can "often still deduct interest on a home equity loan, home equity line of credit or second mortgage, regardless of how the loan is labeled," said the IRS, provided the borrowed funds are used to "buy, build or substantially improve the taxpayer's home that secures the loan" and the total debt on the house does not exceed statutory limits. The amount of the first mortgage on the property, combined with the home equity or HELOC debt, cannot exceed $750,000, the newly revised limit for mortgage interest deductions by taxpayers filing joint returns; married owners filing separately have a new ceiling of $375,000. Previously, the limits were $1 million and $500,000.

So what does all this mean in practical terms? Here's a quick example. Say you and your spouse own a $500,000 house and have a $250,000 first mortgage with an interest rate in the mid-3-percent range. You want to put on a family room addition estimated to cost $100,000 and do bathroom upgrades estimated to run $50,000. However, you'd prefer not to give up your superlow interest rate by refinancing into a new, larger first mortgage.

Another option, now fully sanctioned by the IRS: Take out a $150,000 HELOC that will permit you to draw down periodic amounts to pay contractors as they complete scheduled construction benchmarks, leaving your first mortgage

Association has role in getting leak fixed

Howard Dakoff
Condo Adviser

Q: I own a condominium unit, and the drainpipe in the unit above is leaking into my unit and damaging my ceiling. I know this because I cut a hole in my ceiling and can see the water drip coming from the drainpipe in the unit above.

My condo association's property manager told me the water leak is not an association problem and that I have to deal with the unit owner above. To support his position, the property manager cited Section 9.1(a) of the Illinois Condominium Property Act, which states that a unit owner is responsible for damages as a result of the use or operation of their unit. Whom should I contact to get this issue resolved?

A: The property manager cites the correct provision to hold the unit where the leak is emanating financially responsible for the repair costs to the leaking drainpipe. However, the manager is incorrect in saying that this issue is not an association problem.

The water leak is not only damaging your unit, but is damaging the common elements between the two units that could turn into mold; therefore, it is the association that should address an ongoing leak and assess repair costs back to the unit from which the leak emanates.

Send a written demand to both the board of directors and property manager to immediately repair the leaking drainpipe, and send a copy to the unit with the water leak in case the unit owner is not aware of the ongoing leak.

Q: I am a unit owner in a condominium association that has individual limited common element garages assigned to units.

Both our declaration and the Illinois Condominium Property Act allow for the transfer of limited common elements according to an amendment to the declaration recorded with the recorder of deeds.

For many years, at the direction of the association, unit owners were advised to transfer garages by merely executing an assignor/assignee form provided by the condominium association — these forms were never recorded.

The association has now adopted a policy to confiscate individual garages where the transfer was not recorded by declaration amendment upon the sale of a unit because the board alleges the transfer was improperly documented. Is this allowed?

A: Section 26 of the Condominium Property Act expressly allows for the transfer of limited common elements — such as limited common element parking spaces, garages or storage spaces — but the transfer must be documented by an amendment to the declaration executed by the affected unit owners. There are also a few other requirements. The transfer is not effective until the declaration amendment is recorded. Therefore, transfers of individual garages between units without a properly executed and recorded amendment to the declaration are not effective.

However, the fact that transfers of limited common elements may not have been performed properly does not grant the association any rights to the limited common element garages. At most, an individual garage remains connected to the unit to which it was originally assigned until it is properly transferred.

ANDREW BRET WALLIS/GETTY

Based on the facts above, any attempt by the association to confiscate a limited common element garage and convert it into a common element is not valid.

Q: Can Illinois condominium associations send official communications and documents to unit owners by email in cases in which owners give the board their email addresses, and then send regular mail to those unit owners who do not have an email address or simply wish to receive paper mail?

A: Section 18.4(s) of the Condominium Property Act expressly allows condominium associations to adopt a rule for the electronic delivery of notices and other required communications to each unit owner who provides written authorization for electronic delivery and an email address.

For those owners who do not authorize electronic delivery, or do not provide an email address to the board, the association must still deliver notices and documents by U.S. Postal Service or personal delivery.

Condo board's 'secret' settlement might not be

Benny L. Kass
Housing Counsel

Q: Following a dispute between a condominium owner and the condo board, the owner sued the board. A settlement was reached between them, the terms of which are supposedly sealed, so the other condo owners do not know the outcome.

Does a condominium board have the authority to make secret settlements?

Assuming the settlement was monetary, and money went into or out of the condominium association's bank account, where would such a transaction be recorded in the financial statements of the condominium?

I do understand that any response you might be kind enough to give is not legal advice, but your opinion would be appreciated.

A: Again, I get another difficult question to answer, but I love getting these challenging questions. Every week, I am amazed at the creativity of unit owners as well as boards of directors.

First, unless a court document is sealed by authority of the court, all court documents are open to the public. So I would go down to the local county court to determine if, in fact, the settlement has been sealed. If it has been, then the board cannot disclose the terms to anyone without getting permission from both the court and the other party to the lawsuit.

However, as to the money, that's another issue. But here I need more facts. Was an insurance company put on notice of the lawsuit and did they assign an attorney to handle the case? If so, then presumably the insurance company paid the settlement amount. The insurance company will also pay for the attorney fees, but the association has to pay the appropriate deductible.

That amount must be reported on the books and records of the association. Although I am not an accountant, I suspect it will merely state "insurance deductible" and show the amount. This will not give you any information about the nature of the lawsuit or the amount of the settlement.

If the insurance company was not contacted — or if they declined to accept the case — then the amount of the settlement must, in my opinion, be referenced somewhere in the books of the association.

Now, say the settlement was indeed sealed by the authority of the court. In that case, did the court seal the entire settlement agreement, including the amount that was paid to the unit owner? If so, can the board unilaterally disclose that amount?

I think not. The association's attorney should go back to the court and ask that the amount of the settlement be allowed to become public. There is a strong argument here: The association funds do not belong to the association, but to every unit owner according to his or her percentage interest. Every owner is entitled to know how his or her money is being spent.

It would be a mistake, in my opinion, not to report the settlement amount on the association books. I know this will be controversial and I welcome all comments — pro and con.

If a legal settlement between a condominium owner and the condo board is supposedly sealed, other condo unit owners can visit the local county court to investigate. Unless a court document is sealed by authority of the court, all court documents are open to the public.

SAVINGS UPDATE

Should I name beneficiaries for my bank accounts?

When most people think about designating who'll inherit their financial assets when they die, preparing a will comes immediately to mind. But for deposit accounts, naming a beneficiary can more easily and cost effectively transfer your funds to a new owner.

Most banks and credit unions allow you to name one or more beneficiaries for any checking, savings, money market or certificate of deposit account. The legal term for this is "payable on death", and you might see it referred to as POD. Beneficiaries can also be designated for U.S. savings bonds.

When you specify a beneficiary, you still retain all ownership and rights associated with that account as long as you live. But when you die, the beneficiary becomes eligible to take possession of those funds as their own.

The advantage is that POD designations prevent those funds from entering the probate process of settling your estate, which can be costly, lengthy and burdened with paperwork. Instead, beneficiary designations override any will and are easily settled, at no cost. The beneficiary simply has to provide the financial institution with proof of identity and a certified copy of your death certificate.

Naming beneficiaries can be done immediately upon opening a bank account, via the signature card. But if you neglect to do this at the outset, you can always add a POD designee later. You're also free to remove and change beneficiaries any time you like, though a new signature card will be required with each change.

Naming beneficiaries for your deposit accounts is one way to provide a gift to those who inherit your assets, as it significantly reduces the paperwork, time and energy necessary to make the transfers. But be sure to periodically review your various designations to ensure they remain up to date with your current preferences.

The IRS has clarified that last year's tax overhaul didn't kill all interest deductions on home equity lines of credit and equity loans. It depends upon how the money is used.

Since 100 percent of your HELOC dollars are to be used to substantially improve your home — and the combined debt load of $400,000 ($250,000 plus $150,000) is well below the statutory limit and doesn't exceed the value of your home — you should be able to write off all the interest on your HELOC.

In its policy statement, the IRS offered examples of what you cannot do with your HELOC or home equity loan cash if you want to write off the interest. At the top: paying off credit card bills and other personal debts. This is potentially a big deal for some owners because, in past years, debt consolidation — rolling credit card balances and other high-interest-rate personal expenses together into a single, lower-cost loan — was an important financial strategy for many families. You can still do debt consolidations with equity loans — you just can't write off the interest. Another major use that is now cut off from interest deductions when using home equity dollars: paying off student loans.

Though the IRS didn't specify them, other once-popular uses for equity cash that no longer will qualify for write-offs are auto purchases, vacation expenses and buying home furnishings. All these were commonplace during the heyday home equity borrowing binge of 2004-2006, just before the market came tumbling down.

Some good news: You don't have to spend 100 percent of your HELOC cash on home improvements, according to Greg A. Rosica, a tax partner with Ernst & Young, the national accounting firm. You can buy or do other things with the money — you just can't deduct the interest you pay on them. Quick example: Say you own a $500,000 house with a $300,000 first mortgage. You borrow $100,000 via a HELOC this year. You spend $80,000 on a new roof and master bath. You spend the other $20,000 on paying off student loans. Under IRS allocation rules, you can still write off interest on the $80,000 you spend on home improvements — four-fifths of the total. Interest payments on the student loans are not deductible.

Bottom line: Americans' home equity just hit a record $14.1 trillion, according to the Federal Reserve. So there's plenty of cushion that could be tapped for responsible purposes — whether homeowners choose to deduct the interest or not.

spot a potential money pit the first time they tour a house. We spoke to realty agents, an inspector and a contractor who shared exactly what to look for.

"While many people tend to look at the pretty aspects of a house, there are many issues that can make it a money pit," said Jerry Grodesky, managing broker at Farm and Lake Houses Real Estate in Loda, Ill.

Grodesky once looked at a 1960s brick home with a client who had already visited the house with another agent. "We got to see cracking foundation and a rusty electrical box, amongst other issues," he said. "I sobered the buyer up that the pretty kitchen was not worth the price with all the potential issues that a home inspector might find."

Experts suggest that buyers keep their eyes peeled for these flaws, which hint at more dire problems:

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

A gas fire flickers at the Oak Park home of Annemarie Kill and John Duffy. They spent $20,000 before giving up on keeping the fireplace wood-burning.

Doors that don't close properly. This — or a crack in the foundation, or uneven steps leading into the home — can signal that the home has settled, and you have an uneven foundation, said Joe Taylor, contractor and owner of Chicago-based Taylor Construction. Most commonly, foundation problems can allow water to easily enter the home, leading to water damage. But an uneven foundation also could mean that the house will need to have concrete pumped into the slab (officially called concrete leveling or mudjacking) to bring the home back up to level and fix the water issues. Pipes also may need to be repaired, along with anything else that is altered during the settling or movement. "It's a mess," Taylor said. A cracked foundation could lead to damage that might cost anywhere from a few thousand dollars to more than $20,000, according to Taylor.

Discoloration. Water is your home's No. 1 enemy, said Steve Nations, owner of Nations Home Inspections, based in Oak Park. "If you could keep your house dry, at least the parts that are supposed to be dry, then it'll last for a long time," Nations said. "If it gets wet, it'll go downhill fast." To easily spot water damage, Nations said to look at all the walls and ceilings, trying to spot any discoloration — yellow spots on a white wall — that might signal a water leak. In the basement, scan the bottoms of walls for any signs of water leaks. While you're down there, take a deep breath. Do you smell any hint of mold or mustiness? That odor could point to a water problem, Nations said.

Bad water pressure. Run the water in every bathroom sink. "Or even better, run the water at the sink and at the tub or shower at the same time," Nations said. "Is the water pressure good?" Plenty of older houses with old, galvanized steel water pipes have bad water pressure that can be fixed only with a costly upgrade to copper pipes.

Uneven stairs. Pay attention to these. In a flight of stairs, all the riser heights should be the same, as should all the tread depths. "In my experience, if the carpenter didn't get the stairs right, then he probably messed up plenty of other things that are likely to come back to haunt you later," Nations said.

Windows that don't open. Very old double-hung windows are often hard to open, Nations said. And plenty of casement windows (the kind that are hinged on the side and have to be cranked open) that are only 15 to 20 years old have problems with the crank mechanism that makes them very hard to open and close, he added. Replacement windows can be pricey, costing up to $1,000 each.

Dead trees. If any of the trees on the property don't have leaves in the spring, summer or fall, they may be dead. "Something as simple as a dead tree in a yard in the spring and summer months may not seem like a big deal, but the reason it died could tell another story," said Kristin Trzoski, realty agent with Prime Real Estate, based in Northwest Indiana.

Have beetles or ants taken over the tree? Those have strength in numbers, and they can put the integrity of the tree in danger, causing it to fall over and cause damage to the home. An arborist should be able to offer a free or low-cost inspection to let you know if the tree needs to go — and why. "Something as simple as knocking down a tree may be in order for a few hundred to a few thousand dollars to prevent future mishaps," Trzoski said. Also, making sure those insects haven't infested the home is important and isn't always easy to know right away, she said.

An uneven floor. Many older homes have uneven floors, which could point to settlement or other issues — even termites, Grodesky said. Typical home inspectors won't be able to determine the exact cause of the uneven floors. Potential buyers should seek out a structural engineer before purchasing, Grodesky said — that's the only way to know for certain whether there are big problems in store.

Our Products

"My installation was small in terms of linear feet but difficult in that the guards had to be installed against a rubber membrane porch roof and around a bay window with multiple angles. The installation was flawless. Over several years I have tried literally every style of gutter guard available from the big box stores, and none can compare in performance and quality with SpringRock guards."

Rancics list Gold Coast mansion: $6.8M

By Bob Goldsborough

VHT STUDIOS

Reality TV personalities and restaurateurs Bill and Giuliana Rancic have listed their Gold Coast neighborhood mansion, which features this dining room.

Bill Rancic, the Chicago-area native who in 2004 won the first season of eventual President Donald Trump's "Apprentice" reality show, and his TV personality wife, Giuliana, listed their five-bedroom, 8,098-square-foot vintage mansion in Chicago's Gold Coast neighborhood for $6.8 million on Feb. 27.

Bill Rancic has long specialized in renovating and selling real estate; the Rancics are also partners at two Chicago restaurants, RPM Italian and RPM Steak. Now, he and his wife are seeking a buyer for their Gold Coast home less than four years after they paid $2.125 million for it. Since that time, they have renovated the Victorian-style mansion down to the studs.

Today, the mansion, which was built in 1886, has five bedroom suites, high ceilings, radiant heated floors and a lower level with a media room, wood-paneled walls, a full bar and three custom TVs. The mansion's kitchen has several Sub-Zero refrigerators, slabs of Calcutta marble and two full-height wine coolers, while the third-floor master suite has a 15-foot cathedral ceiling and a two-story bathroom and dressing room.

Other features include an attached and heated two-car garage, a roof deck and a deck off the family room that has an outdoor fireplace, a kitchen and a large-screen TV.

Former Chicago Bears head coach Dave Wannstedt sells Near North condo for $1.025 million: Former Chicago Bears head coach Dave Wannstedt and his wife, Janet, on Tuesday sold their two-bedroom, 1,786-square-foot condominium unit on the 16th floor of the Pinnacle building in the Near North neighborhood for $1.025 million.

Retired from coaching and now a college football studio analyst, Dave Wannstedt, 65, was the Bears head coach from 1993 until 1998. The Wannstedts' most recent stint as Chicago-area homeowners began in 2012, when they paid $930,000 for the 16th-floor Pinnacle unit.

In June, the couple, who also have a home in Naples, Fla., listed the 16th-floor unit for $1.095 million. In August, they cut their asking price to $1.025 million, and then in November, they reduced it further to $995,000.

However, they aren't cutting ties with Chicago. Instead, they traded up in September, paying $1.39 million for a three-bedroom, 2,100-square-foot condo unit on the 23rd floor of the Pinnacle.

Mike Kravitz of Re/Max, who represented the buyer, confirmed the sale. Listing agent Chezi Rafaeli of Coldwell Banker declined to comment on the transaction.

87th-floor Trump Tower condo sells for $9.4 million: A four-bedroom, 6,850-square-foot condominium unit that takes up half of the 87th floor of the Trump International Hotel & Tower sold March 1 to an unidentified buyer for $9.4 million.

The sale of the unit comes a little more than two weeks after a three-bedroom, 5,500-square-foot condo that takes up half of the building's 88th floor sold to manufacturing heiress Judith Blazer for $7.7 million.

That 88th-floor unit, which previously had been rented by comedian and TV show host Steve Harvey, is one level below the tower's top-floor unit, which sold for $17 million in 2014 to Vistex founder Sanjay Shah.

The sellers of the 87th-floor unit, retired Eaton Corp. executive Thomas S. Gross and his wife, Jean Michelle Gross, initially had sought far more for the unit.

The couple listed it in September 2016 for $12.7 million and then reduced their asking price three times in 2017, to $12.5 million, $11.9 million and finally $9.95 million.

Chezi Rafaeli of Coldwell Banker represented the buyer of the 87th-floor unit, whom he declined to identify other than to describe as a billionaire and a philanthropist.

Rafaeli also had represented the building's developer when it sold the unit to the Grosses as raw space for $5.85 million in 2012. And Rafaeli initially represented the Grosses in 2016 and 2017 when they were asking $12.7 million.

Rafaeli said that the Grosses spent "another $5 million" to build out the 87th-floor unit.

He also noted that the sale of their unit was for about $1,372 per square foot, which was less than the $1,400 per square foot that the 88th-floor unit fetched.

"My client felt like it was a great opportunity to get a place with a 16-foot ceiling for below $10 million," Rafaeli said. "The buyer got a really great deal after the seller spent so much money on the unit."

The unit has 4½ baths, floor-to-ceiling windows, millwork, built-ins, rift sawn oak floors, hand-crafted hardware, designer paint and fabric wall coverings, motorized shades, remote-controlled custom lighting, a seven-zone audiovisual system, an eat-in kitchen with a wine cellar and a butler's pantry, and custom built-ins in each of the bedrooms.

Also included in the condo unit sale were five garage spaces and private storage.

Don Butler, Ford's executive director for connected vehicles and services, speaks at a Las Vegas tech trade show in January. Services that share personal info will require opt-in, he said.

In-car ads may be on way

Automakers look to profit off driver data

By Gabrielle Coppola and David Welch
Bloomberg News

Picture this: You're driving home from work, contemplating what to make for dinner, and as you idle at a red light near your neighborhood pizzeria, an ad offering $5 off a pepperoni pie pops up on your dashboard screen.

Are you annoyed that your car's trying to sell you something, or pleasantly persuaded? Telenav, a company developing in-car advertising software, is betting you won't mind much. Car companies — looking to earn some extra money — hope so too.

Automakers have been installing wireless connections in vehicles and collecting data for decades. But the sheer volume of software and sensors in new vehicles, combined with artificial intelligence that can sift through data at ever-quickening speeds, means new services and revenue streams are quickly emerging. The big question for automakers is whether they can profit off all the driver data they're capable of collecting without alienating consumers or risking backlash from Washington.

"Carmakers recognize they're fighting a war over customer data," said Roger Lanctot, who works with automakers on data monetization as a consultant for Strategy Analytics. "Your driving behavior, location has monetary value, not unlike your search activity."

Carmakers' ultimate objective, Lanctot said, is to build a database of consumer preferences that could be aggregated and sold to outside vendors for marketing purposes, much like Google and Facebook do today.

Auto executives emphasize that data-crunching will allow them to build a better driving experience — enabling cars to predict flat tires, find a parking space or charging station, or alert city managers to dangerous intersections where there are frequent accidents. Data collection could even help shield drivers from crime, Ford's chief executive officer said in January at the CES technology trade show.

"If a robber got in the car and took off, would you want us to know where that robber went, to catch him?" Jim Hackett asked the audience during a keynote in Las Vegas. "Are you willing to trade that?"

Car companies are betting if they offer you the right carrot — discounted car insurance, a coupon at the gas pump — you'll share your data without blinking, just as you do when you post on Facebook or type a query into a Google search.

"The benefit there is hopefully an improved relationship, so we know you better, we understand you better and we're able to deliver better services to you," Don Butler, Ford's executive director for connected vehicles and services, said in an interview.

The potential to share data — both anonymized and personalized — with third parties represents the biggest opportunity, Butler said. Like most auto executives, he's quick to point out that customers will have the choice to opt in to services that require sharing information, such as their location or driving habits.

Of course, drivers may not understand what privacy rights they're signing away. A Government Accountability Office report published in July found none of the 13 carmakers in the study that collected data from connected vehicles had easy-to-read privacy notices and most don't explain data-sharing and data-use practices.

The Federal Trade Commission has jurisdiction over consumer data and privacy, but there are no specific rules for the auto industry, according to Lauren Smith, a policy lawyer at the nonprofit Future of Privacy Forum. Instead, automakers came up with their own set of privacy principles, which are enforceable by the FTC.

Banks and finance companies are some of the businesses pondering what they could learn from your driving habits. Otonomo, an Israeli startup, is helping them figure it out.

The company, which counts global auto supplier Aptiv among its investors, is a digital broker: It scrubs and organizes bits of data for carmakers, sifts out the regulatory hopscotch for different countries and lets drivers select via mobile app which information they want to share with which companies in exchange for discounts or rewards. Otonomo, which recently said it's getting a $3 million investment from NTT Docomo Ventures, is working with 10 automakers, including Daimler, and has more than 75 third-party clients signed up, CEO Ben Volkow said.

Many of the potential data buyers that Otonomo has signed are the same ones the automakers talk about: insurance companies, mechanics, gas stations, city planners, fast-food joints. But Wall Street is also on the list of prospective clients.

A few examples: Hedge funds probing the health of the economy want anonymized trunk sensor data to see whether you bought anything when you went to the mall, which is a more accurate proxy for consumer sentiment than the satellite photos used today. Banks may want to know whether you stopped driving to work, since the loss of jobs in aggregate could mean an imminent downturn. Credit card companies might want to offer you a loan if they know your car broke down.

"That's very future-looking, and we're obviously mapping those out, but they're not happening today," said Lisa Joy Rosner, Otonomo's chief marketing officer. "The first go-to market is around driver experience, driver efficiency and convenience."

Telenav, the Silicon Valley company looking to bring pop-up ads to your infotainment screen, has been testing a "freemium" model borrowed from streaming music services to entice drivers to share their data. Say you can't afford fancy features like embedded navigation or the ability to start your car through a mobile app. The original automaker will install them for free, so long as you're willing to tolerate the occasional pop-up ad while idling at a red light. Owners of luxury cars won't have to suffer such indignities, since the higher price tag paid likely would have already included an internet connection.

Ky Tang, director of business development at Telenav, said his research shows "strong receptivity" among low-end and middle-tier vehicle owners to look at ads in exchange for free services in the car. "This is a business model that has been proven many times over on web and mobile," he said.

The pop-up car ads could generate an average of $30 annually per vehicle, to be split between Telenav and the automaker. He declined to say whether anyone has signed up for the software.

Do you buckle up in the back seat? You should

By Fran Kritz
The Washington Post

If you're reading this story from the back seat of a car, there's a good chance you're not wearing a seat belt. A recent survey by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety found that 28 percent of respondents don't always click a seat belt when they're in the back of a car.

The most common reason for not buckling up in the back, according to the 1,172 survey respondents, is the rear seat is safer than the front. But that's not always true.

"Adults have gotten the message that it's safer for kids to ride in the back seat properly restrained, but when it comes to their own safety, there is a common misperception that buckling up is optional," said Jessica Jermakian, a senior research engineer at IIHS.

According to data from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, 4.3 percent of 22,441 fatalities — or 966 deaths — in 2015 involved unrestrained people in rear seats. And IIHS research finds that unbuckled rear-seat travelers are eight times as likely as buckled rear-seat passengers to be injured or killed in a crash.

"While the rear seat retains its reputation as the safest part of the car, in reality that is now the front seat for adults and older teenagers," said Kristy Arbogast, director of engineering at the Center for Injury Research and Prevention at Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

The rear seat hasn't become more dangerous, Arbogast said, "it's that the front seat has become safer." Improvements to the front seat include lap and shoulder belts with advanced features that reduce forces experienced in a crash and that minimize slack, and new types of air bags, said Jason Levine, executive director of the nonprofit Center for Auto Safety.

Fran Kritz is a freelancer.

The Insurance Institute for Highway Safety found that rear-seat passengers who don't wear a seat belt are eight times more likely to die in a traffic crash than rear-seat passengers who do wear a seat belt.

ROBERT DUFFER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The redesigned 2018 Lincoln Navigator in Reserve trim has a nearly $90,000 price tag.

Navigator outdoes Escalade

By Robert Duffer
Chicago Tribune

A familiar family scene in a full-size SUV: Two parents up front, four tweens behind, a sister in the third row aggravating her brother and his teammates in the second row, who are barking and bobbing with all the excitement of leaving for a faraway game. Here's where it becomes less familiar: The parents are talking calmly, almost softly, massaged by 30-way adjustable seats and a sound system that dulls the discord from the rear seats.

To be clear, the 2018 Lincoln Navigator didn't mute all the nuisances of traveling en masse, but it certainly diminished the dissonance from the deep.

We can talk about the 200-pound reduction in weight from the outgoing model, a more fuel-efficient and more powerful 450-horsepower twin-turbo V-6 engine paired to a new 10-speed transmission used in Ford's off-road warrior known as the Raptor, or that it's built very similarly to the Ford F-150, America's best-selling vehicle. That's all fine and good but those seats! Those seats are something else.

It's like a recliner built into a seat, but better than a La-Z-Boy because there is a separate thigh adjustment for each leg. Then there's all the side bolstering and back and butt functions. To customize the massager, the lumbar, mid- and upper back regions all have their own setting, with 10 degrees of intensity accessible through the touch screen. The activation button is on the door panel with the other seat buttons, so it's magic hands at the push of a button. I'll go ahead and use Lincoln's phrase of "perfect position" seats (a $1,500 option that is well worth it).

The seats epitomize Lincoln's intentions with the new Navigator. For nearly $90,000 Lincoln wants to provide first-class comfort with full-size family functionality. Each of the three third-row seats can be lowered with a push of the button, and third-row passengers are not relegated to third-rate status, because a button reclines their seats as well. There's plenty of headroom for two adults to fit back there, too. Without the power fold option, the second row seats are not as simple to move in the eight-seat configuration, though our tweens eventually figured it out. Overall, it is roomier and more evolved than the Cadillac Escalade.

A knob in the center console opens access to the seven different drive modes, though we couldn't much tell the difference in them, other than some more responsiveness and delayed shift points in "excite" mode. At 5,855 pounds, there's more excitement from the seats. Toggling between normal and conserve modes, on mixed-use driving, we averaged just shy of 16 mpg, which is the EPA estimate for city only. On the highway only it was more like 19.5 mpg. That was disappointing, though we weren't really lightfooting it. The 10-speed is quick and smooth, and the engine delivers what's expected.

Expectations should be high at this price point, and Lincoln exceeds them. The Navigator in Reserve trim is roomier, more refined and more complete than the Escalade or the Infiniti QX80. The $10,000 question is if it's worth that much more than the Ford Expedition in Platinum trim. Given the state of air travel, the Navigator might be the best way for the larger family to travel, or to haul the team from one event to the next.

Idle question: Shut-off saves gas?

Bob Weber
Motormouth

Q: With the engine idling, how long does it take to consume a gallon of gasoline? I'm asking because I wonder if shutting off the engine at stoplights actually saves anything or if it is simply hype.
— G.E., Crystal Lake, Ill.

A: Based on work developed by Argonne National Laboratory, the idle fuel consumption rate with no load (no use of accessories such as air conditioners, fans, etc.) varies widely. Compact cars with 2-liter engines consume about 0.16 gallon per hour. A large sedan with a 4.6-liter engine consumes just over twice as much fuel at idle, or over a quart. That may not sound like much, but carmakers are seeking ways to save every extra drop of fuel to meet federal corporate average fuel economy standards.

Q: As a teenager in the 1960s, I learned to drive in a car with a column-mounted three-speed manual gearshift. What year was the last American car with a "three on the tree?" Are the modern transmissions cheaper to produce, provide better economy or are they safer? Or is the customer just too lazy to be bothered by the physical effort needed to change gears?
— B.P., Cedar Rapids, Iowa

A: Wikipedia reports that the column-mounted manual shifter disappeared in North America by the mid-1980s, last appearing in a 1987 Chevy pickup, if you can trust Wikipedia. Sadly, most Americans prefer automatic transmissions. Perhaps it is because shiftless kids never learned to use a manual shifter or, as you suggest, they are simply too lazy. For what it is worth, Mrs. Motormouth refuses to buy a car unless it has a stick. Maybe her next car will be a Dodge Challenger Hellcat.

JOE RAEDLE/GETTY

Q: I have a 2009 Lincoln MKZ with almost 100,000 miles. When I put it in reverse a beep warning alarm goes off if it is about to make contact with some object. When I backed the car out of the driveway a few days ago a dashboard light came on saying to check the "parking aid assist." I took it to a dealer who said it might need a computer module that would cost $2,500 and that it would cost $100 to run the test to determine what the problem actually was. Spending up to $2,600 to fix a backup alarm buzzer sounds ridiculous to me. Any suggestions for a less expensive solution?

A: One simple solution is to install an aftermarket backup camera. Many of them simply mount to the license plate frame and are wired into the backup lights to power them in reverse. Recently, however, there has been an explosion of self-powered (battery) backup cameras that use a smartphone to display the image to the driver. No wires attached! Not only is this less expensive than repairing your warning system, it updates to the current backup technology.

Q: During the course of a 20-minute highway drive it is not unusual for me to see four cars with a single headlight ... and I'm being careful not to count motorcycles. It does make for a good game of Padiddle though!
— C.T., Berwyn, Pa.

A: We've heard that Padiddle started out as a kissing game, but morphed into being the first to touch the car's ceiling (or punching your brother) when spotting an oncoming car with only one headlight. We are not sure what is causing the phenomenon you report, but we would like to remind our readers that when one light goes out, you should replace both. After all, they are the same age and the second may soon fail.

LEGAL NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNERS

Cook County Annual Tax Sale Notice to Property Owners, Annual Tax Sale Schedule and Delinquent Real Estate Tax List

This legal notice includes a list of properties of real estate on which 2016 property taxes (due in 2017) are delinquent and subject to sale as of March 1, 2018.

NOTE: This list may include some properties on which the taxes were paid after the list's preparation on March 1, 2018. It is the property owner's responsibility to verify the current status of payment. This list does not include all the properties in Cook County that are delinquent and subject to sale. For a complete listing of the properties in your neighborhood that are subject to sale, please consult your neighborhood newspaper.

Under Illinois law, the Cook County Treasurer's Office must offer properties having delinquent real estate taxes and special assessments for sale. IF YOUR PROPERTY IS LISTED IN THIS NOTICE FOR SALE OF DELINQUENT REAL ESTATE TAXES, IT IS IMPORTANT FOR YOU TO TAKE ACTION SO THAT YOUR TAXES ARE NOT SOLD. The tax sale is scheduled to begin FRIDAY, MAY 4, 2018. The sale of taxes will result in a lien against the property that will add, at a minimum, hundreds of dollars in fees to the amount currently due. Sale of the tax and continued failure by the owner to redeem (pay) may result in the owner's loss of legal title to the property.

Prior to sale, delinquent taxes may be paid online from your Bank Account or Credit Card by visiting cookcountytreasurer.com. Personal, company, and business checks will be accepted only through April 6, 2018. After April 6, 2018 all payments must be made by CERTIFIED CHECK, CASHIER'S CHECK, MONEY ORDER, CASH, or CREDIT CARD. Please note that under Illinois law, the Treasurer's Office cannot accept payments of delinquent taxes tendered after the close of the business day immediately preceding the date on which such taxes are to be offered for sale. For questions about submitting a payment or to verify the precise delinquent amount, you may contact the Cook County Treasurer's Office by phone at (312) 443-5100 or by e-mail through our website at www.cookcountytreasurer.com (click on "CONTACT US")

Advertisement and Notice by Collector of Cook County of Application for Judgment and Order of Sale of Delinquent Lands and Lots for General Taxes for the years indicated, for order of sales thereof, as provided by law.

COUNTY OF COOK
STATE OF ILLINOIS
March 11, 2018

NOTICE is hereby given that the said Collector of Cook County, Illinois, will apply to the County Division of the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois on Friday, March 30, 2018, for judgment against all lands and lots, hereinafter described as being delinquent, upon which taxes (together with any accrued interest and costs) remain due and unpaid, for an order for sale of said lands and lots for satisfaction thereof, fixing the correct amount due. Final entry of said order will be sought on Friday, April 27, 2018.

NOTICE is further given that beginning on the 4th day of May, 2018, A.D., at the hour of 8:30 A.M., all said lands and lots, hereinafter described for sale for which an order shall be made, or has been made and not executed as noted, will be subject to public sale at 118 N. Clark St, Room 112 (Randolph Street entrance), in Chicago, Illinois, for the amount of taxes, interest and costs due thereon, respectively.

The following is a list of the delinquent properties in Cook County upon which the taxes or any part thereof for the 2016 tax year remain due and unpaid; the name(s) of the owners, if known; the property location; the total amount due on 2016 tax warrants (excluding delinquent special assessments separately advertised); and the year or years for which the taxes are due.

In lieu of legal description, each parcel of land or lot is designated by a property index number (PIN). Comparison of the 14-digit PIN with the legal description of any parcel may be made by referring to the cross-indices in the various Cook County offices.

The Cook County Collector does not guarantee the accuracy of common street addresses or property classification codes at the time of sale. Tax buyers should verify all common street addresses, PINs, classifications, and ownership by personal inspection and investigation of said properties and legal descriptions prior to purchasing general taxes offered at the sale.

NO TAX BUYER WILL BE PERMITTED TO OBTAIN A TAX DEED WITH RESPECT TO ANY PROPERTY OWNED BY A TAXING DISTRICT OR OTHER UNIT OF GOVERNMENT. WHEN AN ORDER TO VACATE THE TAX SALE OF ANY SUCH PROPERTY IS ENTERED, THE FINAL RESULT MAY BE A REFUND WITHOUT INTEREST.

WALTER SCOTT'S

Personality

Parade

WALTER SCOTT ASKS ALAN CUMMING

The Emmy-nominated actor for The Good Wife, 53, takes the lead in his own CBS series, Instinct (March 18). He plays Dr. Dylan Reinhart, a former CIA operative living quietly as a university professor and author—until he's lured back to his old life to help catch a serial killer copying a villain in his fictional books.

How will Instinct stand out from other crime shows? The quirkiness of the characters and the snarkiness of the dialogue, in addition to having a good mystery.

How big of a deal is it that Dylan is gay? It was one of the reasons I wanted to do the show. It's another layer to the character that makes it interesting to play. But socially and politically, I think it's important to have a character with a successful same-sex marriage on network screens.

What was your role as an executive producer? The two things that I feel I contributed were to have vegan options on the catering menu and to help create an atmosphere where everybody felt appreciated. It was a very egalitarian set. We have a lot of fun. One of the camera guys has a speaker on the dolly and we dance in between takes.

You sing, you write books, you're a photographer. What inspires you to do so many things? Because I'm allowed to. I feel, "Why not?" I get bored quite easily, but you don't get bored when you have so many options.

BRÜHL, PIKE SPEND 7 DAYS IN ENTEBBE

Daniel Brühl, currently starring in TNT's The Alienist, also appears in the movie 7 Days in Entebbe (March 16), a thriller inspired by a tense 1976 incident. Brühl and Rosamund Pike, both 39, portray hijackers who force an international flight to land in Entebbe, Uganda, while officials decide whether to negotiate or attempt to rescue the hostages.

DENNIS QUAID FINDS REDEMPTION

First it was a song that brought hope to millions. Now it's a movie of the same name, telling the story of how Bart Millard (J. Michael Finley), the lead singer for the contemporary Christian group MercyMe, was inspired to write "I Can Only Imagine." The movie (in theaters March 16) stars Dennis Quaid, 63, as Millard's father in the tale of an abusive childhood and a miracle of redemption.

How did Alicia Vikander get so buff for Tomb Raider?
— Jamie K., Des Moines, Iowa

A: The Oscar-winning actress, 29, underwent a seven-month food-and-fitness plan to look the part of action heroine Lara Croft for Tomb Raider (March 16), based on the popular video-game franchise. The regimen included mixed martial arts, rock climbing, water work and archery, as well as eating every three hours and eliminating sugar and alcohol from her diet.

EMAIL YOUR QUESTIONS FOR WALTER SCOTT TO PERSONALITY@PARADE.COM

FOUR QUESTIONS FOR Auli'i Cravalho

The 17-year-old Hawaii native got her big break as the singing star of Disney's animated Moana. Now the high school senior will play Lilette Suarez in NBC's new musical TV drama series Rise (March 13), about a high school teacher (Josh Radnor) who takes over a school's lackluster theater department, inspiring the faculty (including Rosie Perez), students and the entire town.

1 Is Rise the new Fame? Fame was musical-based; they sang about their feelings, danced and broke out in song. On Rise, each character goes through rehearsals for [the musical production] Spring Awakening, figures out their home and personal lives and rises above their circumstances.

2 This is your first TV series. How is this different from doing an animated film? I need to figure out what my face is doing, because for Moana, I was in a booth and it was primarily, "How am I sounding?" I get to work with Josh Radnor and Rosie Perez, and they've really been guiding me through this new process.

3 Did you have a favorite Disney movie growing up? Mulan [based on a Chinese folktale about a maiden who becomes a national heroine] was my favorite. She did what was necessary and wanted to honor her family in everything she did. That taught me selflessness.

4 What's the biggest culture shock living in New York City? I've grown up in Hawaii with the four seasons being summer, summer, summer and summer. New York is so cold. I used to say, "When I get to New York, I'm going to wear cute scarves, boots and beanies." Now I'm just trying to survive.

How did she land her role in Moana? Go to Parade.com/cravalho to find out.

For the Love of DOGS

Do you treat Fido like family? You're not alone. Meet the pet lovers who are crazy for canines—throwing them parties, taking them on vacations and leaving them something in their wills. By Leanne Potts

Weeks before the big day, Kathy Kontrim begins planning the annual birthday party for her basset hounds, Herbie, Webster and Barney.

Kontrim, an engineer in Memphis, Tenn., reserves a cake made just for dogs, buys party hats, balloons, decorations and favors, and sends out invitations that specify no cats allowed. Last year, 30 dogs showed up for the backyard bash. "When we got out the cake, Herbie knew it was for him," Kontrim says. "He barked when we sang 'Happy Birthday.'"

Don't snicker. Kontrim's on trend. Americans are spending money on and investing emotional energy in dogs like never before. Last year we spent almost $70 billion on our pets, a nearly 70 percent increase from 2007, according to the American Pet Product Association (APPA). Besides throwing them birthday parties, we're taking them on vacation with us, buying them premium food and taking them to dog-friendly restaurants.

Around 75 percent of us say our dog is part of our family. In fact, more than half of us let our dogs sleep in our beds. Since there are 90 million dogs owned in the United States, that means around 45 million pooches are sharing their human's pillow on any given night.

What's going on here? Has something fundamental changed in humans' ancient relationship with dogs?

Our Dogs, Our Selves

Demographic shifts help tell the story. Nearly 30 percent of U.S. households have just one person in them. That's nearly double the number of people who lived alone in 1960. Millennials are waiting longer to marry and have children. And baby boomers are living longer, healthier lives. These trends mean there are a lot of people who have the money, time and desire to treat a pet like a child, says John Bradshaw, an honorary research fellow at the University of Bristol in England and author of The Animals Among Us: How Pets Make Us Human.

We're not the first to treat animals like children, says Bradshaw, who pioneered the study of pet ownership called anthrozoology. Royals and nobles in the Middle Ages had dogs, cats and birds that ate people food and were treated very well, he says. "The recent explosion in indulgent pet-keeping can be seen as a re-expression of an instinctive part of human nature, which our relative affluence allows us to express to an unprecedented extent."

Dog parties certainly fall into the "unprecedented extent" category. Take Roxy, a Shih Tzu. She had a "bark mitzvah" when she turned 13. Her "dad," Howard Gelb, a therapist and social worker in Chicago, and her "uncle/babysitter" John Oldakowski, a media company executive, wanted to continue Gelb's family tradition of throwing the traditional Jewish coming-of-age party for a teen, even if the teen was a dog. "She got gifts and toys. We got her a giant birthday cake from a cute pet boutique," Oldakowski says. Bark mitzvahs are trendy, and while some dogs wear yarmulkes or are blessed by a rabbi, Roxy was not. "It was just a good excuse for a party," Oldakowski says.

The people who take their dogs to pet psychic readings, dress them in Halloween costumes and are regulars at "yappy hours" know some of you are laughing at them. And they don't care. Oldakowski says he overheard a woman in his building telling her husband, "That's the guy who dresses up his little dog and talks to it all the time." She doesn't get it, he says. "I'm not crazy, because talking to that little dog keeps me from going crazy on humans. That little nugget has gotten me through some rough times."

> 'I'm not crazy, because talking to that little dog keeps me from going crazy on humans.'
> —John Oldakowski

The Cost of Love

Life expectancies vary by breed, but dogs live twice as long as they did 40 years ago. That means we're spending more money on grooming, boarding, training, day care, dog walkers and vet bills. The APPA says we shell out around $3,000 per year on a dog, depending on the breed. But most owners say that's the low end.

"I spend a small fortune on my dogs," Kontrim says, estimating her costs to be $10,000 total annually, especially when she counts the health insurance and the unexpected expenses, like the furniture she bought for her hounds. "They were taking up the couch and chair and I had no place to sit, so I bought them their own love seat with an ottoman. Barney loves sitting on ottomans."

Erica Dombroff, who lives in Manhattan with her 10-year-old basset hound, Stanley, says she spends around $8,000 a year on him, including vet visits, dog walkers, dog day care for him so he won't get lonely while she's at work and the annual pizza party for him and his friends on his birthday. She says she's embarrassed to admit she spends that much, but Stan, who is a rescue, is

Have Canine, Will Travel

Nearly 40 percent of us take our pups on vacation now, nearly double the number who did so a decade ago.

Jen Barol, a social worker in Albuquerque, N.M., is one of them. She took Henry, her

Australian cattle dog Henry with Jen Barol

JEN BAROL

Australian cattle dog, on road trips all over the West before he died a few years ago. "I had a bumper sticker that read 'Dog is my co-pilot,' and there would be Henry in the passenger seat with his head sticking out of the window. He was my co-everything. We went everywhere together," she says.

Roxy, the Jewish Shih Tzu, also goes on vacations with her humans. "She loves to travel," says Oldakowski. "I have to hide the travel backpack because she'll jump in as soon as she sees it." Roxy has a scrapbook of her travels to Arizona, Florida and California, where she got a selfie with singer LeAnn Rimes at her show in Palm Springs.

What's in It for Humans?

Ask a pet owner what they get for the homemade treats, trips to the dog park and $1,000 dental cleanings at the vet, and they'll tell you it's about companionship. Unconditional love. Happiness. "When I come home from even the worst day, they are glad to see me," Kontrim says of her bassets. "They bring me joy."

Indeed, science has proven dogs have the power to turn your frown into a smile. When you pet a dog, your body produces oxytocin and endorphins, hormones that lift your mood and strengthen the emotional bond between you and your fur kid. Oxytocin is the hormone that bonds a mother to a child and one lover to another.

"Simply watching dogs playing or goofing around helps people feel happier and more relaxed," Bradshaw says.

And in 2018, who doesn't need more good chemicals in their brain? Sometimes it feels as if love is in short supply in this world, says Barol. "Animals fill that void. They make us feel valuable. They don't just notice us; they pay close attention to us. Who wouldn't want to nurture that bond?"

Ask Marilyn

By Marilyn vos Savant

You wrote that the moon rotates on its axis once per revolution around the Earth, which is why we always see the same side. But why? It can't be a coincidence.

—Jim Kelsey, Fort Wayne, Ind.

Eons ago, the moon rotated faster. But the gravitational pull of the more-massive Earth caused a slight warpage on the surface of the moon, slowly braking its rotation until the bulge eventually became large enough to lock the smaller body into place. This is the rocky bulge that faces us. The situation is called "tidal locking" because the pull of the less-massive moon also has a warping effect on the Earth, largely causing our tides.

Sunday With... KERI RUSSELL

By Paulette Cohn

America fell in love with Keri Russell, 41, in her Golden Globe–winning TV role as the star of Felicity in the late 1990s. Today, she's best known for her performance as Russian spy Elizabeth Jennings on The Americans, which begins its sixth and final season March 28 on FX. Russell lives in Brooklyn with her TV husband and real-life partner, Matthew Rhys, 43, their son, Sam, 22 months, and Russell's two children from a previous relationship, son River, 10, and daughter Willa, 6.

Is the spy game losing its luster for Elizabeth? I think Elizabeth is very stressed out. She's incredibly alienated, overworked and lonely. She's taken on more than she can handle.

Do you think you would be a good spy? I'm not a great liar and I'm not good under pressure. I spaz out. Elizabeth is so calm and centered. She's so like a panther. I'm not like that. I wish I was.

Elizabeth and her husband, Philip, are Russian spies, yet we root for them. Which is great, because it puts a face on this giant country of people that we're struggling with right now—they're all people with lives and families.

Is it easier to do love scenes with someone you love? It's a weird thing. I think maybe it's a little bit the opposite. When you're pretending you know the other person, because this show is pretend, you're like, "I know you and this is embarrassing."

In the first episode of the final season, there are six hair changes. Do you ever get a wig and go, "I might do my hair like that"? There are so many wigs. Sometimes, yeah. I remember there was this very shortish, blond thing and our makeup artist was like, "When you get older, you can do that." She's like, "You always have to go lighter."

What were Sundays like growing up? My early years were in Arizona, and we moved around a lot. My mom would make us go to Sunday school. We lived in a neighborhood with tons of kids. When it got dark, your mom just yelled your name and you're like, "Oh, I've got to go."

What are Sundays like now? We make a point every Sunday to have a late lunch, maybe because of Matthew's Welsh influence. We almost always do a roast chicken or some sort of roast. We make all the kids sit there and talk about their week. The 10-year-old is like, "Oh, my gosh—how long is this going to last?" We usually make a fire, and that's our family time.

Is life in your 40s what you expected it to be? To be completely honest, at this moment it's an uphill sprint. There's not a lot of self-reflection; just keep your head down and keep running. But when this is all over, I will be very thankful for this moment in my career, this moment in my life, that I'm with a partner I love and am excited and engaged by, and that I have these kids who are healthy and this job that was so creative, cool and satisfying.

Faves

Favorite snack Pasta with butter and salt

Favorite brunch Huevos rancheros

On her nightstand "Like 8,000 books I have not read and will, like Zadie Smith, poetry books, so many books."

Always in her on-set trailer Good-smelling candles

Last show she binge-watched The Handmaid's Tale and Ken Burns' The Vietnam War

Pets "We had a great cat, but he died two years ago. My kids are begging for another one, but we'll see."
