FOR CUBS, A SENTIMENTAL ROAD TRIP

The series against the Indians will be the first time the Cubs play at Progressive Field since Game 7 of the 2016 World Series. And while that clincher will forever be etched in the minds of the Cubs and their fan base, it's also in the running for the unofficial title as greatest Game 7 in World Series history. Paul Sullivan in Chicago Sports

Central Illinois town stunned by link to Waffle House shooting

Father could face charges over giving guns back to suspect

MORTON, Ill. — Four hundred miles away from Nashville, Tenn., the news of the Waffle House shooting and ensuing manhunt rattled many residents in this small bedroom community about 10 miles southeast of Peoria.

The town of 16,000, which touts itself as the Pumpkin Capital of the World, is made up of undulating, two-lane roads lined with farmland and punctuated with grand houses. Agricultural and industrial giants such as Caterpillar Inc. are the major employers of the area.

Morton, many say, is protective of its image as a family-friendly hamlet with great quality of life. The village website boasts its recognition as "One of the Top 10 Places to Raise a Family" by Family Circle Magazine in 2013.

That image was marred after Nashville authorities announced a 29-year-old Morton native was the suspect in Sunday's restaurant rampage, which left four dead and four injured. The man fled after a customer wrestled his gun away.

Travis Reinking was taken into custody without incident nearly 34 hours after the deadly shooting, Nashville police said. He was found near his Nashville apartment with a backpack that police said contained a semi-automatic firearm as well as ammunition.

AG files lawsuit against bus firm

Company serving U. of I. accused of discrimination

BY PATRICK M. O'CONNELL
Chicago Tribune

Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan filed a federal lawsuit Monday against a bus company that primarily serves University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and other college students, alleging discriminatory practices and mistreatment of customers.

Suburban Express, Madigan said, refers to complaining students as "slimeball" and "scumbag," and told one international student to "go back to your country and stay there."

The Champaign-based company and its owner have been under investigation since December, when the attorney general's office launched an inquiry following an advertisement that disparaged Chinese students and the university's admissions policies.

The lawsuit, filed in U.S. District Court in Chicago, seeks a restraining order against the company to stop it from publishing customers' financial information, halt harassment and prevent the company from forcing riders to accept unfair contract terms. If the company does not change its practices, Madigan said, the attorney general wants the company out of business.

The company's actions, Madigan said, constitute "flagrant and numerous violations" of Illinois' civil rights and consumer protection laws.

"My lawsuit alleges that Suburban Express has long been engaged in illegal discrimination and harassment of college students in Illinois, particularly University of Illinois students and their families," Madigan said at a morning news conference at the Thompson Center to announce the lawsuit.

The company issued a response to the lawsuit on its Facebook page, defending its actions and touting the service of "hundreds of thousands of happy customers in its 35 year history."

"The world is a better place as a result of Suburban Express. ... We take this unfounded assault on our reputation seriously and we intend to defend this law-

FEMALE FIREFIGHTERS STRIVE FOR EQUALITY

As Joliet department hires 1st woman, progress is slow in male-dominated field

BY ROBERT MCCOPPIN, ANGIE LEVENTIS LOURGOS AND ALICIA FABBRE | Chicago Tribune

The Oval Office notwithstanding, there are very few workplaces left in the United States where women have not gained entry.

But in one of the last places in the workforce where a virtual male monopoly endures — fire stations — it's still possible in 2018 for departments to hire their first female firefighters.

Such is the case in Joliet, which announced this month that it took on its first female recruit in its 165-year history. Though many departments started hiring women decades ago, some still have only one woman firefighter and some have none.

Nationwide, only about 4 percent of firefighters are women, according to the U.S. Department of Labor, even as that figure has risen to about 14 percent in police work and the military. Even traditionally male occupations like farming and construction management have higher percentages of women than firefighting.

"The numbers are abysmal," said Cheryl Horvath, a former firefighter in downstate Urbana and past president of the International Association of Women in Fire & Emergency Services. "I don't know that we've been able to gain the traction we need to get to that critical mass point."

Attitudes toward women in the profession have generally improved, Horvath said, but some still face horror stories.

Van kills 10 on Toronto sidewalk

Suspect in custody as authorities seek a possible motive

BY CHARMAINE NORONHA
Associated Press

TORONTO — A rented van jumped onto a crowded Toronto sidewalk Monday, killing 10 people and injuring 15 before the driver fled and was quickly arrested in a confrontation with police, Canadian authorities said.

Witnesses said the driver was moving fast and appeared to be acting deliberately, but police said they did not know the cause or any possible motive.

Police stand near the body of one of 10 people struck and killed when a van was driven down a Toronto sidewalk.

Speaking at a news conference Monday night, Toronto police Chief Mark Saunders identified the man detained after the incident as Alek Minassian, 25, a resident of the Toronto suburb of Richmond Hill. He said the suspect had not been known to police previously.

Asked if there was any evidence of a connection to international terrorism, the chief said only, "Based on what we have, there's nothing that has it to compromise the national security at this time."

Toronto Police Services Deputy Chief Peter Yuen said police were interviewing witnesses and examining surveillance video of the incident as part of what he called a "complex" investigation.

"I can assure the public all our available resources have been brought in to investigate this tragic situation," he said.

The incident occurred as Cabinet ministers from the major industrial coun-

What happened at Nashville Waffle House was terrorism

Rex W. Huppke

I shouldn't have to carry a gun to feel safe getting waffles.

Nobody should.

I shouldn't have to hope I'm seated near a mythological "good guy with a gun" to feel safe getting waffles.

Nobody should.

And I shouldn't have to pray that a James Shaw Jr. — the young man who jumped a half-naked gunman at a Waffle House in Tennessee this weekend before that lunatic could murder more customers — is in the restaurant, ready to risk his life, while I'm getting waffles.

Nobody should.

We should be able to eat our waffles in peace. We should be able to send our kids to school without worrying that they'll be gunned down. We should be able to go to church and not wonder whether an AR-15-toting person who fell through the mental health services cracks might stand up and open fire.

But we don't feel that way. We can't. This nation's gun obsession has made it impossible, and those who stand in the way of any action that might limit access to guns — even to domestic abusers or the mentally ill — are insisting that their outlandish "right" to own any firearm they want supersedes our perfectly reasonable right to eat our waffles without toting a side arm.

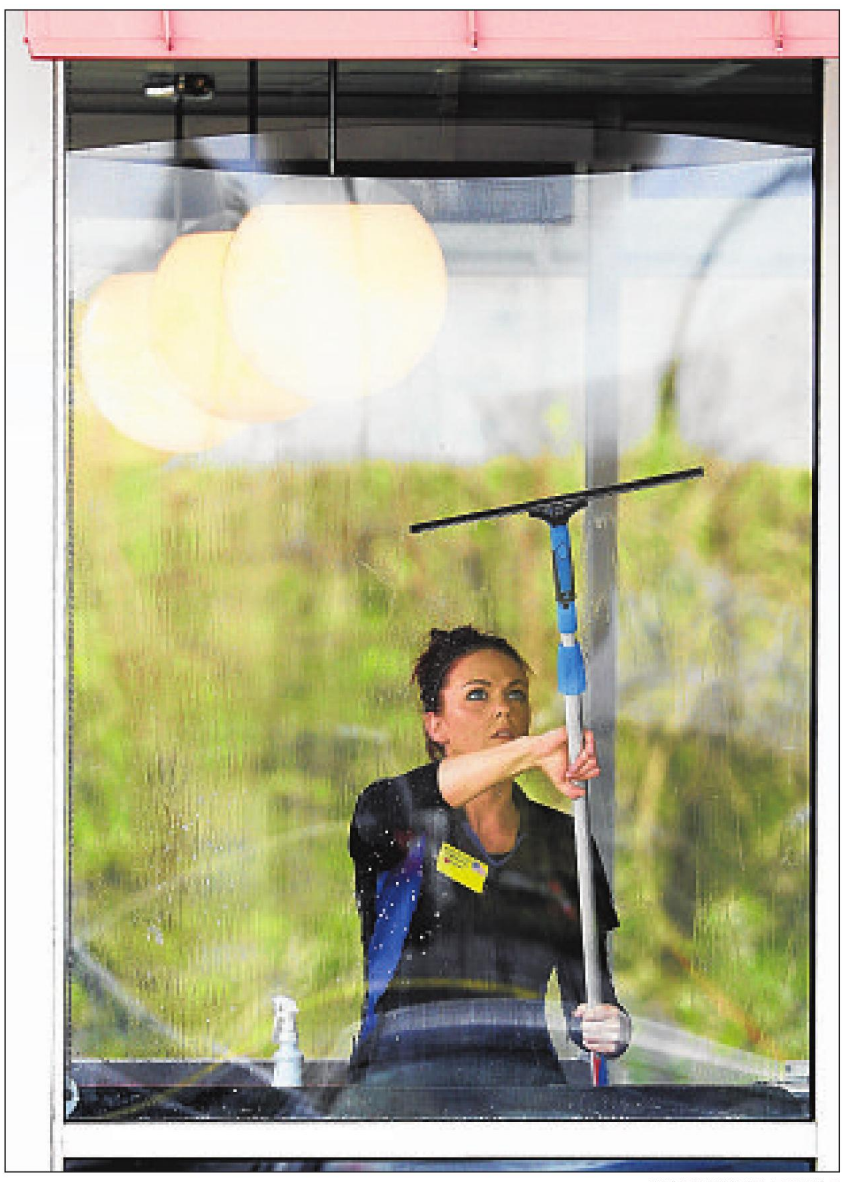
There's a word for all this: terrorism. People don't like to use that word when it comes to guns and Americans. But what are we really dealing with here if not terror? What do you call it when people are made to feel unsafe in the most public of places?

Four young people were gunned down early Sunday morning at that Waffle House near Nashville. A 29-year-old man from Morton, Ill., has been arrested, and police say he used an AR-15-style assault rifle, the same type of firearm used in the Parkland school shooting (17 dead), the Texas church shooting (26 dead), the Las Vegas music festival shooting (58 dead) and the Orlando nightclub shooting (49 dead).

We're told by the National Rifle Association and the politicians they fund that the only defense in any of these tragedies would be more guns. Armed teachers. Armed churchgoers. Armed music lovers. Armed waffle eaters.

They tell us mental health care is key, but do they increase funding for mental health care? No. Do they tighten gun laws to keep firearms out of the hands of the mentally ill? No. In fact, President Donald Trump's only action on guns was signing a law last February that did away with a regulation President Barack Obama put in place that made it harder for people with mental illness to buy a gun.

Suspected Tennessee shooter Travis Reinking, according to Illinois and federal law enforcement agencies, showed ample signs of mental health problems. Last year he showed up at the White House asking to speak with Trump then refused to leave, saying he was "a sovereign citizen."



MARK HUMPHREY/AP

A worker cleans windows in a Waffle House restaurant in Nashville, Tenn., on Monday, a day after a gunman shot and killed at least four people there Sunday.

He was arrested and charged with unlawful entry. That led FBI agents in Illinois and the Illinois State Police to confiscate the four firearms Reinking owned and revoke his firearm owner's identification card. One wonders what Reinking was still doing with four firearms, including an AR-15. He had previous run-ins with authorities in Tazewell County, including an incident in May 2016 when he told sheriff's deputies he was being stalked by singer Taylor Swift and he feared his phone had been hacked.

What are we really dealing with here if not terror?

At that time, according to the Peoria Journal Star: "His family had told Tazewell County deputies that he had been having delusions for almost two years."

After the federal agents confiscated Reinking's guns, they were returned to the man's father. According to authorities, the man's father then returned the guns to his son.

So the AR-15 Reinking had no business having in 2016 when he told deputies he was being stalked by a celebrity was the same assault rifle he carried into the Waffle House in Tennessee on Sunday morning. And were it not for Shaw, the hero who tackled Reinking while he was reloading, wrestling the rifle away, that AR-15 surely would have been fired more, increasing the death toll.

Something is fundamentally wrong here, and everyone who doesn't think Taylor Swift is tapping their cellphone knows that's true.

If these mass shootings had all come at the hands of a Muslim person, the Trump administration and a good chunk of the Republican Party would vehemently demand mosque surveillance and a complete ban on Muslims entering the country. We know that's true because after an ISIS-inspired mass shooting in San Bernardino, Calif., in 2015 carried out by a husband and wife of Pakistani descent, Trump said this:

"Donald J. Trump is calling for a total and complete shutdown of Muslims entering the United States until our country's representatives can figure out what the hell is going on."

After yet another mass shooting at the hands of a person with mental health problems who was in possession of an AR-15, there's no call for a total and complete shutdown of AR-15 sales in the United States until our country's representatives can figure out what the hell is going on.

That's because there are two kinds of terrorism, one the Trump administration and the gun lobby will pounce on to stoke fear and another they will ignore so as not to lose donors or damage business.

And where does that leave us? Eating our waffles in fear.

JIM PRISCHING/NORTHWESTERN SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION

"The Late Show" host Stephen Colbert emceed the "A Starry Night" gala Saturday at Northwestern University.

Students and alumni of Northwestern University's School of Communication were honored at a gala Saturday — while one high-profile graduate was roasted. "The Late Show" host Stephen Colbert, who emceed the event, joked about Mayor Rahm Emanuel's campaign for re-election in his opening monologue.

Colbert praised Northwestern President Morton Schapiro and said, "It's like he's the mayor."

"Is Rahm Emanuel here tonight? He's not?" Colbert asked the audience at Ryan Fieldhouse in Evanston. "Good, because Morty has a better chance at re-election. Don't tell Rahm."

Emanuel, who earned a master's degree in speech and communication from Northwestern in 1985, and Colbert, who graduated from the university the following year, have teased each other in the past. There didn't appear to be any bad blood when Emanuel promoted his "Chicago Stories" podcast on "The Late Show" in December.

Saturday's festivities featured performances by Northwestern alumni including "Saturday Night Live" veteran Ana Gasteyer; "13 Reasons Why" star Brian d'Arcy James; Grammy and Tony Award winner Heather Headley; "Spin City" alum Richard Kind; "Sesame Street" puppeteer Stephanie D'Abruzzo; and "Too Close for Comfort" actress Nancy Dussault.

More than 2,600 people attended the show, which served as the finale to the two-day CommFest to showcase the School of Communication.

"Late Night" host Seth Meyers, who recently welcomed a second son with his wife, and Colbert pumped up the crowd in a prerecorded video segment. Colbert avoided talking about President Donald Trump but did attempt a Chicago accent to illustrate Midwestern elocution.

"A Bad Moms Christmas" star Kathryn Hahn gave a shoutout to 2003 graduate Meghan Markle, who is set to marry Britain's Prince Harry next month. "I, for one, am (expletive) my pants with excitement," Hahn said.

"Father of the Bride" actress Kimberly Williams-Paisley introduced a retrospective devoted to beloved filmmaker Garry Marshall, a 1956 graduate who died in 2016.

#ThatsHarassment campaign gets boost from Schwimmer

CITY OF CHICAGO

City billboards, bus shelters and taxi TV monitors are home to the latest endeavor aimed at keeping the #MeToo movement at the forefront of people's minds.

Based on real events, the campaign features 30-second videos starring Schwimmer and "Deadpool 2" actress Zazie Beetz in an office setting; Meryl Streep's daughter Grace Gummer and Chicago native Joseph Sikora as coworkers in a restaurant environment; and New York governor candidate Cynthia Nixon and Michael Kelly from "House of Cards" in a doctor's office.

"These PSAs showcase the pervasiveness of abuse in the workplace, and make very clear that perpetrators who use positions of power to demean, deride, discredit, harass and assault anyone will be held accountable," Schwimmer said in a news release.

The project was created in conjunction with the Ad Council, the National Women's Law Center and the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network.

"By confronting sexual harassment, discrimination and misogyny directly, we can help more people understand their rights and responsibilities when it comes to this incredibly important issue," Mayor Rahm Emanuel said.

Idonije

You could say the Bears got the jump on the Avengers last week when they rolled out their own comic book-style heroes and villains in a video to announce their 2018 schedule. The brainchild of former Bears defensive end Israel Idonije and his company, Athlitacomics, "Monsters of the Midway" imagines fiery-handed quarterback Mitch Trubisky and several teammates with superpowers, while opponents such as the Vikings and Buccaneers are cast as menacing foes with their own special abilities.

And there's more to come.

Halas Hall plans to unveil more super Bears throughout the offseason, put them on hats and T-shirts and feature a weekly online comic strip this fall.

"It's about this team of young heroes that are fearless, that are tenacious, they're relentless," said Idonije, who played for the Bears from 2004 to 2012.

Based on feedback Idonije has heard about last week's video trailer, "Fans are ready to run through walls, they're ready for the season to start tomorrow. They love the new 'M' logo (bear fangs shaped like the letter 'M,' for 'monsters'). They want it to be on the jersey."

DAHLEEN GLANTON

For decades, Chicagoans have pondered how to reverse the poverty and disenfranchisement that contribute heavily to the cycle of violence in African-American neighborhoods.

Perhaps we have had the answer all along. Ida B. Wells, the Chicago journalist and anti-lynching crusader, left a blueprint for empowering black people to make positive changes in their own communities when others turn their backs.

It says that African-Americans must be their own advocates for change.

For decades, her message has been misplaced. Wells' name, her contributions to Chicago and the invaluable lessons from her fearless crusade to bring about social justice have drifted into obscurity, robbing us of a model for social and political activism with a proven track record.

The only thing we have done to pay homage in the city where Wells lived and died is to place her name on a now-demolished public housing project that came to symbolize the ghettoization of African-American economics and culture.

Shame on Chicago for that.

It is refreshing to learn that Wells' relatives are spearheading a movement to bring her the recognition in Chicago that is long overdue. Her great-granddaughter Michelle Duster and a group of volunteers have been working for more than a decade to build a monument to Wells near her former home in Bronzeville.

Recently, the efforts by the Ida B. Wells Commemorative Arts Committee have picked up steam as the name of the social and political justice activist has been reintroduced to the mainstream. Last month, The New York Times ran a belated obituary for Wells along with several other women whose accomplishments were overlooked by the newspaper.

Next month, the city of Chicago is expected to rename a portion of 37th Street and South King Drive for her. The committee, however, has a long way to go to raise the $300,000 needed to build the monument.

Some might wonder what good a monument would serve in a neighborhood that so many Chicagoans are afraid to venture into. But I can think of no better place for it than Bronzeville, a progressive enclave on the South Side located in the midst of some of the city's most impoverished and crime-ridden communities.

From her once-elegant home, on a street of handsome greystones, Wells gave voice to so many causes that it is impossible to define her in a single term. She was an investigative journalist, an anti-lynching crusader, a feminist, a suffragist and a civil rights leader.

Wells risked her life traveling through the South reporting on lynchings and using her journalistic platform to decry the murders. She was fearless when it came to challenging the political system, taking on the battles of those who were too weak or too scared to fight for themselves.

She inspired other African-Americans to do the same. The stories of how Wells helped found the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Association of Colored Women are well-chronicled.

But her best lessons weren't only in her activism. She had a way of getting to the core of issues without mincing words.

In the book "Crusade for Justice," an autobiography based on entries from her private journal, Wells recounted how she once took issue with a speech given by J.G.K. McClure, who later became head of the Chicago Theological Seminary.

In his speech, McClure attempted to explain why black people were a burden on America and gave crime statistics to prove his point. It is an argument that we still hear decades later.

"Even here in free Chicago, which is the black man's heaven, although he is less than 3 percent of the population, last year he furnished 10 percent of the crime," McClure argued.

When Wells followed him at the lectern, she did not dispute the numbers but offered a fierce rebuttal.

"The statistics we have heard here tonight do not mean, as it appears to mean, that the Negro race is the most criminal of the various race groups in Chicago. It does mean that ours is the most neglected group."

Wells understood that there would be no white knight in shining armor coming to the rescue of black people. She understood that African-Americans have a duty to use whatever resources are available to them to help put a stop to the violence. And she understood that black people must stand up when their community is under attack, regardless of the skin color of the perpetrator.

This is why it's incumbent on African-Americans to address the root causes of the black-on-black genocide that is taking a toll on our communities today.

There are countless African-Americans in Chicago and elsewhere who dedicate their lives to turning depressed neighborhoods around and fighting for the future of our children. But too many of us have settled in too snugly while watching from the sidelines.

We can't demand our fair share of resources from the city. We don't hold politicians, including the African-Americans we elect to represent us, accountable. We are quick to allow others to write off a generation of young people as shiftless and worthless.

A monument to Ida B. Wells would be a symbol of the hope and prosperity that the South Side once represented for African-Americans and the promise of what the home of the city's highest concentration of blacks still holds.

No one intertwines Chicago's history and its future more than her.

Madigan gets another term as state Democratic chair

Party looks past harassment complaints on his watch, lauds his electoral acumen

By Monique Garcia
Chicago Tribune

SPRINGFIELD — House Speaker Michael Madigan was easily re-elected chairman of the Democratic Party of Illinois on Monday, publicly reasserting his control over a vast political operation after a tumultuous few months in which some within his own party had called for his resignation.

As members of the party's central committee lauded Madigan for his ability to win elections and push back against Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner's policies, they also nodded to challenges within. That includes allegations of sexual harassment and abusive behavior that felled two of Madigan's top campaign operatives, prompting calls for the speaker to step down as party chairman amid questions about how complaints were handled.

U.S. Rep. Robin Kelly of Matteson said she was surprised when Madigan asked if she would be among those who nominated him for the chairmanship at an afternoon meeting at a Springfield hotel. But Kelly said she was committed to doing all she could to ensure Democrats win in November, saying her time in Washington has proved the importance of being in the majority.

"So I would like to second your nomination, but I will say in seconding your nomination it's not a secret that change needs to happen, and we need to be more transparent as an organization," Kelly said. "We need to be more inclusive as an organization, and we need to make sure that we are respecting every man and woman that has anything to do with this organization, in and out."

Madigan noted new policies for campaigns that he said require all staff and volunteers to complete sexual harassment awareness training programs. The speaker called the rule "rigid," saying that "if someone does not do the training and understand the training ... they will not be working for the Democratic Party of Illinois."

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Earlier this year, Madigan dismissed longtime political worker Kevin Quinn, the brother of 13th Ward Ald. Marty Quinn, several months after campaign worker Alaina Hampton sent the speaker a letter accusing Kevin Quinn of sexual harassment. The speaker also parted ways with lobbyist Shaw Decremer, a former Madigan staffer and top campaign operative, over what one lawmaker labeled abusive actions during House Democratic races.

Those departures occurred during the heat of a Democratic primary campaign, and some Democrats demanded that Madigan step down as chairman while an independent investigation took place.

Madigan rejected those calls but sent a letter to House Democrats saying he shoulders "responsibility" for failing to do more to ensure equality in the statehouse and on the campaign trail. He later released a partial list of sexual harassment, discrimination and retaliation complaints he says his office has investigated during the past five years, which he said was an effort to be more transparent.

On Monday, Madigan said the outcry over sexual harassment in the workplace was a positive and "will make a better society."

"I think if you look around the country, look here in Illinois, look in this room, you can see the very positive, affirmative steps are being taken to change the culture," Madigan said.

Asked what he's learned by talking to government and campaign employees about the political culture in Illinois, Madigan said, "Treat other people the way you want to be treated."

Madigan won the support of 35 of the 36 committee members. Voting "no" was Peter Janko of Marengo, who last month won a primary election for a spot on the panel of party leaders. Janko said he had nothing personal against Madigan — the two had lunch before Monday's meeting — but argued that the party needed "fresh new blood, fresh ideas." Janko did not put forth his own nominee.

Madigan said the outcome of the intraparty election demonstrates that Democrats are united in their effort to elect J.B. Pritzker governor this fall and "turn a page in the history of the state" away from the "conflict and tension" that have marked Rauner's term.

Madigan said divisions in the Republican Party as conservative candidates challenge Rauner will only help Democrats win in the fall.

Rauner narrowly won his primary election against Rep. Jeanne Ives of Wheaton, who built support by bashing the governor's signature of bills to expand taxpayer funding of abortion and protect immigrants in the country illegally. Last week, Sen. Sam McCann of central Illinois launched a third-party bid for governor with the goal of running under a new Conservative Party label.

McCann received $50,000 from the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 150, which has fought against Rauner's efforts to weaken collective bargaining rights. The Madigan-aligned union endorsed Pritzker in the Democratic primary, and Rauner's campaign contends Madigan is behind McCann's bid in an effort to peel away support.

On Monday, Madigan dismissed questions about whether he was involved in McCann's campaign.

Missed fares an issue for Metra

Agency considers ways to combat problem as busy summer season approaches

By Mary Wisniewski
Chicago Tribune

Summer concert and festival season is coming, and that means more packed Metra trains, and issues over conductors not collecting all fares.

"It's clearly a concern," Metra CEO Jim Derwinski told reporters Monday after a speech at the City Club of Chicago.

Metra has begun contacting peer commuter railroads to examine other possible ways to collect fares, Derwinski said.

He said Metra asks customers who see a fellow passenger not paying a fare to tell the conductor, though he acknowledges that this kind of voluntary tattling is a "big lift" for riders. The railroad also uses a "secret shopper" program that puts inspectors on trains to make sure conductors are doing their jobs.

"When we find conductors doing a great job, we pat them on the back and let them know that," Derwinski said. He said that when conductors are not doing a good job, Metra addresses this through "the mechanisms we have," which could mean a warning or some other form of employee discipline.

Derwinski, who started as Metra boss in January, said he did not know how much money Metra loses annually because of uncollected fares. He said it sometimes happens when trains are crowded, particularly during special events, and it is hard for conductors to make their way through the cars to check tickets.

Sometimes, if Metra knows trains will be especially full because of a special event, the agency will add staff to collect tickets. But he noted that sometimes trains get crowded unexpectedly — he said ridership doubled on St. Patrick's Day and "it really overwhelmed us."

Derwinski said it is not always cost-effective for the agency to put an additional fare collector on the train. He said that a conductor's first responsibility is the safety of the train, so if a conductor is dealing with another problem, he or she may not have a chance to go through all the cars on the train to collect tickets.

One way Metra could collect almost all fares is to have turnstiles at stations, as the CTA does. But that would require redesigns of all stations, which would be enormously costly, Metra officials say. For now, conductors check tickets or collect cash fares on the train.

Metra's board has voted to raise fares in each of the last four years.

In his speech to the City Club, Derwinski spoke of Metra's ongoing need for more money to repair or purchase new equipment, and to fix or build infrastructure such as bridges and stations. The state has not had a capital bill since 2009, and Metra faces a $1.2 billion annual shortfall in the amount it needs to keep in a state of good repair, Derwinski said.

He urged the crowd to inform state legislators of the importance of funding transit in the region.

Woman testifies ex-boss raped her in '09

West Loop tanning salon owner faces other sexual assault charges

By Nereida Moreno
Chicago Tribune

A woman testified Monday that her former boss trapped her in his tanning salon in Chicago's West Loop, forced her back to his apartment across the street and sexually assaulted her twice in 2009.

The woman, identified in court as J.B., said she "begged and pleaded" with defendant Marc Winner to let her go.

"I was bawling and begging him to stop," she told Cook County Circuit Judge Carol Howard, who is presiding over the bench trial at the Leighton Criminal Court Building.

Winner

Winner, 47, faces charges that he sexually assaulted J.B. He still faces trials for four separate sexual assault charges involving other women.

While cross-examining the alleged victim, Winner's attorney, Steven Weinberg, argued that J.B. was "drunk and high on cocaine," impairing her memory of the incident.

J.B., a 32-year-old English teacher, said she started working at Winner's business, Soleil Tanning Salon, when she was 19. She left after three years to teach in California but returned to the Chicago area in 2009.

The accuser testified that she never socialized with Winner outside of work and that they never had problems in the office. She said he would call her "every now and then" but that she would never initiate contact with him outside of work.

J.B. said she was in a West Loop restaurant with a friend in July 2009 when she saw Winner. He invited the women to his apartment to use the restroom, and J.B. admitted she accepted "a small amount" of cocaine from him. When her friend left, J.B. said Winner "deadbolted" the door and took her cellphone. She testified that he became so angry and frustrated that she "didn't recognize his face"

In an attempt to get to a phone and call 911, prosecutors said, J.B. asked to see his tanning business. She tried calling police from the desk phone there but accidentally put the phone on speaker, triggering Winner's ire.

When she managed to get her cellphone back from him, prosecutors said, she huddled inside a tanning booth and made a frantic call to her sister, saying, "I'm at Soleil. He's going to rape me. Call 911."

She said Winner then grabbed her, took her back to his apartment and raped her twice.

When he went to the bathroom, J.B. ran out of his apartment barefoot to a nearby Dominick's store and called for help. She said Winner followed her out into the street and asked where she was going.

"You know what you did," she said she replied. "Don't touch me. I hate you."

Police found the victim "disheveled and hysterical," prosecutors said. DNA evidence recovered from J.B. links Winner to the alleged assault, authorities said.

The victim testified that Winner texted her the next morning "hey gorgeous" but she did not respond.

Judge Howard has ruled that prosecutors can introduce evidence that Winner attacked four other women in addition to J.B.

Weinberg, Winner's attorney, has chalked the allegations up to an intoxicated misunderstanding, saying the evening "turned romantic" but J.B. "became hysterical" after Winner made a derogatory remark to her when they became intimate.

Records show prosecutors offered a plea agreement to Winner: If he pleaded to reduced charges in two of his cases, they would recommend a combined sentence of 18 years in prison and drop the other charges against him. But he rejected the offer in court last month, records show.

In pretrial court filings, prosecutors portray Winner as a serial rapist, preying on women he meets in bars or at his salon. Seven women besides J.B. have accused him of sexual assault, prosecutors have said. Two others say he physically attacked them in other ways. Most of the allegations are "eerily similar" to J.B.'s — the women even resemble one another, prosecutors said in the filings.

10 Chicago cops barred from testifying due to Watts ties

By Jason Meisner
Chicago Tribune

Ten Chicago police officers with ties to disgraced former Sgt. Ronald Watts are no longer being called as witnesses in any criminal cases in Cook County out of "concerns about their credibility," according to records released Monday by State's Attorney Kim Foxx.

The unusual move was made five months ago after Foxx's office threw out the convictions of 15 men who allegedly were framed by Watts and his crew, according to a letter sent to the Chicago Police Department's chief legal counsel on Nov. 17.

Joe Magats, chief of the state's attorney's Criminal Prosecutions Bureau, wrote in the letter that after reviewing those cases, it was decided the 10 officers who worked closely with Watts could no longer be used as witnesses in pending or future criminal prosecutions "due to concerns about their credibility and alleged involvement in the misconduct."

A total of 15 police officers associated with Watts' crew over the years were placed on desk duty five months ago pending an internal Police Department investigation.

The decision by Foxx to reject the word of 10 veteran officers marked the latest fallout in a scandal over Watts' nearly decadelong run of corruption, which ended in 2012 when he and another member of his team, Officer Kallatt Mohammed, were arrested for shaking down a drug courier who turned out to be an FBI informant.

So far, the scandal has prompted the state's attorney's office to reverse 31 convictions secured by Watts and his team, including the county's first "mass exoneration" in November when cases against the 15 men were dismissed.

Several of those who allegedly were framed have since filed federal civil rights lawsuits against the city, Watts and other officers on his team. Records produced in that litigation show that the city's police disciplinary agency, the Civilian Office of Police Accountability, is currently conducting its own investigations into 22 cases involving Watts.

Asked last week why it was taking months for the internal police investigation to wrap up, Superintendent Eddie Johnson said reviewing nearly two decades worth of records takes time. "I'm not going to rush to do anything just so that it appeases people," Johnson said.

Watts and his crew of tactical officers were accused of orchestrating a reign of terror at the now-razed Ida B. Wells public housing complex on the South Side.

When Watts was finally caught, it was on relatively minor federal charges. He wound up being sentenced to 22 months in prison. After his release, Watts moved to Las Vegas, records show.

Stan Lee sued by massage therapist over '17 behavior

Marvel kingpin was fondling himself, woman alleges

By Hannah Leone and Gregory Pratt
Chicago Tribune

A massage therapist says Stan Lee of Marvel Comics fondled himself and inappropriately grabbed her during arranged massages at a Chicago hotel in 2017, according to a lawsuit filed Monday in Cook County Circuit Court.

The massage therapist, Maria Carballo, also filed a complaint with Chicago police on March 16, said her attorney, Alexandra Reed-Lopez. A Chicago police spokeswoman confirmed a complaint was filed that date against Lee, under his legal name, Stanley Lieber. The case is still under investigation, police said.

The lawsuit seeks more than $50,000, punitive damages and attorney fees from Lee.

"He is a high-profile public figure, and I think it's a shakedown," said Jonathan Freund, an attorney for Lee. "The guy is 95, I don't think he would do that."

The lawsuit also names Lee's former assistant, Mac "Max" Anderson, who is accused of arranging the massages. Anderson could not be immediately reached.

Carballo was working as an independent contractor for Therapy Professionals, which asked her to give massage therapy to a client for two hours April 21, 2017, at the McCormick Place Hyatt Regency, according to her complaint. Lee was in town that weekend for C2E2, a comics expo.

When Carballo got to the Hyatt that evening, she was sent to Lee's hotel suite.

Lee was on his stomach for the first part of the massage, and after about a half-hour, Carballo noticed he was fondling himself, according to the complaint.

Carballo resumed the massage until Lee allegedly started moaning when she massaged his quadriceps. The massage was supposed to last two hours, but she reached an agreement with Anderson to end it early and charge for only one hour, which he paid her for, according to the complaint.

When Therapy Professionals' owner called Carballo the next day and asked her to give another massage to Lee, Carballo initially refused and said Lee made her feel uncomfortable, according to the complaint.

In another call, the employer told Carballo that Lee was sorry and it wouldn't happen again, and that it was important to appease "VIP" clients, the complaint states. Afraid of losing her job, Carballo went back to the Hyatt.

About an hour into the second massage, which started about 10 p.m., Lee again started moaning when Carballo was massaging his quadriceps, the complaint alleges. She asked him to put clothes back on, according to the complaint.

Instead, the complaint states, Lee got up, naked and angry, and demanded Carballo keep massaging him. She agreed to 10 more minutes, but switched to a Shiatsu method, which can be performed with feet rather than hands, the lawsuit said. Carballo alleges in the lawsuit that Lee grabbed her foot and touched it to his genitals.

Bus company says it's fighting false complaints

Suburban Express said it has only been fighting back against false complaints and online detractors.

"Defending ourselves against online harrassment (sic) does not constitute harrassment (sic) of the harrasser. (sic) The complaint seems to demonstrate a lack of any sense of humor on the part of Attorney General Madigan. Tongue in cheek posts like the picture of bowing passengers cannot reasonably be inferred to mean that we have something against certain customers."

The lawsuit makes it clear it does not buy that point of view, alleging the bus company discriminates against customers based on race, national origin and religion, harasses customers who are concerned about poor service and mistreatment and encourages employees to avoid serving students who do not speak English.

CHUCK BERMAN/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2013

Suburban Express and its owner had been under investigation since a controversial email the company sent last year.

One of the company's marketing emails to students touted "Passengers like you. You won't feel like you're in China when you're on our buses."

The attorney general's investigation following the December mass email, Madigan said, uncovered "rampant and equally egregious examples of the owner's illegal conduct."

The bus company provides shuttle service from various universities to O'Hare International Airport, major malls and shopping centers in the Chicago suburbs.

Madigan also said the company abusively retaliates against customers and files lawsuits against customers who complain, listing students' financial information.

The company is owned by Dennis Toeppen. He could not be reached for comment.

In one email, Madigan said, Toeppen called a customer "a pushy little Chinese international student with a fragile ego" who "should go back to your country and stay there." In another he wrote, "Bone up on your English a little so you don't have more problems like this in my country."

"This is explicit, race-based discrimination that in addition to being unacceptable is also illegal," Madigan said.

The company also hosts a "page of shame," where complaining customers are called "slimeball" and a "dishonest little scumbag."

The executive director of Asian Americans Advancing Justice, Tuyet Le, said she is encouraged by the lawsuit and hopes it ends the company's policies and practices.

"A bus company that advertises its racism has no place in serving the people of Illinois," Le said. "And by urging his employees to mock and discriminate against Asian students, Mr. Toeppen is fueling anti-immigrant sentiments growing in this country. Companies that are openly hostile toward people of different faiths, races or nationalities deserve to be put out of business."

The company, in its Monday statement, said the attorney general's complaint "assumes non-existent intent" and that its advertising campaigns have been misinterpreted.

"For instance, we have long advertised with posters that simply state 'Go Home,' " the message states. "The posters mean, go home for the weekend on our bus. In an effort to appeal to potential customers whose primary language is not English, we in 2013 translated 'Go Home' into several languages and created additional posters. Unfortuantely, (sic) some readers misunderstood them to mean that they should go back to their country of origin and stay there. That was not our intent."

After its December marketing email caused an uproar, the company sent out a second email later that day, titled "Apology." The email dismissed those who characterized the ad as being racist, then shifted to criticize U. of I.'s admission policies and lament that the number of "nonnative English speakers places a variety of burdens on domestic students."

There are 5,868 Chinese students enrolled at Urbana-Champaign — 12 percent of the population, according to university data.

The company also operates buses branded the Illini Shuttle and Allerton Charter Coach.

The civil complaint seeks fines of $10,000 and $50,000 for each discriminatory or unfair act. A hearing on the restraining order is scheduled for later this week.

Female firefighters still face uphill battle

assed about her work online. The department appointed a woman to address gender problems, but she resigned this year, according to local reports, saying no one was heeding her suggestions.

This year, the U.S. Department of Justice sued the city of Houston over claims that two female firefighters were victims of sexual harassment that included male co-workers urinating in their dormitory, writing sexist messages on the walls and deactivating speakers so the women couldn't respond to emergency calls.

Closer to home, the Chicago Fire Department has been the subject of several lawsuits in recent decades alleging race and sex discrimination in its hiring. For years, the department required firefighters and paramedics to pass physical tests that were challenged in court as discriminatory against women before the city agreed to replace the tests.

Marni Willenson, an attorney who sued to challenge the physical test for firefighters, said the litigation helped get 44 more women onto a force that she estimated has fewer than 200 female firefighters out of some 5,000 overall.

"That's a lot, given where we started," she said. "So we're proud of that and they're doing great."

Now, like many departments, the city uses the Candidate Physical Ability Test meant to better simulate the requirements of the job, such as climbing stairs, raising ladders, dragging hoses, carrying equipment, swinging axes and conducting searches.

Chicago gets about 30,000 applicants whenever it periodically opens up the hiring process for firefighters, but the vast majority are men, Fire Department spokesman Larry Langford said. While he said Chicago hires more women firefighters than some other big cities like New York or Los Angeles, "we need to do better."

As for promotions, Langford said the head of the paramedics is a woman, one of five district chiefs is a woman and a number of women are deputy district chiefs and battalion chiefs.

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Firefighter and paramedic Kelly Gitzke helps transport a patient to Centegra Hospital Huntley on Friday. "Physically, the guys are stronger, but mentally, in other situations, I might be the stronger person," she said.

Updating century-old fire stations

He acknowledged that the department still has a long way to go to retrofit its station houses, some of which are 100 years old, to accommodate women. To that end, the city is working on plans to update stations with partitions in sleeping quarters and separate men's and women's bathroom and shower facilities. Firefighters are now expected to maintain modesty in the clothes they sleep in.

"All of it's being addressed because the issues are genuine," Langford said.

Lauren Howard, the first female firefighter at the Chicago Fire Department as well as the first woman to become a captain, said it's important for women to see potential role models in the fire service. She said she hopes the hiring in Joliet encourages more female applicants.

"(If) people see she can do it, maybe more will try," she said. "I want to see women seize more empowerment. We don't want to wait for it to be given to us."

When Howard was hired in 1980, she recalled some had expressed concern about men and women sharing sleeping quarters and facilities at firehouses.

"I found no place safer than to sleep in the bunk room with 20 firefighters," she said, "the safest places on Earth."

She remembers one co-worker told her his wife wouldn't like the situation.

"Then you'll have to find yourself a new job," she said she replied. "Because I'm here to stay."

While there were already female paramedics on the job, Howard was the sole female firefighter in the department for years until 1986, when one firefighter training class included 20 women, two of whom were her nieces.

"The challenge was rewarding," she said. "When you're on your way to a fire, you don't have time to be afraid. You just trust your crew."

Researchers from Drexel University in Philadelphia studied the experiences of 30 female firefighters and published their findings in September in the Journal of Workplace Behavioral Health.

A majority of the women said they faced a double standard, especially for any who were the first female to join a particular department.

"We're assumed incompetent basically, inferior and incompetent," said one female firefighter with 25 years on the job.

Several participants also described cases of discrimination or harassment; some said they felt a responsibility to other female firefighters to stay on the job.

But the research also found that male firefighters often viewed their female colleagues as more skilled at de-escalating tense situations, calming emergency medical patients and assessing on-the-job risks, said Jennifer Taylor, director of the Center for Firefighter Injury Research and Safety Trends at the university's Dornsife School of Public Health.

"Some fire departments do a great job. ... They value those women and they promote them up," she said. "Anybody who signs up for the job of firefighter or paramedic is a hero in my book, regardless of gender. Nobody cares the gender of the firefighter that comes to your house when it's on fire."

Advocates' proposals for improving participation by women included recruiting from sports and fitness, medical fields and college campuses. Other suggestions include zero tolerance for harassment and accountability for managers to increase hiring.

'Mentally ... I might be the stronger person'

Despite ongoing issues, several female firefighters interviewed in the suburbs said they generally felt accepted by their male colleagues.

"Physically, the guys are stronger, but mentally, in other situations, I might be the stronger person," said Huntley firefighter-paramedic Kelly Gitzke, who is also a nurse. "So many of our calls are for emergency medical services. I might have better experience because of my other job as a nurse. They might pull me in (to respond)."

Carissa Smith, Joliet's first female Fire Department hire and among eight recent new recruits, also has a medical background, having been an Army medic. Earlier this month she became the first woman to sign "The Book," a log of new recruits the department has kept since 1905.

Smith, 29, declined to be interviewed, according to Chief Joe Formhals, who said she wanted to focus on training and didn't want to be singled out for recognition.

He noted the city has had female candidates on the Fire Department's eligibility list in the past but none ever joined.

Until 2008, the city also had a requirement that firefighter applicants had to live in the city at the time they applied, which may have further limited the pool of potential applicants.

When recruiting candidates for a new list, Formhals said the department's outreach efforts were more extensive this time and included job fairs, social media posts, some college visits and even some recruitment efforts at area fitness centers. He noted the department received more than 650 applications.

"There definitely has been a priority to open up the hiring process for city jobs," Mayor Bob O'Dekirk said. "The Fire Department and recruitment department have worked really hard to make sure people know that it's an open process."

The new eligibility list includes a number of females and minorities. Smith was ranked third on the list and another female was right behind her who would have been hired had she not withdrawn her name, the chief said.

He is hopeful that having a diverse department will help encourage others to join.

"It just shows that the door is open," he said. "It's a great career and it shouldn't just be a career for men. ... It's for anyone interested in helping the community."

'I always had to prove I could do everything'

Hiring women is one thing; retaining them and creating fair work environments is another. When someone does pull a rude prank or make an offensive comment, firefighters said, it's important to address it right away.

"I always had to prove I could do everything," said Alicia McCoy, the acting fire chief at Abbott Laboratories who has also served with the Winthrop Harbor Fire Department. As with many in the business, her father was a firefighter. "Everybody gets a little harassment hazing kind of stuff, but I don't think I got it any worse than the guys."

In her early days on the job, people would see her hop off a fire engine at the scene of an emergency and doubt she was really a firefighter. That attitude has largely gone away, she said, but other struggles remain. There's an ongoing problem with having good maternity programs to retain women when they have children.

But in general, she said, there's much more acceptance now.

"I've seen a lot of growth," said McCoy, who is president of Fire Service Women of Illinois. "Sometimes you think this is never changing; attitudes are the same. Maybe there's pockets throughout the country like that, but in my experience, there's been a lot of change."

Curt Varone has more than 40 years of experience in the fire service, having retired as a deputy assistant chief in Providence, R.I. He said he consults for fire departments and writes a blog on fire law.

Varone said some male firefighters still gripe that departments have lowered their physical standards to accommodate women. And while he said such complaints are unfair, he said physical abilities can vary between men and women, and departments need to figure out ways to address that, such as by using more lightweight equipment, though that can be costly.

But culture barriers can be as big as financial ones.

"How do you change that frat house culture? That's what we're wrestling with. We've been fiddling around with this for 40 years and we're continuing to have the same problems," Varone said. "We need to look at what is leading to the lack of women in the fire service. ... Hearts and minds have not changed on this issue. (That's) the only way we're going to see progress."

What could have motivated the shooting remained unknown, authorities said. Reinking requested a lawyer after his arrest and refused to answer questions or make a statement, Don Aaron, a spokesman for the Metropolitan Nashville Police Department, said at a news briefing. Reinking was taken to a hospital before he was to be booked on four counts of criminal homicide, Aaron said.

"It's not the way you want your town to be advertised," said a woman who's lived in Morton since 1991. She said she was stunned when she saw her hometown flash across the television.

"I saw Morton right across there, and I said, 'Oh, no,' " said the woman, who was walking her dog in town Monday. She said she did not want to be identified because she didn't want to be associated with the incident. "I just think he needed help and didn't get it, just another one of those sad stories."

Reinking was regarded as somewhat of a loner who was considered by some to be socially awkward, according to friends. He came from a Christian family and was home-schooled, but he also took some classes at nearby Tremont High School. Reinking took a strong interest in photography and was often seen with his camera.

Reinking's encounters with law enforcement before the Waffle House shooting were unknown to many until a Sunday afternoon news conference by the Tazewell County sheriff's office.

"You never think that you'd know somebody like that or be connected to someone who could do something so heinous like that. It's a tragedy. I don't like to talk about politics, but something needs to be done on mental health," the Morton woman said.

Failed efforts

Reports released by the Tazewell County sheriff's office show at least three occasions when Reinking's father, Jeffrey Reinking, took possession of his son's guns, only to return them to him.

In August 2017, Reinking was arrested by the U.S. Secret Service after authorities said he crossed a restricted area near the White House, saying he wanted to meet President Donald Trump. He was not armed during the incident, but the FBI requested that Illinois State Police revoke his firearm owner's identification card.

Travis Reinking handed over his FOID card to officers and transferred four weapons, along with ammunition, to his father, according to an Illinois State Police Firearm Disposition Record. The weapons were a 9 mm handgun, an AR-15 rifle, a .22-caliber rifle and another rifle.

Aaron said Travis Reinking's father acknowledged to officials that he gave the weapons back to his son.

At a news conference Monday, Special Agent Marcus Watson of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives said Jeffrey Reinking could face charges for returning guns to his son, an act that was "potentially a violation of federal law."

The Tazewell County state's attorney office said in an email that the office did not have enough information to determine whether Jeffrey Reinking would face criminal charges there.

After a June 2017 incident, Jeffrey Reinking also told police he would take his son's guns away.

At that time, Travis Reinking was spotted taking off a dress, jumping into a Tremont swimming pool and yelling at people, according to a Tazewell sheriff's report. He had been seen throwing a rifle into the trunk of his car that same day, according to the report. No charges were filed. An officer wrote in the report that he called the father and advised him "he might want to lock the guns back up until Travis gets mental help which he stated he would." The report stated that Jeffrey Reinking told police he had taken his son's guns away on a previous occasion but returned them when Travis Reinking wanted to move out of state.

A year before, on May 27, 2016, the sheriff's office responded to a CVS parking lot in Morton because Travis Reinking reported that he thought singer Taylor Swift was stalking him. His family told police that Travis Reinking had made suicidal comments and had access to multiple weapons, according to the report.

'Red flag' law

The shooting at the Waffle House already has Illinois lawmakers rethinking legislation. Earlier this year, the Illinois Senate passed the Lethal Violence Order of Protection Act, but state representatives are rewriting the bill and renaming it the Firearm Restraining Order.

It's similar to "red flag" bills that have gained traction in the wake of the mass shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Florida. The bills allow a relative, friend or law enforcement officer to report someone in distress whose guns need to be temporarily taken away.

Because of the Waffle House shooting, Rep. Kathleen Willis, D-Addison, said Monday that lawmakers were revisiting whether the person should be allowed to transfer the weapons to someone like a relative or whether the guns should be seized by a law enforcement agency in every case.

The proposed bill would suspend a person's FOID card for six months, and the revision of the proposed bill provides more details about due process for the person whose weapons have been confiscated.

"We want the act to really get the person the help they need," she said. "We don't want it to be a punitive act. We want them to get the help they need while still protecting the Second Amendment."

Kirk Miller, an associate professor at Northern Illinois University, said that if law enforcement is given the proper resources to seize the weapons, the law would close the loophole that keeps guns in circulation.

"Police are able to seize property. Why they wouldn't seize firearms in situations where there is more legal evidence that the person has, you know, has committed a crime or is a danger and should not be able to possess a firearm as an example of private property — it's strange," Miller said.

But it could be a staggering task considering the estimates that thousands of people already have their FOID cards revoked. There are also gaps in information police have about how many guns a person possesses, Miller said.

When a person's FOID card is revoked, that person has to fill out a form that states the type of weapon, location and if the weapon is going to be transferred to another person, according to state law. It does not stipulate restrictions on who the guns can be transferred to.

Last year, the Illinois State Police told the Tribune the agency doesn't have the manpower to confiscate a person's guns when the FOID card is rescinded. It relies on local police to follow up.

More than 2.1 million people had FOID cards in Illinois in 2017, according to state police. About 11,000 people had their cards revoked in 2016, but fewer than half of those people submitted the required reports indicating what happened with the weapons.

Keeping a distance

At the home of Reinking's relatives in Morton, the Peoria Journal Star lay on the front porch, stuffed into a translucent, peach-colored casing. The front page featured a photo of an investigator ducking under the crime scene tape outside the Nashville Waffle House and the headline read in all-caps: "Police: Morton Man Killed Four in Tennessee." A man at the residence declined to comment.

Daniel Reinking, Travis' Reinking's great-uncle, said he hadn't been in touch with the family in several years but learned what was going on from the blitz of media coverage.

"It was shock, of course, and disbelief," Daniel Reinking said over the phone.

Many in Morton didn't want to discuss the shooting, let alone acknowledge Reinking's roots. The shooting and manhunt seemed to blindside the small town where people only appeared to speak of it in hushed circles or on social media.

"They are a really good family," one woman said. "This is a really traumatic, shocking thing that happened to them and our town."

Senate panel OKs Pompeo for State Dept.

Sen. Paul flips to 'yes' after being opposed

By Tracy Wilkinson
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee approved CIA Director Mike Pompeo as secretary of state on party lines Monday after a Republican holdout changed his mind at the last minute, avoiding an embarrassing defeat for President Donald Trump.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky had vowed to oppose Pompeo, but Paul tweeted shortly before the vote that after speaking repeatedly to the two men, he was convinced that Pompeo now agreed with Trump that "the Iraq War was a mistake and it is time to leave Afghanistan," two of his key concerns.

Pompeo

The full Senate already appeared on track to confirm Pompeo's nomination this week after two Senate Democrats, both facing reelection battles in states that Trump won handily, offered support earlier Monday. The Senate traditionally gives broad leeway to a president's Cabinet picks.

But Paul's reversal meant Pompeo, 54, also got the approval of the Senate committee, thus keeping its record of approving every president's nominee for secretary of state.

Nominations were not routinely submitted to the panel until the 20th century.

The final vote was delayed when Sen. Johnny Isakson, R-Ga., failed to appear at the hearing, leading to a 10-10 tie along party lines. After a brief recess, Sen. Chris Coons, D-Del., then agreed to withdraw his vote against, so the final tally was 10-9 in favor.

Pompeo attended the U.S. military academy at West Point and Harvard Law School. He was elected to the House in 2010 as a tea party Republican from Kansas, and served three terms until he joined the Trump administration.

Trump has said he and Pompeo were "on the same wavelength" and shared a worldview — unlike his first secretary of state, Rex Tillerson. Trump fired Tillerson last month via Twitter.

Sen. Bob Corker, R-Tenn., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, praised Pompeo before the vote. "There is probably no one in the United States who knows more about what is going on in the world today," he said, stressing Pompeo's "very good relationship" with Trump.

Trump had excoriated Pompeo's opponents Monday morning on Twitter as "obstructionists," claiming that Democrats "will not approve hundreds of good people" by "maxing out" the confirmation process.

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders went further, questioning the patriotism of Democrats.

J. SCOTT APPLEWHITE/AP

Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Bob Corker, left, and Sens. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., and Ben Cardin, D-Md., confer before the vote on Mike Pompeo as secretary of state. The committee's vote Monday was 10-9 in favor of Pompeo.

"Look, at some point, Democrats have to decide whether they love this country more than they hate this president," she said on Fox News. "And they have to decide that they want to put the safety and the security and the diplomacy of our country ahead of their own political games."

Republican lawmakers blamed Pompeo's difficulties on political partisanship in an election year, noting that many of the Democrats who oppose him now backed his nomination last year to head the CIA. He was confirmed by a vote of 66-32.

Democrats argued that the job of America's top diplomat — fourth in line to the presidency — is vastly different from CIA chief.

Sen. Robert Menendez of New Jersey, ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, argued Monday that Pompeo was unqualified for the job.

"This suggestion that there is partisanship just because we don't support a candidate is ridiculous," Menendez said.

He said Pompeo, in his confirmation hearing last week, gave contradictory answers that were not always "forthright" and exhibited a "lack of depth of knowledge" on key global hot spots.

Democrats and other opponents have criticized some of Pompeo's past statements as anti-Muslim and prejudiced against gays, lesbians, bisexuals and transgender people. Pompeo told the Senate committee last week that if he is confirmed, he would defend gay rights and respect minorities.

Menendez also said he was disillusioned that Pompeo had concealed, in private conversations, his then-secret trip to North Korea over the Easter weekend.

On Monday, Sen. Joe Manchin, D-W.Va., and Sen. Joe Donnelly, D-Ind., joined Sen. Heidi Heitkamp, D-N.D., to announce support for Pompeo. Their votes should be enough to guarantee he squeaks through the narrowly divided Senate.

First lady in a more visible role after being in shadows

By Cathleen Decker
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — She is either complicit in her husband's worst instincts or a victim of them, either struggling in an anachronistic job or confidently doing precisely what she wants to do with it. Fifteen months after she became first lady, Melania Trump remains a mystery.

In the span of several days ending Tuesday, Trump will have been thrust into a more visible public role than perhaps at any other time in her husband's presidency. It comes after a lengthy period of relative invisibility that has not only confounded White House tradition but also limited her potential political benefit to a troubled administration.

After hosting the Japanese prime minister and his wife at Trump's Mar-a-Lago compound in Florida last week, Melania Trump attended the Saturday funeral of former first lady Barbara Bush in Houston; the president stayed away. Before the service she smiled and chatted with former President Barack Obama, whom her husband has scorned for years, and, again smiling, joined in a formal photo with all of the former presidents and first ladies who attended the funeral.

Later that day, as her husband continued to rage on Twitter, she released a statement reiterating support for the Bush family, which has been antagonistic toward the president.

On Tuesday, Melania Trump will preside over the first state dinner of the Trump presidency, honoring the president of France, Emmanuel Macron, and his wife, Brigitte. The delay in hosting a state dinner, an event usually held in a president's first year, had raised questions about Melania Trump's view of the job.

The White House on Monday sought to underscore her role by releasing a video showing the first lady picking out dishes and linens and orchestrating a luxurious tableau. White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders emphasized at the top of her daily briefing that Trump "has taken an active role in every detail and planning of the visit."

It should be no surprise that Melania Trump's tenure as first lady has been as unconventional as her husband's presidency. She delayed her arrival in Washington for five months, so their son Barron could finish school in New York. Since coming to the capital, she has been buffeted by Trump's controversies, most uncomfortably the multiple accusations of affairs.

She and Barron have been only sparingly seen compared to other first families.

"We still don't know that much about her and it seems like she intends to keep it that way," said Kate Andersen Brower, author of "First Women" and a second book about the inner workings of the White House.

In the absence of a fully developed image, Melania Trump's actions have drawn outsize attention. In January, after allegations surfaced about Trump's pre-presidential affairs, she canceled her participation in an overseas trip with her husband.

She traveled separately to the State of the Union address at the Capitol on Jan. 30, and marched into the House chamber wearing a white pantsuit, a style evocative of women's suffrage and a totem of Hillary Clinton's campaign. The couple's anniversary on Jan. 22 and then Valentine's Day passed without any public recognition of their marriage.

PABLO MARTINEZ MONSIVAIS/AP

First lady Melania Trump hosted the Japanese prime minister and his wife last week at the Mar-a-Lago compound in Florida and later attended Barbara Bush's funeral in Texas.

Yet when Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe arrived at the Trump's Florida home last week, the first couple strode hand-in-hand across the lawn to greet him.

That yin and yang was reminiscent of the 2016 campaign.

Melania Trump spurned the practice of modern political wives and barely campaigned for her husband. Yet when he needed it most — after the release of a video showing him bragging about assaulting women — she went on camera to defend him.

Anita McBride, who served as chief of staff to Laura Bush, noted that Melania Trump, unlike most first ladies, did not come to the White House after a lifetime in politics. "Even the most experienced politicians ... will find it very difficult at first to adjust to the security, adjust to the schedule," McBride said.

Robert Watson, an American Studies professor at Florida's Lynn University who has written about first ladies, said Melania Trump's background should be a strength — she is an immigrant, now a U.S. citizen, who speaks several languages. But that, too, has been made problematic by her husband's broadsides against immigrants and his desire to retreat from global cooperation.

"The first lady can be a secret weapon and ... Melania could soften his image," Watson said, but instead she has chosen to do "the absolute minimum necessary."

It's not clear if the week of activity will inspire a higher public profile or whether Melania Trump will return to the pace of her first year in office.

"I think what we see now is what to expect the remainder of his time in office," said Ohio University historian Katherine Jellison. "We're going to see a woman who does not want to be involved politically much, and sometimes does not want to be in the fishbowl at all."

Trumps, Macrons dine at Mount Vernon

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Tending to bonding before business, President Donald Trump and France's Emmanuel Macron opened the French president's visit Monday with an anything-but-ordinary double date with their wives at George Washington's house.

The presidents and their spouses hopped on a helicopter bound for Mount Vernon, Washington's historic riverside home, for a private dinner one night before the leaders sit down for talks on a weighty agenda including security, trade and the Iran nuclear deal.

Macron's pomp-filled three-day state visit to Washington underscores the importance that both sides attach to the relationship: Macron, who calls Trump often, has emerged as something of a "Trump whisperer" at a time when the American president's relationships with other European leaders are more strained. Trump, who attaches great importance to pageantry and ceremony, chose to honor Macron with the first state visit of his administration as he woos the French president.

The couples were led on a brief outdoor tour Monday before they entered the pale yellow building for dinner of Dover sole, pasta stuffed with lemon ricotta, and chocolate souffle and cherry vanilla ice cream.

Macron will be welcomed back to the White House on Tuesday with a traditional arrival ceremony featuring nearly 500 members of the U.S. military and a 21-gun salute. The state visit also offers Macron his first Oval Office sit-down with Trump and a joint White House news conference.

The French president's White House day will be capped Tuesday night with a state dinner.

S. Korea halts propaganda broadcasts before summit

South Korean President Moon Jae-in and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un appear on a news magazine cover.

Seoul had been blasting messages, pop songs since '16

By Hyung-jin Kim
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korea halted anti-North Korea propaganda broadcasts across their tense border Monday as officials from the two Koreas met again to work out details of their leaders' upcoming talks, expected to focus on the North's nuclear program.

Seoul had been blasting propaganda messages and K-pop songs from border loudspeakers since the North's fourth nuclear test in early 2016. The North quickly matched the South's action with its own border broadcasts and launches of balloons carrying anti-South Korea leaflets across the border.

South Korea turned off its broadcasts Monday to ease military tensions and establish an environment for peaceful talks, Seoul's Defense Ministry said in a statement. It said Seoul hopes the decision will lead to both sides stopping slander and propaganda activities.

Yonhap news agency, citing a government source, said that North Korea was believed to have turned off many of its propaganda broadcasts later Monday. Yonhap earlier reported that some North Korean broadcasts were sporadically heard in the South on Monday morning.

South Korean defense officials said they couldn't immediately confirm the status of the North's broadcasts.

The move comes amid a recent thaw in animosities, with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un trying to reach out to Seoul and Washington after conducting his country's sixth and most powerful nuclear test and three long-range missile test launches last year.

Kim and South Korean President Moon Jae-in are to meet at the Korean border village of Panmunjom on Friday in the countries' third-ever summit talks.

Kim is to hold separate talks with President Donald Trump in May or early June in what would be the first North Korea-U.S. summit.

On Monday, the Koreas held a third round of working-level talks at Panmunjom and agreed to conduct a joint rehearsal Wednesday of the summit, Moon's office said in a statement. It said the two sides agreed that Friday's summit will include a welcoming ceremony and a banquet dinner as well as a formal meeting between Moon and Kim.

The Koreas agreed last week to allow live television broadcasts for key parts of the summit. Monday's statement said North Korea also agreed on live broadcasts by South Korean media of unspecified events at the northern side of Panmunjom.

The Korean summit is to take place at a South Korean building on the southern side of Panmunjom. This means that Kim must cross the border into South Korea in what would be the first such act by a North Korean leader since the end of the 1950-53 Korean War.

Kim has said he is willing to place his nuclear program up for negotiation. But it is unclear what disarmament steps he will offer during the two sets of summit talks. U.S. officials have said they want to the North to complete full nuclear disarmament.

North Korea said Saturday it will close its nuclear testing facility and suspend nuclear and intercontinental ballistic missile tests. But it stopped short of suggesting it will give up its nuclear weapons or scale back its production of missiles and their related components.

Trump nonetheless tweeted Sunday that the North has "agreed to denuclearization (so great for World), site closure, & no more testing!"

Trump's pick to be the next secretary of state, CIA Director Mike Pompeo, traveled to North Korea on Easter weekend to lay the groundwork for the summit meeting. Pompeo's trip was an indication that preparations for the North-U.S. summit are underway, though many U.S. and other foreign experts have had doubts.

Van kills 10 on busy sidewalk in Toronto tries were gathered in Canada to discuss a range of international issues in the run-up to the G7 meeting near Quebec City in June.

A senior national government official said authorities had not turned over the investigation to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a sign that investigators believed it unlikely terrorism was the motive.

The driver was heading south on busy Yonge Street around 1:30 p.m. and the streets were crowded with people enjoying a warm day when the van jumped onto the sidewalk.

Ali Shaker, who was driving near the van at the time, told Canadian broadcast outlet CP24 that the driver appeared to be moving deliberately through the crowd at more than 30 mph.

"He just went on the sidewalk," a distraught Shaker said. "He just started hitting everybody, man. He hit every single person on the sidewalk. Anybody in his way he would hit."

Witness Peter Kang told CTV News that the driver did not seem to make any effort to stop. "If it was an accident he would have stopped," Kang said. "But the person just went through the sidewalk. He could have stopped."

Video broadcast on Canadian outlets showed police arresting the driver, dressed in dark clothes, after officers surrounded him and his rental Ryder van several blocks from where the incident occurred in the North York neighborhood.

The suspect appeared to make some sort of gesture at the police with an object in his hand just before they ordered him to lie down and took him away.

Witness Phil Zullo told Canadian Press that he saw police arresting the suspect and people "strewn all over the road" where the incident occurred. "I must have seen about five, six people being resuscitated by bystanders and by ambulance drivers," Zullo said. "It was awful. Brutal."

"We lost a little bit of our innocence," John Filion, a city councilor who represents the area where the incident occurred, said in a phone interview Monday. "We often think of ourselves as being somewhat excluded from the violence and craziness that goes on in other parts of the world. You just kind of don't think of Toronto as a place where that kind of violence will come to."

Police shut down the Yonge and Finch intersection after the incident and Toronto's transit agency said it had suspended service on the subway line running through the area.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau expressed his sympathies for those involved. "Our hearts go out to everyone affected," he said in Ottawa. "We are going to have more to learn and more to say in the coming hours."

Closing arguments loom in Cosby case after defense rests

By Michael R. Sisak
Associated Press

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — Bill Cosby's sexual assault retrial is set to go to the jury Tuesday, but not before closing arguments pitting the prosecution's portrayal of a serial predator against the defense's contention that he's the victim of a "con artist" who made up drugging and molestation allegations to score a big payday.

The defense rested Monday after the 80-year-old comedian said he wouldn't testify, echoing his decision at his first trial, which ended in a hung jury last year.

"You now have all of the evidence," Judge Steven O'Neill told jurors, sending them back to their sequestration hotel after an abbreviated day of testimony. "Try to relax, so that you're on your game tomorrow."

Jurors at Cosby's first trial deliberated for five days without reaching a verdict on three related counts of aggravated indecent assault. Each carries a prison sentence of up to 10 years.

That trial hinged largely on chief accuser Andrea Constand's testimony alleging that the "Cosby Show" star knocked her out with three pills and violated her at his suburban Philadelphia mansion in January 2004.

Cosby has said he gave Costand a cold and allergy medicine to help her relax before what he called a consensual sexual encounter.

Comedian Bill Cosby, 80, arrives at his sexual assault trial Monday in Norristown, Pa.

The current panel of seven men and five women also heard from Constand, but both sides have given them much more to consider.

This time, prosecutors were able to call five additional accusers who testified that Cosby also drugged and violated them.

Cosby's new defense team, led by Michael Jackson lawyer Tom Mesereau, countered with a more robust effort at stoking doubts about Constand's credibility and raising questions about whether Cosby's arrest was even legal.

The defense's star witness was a former colleague of Constand who says Constand spoke of leveling false sexual assault accusations against a high-profile person for the purpose of filing a civil suit. Constand got a civil settlement of nearly $3.4 million from Cosby.

Both juries also heard from Cosby himself, via an explosive deposition he gave in 2005 and 2006 as part of Constand's civil suit against him. In it, Cosby acknowledged he gave the sedative Quaaludes to women before sex in the 1970s.

Cosby's lawyers devoted the last two days of their case to travel records they say prove he couldn't have been at his suburban Philadelphia home in January 2004. Cosby's lawyers argue that any encounter there with Constand would have happened earlier, thus falling outside the statute of limitations.

The date of the alleged encounter is important because Cosby was charged late in 2015 — just before the 12-year statute of limitations was to expire.

But the records also have large gaps — a total of 17 days that month in which Cosby wasn't traveling, performing or taping TV appearances.

U.S. offers $20 million for fugitive

FBI puts 'Prince' of Mexican narcos on most-wanted list

By Patrick J. McDonnell
Los Angeles Times

MEXICO CITY — One of Mexico's legendary drug lords, a fugitive convicted in the notorious 1985 slaying of a U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agent, is back in the narco business — at least that's what U.S. prosecutors say.

This month, the FBI placed Rafael Caro Quintero, aging co-founder of the now defunct Guadalajara Cartel, on its 10 most-wanted list. It also announced a reward for information leading to his arrest: $20 million.

Caro Quintero, believed to be at least 65 years old, has been a fugitive in Mexico since 2013.

That's when a Mexican judge sprang him from prison on a technicality after he had served 28 years of a 40-year sentence for drug trafficking and for the murder of the DEA's Enrique "Kiki" Camarena. The judge ruled that Caro Quintero should have been tried in a state court, not a federal court.

His release enraged U.S. officials. Mexican authorities vowed to arrest him anew.

But the fabled mob boss, his exploits the subject of countless corridos, or ballads, immediately went underground.

On April 12, they unsealed a new indictment against the veteran trafficker, known as "The Prince," alleging his leadership role in smuggling heroin, cocaine, marijuana and methamphetamines into the United States from 1980 to 2017.

"We take the Caro Quintero situation extremely personally," said Rusty Payne, a DEA spokesman in Washington. "He is someone who we desperately want to see face justice."

MEXICAN FEDERAL PREVENTIVE POLICE 2005

Drug lord Rafael Caro Quintero, believed now to be at least 65 years old, has been a fugitive in Mexico since 2013.

According to the DEA, Caro Quintero has emerged as a co-leader of the Sinaloa Cartel, which was once headed by Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman, now jailed in New York.

Both men hail from the remote municipality of Badiraguato in northwestern Sinaloa state, deep in Mexico's so-called Golden Triangle of illicit opium-poppy production. There, clan loyalties are tied to the multibillion-dollar smuggling industry.

The DEA would like to see Caro Quintero, like Guzman, extradited to the United States.

"We're not going to stop looking for Caro Quintero until we find him and put him back behind bars where he belongs," FBI Deputy Director David Bowdich said.

Caro Quintero has given the Mexican media several interviews from hiding, depicting himself as an infirm retiree who did his time and is now hounded by U.S. and Mexican law enforcement helicopters, drones and assault squads.

"I don't belong to any cartel," Caro-Quintero told an interviewer from Mexico's Aristegui Noticias news site, in an account published this month. "Whoever says (otherwise) is lying!"

He said that he had trafficked only in marijuana, and had long ago left that contraband trade behind. "Now that I'm out I don't want to know anything about drugs. ... I want to live in peace. ... Everyone deserves a second chance."

He suggested the allegations were based on information supplied by a cousin, Sajid Emilio Quintero Navidad (a.k.a. "The Cadet"), who pleaded guilty to drug-trafficking charges in January in U.S. District Court in San Diego.

"Sajid is lying!" Caro Quintero told the Mexican interviewer.

A spokeswoman for the U.S. Attorney's office in San Diego declined to comment when asked whether Quintero Navidad was cooperating with authorities.

The article in Aristegui Noticias depicted Caro Quintero as an anguished "wild cat," avoiding surveillance drones, "never sleeping in the same place and always in the countryside in a tent or sleeping bag."

U.S. authorities call Caro Quintero one of the "godfathers" of Mexican drug trafficking and say he was responsible for Camarena's kidnapping and murder. Camarena was bundled into a car on the streets of Guadalajara en route to lunch with his wife on Feb. 7, 1985.

The bodies of Camarena and his Mexican pilot, Alfredo Zavala, who was kidnapped separately, were found almost a month after the men were abducted. Their remains, dumped in the western state of Michoacan, showed signs of torture.

According to U.S. officials, Camarena was executed in retaliation for a 1984 raid by Mexican authorities on a marijuana plantation owned by Caro Quintero. The Guadalajara cartel blamed Camarena for the takedown and sought payback, officials say.

While Caro Quintero is a fugitive, two other Guadalajara cartel co-founders — Miguel "The Godfather" Angel Felix Gallardo and Ernesto "Don Neto" Fonseca Carrillo — are serving prison sentences in Mexico.

U.S. veteran maimed in Afghan blast receives penis transplant

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A veteran who lost his genitals from a blast in Afghanistan has received the world's most extensive penis transplant, and doctors said Monday he is recovering and expected to leave the hospital this week.

Johns Hopkins University surgeons, saying they wanted to address "an unspoken injury of war," rebuilt the man's pelvic region — transplanting a penis, scrotum and part of the abdominal wall from a deceased donor — in an experimental 14-hour operation last month.

Lee

Such transplants "can help those warriors with missing genitalia just as hand and arm transplant transformed the lives of amputees," Dr. W.P. Andrew Lee, chairman of plastic and reconstructive surgery at Hopkins, told reporters Monday.

The patient, who asked to remain anonymous, is expected to recover urinary and, eventually, sexual function.

The scrotum transplant did not include the donor's testicles, meaning reproduction won't be possible. "We just felt there were too many unanswered ethical questions" with that extra step, said Hopkins' Dr. Damon Cooney.

Three other successful penis transplants have been reported, two in South Africa and one in 2016 at Massachusetts General Hospital. Those transplants involved only the penis, not extensive surrounding tissue that made this transplant more complex.

The loss of a penis, whether from cancer, accident or war injury, is emotionally traumatic, affecting urination, sexual intimacy and the ability to conceive a child. Many patients suffer in silence because of the stigma their injuries sometimes carry.

For a functional penis transplant, surgeons must connect tiny nerves and blood vessels. Candidates face some serious risks, including rejection of the tissue and side effects from anti-rejection drugs that must be taken for life.

But penis transplants have generated intense interest among veterans from Iraq and Afghanistan, and a few years ago Hopkins surgeons began planning and rehearsing how to perform such an operation in patients with widespread tissue damage. The Department of Defense Trauma Registry has recorded 1,367 male service members who survived with genitourinary injuries from 2001 to 2013.

Hopkins is screening additional veterans to see if they are good candidates for this type of reconstructive transplant.

In a statement from Hopkins, the patient was quoted as saying: "When I first woke up, I felt finally more normal."

Prince heirs sue Illinois hospital over his care during overdose

MINNEAPOLIS — Prince's heirs are suing Walgreens and the Illinois hospital that treated him after he suffered a drug overdose just a week before he died.

The musician was 57 when he was found in an elevator at his Paisley Park estate on April 21, 2016. He died from an accidental overdose of the powerful synthetic opioid fentanyl.

About a week earlier, his plane made an emergency stop in Moline, Ill., when he suffered from an opioid overdose and had to be revived by paramedics.

The wrongful-death lawsuit filed Friday in Cook County, Ill., alleges that a doctor and pharmacist at Trinity Medical Center failed to appropriately treat and investigate Prince's overdose, contributing to his death.

Walgreens and the hospital's parent company declined to comment, citing pending litigation.

GOP lawmakers to get FBI documents on Clinton probe

WASHINGTON — Two House Republican committee chairmen say the Justice Department has agreed to provide them with documents on the Hillary Clinton investigation that they've been requesting for months.

The deal was struck after Rep. Bob Goodlatte, R-Va., and Rep. Trey Gowdy, R-S.C., the respective leaders of the Judiciary and Oversight committees, met this month with the U.S. attorney, John Lausch, who has been selected to respond to Republican demands for documents.

The committees have been investigating the FBI's handling of the Clinton email investigation, which ended in 2016 without criminal charges.

The Judiciary Committee issued a subpoena to the Justice Department in March for records of the investigation.

MEXICO CITY — The remnants of a caravan of Central American migrants protested in northern Mexico on Monday, even as once again they drew angry tweets from President Donald Trump.

The mainly Central American migrants are demanding better treatment and many are planning to request asylum, either in the United States or Mexico.

"We are asking the government and migration authorities to respect the right to seek asylum," said caravan organizer Irineo Mujica.

The approximately 600 migrants arrived in the northern city of Hermosillo aboard trains over the weekend.

Trump tweeted Monday that "I have instructed the Secretary of Homeland Security not to let these large Caravans of people into our Country."

Armenia's leader quits amid protests, saying 'I was wrong'

YEREVAN, Armenia — Serzh Sargsyan, who ruled Armenia for 10 years, resigned Monday as prime minister after thousands of people poured into the streets to protest his political maneuvering to cling to power in this former Soviet republic.

The stunning development touched off jubilation in the capital of Yerevan, with car horns blaring and people dancing, hugging and waving the tricolor Armenian flag. The opposition called for a meeting with the acting prime minister to discuss a "peaceful transfer of power."

Sargsyan, 63, was president of the Caucasus Mountains nation from 2008 until term limits forced him out in March. But parliament, which is controlled by his party, voted to reduce the powers of the presidency and give them to the prime minister, ultimately installing Sargsyan in that post last week.

The parliament's action had triggered massive anti-government protests in Yerevan since April 13. A rally Sunday attracted about 50,000 people, and about 200 soldiers joined the protesters Monday.

In his surprise announcement posted on his website, Sargsyan said he should not have resisted the opposition's demands.

"I was wrong," Sargsyan said. "The movement on the streets is against my rule. I'm complying with their demands."

The government quickly named former Prime Minister Karen Karapetian as acting prime minister. A Sargsyan ally, he also was mayor of Yerevan and worked in Russia for five years as a top executive of the state-controlled gas giant Gazprom.

Senate lawmakers postpone VA nominee's hearing

WASHINGTON — Senate lawmakers have postponed the confirmation hearing for Ronny Jackson, President Donald Trump's nominee to lead the Department of Veterans Affairs, after top Republicans and Democrats raised concerns about his qualifications and oversight of the White House medical staff, White House and other administration officials were told Monday.

The development came just two days before Jackson, the White House physician, was scheduled to testify before the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs and threw what was already looking to be a difficult confirmation process into further jeopardy.

In addition to Jackson's lack of management experience, the former combat surgeon had come under fire for his glowing appraisal of Trump's health following his annual physical in January.

Court denies copyright for selfie-taking monkey

SAN FRANCISCO — U.S. copyright law does not allow lawsuits that seek to give animals rights to photographs or other original work, limiting such claims to humans, a federal appeals court ruled Monday in a novel case over a series of well-known selfies taken by a monkey in Indonesia.

The decision by a unanimous, three-judge panel of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a lower court ruling that also dismissed the lawsuit by the People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals against a photographer whose camera was used by a crested macaque to take the photos in 2011.

PETA's 2015 suit against David Slater sought financial control of the photographs — including a now-famous selfie of the monkey's toothy grin — for the benefit of the animal named Naruto in Indonesia.

A family spokesman said former President George H.W. Bush has been hospitalized in Houston with an infection, just after attending the funeral of his wife, Barbara. Jim McGrath wrote on Twitter that the 93-year-old Bush is "responding to treatments and appears to be recovering."

Battling DUIs with FaceTime justice

Repeat drunken drivers have a way of skirting the consequences of their crime: They refuse to take a breath test. That triggers automatic suspension of their driver's licenses but lessens the chance of DUI convictions since there's no record of their blood alcohol levels.

This chicanery can pay dividends. Repeat DUI convictions invite such penalties as a five-year license revocation or a stint in jail. Those penalties get even harsher when a driver has a blood alcohol that exceeds 0.16 percent, or if there is a child under 16 in the car.

McHenry County authorities want to close this escape hatch. In nine McHenry suburbs, police have begun using "e-warrants" to get blood draws from DUI suspects if they've failed a field sobriety test and refuse to submit to a breath test. The warrant can be issued in a matter of minutes. The officer teleconferences a judge, explains the probable cause, and if the judge agrees, the warrant is approved via electronic signature. FaceTime justice, if you will.

Other departments in the Chicago area at times pursue blood draws, though typically after crashes involving injury or death, or when there's evidence the suspect is a repeat offender. Those departments usually turn to a judge who's on call at night or on weekends to sign paper warrants — a process that takes time. Meanwhile the suspect's blood alcohol level dissipates.

With e-warrants, the judge's e-signature allows the officer to take the suspect to an emergency room for the blood draw. Authorities in McHenry say someone still can refuse to submit to a blood draw, but he or she then can be charged with obstruction of justice. That ultimatum should give DUI suspects more incentive to cooperate.

Forcing drivers to submit to blood tests by physically restraining them would be flat-out wrong. In 2005, the Illinois Supreme Court ruled that while a DUI defendant did not have the right to refuse tests to obtain blood alcohol level, law enforcement does not have unbridled authority "to use physical force in obtaining blood, urine or breath samples."

E-warrants are a welcome innovation in DUI cases. Subsequent prosecutions, and punishment of drivers found guilty, can deter other motorists from driving drunk, and get off the streets those who insist on imperiling public safety. Blood alcohol content, McHenry County State's Attorney Patrick Kenneally tells us, "is critical evidence. It's the most important evidence a jury can have because it's scientific. A jury needs that information to be able to make a decision."

E-warrants arrive as Illinois may have made some headway against drunken driving. DUI arrests in the state have dropped 10 percent, from 32,822 in 2014 to 29,528 in 2016. That's evidence that too many people still think those five or six vodka tonics won't matter as they slide behind the wheel. We hope e-warrants and good police practices bring more DUI convictions where they're merited.

Illinois, listen to Jeff Bezos

Amazon's Jeff Bezos, the world's richest person, released his company's annual letter to shareholders a few days ago. The letter is eagerly read in business circles because Bezos is a relentlessly competitive and thoughtful CEO who likes to share advice about achieving and maintaining success.

The theme of his 2018 letter: having high standards.

An audience we wish would read and contemplate Bezos: the political class of Illinois.

Bezos, who lives in Seattle, is no irrelevant figure. He is considering Chicago among 20 potential locations for a second Amazon headquarters, which would employ up to 50,000 people. Illinois could use those jobs. If the state hopes to win the competition, officials had better understand Bezos. He's a visionary entrepreneur and world-class manager. Chicago is a world-class city for business, but Illinois finances are a disaster. Bezos is worth nearly $130 billion. Illinois state government has a $130 billion pension system deficit.

So what can Bezos teach Illinois?

Obviously there are differences between government entities and the private sector, and only so much truth to the idea that a city, a state or a country can benefit from being "run like a business." But if there are universal values of leadership, they include a commitment to excellence and a belief that outstanding performance can be coaxed from any workforce — or legislature.

"I believe high standards are teachable," Bezos writes. "In fact, people are pretty good at learning high standards simply through exposure. High standards are contagious. Bring a new person onto a high standards team, and they'll quickly adapt. The opposite is also true. If low standards prevail, those too will quickly spread. And though exposure works well to teach high standards, I believe you can accelerate that rate of learning by articulating a few core principles of high standards."

He argues that building a culture of high standards is essential because it leads to an enduring level of better performance within the organization. Doing good work becomes its own reward. "It's part of what it means to be a professional," he writes. A lax attitude, Bezos warns, can be fatal to success because the competition is always conspiring against you. "You cannot rest on your laurels. Customers won't have it."

Bezos goes into more detail, but the point is that a rip-roaringly successful CEO is about to weigh the merits of Chicago as a place to do business against 19 other cities. And he believes passionately in a link between creating a culture of high standards and enduring success.

Does Illinois measure up? Not in terms of a commitment by its elected officials to making this state a magnet for investment. When Bezos writes if low standards prevail, those too will quickly spread, we can't help but think of the dysfunction in Springfield: the inability to pass balanced budgets and stick to them, the shrugged shoulders over high taxes, the regulatory burdens on business and, yes, the billions upon billions in promises of pension money that doesn't exist and may never exist.

Those failings could dissuade Amazon from choosing Illinois, and keep other employers away, too, because they don't want to tie their future to a troubled state. But it's also possible Chicago's many strengths will be enough to entice Bezos, just as the city attracts other employers.

We want Bezos to pick Chicago for his company's second headquarters. The city has everything Amazon needs and wants: a deep labor pool, tech expertise, a big international airport, excellent HQ locations, a rich cultural life, etc.

But Bezos has high standards. Illinois officials should listen to what he's saying.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

(T)here are only two ways a president can forge a legacy in U.S. politics: accomplish things with bipartisan support, or nurture his political party so that people are elected who will carry on and protect his accomplishments. Barack Obama's legacy is in trouble because he did neither. For him, the first path was difficult — and some would say impossible. He faced a Republican Party controlled by extremists determined to undermine him at all costs. ... That left him a second path: Build a Democratic Party strong enough to carry on his accomplishments. Though he did not do so at the time, Obama's current pledge to nurture a new generation of leaders (through his foundation) and his support for former Attorney General Eric Holder's campaign to fight gerrymandering are signs that he has come to the realization that his legacy depends on politics after all. It is a late realization but, given that the 56-year-old has many years of influence before him, perhaps his post-presidency will help build the political support for the kinds of policies he advocated as president.

Elaine Kamarck, Boston Review

A lot of sexual harassment isn't about how sexy a man thinks you are, but how sexy he claims you are not. Personally speaking, I've had men grope me and leer at me, but I've also had men harass me with taunts about how ugly I supposedly am. Like many women, I've even had the dizzying experience of having a man hit on you who, when rejected, switches to verbal harassment, saying you're fat and ugly and don't deserve his attention to begin with. ... Whether the harasser is sexually attracted to the victim or not, the purpose of the harassment is to dominate the victims, to make them feel small and out of control.

KRISTEN MCQUEARY

At this point, there's no tolerance for error. Gov. Bruce Rauner's re-election chances are pinned to a wall that is losing mortar by the day.

The latest erosion? A possible third-party challenge by state Sen. Sam McCann, R-Plainview. McCann will appeal to social conservatives disillusioned by Rauner's signature on several left-leaning initiatives, particularly a bill expanding public funding of abortion. If McCann doesn't end up on the November ballot, Rauner will have one person to thank. More on that later.

Remember, it's only April. Rauner has time to recoup. But as of now the numbers aren't with him. The Republican base isn't with him. The momentum isn't there. And now, McCann.

Representing a district southwest of Springfield, McCann is a study in contrasts. He was elected as an outsider and tea party conservative in 2010. He voted against same-sex marriage, against driver's licenses for undocumented immigrants and remains a strong supporter of gun rights. He sided recently with Rauner to shield gun shops from state licensing and other regulations.

McCann

Conservative agenda: Check.

But on other positions important to conservatives — smaller government and pension reform — he has been a reliable vote for Democrats. He voted against every pension reform bill that came to the Senate floor, including a bill eliminating pensions for lawmakers. He stood with the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, and voted to override Rauner's veto — the only GOP member to do so — on a bill empowering the union at the bargaining table.

He voted against closing underused state facilities. He voted against more flexibility for local mayors when negotiating contracts with public employee unions. He voted against consolidating local governments.

Conservative agenda: Fail.

You could call him AFSCME's favorite Republican.

Rauner

"I consider myself a voice for working people," he told me during his re-election campaign in 2016. "I have never voted to diminish or impair pensions. I'm a conservative Republican and constitutionalist. The Constitution is painfully clear that pensions shall not be diminished or impaired. I think the tea party should embrace those commitments to working people."

That's a powerful message with a certain brand of voter, particularly those outside the Chicago area where AFSCME counts many members. McCann's tenure in Springfield has shown, again, that Republicans in this state can be staunchly socially conservative and staunchly pro-labor, and get re-elected. It's an uncomfortable straddle to which Republicans Downstate have become accustomed — but which McCann has taken to extremes.

I wouldn't expect widespread appeal for McCann in GOP circles. Union demands are crushing state finances, and most Republican voters get that. But McCann is dangerous to Rauner's re-election bid because some devout social conservatives won't focus on his pro-union record. They'll vote for him.

Don't forget, Rauner nearly lost the primary to an underfunded conservative. Rep. Jeanne Ives, R-Wheaton, got 48.5 percent of the vote against Rauner's 51.5 percent.

Rauner's struggle in the general election will depend on whether McCann can get on the ballot as a third-party candidate. He has two months to collect signatures and then survive a likely ballot challenge. State law purposely makes third-party campaigns difficult. The election code is written to protect the two major parties and to discourage candidates who don't run in primaries but then want to wiggle into the general election.

So if McCann can't get on the November ballot, Rauner catches a break. He'll have one person to thank. You know, that wily Democratic speaker of the House who advances all manner of election laws that protect incumbents? Sometimes he accidentally helps Republicans.

The thread from slavery to lynchings to the Starbucks arrests

By Fred Hiatt

BRYNN ANDERSON/AP

The National Memorial for Peace and Justice, which honors people killed in racist lynchings, opens Thursday in Montgomery, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — In the Riverfront Park of this state capital, you will find a series of panels depicting the city's history. They will tell you when the first white settler arrived, how riverboats transformed Montgomery into a trading hub for cotton "and many other important commodities," and how the city became the cradle of the Confederacy.

They will not tell you that the most important of those other commodities was human beings.

It is the sort of lacuna, says Bryan Stevenson, that allows people to "achieve political victories by celebrating the greatness of America."

"The question is, which decade are black Americans supposed to want to relive?"

It also is a gap that is about to be filled just a few blocks from the riverfront, beginning Thursday. That is when the Equal Justice Initiative, which Stevenson founded and heads, will open the Legacy Museum and, nearby, an equally powerful, even more unusual outdoor memorial to the thousands of African-American victims of lynching.

Together they offer an alternative, and overwhelmingly coherent, arc of the history of white supremacy from slavery to the arrest of two black men at a Starbucks in Philadelphia this month. They reflect Stevenson's view that, unlike in South Africa or post-Nazi Germany or many other societies traumatized by history, we've hardly begun to grapple with ours — and so cannot yet get beyond it.

"Right now we have a lot of people in this country who still can only love people of their color," Stevenson said during a conversation Friday. "And that means we're not fully human. We're not free.

"These projects for me are about ending the silence."

The museum and memorial are unlike anything else I've experienced and more than worth a trip, and I hope (and expect) that millions will come. What stood out to me, in this political moment, is the clarity of historical exposition from slavery to Jim Crow to what Stevenson sees as a "new caste system" arising from mass incarceration.

In Stevenson's view, slavery did not end with the Confederacy's defeat so as much as "evolve."

> — Bryan Stevenson, founder of the Equal Justice Initiative

After the Civil War, whites in the South refused to give up their control over black populations or the bigotry on which that rested. While sharecropping and Jim Crow laws kept blacks unfree, the criminal justice system was used to replicate slavery; blacks were imprisoned for minor offenses and then rented out for forced labor. By 1898, 73 percent of Alabama's state revenue came from convict leasing.

Any possibility of resistance was squelched by the constant threat of lynching — public spectacles in which blacks were tortured, burned alive, hung, shot or dismembered for any offense or no offense at all. Thousands of whites would gather to watch. Postcards of the event would be printed and sold. Toes and fingers and other body parts would be distributed.

Lynching — mostly, though not only, in the Deep South; the Washington, D.C., suburbs in Maryland and Virginia saw their share, as did Ohio, Illinois and West Virginia — petered out by about 1950, and the civil rights laws of the 1960s formally ended Jim Crow.

But white supremacy evolved again, in Stevenson's view, using the criminal justice system. The era of mass incarceration saw thousands of blacks locked away, sometimes unjustly, often for minor offenses — and not just in the South, of course. Blacks were — and are — more likely to be suspended from school, denied parole and, when freed from prison, denied benefits, kept out of public housing, blocked from employment or professional licenses and, once again, prevented from voting.

And the color of their skin still can put them at risk with police, from minor harassment at coffee shops to fatal shootings.

"The ideology of racial supremacy survived the passage of the Civil Rights Act," Stevenson said. "Indifference to black victimization is what defines each of these eras."

The planning for this museum and memorial began long before a white youth gunned down nine worshippers in an African-American church in Charleston, S.C., before we had a president praising neo-Nazis marching in defense of Confederate statues, before an administration began again talking about harsher sentences and more death penalties. Some might find all that discouraging. Stevenson takes a different lesson.

"There was this hope that this race stuff would just evaporate over time — and it doesn't work like that," he said. "It is a serious disease, and if we don't treat it, it doesn't get better. It doesn't go away."

But in the end, there is optimism in his relentless realism. "We're not doomed by this history. We're not even defined by it," he said. "But we do have to face it."

Want to be a whistleblower? Read this first

By James Charles Crowley

TRIBUNE ILLUSTRATION

The whistleblower in me is concerned. Recent headlines have pronounced, "Supreme Court deals blow to Wall Street whistleblowers with unanimous ruling" and "The Supreme Court limits whistleblower protections under Dodd-Frank." With almost daily ethics assaults coming from the executive and legislative branches of government, it seems as if all three branches have now boarded the same boat. And who better to voice outrage over these attacks than someone like me, who has been both protected by and prevailed under whistleblower provisions?

But the attorney in me has taken over, done research, and now has some words of warning for future whistleblowers.

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, in the case in question here, wrote in a unanimous decision that the Dodd-Frank Act's protections for whistleblowers only cover people from being fired, demoted or harassed when they have reported violations of securities laws to the Securities and Exchange Commission. The court stated that Dodd-Frank's "text and purpose" are unequivocal in defining the term "whistleblower" as an individual who provides information "to the Commission" prior to being fired. In the alternative, people who report issues internally to their company, to other federal agencies or to Congress may still be protected against retaliation under the 2002 Sarbanes-Oxley Act.

The plaintiff in this lawsuit did not report misconduct to the SEC, so he was not defined as a whistleblower with rights under Dodd-Frank. Despite the headlines, the Supreme Court did not actively limit or constrain the protections of a whistleblower — it didn't even get that far. It merely applied the clear language of the law in defining who is a whistleblower in the first place.

My own whistleblower lawsuit, the first-ever legal victory under the Illinois State Officials and Employees Ethics Act, also dealt with a similar, though more general, provision. My protected activity needed to qualify as "disclosing or threatening to disclose to a supervisor or to a public body an activity, policy or practice of any officer, member, State agency or other State employee that the State employee reasonably believes is in violation of a law, rule, or regulation." I reported misconduct related to contracts and Freedom of Information Act requests to the Illinois attorney general's office. I fit the definition of whistleblower under the act, so I was protected.

Whistleblowing is predicated on the fact that justice is served when people follow prescribed rules and laws. That includes the whistleblowers. And there is a plain truth that should be remembered — simply exposing misconduct is not enough.

So what happens when someone is so myopically focused on blowing the whistle that they fail to protect themselves from the possible retaliation that comes afterword? Headlines like the ones I cited earlier. And headlines like those are discouraging not only to future whistleblowers but the general public.

The wrong people win.

Which leads to my words of warning. Before you consider blowing the whistle, you not only have to understand the rules that apply to those you are exposing, but you also have to understand the rules that apply to you. Identifying the exact whistleblower statute or act that would protect you is crucial, and finding the corresponding provision that defines a whistleblower is paramount. I cannot stress enough that you need to research where the law is on your side and where it is not, because both will exist concurrently.

Whistleblowing is a noble first strike, but it's still an act of war. Temporary or not, there will most likely be retaliation and negative consequences to your career and your life. The better armed you are entering the battle, the better chance of your victory. And your victory is a win for the greater good.

James Charles Crowley is a Chicago writer and lawyer best known for his role in the 2014 whistleblower lawsuit against Chicago State University, the first-ever case stemming from a whistleblower claim filed under the Illinois State Officials and Employees Ethics Act.

Trash talkin'
5 myths about recycling

By Brian Clark Howard

From the kitchen table to the editorial pages, people have been debating the merits of recycling for decades. Does it really save energy and money? Can I recycle that yogurt cup or juice box? At the same time, recycling technology and global markets have evolved quickly, leaving some consumers confused or stuck in old, outdated ways. A lot of myths persist about those blue bins. Here are some of the most common.

Myth No. 1

This myth has been kicking around for decades. Daniel K. Benjamin, a senior fellow at the Property and Environment Research Center, recently told Big Think, "In most cities across the nation, recycling of household trash is, in fact, wasteful, even when we take into account the meager environmental benefits of such recycling." And as Leland Teschler of Machine Design put it, "Save energy: Don't recycle."

But according to the Environmental Protection Agency, recycling aluminum cans saves 95 percent of the energy needed to make new ones from raw materials. Recycling steel and tin cans saves 60 to 74 percent, recycling paper saves about 60 percent and recycling plastic and glass saves about one-third of the energy needed for making those products from virgin materials. The energy saved from recycling one glass bottle will operate a 100-watt light bulb for four hours.

During the historic California drought a few years ago, some people asked if they should stop recycling in order to save water. Yet an analysis by the website Treehugger confirmed that more water is saved by processing recycled materials than by making new stuff.

Items must be meticulously sorted for recycling.

When recycling was a relatively novel concept, many waste haulers insisted on strict sorting rules. As collection and recycling machinery evolved, many of those rules changed. Confusion abounds: Can I recycle an envelope with a plastic window? Do I have to remove staples from paper? In my Washington apartment building, neighbors have posted conflicting signs about whether glass must be sorted by color or if plastic bags are accepted.

In general, people don't need to sort their recyclables to anywhere near the degree they used to. More communities are now using "single stream" systems, in which people are encouraged to place all their recyclables into one container. Cleaner materials reduce odors and speed the process, but the recycling steps involve washing, shredding and crushing the material, and then often melting it. Food residue and impurities like paper clips are burned off or collected through magnets and other means. Items made from multiple types of materials, like juice cartons, can be more difficult to recycle, but each facility handles such materials based on its own equipment and needs. Right now, more than 60 percent of U.S. households have access to carton recycling, and product manufacturers have been working on making packaging that is easier to recycle.

Products made from recycled content are lower quality.

A few decades ago, products made from recycled materials were often derided as subpar. Recycled paper was gray and rough. Recycled plastic had a reputation as weak. Some people still associate recycled content with lower performance. "Recycled materials are often of lower quality than the materials from which they were derived," Alexander Hellemans wrote for youris.com. And in one survey, consumers said they were less likely to buy environmentally green products because they assumed them to be inferior.

But manufacturers have learned a great deal since the early days, and consumer and corporate demand for recycled products has risen so steadily that producers have made considerable strides in quality. "As more and more companies publish their sustainability goals, the use of recycled resins is transitioning from just a low-cost alternative to a specified part of many new products," Ron Whaley, CEO of Geo-Tech Polymers, an Ohio recycler, told Plastics Technology. "... Products must now meet the same high quality and performance characteristics as virgin resin."

Numerous studies have shown that paper with recycled content now meets high performance standards. Glass, plastic and metal containers with recycled content have been approved for use with food products by the Food and Drug Administration.

Recyclables just end up in the trash.

It's become something of an urban legend: the garbage man who dumps all the carefully separated recyclables in with the trash. Sightings of this rogue figure abound online. "Today I just watched my trash/recycling company dump my three weeks' worth of recycling into the same truck as my trash. Just like that," wrote one self-described "indignant" recycler. At least one local news station has gotten in on the act: "Recycling getting dumped in the trash?" asked Palm Springs, Calif., CBS affiliate KESQ. "See what one Palm Desert resident caught on camera." And on a scale far beyond the local garbage truck, some material marked for recycling has landed in the trash: In 2013, China's crackdown on imports of "low-quality" scrap materials caused some U.S. recyclers to divert some of their collected plastics to landfills.

Since then, though, the domestic recycling industry has shown signs of maturing. Nina Butler, CEO of research and consulting firm More Recycling, says markets have been relatively stable for plastic bottles, which means fewer recyclables headed for the landfill.

The fear that everything we painstakingly sort will just end up in the same place as the rest of our garbage is overblown, experts caution. Patty Moore, who cofounded More Recycling, told Business Insider that "there are buyers for (recyclables) all day long. The amount that's going to the landfill is insignificant." Contamination of collected recyclables can decrease their value and increase the amount that must be discarded — across the U.S., about 25 percent of items placed in blue bins can't be recycled at their end point — but the solution is better consumer awareness, not abandonment of programs. As Patrick Carter, executive director of the Sonoma County, Calif., Waste Management Agency, told the North Bay Business Journal, "Garbage companies find markets," despite fluctuating prices and bumps in the road. As for the worry that rogue garbage collectors are simply tossing our carefully sorted materials into the dust heap, there's just not much evidence of it happening on a large scale.

Recycling should pay for itself.

The idea that municipalities should make money, or at least break even, on recycling programs is a popular talking point. As one Washington Post editorial put it: "Recycling pays for itself. Indeed, we can't afford not to recycle." Bucknell University economist Thomas Kinnaman took a close look at recycling in Japan and concluded that an "optimal" recycling rate, which would derive what he defined as the most benefit from the lowest cost, would be about 10 percent of all materials. Recycling plastic and glass didn't make the cut in his analysis, because of the relatively low costs for the virgin materials and sorting and shipping challenges.

But cities can't control world markets. Recycled materials are economic commodities, just like pork bellies and microchips, and their value rises and falls. When oil prices are low, it's cheaper to make plastics from virgin materials (i.e., petroleum products). Buyers for recycled materials aren't evenly distributed across the country, and their demand changes with other market forces. In part because of these pressures, Waste Management — the country's largest waste hauler — shuttered 20 recycling facilities in 2014 and 2015.

While many jurisdictions find that they can make money off a recycling program, some places struggle. A state-of-the-art recycling facility in Alabama was forced to shutter less than two years after its grand launch after global commodity prices tanked.

A number of entrepreneurs are working on new business models to increase participation in recycling and make it more profitable for cities. Recyclebank rewards consumers who recycle with various incentives. Vending machines in Australia offer people a small prize, like a food truck coupon, for depositing recyclables.

Recycling can be a messy business, and sometimes it's a net loss for a jurisdiction. But the long-term economics remain relatively sound, especially since prices for oil and other raw materials are expected to climb. And recycling creates jobs — some 1.25 million in the United States.

Beyond short-term dollars and cents, it's clear that recycling provides numerous benefits to the environment and society. There's much to be gained by asking people to be more conscientious about their waste.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Too many taxes

Democratic candidate for governor J.B. Pritzker seems to think that all the woes of Illinois can be solved with a graduated state income tax.

To those legislators and voters seriously considering this idea, I would urge you to just say "no."

Until we get meaningful reform and control over the property tax situation there should be no increase in the income tax.

Prior to moving to Illinois, we lived in California, which has a high graduated state income tax and a high sales tax. But since 1978, property taxes have been based on 1 percent of what you paid for your house. If you pay $400,000 for your house in California, your property tax is approximately $4,000 per year. In Illinois, the same value house probably pays $10,000 per year. There is no Mike Madigan/Joseph Berrios gaming of individual property tax bills. Nor can you lower your property tax by removing toilets, as Pritzker did.

You can't have it all ways, high property tax, high sales tax and high income tax. The value we get from our government is just not worth it. So unless Pritzker has a mechanism to cut my property tax in half and freeze it, I say "no" to graduated state income tax and "no" to Pritzker.

— Alex Severino, La Grange

Majority rules

On the one hand, I am glad to see that we have another candidate, state Sen. Sam McCann, running for governor. We need more choices.

On the other hand, our electoral system in most elections is only set up for a two-party race. In this case, this means that J.B. Pritzker can win the governorship with only 34 percent of the vote. The third-party candidate in this case would split the Republican vote and essentially give the election to Pritzker.

I don't want to be cynical here, but if this third-party candidate were seen as splitting the Democratic vote, essentially giving the election to the Republican candidate, would our politicians then wake up to see that our electoral process needs to be fixed?

Nobody should win an election without receiving a majority of the total votes cast. The presidential election is an obvious exception, where the states elect the president, not simply a majority vote. Other elections either need a runoff or a weighted ballot to determine a true winner.

— Larry Craig, Wilmette

Practice, practice, practice

Your Saturday editorial "In the event of an emergency ..." seems to indicate that there is really no way that airline passengers can be prepared for a potential disaster except by paying attention to the videos, which doesn't seem likely.

However, there is a way to prepare passengers, and it is recommended by those specializing in the management of crisis situations and supported by the research of cognitive scientists: Practice for the event. If passengers had an opportunity to practice the actions they need to take in the event of a potential crash, they would be better prepared and less likely to put their masks on only over their mouths as your editorial mentioned.

Airports, perhaps in collaboration with the airlines, could easily and not terribly expensively set up areas where passengers could go while waiting to board their plane to practice putting on an oxygen mask, opening an emergency door, and locating and donning a life vest.

After all, practice makes perfect. It may also save a passenger's life and the lives of others.

Curious kids

A letter writer suggested on Sunday that suburban music teacher Nathan Etter should have simply said, "They are from someone who loves me," when his first-grade students asked who sent him flowers on Valentine's Day. I'm fine with that, as long as it is the policy for all teachers at the school. Otherwise, such a reply is likely to send a message that Etter's admirer is something to be kept secret — perhaps shameful — and is likely to ignite further questions and speculation by these youngsters.

Children are curious, and they have a good instinct for when adults are not being direct and honest with them. While the students are not at all entitled to a full accounting of Etter's personal life — he is the one in charge of what he does and does not want to share with them — to keep the sender of the flowers private is not wise.

It seems to me that Etter handled the situation quite well. He answered the question, gave some context to his marriage, and then went on with his class. This is how such a question should be answered by any teacher who chooses to share personal information.

Sears shares shot up 7.6 percent Monday to close at $3.24, about 2.7 percent over the previous day's close Monday morning.

Sears CEO moves to break up company, buy Kenmore

Hedge fund run by Lampert would also take on other Sears divisions after retailer failed to find other buyers for assets

By Corilyn Shropshire and Lauren Zumbach
Chicago Tribune

The hedge fund run by Sears CEO Edward Lampert has offered to buy the retailer's popular appliance brand Kenmore and other Sears divisions, moving to break up the company after it failed to find other buyers for the assets.

Sears said it has received a letter from ESL Investments suggesting that it acquire all or a portion of its Kenmore brand, the home improvement business of the Sears Home Services division and the Parts Direct business of Sears Home Services.

Hoffman Estates-based Sears Holdings Corp. has been exploring alternatives for those businesses, as well as the Craftsman and DieHard brands, for nearly two years. In 2016, Sears did not say what kinds of options it was considering. But ESL Investments told Sears it should "aggressively pursue divestiture" of all or some of those businesses after failing to find a buyer for assets other than Craftsman. It sold the well-known tool brand to Stanley Black & Decker in a deal valued at $900 million.

Sears' shares shot up 7.6 percent Monday to close at $3.24, about 2.7 percent over the previous day's close Monday morning.

A sale would give the retailer a cash injection as it works to restructure its business after racking up more than $10.8 billion in losses over the past seven years. The company has said it believes there's room to grow those brands by expanding their distribution beyond Sears.

The brands would continue to operate as they have, according to the letter to the board of directors, which was filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. ESL also offered to buy certain Sears real estate assets, including debt, and continue to lease the properties to Sears or other entities.

"As noted in our letter to the Board of Directors, our proposal is part of a comprehensive solution to transform Sears Holdings," ESL said in a news release.

"Our principal interest is seeing that Kenmore, SHIP (Sears' home improvement business) and PartsDirect are divested in the near term in a transaction that delivers the greatest value for Sears, regardless of whether ESL or a third party is the ultimate buyer," ESL said. "This will enable Sears to improve its debt profile and liquidity position, creating the runway to help continue its transformation, and allow these businesses to unlock their considerable potential by further expanding their presence in the marketplace. We are very enthusiastic about our ownership interest in Sears and its future, and will remain so whether or not a transaction is consummated."

ESL valued the Parts Direct and home services division at $500 million. It did not provide a valuation of the Kenmore brand but offered to submit a proposal and said it believed it could close on a deal in 90 days.

Sears said it will review the letter but would not make an additional comment.

To ensure "fair and reasonable terms" given the close ties between ESL and Sears, ESL said Lampert and Kunal Kamlani, president of ESL and a member of Sears' board, would not participate in discussions,

Court fight looms after Fresenius drops $4.3B Akorn deal

By Naomi Kresge and Jef Feeley
Bloomberg News

Fresenius and Akorn prepared to square off in court after the German company walked away from a planned $4.3 billion purchase and alleged that its jilted target misled the would-be acquirer during the due-diligence process.

Shares of Akorn, a Lake Forest, Ill.-based maker of generic drugs, plunged Monday after the deal collapsed, and the company filed a lawsuit in the Delaware Chancery Court asking that Fresenius be required to "fulfill its obligations" under the buyout agreement. Fresenius said experts found "material breaches" of U.S. Food and Drug Administration standards while reviewing Akorn's operations.

Fresenius obtained "clear and comprehensive representations and warranties" regarding Akorn's product development and new-drug applications, spokesman Matthias Link said in an email. "The investigation has determined, among other findings, that these representations and warranties were not true."

Investors had become increasingly wary of the deal since Fresenius announced it was buying the U.S. maker of generic cancer drugs a year ago. Competition was eroding Akorn's profit and revenue expectations, and former Chairman John Kapoor left the company after being arrested on separate racketeering charges.

Akorn shares fell as much as 37 percent in New York. Fresenius lost 1.4 percent in Frankfurt.

Under the terms of the deal announced in April 2017, Akorn had agreed to pay a $129 million termination fee if the agreement fell through, Fresenius said. Akorn said in a statement Sunday that the issues being investigated weren't a condition to closing and wouldn't materially hurt the German company, therefore giving it no reason to drop the deal.

"We categorically disagree with Fresenius's accusations," Akorn said. "We intend to vigorously enforce our rights, and Fresenius's obligations, under our binding merger agreement."

Fresenius said it offered to delay pulling out of the deal until Akorn had completed its own investigation, but was turned down.

The U.S. company filed its suit under seal in Delaware, and details weren't immediately available. Since Delaware is corporate home to more than 60 percent of the Fortune 500 companies, its chancery courts hear many cases about acquisitions that collapse.

Illinois improves to 15th in hospital safety ranking

By Lisa Schencker
Chicago Tribune

Illinois is 15th in the nation for hospital safety, according to a ranking to be issued Tuesday by a nonprofit group, but at least two Chicago-area hospitals are questioning the report's methodology.

The report, produced by The Leapfrog Group twice a year, grades hospitals on 27 measures of safety, including hand hygiene, intensive care unit physician staffing, bedsores and falls. States are then ranked based on the percentage of their hospitals that earned A's. Hospitals that earn high marks often use them to tout their services and attract patients.

E. JASON WAMBSGANS/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2011

Rush University Medical Center in Chicago was one of nine Illinois hospitals to receive A's for the last five years in a row.

Leapfrog awarded A's to 37 Illinois hospitals, compared with 33 in the fall. Thirty-eight hospitals earned B's, 30 earned C's, one got a D and one — South Shore Hospital in Chicago — received an F. In the fall, Leapfrog ranked Illinois 26th in the nation for safety.

Reddit to open Chicago office as part of ad push

By Ally Marotti
Chicago Tribune

Reddit is opening an office in Chicago, the tech company's first outside the coasts.

The website, known for its massive community of users that can make content go viral, is building out its advertising platform. There are major brands and advertising agencies with a presence in Chicago, and opening an office will give Reddit better access to that community, said Rob Sprungman, senior director of central brand partnerships.

"We need to be a part of the fabric of the marketing community here," said Sprungman, the first employee of Reddit's Chicago office. "The market has incredible talent ... but also some great digital tech we can pull from, as well as people moving here to be a part of it all."

Sprungman plans to work out of a co-working space as he builds up the Chicago team. He expects to have a permanent office and nine employees by the end of the year.

Launched in 2005, Reddit has built its user base to about 330 million active monthly users. Redditors, as the users are often called, subscribe to communities that discuss different topics and interests. Those communities are referred to as subreddits, and users can post or comment within each one. There are about 138,000 active subreddit communities. The topics they cover — from niche to general — are vast.

Compensation and perks are factors, but the more important components include opportunities for professional growth and being treated with respect.

To qualify, a workplace must have at least 100 employees in the Chicago area. Nominations are open to all employers, including nonprofits. Nominated companies that agree to participate will distribute to employees an easy-to-complete, confidential survey developed by the Tribune's research partner, Energage, which will calculate the list of top workplaces. Health data firm IQVIA's Institute for Human Data Science released a report showing an 8.9 percent average drop nationwide in the number of opioid prescriptions filled in 2017.

Americans found filling far fewer opioid scripts

New data show dramatic drop as nation faces crisis

By Linda A. Johnson
Associated Press

TRENTON, N.J. — The number of prescriptions for opioid painkillers filled in the country fell dramatically last year, showing their biggest drop in 25 years and continuing a decline amid increasing legal restrictions and public awareness of the dangers of addiction, new data show.

Health data firm IQVIA's Institute for Human Data Science released a report showing an 8.9 percent average drop nationwide in the number of prescriptions for opioids filled by retail and mail-order pharmacies. All 50 states and the District of Columbia had declines of more than 5 percent. Declines topped 10 percent in 18 states, including all of New England and other states hit hard by the opioid overdose epidemic, such as West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

"We're at a really critical moment in the country when everybody's paying attention to this issue," said Michael Kleinrock, the institute's research director. "People really don't want them if they can avoid them."

There was an even greater drop in total dosage of opioid prescriptions filled in 2017, down 12 percent from 2016. Reasons for that include more prescriptions being for a shorter duration, a 7.8 percent decline in new patients starting on opioid prescriptions and far fewer high-dose prescriptions.

The U.S. is estimated to consume roughly 30 percent of all opioids used worldwide.

Opioid prescriptions and daily doses rose steadily starting in the 1990s, fueled by factors including marketing of new opioid pills such as Oxycontin. Use peaked in 2011 at levels far above those in other wealthy countries where national health systems control narcotics more aggressively.

The federal government and about half the states have enacted restrictions, such as limiting the dose or duration of opioids prescribed. Insurers and drug stores began imposing similar limits on opioid use for acute pain. The Drug Enforcement Administration increased prosecution of heavy prescribers. And medical groups have urged prescribers to offer other pain-management options and to limit doses and duration of opioid prescriptions.

Despite those measures, deaths from drug overdoses have continued to increase and emergency rooms saw a big jump in overdoses from opioids last year.

Doctors have been heeding the messages from medical groups, said Bob Twillman, executive director of the Academy of Integrative Pain Management, which gets funding from opioid makers.

"We get a lot of phone calls from patients whose primary care doctors have said they won't prescribe opioids at all," and want referrals to other doctors, Twillman said.

EU deepens probe into Apple, Shazam

European regulators said Monday that they're deepening their probe into Apple's acquisition of the music recognition app Shazam over concerns that the deal could limit people's streaming music choices and unfairly weaken companies such as Spotify.

Shazam, which is based in Great Britain, lets people use their smartphone microphones to identify songs playing over loudspeakers, television or the radio within seconds. Currently, the app will identify a song and then refer people to a streaming music service such as Spotify, Deezer or Apple Music to purchase it.

Regulators in Europe say they worry the acquisition could give Apple an unfair advantage if it used Shazam "to directly target its competitors' customers and encourage them to switch to Apple Music." An in-depth investigation, they say, will also examine how much of an advantage Apple would receive if it became the only music service to receive referrals from Shazam.

Apple filed for approval of the deal in Europe on March 15. Ahead of that filing, seven countries asked the European Commission to review the deal for possible repercussions for the music industry including Sweden, home to Spotify, and France, where Paris-based Deezer is headquartered.

Harley-Davidson to give bikes to 8 interns

Harley-Davidson is offering free motorcycles for those who join its summer internship program.

Eight college students or recent graduates will have the enviable task of being paid to ride a Harley and share their adventures on social media.

And the best part? They'll keep their bikes at the end of the 12-week internship.

The Milwaukee-based motorcycle maker says it will teach the interns how to ride, compensate them for their work and travels, and let them keep their motorcycles.

Harley-Davidson says it's looking for those that have the ability to create content on the fly, are creative and have the talent to take great photos and fun videos.

Illinois ranking improves

Attempts to reach South Shore for comment Monday were unsuccessful.

Nine Illinois hospitals received A's for the last five years in a row: University of Chicago Medical Center in Chicago, West Suburban Medical Center in Oak Park, Rush University Medical Center in Chicago, Rush Copley Medical Center in Aurora, OSF St. Joseph Medical Center in Bloomington, OSF St. Mary Medical Center in Galesburg, Northwestern Medicine Central DuPage Hospital in Winfield, Elmhurst Hospital and Amita Health St. Alexius Medical Center in Hoffman Estates.

In recent years, a number of Chicago hospital leaders have criticized Leapfrog's process.

Last year, Saint Anthony Hospital in Chicago sued Leapfrog over its C grade, saying the grade was "wrong" and based on incorrect data. The hospital alleged that if Leapfrog published that grade, it would "erase years of improvements at the hospital and irreparably degrade the public perception of the hospital," said the lawsuit, filed in October 2017 in Cook County Circuit Court.

Leapfrog didn't publish the grade. The lawsuit is ongoing. Saint Anthony was not graded in the most recent report.

On the city's Far South Side, Roseland Community Hospital was one of only 15 hospitals in the country last year to get an F.

Roseland President and CEO Tim Egan said Monday the hospital received the low grade because it submitted an incomplete survey to Leapfrog, a survey that helps Leapfrog determine grades. This time around, Egan said the hospital spent months working on the process, with the hope of boosting its grade, but Leapfrog didn't grade the hospital.

Leapfrog didn't include Roseland because not enough data on Roseland was available from the federal government, said Erica Mobley, Leapfrog's director of operations. "It's not the fault of the hospital. It's not the fault of Leapfrog," Mobley said. "The data just isn't there."

But Egan said, "It's just unfair that they keep moving the goal posts on us." He said it shows the flaws in Leapfrog's process.

Illinois hospital leaders have long cautioned consumers not to rely on just one set of rankings when choosing a hospital. But hospitals that earn high grades often trumpet them. Mobley defended the report as one more tool for consumers to use when choosing hospitals, especially in urban areas full of options.

"Safety is really important, whether you're going in for stitches in the (emergency room) or going in for open heart surgery," Mobley said.

"We're not saying avoid this hospital (with a low grade), but we do think it's important that people are aware there is a record of safety problems in that hospital so they can be extra alert and pay attention."

Sears CEO moves to buy Kenmore, other assets deliberations, negotiations or decisions on behalf of Sears unless specifically asked to do so. ESL also said it would not purchase the businesses unless the deal was recommended by a Sears board committee and approved by a majority of disinterested shareholders.

Using the pieces of its retail empire to generate cash isn't a new strategy for Sears, which closed 426 stores last year and has repeatedly tapped Lampert for loans as it works to stem the red ink and slash costs. It spun off the Lands' End brand in 2015, bringing in a $500 million cash dividend.

RICK BOWMER/AP

The sale of Kenmore would be the latest in a series of major brand divestitures by Sears to keep the retailer afloat.

A year later, Sears sold 235 stores to real estate investment trust Seritage Growth Properties — in which Lampert holds a stake and serves as chairman of the board — and raised $2.72 billion.

Transactions announced since the start of 2017 added up to more than $1.8 billion in additional capital, according to a March report from Moody's Investors Service. The sum includes asset sales and loans backed by Sears' real estate and intellectual property, excluding the Kenmore and DieHard brands.

But without the Kenmore, Home Services and Parts Direct businesses, Sears "looks like a bunch of empty stores," said Erik Gordon, assistant professor at the University of Michigan's Ross School of Business.

A brand like Kenmore might be better off with an outside buyer with experience building brands, but its ties to Sears could make that a harder sell, he said.

Gordon said it's hard to see a way the businesses would benefit from separation, beyond the cash infusion for Sears and ability to sell assets before they lose value.

"There's no apparent strategic logic here. But there is some financial protection logic," he said, if Sears were to have to seek bankruptcy protection.

And while the company still has a "meaningful' amount of real estate and other brands that could provide a source of cash, the more it sells, the fewer assets it will have to fund future shortfalls, Moody's said.

Moody's also noted that Sears issued $1.8 billion of securities backed by royalties from the Kenmore, Craftsman and DieHard brands, which could affect their value.

States, Donald J. Trump") and one called Contagious Laughter ("videos and audio of people laughing infectiously"). There are Chicago-centric subreddits, and several on puppies.

When people post in a subreddit community, the other users know what they're talking about, Sprungman said. He pointed to a subreddit community on investment, in which people ask questions like what they should do with their 401(k) after a job change. That's not a question most users would take to another social media platform.

"It's the kind of community where brands can do something really interesting," Sprungman said.

Some companies are already tapping into Reddit's reach. Reddit is known for hosting sessions called Ask Me Anything, where users can pepper celebrities or participants with questions. To promote the new Audi Sport performance models, Audi and its advertising agency partnered with Reddit to host a live Ask Me Anything session in which actors Adam Scott and Elizabeth Banks took questions from Reddit users as they sped around a race track.

Opening an office in Chicago will give the social media platform better access to the companies it already works with, such as McDonald's and auto companies in Detroit, said Zubair Jandali, vice president of brand partnerships. It also will place it closer to brands and agencies it hopes to build relationships with, including those in dining, retail, consumer packaged goods and quick-service restaurants.

Reddit, which bills itself as "the front page of the internet," has made other moves to bolster its ad platform. It started rolling out a redesign to its users at the beginning of April, which Jandali said could make the site easier to navigate for new users and help grow existing communities. It also hired Time veteran Jen Wong as chief operating officer this month. Reddit said in an announcement on its blog that one of Wong's goals would be to help the company build out its offerings for advertisers.

The company also plans to roll out video advertising in the coming months. It launched video hosting for its users last year.

San Francisco-based Reddit employs more than 350 people, about 75 of whom are on the brand partnership team, Jandali said. That team is expected to grow 50 percent this year.

The privately held company announced its latest funding round of $200 million in July, which valued it at $1.8 billion. Advance Publications — which owns Reddit's onetime parent company Conde Nast — still owns a majority stake. Reddit declined to disclose financial information.

It makes sense Reddit is expanding its advertising platform, and longtime users likely won't be surprised, said Adrienne Massanari, an assistant professor in the Department of Communications at University of Illinois at Chicago who has written a book on Reddit culture.

Users are so passionate about the interests they discuss on the platform that they're like evangelists within the communities, she said. But they also can be suspicious of advertisers or other authority figures. Massanari said she has seen politicians or celebrities that host Ask Me Anything sessions face a poor reception because users felt a product or message was being pushed on them. Reddit users also tend to be passionate about privacy, which advertisers will need to consider.

"The brands have to be really aware of how they're engaging in the space," she said.

Justices wrestle with SEC judges case

Ex-financial adviser challenges hiring in administrative posts

By Jessica Gresko
Associated Press

TNS

Justices heard arguments in a case challenging how administrative law judges are hired.

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court wrestled Monday with a case brought by a former financial adviser known for his "Buckets of Money" strategy who is challenging the appointment of the administrative law judge who ruled against him.

The case involves the Securities and Exchange Commission's administrative law judges, who conduct hearings on alleged securities law violations and issue initial decisions. The federal government employs administrative law judges in more than 30 agencies, however, giving the case the potential to have a broader impact.

During arguments Monday, Justice Anthony Kennedy wanted to know "what effect, if any" the case would have on administrative law judges in other agencies. Attorney Mark Perry suggested that the court's decision could affect some 150 administrative law judges in 25 agencies.

The question the justices are being asked to decide is whether the SEC's administrative law judges are SEC employees or instead "inferior officers" of the United States. The answer is important in determining who can appoint them to their positions.

The case before the Supreme Court involves former financial adviser Raymond Lucia, who as a radio show host, author and seminar leader promoted a retirement strategy he called "Buckets of Money." Lucia's strategy was that in retirement investors should first sell safer investments, giving riskier investments time to grow.

The SEC charged Lucia in 2012 with violating federal law and SEC rules, saying he used misleading slides in a free presentation to potential clients. One of the SEC's five administrative law judges conducted a nine-day hearing and ultimately found against Lucia, fining him and his company $300,000 and barring him from working as an investment adviser.

Lucia challenged the decision and argued that the administrative law judge who heard his case was improperly appointed. He says that because the SEC's administrative law judges exercise significant authority under federal law, they are inferior officers of the United States under the Constitution's Appointments Clause. Inferior officers have to be appointed either by the president, courts or heads of departments. Lucia says that means in his case that the administrative law judge should have been appointed by the commission itself, not chosen by the commission's chief administrative law judge.

Breaking with the Obama administration, the Trump administration is siding with Lucia. And last year, to ward off new legal challenges, the SEC ratified the appointment of its administrative law judges, a move it said resolved any concerns they weren't properly appointed.

Because the Trump administration is siding with Lucia, Supreme Court-appointed attorney Anton Metlitsky argued the opposite view Monday. Metilsky said the SEC's administrative law judges don't count as inferior officers because they don't exercise significant authority, pointing out that every decision they make can be fully reviewed by the commission.

Restaurants cashing in on forgoing cash

Time and, yes, money saved — but not everyone sold

By Joyce M. Rosenberg
Associated Press

DAVID J. PHILLIP/AP

Thomas Nguyen, owner of Peli Peli restaurants in Houston, went to a no-cash policy at his establishments, but had a change of heart after daily complaints from customers.

NEW YORK — The lunchtime lines at Dos Toros move faster these days — customers don't fumble for bills or coins, and employees don't make change. Since around New Year's, the Mexican food chain has been cashless.

"For the vast majority of customers, there's no reaction at all; they're already paying with their cards. And the significant majority of cash customers don't have any problem with it either," says co-owner Leo Kremer, who has 14 stores in New York and one in Chicago.

If people do try to use cash, employees explain the reasons for the change — faster service for customers, saving the business time and money.

The trend toward cashless small and mid-sized businesses is fairly new. Many of the companies adopting the policy are restaurants with menus and prices more upscale than fast-food chains, but service that aims to be almost as quick as a McDonald's or Subway. During a busy lunch hour with customers lined up at ordering stations and cashiers, forgoing cash means faster transactions.

Many business owners would rather be cashless. Cash actually costs money — banks charge fees for cash deposits and to handle coins. If businesses take in enough cash to justify pickups by armored car services, that's another cost, and given that restaurants can be a target for holdups, not one that can be eliminated. And counting and checking cash and preparing it for deposit takes up time a manager could spend with staff or customers.

"We feel a manager's time is so valuable, and it was being spent on what is only 10 percent of our revenue," says Kremer, who also says revenue at Dos Toros hasn't been hurt by the transition.

Millions of consumers use little or no cash. In a survey released last month by the financial services company Capital One, only 21 percent of 2,000 people questioned said cash was their most common way to pay for things.

But going cashless isn't a slam-dunk. Some customers who want to use cash point to a statement on paper money: "This note is legal tender for all debts public and private." However, the Federal Reserve says on its website that private companies can make their own policies about cash unless there is a state law saying otherwise. (Massachusetts, for one, does have such a law.)

Thomas Nguyen switched two of his restaurants to no-cash — and then had a change of heart. Nguyen, whose has three Peli Peli South African fine dining restaurants and a Peli Peli Kitchen fast casual location in the Houston area, transitioned one restaurant at the end of 2016 and the other last August. Less than 7 percent of his revenue was coming from cash, and he believed customers would largely be OK with the change.

But last month, Nguyen heard from staff at both locations that they were getting daily complaints. That, he says, goes against the idea of running a hospitality business.

"It's too common of an occurrence when somebody every day is getting surprised or inconvenienced," Nguyen says.

He's well aware that customers can find plenty of other places to go. "You can't compete if you think you're going to create a whole set of rules and expect people to follow them," he says.

One concern about cashless restaurants is that they exclude would-be customers who don't have bank accounts or credit cards. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. found in a 2015 survey that about 9 million households didn't have bank accounts. Nearly 60 percent of households without bank accounts or cards said they didn't have enough money to keep in an account.

Customers will be more understanding if store employees explain the rationale for going cashless, and how it might benefit them, says Utpal Dholakia, a marketing professor at Rice University's Jones Graduate School of Business.

"I think customers are very happy to trade off their ability to use cash to get this service in return," he says, and notes the popularity of apps that let people order and pay for food online or on their phones and bypass the line completely to pick it up.

"I think customers are very happy to trade off their ability to use cash to get this service in return."

— Utpal Dholakia, a marketing professor at Rice University's Jones Graduate School of Business

David Friedman got many complaints when he began testing a no-cash policy at one of his eight Epic Burger locations in Chicago last June before deciding to go cashless permanently at all the stores.

"It has generated the most negative pushback of anything we've ever done," Friedman says. He estimates his revenue fell about 2 percent as people who wanted to pay cash left and never returned.

But Friedman isn't turning back. Epic Burger locations had an armed robbery, burglaries and break-ins — six incidents in all — in eight years.

"I made the decision to put my customers' and my employees' safety as my No. 1 priority," says Friedman, whose restaurants also got "dozens and dozens" of counterfeit bills from customers.

Friedman's revenue shortfall has been more than offset because he no longer pays for bank fees and 30 armored car pickups each week.

When Tender Greens went cashless earlier this year, it took other steps to improve the experience for customers, says Denyelle Bruno, president of the chain that has 28 stores in California, New York and the Boston area.

Customers no longer need to sign charge receipts under $25, and lines move faster since managers have more time to help out. Tender Greens, whose menu includes salads, sandwiches, fish and chicken, isn't seeing frustrated customers give up and leave the line, Bruno says.

Signs throughout the stores alert customers to the no-cash policy. But occasionally, people are still surprised when it's time to pay — and some have no other form of payment on them.

"We give the food to the guest" in those cases, Bruno says. "Our goal is never to turn people away when they get to that point."

With Toys R Us closing its U.S. stores, Rhode Island.-based Hasbro is looking for places to sell its toys and games.

No Toys R Us has Hasbro seeking outlets

Associated Press

NEW YORK — With its sales falling due to the liquidation of Toys R Us, Hasbro is looking for new places to sell Monopoly, My Little Pony and its other toys.

Hasbro said Monday it will rely more on online sales, although it has also been working on getting its toys into more stores. CEO Brian Goldner said major retailers plan to increase their toy sections to lure former Toys R Us shoppers, which could benefit the toy maker. But, he added, it could take a year before the company sees sales rise again.

"We're working aggressively around the world to put the impact of Toys R Us behind us," Goldner said in a conference call Monday.

Toys R Us, hammered by shifting consumer trends, is shuttering the 700 stores it has left, depriving Hasbro, Barbie maker Mattel and other toy companies of prime display space nationwide.

Mattel, which has been struggling with falling sales for years, had said Thursday that its CEO will step down. The company is set to report its quarterly results later this week.

Hasbro said its revenue in the first three months of the year fell 16 percent to $716.3 million from a year ago.

That was well below the $824.7 million Wall Street analysts expected, according to Zacks Investment Research.

The company, whose other brands include GI Joe and Scrabble, lost $112.5 million, or 90 cents per share in that period. A year earlier, Pawtucket, R.I.-based Hasbro earned $68.6 million, or 54 cents per share.

Adjusted for one-time costs and pretax expenses, earnings were 10 cents per share.

Shares of Hasbro Inc. rose nearly 4 percent to $86.12 Monday. Mattel Inc., which releases its financial results Thursday, rose more than 6 percent to $13.78.

OBITUARIES

RUSS GREMEL, 1918-2018

Boy Scout leader's gift birthed bird sanctuary

By Robert Channick
Chicago Tribune

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Russ Gremel, then 98, of Chicago, speaks at his home in 2017 about his decision to donate more than $2 million worth of Walgreens stock to the Audubon Society.

When Russ Gremel donated more than $2 million in Walgreens stock last year to create an Illinois bird sanctuary, he left a legacy of buy-and-hold investing success and environmental stewardship.

A longtime scoutmaster on Chicago's Northwest Side, Gremel, who died Sunday at age 99, left an even bigger legacy among generations of current and former Boy Scouts, whom he guided through his Jefferson Park troop with single-minded devotion for more than 60 years.

Gremel had planned to join Troop 979 on a camping expedition next month to celebrate the first anniversary of the Gremel Wildlife Sanctuary, a 400-acre Illinois Audubon Society nature preserve he helped establish near Dixon.

"He said, 'I want to die at home with my dog and friends, or camping,' " said Francis O'Byrne, 57, a former Scout under Gremel who succeeded him as scoutmaster.

Weakened from pneumonia, Gremel never made it to the camping trip. Instead he died in his longtime Jefferson Park bungalow, with neighbors and friends at his side, and his third chihuahua, Tiger, on his lap, as he wished.

A World War II veteran, Gremel graduated from Northwestern University's law school. With no wife or family to support, he retired from his law practice at 45, living a frugal existence in his childhood home and devoting himself to his Boy Scout troop and his love of nature.

"He said that this working like a maniac is for the birds and life is too short," said Dr. Steven Bujewski, 58, another former Scout who became a lifelong friend. "He lived his life the way he wanted to live it and not by the way that society would expect him to live it."

At the same time, Gremel was sitting on a growing fortune from an original $1,000 investment in Chicago pharmacy chain Walgreens, which he had made as a young man, based on his belief that people would always need medicine and women would always buy makeup, he told the Tribune last year.

Walgreens grew exponentially, and so did his investment, topping $2 million in value by the time Gremel decided to donate it to the Illinois Audubon Society last year to buy and restore 395 acres of wetlands, prairie and savanna in the Green River Lowlands.

"It was an incredible donation that he made to us," said Jim Herkert, executive director of the Illinois Audubon Society. "It allowed us to secure a really significant piece of property and help with the stewardship of that going forward as well."

Herkert said the society added another 30 acres to the preserve last month through Gremel's donation, the balance of which remains invested, although the portfolio has since been expanded beyond Walgreens stock.

"We diversified a little bit," Herkert said.

In a statement Monday, Deerfield-based Walgreens expressed appreciation for Gremel's generosity and his 70 years as a company shareholder.

"Russ was a remarkable man, and his donation to the Illinois Audubon Society will make an extraordinary impact well beyond his lifetime," Walgreens spokeswoman Emily Hartwig-Mekstan said. "We're grateful for his faith in our company, and his love of nature led him to make such a generous gift that will be enjoyed by so many for years to come."

Gremel is survived by a niece and a nephew, and more than a thousand current and former Boy Scouts.

"His family really is this extended Scout family he has developed," Bujewski said.

Visitation is scheduled for May 3 and 4 at Malec & Sons Funeral Home, 6000 N. Milwaukee Ave., with a funeral May 5 at the Congregational Church of Jefferson Park, 5320 W. Giddings St.

A picture is worth 108 years

Memories of Cubs' 2016 World Series Game 7 win in Cleveland will never fade

Paul Sullivan
On the Cubs

Jon Lester didn't sound all that enthused last week when asked about the Cubs' return to Cleveland, the first time they'll play at Progressive Field since Game 7 of the 2016 World Series.

To make a long story short, the Cubs won that game in 10 crazy innings. Lester pitched in relief of Kyle Hendricks until giving way to Aroldis Chapman, before ... well, you know the rest.

Almost 1½ years later, the Cubs return to the scene of the 108-year climb Tuesday night, but Lester isn't the kind of sentimental fool who likes to reminisce.

"Another city," Lester said. "We won, so I don't really care. I've just got to get ready for a start against a good team."

True, Cleveland is just another major-league town, and not exactly a tourist destination. And Progressive Field is just another ballpark.

And Lester has already done the "return to glory" thing a time or two. He has pitched in Colorado, where he won the title-clinching Game 4 of the 2007 World Series for the Red Sox, and he has pitched in St. Louis, where he won Game 5 of the 2013 World Series to help the Red Sox to another title.

Sooner or later he knew he would pitch again in Cleveland, so Wednesday's start isn't that special.

Early run on QBs perfect for Bears

If position dominates 1st hour of draft, Pace may have his pick of non-passers

Brad Biggs
On the Bears

The first hour of the draft Thursday night will be fascinating theater for the Bears as the decision makers at Halas Hall watch it unfold while waiting for their turn at No. 8.

Will four quarterbacks come off the board in the top seven picks, giving general manager Ryan Pace the fourth pick of a non-passer? In a draft with endless possibilities because of the number of quarterbacks available — and the even greater number of teams with a pressing need at the position — the best-case scenario for the Bears is an early run on arms.

That makes the Giants' decision at No. 2 crucial. New GM Dave Gettleman could draft a quarterback as a future replacement for 37-year-old Eli Manning, and that would make plenty of sense.

The Giants don't plan on picking this high again anytime soon, hoping new coach Pat Shurmur gets things turned around quickly. If not now, when will they find Manning's heir apparent? The Giants haven't had a top-five pick since they took Philip Rivers No. 4 in 2004 and immediately dealt him to the Chargers for Manning, the No. 1 pick.

Farquhar news encourages Sox

Club gets 'uplifting' report that reliever is 'progressing well' following surgery

By Teddy Greenstein | Chicago Tribune

Danny Farquhar's White Sox teammates prayed for him Monday afternoon in Bible study. When they left, they felt as if the man upstairs had been listening.

"Uplifting, for sure," a beaming Nate Jones said of the news that Farquhar "is progressing well," according to the Sox, after undergoing surgery to address the ruptured aneurysm he suffered Friday in the dugout at Guaranteed Rate Field.

Sox officials said that Farquhar, 31, has use of his extremities and "is responding appropriately to questions and commands and is speaking to doctors and his family."

He remains in the ICU unit at Rush University Medical Center with wife Lexie by his side. They have three young children.

"He loves baseball and his kids," fellow Sox reliever Aaron Bummer said. "His family is really what's most important to him. His kids make him gift packages for when he's on the road — drawings and little cards. It's heartwarming to see."

Sox players have sent him text messages and hope they will be allowed to see him soon. For now he's apparently at too great a risk for infection after surgery.

Small-town roots, big-time prowess

David Haugh
In the Wake of the News

Five straight pitches out of Sean Manaea's left arm exploded across the plate.

Then three consecutive balls released by the 12-year-old lefty during a bullpen session sailed, the last one high and wide enough to break the exit sign above the door of The Batter's Box in Valparaiso, Ind. Nuke LaLoosh in "Bull Durham" never was any wilder.

"It was about nine feet high," recalled Eric Snyder, Manaea's youth pitching instructor years before the A's starter threw the season's first no-hitter Saturday night. "So I went up to him and asked him what happens when he throws wild like that. He said, 'When I lose it, I lose it.' So I just told him to think of his favorite song, quit telling your brain what to do and don't let anything else get in the way."

Back when Manaea began the ascent from a small town to the big time, he sang to himself whenever he encountered trouble on the mound.

TOP OF THE SECOND

STEVE ROSENBLOOM

He's not poised for success

On Saturday, Yu Darvish didn't get a call on the pitcher and then he threw up all over himself.

The start before, Darvish was called for a balk and then he threw up all over himself.

Darvish says throwing more curveballs might help him prevent throwing up on himself. Yes. Well. If so, then great. Do that. But why would it take so long to arrive at that solution?

The fear, of course, is that the problem is not just mixing in more offspeed pitches. The fear is that Darvish has become the $126 million guy who completely falls apart because of one bad call. Just loses it. Unravels. This is sad and amateurish. Can the decimal-heads who focus on spin rate contrive something of a poise metric?

But here's the thing: Even if they could, this doesn't seem to make sense. Darvish owned the Cubs in the National League Championship Series, an argument that he can meet a moment. Then Darvish threw batting practice in two World Series starts, an argument that he can't.

And this is just April.

But Stevie Sunshine is here to point out that as Darvish piddles down his leg he can look to Jon Lester for some hope.

In his first four starts after signing his $155 million contract in 2015, Lester wore a 6.23 ERA, a slash line of .322/.354/.456 and a strike rate of 62 percent.

In his first four starts after signing his $126 million contract, Darvish is wearing a 6.86 ERA, a slash line of .269/.374/.449 and a strike rate of 60 percent.

In May of 2015, Lester posted a 1.76 ERA in six starts. So that worked out.

And that ends the Stevie Sunshine portion of today's program because Snarky Steve is here to remind you that Lester came to the Cubs with a couple of World Series rings and a 2.68 postseason ERA. Darvish, meanwhile, comes with zero World Series rings. Darvish comes with a 5.81 playoff ERA. Darvish comes with questions and has added to the list.

Did the Cubs save the receipt?

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Expensive free-agent pickup Yu Darvish still has some things to figure out with the Cubs.

The White Sox scored just two runs of 27 innings against the Astros, but hey, at least they spread them out, scoring none in the first 13 innings and then piling up one in the last 13. Maybe it's me, but that seems bad even for a team still favoring tanking and even for a team facing the defending World Series champions.

In response to a piece I wrote last week about inconsistent, frustrating White Sox starter Carson Fulmer, a reader sent me an email with the subject line "Carson Fuller" and text educating me that "Sandy Colfax had trouble early in his career, too." Well, when you put it that way ...

Brayden McNabb was left unprotected in the expansion draft last year. The Vegas Golden Knights selected him. Last Tuesday, McNabb scored the goal that completed the sweep of the Kings. Lucky thing the Blackhawks avoided that kind of playoff embarrassment.

Predators-Jets is the kind of series in which the Hawks can sit on the couch the next two weeks and tell their grandchildren that they used to be that good and that fast.

The NCAA, which makes billions on the backs of unpaid athletes, has found a new revenue stream by approving alcohol sales at championship events. What could be more fitting and deserving than giving the college kids the beer money?

Aaron Rodgers bought a minority stake in the Bucks, which I suppose allows him to make moves without consulting Giannis Antetokounmpo.

The story last week said NASA launched a planet-hunter spaceship aimed at seeking alien worlds, and I'm thinking, they could have saved gas money and just aimed the spaceship at Philadelphia.

What's up, Joe Borchard?

HORSE RACING

Gronk the horse out of the Derby

Patriots tight end Rob Gronkowski was brimming with his usual ebullience after it was announced last week that he had bought a minority share in a Kentucky Derby qualifier named Gronkowski.

"This horse is a winner, and I love a winner," the human Gronkowski said in a statement. "When I heard about the racehorse being named after me, I started watching and got really stoked when he started winning. He's won his last three races and is now headed to the Derby. I'm all in: Welcome to the Gronk Family, Gronkowski the Horse!"

But now comes word that Gronkowski, the horse, will not make it to Churchill Downs after all. The colt had "a minor setback," British trainer Jeremy Noseda told RacingPost.com Monday, before the horse's ownership group made a more serious announcement.

"We very much regret that Gronkowski will miss the Kentucky Derby after spiking a fever over the weekend and being treated with antibiotics," Phoenix Thoroughbred ownership group announced Monday. "He can't make the long journey to Louisville but is doing well."

Gronkowski the horse had won four straight starts to accrue enough qualifying points for the Kentucky Derby and had been scheduled to arrive in Kentucky this upcoming weekend. He had always been a long shot to compete at the Derby; he has never run on dirt, with all of his races coming on turf or all-weather surface. He also has never run longer than a mile, making it questionable whether Gronkowski had the stamina to compete in the 1¼-mile Derby.

Tough road may be ahead for Farquhar

Recovery from ruptured brain aneurysm can vary

By John Keilman | Chicago Tribune

After two months of headaches that aspirin couldn't fix, the pain in Janet Sutherland's head grew too terrible to bear. She called 911 and screamed for help just before she crumpled next to her refrigerator, vomiting and convulsing.

A blood vessel in her brain had swollen and burst. To put it in medical terms, she had suffered a ruptured brain aneurysm — the same medical emergency that struck White Sox pitcher Danny Farquhar at a game Friday night.

Sutherland said she was in a coma for three weeks, and when she awoke, was blind and paralyzed. But she regained her sight and ability to move after several surgeries and months of physical therapy, and today, shows few outward signs of having endured such a frightening ordeal.

"I walk with a cane," said Sutherland, 52, a Westmont resident who is writing a book about her experience. "That's it. You can't tell from looking at me that I had a ruptured aneurysm."

Such a complete recovery is unusual among the 30,000 people who suffer ruptured brain aneurysms each year. Dr. Shakeel Chowdhry, a neurosurgeon at NorthShore University HealthSystem in Evanston, said about half die, and of those who survive, most are left with moderate or severe neurological deficits.

"There's only a 1 in 6 chance that things go well," he said.

But there are some promising early signs with Farquhar. White Sox officials said Monday that he was conscious and speaking with doctors and his family at Rush University Medical Center, the Chicago hospital where he was taken after collapsing in the dugout.

He is expected to remain in the intensive care unit for several more weeks, the officials said.

As a professional athlete who is only 31, Farquhar is an outlier among aneurysm victims, who tend to be well into middle age. Some scientists believe the condition is the result of genetic predisposition, though tobacco use and high blood pressure are also among the suspected risk factors.

Dr. Issam Awad, director of neurovascular surgery at University of Chicago Medicine, said some people with aneurysms have warning headaches before a rupture, but others show no symptoms until the aneurysm "bursts like a blister."

The emergency often requires a two-stage intervention. First, surgeons stop the bleeding with a tiny clamp or a metal coil inserted into the vessel. Then, if the hemorrhage has caused swelling in the brain, surgeons try to relieve it with a catheter or by opening the skull.

"If the pressure isn't fixed in a timely fashion, it can lead to death or severe damage to the brain," Awad said.

Though the White Sox have not commented on the specifics of Farquhar's treatment, a source told the Tribune that Farquhar underwent a procedure Saturday night to relieve swelling in his brain.

Recovery from a ruptured aneurysm can vary widely, said Crista Koldenhoven, a nurse in the neurosurgery department at Northwestern Memorial Hospital.

She leads a support group for patients who have been through the experience, and said many suffer from physical, cognitive, emotional or speech deficits, depending on which part of the brain was affected by the aneurysm.

"Some people can return to work in a couple of weeks, depending on how extensive it was," she said. "Some go through some kind of therapy for the rest of their lives. They may not be able to go back to same job. A lot will say they still have (post-traumatic stress disorder)."

Christine Buckley of the Brain Aneurysm Foundation, a Massachusetts-based group that funds research into detection and treatment, said some scientists are trying to locate the gene that could predict an aneurysm, while others are searching for blood-based biomarkers that could reveal the presence of an aneurysm before it ruptures.

For now, the weakening arteries are confirmed though brain scans, and she said insurance companies often won't pay for that procedure even when people are suffering symptoms such as localized headaches and blurred vision.

"It really seems that the disease is more prevalent than most people realize," she said. "It can hit anyone at any time."

Sutherland said she was working at an Ohio radio station when her aneurysm ruptured 14 years ago, and after she recovered, moved back to her hometown of Glen Ellyn.

She found work in sales, and today, has her own business doing freelance marketing work. She also founded support groups for others dealing with the after-effects of a rupture.

While life is good, she said "speed bumps" related to the aneurysm, such as PTSD, still arise. For Farquhar and his family, she said, perseverance will be all-important.

"When you're really at the beginning of this journey of healing, you need to be patient, but we do survive," she said. "So many people who have gone through this are doing amazing things. It's not the end."

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

WHITE SOX 10, MARINERS 4

Hot start just what Sox need

They tally 7 straight hits, end 7-game skid; Avisail Garcia exits with injury

By Teddy Greenstein | Chicago Tribune

Maybe it's a coincidence. Maybe not.

They greeted Mariners right-hander Mike Leake like this: triple, single, single, single, single, single, double. They became the first team since the 2014 Rockies to open with seven straight hits.

The leadoff triple came courtesy of the switch-hitting Yoan Moncada, who doubled in the second, homered in the fourth (a 413-foot laser to right-center) and then ... made two outs. Needing a single to become the seventh Sox player to hit for the cycle, he got caught looking and flied out, both from the right side.

Also feasting Monday night during the Sox's 10-4 victory at Guaranteed Rate Field: Jose Abreu, who went deep twice for his 12th career multiple-homer game. But Abreu joked "I'm mad at him" for Moncada's failure to hit for the cyle.

Said Moncada: "It doesn't matter. We won."

Tables turned: The Sox entered Monday night having lost seven straight. The Astros outscored them 27-2 in a weekend sweep, perhaps in part because Sox players were disconsolate over the condition of Farquhar, who collapsed in the team dugout Friday night after suffering a brain hemorrhage.

Of the Sox's four victories entering Monday night, only the 14-7 opening-day romp over the Royals in Kansas City was by more than one run.

Take a bow: Carson Fulmer breezed through six innings for his first victory of the season. Other than allowing a 428-foot home run to catcher Mike Zunino on a fastball that tailed over the plate, he was terrific, giving up only two other hits and one walk.

But it wasn't all good: While sprinting to first on a groundout, Avisail Garcia grabbed his right leg and limped past the bag.

He stayed down for a while and needed help from trainer Herm Schneider to exit the field.

Garcia, who hit a career-best .330 last season, is hitting .225 with one homer this year. Trayce Thompson replaced him.

Who's got next? Manager Rick Renteria wanted to see which relievers would be needed Monday before committing to a starter for Tuesday. The original plan had Miguel Gonzalez starting Monday and Fulmer going Tuesday, but Gonzalez was placed on the 10-day DL with right rotator cuff inflammation.

Slim chance: After struggling last season with the Sox, right-hander Chris Beck said he took a blood test that revealed that "I was allergic to literally everything I was eating — dairy, yeast and garlic."

Beck ended a seventh-inning jam in bizarre fashion: After getting caught in a rundown, two Mariners players returned to second base.

Both were ruled out on a double play that was scored 2-3-5-6 after Matt Davidson hustled to tag first baseman Daniel Vogelbach.

DAVEY NELSON 1944-2018

Surprising call altered life forever

Phil Rosenthal
On media

Davey Nelson was in the Dominican Republic running the A's Latin American instructional program in the fall of 1987 when the front office called to let him know the Cubs had sought permission to speak with him.

Nelson, once an All-Star infielder for the Rangers, had coached for the White Sox a few years earlier and told his boss he was happy where he was.

The call from Chicago hadn't been about a coaching job, however. It was about replacing former manager Jim Frey in the WGN-AM 720 radio booth, which was a very different matter. Nelson, who died Monday at 73 after a lengthy illness, wanted that — a lot — and he got it, spending two seasons in the Cubs booth.

Until WGN-AM called, the once-open door to announcing had seemed hermetically sealed for Nelson, who spent 10 years as a player with the Indians, Senators, Rangers and Royals.

The fact that Nelson's most recent job was as a cable TV analyst for the Brewers speaks to how important that call from WGN-AM was in keeping a dream alive.

"I met Davey first as a player, then as a coach," Chuck Swirsky, now radio voice of the Bulls but then WGN-AM's sports director, recalled Monday. "I interviewed him countless times and found him intelligent, articulate, engaging and always kind and considerate to everyone he came in contact with. When we had an opening, I suggested he apply."

Several interviews later, right around Christmas, the station called with the good news.

"I just never thought I'd get this kind of opportunity, mainly because my playing days were over," Nelson told the Tribune in 1988 as he prepared to make his debut in the Cubs booth alongside Dewayne Staats. "I didn't think I had the name to go up to a station or a network and say, 'Gee, I'd love to work for you.' But when Chuck Swirsky called (about applying for the job), I was floored."

Nelson was not a complete rookie. He had landed a job doing highlights for a Dallas radio station. His work caught the attention of local TV sportscaster Verne Lundquist, who told him he should pursue it as a career if it interested him. Which it did.

Nelson's playing days ended after the 1977 season in Kansas City, and he segued into a year as a Royals TV analyst, then returned to Texas as an assistant coach at TCU before signing on as a White Sox assistant coach in 1981.

During his three seasons with the White Sox, Nelson picked up work with SportsVision and WJRC-AM in Joliet. But the White Sox told him they didn't see him as one of their major-league coaches in 1985, which had a domino effect.

"The show in Joliet was canceled when that happened," Nelson recalled. "That's when I thought, 'That's it. My broadcasting's done.' "

The good news is he already had shown he was an excellent instructor and coach. Among the players Nelson helped develop during his White Sox stint was future Sox executive Ken Williams. Later pupils would include Kenny Lofton with the Indians and Scott Podsednik with the Brewers.

When the Cubs and WGN-AM cut Nelson loose in 1989, Tribune baseball columnist Jerome Holtzman wrote he was "unable to understand why the Cubs had to give the pink slip" to Nelson, whom he called "among the best analysts in the country."

Holtzman acknowledged that Nelson "wasn't a smooth talker," but that didn't detract from "his vast knowledge of inside baseball."

Nelson spent time after that in the Expos and Indians organizations, moving into the Indians radio booth for a couple of seasons in the late 1990s. Then he joined the Brewers organization, initially as a minor-league instructor in 2001 and later as a first-base coach. He joined Fox Sports Wisconsin in 2006.

At the time the Cubs and WGN-AM hired Nelson, about 30 years ago, the fallout was still fresh from Dodgers general manager Al Campanis' remarks on national television about the dearth of African-Americans in Major League Baseball leadership roles.

MLB was under pressure to promote and hire African-Americans as never before, which made Nelson, then the A's coordinator of instruction and assistant director of player development, a prime candidate for a top front-office post.

People thought he was nuts to give that up for a Cubs broadcasting job.

"I have a chance now to be a public figure in Chicago and because I am black, maybe I can be a positive model for other blacks who want to get into journalism or broadcasting," he said.

Lesson 1: Just when you think opportunity won't knock, a phone call can change everything.

Gregorius, Andujar on fire in rout

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Rookie Miguel Andujar homered and doubled to extend his barrage of extra-base hits, Didi Gregorius hit a grand slam and the Yankees hammered the Twins 14-1 on Monday night for their first three-game winning streak under manager Aaron Boone.

Slumping Giancarlo Stanton homered in going 4-for-4 and Gleyber Torres singled for his first major-league hit, a day after the 21-year-old made his debut.

The Twins lost their fourth in a row and brought in center fielder Ryan LaMarre to pitch in the eighth inning — and Tyler Austin tagged him for a two-run homer.

Andujar kept taking meaty cuts and delivered an extra-base hit in his seventh straight game, tying the Pirates' Corey Dickerson for the longest streak in the majors this year. Andujar is 15-for-29 (.517) during that span with eight doubles, a triple and three home runs, raising his average from .107 to .316.

Stanton hit a loud, long drive for his fifth homer, and Gary Sanchez boomed a two-run double. Both sluggers began the game batting under .190.

Brian Dozier singled home the Twins' run. He has a team-record 17-game hitting streak to begin a season and a 24-game string dating to last year.

Masahiro Tanaka (3-2) gave up three hits in 6⅔ innings. He has won all five of his career starts against the Twins.

The Yankees have beaten the Twins five in a row and are 51-21 against them since 2008, their best record against an AL opponent. The Yanks have won the season series 11 straight years and have lost it only once since 1992.

AROUND THE HORN

■ MLB: The Red Sox and the Nationals are the only teams on track to pay the luxury tax this year, according to opening-day payroll totals compiled by Major League Baseball. The Red Sox's payroll at the start of the season for purposes of the tax was $233.9 million, which would cause the team to pay a $9.4 million tax. The Nationals' payroll was $201 million, which would result in a tax of $1.2 million. The Giants were just below the $197 million tax threshold at $196.66 million. That is followed by the Cubs at $183.9 million, the Astros at $182.4 million, the Dodgers at $181.99 million and the Yankees at $178.8 million.

■ Angels: Yuli Gurriel was thrown out at third by C Martin Maldonado to end the game after a safe call was reversed on replay, giving the Angels a 2-0 win that ended the Astros' six-game winning streak. Reliever Keynan Middleton threw a slider in the dirt that got away, but Maldonado pounced and threw to third. Umpire Cory Blaser signaled safe, but it was overruled on replay. Kole Calhoun and Justin Upton drove in the Angels' runs.

■ Indians: Carlos Carrasco (4-0) allowed one run on six hits in 7⅓ innings to win his 10th straight decision since Aug. 27 by beating the Orioles 2-1. He struck out seven and walked two. Yonder Alonso hit a two-run homer.

■ Reds: Off to the worst start in their history, the Reds beat the Braves 10-4 for their first victory under interim manager Jim Riggleman. The Reds are 4-18, the worst start since the Orioles opened with that mark in 2010.

■ Braves: Jose Bautista will take the third-base job whenever he joins the big-league club. He will supplant Ryan Flaherty, leading the NL with a .362 average through 20 games. Bautista has eight straight 20-homer seasons.

■ A's: Former A's owner Ken Hofmann died at 95. No cause of death was given. Hofmann and Steve Schott bought the team in 1995, and the A's won the AL West in 2000, '02 and '03 under their ownership tenure.

Pitcher Danny Farquhar (43) had surgery for a ruptured aneurysm Saturday at Rush University Medical Center.

Sox feel encouraged after Farquhar update

"As soon as the doctors say it's OK and his family says it's OK, this entire clubhouse will be there," Bummer said.

Added right-hander Chris Beck, who rejoined the Sox on Monday after opening the season at Triple-A Charlotte: "He walked in last year like he'd been here since day one. Great guy. Character guy. He spoke fluent Spanish. He was our glue."

Others call him "Statcast."

"He has info on everything — spin rates, all that good stuff," Jones said. "He's what we would call a 'stat rat.' He knows a lot, and it's intriguing. Keeps us loose out in the bullpen, that's for sure."

Farquhar is expected to remain hospitalized for several weeks. The Sox moved him to the 60-day disabled list.

"We're very happy he's trending in the right direction," manager Rick Renteria said. "To know he's able to move and to speak and to know that his family's there ... he knows everybody cares for him, and we're guardedly optimistic about the outcome."

Veteran right-hander James Shields said he has received text messages from players all around baseball. Farquhar has pitched for the Blue Jays, Mariners, Rays and Sox, posting a career 3.93 ERA while appearing in 253 games. Renteria has called on him eight times this season.

He gave up two hits (two runs) and retired two Astros on Friday before collapsing in the dugout after suffering a brain hemorrhage.

"He has a passion for the game," Shields said. "He loves baseball and hopefully he comes back with a vengeance."

Before the Sox took the field Monday at Guaranteed Rate Field, Shields said the encouraging news was good for his teammates to hear.

"But more importantly," he said, "for his family."

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The Cubs begin to celebrate after defeating the Indians in Game 7 of the 2016 World Series on Nov. 2, 2016.

Memories stick

Return to Cleveland brings back reminders of '16 World Series win

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

Mike Montgomery uses the same glove he wore two years ago when he induced Michael Martinez to ground out to third base and secure the Cubs' first World Series title since 1908.

"Some of those memories will be there forever, and rightfully so," said Montgomery, who returns with his Cubs teammates Tuesday night to Progressive Field in Cleveland for the first time since beating the Indians in Game 7 of the 2016 World Series. "It's trying to balance remembering and enjoying that year but also knowing you can't stay in that year the rest of your career. Last year was a good lesson."

Talk of a World Series rematch faded last October as the Dodgers humbled the Cubs in five games in the National League Championship Series and the Indians blew a 2-0 series lead in losing an American League Division Series to the Yankees.

"We realize (the World Series title) was monumental and how difficult it is to get back there, even when you have a great team," said Ben Zobrist, who had the game-winning hit in Game 7. "These young guys keep learning and growing, and they're better than they were a year ago. They're hungry, and it just reminds you and whets the taste buds for another championship."

The World Series title earned manager Joe Maddon a $1 million increase for each of the final three years of his contract. But Maddon still owns the same tablet computer he used to look at the weather report while Jason Heyward delivered his spiritual speech to teammates during the 17-minute rain delay before the 10th and deciding inning of Game 7.

The Cubs' dramatic triumph alleviated some of the criticism directed toward Maddon after some questionable moves. Maddon remains firm in defending his logic throughout Games 6 and 7.

His only regret, he said, was not getting closer Aroldis Chapman out of Game 6 sooner after the Cubs expanded their lead to seven runs in the top of the ninth. Maddon had summoned Chapman — who threw 42 pitches in Game 5 two days earlier — to retire Francisco Lindor with two runners on to preserve a 7-2 lead in the seventh.

"There's no Game 7 if you don't win Game 6," Maddon said. "The only thing I did wrong was I didn't get Chappy out after we blew it open because I had that in my mind to do it, and then I didn't.

"He threw four extra pitches (walking Brandon Guyer). Way too much is made of that."

Despite an obvious dip in velocity, Maddon called on Chapman again in Game 7, and he allowed Rajai Davis' tying home run in the eighth. The homer baffled Maddon because Davis choked up on the bat and appeared content just to poke the ball.

Game 7 also featured the oddity of Jon Lester, in a rare relief role, bouncing a pitch off David Ross' mask to allow two runs in the fifth, as well as Javier Baez fouling off a bunt attempt with one out in the ninth and Heyward representing the go-ahead run at third.

But the steep steps from the clubhouse to the field will bring back fond memories for Maddon, who recalled giving postgame interviews on the field, "and it's raining and you don't care."

Reliever Carl Edwards Jr. remembers "cameras every two steps" and waving the "W" flag before hugging his girlfriend and daughter.

"It was crazy stuff," Edwards said.

Being on the mound for the final out, Montgomery knows how lucky he was to be in the center of professional sports' longest-awaited celebration.

"As soon as I can afford to buy a house and figure out where I want to live," he said, "I'll create a room that has a lot of this stuff."

Heyward's inspiring speech still resonates

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

Heyward

Stranded at third base in the ninth inning of Game 7 of the 2016 World Series, Jason Heyward had lots of information to process.

A 17-minute rain delay gave him a chance to hit the reset button with his teammates in a room between the dugout and clubhouse at Progressive Field in Cleveland.

"The way everything went, it wasn't just one thing," Heyward recalled of his speech that inspired the Cubs to rally for two runs in the 10th for their first World Series title since 1908. "We just needed to be together."

Some observers thought Heyward intended to call the meeting after Aroldis Chapman allowed Rajai Davis' tying home run in the eighth. But there was also Jon Lester's wild pitch in the fifth that let two runs in and Javier Baez's fouled-off bunt attempt on a 3-2 count in the ninth with Heyward representing the go-ahead run.

"At that point, if you're basing a get-together off one thing, then you're in the wrong place in the wrong time," Heyward said.

"The most special thing he said was, 'We're here for a reason,' " Contreras said. " 'We're not here because we're a bad team. We're here because we're the best team. And let's go out and do our best and see what happens.' "

Extra innings: D'backs left-hander Patrick Corbin was selected over Cubs infielder Javier Baez for National League player of the week. Corbin struck out 19 while allowing three hits in 15 innings; Baez batted .480 with three home runs and nine RBIs.

On the flip side, Kris Bryant is eager to get back to Progressive Field, where the Cubs made millions of fans' dreams come true on Nov. 2, 2016.

"I'm sure there will be some feelings when I take the field," he said. "I'm sure it won't be as electric, I guess, because that was an intense game. I was thinking about that the night I was packing (for the road trip).

"This is the first time we're going back, and it should be pretty cool, all those thoughts and memories coming back."

Bryant's status is uncertain after getting beaned Sunday at Coors Field, but that won't prevent him from flashing back to that roller-coaster game that ended in the mother of all champagne parties.

While the clincher will forever be etched in the minds of the Cubs and their fan base, it's also in the running for the unofficial title as greatest Game 7 in World Series history. Other classics in the debate include 1991 Twins-Braves (Jack Morris' gem), 1960 Pirates-Yankees (Bill Mazeroski's walk-off home run) and 2001 Diamondbacks-Yankees (Luis Gonzalez's walk-off blooper).

"I don't know — top five if you're a normal person," he said. "Best of all time if you're a Cubs fan?"

No matter where it ranks on your list, rest assured those Game 7 memories will never go away, and the stories will only be embellished as time goes by. The 17-minute rain delay — and Jason Heyward's speech in the weight room — already are legendary moments. Anthony Rizzo called it "the greatest rain delay of all time," while Jeff Santo, son of former Cubs great Ron Santo, referred to the rain preceding the drought-ending win as "almost biblical."

I once asked Rev. James Greanias, a longtime Cubs fan, if the Game 7 rain delay was divine intervention.

"I do not subscribe to any belief that God causes, favors or intervenes in any athletic contest," he replied. "That being said, though, I do believe he provides opportunities for us to step away from the present in order to contemplate the higher things of his love. In other words, there are moments in life, privately and corporately in the public arena, that offer us a microcosm of faith.

"Rain delay, in midst of difficulty, allows a chance to regroup from the depths of despair to refocus, to find hope in the truth of past experiences of rallying. Thus comes the redirect of effort to victory. In life, (when) things seem hopeless, we turn to prayer and faith in the knowledge of such past personal experience, refocusing ourselves toward either success or strength to endure the worst."

As you might expect, rain is in the forecast again this week, a recurring theme of the 2018 season. That's one reason Epstein won't be making the trip.

"Spent enough time bouncing off the walls of a Cleveland hotel in '16," he said.

Maybe you have your own stories of watching Game 7 unfold, whether it's bouncing off the walls of your living room or huddling with family and friends in a restaurant or bar.

All those memories may come flooding back Tuesday night, to when your faith in the Cubs finally paid off.

Manaea rises from small-town roots to big-time MLB prowess

"From that day forward, the 'Singing Samoan' was born," Snyder said. "What a story Sean is."

It started about 60 miles southeast of Chicago in Wanatah, Ind., population 1,017, a one-stoplight outpost along U.S. 30 perhaps remembered most for being on the way to somewhere — in Manaea's case, the major leagues. The rural community includes two gas stations, a Subway and a Burger King but little else — not that anything gets in the way of the annual Scarecrow Festival every September.

Months after the Royals selected Manaea with the 34th pick of the 2013 amateur draft, Wanatah officials asked his parents, Opal and Faaloloi, to serve as grand marshals of the festival's parade. Because Sean was busy pitching in the minors, a local businessman produced a huge cardboard cutout of his head to sit in the car leading the parade.

"That was fun," Opal said Monday. "He is a loved young man who appreciates where he came from."

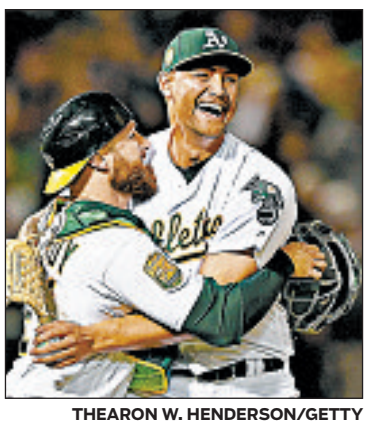
Faaloloi Manaea, an American Samoan, settled in northwest Indiana after serving in the Vietnam War. He worked in a steel mill as the couple raised three sons, the youngest a tall, gifted left-hander who effortlessly threw a baseball hard enough to turn heads as early as Little League.

"Every mother will say this, but there was something special," Opal said.

It surfaced sporadically in Manaea's first three years at South Central High School in Union Mills, Ind., before he transferred to Andrean, a prestigious Catholic school in Merrillville, to play for legendary coach Dave Pishkur. A state title in Manaea's senior year followed. Pishkur, with 960 victories in his coaching career, structured Manaea's training regimen and increased his exposure — landing him a spot on Team Indiana before a showcase in Plainfield, Ill.

"Sean pitched three innings and got Indiana State interested," said Pishkur, who received a text from Manaea on Monday. "But when Sean first came to us, we just sat him down and said you've got to get your grades up for college. Pro baseball? We weren't thinking that at all."

At Indiana State, Manaea introduced himself to the weight room and added 25 pounds to his slender 6-foot-5 frame. His velocity jumped into the mid-90s. His command improved. He started locating more, singing to himself less and attracting attention.



THEARON W. HENDERSON/GETTY

Manaea's national emergence occurred after his sophomore year during a dominant summer in the Cape Cod League. Several scouts started comparing him to Chris Sale. Before a strained hip interrupted his progress the following spring, Manaea was projected to go as high as fellow pitchers Mark Appel and Jon Gray in the same 2013 draft that delivered Kris Bryant to the Cubs.

"Everything happens for a reason," Opal said.

The Royals selected Manaea in the supplemental part of the first round, signing him to a $3.55 million bonus, and eventually used the promising prospect as a lure. Three months before they won the 2015 World Series, the Royals traded Manaea and right-hander Aaron Brooks to the A's for current Cubs infielder Ben Zobrist.

On April 29, 2016, Manaea made his major-league debut, a long way from aiming for a catcher's mitt and hitting an exit sign. Two years later in Oakland, he made history by shutting down baseball's best offense with a no-hitter against the Red Sox.

Like most no-hitters, controversy accompanied this one. A replay review in the sixth inning ruled Andrew Benintendi out for running out of the baseline after he was initially called safe. An inning earlier, A's shortstop Marcus Semien dropped an over-the-shoulder popup that was scored an error but even Manaea thought was a hit until he later did a double take at the scoreboard.

"I didn't even think about it until I looked up in the seventh or eighth and I was like, 'Oh, my God, why is there still a zero on there?' " Manaea told reporters. "So after that, my adrenaline started pumping a little bit again and I really wanted to finish this thing out."

When Manaea finally did, his brother, Dave, celebrated with his family and high-fived patrons gathered for the game at Bridges' Scoreboard in Griffith, Ind. His high school coach, Pishkur, a Cubs fan who named his son for Ryne Sandberg, admitted feeling more joy in Manaea's no-hitter than in his favorite team's 2016 World Series victory. His parents beamed with pride watching from the winter home in South Florida their son purchased for them.

"It was pandemonium; we were ecstatic," Opal said. "He always wants to include us, so he FaceTimed us right after the game. We told Sean we always knew he could do whatever he wanted if he believed in himself."

Rockets score 50 in 3rd, rip T'wolves

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — James Harden gave the Rockets quite the jump-start with 22 of the team's 50 points in the third quarter, as they cruised past the Timberwolves 119-100 on Monday night to take a 3-1 lead in their first-round Western Conference playoff series.

Chris Paul scored 15 of his 25 points in the near-record third for the Rockets, who turned a 50-49 halftime edge into a 31-point advantage after the torrid 12-minute span.

The only team in the history of the NBA playoffs with more points in one quarter was the Lakers, who scored 51 points in the fourth quarter on March 31, 1962, in a loss to the Pistons.

Harden finished with 36 points. Clint Capela added 14 points and 17 rebounds, Eric Gordon finally got going with 18 points off the bench and the Rockets easily recovered from their rough start.

Karl-Anthony Towns had 22 points and 15 rebounds for the Timberwolves, who were dominated on both ends of the floor during the decisive third and missed 14 of 21 shots.

Jimmy Butler led Timberwolves coach Tom Thibodeau's collection of former Bulls with 19 points, followed by Derrick Rose (17), Jamal Crawford (10), Aaron Brooks (4) and Taj Gibson (2). Butler also had nine rebounds and five assists.

Leafs force Game 7; Capitals advance

Associated Press

Frederik Andersen stopped 32 shots to lead the Maple Leafs to a 3-1 win over the Bruins on Monday night, forcing a decisive Game 7 in the first-round series.

William Nylander, Mitch Marner and Tomas Plekanec scored for the Leafs, who trailed the series 3-1 before winning two straight. They also trailed 1-0 early in the second period of this one.

Game 7 is Wednesday night in Boston with the winner advancing to face the Lightning in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

There was a moment of silence before the opening faceoff at Air Canada Centre to honor the 10 people killed Monday when a van mounted a sidewalk in Toronto's north end and struck pedestrians. Fifteen others were injured.

Capitals 6, Blue Jackets 3: Alex Ovechkin scored twice and Braden Holtby had 35 saves as the Capitals advanced to the Eastern Conference semifinals with the Game 6 win on the road.

The Caps next face the Penguins in the second round of the playoffs for a third straight year. The Penguins won each of the last two years.

Final return: Hester, Forte say goodbye

By Rich Campbell
Chicago Tribune

Devin Hester drove to Halas Hall countless times during his eight remarkable seasons with the Bears. On Monday, en route to the retirement ceremony honoring him and former teammate Matt Forte, there was a new element to that old road.

"Normally when I drive here, I'm always late," Hester cracked. "That was my first time driving the speed limit. I got a chance to enjoy the scenery."

Finally, long after his arrival in 2006, neither fines nor the wrath of coach Lovie Smith waited for him.

Instead, there were hugs of reconnection, smiles of appreciation and the figurative exhale that comes with closure, as the organization gave Hester and Forte their due in an hourlong ceremony at team headquarters.

There was the iconic, electric return man and the versatile, consistent running back, impeccably dressed in suits, sifting through their emotions for words of perspective on careers that highlighted a bygone Bears era.

Most notable was the free-flowing gratitude from the two players to their families, teammates and the organization — and the thank-yous reciprocated by those parties.

Attendees included former Bears Charles Tillman, Zach Miller, Johnny Knox and Jason McKie, as well as current running back Jordan Howard, quarterback Mitch Trubisky and general manager Ryan Pace.

There also was current director of college scouting Mark Sadowski — a busy man this week — who was a Southeast area scout for the team when Hester was drafted out of Miami in 2006 and Forte was selected out of Tulane in 2008, each in the second round.

Hester stopped his remarks on multiple occasions because he nearly was overcome with emotion. But when the topic was his eventual Hall of Fame candidacy, he had no trouble speaking.

"It's very important," Hester said. "I hope one day to say I was inducted into the Hall of Fame. I think that's every athlete's dream. I, myself, feel I have a great shot at it."

Before it was Forte's turn to speak, Chairman George McCaskey listed surnames from the list of great Bears running backs, including Grange, Nagurski, Sayers, Casares and Payton.

"Put Forte right in there," McCaskey said.

"I'm standing here today full of emotion, but I'm not sad, disappointed or anything," Forte said. "I'm just grateful."

REAL TALK

The hole truth: Pace has plenty of gaps to fill

By Rich Campbell and Dan Wiederer

CURTIS COMPTON/AP

Georgia linebacker Roquan Smith levels Mississippi State quarterback Nick Fitzgerald last season. Smith is a possible first-round pick.

As far as Bears needs, edge rusher tops the list. Receiver is a close second.

Over the last four months, Ryan Pace has steered the Bears through a coaching transition and the latest free-agency binge. Now the general manager comes to the stretch of road he considers the most important for getting the team to its destination.

Pace's fourth draft in the GM chair is his first without quarterback anxiety. But this team, which has lost at least 10 games in four straight seasons, still has major holes.

As Pace prepares to make his fourth top-10 selection in as many years, what should we expect from an executive who proved last year he can keep a secret when his job depends on it? What must Pace accomplish over the three-day stretch that begins Thursday?

Tribune Bears writers Rich Campbell and Dan Wiederer shine the spotlight on the GM in this pre-draft edition of Real Talk.

Rich Campbell: Ryan Pace is sleeping easier a year after executing his covert mission to draft North Carolina quarterback Mitch Trubisky. But the weight on Pace's shoulders remains heavy, Dan. The likelihood that the Bears' greatest needs don't match their spot in the draft order — No. 8 in the first round — creates some questions for him to navigate.

If there isn't an edge rusher or receiver that compels Pace and the Bears at No. 8, how can they effectively address those needs?

Dan Wiederer: The Bears have to arrive at Sunday morning with important additions at both those positions. And the likelihood is those additions won't come at No. 8 where Pace will likely be choosing off a short list that includes Quenton Nelson, Roquan Smith, Minkah Fitzpatrick, Denzel Ward, Derwin James and Tremaine Edmunds.

That's a menu of top-shelf talent right there. So it's my belief that it will be very hard for the Bears to screw up Thursday night's proceedings. Rest easy there, Bears fans.

But where the pressure will intensify on Pace is with those next half-dozen picks.

On Friday night and throughout Saturday, the Bears need to add talent and depth to the roster while not being blind to the obvious needs you mentioned. Edge rusher tops the list. Receiver is a close second.

That doesn't mean abandoning the "best player available" approach Pace so often speaks to. But it's worth reiterating that, when the Bears have players with similar draft grades lumped together on one of their "clouds" on the big board, Pace should remember the glaring holes at edge rusher and receiver and proceed accordingly.

Campbell: If Oklahoma's Baker Mayfield or UCLA's Josh Rosen is still available at No. 8, and the Bears receive a trade offer from a quarterback-needy team that would allow them to move back and recoup picks, perhaps that would position the Bears more comfortably to mesh their draft board with value in selecting a receiver or edge rusher.

Then again, as you've said, trading out of the top 10 is a risk for a team short on elite players. I think that hypothetical is one of several possibilities for us to learn more about Pace's tastes and preferences. Others include side-by-side comparisons of players you mentioned above.

We know Pace loves physical traits, which would seem to favor Edmunds and James at those two positions, respectively. But Smith and Fitzpatrick generally are more proven with more concrete production. To that point, while I agree the Bears have enticing options, I'm not so sure these decisions are foolproof.

Wiederer: Put me on the record as being against trading down. There's only one silver lining for being as bad as the Bears have been in recent years. And that's having the perk of a top-10 pick. If I were Pace, I'd be reluctant to give up that benefit just to add another pick later in the draft.

Mission No. 1 is landing the best Round 1 pick possible. Nelson, Smith and Fitzpatrick all seem to be heralded as prospects who can help right away and guys who seem likely to be difference-makers for a long time ahead.

Still, Pace must understand that while his Thursday night pick will be the one that creates the most conversation in this football-crazed city, his work in Rounds 2-7 is perhaps more significant in stabilizing the roster.

Campbell: I don't disagree, but that circles us back to the need for an edge rusher.

Edmunds, the Virginia Tech linebacker, is 6-foot-5, 253 pounds with 34½-inch arms. Those measurables look darn good on an edge rusher. But Edmunds isn't refined in that role and was only asked to fill it infrequently in college.

This is where scouting and coaching come together. We know that defensive coordinator Vic Fangio has made his living working with outside linebackers, developing their pass-rush skills and positioning them in the scheme to succeed. If Edmunds is still on the board at No. 8, we'll learn something about Pace's willingness to embrace a projection to fill a need.

Otherwise, they'll have to comb through the remaining edge rushers when they pick 39th overall. I have doubts about how the defense would improve on its No. 10 ranking without more of an edge rush presence.

Wiederer: When Pace comes to the Halas Hall media room Saturday night with his 2018 draft class complete, that will have to be one of the questions near the top of our list. Is the pass rush suddenly enlivened to a point that the defense as a whole can take a big leap forward? If so, how so? If not, now what?

And we'll also have to zoom out and assess whether the Bears receiving corps has been acceptably addressed. Is it possible Pace might draft multiple receivers this weekend? I think so.

Within all this, we can expect him to remain aggressive with how he approaches the draft.

You can't accuse Pace of being conservative on draft weekend. Pace won't sit on his hands when he has identified a "must have" player on his wish list.

Campbell: This conversation of ours has bounced all over the place, and I think that's an accurate reflection of this draft for Pace and the Bears.

Last year, there was a clear, straightforward focus on drafting Trubisky to solve the quarterback situation. Now, though, the Bears have options, which involve more decisions about priorities and increased importance of player evaluations.

Ultimately, Pace is judged on all of this. And while I have always agreed with his determination to build through the draft, the 14-34 record on his resume suggests they have a lot of work left. That continues Thursday. It should be fun.

DRAFT NEEDS

The North

By Sam Farmer
Los Angeles Times

NFC North

Bears
Receiver, cornerback and edge rusher are glaring areas of need. There probably isn't a receiver in this draft worthy of the No. 8 pick, but there are defensive players who fill the bill. The Bears could probably get the best corner prospect at that spot. Notre Dame guard Quenton Nelson would be an intriguing possibility too.

Lions
Their top two needs are pass-rush help and a running back. They could use a defensive tackle, a cornerback and help in the interior of the offensive line as well. Boston College defensive end Harold Landry is a versatile option who could line up in multiple spots and likely will be available at No. 20.

Packers
They will be on the lookout for an outside pass rusher and a cornerback, and they're at a good spot at No. 14 to get either. There's also a need at wide receiver and tight end, so those are possibilities. If Virginia Tech linebacker Tremaine Edmunds were to tumble out of the top 10, he would be very enticing.

Vikings
They need to bolster their offensive line, and they're looking for help at defensive tackle, where they haven't found a replacement for free agent Sharrif Floyd. The Vikings like quicker, often undersized pass rushers. They might also look for a safety to complement Harrison Smith and a tight end who's a better blocker than Kyle Rudolph.

AFC North

Bengals
Their most pressing need is a left tackle, and they should be able to pick one up with the 21st pick — or possibly a center to anchor their reworked offensive line. They always seem to be eyeing cornerbacks, so that's a consideration, as is a defensive tackle if Vita Vea were to slip.

Browns
They have two of the first four picks and five in the first 64, so this draft really could help them retool. They need a quarterback — even though Tyrod Taylor is expected to be the short-term starter — a running back and a primary cornerback, as well as a replacement for retired left tackle Joe Thomas.

Ravens
They want to find help for quarterback Joe Flacco, whether that comes in the form of a wide receiver, an offensive lineman or both. They need a field-stretching tight end too. If the best receivers are gone and it's too early to take a tight end, they might look to bolster their protection up front.

Steelers
With the loss of Ryan Shazier, they're looking for an every-down linebacker. The long-term future of running back Le'Veon Bell is murky, so the Steelers might want to address that at some point in this draft. They could go for a corner in the first round.

Or Gettleman could identify Penn State running back Saquon Barkley as the perfect addition to take pressure off Manning and beef up a supporting cast that already features receiver Odell Beckham Jr. and emerging second-year tight end Evan Engram. The Giants could also go with North Carolina State defensive end Bradley Chubb after trading away Jason Pierre-Paul.

Then there is the possibility the Giants could trade out of the pick to a team such as the Bills, who have already traded up once in Round 1 and are believed to be seeking a quarterback to pair with AJ McCarron.

The Browns have bungled the quarterback position so royally for so long that they seem certain to choose a quarterback — likely USC's Sam Darnold or Wyoming's Josh Allen — at No. 1. As tempting as Barkley might be to new GM John Dorsey, the running back class is deep with a pocket of excellent backs projected to be available at the start of Round 2. Dorsey found NFL rushing champion Kareem Hunt in Round 3 for the Chiefs last year.

So if the Giants — or a team the Giants trade with — grab a quarterback at No. 2, that would get rolling the early run on QBs the Bears hope to see.

The Jets at No. 3 are clearly in the market for a quarterback after their previous trade up from No. 6 with the Colts, so figure another quarterback — Darnold, Oklahoma's Baker Mayfield or maybe UCLA's Josh Rosen — goes there.

That leads to the fourth pick and the Browns again, another slot that could be traded to a team willing to pay a high price to move into position for a quarterback. The Broncos remain a possibility for a quarterback at No. 5, though they have committed $25 million guaranteed to Case Keenum in a two-year contract, and GM John Elway might desire to spend resources elsewhere. However, Elway could take the approach the Eagles and Bears did and keep firing until he's certain he has the quarterback to lead the Broncos.

In terms of having a premium selection of a non-quarterback, the Colts at No. 6 are even better positioned than the Bears and could loom as a trade target for the Bills (if they don't climb higher) or the Cardinals, who are also in search of a quarterback. The Buccaneers pick at No. 7 and figure to take Notre Dame guard Quenton Nelson or a defensive back: Florida State safety Derwin James, Ohio State cornerback Denzel Ward or Alabama's versatile Minkah Fitzpatrick.

That leads to the Bears at No. 8, where Pace should be able to add a player who can make a difference from day one. He was in the same position last year as a lot of these GMs, angling to add a quarterback and ready to do whatever necessary to ensure he got his guy, Mitch Trubisky.

The smoke is thick as teams begin working the phones to determine the price for moving up and the bounty for moving down. Gettleman and the Giants hold the cards when it comes to what will happen with the quarterbacks and how the top 10 unfolds.

First we tried to kill him and then we gave him a street, and in the wake of the recent remembrances and events marking of the death of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., that's some of what we remember about the tortured relationship King had with this city.

It was on Aug. 5, 1966, that King was hit in the head with a rock thrown by some of the thousands who came to Marquette Park to confront him and the 700-some others who were accompanying him to protest housing segregation in the city. King had, of course, seen angry mobs before, but after being wounded he would say, "I have never seen — even in Mississippi and Alabama — mobs as hostile and as hate-filled as I've seen here in Chicago."

He was assassinated less than two years later, on April 4, 1968, in Memphis, and the West Side went up in flames and looting and destruction that devastated the area and crippled parts of it for decades (a tragic tale movingly documented by my colleagues Tony Briscoe and in the Tribune).

The mayor, whose name was Richard J. Daley, ordered those in his Police Department to "shoot to kill" any arsonists. But in just a few months, he was in a gentler mood. The Democratic National Convention was coming to town for the first time since 1956, and Daley called this "an important sign of faith to the American people for this national convention to be held here, not in some resort center, but in the very heart of a great city, where people live and work and raise their families." But his enthusiasm was shadowed by fear.

You might easily imagine, the way things turned out, that Daley was worried about the war protesters and other long-haired agitators coming to town. But he had a hard time taking them seriously. No, what he most feared might upset the convention were blacks, his paranoia fueled by those riots earlier in the year. So the word went out and the police began

Chita Rivera and Andrew Lloyd Webber will each take home a 2018 special Tony Award for Lifetime Achievement in the Theater, receiving their trophies at the awards ceremony this June.

The lifetime achievement honors are in one category of a handful of special Tony Awards that are doled out as part of the theater industry's biggest night. Along with the list of competitive awards that make up the night's main event, Tony Honors are handed out to industry figures who are not eligible in any of the competition categories, and another special award is given for outstanding commitment to humanitarian or charitable causes.

Lloyd Webber

Rivera, 85, is one of Broadway's best-loved performers. She began her career as a dancer and made her Broadway debut in the original 1950 cast of "Guys and Dolls" before her breakout role as Anita in the original 1957 production of "West Side Story." She won acting Tonys for "The Rink" in 1984 and "Kiss of the Spider Woman" in 1993.

Lloyd Webber, 70, is one of the very few Broadway composers with a marquee name, penning the music for massive, globally popular successes like "Jesus Christ Superstar," "Evita," "Cats" and "The Phantom of the Opera." As a composer and producer, he's won a total of seven Tonys.

The 2018 Tony Awards — hosted by Josh Groban and Sara Bareilles — are set to air live June 10 on CBS, with nominations due to be announced May 1.

Stepmother claims biological status

Dear Amy: I have two adult sons. Their father (my ex) remarried (to "Barbara") several years ago. Our family has now grown to include wonderful daughters-in-laws and grandchildren.

My boys' dad and I get along well. We celebrate holidays, events and family milestones together.

What is baffling is that, increasingly, I run into people who have been told (or led to believe) by Barbara that our sons and grandchildren are strictly her (biological) kin.

I've tried handling this in various ways.

My sons and their wives correct this when they talk with people who have said they've "run into your mother," or how enjoyable it was "meeting your mother" and such — when people are actually referring to their stepmother.

Barbara never had children in her previous marriages, so I assume she is unaware of the deep personal bond between mother and child. It is not for the taking.

I've never discussed this directly with her, but this is getting harder to take. It's like she tries to pretend that I do not exist.

How should I handle this?

— Loving and Blessed

Dear Loving and Blessed: If "Barbara" has been on the scene since the birth of these grandchildren, then, in my opinion, she should be granted full grandmother status. There is no rule that children must have only four DNA grandparents.

In my mind, the more grandmothers, the better. Bring on the grannies!

However, I can well imagine how the denial of your role as your sons' mother rankles — both you and them.

Your sons could handle this effectively (and kindly) by saying to their stepmother, " 'Barbara,' we treasure you, but we keep hearing from people you've met that you have introduced yourself as our mother. It would be best if you made it clear that you are our stepmother. The reason is because we have a mom who raised us — and things get really confusing later if people don't understand that she is our mother."

Barbara might then come to you and ask if this is a problem for you — and you should be honest and say that it is.

Dear Amy: I just found out that my aunt has been battling cancer for the past six months. I've talked to her frequently and never once did she tell me about her illness. Nor did any of her sons tell me. Everyone has been sworn to secrecy.

Our daughter visited her over the holidays and discovered how sick she was but she was asked to not tell anyone. What gives?

This put my daughter in an awful position. She didn't know how to avoid promising not to tell this secret.

This is not the first time in our family's history that health news has been withheld to "protect" another. I felt it was wrong then, and I think it's wrong now.

What's a good way to answer someone who wants to swear you to secrecy? Amy, why do people do this?

Now that I know, is there a kind way to reach out to my aunt?

— Upset Niece

Dear Upset: Many families (mine included) seem to pull the veil down around illness. Illness is deeply personal; it affects your own body, and each of us has the right to disclose, or withhold, information.

When someone swears you to secrecy and you can't do it, you should respond, "I'm sorry, but I can't keep that private."

When someone swears me to secrecy in advance of telling me the secret, I always say, "I can't guarantee to keep this a secret, since I don't know what it is. So maybe you shouldn't tell me."

Get in touch with your aunt. Tell her your daughter told you out of concern about her. Tell her you love her and are in her corner. Don't pump her for information and don't dive into the drama. Be gentle.

Dear Amy: "Hugs over Smooches" suggested that girls and women should be coached with ways to respond to male physical aggression.

You pooh-poohed that and said it was men who needed the coaching.

Yes, this is true, but I do believe that it would be helpful for females to learn how to respond.

— A Reader

Dear Reader: I agree. A loud "Stop that" might help.

pressuring various black militants and gang members, arresting some and hassling others, sending a stern behave-or-else message. But Daley's political savvy dictated a less aggressive maneuver, and on July 31, 1968, the City Council met to mollify the black community by renaming a street in honor of King. Many descriptions of this meeting have been written. Tribune reporter Edward Schreiber wrote that after Daley gave a seven-minute speech, the mayor "sat down and was given a two-minute standing ovation by aldermen and 100 visitors in the council galleries."

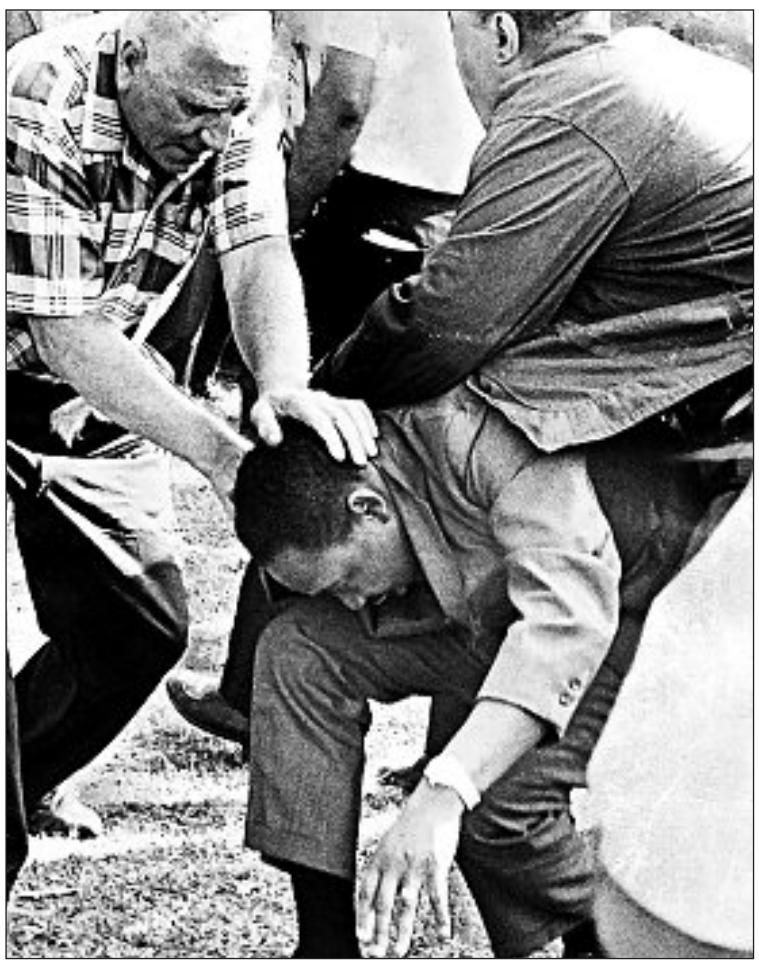
One of the city's most astute observers of politics and its attendant shenanigans, Mike Royko, captured this particular council gathering in his 1971 book "Boss." He wrote: "The meeting was remarkable with one administration alderman after another eulogizing King as a great man, forgetting that they had assailed him when he was alive. Daley himself described his relationship with King as one of great friendship and mutual understanding, claiming that King had told him what a fine job he was doing for the city's blacks. The heights to which Daley and the aldermen rose in praising King moved one observer to write: 'It was enough to bring tears to your eyes, if you happened to be a crocodile.' "

As usual, the mayor got his way and the council voted 43-0 to rename 11 miles-long South Park Way, which ran through predominantly black sections of the South Side, in King's honor.

There had been other suggestions, a downtown street or one that cut a longer path through the city (Western Avenue, for instance). Daley didn't want to hear it. He knew that in certain white neighborhoods any new street signs would be defaced or destroyed. So, on Aug. 8, 1968, South Park Way became Martin Luther King Jr. Drive, even though that marvelous City Council maverick Ald. Leon Despres, 5th, called this move "a slight and trivial gesture" and predicted the street would become known as a less than weighty, even frivolous, "Junior Drive."

ALEX GARCIA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2010

A monument to black soldiers from Illinois who fought in World War I is at 35th Street and King Drive.



CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Martin Luther King Jr. is struck by a rock thrown by protesters while marching in Chicago's Marquette Park on Aug. 5, 1966.

There was of course a ceremony to mark the formal renaming, with a crowd of some 500 people gathered near the Victory Monument on 35th Street, a statue built in 1927 to honor the Eighth Regiment of the Illinois National Guard, an African-American unit that served in France during World War I. Daley spoke, saying that he and the city administration were working to improve living conditions in the city. He added, "Violence accomplishes nothing. Arson accomplishes nothing. Rioting accomplishes nothing. ... Only love will overcome our difficulties today."

And thus did Chicago became the first city in the nation to rename a street for King, and a week later the Democrats came to town and in time there followed, as you might expect, other cities naming streets after King and there now more than 1,000 such streets across the globe.

Some have caused controversy and dissent, but you might think — hope? — that by now, a half-century later, such debates might have been silenced. But currently in Kansas City, the one in Missouri and not the one in Kansas, there is still, as The New York Times recently reported, "a split" over whether a MLK Jr. "street would best be placed: In a predominately black neighborhood, as is common, or in a predominantly white neighborhood?"

Many people voiced their opinions in the story, including a 53-year-old man named Walter Turner. He was asked by reporter John Eligon whether a King Street should be in a white neighborhood.

His answer? "Hell, no."

Emerging Middle East artists to be honored

ment, that said we really have a commitment to the Middle East," said Omar Kholeif, Manilow Senior Curator and Director of Global Initiatives at the MCA. Kholeif led the jury that selected the prize, which he described as the first of its kind in the U.S. or the United Kingdom.

"Sophia Al-Maria has over the last decade pioneered a new visual language in contemporary art," says the statement by the jury, composed of Kholeif, MCA Chief Curator Michael Darling and three outside experts in the field.

"An artist, writer, and filmmaker ... her critical insights into contemporary culture, examining histories of science fiction, feminism, and the global socio-political condition, feel more urgent now than ever."

Reached on Friday in Scotland, where she was attending the Glasgow International art fair , Al-Maria pronounced herself "gobsmacked. Omar called, and I was just shocked, actually. It felt almost like a secret that I wanted to keep because it was so unbelievable."

The 34-year-old was born in Washington state and raised there and in Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, she said. Her postsecondary education was in Cairo and London and she now lives in the British capital.

"I've never been near that amount of money to do work. It's kind of surreal," she said. "I have to really consider carefully how best to employ it because most of the projects, the unmade projects, that I want to do are unmade because of budgets. So this opportunity is quite special."

Despite it being a specifically Middle Eastern art prize, however, Al-Maria said she feels that she is at a turning point in her work and is feeling less rooted, more global.

"All of those things I was concerned with for the past 10 years, I feel as though I am finished with that chapter, and this is the start of a new one," she said. "I think that this might be the time to get into some of the questions about America that I've been thinking about."

"Major Motions" is one of Sophia Al-Maria's works. She was born in the U.S. and lived in Qatar and the UAE.

In her first solo exhibition in the U.S., in 2016 at the Whitney Museum of American Art, Al-Maria debuted a new video, "Black Friday," which the museum called "a rumination on shopping malls everywhere as secular temples of capitalism."

Al-Maria, who coined the term "Gulf Futurism" as a means of grappling with the rapid development and its attendant woes in the Persian Gulf, has described the mall as "a weirdly neutral shared zone between cultures that are otherwise engaged in a sort of war of information and image."

"All of those concerns I feel I'm no longer concerned with," she said Friday, "like the term 'Gulf Futurism,' for example ...

"My whole life in a way is a project of, I guess, moving away from designated cultural identities and moving it onto some other plane where one can attempt to not be, perhaps, a Middle Eastern artist or an American artist or a Qatari artist and just be someone who is working."

The prize is supported by Los Angeles gallerist and philanthropist Shulamit Nazarian, who is committed to funding it through her new, eponymous foundation, for three two-year cycles.

"Creating a prize will give an ascending artist a chance to be better known and have more attention in our wide-spanning, very busy world of contemporary art," said Nazarian, who grew up in Iran and emigrated here with her family after the Islamic Revolution.

As for the prize's title, she said, " 'Dunya' means 'global, universal.' It's a word used in many different backgrounds, cultures in the Middle East. ... It's a binding, a connecting word."

She emphasized that the MCA is devoting considerable resources as well, including not just the exhibition — Al-Maria's will be in September 2019 — but commissions to create new work for it. "It's definitely a collaboration," she said.

Kholeif said the prize arose out of conversations with Nazarian, and within the museum, about how best to support an emerging Middle Eastern artist.

"The cash prize enables the artist to live and to be able to produce new work," he said. "The second thing really important about the prize is the independent jury process. ... That brings a different process from outside the museum, which is very refreshing. And it creates a different kind of spotlight on the artists: 'This artist has been voted on by these exceptional people.' "

The other jurors for the inaugural Dunya Prize were Antonia Carver, director of Art Jameel, which supports artists in the Gulf region; Clare Davies, assistant curator of Modern and Contemporary Art, Middle East, North Africa and Turkey at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York; and Hans Ulrich Obrist, artistic director of the Serpentine Galleries, London.

Ceremony slated for June 11

Jesse Case enjoyed two nominations each, among nominations spread across numerous theaters and individuals.

The Non-Equity Jeffs no longer divide performance awards by gender and, this year, there are 11 leading actors nominated in both the musical and the nonmusical categories. With the supporting actor categories similarly stacked with talent, the ceremony slated for June 11 at the Athenaeum Theatre, 2936 N. Southport Ave., will be attended by many hopeful performers.

The Jeff Committee says it judged 136 productions from 32 of Chicago's smaller, non-union theater companies in the current season; about a third of those shows received at least one nomination.

Cabello carves musical path of her own at Riviera Theatre

By Althea Legaspi
Chicago Tribune

Camila Cabello was all about good timing at her sold-out show at the Riviera Theatre on Sunday. From pacing to choreography, friendly banter to her of-the-moment material, her polished set scarcely missed a mark during her first headlining solo appearance in Chicago.

That sense of synchrony didn't initially seem the case for the pop singer in 2016. That December, Cabello performed as a member of Fifth Harmony, "The X Factor"-assembled female group that launched her career in 2012, for a final time in Chicago. One week later, she left just as the ensemble garnered new accolades and music chart heights. A reportedly contentious split, it proved a prescient move. Last month, the remaining four members announced an indefinite hiatus.

It was evident at Cabello's show that she was well-primed to go solo. Performing songs from her chart-topping debut album, "Camila," Cabello's center stage turn was a confident, charismatic one where she spanned a variety of genres. The reggaeton-flavored "She Loves Control," the tropical bounce of "Inside Out" and the electro-pop-tinged "Into It" were all slickly delivered, yet also pointed to an artist whose musical style is still being honed.

Born in Cuba to a Cuban mother and Mexican father and reared in Miami, Cabello excelled when turning to her heritage for inspiration, including singing parts of songs in Spanish. Cabello's closer and No. 1 hit, the smoldering "Havana," resonated, as did the sultry "Sangria Wine." During the ballad "Something's Gotta Give," she paid homage to a number of important social movements via video footage, including so-called Dreamers and immigration reform, Black Lives Matter, female empowerment and gun control.

The show encompassed several hallmarks of an arena-level pop concert, with rolling fog that blanketed the stage floor, a giant video screen, strong choreography that featured salsa, and adept dancers and backing band.

The pro production befitted the singer, who may only recently have released her debut LP but has refined her stage presence touring with Fifth Harmony and opening solo for Bruno Mars. In June, Cabello returns to Chicago as an opener for Taylor Swift's "Reputation" tour. Even when Cabello's microphone went out during several "She Loves Control" verses, Cabello didn't miss a beat; the audience sang her parts and she seamlessly extended the tune and hit falsettos before jumping into a dance break. It also coincidentally showcased that Cabello was singing live, rather than relying solely on backing tracks.

'Wolfman' Washington does his best work after hours

By Greg Kot
Chicago Tribune

JOSH BRASTED/GETTY

Walter "Wolfman" Washington performs in May 2017 at the New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival.

If you hang out after hours at a blues or jazz club, chances are you'll find the musicians in no hurry to go home. Drinks, smokes, a few low-key laughs, then someone will start to play a lick, and they'll all fall in to some old, nearly forgotten tune that they all loved in their formative years. The air is thick with smoke, contemplation and melancholy, a way to soften the landing from the party music that they'd played for the paying customers. It's a ritual repeated in countless little juke joints and saloons across America, and it's a vibe, a feeling that Walter "Wolfman" Washington knows well.

The 74-year-old guitarist is a veteran of the New Orleans scene, a trusted sideman for the likes of Johnny Adams, Lee Dorsey and Irma Thomas, and a frontman who's scattered a few prized, mostly uptempo solo albums across the decades. On "My Future Is My Past" (Anti), he slides into his after-closing-time voice, a deep, mellow yet still pliant instrument that can rise into a falsetto. He finds a comfortable-yet-evocative middle ground between blues and jazz on a series of standards and deep cuts.

He adopts a lightly buoyant tone on "What a Difference a Day Makes" alongside James Singleton's upright bass and reinvents Jimmy Hughes' pleading soul standard "Steal Away" as a slyly swinging invitation. But Washington is at his finest when he settles in and lets a song marinate in his regret and reverie. What's beautiful about these interpretations is how they don't tell the listener what to feel, but rather leave the mood more unsettled, a profoundly adult perspective.

'My Future Is My Past'
Walter Wolfman Washington
★★★ (out of four)

The Doc Pomus-Dr. John classic "She's Everything to Me" brings out falsetto vocal leaps and some of his most expressive guitar playing. The call and response between his fingers and vocal cords toggles between yearning and empathy. He finds a tone shaded by ambiguity and dread — even as he expresses his deep need, he knows his lover will slide away from him one day.

"I'm not quite as lonely as I was before," he sings in "I Just Dropped by to Say Hello," as if his life were in a constant state of purgatory. Even more moving is his tribute to the late Adams on "Even Now," a track from the soul singer's final album in 1998. Washington turns it into a simmering duet with Thomas. Their voices seem to flow in and out of each other, as if they're reading each other's minds. Washington's world-weariness evokes the dignified suffering of Brook Benton, while Thomas brings a sharp focus to each syllable, excising any hint of melodrama. These are a couple of adults measuring their lives by the relationship they struggle to maintain, a struggle full of heartache and pain, yet somehow still worth it.

IN PERFORMANCE 'A Home on the Lake' ★★★

Racism and real estate from Evanston history

By Kerry Reid

The American Dream of homeownership is indelibly entwined with our shameful history of racial discrimination. That's particularly true in Chicago, which has served as a laboratory for segregation for decades. On stage, we've seen that history come to life in Lorraine Hansberry's "A Raisin in the Sun," inspired in part by her own family's struggle to integrate a white neighborhood on the South Side.

But just as American racism isn't limited to the Southern states, Chicago's racist housing history doesn't end with the South Side. In "A Home on the Lake," now in a world premiere with Piven Theatre in collaboration with Fleetwood-Jourdain Theatre, both of Evanston, we see the not-so-shocking truth that Evanston — liberal reputation notwithstanding — also grew along segregated lines.

Written by Stephen Fedo and Fleetwood-Jourdain artistic director Tim Rhoze (who also directs), the play isn't a docudrama in the style of "The Project(s)" at the late American Theater Company. Instead, Fedo and Rhoze have taken stories from older residents of the city — collected through Dear Evanston, a nonprofit that uses storytelling as a tool for social justice — and crafted a fictional cross-generational portrait of two families enmeshed in racism and real estate issues.

The piece works as a crosscutting diptych between 1920 and the present day. In the former, a black real estate developer in Evanston, Leland (Sean Blake), seeks "silent partner" funding from white businessman Case (Christopher M. Walsh) to build housing for the black workers who are flooding to Evanston as part of the Great Migration.

Two conditions drive their deal. First, the new housing must be situated west of downtown, in what Case calls "a well-confined Negro colony" and what will become the city's Fifth Ward. Second, Case demands that Leland turn over an acre of undeveloped land on the lake — land that Leland and his wife, Isabelle (Nicholia Q. Aguirre), can't get loans from white-owned banks to build on. Case's liberal-leaning wife, Florence (Abigail Boucher), protests in vain — but finds her own way to plant the seeds for justice in the future.

That future also includes a marriage between Cynthia (Aguirre) and Patricia (Boucher), the great-granddaughters of Isabelle and Florence. (The device of having the actors play the descendants, as well as the focus on an iconic house, has echoes of Richard Greenberg's "Three Days of Rain.") Isabelle and Leland's poetic son, Isaac (Jelani Pitcher), becomes a hip-hop artist Adrian in the present, and Case and Florence's college-bound daughter, Elizabeth (Rachel Shapiro) turns into Kathleen — a young woman not sure she wants to follow the academic road.

Meantime, Walsh doubles up as Todd, a representative of Northwestern with designs on the house that Case and Florence built on the lakefront land once owned by Leland and Isabelle, and Blake plays Derek, a Realtor involved in a backroom deal with Todd.

When it delves into the emotional resonances of what "home" means for these characters, it soars. Aguirre is especially strong as a woman who knows land isn't just about the dirt under your feet — it's about the blood of ancestors that went into acquiring it, and the dreams it represents. As Derek puts it: "Where's our old money? Hell, where's our new money?"

The show includes enough local references — from shoutouts to Hecky's Barbecue to Chicago-based artist Kerry James Marshall — to keep it feeling rooted and specific. And though some of the generational mirroring feels self-conscious, "A Home on the Lake" ends up as a warm, lived-in portrait of what it means to commit to family and community without losing one's dreams.

IN PERFORMANCE '33 to Nothing' ★★

After its success plateaus, a rock band hits the skids

By Chris Jones

MICHAEL BROSILOW PHOTO

Grant James Varjas' "33 to Nothing" is set, in real time, at that most depressing of moments for any ensemble of artists: When some in their number finally have had enough.

Varjas' play with music, currently running in Old Town at A Red Orchid Theatre after a premiere in New York, focuses on rock musicians, all members of a band that has enjoyed enough success to book gigs all over the place and not feel like a group of hobbyists, but not enough success that it can sustain these genuinely talented artists into what already has been a greatly delayed adulthood. So there's that. And also the truth that these guys are beginning to implode.

Lead singer, Gray (Aaron Holland), writes a lot of songs about ex-boyfriend and fellow bandmate, Bri (Steve Haggard), which is getting to be a drag for everyone. Alex (Annie Prichard) and Tyler (Amanda Raquel Martinez) want to start a family together, and that leaves Barry (Jeff Kurysz), who seems in danger of having no one for whom to keep a beat.

The Red Orchid production, directed by Tyrone Phillips, makes a number of bold casting choices involving race and gender — all of which are valid and interesting, and all of which would be helped by some additional changes to the script, if only so these diverse choices are better empowered and actualized within the existing characterizations. Interestingly, the ensemble comes off a bit too youthful and enthusiastic for its own good. Phillips' cast reveals the personality conflicts, but not so much the wariness of any grind, and the sheer ennui that often comes from too much time spent around the same darn creative collaborators and the same darn neuroses.

The other problem with the Chicago staging is the rehearsal setting does not mean that theatricality has to be put aside. We're in the same light cue for pretty much the entire show, which gives you a sense of unglamorous grind, for sure, but at the expense of amplified artistic interest. This isn't an easy piece to pull off: the show requires everyone to be over each other, but still sufficiently enamored of the artistic life, and of each other, that the loss they are facing feels real. The production has strengths, including Holland's vocals and a cast of very capable actors and musicians, but somehow the band practice, the reality-style rubric of the show, drowns out too much of the pain in the room.

East's bold four-no-trump bid, showing both minors, was probably unwise at this vulnerability. The defense could have beaten five clubs three tricks, a costly price. The perfect defense that would have achieved that result was not likely and East-West probably would have escaped for down one. This despite catching a reasonable hand from partner with a good fit for each of his suits. North wasn't certain that five clubs was going down and he reasoned that five spades shouldn't be too expensive. It wasn't expensive at all when South found a way to make it!

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
3♠	Pass	4♠	4NT
Pass	5♣	5♠	Pass
Pass	Dbl	All pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♥ South won the opening heart lead with dummy's king and led a diamond to his ace. He crossed back to dummy with the ace of spades, drawing trumps, and ruffed a diamond. Dummy was re-entered with the ace of hearts and the last diamond was ruffed by declarer. South exited with a club to dummy's 10, losing to East's king. East was able to cash the ace of clubs, but then was forced to yield a ruff-sluff and declarer's heart loser disappeared. Well done!

East was known in the club as a man who would get the needle out on certain occasions. This was one of those occasions. "Nice double," said East. "It's a pity you couldn't find the club lead to defeat it."

TUESDAY, APRIL 24 | NORMAL HIGH: 63° | NORMAL LOW: 42° | RECORD HIGH: 87° (1990) | RECORD LOW: 29° (2014)

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
63	38

■ Not as mild. Weather system to the SE brings mostly cloudy skies.

■ Low pressure over the Ohio valley keeps high/midlevel clouds over the area, though peeks of filtered sun appear at times.

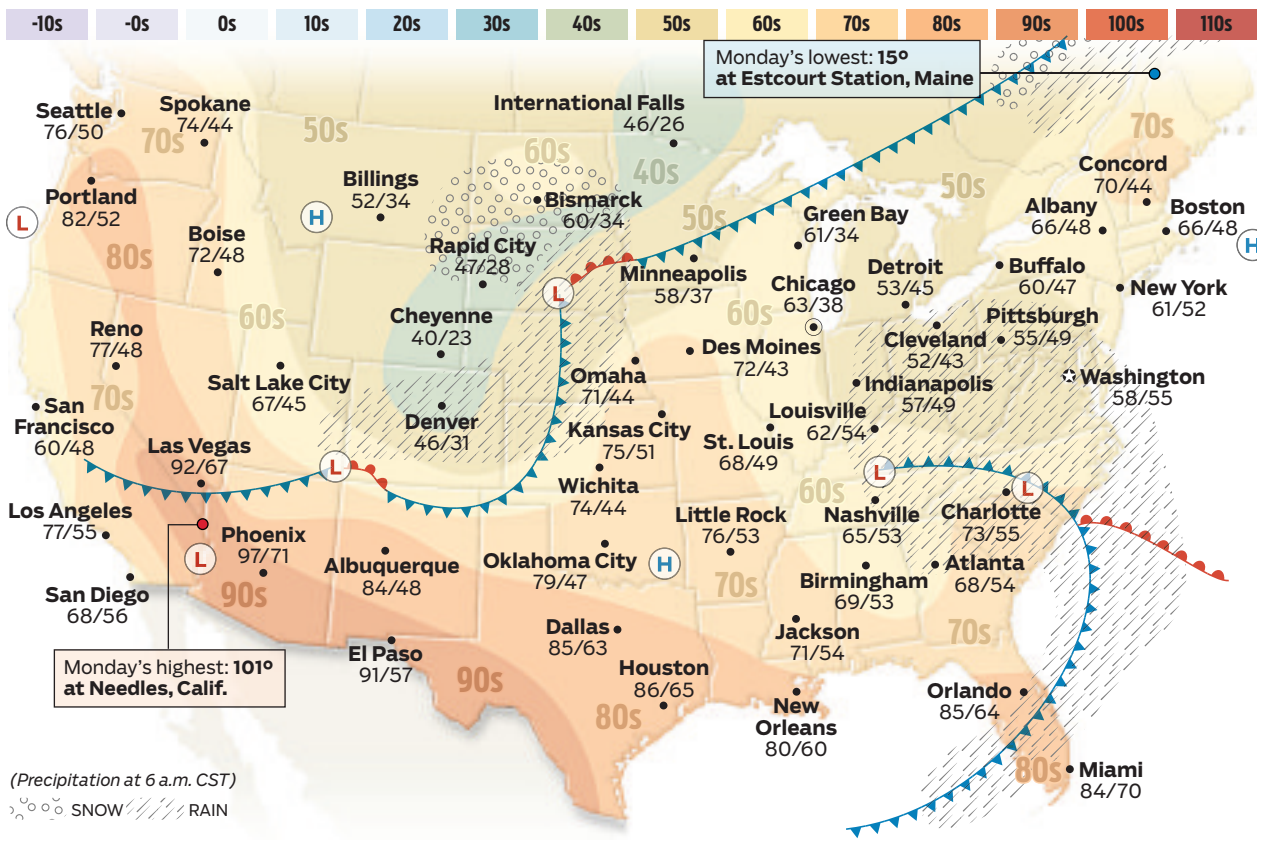
■ Most rain stays well S-E of the area, but a few sprinkles are possible, mainly NW Indiana.

■ High temps range from near 50 lakeside to low and mid 60s inland.

■ Clouds thin overnight, but turning colder. NE winds persist.

NATIONAL FORECAST



Despite a persistent east-to-northeast wind flow, Monday's temperatures reached well into the 60s. Some locations along and west of the Fox River brushed the 70-degree mark.

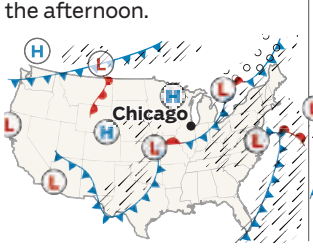
This week's warmup will be interrupted by two influxes of polar air. These episodes will be brief and limited, dropping afternoon readings back to the 50-degree range Wednesday and Friday.

Resurging warm air is forecast to reach the metro area over the upcoming weekend with a return of 60-degree weather. High pressure will shift east of the region by Sunday, allowing a sustained south-westerly air flow to lock in. June-level warmth over the Plains is expected to sweep across the Midwest and Great Lakes as April draws to a close. High temperatures Monday are forecast to reach 80 degrees.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25

HIGH	LOW
52	35

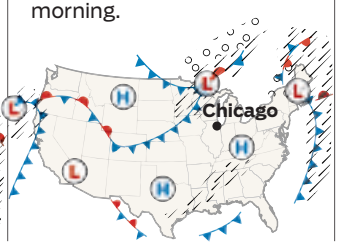
Sunny but chilly. Temps take a downturn on brisk NE winds of 15-25 mph. Highs reach the mid 40s along the lakefront, mid 50s far W-S suburbs. Winds diminish in the afternoon.



THURSDAY, APRIL 26

HIGH	LOW
63	40

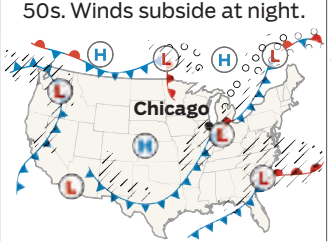
Sunny skies and SW winds help temps return to the 60s. Clouds increase in the afternoon, leading to a period of overnight showers. Turning windy, colder by morning.



FRIDAY, APRIL 27

HIGH	LOW
57	38

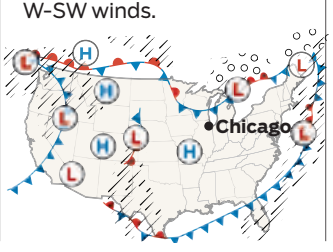
Any lingering showers exit the area early, then clearing. Brisk NW winds sweep colder air across the region. Temps slowly clime to late-day highs in the upper 50s. Winds subside at night.



SATURDAY, APRIL 28

HIGH	LOW
65	43

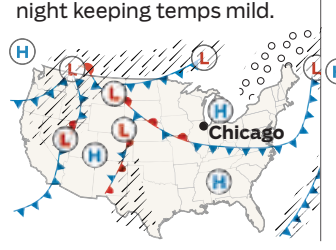
A mix of sun and midlevel clouds signal the start of a warming trend. Temps peak in the mid 60s across most of the area while high pressure provides light W-SW winds.



SUNDAY, APRIL 29

HIGH	LOW
72	51

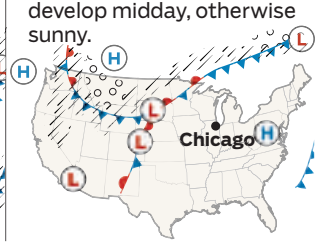
Sunny skies and increasing S-SW winds bring bud-bursting warmth to the region. Afternoon temps peak in the low and mid 70s. S winds remain elevated at night keeping temps mild.



MONDAY, APRIL 30

HIGH	LOW
80	54

Partly cloudy, breezy and warm. SW winds 20-25 mph bring our highest temps since early October. Readings reach 80 most areas. Scattered clouds develop midday, otherwise sunny.



ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

The Cubs had five games canceled from May 6-11, 1960, at Wrigley Field. How much rain fell in Chicago during that time?

— Mike Hanson

Dear Mike,

The Cubs actually were plagued by six consecutive rainouts in May 1960 due to the double whammy of rain and cold. A heavy downpour washed out the May 6 game, and even though the rain was light and intermittent, the next five games were not played due to sporadic rain, very chilly temperatures and gusty winds. From May 6-8, temperatures at Wrigley Field hovered near 40 degrees with chills in the 20s and 30s. Total rainfall for the period totaled only 0.59 inches. After the sixth rainout, Cubs manager Lou Boudreau commented that "our pitchers were so rested now, I'm afraid they'll start to rust." In August 1903, the Phillies lost nine straight games to the weather.
