Massive CPD gang database inaccurate, unfair, critics say

Racial bias, lack of transparency, recourse among issues cited

By Annie Sweeney
Chicago Tribune

It has grown steadily over many decades with little public attention. Through countless arrests and street stops, Chicago police officers have compiled a database of street gang members that now totals a staggering 128,000 names — and that doesn't even include juveniles.

But now critics in Chicago are joining a nationwide chorus questioning the value and fairness of these massive lists of gang members, saying they are often inaccurate, outdated and racially skewed.

Advocates complain there's no way to know if you are in the database or how to get off the list, yet your alleged gang membership is shared with other law enforcement agencies and can hurt you if you pick up a charge — with potentially heftier bail amounts or sentences.

The overuse of the often inaccurate label by police as well as news organizations over the years has served only to stigmatize those caught up in Chicago's violence, critics contend.

The database is increasingly drawing the attention of law enforcement and lawmakers after community groups and advocates raised concerns.

Chicago Inspector General Joseph Ferguson has held three public hearings in the past month, the most recent Thursday night, as part of an audit his office is conducting into how Chicago police gather the data on gang members.

In addition, the state Senate Public Health Committee heard

Pilsen, Little Village still await trail

Land acquisition and EPA cleanup delay conversion of old rails

Getting Around

Rails-to-trails projects are like children — they can take a long time to mature.

This has been the case with the El Paseo project, a proposed street-level, multipurpose path about 4 miles long that would connect the Pilsen and Little Village neighborhoods on the South Side.

The El Paseo could eventually be a South Side version of The 606, the highly popular 2.7-mile elevated park and trail system that opened in 2015, connecting the North and Northwest Side neighborhoods of Wicker Park, Bucktown, Humboldt Park and Logan Square.

The idea of building a path along unused BNSF Railway tracks in the Pilsen and Little Village areas has been discussed for at least a dozen years. Two years ago, Mayor Rahm Emanuel and other city officials announced the project at a news conference, saying that part of the bike and pedestrian trail could be ready to use as early as summer of 2016.

But the process is taking longer, which the city might have expected from The 606 project, which took decades from conception to completion. The city is still working with BNSF Railway to acquire the property, either through donation or sale, and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has needed time to clean up the land in what had been a heavily industrial area, officials said.

No 'starry' eyes set on N. Korea, U.S. insists

Bolton says Kim will be pushed on his pledges

WASHINGTON — Top aides to President Donald Trump signaled skepticism Sunday about North Korea's reported pledge to give up its nuclear weapons in exchange for conditions including an American promise not to attack it militarily.

But as preparations moved ahead for a face-to-face encounter between Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, the officials insisted that Trump's unconventional diplomacy had already yielded greater achievements than his predecessors could claim in reining in the North's nuclear and ballistics program.

Trump's national security adviser, John Bolton, said Kim's seemingly conciliatory rhetoric was not being accepted at face value and indicated that no easing of sanctions against North Korea would take place until North Korea committed to full denuclearization.

T-Mobile, Sprint reach $26.5B deal to hook up

By Stan Choe and Tali Arbel

NEW YORK — T-Mobile and Sprint reached a $26.5 billion merger agreement Sunday that would reduce the U.S. wireless industry to three major players — that is, if the Trump administration's antitrust regulators let the deal go through.

The nation's third- and fourth-largest wireless companies have been considering a combination for years, one that would bulk them up to a similar size as industry giants Verizon and AT&T.

But a 2014 attempt fell apart amid resistance from the Obama administration.

The combined company, to be called T-Mobile, would have about 127 million customers. Consumers worry a less crowded telecom field could result in higher prices, while unions are concerned about potential job losses.

In a conference call with Wall Street analysts, Sprint CEO Marcelo Claure acknowledged that getting regulatory approval is "the elephant in the room," and Phylicia Rashad played lawyer Clair Huxtable and Bill Cosby was Dr. Heathcliff Huxtable on "The Cosby Show" (1984-92).

African-Americans bid an unfond farewell to Cosby

Dahleen Glanton

Years before we knew about Bill Cosby's criminal activities, his verbal attacks on black people led many of us to distance ourselves.

The problem with Cliff Huxtable is that he wasn't real.

African-Americans wanted him to be. In fact, we needed him to be.

Cliff represented the men we knew — our husbands, our fathers, our brothers, ourselves. We had been around smart, loving, self-confident black men all our lives, and Cliff introduced them to the rest of the world.

But he was merely a figment of Bill Cosby's imagination, a character the actor created to keep us entertained. Our mistake was in trying to make Cliff and Cosby one and the same.

Cosby, it turns out, was a flawed man. Too flawed for most of us to accept.

After he was convicted Thursday of drugging and molesting a woman in his Pennsylvania home 14 years ago, prosecutor Kevin Steele suggested that Cosby had fooled the public for years, hiding behind the central character in "The Cosby Show," the TV program that aired from 1984 to 1992.

"Now, we really know today who was really behind that act, who the real Bill Cosby was," Steele said following the trial.

But some of us already knew.

Years before Cosby was convicted of three counts of felony aggravated indecent assault, many African-Americans had come to realize he was a fraud. We knew nothing of his criminal activities, but his constant vicious verbal attacks on black people had forced us to distance ourselves.

So when the guilty verdict was announced, African-Americans were not enraged. We had insisted on a fair trial where justice could run its course, but we harbored no pity for Cosby. The emotional ties were severed a long time ago.

There was truth in some of what Cosby preached. African-Americans indeed had not lived up to our end of the deal signed with the blood of civil rights martyrs. At times, we have turned our backs on our neighborhoods, given up on our public schools and walked away from our children.

But it wasn't just poor African-Americans who were responsible for every problem facing urban neighborhoods, as Cosby had claimed. America as a whole shares the blame.

Plenty of white people loved Cosby's message.

"We cannot blame white people," the actor said in a controversial speech to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in 2004. "White people don't live over there."

With those words, "America's dad" absolved whites of any responsibility for the poverty and disinvestment that helped turn once-thriving African-American communities into ghettos.

And he didn't stop there.

"Fifty percent dropout rate, I'm telling you, and people in jail, and women having children by five, six different men. Under what excuse?" he said. "And as soon as you have it, you forget to parent. Grandmother, mother and great-grandmother in the same room, raising children, and the child knows nothing about love or respect of any one of the three of them. All this child knows is 'Gimme, gimme, gimme.' "

Cosby, it seemed, had begun to believe his own fiction.

In the Huxtable household, problems could be complicated but always easily rectifiable. With a physician husband and a lawyer wife, whose commitment to raising their children paralleled the devotion to their work, life for African-Americans appeared as close to perfect as it could get.

Black and white America loved the message of family togetherness, accountability, high expectations and responsibility. Many whites could easily relate to the Huxtables' upper-middle-class lifestyle, and it was a family many African-Americans aspired to be.

But the reality was then as it remains today. Too many African-Americans live in poverty, have poor access to a good education and are sentenced to neighborhoods where opportunity and promise have been usurped by adversity and despair.

For 30 minutes on Thursday nights, "The Cosby Show" gave us a chance to pretend all was well in America — that African-Americans who did not live like the Huxtables were victims of their own inadequacies.

To Cosby, Cliff and Clair Huxtable were just a charade. His real feelings about the African-American family were hateful.

"Five or six different children — same woman, eight, 10 different husbands or whatever. Pretty soon you're going to have to have DNA cards so you can tell who you're making love to," he said at that NAACP event.

"You don't know who this is. It might be your grandmother. I'm telling you, they're young enough. Hey, you have a baby when you're 12. Your baby turns 13 and has a baby, how old are you? Huh? Grandmother.

"By the time you're 12, you could have sex with your grandmother, you keep those numbers coming. I'm just predicting."

Now we say so long to Bill Cosby and his alter ego, Cliff Huxtable. And from African-American families, good riddance.

60 years later, amends for bullying

Sisters who were shunned at school receive apology from ex-classmate

By Donna Vickroy

Adams, staff supervisor at Panera in Tinley Park, gives a hug to O'Kelly.

On a Wednesday afternoon this month, some 60 years after they graduated from grammar school, the Rys sisters sat down and had a meal with a classmate for the first time.

Over soup and coffee at a Tinley Park Panera, Kathleen Rys, 72, and her sister Lorraine O'Kelly, 70, made amends with one of their childhood tormentors, Bruce Smit, 71.

The event, which involved flowers, hugs and a tearful apology, came more than half a century after the hurt began.

Lorraine and Kathleen Rys were in third and fourth grade, respectively, when their family moved from Chicago to Monee in the 1950s. As new kids at Monee Elementary School, they soon found themselves on the outs.

"I don't know how it all started, but by the time I was in sixth or seventh grade, everyone was avoiding the Rys sisters," said Smit, a Frankfort podiatrist whose wife, Tammy, organized the breakfast forgiveness meeting.

As the group openly discussed the memories, wounds and scars that bullying can have on both victim and perpetrator, they pondered the reasons it happened at all.

Was it was because the sisters were shy?

Was it because some kids thought they were of Native American descent? (They're Bohemian.)

Was it because they didn't fight back?

It remains a mystery, Kathleen said, but what is clear is that however petty or fleeting the excuse, the pain of being shunned by an entire student body goes deep and stays there "forever."

"It was terrible, just terrible," said Lorraine, through tears. "Somehow the whole entire school got against us. Not just one, not just two. The whole entire school. Not one person talked to us. Not one person wanted to get near us. It was like we had the plague or something."

No one ate lunch with them, made plans with them or sat next to them on the bus.

They didn't go to dances or join clubs or participate in sports.

"We couldn't," Lorraine said. "Nobody wanted us. If we walked down the hall, all the kids would huddle on the other side and let us walk by ourselves."

"They called us Risk instead of Rys," Kathleen said. "We were the untouchables."

The beat down continued as the students moved onto Crete-Monee High School.

"When we climbed the stairs to go to our other classes, if someone bumped into us, they'd run to the washroom to wash their hands," Lorraine recalled.

Kathleen still has her yearbook that doesn't contain a single signature.

"We only had each other," Kathleen said.

And after Kathleen graduated, Lorraine only had God.

The women say none of the faculty or staff ever intervened on their behalf and that they didn't share their plight with their mother or father because "we weren't close with our parents.

"We just kept it to ourselves," Lorraine said.

But they did pray, even though the shunning carried over into church and religious education classes. "We prayed to God because we knew at least he loved us," Lorraine said.

Plagued by guilt

After he didn't make the basketball team in high school, Bruce Smit joined the band and found a new group of friends. The Rys sisters fell off his radar.

It wasn't until he was in medical school some years later that vivid memories of his own cruelty in junior high began to haunt him, he said.

"We were cruel. And for apparently no reason other than following the crowd."

— Bruce Smit, 71, recalling how he and his school classmates bullied sisters Lorraine and Kathleen Rys

"My earliest recollection was in sixth grade, when you start changing classrooms. Everybody's in the hallways and I would be with the other guys and see Kathleen walking down the hallway, her head down, holding her books, walking slowly. And all of us guys would be flat against the wall until she passed. Then we'd giggle and walk away. Now how rude is that? It's just crazy. But that's the kind of memory that I have," he said, wiping at tears.

With his chosen profession one of healing, Smit said for decades he was plagued by the image of himself inflicting pain.

"We were cruel," he said. "And for apparently no reason other than following the crowd."

Over the years, Tammy Smit said, "Bruce would just start to cry at times. He'd wonder what happened to the sisters, if they landed OK."

One day a few weeks ago, after her husband again bemoaned the past, Tammy took to the internet and within a few hours found an address for Kathleen in Oak Forest. Then she went on Facebook and found Mary O'Kelly, Lorraine's daughter, and offered to set up a meeting.

Lasting effects

The notion of revisiting the pain was not well-received by Kathleen, who had never married, let alone gone on a date.

"I have very few friends today," she said. "It's been hard for me to make friends. I'm not very sociable, and I think that's because of everything that happened. I just stay to myself."

After high school, Kathleen landed a job with the Illinois Central Railroad.

Things went well for a few years, until the company hired one of her former classmates, who picked up where she and the others had left off and began turning the other staffers against her.

"I thought, 'Not again. Even here, at work?' " Kathleen recalled.

Lorraine fared better, landing a job with the Federal Reserve Bank, where she met her husband, and later working at Oak Forest Hospital.

She made friends at work whom she continues to see today.

"They are beautiful friends, but I never told them about any of this," Lorraine said.

She also went on to have three children. Her daughter Mary, however, said there were repercussions there too.

"She is the sweetest person, and to hear that your mom was bullied hurts," said Mary, now a mother of two boys. "I can definitely tell it affected my aunt, who is really shy.

"But it also affected my mom and how she raised us. She was forced to be a mouse (as a child) and she wasn't very strong in the discipline area. I kind of took advantage of that," Mary said. "I was basically a bully to her."

Yet, she said, her mother stood by her as she went through her own struggles. "She is a good person," Mary said.

It took some convincing, but Lorraine finally got Kathleen to agree to meet with Bruce.

"I told her if someone wants to apologize, you have to accept it," Lorraine said.

A fraught reunion

When they gathered at the Panera in the Brookside Marketplace, Bruce and Tammy hovered in a corner while Bruce gathered his thoughts and composure.

A few tables over, the sisters sat watching. Finally, seeing how stressed Bruce appeared to be, Lorraine yelled out, "I forgive you." Then Kathleen echoed the sentiment.

Bruce broke into tears. "I'm so ashamed, so embarrassed," he said. "But I'm so happy they're still here and that I can finally apologize. It's cathartic."

Even though he admits children don't understand the potentially lifelong consequences of their behavior, he said he hopes his apology will prompt others to seek forgiveness for the pain they inflict on others.

"Stop and think about what you're doing," he said. "Think about the lifelong scarring. I really feel lousy about what we did.

"I don't know if any of the other (Monee Elementary School bullies) will ever come forward or not. But I feel better that I did," he said.

"I was an adult before it rang a heavy bell in my heart, but it shows it's never too late to seek forgiveness," he said. "I am grateful to Tammy for making this happen."

Lorraine said, "This is a beautiful thing. It's like a beautiful grace. It's just wonderful that a person from 60 years ago can ask for forgiveness. It's like a miracle to us. It's a healing to us."

The Smits are members of Revolution Church in Manhattan. They relayed their story to youth pastor Julian Sandoval, who shared it in a recent sermon.

"I think it's an incredible story of faith in action," Sandoval said. "I used it as an example of the power of forgiveness. It's never too late to say 'I'm sorry.' Even when there has been such an incredible amount of hurt, forgiveness can be a way to restore, in this case, dignity," he said.

"A lot of people talk about forgiving or about asking for forgiveness," he said. "But to realize you injured somebody years ago and that you still want to make amends is really phenomenal."

'Something magical'

From her vantage point behind the counter at Panera that afternoon, Jacquita Adams quickly realized "something magical" was taking place.

When she realized it was redemption, she told the crowd she was picking up the check.

"So many people might forget or choose to forget that they hurt someone. There aren't many people who get a chance to heal from that. This is special," said Adams, of Dolton, who is staff supervisor at the cafe.

Then she shared her story with the group. She'd been abused as a child by "someone close," she said. The violation left her a hurt and angry teenager. "I had a lot of hatred in my heart because of it," she said.

"Then one day I realized it had to stop. I found God. That taught me if you forgive, it's not just for the other person, it's for you too," Adams said.

"So I tried it. Once I did that, a big weight was lifted off my shoulders," she said.

Now, Adams said, she gets pleasure from seeing joy in others. Now she spreads light instead of darkness, she said.

"I love to see forgiveness because I would love to get that apology from the person who hurt me," Adams said.

"The weight of carrying something that heavy on your heart is a real burden," she said. An apology and its acceptance, she added, make everyone "free."

Critics assail massive CPD gang database

from advocates and attorneys who are increasing calls to eliminate keeping any kind of database at all.

"We don't know how it operates," Rachel Murphy, staff attorney for the ACLU of Illinois, testified at the hearing. "... We are really concerned about transparency."

For its part, the Chicago Police Department, under fire over the issue since last year, has in recent months begun discussing whether to make some significant changes, including revamping its "strategic subject list," another compilation of mostly gang members that uses a computer algorithm to rank how at risk they are for violence.

As on a number of law enforcement issues, Chicago appears well behind in its reform efforts compared with some other big-city police departments. In Los Angeles, which has gang problems similar to Chicago's, advocates began pushing for reforms to a statewide database in 2012. Today the database has been cut in half, to about 100,000 names for the entire state of California, fewer than Chicago's. An appeals process to remove names from the database has also been established, but community advocates hope for even more reforms.

Experts in Los Angeles cautioned against expanded use of any data-driven policing that is not closely monitored.

"There is a role for law enforcement and for gang suppression, but it should be extremely narrowly targeted, and it should be focused on violence," said Sean Garcia-Leys, a staff attorney at LA-based Urban Peace Institute who has led legal challenges to the database in California.

'Known' gang affiliation

In Chicago, police officers are instructed to document the "known" gang affiliation of anyone they arrest or stop on the street. That designation can be slapped on people for any number of reasons, including distinctive tattoos or other markings, information from informants or an admission by those arrested or stopped, according to departmental general orders.

But critics argue that those criteria are too broad. The tag shouldn't be given except to those who commit a gang-related crime — or it is not a worthwhile intelligence tool, they said.

According to records released to the Tribune through a Freedom of Information Act request, Chicago police records show 128,000 people listed as gang members. But even that massive number is likely far off the mark because the Police Department, citing privacy law, declined to release information on juveniles — a key component of gangs.

The department declined to give the total number of juveniles it considers to be gang members.

The designations go back decades in some cases, raising questions about their accuracy. Two gang members were said to be 132 years old, apparent typos, while another was listed as 84. In fact, the list includes 12,000 purported gang members now 50 or older — an eye-popping number for what is generally considered a young man's game.

Some critics point to what they say is a racial disparity in the list — African-Americans and Hispanics make up 95 percent of those in the database — and question whether officers are unfairly targeting predominantly minority neighborhoods on the South and West sides with excessive street stops and arrests.

At one of the inspector general hearings, a man told Ferguson that two weeks earlier he had been stopped by police with his "grandbaby" in the car — and the officer, after running his name, asked him if he was still a Black Gangster gang member.

Over the past five years, the number of people entered into the database rose sharply — coinciding with a significant spike in street stops under then-police Superintendent Garry McCarthy's leadership, a decision that drew the American Civil Liberty Union's criticism. In a telephone interview, McCarthy, who is running for Chicago mayor, attributed the increase to both his shifting more officers to beat patrols to increase interaction with the public as well as ordering a gang audit in 2012 to update the department's intelligence on gang affiliations and territories.

With the gang databases under fire, the Police Department is considering a more up-to-date version based on current intelligence, said police spokesman Anthony Guglielmi.

In a statement, the department said it plans to set up "explicit parameters" to decide how to include people in the database. Those newly added would be notified and able to appeal the designation, the department said.

The data won't be directly shared with other law enforcement agencies — though they will continue to have access to Chicago police arrest data through existing national law enforcement data portals.

The department said it will still use the strategic subjects list to identify, track and work with those who they believe are most at risk of violence in Chicago. But a person's police-documented gang affiliation will no longer be a factor in determining his or her score, Guglielmi said.

Critics worry that keeping any such lists, though, will do more harm than good if not monitored closely enough.

"It's the next evolutionary stage of the same problem," said Garcia-Leys of the Urban Peace Institute. "At first it was index cards, then it was mainframe computers and then it was a web-based network. And now we are looking at big data analytics. ... It appears to be super scientific, but I don't think it's accurate."

A potentially dangerous tool

Attorneys and advocates welcomed the department's new efforts to improve its gang database policies but also said decades of misuse of the investigatory tool have already taken a toll.

Some of the most vocal criticism has come from the immigration rights community after two Chicago men were detained by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents after they were labeled gang members by Chicago police. A 32-year-old man agreed to drop his lawsuit against the federal agency in exchange for his release from custody. A separate lawsuit he filed was settled after Chicago police issued a certified letter saying he was erroneously listed as a gang member in Chicago.

The second case is pending in Chicago's federal court.

A Southwest Side mother, Carolina Gaete, is fighting to find out how she says her son was falsely labeled a gang member. Gaete, who attended the recent state Senate hearing, found out about his designation after he was charged in 2016 with aggravated battery following a shooting. The charges, however, were later dropped, records show.

In the officer's arrest report, Tomas Gaete was described as "a self-admitted Two-Six gang member."

Gaete, who describes herself as an overprotective mother, said her son, now 19, not only hadn't belonged to a gang but also hadn't been stopped by police, let alone arrested before he was charged in the shooting.

Now she has suspicions about why he was labeled a gang member.

"Young men of color are being targeted because we live in the 'hood," Gaete told lawmakers at the hearing.

Attorney Stephen Berrios, who represented the younger Gaete, said he is not certain why the charges against his client were dropped, but he noted that the victim's identification didn't come until months after the shooting. At a hearing to seek a reduced bond, Berrios submitted several letters from Gaete's school in which teachers described him as a quiet, artistic teen who wrote poetry.

"Young men of color are being targeted because we live in the 'hood."

— Carolina Gaete, who says her son was falsely labeled a gang member

As for being a "self-admitted gang member" in the police report?

"I just rolled my eyes," Berrios said.

Berrios said he has seen the designation countless times in police reports and often doubts its veracity. But the label can have serious consequences for his clients, he said.

"It's going to be difficult to get a favorable" plea deal from prosecutors, Berrios said.

Researchers at the University of Illinois at Chicago tested out the impact of the label in a study last year of 65,000 alleged gang members who had been arrested in Chicago. They found troubling results, including that African-Americans and Hispanics made up 96 percent of the group, said Andy Clarno, a UIC associate professor who co-authored the study on gang databases.

About two-thirds had not been arrested for unlawful use of a weapon or a crime of violence since 2006, he found.

"This raises real questions about how and why are people ending up" labeled as gang members, Clarno said. " ... It becomes a mathematical justification for continuing to target the same neighborhoods and populations and patrol (them)."

Advocates and attorneys have called for a raft of reforms and point to Portland, Ore., where police announced plans to scrap their database altogether. They say they will continue to pressure the department for change, even as Chicago officials have pledged to fix the problem themselves.

Ferguson, who continues to hold public hearings on the issue, said at a recent meeting that he found the gang database a mysterious, confusing and potentially dangerous tool.

"We don't know what the department has," Ferguson told the audience. "But we do know it has adverse consequences. ... What we know is it is a very loose system with very little public understanding. And a lot of fear."

Gunfire wounds 5-year-old girl in Albany Park

Family says man fired weapon during argument outside their home, putting bullet in victim's ankle

By Tony Briscoe and Nereida Moreno
Chicago Tribune

On Sunday's mild afternoon, Stephanie Evans had hoped to take her children to a local park, but a burst of gunfire outside her Northwest Side home ruined those plans, leaving her 5-year-old daughter wounded and the family worriedly gathered at a Chicago hospital instead.

Around 1:30 p.m., Evans, 43, her husband and her four children were walking out of their home in the 4600 block of North Monticello Avenue in Albany Park. They had planned to stop at a relative's and head to the park from there.

As the family made their way through a gangway to get to their car parked in the rear of the building, an argument between two men led to one firing at the other. Before Evans' children could make it safely to the car, she noticed 5-year-old Makayla Gant had fallen in the gangway.

Evans' husband rushed to pick Makayla up and carried her to the car.

"By the time we got to the car, she said, 'It's burning ... it's burning,' " Evans recalled. "So, I took her shoe and sock off and there was blood."

Evans tried to reassure her daughter as they sped to the emergency room of Swedish Covenant Hospital nearly 2 miles away. It wasn't until the medical staff took X-rays that they were able to confirm Makayla had suffered a gunshot wound to her ankle, possibly from a bullet that had ricocheted, Evans said.

It was a difficult moment for Evans, who said Makayla was looking forward to graduating from kindergarten and her sixth birthday in June.

"It's a shocking moment, a hurting moment," Evans said. "I didn't know what to think or what to say."

Outside Swedish Covenant's emergency room entrance, relatives discussed the girl's condition. One woman in the group pointed to her ankle and described the girl's wound.

"She took it like a big girl," the family member said.

Relatives emerged from the hospital saying the bullet was still lodged in Makayla's foot, and she was transferred to Lurie Children's Hospital. By Sunday evening, doctors at Lurie performed another round of X-rays to see if the bullet had moved and whether it could be surgically removed, the family said.

Meanwhile, no one had been taken into custody in the shooting, according to police.

At the scene, Monticello was closed between Wilson and Leland avenues as police investigated the shooting. The ground near the shooting scene nearby was littered with rubble and materials from a construction project.

The block where the shooting happened is dominated by three-story apartment buildings with narrow gangways, but there is also a section of single-family homes.

Neighbors watched officers work from their windows and porches.

The shooting was jarring for Evans, who had just moved moved to Albany Park from the city's West Side in August. From the lobby of the hospital, she said she hoped the gunman knew that a day that was intended to be fun has left Makayla and her siblings in shock.

"He should think about the children," Evans said. "They deserve to live."

An agreement struck Friday will keep the 65th and Woodlawn Community Garden open for another year, along with the nearby Kumunda Garden.

Deal struck to reopen Woodlawn gardens

Nonprofit land trust to manage sites that were padlocked by church

By William Lee
Chicago Tribune

Community gardeners in the Woodlawn neighborhood have reached a tentative deal that will reopen two gardens that were locked by leaders of the Presbyterian church that owns the land.

Following weeks of talks, community gardeners reached the agreement Friday afternoon that will keep the 65th and Woodlawn Community Garden and its sister Kumunda Garden open for another year and have them fiscally managed by NeighborSpace, a nonprofit land trust that works to preserve community gardens, according to the Rev. Sue Krummel, the Chicago Presbyterian Church's executive presbyter. Details of the deal were still being finalized, she added.

In a brief statement, a spokeswoman for the community gardeners said the group was planning to formally reopen the gardens as soon as this week.

A fixture on the vacant corner lot since the early 2000s, the 65th and Woodlawn Community Garden, and the Kumunda Garden, a more recent addition near 64th Street and Kimbark Avenue, were abruptly padlocked by the leaders of the First Presbyterian Church of Chicago in March after an apparent rift between the gardeners and the church's new pastor.

Residents said they were caught off guard by the sudden closure and launched a campaign to reopen the gardens with an online petition and appeal for public support. While both gardens had been padlocked, some gardeners said they were forced to sneak into the gardens to maintain the lots for the upcoming growing season.

The gardens provide more than a ton of fresh produce each summer for the church's local food pantry, which serves people from all over the South Side.

Jeffery Phillips, a Woodlawn resident who has been a part of the gardens since their creation, championed the deal, saying it would reinforce the idea that community members rather than elected officials can solve community problems.

Pavilion foes questioning construction permits

By Amy Lavalley
Post-Tribune

Dunes Action and Public Employees for Environmental Responsibility, or PEER, have asked Porter County Prosecutor Brian Gensel to investigate what the two groups believe are unauthorized construction activities at the Indiana Dunes State Park pavilion.

The work in question, according to a release from Dunes Action, a grass-roots group that's fought the sale of alcohol at the pavilion and the construction of an adjacent banquet center along the beach, involves the partial destruction of a plaza west of the pavilion for the construction of a comfort station with showers and bathrooms, as well as the construction of an elevator shaft that protrudes through the pavilion roof.

According to Dunes Action, the work for the comfort station was done without a valid permit, required by state law, and a certificate of approval was required for the demolition of the pavilion interior because state employees did a portion of the work.

"Future work cannot go forward without a permit or a certificate of approval," Jim Sweeney, co-founder of Dunes Action, said in the release. "Both Pavilion Partners and the DNR have an obligation to follow these laws."

Pavilion Partners, led by Valparaiso businessman Chuck Williams, is undertaking the work in a public-private partnership with the Indiana Department of Natural Resources. He did not return a request for comment.

Marty Benson, assistant director of communications for the DNR, referred questions on the matter to the DNR webpage on the project and declined further comment.

In an April 18 letter to Gensel, Sweeney and Paula Dinerstein, an attorney with PEER, ask the prosecutor to enforce provisions of the Indiana Code they said have been violated by the DNR and Pavilion Partners.

The two said in the letter that a public records request to the DNR in the fall for "any records that indicate the DNR gave approval to Pavilion Partners to construct an elevator shaft in the pavilion" generated a response from the DNR that officials there were reportedly unable to find the documents to fulfill the request.

The letter also states that work at the pavilion requires a certificate of approval from the Indiana Historic Preservation Review Board, as well as a public hearing before that body, neither of which have occurred.

Gensel confirmed he has received the letter from Dunes Action and PEER.

"I have received their letter and am reviewing it," Gensel said in a Tuesday email.

Dunes Action and PEER contacted the Indiana attorney general's office about the matterlast month, but that office told the two groups in a recent letter that it is under the purview of the local prosecuting attorney.

Though not opposed to the renovation of the pavilion, Dunes Action has raised concerns about the sale of liquor there and the construction of the adjacent banquet center, as well as about the perceived secrecy that precluded the contract between Pavilion Partners and the DNR, and the manner in which plans for the pavilion are being undertaken.

Demolition of the interior of the pavilion began three years ago, followed by construction of the comfort station.

Williams said earlier this year that he expected a general store and snack bar at the pavilion to be ready by Memorial Day weekend, with work on the banquet center starting in two years.

A restaurant and pub slated for the pavilion's first floor are expected to be complete next year, Williams said then, adding an upscale restaurant on the second floor will come in 2020.

"I wish it would have happened sooner. I can't say I'm surprised," said Antonio Acevedo, 30, a Pilsen resident who is co-director of the El Paseo Community Garden, which uses land along the proposed trail for raised garden beds and other community activities.

Acevedo is a transportation engineer and thought the city's timeline was overly optimistic. "We all assumed it was going to take a while," he said. "It's a massive effort, with cleanup and funding and construction time and planning."

Acevedo said one advantage to the delay has been that it has given the community more time to think about how to develop the space on either side of the trail, perhaps as playground or other community gathering spots.

It also gives residents more time to figure out how to protect against gentrification that could drive out longtime residents. One possible solution could be a property-tax freeze for homeowners along the trail, he said.

"People are thinking, 'Great, it should take longer, we should plan this out and not rush it,' " Acevedo said. The rise of housing prices and rents along the The 606 has been a cause for concern for some residents.

Ald. George Cardenas, 12th, said he and other aldermen in the area have talked about the possibility of limiting housing development around the trail to two- and three-flats, along with other ways to protect longtime residents.

"It's simple to see (the trail) will be great for the community, but it will have an impact on housing and the prices of housing," Cardenas said. "I'm concerned about that. So we've been talking about what that looks like and what kind of zoning restrictions we want to put along the Paseo."

The El Paseo runs from 16th and Sangamon streets roughly southwest to around 32nd Street and Central Park Avenue.

City officials said the space would include a trail, gathering spaces, gardens and public art that celebrates Latino culture.

So far, soil cleanup is complete along Sangamon between 18th and 21st streets, according to a statement from the U.S. EPA. The cleanup was conducted under a consent order between the EPA and BNSF, the EPA said. Trail construction could begin there next year, said Peter Strazzabosco, spokesman for the city's department of planning.

The cleanup of the segment from 16th and 18th streets was just completed in January, but that area will still get clean soil and grass seed in May, the EPA said. BNSF funded the cleanup of the lead-contaminated soil under EPA oversight, the EPA said.

As for the Cermak section, BNSF Railway is still in the process of abandoning and removing the rail line, Strazzabosco said. The Blue Island segment is still in use. In the Little Village section along 26th Street and south, surveys and environmental assessments are still ongoing, he said.

"Environmental remediation is an obstacle to overcome with the Paseo," said Ron Burke, executive director of the Active Transportation Alliance, an advocacy group for pedestrians, bicycling and transit.

The city still needs to acquire each of the segments of the trail, said Strazzabosco. He said the city is also making preliminary determinations about how the trail could navigate some traffic intersections.

BNSF spokesman Andy Williams noted that it was old industrial plants, which included a lead and zinc smelting facility, that had caused the contamination and not the railroad.

ERIN HOOLEY/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2016

The El Paseo trail would use defunct railroad tracks in Pilsen and Little Village.

"We look forward to working with the city to allow them to take that property," Williams said. "Whether it's from donation or sale, I'm not sure right now."

"I've been bugging (the city) on a monthly basis and I hear they're still negotiating," Acevedo said.

Meanwhile, Acevedo said that the El Paseo Community Garden is doing great, and there are plans for expansion. Community members plant on raised beds so no one's vegetables could potentially touch contaminated soil, even though the EPA had cleaned the area, he said.

Another possible trail — the Englewood Line — also has been proposed for the South Side. That trail would be developed on top of an elevated former railroad line that runs parallel to 59th Street through the Englewood and West Englewood communities, to eventually cover about 1.7 miles.

Norfolk Southern expects to complete the transfer of the property to the city in the next few months, said railroad spokeswoman Susan Terpay. The railroad will exchange the unused right of way for some city land to be used for an expansion of the company's 63rd Street intermodal facility, she said. Strazzabosco said survey and title work are expected to be completed this spring.

Relics from St. Pio draw faithful to Gary cathedral

By Carole Carlson
Post-Tribune

The faithful made their way in a slow, somber procession Friday to view relics from fabled priest St. Pio of Pietrelcina.

Also known as Padre Pio, the Italian-born priest gained a following because of his devotion to prayer and alleged mystical abilities that included healings. His body is said to have bore the wounds or stigmata of Jesus Christ's crucifixion.

"The ultimate thing is his loving desire to help God," said Bishop Donald Hying, of the Diocese of Gary. He said millions wrote letters to Pio, seeking relief from illnesses.

Hying presided over a special Mass, prior to the showing of the relics, at the Cathedral of Holy Angels in Gary.

The relics included crusts of Pio's wounds, a lock of hair, a glove, cotton gauze with blood stains and a handkerchief soaked with his sweat hours before his death.

Leandra Grady, of Highland, touches a relic of St. Pio of Pietrelcina at Cathedral of Holy Angels in Gary on Friday. Pope John Paul II canonized Pio in 2002.

John Paul Vershey, 16, of Portage, viewed the relics with his mother, Lynn Vershey, who named her son after Pope John Paul II, who canonized Pio in 2002.

"Padre Pio was always one of her favorites," he said of his mother. "God gave him a good gift."

Joan Sickler, of San Pierre in Starke County, sat in a pew holding a rosary and a St. Pio prayer card. "I was lucky to have a friend who drove here," she said.

Sickler said Pio was also known for an ability to appear in two places at the same time.

Sickler said she recently started praying to Pio for her loved ones.

A woman places a photo of St. Pio of Pietrelcina on one of his relics at Cathedral of Holy Angels in Gary on Friday.

Theresa Palmer, of Fairfax, Va., extended her Northwest Indiana visit so she could see the relics.

"St. Padre Pio is one of the greatest saints of our church," she said. "He was blessed by God to carry the wounds of Jesus Christ."

The relics are being displayed across the country in commemoration of the 50th anniversary of Pio's death at age 81 in 1968. Sponsored by the Saint Pio Foundation, the relics next move east to Manchester, N.H., on Monday. The tour ends Nov. 11.

Born Francesco Forgione in 1887 in Pietrelcina, Italy, to peasant farmers, Pio grew up in a religious family. By the age of 15, he was ready to begin his studies as a Capuchin friar. He adopted the name of "Pio" to honor Pope Pius I.

He became a priest in 1910 but remained at home because of lifelong health struggles.

According to his biography, Pio was listening to confessions in 1916 when he felt pain in his hands and feet as the stigmata, or Christ's wounds, appeared on his hands and feet.

As word of the stigmata spread, people began flocking to his church to view his wounds and seek healing. His biography said the church investigated the wounds, concluding the condition was not faked.

In 1947, a young priest named Karol Wojtyla visited Pio, who told him he would one day hold the highest post in the church. Wojtyla became Pope John Paul II in 1978.

Asylum-seeking caravan meets hurdle

U.S. says it's unable to process migrants from C. America

By Elliot Spagat
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Central Americans who journeyed in a caravan to the U.S. border resolved to turn themselves in and ask for asylum Sunday in a direct challenge to the Trump administration — only to have U.S. immigration officials announce that the San Diego crossing was already at capacity.

Nearly 200 migrants, many traveling with children, had decided to apply for protection at the nation's busiest border crossing after many fled violence in their home countries, organizers said. The caravan received attention after President Donald Trump and members of his Cabinet called it a threat to the United States.

Shortly before the migrants were expected to arrive, U.S. Customs and Border Protection said San Diego's San Ysidro crossing would not be able to handle more asylum seekers. It can hold about 300 people, and officials had been warning that it might fill up.

"At this time, we have reached capacity at the San Ysidro port of entry for CBP officers to be able to bring additional persons traveling without appropriate entry documentation into the port of entry for processing," Commissioner Kevin McAleenan said in a statement. "Those individuals may need to wait in Mexico as CBP officers work to process those already within our facilities."

SANDY HUFFAKER/GETTY-AFP

Migrants protest Sunday as nearly 200 Central Americans sought to apply for asylum at the busiest U.S. border crossing.

He said the crossing could take in additional people as space and resources become available. Despite the news, about 200 migrants still started walking toward the port.

Rodulfo Figueroa, the top Mexican immigration official in Baja California state, told caravan organizers to send in an initial group of 20 migrants to see if U.S. border inspectors would entertain their request for asylum. Figueroa said he didn't know if they would be allowed in and had not received word from U.S. immigration officials.

Nicole Ramos, an attorney working on behalf of caravan members, expressed disbelief that U.S. authorities could not process more asylum seekers until its backlog eases.

"They have been well aware that a caravan is going to arrive at the border," she said at a news conference. "The failure to prepare and failure to get sufficient agents and resources is not the fault of the most vulnerable among us. We can build a base in Iraq in under a week. We can't process 200 refugees. I don't believe it."

The migrants had made their way north by foot, freight train and bus over the past month, many of them saying they feared for their lives in their home countries.

The Trump administration has been tracking the caravan since it started in Mexico on March 25 near the Guatemala border. Attorney General Jeff Sessions has called the caravan "a deliberate attempt to undermine our laws and overwhelm our system."

Administration officials have railed against what they call America's "catch and release" policies that allow people requesting asylum to be released from custody into the U.S. while their claims make their way through the courts, a process that can last a year.

Wendi Yaneri Garcia said she is confident she will be released while her asylum case is pending because she is traveling alone with her 2-year-old son, who has been sick. "All I want is a place where I can work and raise my son," the 36-year-old said.

She said that police in her hometown of Atlantida, Honduras, jailed her for protesting construction of a hydroelectric plant and that she received death threats after being released.

Nefi Hernandez, 24, said a gang in his hometown of San Pedro Sula, Honduras, threatened to kill him and his family if he did not sell drugs. He intended to seek asylum with his wife and baby daughter, who was born on the journey through Mexico.

Jose Cazares, 31, said he faced death threats in the Honduran city of Yoro because a gang member suspected of killing the mother of his children learned one of his sons reported the crime to police.

Earlier Sunday, the migrants boarded five old school buses to attend a rally at a Pacific Ocean beach.

The travelers face an uncertain future if they ask for asylum. U.S. immigration lawyers warned them that they face possible separation from their children and detention for many months.

Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen said asylum claims will be resolved "efficiently and expeditiously." But she warned that any asylum seekers making false claims could be prosecuted, as could anyone who assists the migrants in doing so.

Administration officials and their allies claim that asylum fraud is growing and that many who seek it are coached on how to do so.

Asylum seekers are typically held for up to three days at the border and then turned over to U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement. If they pass an asylum officer's initial screening, they may be detained or released into the U.S. with ankle monitors.

Maria de Los Angeles, 17, said she felt confident after speaking with an attorney that U.S. authorities would release her while her case moves through the courts because she was traveling alone with her 1-year-old son. She hoped to move in with a sister in San Francisco.

911 a different call for blacks, whites

African-Americans hesitant to dial because a bad outcome is possible

By Errin Haines Whack
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Two recent encounters at a Philadelphia Starbucks and a Pennsylvania golf club that led to allegations of racism against black patrons escalated into full-blown confrontations when people decided to call 911 to report incidents that clearly weren't emergencies.

The incidents show how common it has become for people to call 911 these days to settle fairly routine disputes, serving as the catalyst in some cases for racially charged encounters involving African-Americans and minorities.

In Philadelphia, a Starbucks manager punched 911 into her phone to report two black men who were waiting for a real estate meeting, prompting police to show up and arrest them. In York, Pa., white golfers called 911 amid a dispute over slow play by five black women.

Previous non-emergency calls have had lethal consequences for African-Americans.

Tamir Rice, a 12-year-old black boy who was playing with a pellet gun in a Cleveland park, was shot to death in 2014 by a white police officer after a man waiting for a bus called 911 to report a "guy" was pointing a gun. The man also told the dispatcher that the gun might be "fake," but that information was not relayed to the responding officers.

John Crawford III of Ohio was shopping in a Walmart in 2014 when he picked up an air rifle from a Walmart shelf. A man called 911 on him, and Crawford was killed by a police officer.

In all these cases, it was the 911 call that escalated the encounters and led to criticism that Americans have become too quick to call 911 for non-emergencies. They also served as a reminder of how vastly different the decision to call 911 is for black and white Americans.

"Calling the police, for any black person, is fraught," said Georgetown University professor Paul Butler, author of the recent book, "Chokehold: Policing Black Men." "It's always a deliberate decision with a risk of a downside that could be tragic."

The National Emergency Number Association says about 240 million calls are made to 911 in the U.S. each year, mostly from cellphones. The widespread nature of mobile phones has made it much easier for people to dial 911, compared to the past era when they had to be near a landline.

Tyler Wall, a sociology professor at the University of Tennessee at Knoxville and co-author of "The Police: A Field Guide," says the increased reliance on 911 has put police in a difficult situation where they are being used to enforce racial discrimination over vague fears of a threat.

"Police then become the all-go-to resource to handle anything (businesses) don't like," he said. "Police are constantly on speed dial."

For many people, the decision to call the police is often motivated by a feeling of being threatened, Butler explained. But when the actions of a black person are perceived as more criminal, they can be seen as a threat even if their behavior is the same as a white person's. The combination of fear and bias can have dangerous effects for blacks — both as the subject and caller.

Protesters rally outside a Philadelphia Starbucks where two black men were arrested.

When black people consider calling the police, there is the additional consideration of whether calling for help could also bring harm. A study published in the American Sociological Review in 2016 showed that high-profile cases of police violence could lead to black residents being less likely to report crimes.

"They know that the police are going to come in, see a black person and immediately assume the worst," Butler said. "The concern is that these reactions by police officers make black people reluctant to call the police, even in situations where it might be useful for the police to be involved."

Studies have shown that African-Americans are indeed less likely to call police to report a crime than whites. Still, a large majority of white and black Americans who call the police felt officers acted properly and were helpful.

LiRon Anderson-Bell said the golfing incident was a reminder that a simple call to the police is anything but for black people.

"We as a society have started to use the police as a weapon beyond a weapon," said the 48-year-old Philadelphia mother, who is black. "Everybody knows what that means, everybody knows what that can lead to."

Anderson-Bell said she has called the police twice in her life: Once, in her 20s, when she and a roommate believed they overheard a nearby assault on a woman. The second time was two years ago when she thought she saw a group of black teens robbing a white photographer.

"I saw the crime committed, and I hesitated," she said. "I was afraid for what would happen to them. They were teenage boys, they were all black; I was conflicted."

U.K. interior minister quits over growing immigration scandal

By Jill Lawless
Associated Press

LONDON — Britain's interior minister resigned Sunday amid a scandal over authorities' mistreatment of long-term U.K. residents wrongly caught up in a government drive to reduce illegal immigration.

Prime Minister Theresa May's office said late Sunday that May had accepted the resignation of Home Secretary Amber Rudd.

The scandal has dominated headlines in Britain for days and has sparked intense criticism of the Conservative government's tough immigration policies.

Rudd had been due to make a statement to Parliament on Monday over what has become known as the Windrush scandal.

The furor has grown since the Guardian newspaper reported that some people who came to the U.K. from the Caribbean in the decades after World War II had recently been refused medical care in Britain or threatened with deportation because they could not produce paperwork proving their right to reside in the country.

Rudd

Those affected belong to the "Windrush generation," named for the ship Empire Windrush, which in 1948 brought hundreds of Caribbean immigrants to Britain, which was seeking workers to help it rebuild after World War II.

They and subsequent Caribbean migrants came from British colonies or ex-colonies and had an automatic right to settle in the U.K. But some have been ensnared by tough new rules introduced since 2012 that are designed to make Britain a "hostile environment" for illegal immigrants.

Legal migrants have been denied housing, jobs or medical treatment in Britain because of requirements that landlords, employers and doctors check people's immigration status. Others have been told by the government that they are in Britain illegally and must leave.

In recent weeks Rudd and May have apologized to the Windrush generation, saying all pre-1973 Commonwealth immigrants who don't already have British citizenship will get it, and those affected will get compensation.

Rudd's position worsened after she told lawmakers last week that the government did not have targets for deporting people — only for a 2017 memo to emerge that mentioned specific targets for "enforced removals."

Rudd said she didn't see the memo, but The Guardian later published a leaked letter she wrote to the prime minister discussing an aim of increasing removals by 10 percent.

Rudd tweeted Friday that "I will work to ensure that our immigration policy is fair and humane."

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, left, is greeted by Israel's Benjamin Netanyahu before a Sunday news conference. Pompeo had no meetings planned with Palestinian officials.

Pompeo asserts U.S. stands with Israelis, Saudis vs. Iran

By Matthew Lee
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel — Secretary of State Mike Pompeo on Sunday ratcheted up the Trump administration's rhetoric against Iran and gave warm boosts of support to Israel and Saudi Arabia in their standoffs with Tehran.

Pompeo's comments in Riyadh and then Tel Aviv came as he neared the end of the Middle East leg of his first trip abroad as America's top diplomat. He has called for concerted international action to punish Iran for its missile programs and other actions that he said destabilize the region.

The tough line was welcomed by his hosts, particularly in Israel, which considers Iran its greatest threat and has led calls for the West to revise or reject the 2015 nuclear deal with Iran.

"We remain deeply concerned about Iran's dangerous escalation of threats to Israel and the region and Iran's ambition to dominate the Middle East remains," Pompeo said after a nearly two-hour meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. "The United States is with Israel in this fight."

Israel has cited Iran's rhetoric, support for anti-Israel militant groups and development of long-range missiles.

It also has complained the nuclear deal does not do enough to prevent Iran from developing a nuclear-weapons capability, and expressed concerns about Iran's involvement in the civil war in neighboring Syria. Israel says it will not allow Iran to establish a permanent military presence in Syria, fearing the Iranians use it to launch attacks.

"Iran must be stopped, its quest for a nuclear bomb must be stopped, its aggression must be stopped and we're committed to stopping it together," Netanyahu said.

President Donald Trump is to decide by May 12 whether to keep the U.S. in the nuclear deal. Pompeo repeated the Trump position that "if we can't fix it, he is going to withdraw."

Saudi Foreign Minister Adel al-Jubeir said the kingdom "supports the policy of the Trump administration against Iran and to improve the terms of the nuclear agreement with Iran."

Netanyahu also welcomed the U.S. recognition of Jerusalem as Israel's capital and the scheduled move of its embassy from Tel Aviv. Pompeo said the U.S. is "incredibly proud" of that coming move.

The Palestinians claim Israeli-annexed east Jerusalem as their capital. They have criticized the U.S. move and all but cut off ties with the White House.

Pompeo had no meetings planned with any Palestinian official, and it was not immediately clear whether there had been any outreach to the Palestinians about his trip, which was to end in Jordan on Monday.

In Riyadh, Pompeo said Iran "destabilizes this entire region," and he also urged the Saudis and their neighbors to resolve a festering dispute with Qatar. U.S. officials say Iran is exploiting it to boost its influence in the region, including in Yemen and Syria.

Pompeo met with Saudi King Salman, whose country, along with Bahrain, Egypt and the United Arab Emirates, is embroiled in a row with Qatar that had undermined Gulf Arab unity and frustrated the U.S. as it seeks to blunt growing Iranian assertiveness.

The ex-CIA chief had arrived in the kingdom a day earlier, shortly after Iranian-backed Houthi rebels in Yemen fired missiles at Saudi Arabia's city of Jizan, killing one person and underscoring what U.S. officials said is a growing threat emanating from Iran.

Trump is facing heavy pressure from European and other parties to stick to the Iran nuclear deal.

Trump's new national security adviser, John Bolton, suggested Trump was unlikely to stay in.

"He certainly said very negative things about the deal, which implied that these other steps wouldn't really address that concern, but, look, it's possible in the discussions with our European allies that we'll be able to see some possibility there," Bolton told "Fox News Sunday."

For ex-detainee, suffering goes on

Moroccan says he has flashbacks of 14 years of torture

By Sudarsan Raghavan
The Washington Post

SUDARSAN RAGHAVAN/WASHINGTON POST

Younous Chekkouri, a former Guantanamo Bay detainee, says he was regularly tortured during his 14 years in captivity and suffers from nightmares and flashbacks about the experience. He currently receives treatment and anxiety medication.

SAFI, Morocco — His days in captivity inside the U.S. naval base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, where he said he endured different forms of torture, are long over. If only the memories were, too.

Three years after his release, Younous Chekkouri says he remains shackled by constant nightmares, flashbacks and insomnia. He takes pills for anxiety, and he has yet to find a job. His future remains so uncertain, his past grips him so tightly, that he often feels as if he hasn't left the prison. He was held for 14 years.

"I am still in Gitmo," said Chekkouri on a recent day in this picturesque port city.

Chekkouri, and other former Guantanamo detainees, represent the legacy of the United States' use of torture as a tool of counterterrorism after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. Thousands suspected of being al-Qaida fighters and other militants were held in prisons, detention centers and other "black sites" around the world, where, human rights groups say, many were tortured or mistreated in other ways.

Years after their abuse, victims remain tormented by their experience at the hands of their American interrogators, jailers and guards, according to activists and psychologists working with former Guantanamo detainees. In addition, many carry the stigma associated with being incarcerated as alleged terrorists and have difficulty reintegrating into society.

"It's well documented that the U.S. was really focused on psychological elements of torture," said Katie Taylor, a deputy director of Reprieve, an activist group based in Britain that helps resettle ex-Guantanamo prisoners. "Because it was so systemized, it has had a long-term impact on many of the men who underwent it."

U.S. officials accused Chekkouri of being a senior al-Qaida member and cofounder of a Moroccan Islamist militant group. But he was never formally charged with a crime or faced trial. Six U.S. security agencies, including the CIA, FBI and Department of Homeland Security, eventually found no evidence to keep him in detention.

When he arrived in Morocco on a U.S. military plane in 2015, the authorities jailed him, again for allegedly forming an extremist militant group. He was sentenced to five years in prison. But after five months, he was released on bail.

In February, he was acquitted of all charges by a Moroccan appeals court.

Today, Chekkouri is struggling to rebuild his life.

"Sometimes, when someone feels he's incapable," Chekkouri said in a recent interview, "he feels as though he's nothing."

Chekkouri was with his Algerian wife, Abla, in Afghanistan when two hijacked planes struck the World Trade Center towers in New York.

The couple, who he said had been there looking for work with a foreign aid agency, fled the capital, Kabul, as U.S. forces entered the country to oust the Taliban regime and pursue Osama bin Laden. After the couple crossed into Pakistan, locals captured Chekkouri, taking him for one of the many Arab fighters who had joined al-Qaida. They handed him to U.S. forces, Chekkouri said.

It is impossible to independently verify Chekkouri's account. Reprieve vetted his story and found that "it was very clear he was an economic migrant" in Afghanistan, according to Taylor.

Chekkouri was taken first to a U.S. detention center in the southern city of Kandahar, where he said his American jailers would strip him naked, place a bag over his head and beat him regularly. Some guards, he added, would also tear pages from his Quran.

Five months later, he arrived in Guantanamo.

There, his jailers beat his genitals with their shoes, he recalled. That required him to often ask for new underwear because "there was so much pain I felt in my genitalia." But his interrogators would offer him underwear only in exchange for confessing that he was an al-Qaeda militant.

"That would make me want to kill myself," said Chekkouri, his voice at times dipping so low that it was barely audible.

A Department of Defense spokesman did not respond to a request for comment on Chekkouri's torture allegations.

Abdelkrim el Manouzi, a physician in Casablanca who has treated Chekkouri for his psychological problems, said his claims of torture are "very credible."

"I don't think he will ever forget what happened to him," said Manouzi, the former president of the Medical Association for the Rehabilitation of Victims of Torture, a Moroccan organization where Chekkouri still receives psychiatric treatment.

Slim with brown eyes and a wisp of a beard, Chekkouri, 50, wore a puffy tan and orange jacket and a blue baseball cap that made him look younger. The night before, as usual, had been rough, with him tossing and turning, unable to sleep.

He had awakened to pain and difficulty breathing, as he did most mornings. They are the lingering effects, he said, of beatings and other physical mistreatment, and of being kept in frigid conditions to deprive him of sleep.

He seldom discusses his experience in Guantanamo with family members or neighbors. He fears he won't be able to control his emotions. Whenever he hears about Guantanamo or sees images, he gets flashbacks.

One recurrent image is that of an American woman who called herself Ana. She interrogated him for five years, threatening to have him hanged. "Until now, I still see her in my nightmares," Chekkouri said.

Once a month, he travels for psychiatric treatment in Casablanca, 130 miles north of here. He says that some of his friends also are victims of torture who also receive care at the center. He counts six other Moroccan ex-Guantanamo inmates among them.

When Chekkouri arrived at the center in 2015, he was grappling with severe anxiety, depression and fear of the future, said Manouzi, the doctor. Today, Chekkouri still suffers from insomnia, nightmares and other malaise, but his condition is "no longer as bad as it was."

But overcoming the psychological and physical scars of Guantanamo "can only happen if Younous has the social requirements that will allow him to get back and participate in society," Manouzi said. "He needs to work."

While at Guantanamo, he coped by writing love letters to Abla. In them, Chekkouri recalled, he often discussed an imaginary daughter, hoping this would earn some sympathy from his jailers, who read all his correspondence. He called the girl Fatima Zahra.

Chekkouri remarried a year ago. And a month before his acquittal, his wife gave birth to a daughter.

He named her Fatima Zahra.

Syrian soldiers patrol a neighborhood Sunday after it was recaptured from Islamic State militants. Syrian forces and U.S.-backed Kurdish fighters both have been battling ISIS.

Kurd-led fighters retake area after Syrian troop offensive

By Bassem Mroue
Associated Press

BEIRUT — Syrian government forces on Sunday briefly captured four villages east of the Euphrates River in the eastern province of Deir el-Zour after rare clashes with U.S.-backed Kurdish-led fighters before losing the area in a counteroffensive by the Kurdish-led force.

The area close to the border with Iraq has been the site of recent clashes between the two sides who had been focusing on fighting the Islamic State group. Islamic State, also called ISIS, had declared its caliphate in parts of Syria and Iraq.

Crossings into the east bank of the Euphrates in eastern Syria by government forces have been rare.

State news agency SANA said the villages were held by the U.S.-backed Syrian Democratic Forces, adding that they are close to the provincial capital, also called Deir el-Zour. The SDF said in a statement later that it regained control of the whole area it earlier lost.

Meanwhile, Syrian TV reported early Monday a "new aggression," with missiles targeting military outposts in northern Syria.

The state-run television said missiles targeted military outposts in the Hama and Aleppo countryside. It did not say who fired the missiles or whether there were any casualties or damage.

The news comes less than two weeks after a similar report of airstrikes on government military installations in the central Homs region and the suburbs of Damascus. But the military later said a false alarm had set off air defense systems.

Earlier this month, seven Iranian military personnel were killed in an airstrike on Syria's T4 air base, also in Homs. Syria, Iran and Russia blamed Israel for that attack. Israel did not confirm or deny it.

Much of Deir el-Zour province was held by the Islamic State group but over the past year Syrian government forces captured most areas west of the Euphrates while SDF fighters took areas east of the river.

On Feb. 7, pro-Syrian government fighters attacked SDF positions east of the river and faced a ferocious U.S. counterattack that left dozens, including Russians, dead.

SDF spokesman Kino Gabriel said in a statement earlier Sunday that the Syrian army attack coincided with "our forces' preparations to complete the Island Storm campaign" to liberate the remaining areas east of the river from ISIS.

Gabriel said the Syrian army and pro-government fighters began targeting SDF fighters to impede "the launching of our campaign against terrorism. Our forces are responding in self-defense."

The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said Sunday's offensive left six SDF fighters dead and 22 wounded, adding that there were also casualties on the government side.

Gabriel issued another statement later saying all the area lost earlier was regained by SDF fighters. He said Syrian troops were backed by Russian fighters, adding that after the SDF's counteroffensive, government forces "are now far away."

The Observatory's chief Rami Abdurrahman said SDF fighters took back most of the area, except for one village.

Trump: Comedian who ripped his spokeswoman 'bombed'

By Darlene Superville
Associated Press

TASOS KATOPODIS/GETTY

Comedian Michelle Wolf, center, draws a crowd Saturday night after the White House Correspondents' Dinner.

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump gave a thumbs-down Sunday to the comedian who roasted his chief spokeswoman at the annual White House Correspondents' Association dinner and offended present and past members of Trump's administration, including one who walked out in protest.

The organization's leader said she regretted that Michelle Wolf's routine may end up defining an evening that was designed to rally around journalism.

"Everyone is talking about the fact that the White House Correspondents Dinner was a very big, boring bust ... the so-called comedian really 'bombed,' " Trump tweeted Sunday.

The president, who regularly lobs sharp attacks at the news media, including individual news organizations and reporters, declined to attend the journalism awards dinner for the second consecutive year. He instead held a campaign rally in Michigan.

Wolf is known as a contributor on Comedy Central's "The Daily Show With Trevor Noah."

A series of barbs about White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders, who sat just feet away, seemed to spark the most outrage on Saturday night.

Sean Spicer, who preceded Sanders at the White House lectern, tweeted after dinner that the night "was a disgrace." Others, including Ed Henry, chief national correspondent for Fox News and a former association president, and MSNBC's "Morning Joe" co-host Mika Brzezinski, called on the association to apologize to Sanders. Brzezinski has been the subject of personal attacks by Trump. Henry also called on Wolf to apologize.

Matt Schlapp, chairman of the American Conservative Union, tweeted that he and his wife, Mercedes Schlapp, director of strategic communications at the White House, walked out of the dinner. "Enough of elites mocking all of us," he said.

Margaret Talev, the association's president and Bloomberg News' senior White House correspondent, said she didn't want a dinner celebrating the constitutional right to free speech to be overshadowed by the ensuing uproar over Wolf's jokes.

"My only regret is that to some extent those 15 minutes are now defining four hours of what was a really wonderful unifying night and I don't want the cause of unity to be undercut," Talev said Sunday on CNN's "Reliable Sources."

Talev said she spoke to Sanders after Wolf's routine and "I told her that I knew that this was a big decision whether or not to attend the dinner, whether to sit at the head table and that I really appreciated her being there."

No Trump administration officials attended the dinner last year after Trump decided to skip it. Many were in the audience Saturday night, however, including counselor Kellyanne Conway, herself a target of Wolf, and Commerce Secretary Wilbur Ross. Sanders sat at the head table with association board members.

Talev said that, by tradition, the association does not review the comedian's monologue before it is delivered.

"We don't censor it. We don't even see it," she said.

As he did last year, Trump flew to a Republican-friendly district to rally supporters in an attempt to counter the dinner. He assured the audience in Washington Township, Mich., that he'd rather be there than at "that phony Washington White House Correspondents' Dinner."

Wolf's act, which also included abortion jokes, had some in the audience laughing. Others sat in stony silence.

Among Wolf's less off-color one-liners:

- "Just a reminder to everyone, I'm here to make jokes, I have no agenda, I'm not trying to get anything accomplished, so everyone that's here from Congress you should feel right at home."
- "It is kinda crazy that the Trump campaign was in contact with Russia when the Hillary campaign wasn't even in contact with Michigan."
- "He wants to give teachers guns, and I support that because then they can sell them for things they need like supplies."

KOREA SUMMIT PRESS POOL

North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, left, and South Korea's Moon Jae-in stroll Friday in the border village of Panmunjom.

U.S. insists no 'starry' eyes on N. Korea

istration would demand evidence that Kim's pledges were "real and not just rhetoric."

"We've heard this before," he said on CBS' "Face the Nation," adding that "the North Korean propaganda playbook is an infinitely rich resource." Interviewed separately on "Fox News Sunday," Bolton said "nobody is starry-eyed" about the North following through on promises.

Bolton also said that the release of three Americans detained in North Korea would be a "demonstration of their sincerity" in the run-up to the summit. He said the administration is waiting to see what North Korea decides to do.

Bolton's comments came after South Korean officials were quoted as asserting Sunday that Kim dangled the prospect of giving up his nuclear weapons last week when he met with his South Korean counterpart, Moon Jae-in, in the truce village of Panmunjom.

Kim also offered to allow in experts and journalists from the United States and South Korea to witness the shutdown next month of the North's only known nuclear testing site, according to Yoon Young-chan, a South Korean presidential spokesman, cited by South Korea's Yonhap News Agency.

In his talks with Moon, Kim also sought to dispel the notion that the promise to shut down the nuclear testing site under Mount Mantap was an empty gesture because it had become too unstable to use, anyway, after the North's sixth and most powerful nuclear test to date, in September.

"You will see that we have two more tunnels that are bigger than the existing ones, and that they are in good condition," Yoon quoted Kim as saying, according to The Associated Press.

Earlier this month, North Korea said it had suspended its nuclear tests, along with ballistic-missile tests, and announced plans to shut down the test site. In the meeting with Moon, Kim insisted he did not want to threaten the United States or anyone else, according to the South Korean presidential spokesman.

South Korea's presidential palace said Kim wants a U.S. commitment to bringing a formal end to the Korean War. The 1950-53 conflict ended with an armistice, not a peace treaty.

"If we maintain frequent meetings and build trust with the United States and receive promises for an end to the war and a nonaggression treaty, then why would we need to live in difficulty by keeping our nuclear weapons?" the North Korean leader asked, according to the South Korean account.

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, who was still the CIA director when he met with Kim over Easter weekend, played down concerns that Trump's meeting with Kim, planned to take place in May or June, could be knocked off track if the president follows through on threats to withdraw the United States from the landmark nuclear accord with Iran.

Pompeo said Sunday during his Middle East trip that Kim had "higher priorities" than whether the Trump administration would refuse by a May 12 deadline to waive sanctions against Tehran. European allies who are party to the world powers' accord with Iran, have urged the U.S. administration to adhere to its international commitments or risk being seen as an untrustworthy partner.

Trump has blown hot and cold on Kim, directing both harsh insults and lavish compliments at the North Korean leader.

Even some longtime critics of Trump acknowledged that his zigging and zagging might have led Kim to seek negotiations.

"I think it's more than fair to say that the combination of the president's unpredictability and bellicosity had something to do with the North Koreans deciding to come to the table," Rep. Adam Schiff, D-Calif., said on ABC's "This Week."

But Schiff also suggested it was dangerous to prematurely claim a breakthrough. "Before the president takes too much credit, or hangs out the 'Mission Accomplished' banner, he needs to realize we may go into a confrontational phase," Schiff said. "And he may not want the full blame if things go south."

The Associated Press contributed.

A $26.5B deal to merge

one of the first things the companies did after sending out the deal's news release was to call Ajit Pai, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission.

The companies stressed that they plan to have more employees following the combination, particularly in rural areas, than they do as stand-alone companies now.

They also emphasized that the deal would help accelerate their development of faster 5G wireless networks and ensure that the U.S. doesn't cede leadership on the technology to China.

And they said the combination would allow them to better compete not only with AT&T and Verizon but also with Comcast and others as the wireless, broadband and video industries converge.

"This isn't a case of going from 4 to 3 wireless companies — there are now at least 7 or 8 big competitors in this converging market," T-Mobile CEO John Legere said. He would be the CEO of the combined company.

Yet at least one lawmaker already is expressing concern. Sen. Richard Blumenthal, D-Conn., said the proposed merger "rings alarm bells." Blumenthal said he'd scrutinize the deal to ensure it would benefit consumers and workers, not just shareholders. Wireless consumers have benefited from fierce competition, he said.

The all-stock deal values each share of Sprint at slightly more than 0.10 T-Mobile shares. Deutsche Telekom, T-Mobile's parent, would own about 42 percent of the combined company. Japan's SoftBank, which controls Sprint, would own 27 percent, and the remainder would be held by the public.

The companies said they expect the deal to close by the first half of 2019 and would result in about $6 billion in annual cost savings.

Investors have been anticipating a deal like this for some time. In addition to the thwarted attempt three years ago, the companies were poised to combine in October, but the deal was called off after what analysts said was a disagreement over control of the combined company.

The deal will have to be reviewed by the Justice Department and the FCC.

National carriers had not been able to get a deal through under President Barack Obama. But the FCC in September deemed the wireless market "competitive" for the first time since 2009, which some analysts say could make it easier to present a deal.

The 5G aspirations are at the heart of the agreement, and the new technology could allow companies to provide faster service to peoples' homes.

Sprint's Claure likened going from 4G to 5G to switching from black-and-white TV to color. The combined company plans to invest up to $40 billion in its network in the first three years, which executives said would drive more hiring and better service for customers.

Sprint has a lot of debt and has posted a string of losses. It has cut costs and made itself more attractive to customers, BTIG Research analyst Walter Piecyk said, but it hasn't invested enough in its network and doesn't have enough airwave rights for quality service in rural areas.

T-Mobile, meanwhile, has been on a years-long streak of adding customers. After the government nixed AT&T's attempt to buy the company in 2011, T-Mobile led the way in many consumer-friendly changes, such as ditching two-year contracts and bringing back unlimited data plans.

Consumers are paying less for cellphone service thanks to T-Mobile's influence on the industry and the resulting price wars. Verizon and AT&T have been expanding their video-content businesses, while cable companies have been moving into wireless.

NEWS BRIEFING

Comey dismisses House report that found no Russia collusion

WASHINGTON — Former FBI Director James Comey dismissed a House intelligence committee report that found no collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign.

Comey said Sunday on NBC's "Meet the Press" that he considers the report, issued Friday, to be a "political document." He said the most important investigation is being done by special counsel Robert Mueller.

He said that his understanding of the facts at the time of his firing in May don't support President Donald Trump's assertion that there's zero evidence of collusion and that the investigation is a hoax.

Comey said that though he had a "fine and professional" relationship with the committee's chairman, GOP Rep. Devin Nunes, the panel's work had become too politicized. Nunes was criticized for being too close to the White House.

Ronny Jackson won't return to job as Trump's physician

WASHINGTON — Ronny Jackson, a Navy rear admiral whom President Donald Trump unsuccessfully nominated to lead the Department of Veterans Affairs, will not return to his previous role as the president's personal physician, a White House official said Sunday.

Jackson, who withdrew as Trump's VA pick last week, will remain part of the White House medical unit, the official added. Sean Conley, a Navy veteran who took over Jackson's responsibilities after his nomination, will remain in the role as Trump's personal doctor.

Jackson, a former combat physician, withdrew his VA nomination last week, after the office of Sen. Jon Tester, D-Mont., released allegations that Jackson drank on the job, overprescribed medication and presided over a toxic work environment.

Israeli troops kill 3 Palestinians in border crossings, officials say

JERUSALEM — Israeli troops fatally shot two Palestinians who sneaked into the country from Gaza and attacked soldiers with explosives Sunday night, and in a separate incident killed a Palestinian who tried to breach the border, the military said.

Another Palestinian was detained in the latter incident, and two more were caught trying to cross the border in a third case, the military said.

The Gaza border has been tense in recent weeks, with the Islamic militant group Hamas that rules Gaza urging mass Palestinian protests there every Friday as part of a weeks-long campaign against a decade-old blockade of the territory. The protests have turned violent and 39 Palestinians have been killed during the unrest, which began March 30.

EU will push back if hit with U.S. trade tariffs, Merkel says

FRANKFURT, Germany — The leaders of Germany, Britain and France are ready to push back if the Trump administration does not permanently exempt the European Union from new import taxes on aluminum and steel imports, German Chancellor Angela Merkel said Sunday.

Merkel said she has spoken with British Prime Minister Theresa May and French President Emmanuel Macron since returning from her Friday talks in Washington with President Donald Trump.

The three European leaders "agreed that the U.S. ought not to take any trade measures against the European Union," which is "resolved to defend its interests within the multilateral trade framework." The chancellor's statement did not outline specific steps the 28-nation EU might take.

The EU's temporary exemption from the tariffs expires Tuesday. The tariffs are aimed primarily at overcapacity among state-backed firms in China that have flooded global markets with cheap steel.

European leaders have argued that their countries shouldn't be held responsible for China's practices. Visits to the White House by Macron and Merkel last week produced no immediate change in the expiration date.

May's office said after the prime minister's Sunday call with Merkel that they and Macron "pledged to continue to work closely with the rest of the EU and the U.S. administration with the aim of a permanent exemption from U.S. tariffs.

In March, Trump imposed duties of 25 percent on steel and 10 percent on aluminum.

White House mystery: Where's Macron's tree gift?

WASHINGTON — A mystery is brewing at the White House about what happened to the oak tree President Donald Trump and French President Emmanuel Macron planted there last week.

The sapling was a gift from Macron on the occasion of his state visit.

News photographers from both countries snapped away Monday when Trump and Macron shoveled dirt onto the tree during a ceremonial planting on the South Lawn.

But by the end of the week, the tree was gone from the lawn. A pale patch of grass was left in its place.

White House officials have not offered an explanation about the sapling.

The oak sprouted at a World War I battle site that became part of U.S. Marine Corps legend.

About 2,000 U.S. troops died in the June 1918 Battle of Belleau Wood, fighting a German offensive.

Health experts warn Britons about these crawly pests

LONDON — Residents in London are being told to beware the white-haired caterpillars that can cause rashes, vomiting and asthma attacks.

The British Forestry Commission said caterpillars that become oak processionary moths have been spotted in and around the British capital since mid-April.

The caterpillars are covered in thousands of hairs containing the protein thaumetopoein, which can cause skin rashes, sore throats, breathing difficulties and eye problems. People are being warned not to touch the creatures, which are most often found in oak trees — and to keep pets away from them, too.

Officials are treating oak trees with pesticide. The moths were accidentally introduced to Britain in 2005 on plants imported from continental Europe.

S.C. bus crash: Authorities say 17 people were injured, two seriously, when a charter bus carrying a high school chorus team crashed on Interstate 90 in southeastern South Carolina. The bus was returning to North Carolina with about 30 students and adult chaperones from Beddingfield High School in Wilson.

Bolivian death: Former Bolivian military dictator Luis Garcia Meza, who was serving a 30-year prison sentence, died Sunday at a military hospital in La Paz. He was 88. The former army general was imprisoned for crimes including murder and economic damage to the state during his 13 months in office from 1980-1981.

Pre-empting the carnage

Illinois needs a 'red flag law'

Nikolas Cruz. Adam Lanza. Devin Kelley. Seung-Hui Cho. James Holmes. And now, Travis Reinking.

We know what threads those names together: all deeply troubled individuals with access to guns, all associated with mass killings involving firearms.

Reinking, 29, is charged with killing four people and injuring four others April 22 at a Waffle House restaurant in Nashville, Tenn. The Morton, Ill., native's troubled past is well-documented.

In May 2016, he thought singer Taylor Swift was stalking him, according to a Tazewell County sheriff's report. His family told police he had made suicidal remarks. A year later in the town of Tremont, he showed up at a swimming pool in a dress, took it off and jumped in the pool, according to Tazewell County sheriff's police. Then in August 2017, the U.S. Secret Service arrested him after he breached a security barrier outside the White House. He told authorities he was trying to meet President Donald Trump.

After that arrest, authorities in Tazewell County seized his guns and his Illinois firearm owner's identification card, at the request of the FBI. Under Illinois law, seized firearms can be transferred to a family member with a valid FOID card. Reinking's father, Jeffrey, took custody of the guns and later gave them back to his son.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives says Jeffrey Reinking may have violated federal law by returning the guns to his son, and could face charges, the Tribune reported. But that's little solace to the families of those killed.

Democratic state Sen. Julie Morrison of Deerfield is sponsoring legislation to close the loophole that allows family members to return guns to a relative whose FOID card has been revoked. Her proposal would make it a felony to do so, unless they get permission from law enforcement or a judge. A conviction could mean up to a year in jail.

Another measure pending in Springfield would allow police to seize the guns themselves, not just the FOID, if a judge determined the owner posed a threat to himself or others. Six states already have so-called red flag laws, and Illinois is among 18 others considering them.

The measure pushed by Rep. Kathleen Willis, D-Addison, would allow a family member or law enforcement officer to petition a court for a gun violence restraining order against a gun owner whose behavior demonstrates it is warranted. The judge would have to find that an actual threat existed, not just a suspicion or a sinking feeling. The guns could be seized for up to a year, though the person could seek to terminate the order by showing the court that the threat no longer existed.

Such a restraining order would apply narrowly to individuals whose behavior posed a clear threat. It also preserves those individuals' due process rights.

Think about the names we've mentioned above. In every case, red flags abounded. It's natural to question whether an intervention could have prevented the killings. It makes sense to give police and family members the ability to act on those red flags before the carnage happens.

Raise the age to buy tobacco and vaping products

Many American teens wouldn't dream of lighting up a cigarette. They know that tobacco smoking is an easily acquired and often deadly habit. Too many, however, shrug off companion health warnings and fire up e-cigarettes instead.

Now Illinois lawmakers are poised to make that harder by raising to 21 from 18 the legal age to buy tobacco or e-cigarette products. The Illinois Senate has approved a measure on a 35-20 vote; the proposal now moves to the House.

We urge lawmakers to vote yes, and Gov. Bruce Rauner to sign the bill into law.

This is not a Nanny State overreach into the personal habits of Illinoisans. It's a smart way to help some unknowable percentage of young people from decisions that they and their families would regret for decades to come.

We're sure that lawmakers hear many of the same arguments against this proposal that we have: 18-year-olds serve in the military and vote, why can't they buy cigarettes or e-cigarettes? We say no for the same reason that we supported a statewide ban on smoking in public places a decade ago. Because it's a public health imperative that yields huge benefits. Anyone miss those smoky restaurants? Anyone?

STEVEN SENNE/AP

The teen smoking rate is plummeting, driven by indisputable science and generations of adults warning of the dangers over and over. But too many teens turn to vaping. Why? Because it's less noxious and obnoxious to take a furtive hit of nicotine from a dispenser that resembles a flash drive, a pen, or a lipstick tube than it is to light up a cigarette. E-cigarette makers cater to the young with candy flavors in nicotine-infused liquid. The vapor can smell like strawberry, cotton candy, caramel and other delicious aromas with enticing names like Blue Voodoo, Smurf Cake, Unicorn Milk.

No, e-cigarettes are not as harmful as tobacco ones, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. But please note: Electronic cigarettes are not harmless. E-cigarettes "can contain harmful and potentially harmful substances, including nicotine, heavy metals like lead, volatile organic compounds, and cancer-causing agents," the CDC warns.

Here's another troubling trend: Some researchers say teens who start vaping are far more likely to eventually move on to cigarettes. (Ironically, adults often start vaping to quit smoking.)

In March, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration unveiled dramatic intentions to cut nicotine in tobacco cigarettes, "rendering them minimally addictive or non-addictive." If the FDA accomplishes that, millions of Americans would avoid crippling illness and an early grave. In the past few days, the FDA also announced a law-enforcement "blitz" on retailers who sell e-cigarettes to minors. Good.

About two dozen Illinois cities, including Chicago, already have raised the tobacco and e-cig purchasing age to 21. They're protecting the health of some young people in Illinois. But this should be statewide policy. House members, over to you.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

After the humiliating August 2013 "non-strike event," when President (Barack) Obama changed his mind about his "red line" and decided not to react to (Syrian President) Bashar Assad's use of chemical weapons, the Syrians had America in a box. The White House signed up for a chemical disarmament plan that proved a farce. By the time the agreement had unraveled and Assad was back to using chemical weapons against Syrian citizens, the public no longer cared and Obama was busy discussing his foreign policy legacy. ... Assad is determined to cement his grip once again over Syria, no matter how thoroughly he has to destroy his country in order to restore it. And with Putin's backing, he is determined to thoroughly discredit what remains of the international community and U.S. leadership.

Over the 24 years (President Paul) Kagame's Rwandan Patriotic Front party has been in power, the economy has grown between 7 and 8 percent a year. Per capita income of $150 at the end of the genocide now stands at $700 and is expected to climb to $1,100 by 2020. Rwanda remains the world's 20th-poorest country, but life expectancy is up and infant mortality is down. Health improvements stem from the fact that 91 percent of the population has medical insurance and everyone in Rwanda's 15,000 villages receives free eye care. Medications and blood-test results are delivered directly to individual homes in remote locations by drones operated by a Silicon Valley company called Zipline. ...

Foreign aid donors provide almost all of Rwanda's health budget, as they do in many other African nations. But in Rwanda the money actually gets spent on its intended purpose.

Anti-racism protesters march this month in Newnan, Ga., as part of a counterprotest to a neo-Nazi rally. Some of the protesters wore masks in violation of state law.

The Constitution doesn't guarantee you can protest with a mask

By Stephen L. Carter

I'm a little confused by some of the responses to the arrest of self-styled anti-racism protesters in Newnan, Ga., for violating the state's law against going masked in public. Observers seem somewhere between troubled and outraged that a statute originally enacted to deal with the Ku Klux Klan should be used against people who were marching nonviolently against (in this case) self-proclaimed Nazis. But were the law applied selectively, hitting only racist targets, it would be blatantly unconstitutional.

Statutes that prohibit wearing masks in public go back to the decade after the Civil War, when Reconstruction authorities were searching for a way to deal with the terrorism of what historians call the first Ku Klux Klan. By the end of the 19th century, the group had died out, but a second Klan arose in the 1920s, leading to pressure on state governments to enact anti-masking laws. The Georgia version was adopted in 1951. Here's the current text, found in Title 16 of the state code:

"A person is guilty of a misdemeanor when he wears a mask, hood, or device by which any portion of the face is so hidden, concealed, or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer and is upon any public way or public property or upon the private property of another without the written permission of the owner or occupier of the property to do so."

That's it. Nothing about the Klan. Nothing about whether you're being violent. Nothing about which side of a dispute you happen to be on. As a matter of fact, it's quite important that the statute applies equally to racist and anti-racist groups. Otherwise, the law would be flatly unconstitutional.

I'm certainly not comparing the Georgia protesters to the Klan, but it's hornbook First Amendment jurisprudence that regulations on speech must be neutral as to content — that is, the state can't treat two speakers differently depending on which side each happens to take. To propose that the good guys and the bad guys be subject to different rules is to fall into the trap that the journalist Nat Hentoff memorably labeled "free speech for me but not for thee." In short, if the racists can't cover their faces, neither can the anti-racists.

Some of the protesters arrested in Georgia told reporters that they kept their faces covered for fear of retaliation by white supremacists. The idea, wrote one critic of the arrests, is to make it harder for opponents "to weaponize their politics with employers or fellow right-wingers." The fear is understandable, but to cite it as a justification for masking also carries a certain irony. If you peruse the pro-Klan writing of the past, the desire to avoid retaliation was a consistent theme. The nightriders had to keep their faces covered, they claimed, so that those perfidious Yankees would not arrest them for protecting their communities against crimes and depredations that Union occupiers ignored.

In 1870, for instance, a South Carolina newspaper explained the need for the masks this way: "At the North a vigilance committee appears without a disguise, because there is no martial law there. At the South, the Ku Klux Klan is a revolt against Congressional interference with municipal affairs and state legislation."

In the 1920s, William Joseph Simmons, founder and imperial wizard of the second Ku Klux Klan, defended the group's anonymity by drawing an analogy to the Boston Tea Party, where rebellious colonists had also concealed their identities. The Klan's "masks and flowing robes" were simply part of an American tradition of resistance, Simmons argued. He added: "The actuating cause and the spiritual purpose of the men in both instances was the same."

All of this flowery language was meant to disguise a simple fact: Klansmen went hooded and masked because they were afraid of arrest. The original Klan feared the Reconstruction authorities. The second Klan feared the furies of crusading Southern newspaper editors and, later, state and federal prosecutors.

In addition, in the 20th century, the masks provided protection for segregationist politicians, who could freely decry the crimes of the nightriders without condemning their constituents.

By the 1930s, the Klan was presenting itself as just another civic-minded fraternal organization. This strategy required leaders to deny any connection to the nightriders. In other words, the masks also enabled the organization to go mainstream. Its members could continue their lives in the community without worrying about what their neighbors might think.

That last point, of course, is precisely why protesters of all stripes want to be anonymous in the first place: so they can present their views to the public and nevertheless lead their lives unmolested. This desire is entirely understandable, and there's certainly a reasonable case to be made for the right to protest anonymously. But the courts are divided. Some state and federal judges have struck down anti-mask laws; others have sustained them. The U.S. Supreme Court has given us only hints of its thinking. In 2004, Sonia Sotomayor was a member of a panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit that unanimously rejected the claim of a Klan offshoot that New York's anti-mask law violated the group's First Amendment rights.

Still, the right to protest anonymously has plenty of academic supporters and is probably a good idea, not only in public but also online. Although I believe that participatory democracy means that we should in most cases defend our positions openly, there are certainly exceptions. But the First Amendment doesn't allow exceptions that depend on which side you're on.

So by all means fight for the right of anti-racists to keep their masks on as they protest. Just remember that you're fighting for the rights of racists too.

Only the strident survive

"I am not prone to anxiety," historian Niall Ferguson recently wrote in The Times of London. "Last week, however, for the first time since I went through the emotional trauma of divorce, I experienced an uncontrollable panic attack."

The cause? "A few intemperate emails, inadvertently forwarded to unintended recipients," paired with the "vicious atmosphere" of today's online age. Ours is a world, after all, where capricious digital mobs reign supreme, and where a single slip-up can trigger an excoriating bout of public humiliation. For many, online life feels increasingly precarious, and, as Ferguson notes, "It's now a very short way to the bottom."

It's striking to see someone like Ferguson — a prominent writer who has lived through his fair share of public dust-ups and claims a significantly "thickened" skin as a result — admit to sheer panic in the face of public scrutiny. But the world is different than it was 20 years ago, as he notes. If you're in the business of expressing opinions or exploring ideas of any sort, the age of unrelenting social media is also an age of constant low-level terror.

There's a certain irony here, given that a "central theme" of Ferguson's new book — "The Square and the Tower: Networks and Power From the Freemasons to Facebook" — is that "the internet, especially since the advent of social media, has exacerbated political polarization." It is true that Ferguson frequently wades into fractious political debates; it is also true that criticism comes with that territory. But we're not talking about simple criticism; we're talking about a relentless online mob that materializes with alarming frequency — and Ferguson is not alone in his apprehension.

Take best-selling author Lionel Shriver, who earned her own public shaming by questioning the concept of "cultural appropriation" at the Brisbane Writers' Festival in 2016. Even more horrifying is that she did so while wearing a sombrero — an act, in the words of a review of her latest book in the Financial Times, that served as "an ill-judged provocation." (Shriver's Brisbane affair also prompted an essay in The New York Review of Books titled, "The Trouble With Sombreros," if you're interested in further details.)

For the most part, Shriver is known for her works of fiction; today, however, she worries that writers are too afraid to tell any sort of genuine story at all. "I'm not a natural activist, and I'm reluctant to embrace this role," she told The Guardian in mid-April. "But I am also dismayed by how few writers with any serious reputation are willing to put themselves on the line for free speech. I'm very unhappy that writers and editors are exercising self-censorship. ... If we follow this through, it will be the end of story."

It will be the end of more than that, of course: Both routine digitized shaming and the resulting self-censorship feed a toxic dynamic in which only the very strident — or the very boring and conformist — can survive the public square.

"Public life in any form these days is essentially inseparable from a cascade of abuse," Ferguson noted in 2015, three full years before his internet-related panic attack. Sadly, if trends continue, public figures in the realm of ideas might simply have to accept such abuse as part of the gig.

This is good for no one, but it is where the current reign of digitized shame mobs naturally leads. You might scoff, given our fame-obsessed culture — you know, the one in which actual newspapers run stories on "How to make your pet Instagram famous" — but trust me: If the current climate ramps up, more and more interesting people might simply decide to hide.

That's a big "if," of course: Backlashes happen, and cultures shift all the time. In the world of social media, there are certainly quiet pockets of grace, forgiveness and understanding. Much louder, unfortunately, is that shrill, nonstop, ever-censorious, and oh-so-familiar "how dare you" drone.

So here's an idea, albeit an old-fashioned one: Let's all simmer down a bit. If you're offended, it might not be the end of the world. Are you tempted to take part in a good old-fashioned internet shaming? Consider the vicious cycle you might be perpetuating! Even better, imagine, for a moment, that churning avalanche of rage coming after you. Yes, yes, I know the person you are shaming is supposedly a terrible person with terrible ideas who totally deserves it, and so on and so forth, but stretch your mind to the limits if you can. It's more liberating than you might think.

U.S. Rep. Trey Gowdy, shown in 2015, is not running for re-election, and the South Carolina Republican is set to leave Washington at the end of the year.

Gowdy aimed to close the circle of South Carolina's history

George Will

U.S. Sen. Tim Scott of South Carolina, shown in 2016, co-wrote a book with his colleague Gowdy about their friendship. They once served together in the House.

WASHINGTON — Trey Gowdy's emotions sometimes bubble disconcertingly close to the surface, but unlike many members of the political class, he is not all surface. At a breakfast four years ago, the South Carolina Republican had tears in his eyes as he explained when he would leave Congress: after Tim Scott, a Republican congressman who had been appointed to the Senate in 2013 when Jim DeMint resigned, had been elected in his own right. This, Gowdy said at that breakfast, would close the circle of his state's history.

Scott, an African-American, was born in 1965, 44 days after the Voting Rights Act was signed into law by President Lyndon Johnson. The 1960 census had recorded South Carolina as 34.8 percent African-American. It was only about 27 percent African-American when Scott was elected in 2014 to complete DeMint's unfinished term, and was elected to a full term in 2016. So, at the end of 2018, Gowdy, after eight years representing northern South Carolina's booming Greenville-Spartanburg area, will put Washington in his rearview mirror. The nation's capital will be duller because of the departure of him and his myriad hairstyles. He will not miss it but will miss his weekly dinners with Scott, almost always at the same table in the Capitol Hill Club, a Republican hangout.

A former prosecutor, Gowdy ran for Congress in part to get a respite from things that prosecutors must stare at unblinkingly. There was the 9-year-old girl with cerebral palsy who was beaten to death by her mother's boyfriend. Gowdy's eyes are moist as he says that the girl's picture is on his desk in his congressional office. Staring down such evils is, he says, particularly arduous for someone like him, because "if you've got no faith, you've got nothing to lose." He, a devout Christian, thought it was "time to do something else."

When he first ran for public office, a friend congratulated him for being up to 20 in polls that showed him losing 80-20. When in 2010 he ran for Congress against a six-term Republican incumbent, he surfed into office on that year's tea party wave. And he was immediately "miserable," until he began his friendship with Scott.

As a member of three key committees (oversight and government reform, judiciary and intelligence), Gowdy has been at the — sometimes he has been the — epicenter of controversies. These have included Benghazi (honestly, do you remember what that was about? Didn't think so), the two parties' dueling memos about Russian interference in the 2016 election and the Mueller investigation. When his fellow Republicans on the intelligence committee faulted the FBI, CIA and NSA for concluding "with high confidence" that Russia preferred Donald Trump over Hillary Clinton, Gowdy said that the committee's own evidence showed that Russian involvement in the election was "motivated in whole or in part by a desire to harm her candidacy or undermine her presidency had she prevailed." Gowdy has never met Trump and might leave Washington without having done so.

Politics as he envisioned it would be a vocation in which participants asked themselves: What cause do I believe in strongly enough that I am willing to lose for it? Now, Gowdy says, the dominant question is: What am I willing to do to win? At 53, he says he wants to go somewhere "where facts matter." So, he probably will not teach in a university.

South Carolina has been punching above its weight recently. Former Gov. and now U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley, daughter of immigrants from India, is disproving the plausible — until she came along — rule that no one could have sustained transactions with the current president without being diminished. Former South Carolina Rep. Mick Mulvaney is director of the Office of Management and Budget. James Clyburn, the most senior member of the state's otherwise all-Republican House delegation, is assistant minority leader, the third-ranking position in the Democrats' House leadership. It is difficult to say how, but it is also difficult to doubt that, the social soil of South Carolina has something to do with the state's success in seeding national politics with talent.

Gowdy and Scott have co-authored a book ("Unified: How Our Unlikely Friendship Gives Us Hope for a Divided Country") that is dedicated to one of Scott's grandfathers and one of Gowdy's grandmothers: "In the segregated age in which they lived, the two never met. But two generations later, their grandsons became the best of friends."

Trump's body language is more honest than his words

By Nichole Russell and Patrick A. Stewart

On Tuesday, President Donald Trump took a peculiar break from the norms of international diplomacy to brush what he said was "dandruff" off French President Emmanuel Macron's jacket. It was an unusual, possibly inappropriate gesture, but perhaps something more than bemusement drove the ensuing flood of coverage, memes and jokes.

For a president who constantly reminds us how frank he is, his remarks don't always provide a clear indication of what he's thinking. By contrast, his body language — with Macron and in other sometimes-bizarre interactions with leaders — seems to reveal something more essential, more consistent, about his mindset. It's here we see the man as he really is.

Trump has held only one solo news conference since his inauguration, preferring joint news conferences alongside foreign leaders, with a total of 23 to date. In this way, Trump limits the number of questions he faces from journalists to roughly four and increases the possibility of interactions with foreign dignitaries. Academic research indicates that standards of politeness further constrain the atmosphere, making it that much harder for journalists to employ aggressive questioning techniques and follow-up queries.

What's more, carefully parsing Trump's words is not enough, because he offers an incessant flow of hyperbolic, polarizing, contradictory statements. He'll declare a position and then reverse it online, or he'll propose an idea that the administration later walks back.

It's little wonder, then, that some turn to studying other symbols as they attempt to make sense of his mindset. In particular, Trump's behavior with foreign leaders is often aggressive in unexpected but telling ways. During his first NATO summit in Brussels, for instance, Trump worked his way to the front of a pack of dignitaries, brusquely shoving Prime Minister Dusko Markovic of Montenegro out of the way as he headed to his destination. Observers around the world struggled to interpret the gesture and what it said about America's relationship with its strategic partners.

The "dandruff" incident isn't even the first uncomfortable physical interaction Trump and Macron have had. The two shared a long, awkward handshake during their first meeting, in May 2017, when they gripped each other's hands for an abnormal period of time, resulting in white knuckles and clenched jaws. These physical encounters point to Trump's need for dominance. Understanding his nonverbal interactions this way might tell us more about his thoughts and feelings than his words do.

It's easy enough, for example, to extract a story from the changing patterns of contact between Trump and Macron. While their earlier handshakes suggest a competition for dominance, Trump's more recent loose-jawed smile of amusement, and his playful removal of "dandruff," could now indicate a rough-and-tumble relationship between equals. Even if he's still trying to show that he's the top dog, he seems to be doing it in a friendlier spirit.

On other occasions, Trump has aggressively refused physical contact with foreign dignitaries — he famously turned down a handshake with German Chancellor Angela Merkel during a meeting in the Oval Office last year. The gesture, CNN wrote, "was taken as a sign of the tensions between the two leaders."

It's understandable, then, that so many observers focus on these details. With his cheap talk often signifying nothing, at least where tangible policymaking is concerned, the signals of nonverbal behavior, which make feelings evident in actions, become that much more significant. They're no Rosetta stone, but body movements, facial displays and, yes, inappropriate grooming are more reliable than words alone when trying to understand someone's intent.

Perhaps this is why stories about Trump's behavior are so attractive: It's one of the only ways to figure out how the president truly feels in the moment.

NICHOLAS HUNT/GETTY

Nupol Kiazolu, president of the Youth Coalition for Black Lives Matter of Greater New York, speaks this month in New York.

Democratic ideals

The Black Lives Matter and Me Too movements both seek to correct past and current injustices that are systemic, historically, in America, mandating immediate eradication. They represent a cornerstone of American democracy embedded with theoretical ideas of freedom, social justice and the pursuit of human equality. These movements should be applauded universally and supported by the general populace at large, having similarity to the causes of abolitionists, civil rights activists, the labor movement and the women's suffrage battle.

Such successful endeavors not only expanded societal democratic practices but also advanced the nation's long-term espoused theoretical pronouncements. Sometimes the movements employed tactics that may not have had total consensual agreement among many Americans, but that doesn't undermine the inherent inclination toward group-inclusive objectives. Freedom of speech and assembly are constitutionally guaranteed as well as necessary to raise public awareness and garner public support for affirmative changes in inappropriate behaviors, erroneous polices and discriminatory laws.

A unified party

What is the Democratic Party thinking? At a time when its leaders can be making substantial inroads not only into the midterm elections but the 2020 election as well, all we hear is that they have filed a lawsuit regarding the outcome of the 2016 election.

Folks, you need to start developing a unified platform and publicize accordingly. You need to start promoting the young stars of the party, who could generate excitement not only this year but in 2020 as well. The Republicans have left the door wide open.

It's time to stop whining about 2016 and rebuild a unified party with ideas and ideals that will motivate the silent majority in this country, who are yearning for a party that truly represents the people of this country and is able to put personal beliefs aside in the interest of compromise, which is what helped make this a great nation.

Regarding regulations

Probably one of the far right's greatest mantras is that regulations don't matter. We're better without them. Members of the far right are rebelling against what they see as the liberal nanny state. But, like all things, it all depends.

America and the world move by air. Or, more specifically, Americans fly everywhere because jet airliners are fast, comfortable and usually cheaper than driving. Jet airliners are also very, very dangerous. They wouldn't exist without tough regulations rigidly enforced by the Federal Aviation Administration. Or, to put it another way, no airline is ever more than two crashes away from extinction. Ever. They might survive a crash, especially if they have a spotless record otherwise. They won't survive a second, because no one buys a ticket on an airline with a history of crashes. Even an incident where a single passenger loses her life because one of two engines explodes casts that airline under a cloud of uncertainty, which is why Southwest Airlines is working hard to inspect all the engines in its fleet to ensure it doesn't happen again.

In the end, regulations exist because the alternative is worse. In some cases, far, far worse.

— Len Robertson, St. Charles

The wrong call

We all sat blithely by as President Donald Trump staffed his Cabinet with people who had openly opposed the true mission of their respective departments. So, what were we thinking — "Oh, there's no way they would actually run their department into the ground"?

Well, now we know we were wrong. And they are doing tremendous damage to our beloved country and its citizens. We need an all-out assault on the Trump administration to say this behavior is totally unacceptable. We have tried petitions to alter government behavior. We have used marches. We have used call-ins. We have used sit-ins. We have used boycotts. We have used divestments. We have filed suits. What can we do to stop this pillage of our country?

— Lee Knohl, Evanston

A proper name

There used to be a name given to countries ruled by a certain type of leader. These leaders were autocrats. They used their office to enrich themselves and their families. They engaged in illegal acts and worked to weaken and obstruct any attempt to bring them to justice. They sought to hamstring a free and open press. Oh, and they liked military parades. Given that all these qualities so aptly describe Donald Trump, and seeing as how members of his party continue to support and defend him, I think a name change is in order. From this point forward, I think they should be referred to as "Banana Republicans."

— Daniel Welch, Glen Ellyn

The end of cursive

Ending credit card signatures is yet another Darwinian action that relegates cursive handwriting to gradual extinction, just like ride-sharing decimated the taxi industry and Amazon pushed independent booksellers to the margins. Teaching cursive writing in schools has lost value and is quickly falling from school curricula. As a result of this progression, today's youth will eventually lose their ability to read the U.S. Constitution and other cherished historical documents. I envision a future where youth and generations to come will press buttons in museums to activate a recorded voice in order to listen to the content of these documents being read. It is becoming ever-clear that signing one's signature is yet another casualty in the construction of our new frontier.

Same-day audio should be standard for the Supreme Court

By Michael McGough

AL DRAGO/BLOOMBERG

While writing this, I was listening to Wednesday's oral argument at the U.S. Supreme Court over the legality of President Donald Trump's super-"watered-down" travel ban and wondering, not for the first time, why audio recordings of all arguments aren't streamed on the same day. There really is no good answer.

It's important to realize how unusual it was that the public could hear arguments in the case of Trump v. Hawaii on the same day the lawyers made them, albeit on a slight delay. As Gabe Roth of Fix the Court noted, this was the first time the court had released audio on the same day since April 28, 2015, the day of the argument in Obergefell v. Hodges, the same-sex marriage case.

Audio recordings of every other argument in the interim have been posted on the court's website on Friday, two to four days after lawyers made their case before the justices. (The court hears arguments Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays during a sitting, and transcripts are posted on the same day.)

Admittedly, Wednesday's argument, like the one in Obergefell, is unusually newsworthy. But since when are Supreme Court justices editors or news directors? Why not post the audio of every argument on the same day, and allow professional journalists to decide whether excerpts are worth including in the nightly news?

Ah, but what about the concern some justices are said to have about same-day audio resulting in misleading sound bites being retailed in the evening news? But if that's their objection, why allow same-day audio for the rare "high-profile" case such as those involving the travel ban, same-sex marriage or the constitutionality of the Affordable Care Act?

(It was the March 27, 2012, arguments in the Obamacare case that produced one of the most famous Supreme Court sound bites — then-Justice Antonin Scalia's comparison of the health care law's individual mandate with a hypothetical law forcing people to buy broccoli.)

Making an exception for "high-profile" cases is also hard to reconcile with one of the other stock arguments against same-day audio: that lawyers who know their words might appear on the TV news will be tempted to grandstand. If you're inclined to showboat, wouldn't you do it precisely in those marquee cases?

One possible explanation for the court's decision to allow same-day audio for the travel ban case is that it was asked to do by Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on the Constitution, and his Democratic counterpart, Sen. Mazie Hirono of Hawaii. In a letter to Chief Justice John Roberts in March, the senators cited "heightened national interest" in the case as a reason for same-day audio. But since when does the court do Congress' bidding?

Any way you look at it, the court's selective policy on same-day audio makes no sense. If citizens can read the arguments on the day they are made, they ought to be able to listen to them — whether the case is "high-profile" or snore-inducing.

*If you believe your only options are agonizing knee pain or surgery... You are WRONG!

Thousands of Chicagoland Boomers and Seniors are now getting knee pain RELIEF, INSTEAD of knee replacement.

It turns out, the secret of enjoying the "golden years" is NOT simply having a giant nest egg for retirement Why?

Recent research showed that Baby Boomers and seniors who lead an active lifestyle during retirement, and continue doing the things they truly enjoy, free of pain, ARE happier, regardless of income level or wealth.

And truth be told, people who don't have their mobility to enjoy their favorite activities at that age, all the money in the world won't bring true happiness.

We know this because we hear people say this over and over again at the Joint Relief Institute in Orland Park. Comments like this . . .

"I didn't know how much LIFE and SLEEP I was missing because of my knee pain, until it went away with this wonderful treatment."

— George R.

You know how it is . . .

You start to recognize your knee is hurting, and you try pain medicines, braces, or different over-the-counter arthritis supplements. Soon enough, you realize they either cause lots of side effects, or they fail to live up to their promise of fast, long-lasting relief, and are not worth the price of the bottle they come in.

And BECAUSE you'd prefer NOT to go under the knife . . .

And can't afford to be put in bed for several weeks, and because you know people who still hurt EVEN after surgery . . . you give up, and learn to live with the pain. BUT, you miss out on things you enjoy doing, and lose your golden years one activity at a time.

With less activity, comes weight gain, and depression . . . Yes, you can put up with this ache in your knee, but the cost of doing nothing about it is HUGE. You are not doing yourself a favor by "toughing it out."

"Six months later, I found out the one thing between me and losing 20 lbs, WAS my knee pain"

— Mary T.

"Every day was hard. I couldn't enjoy my favorite activities anymore. But thankfully, now I'm back in full form. I am doing yard work for the first time in years!"

— Phil M.

What are my options if I don't want to undergo surgery?

Today we live in an age with tremendous technology advances, and that's what Joint Relief Institute doctors use to put new life and energy into failing knee joints.

Using precise, advanced imaging, they gently place an all natural joint lubricant directly inside your knee to replace the lost fluid that's causing your pain. This treatment has proven to have a very high rate of success.

However, it HAS to be done right with advanced imaging . . .

A recent study examined trained

Advanced Digital technology is used to eliminate a HUGE percentage of treatment failures. Every treatment at Joint Relief Institute is pin-pointed to the damaged area inside the knee. The doctors see the medication live as it goes to help the troubled joint.

doctors and surgeons who attempted these injections without using advanced imaging. Instead, they simply felt the knee with their fingers and BLINDLY delivered the replacement fluid.

The study revealed that these doctors missed the target most of the time . . . In fact, 30% of the time, they didn't even

Alternative to the knife for your knee pain? Non-Surgical treatment success rate soars after using new digital technology place the treatment inside the joint. Yes THIRTY percent. It is not a typo.

Even after missing the target, they had no way of knowing they missed, because they are not SEEING it with advanced imaging.

That means these patients went away thinking they had received a life-changing treatment, and, in fact, did not get any benefit at all. Even worse, many of them went on to have surgery they didn't need.

How did Joint Relief Institute find the Antidote to this MISERABLE failure . . .

The doctors at the Joint Relief Institute are trained in using cutting-edge low dose motion digital imaging. These highly skilled, Board Certified doctors are able to see into the knee joint. They actually watch the medicine, live, as it goes where it needs to be. This technology is so precise, so advanced, and so forefront that it was able to make a whole difference in Non-surgical treatments.

"We've had so many patients tell us they RECEIVED treatments like Synvisc or Orthovisc in the past, and it didn't work. So they were considering surgery, and some even had surgery scheduled. Luckily, we were able to save many of those people from the knife." Said Dr Mike Hana at the Joint Relief Institute.

Joint Relief Institute's proven accuracy and effective treatment is why people are traveling hundreds of miles to get knee pain treatment from their Doctors.

Why did Knee treatments from Joint Relief Institute become the talk of the town?

Many seniors walk out feeling better than they have in years! So as you might imagine, when their friends see them move easier, walk further, sleep better and are happier, they want it also.

Only days after this treatment, people usually notice a decrease in: Pain... Stiffness...Muscle weakness... Swelling... Locked joints... Reduced range of motion... and Cracking sounds.

Most patients who receive the treatment are able to live pain free for up to 6 months, and some even get relief for 3-5 years with NO additional treatments.

How does the treatment help relieve your joint pain...

It's pretty simple, really. You see, when you're young, you have a thick, fluid protein inside your knee joints to lubricate them as you move.

This fluid also acts as a cushion and shock absorber inside your knee. It's called synovial fluid, and it works much like the oil in a car's engine to keep all the parts moving freely, without friction.

However, as you age, this fluid dries out, leaving your bones to painfully rub and grind against each other with every step. And unfortunately, there's no way for the joint to make more.

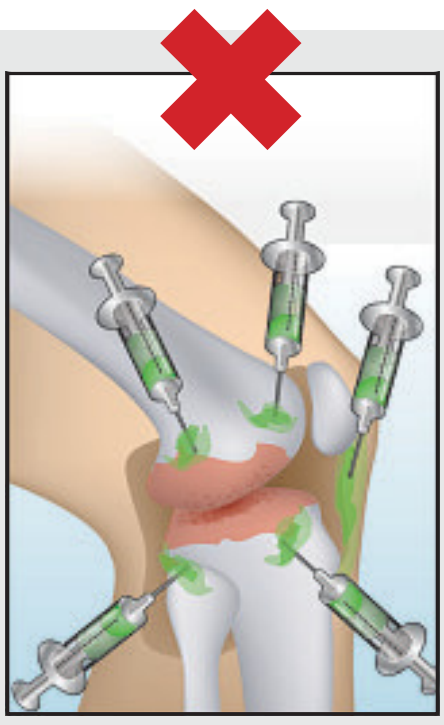
After years of trusted service in moving you everywhere you need to go, you start to feel a subtle ache in your knees with certain activities like kneeling down, or getting out of the car. With time, it becomes a constant ache. If left untreated, it can keep you awake at night, and hurt with every step.

The good news is, researchers discovered an almost identical, all natural lubricating fluid called Hyaluronic acid. It has been proven in numerous clinical studies to act as a natural lubricant in your joints.

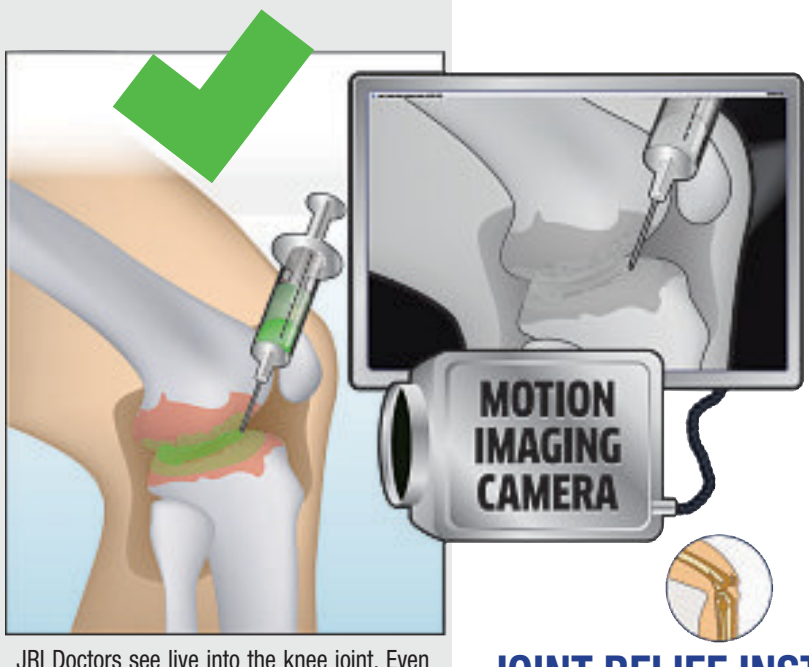
It's FDA approved and is a perfect cushion and shock absorber for your joints. Once it's correctly placed inside your knee, it can make them feel just like new again, eliminate any rubbing and friction, and make your joints glide smoothly.

Are there any side effects to this treatment? Is the treatment painful?

After numbing the skin with a special spray, Joint Relief's imaging technology makes this treatment virtually painless. And because you are getting a supplement for a protein we are all born having, there are NO known after effects.



If you received this kind of treatment in the past, and it didn't relieve your pain, there is a BIG chance the medication landed somewhere around, but not INSIDE, the joint where it can't help you.



JRI Doctors see live into the knee joint. Even you will be able to tell the medicine went where it needs to be. No guess work, no poking around, the medicine cushion lubricate and help heal the damaged knee.

That is right, this is a quick, natural long-lasting, non-invasive, non-surgical treatment with NO known side effects...

Is it true this natural treatment costs NOTHING?...

Yes, more good news, besides the pain relief, is that because this non-surgical program has already proven to help thousands of seniors, Medicare and other insurance plans DO cover the full cost of the treatment.

So there is very likely NO COST to you for this life-changing treatment.

Here is what you need to do if you or a loved one is suffering with knee pain…

Call now for a free screening...

If you or a loved one is suffering with knee pain, this could be the blessed relief you're looking for. You are personally invited to a FREE knee pain screening from the Joint Relief Institute doctors to see if you are a good candidate for this all-natural, highly-precise treatment.

Due to high demand, they can only offer a limited number of FREE screens every month. So if you're interested, Call now (708) 914-5145.

Waiting will not help you feel better...

This ache in your knees could be a sign of serious damage and people who choose to simply "tough it out" will definitely see their knees deteriorate further over time. The one thing we know is: The damage will NEVER undo itself without some help.

Your screening will only take about 20-30 minutes of your time, as one of their doctors sits down with you and answers all the questions you have about your knees.

On the day of your treatment, you'll be able to come in on your own, and be done within 30 minutes or less. No pain. No problem driving yourself home. ■

Bull markets can make investors too complacent

I have a confession: I'm rooting for a recession and a bear market.

Of course, I don't want people to suffer, but the longer both the expansion and bull market continue, the more we tend to forget that they can actually end, leading some to make poor financial decisions.

U.S. stocks are now in the second-longest bull market on record (the longest was 1982-2000), and the S&P 500 has nearly quadrupled since bottoming on March 9, 2009. The definition of a bear market is when the index closes at least 20 percent down from its previous high close.

There have been six bear markets for the S&P 500 over the past 50 years, according to Yardeni Research, and they occur about every 3 ½ years on average. So we are overdue.

Meanwhile, the U.S. economic expansion is about to celebrate a milestone. May marks the 107th month of the current growth cycle, which makes it the second-longest in history, passing the 1960s boom (1961-1969) that lasted 106 months. The technology miracle of 1991-2001 that totaled 120 months remains the longest on record.

It feels like we are owed a long run, especially after the painful impact of the great recession, which began in December 2007 and lasted until June 2009. At 18 months, it was the longest of any recession since World War II, according to the Business Cycle Dating Committee of the National Bureau of Economic Research, and it is widely considered the worst contraction since the Great Depression.

The good news is that recessions don't last forever — on average, about a year. Still, while conditions remain positive, it's time for a refresher on what causes recessions.

Since World War II, there have been three main culprits: an external shock to the economy, such as the early 1970s OPEC oil embargo or the first Gulf War; the bursting of an asset bubble (think 2000 dot-com stock bust or the bursting of the housing and credit bubbles in 2008); an overheating economy that results in higher prices, which in turn prompts the Fed to raise interest rates. (Most economists believe that the next recession likely will be caused by the third one.)

Just because the current expansion and bull market have been going on for nine years does not mean that everything will come crashing down imminently. But we need to manage our financial lives knowing that both a recession and a bear market will occur at some point.

And while these relatively good times feel good, they also can breed complacency, and that's the main reason why I am rooting against them. To fight that natural tendency to forget that bad times can occur, here's a reminder of what you can do right now.

- Revisit/create your financial plan. As flight attendants remind us, "Items may have shifted during flight." So, too, with your financial plan — hopefully for the better, but regardless, this is a good time to update the game plan.
- Maintain a healthy emergency reserve fund. For those still working, maintain six to 12 months of expenses (12 to 24 months for retirees) in a safe, liquid account.
- Pay down that debt. There's nothing like a recession and bear market to expose the dangers of carrying too much debt.
- Maintain a diversified portfolio and don't forget to rebalance.

Lessons kids teach us about leadership

Anyone can benefit from a fresh, pint-sized perspective

BY HEIDI ZAK
Inc.

On International Women's Day, our team at ThirdLove spent time talking about the women we admire. We heard about moms, grandmas, sisters, wives and best friends.

I chose my daughter, Sloane.

Sloane is 4 ½ years old, and she's been doing something lately that really makes me proud. Whenever I take her somewhere, and she sees a woman working a certain job — pilot, massage therapist, Lyft driver — she immediately decides that's what she wants to do. After she saw a female dentist, she spent the next three days saying she wanted to be a "teeth cleaner."

In her mind, she can do anything. And that's so incredible to see. I get to watch her jump from job to job without ever thinking there's something she can't do.

From me, I hope she learns that she can be a founder and a leader. But truthfully, both my kids have taught me a lot more about leadership than they probably realize.

Here's what I've learned:

Kids live in the moment, and they have an amazing ability to take a situation, reframe it and move on.

OCUSFOCUS/ DREAMSTIME

Every day is a new day.

One of our mottos at ThirdLove actually is, "Every day is a new day." That's the mentality we want our team to have.

Kids live and breathe that motto.

To them, it's not even day-to-day. Every hour — every minute — is new. Kids live in the moment, and they have an amazing ability to take a situation, reframe it and move on.

You have to strive for that mentality as a leader. You can't be too focused on the past or the future. You have to come into work each day and treat the present like it's the only thing that matters.

Put passion and energy into everything you do.

Young children are so enthusiastic about whatever it is they're doing. They're just so happy to be alive, to be active and to enjoy the world around them.

So often we think of our daily life as a grind, a routine that we have to put ourselves through over and over. But my kids remind me to get excited about the opportunities that come every day.

Seeing the way they approach each day and each activity is a good way to stay dedicated and passionate about my own work.

If you set your mind to something, you can do it.

Part of being a selfless leader is following through. If you say you'll make something happen, you do. No matter what.

Kids are incredible at taking on challenges when they put their minds to it. When my daughter was about 2 ½ years old, she became obsessed with the monkey bars. I noticed her intently watching the kids playing on them, focusing on their movements.

After a while, she just figured it out. She tried it again and again — and at age 3, she could do the whole set of monkey bars.

There are few things in life you can't do if you work hard and stay focused on your goal. It's all about how much research you do, how much effort you put in, and how dedicated you are to making something happen.

Be thoughtful about your relationships.

I was more selfish before I had kids. Many people are. You don't realize how much you focus on yourself until you have someone who depends on you for absolutely everything.

My children have taught me to be more thoughtful about my relationships and more sensitive to what people at my company need at any moment in time. Life is full of ups and downs. Maybe someone is going through a divorce. Maybe they're taking care of a sick parent.

Whatever the case, a real leader makes sure people have time to take care of personal needs and be present for the moments that truly matter.

Efficiency is a necessity.

Kids take up nearly all of your free time. And because you have less time for yourself, you're forced to operate more efficiently. There are certain things you just don't have time to contemplate anymore.

As a founder, that's actually helped me in some ways. I used to spend days focused on certain issues. But now, I make a decision and move on. I don't have time to ruminate over all the potential downsides or pitfalls.

Becoming fixated on one problem for too long can actually be detrimental to a leader. Even if you make a mistake, you have to move on quickly.

Learn to adapt and stay resilient.

The way kids adapt to new situations is amazing.

You know what I mean if you've ever dropped off a child for their first day of preschool. They almost always cry. Your care has been the only world they've ever known. And now they're being dropped off in a foreign environment with teachers and other kids they don't know. It's a nightmare.

But by the next morning, or a few days later, they're excited to go back. All it takes is a day or two for them to adapt to the environment and get over their fear.

Adults are not as good at that. As we get older, we become set in our ways. And we are not as resilient when we're thrown into a new situation. But leaders have to rise to challenges and adapt to new circumstances. They have to be a little more like children on the second day of preschool, ready to meet new people and take on the challenges ahead.

Rules for beneficiaries of inherited IRAs

ELLIOT RAPHAELSON

In a previous column, I discussed the importance of naming beneficiaries of IRAs. In this column, I'll discuss issues affecting those who inherit IRAs as named beneficiaries.

There are different rules for beneficiaries who inherit through a will or an estate. And IRS regulations differ for spouses and non-spouses.

Spouse beneficiaries

If you inherited a traditional IRA from your spouse, you have two options. You may roll over the inherited IRA into your own IRA, or you can establish the IRA as an "inherited IRA."

If you are younger than 59 ½ and require distributions, there is an advantage in establishing the IRA as an inherited IRA. The advantage is that you avoid the 10 percent early withdrawal penalty. You would have to pay ordinary income taxes on any withdrawals. When you reach age 59 ½, you can then roll over the inherited IRA into your own IRA.

There is no advantage to you after you reach 59 ½ to keep the account as an inherited IRA. The advantage of maintaining the account as your own IRA is that you can then name beneficiaries, which would enable them to use the stretch option. Although you may name beneficiaries regarding the inherited IRA, your beneficiaries may not have the stretch option, depending on if you die before or after you have to take required distributions.

If you do roll over the IRA to your own, then you would not have to make any withdrawals until age 70 ½. At that point, your withdrawals are mandatory, and based on your age and the value of your IRA at the end of each year after you reach 70 ½.

If an individual was the sole beneficiary, and remained a beneficiary, and did not roll over the account to their own IRA, she would be required to take beneficiary payouts, based on her life expectancy, which would start either in the year after the account holder's death or in the year the account holder would have reached 70 ½, whichever is later. Accordingly, when the surviving spouse is much younger than the account holder, the rollover can be more advantageous, since the surviving spouse will have many more years to postpone taking mandatory distributions.

A surviving spouse (as well as other beneficiaries) should immediately name his/her beneficiaries whether the account is initially established as an inherited IRA or if the IRA is rolled over into his or her own IRA.

If the deceased spouse was older than 70 ½, and he had not taken the required minimum distribution (RMD), then the surviving spouse (or other named beneficiary) is responsible for taking the required distribution by Dec. 31 of the year of the account holder's death.

Non-spouse beneficiaries

Non-spouse beneficiaries don't have the option of rolling over the IRA to their own IRA. The non-spouse beneficiary is mandated to start taking RMDs by Dec. 31 of the year following the owner's death. The beneficiary should use the Single Life Expectancy Table. If the beneficiary is younger than the IRA owner, she should use her age in the table, and for subsequent years reduce life expectancy by one. If the beneficiary was older than the owner at the time of death, and the owner died after he was required to start taking RMDs, the beneficiary can use the deceased owner's age in order to stretch out the payments longer.

If the owner had not reached 70 ½, the beneficiary has an additional option. She may elect to refuse the RMD and withdraw the total amount over a five-year period following the owner's death. This option is available but is not the most desirable, since you would lose the stretch option.

If there are multiple beneficiaries, the inherited account should be split after death. This split should be done by Sept. 30 of the year following the IRA owner's death.

Calculating taxes on Social Security benefits

BY KIMBERLY LANKFORD

Kiplinger

Q: How do I calculate what portion of my Social Security benefits is taxable?

A: If your only income is from Social Security, your benefits likely aren't taxable. But if you have other taxable income — such as from a job, freelancing, a pension or withdrawals from tax-deferred retirement savings — then 50 percent or 85 percent of your Social Security benefits may be subject to federal income taxes. (Social Security benefits may be taxable in 13 states too.)

To determine the percentage, calculate your "provisional income," which is your adjusted gross income (not counting Social Security benefits), plus any nontaxable interest and half of your Social Security benefits. If that total is less than $25,000 and you're single or $32,000 and you're married filing jointly, your Social Security benefits are not taxable. If it's between $25,000 and $34,000 on a single return or $32,000 to $44,000 on a joint return, then up to 50 percent of your Social Security benefits may be taxable. If your provisional income is more than $34,000 on a single return or $44,000 on a joint return, 85 percent of your benefits may be taxable.

This calculation, though, only applies to federal income taxes. Additionally, 13 states tax Social Security benefits. Some states, such as Vermont and North Dakota, tax Social Security benefits to the same extent as federal income taxes. But others use different calculations that often have higher income thresholds than the federal rules.

In Kansas, for example, Social Security benefits are exempt from income tax for residents with a federal adjusted gross income of $75,000 or less. In Missouri, Social Security benefits are not taxed for single taxpayers with an adjusted gross income of less than $85,000 or married couples with an AGI of less than $100,000. And some income above that level may qualify for a partial exemption in Missouri.

The Savage Truth

Medical costs for seniors march upward

If you're one of the 44 million Americans who are covered by Medicare, be on the lookout for your new Medicare card coming soon in the mail. It will no longer carry your Social Security number.

Instead, it will carry a new 11 digit identifying number consisting of numerals and letters.

But it's still a paper card. While everything else in America has gone digital, Medicare still requires you to carry a card to present at your physician's office. Because the cards will start arriving in the mail in April — a process that will continue throughout the year — you can expect to be asked for it at all your medical appointments starting soon.

Cards are being mailed to your registered address on your Social Security account. So if you have direct deposit of Social Security benefits, you should check to make sure your current mailing address is on file.

A warning: Do not fall for telephone scams asking for your new number. Give it only to the physicians and hospitals you know, not to someone posing as a medical professional. The mailing of 44 million cards is an opportunity ripe for scams.

To learn more about the card, go to www.Medicare.gov and type "new card" in the search box.

Speaking of Medicare, there's new evidence that Medicare alone will not be sufficient to cover your retirement health-care costs. Fidelity has just released its annual Retirement Healthcare Cost study, and it estimates that a 65-year-old couple retiring this year will need $280,000 to cover health-care and medical expenses throughout retirement.

For single women, the retirement cost estimate is $147,000, and for men it's $133,000, reflecting the fact that women typically live longer than men.

This year's number is a 2 percent increase from 2017 but a 75 percent increase from Fidelity's first cost estimate in 2002. And if you extrapolate, even at the current relatively low rate of inflation, retirees could find their health-care costs doubling over a 20-year retirement period. That's a critical piece of information when planning retirement budgets and needed withdrawals from retirement accounts.

The costs covered in this survey include Medicare premiums, out-of-pocket drug costs and the estimated costs of Medicare supplements, which cover deductibles, co-payments and some other non-covered Medicare expenses. All of these costs are susceptible to future inflation, federal budgetary decisions and legislation.

One way to reduce these insurance costs is to choose the all-in-one Medicare Advantage program available in your area. But then you are restricted to hospitals and physicians included in your plan. If you later develop an ongoing medical condition, you may not go back to the best supplements offered to those in traditional Medicare. So, it's important to think ahead when choosing Medicare Advantage over traditional Medicare plus supplements.

The survey also includes a warning to those who consider retiring early or might be forced into early retirement by illness or a spouse's medical situation. Those who retire before qualifying for Medicare pay at least $500 — or significantly more — in private health insurance premiums monthly. That doesn't include the cost of deductibles or copayments with these policies.

One thing Fidelity's cost estimate does not include is the significant costs of long-term custodial care. In recent years, more seniors have opted for attractive assisted living facilities. But the Genworth annual survey shows that the average cost of an assisted living facility in a city like Chicago is $4,695 a month, with a private room in a traditional nursing home costing more than $8,500 per month. These charges have consistently risen faster than inflation.

Sadly, increasing longevity means increasing medical costs. And that's the Savage Truth.

Women, don't believe average is just fine

By Heather R. Huhman
Inc.

JACKF/DREAMSTIME

"Stop trying."

This is the message leaders are sending to women everywhere. In fact, they're insisting women just be adequate.

Recent research from Ohio State University found that while employers hired men who had high GPAs, women with the same grades and experiences were passed over for women whose academic performance was just average. A highly intelligent woman's odds of employment were even lower in male-dominated fields like mathematics.

This behavior suggests it's better for women to be adequate than to try to excel. And this bias doesn't disappear once a woman is hired. It continues to affect how her performance is viewed as well as the developmental opportunities she's offered. Rather than being encouraged to succeed throughout her career, she's told to simply be good enough.

It's time to address this bias and inspire women to maximize their potential.

1. Stop focusing on likability.

One possible explanation for the trend discovered by Ohio State University is likability. As Laura Butler, senior vice president of people and culture at enterprise management solutions company Workfront, points out, smart women often are seen as harder to get along with. So, while skill and experience are what help men land jobs, for women, likability takes precedence.

Butler saw this bias firsthand several years ago while conducting productivity analytics for a company. She asked leaders in the organization to rank employees from highest performing to lowest. There was a woman at the top of the list described as a people person and a good communicator.

After doing her research, Butler found this woman was actually one of the least productive employees. "Without intending to, they placed a much higher premium on likability than getting the job done," Butler explained.

Don't make the same mistake. If you label a woman as a high performer based on her personality alone, you risk denying her honest feedback about her work. She won't see what her true strengths or weaknesses are and, therefore, will not be able to develop properly.

Look for signs that your leadership team is putting too much emphasis on likability. For instance, if a manager begins a performance review with "I like Jane, she's a hard worker," ask for evidence. This will force you and your managers to assess each employee's true performance levels.

2. Define and analyze.

When leaders don't have clear definitions of what excellent performance looks like, they fill in the gaps with unconscious bias. In the same way they hire someone because of a "gut feeling," they tend to gauge how effective they are in their role subjectively. What they're really doing is giving into their prejudices.

Create objective criteria for each employee's performance. Focus on measurable goals that challenge the individual, whether they're male or female. Track how employees are progressing through regular performance reviews and engagement surveys.

Finally, take a step back and look at the data. This will not only show you where employees need extra support, but also where there are still unconscious biases.

For example, are men moving along their career paths more quickly? This could be because the company's developmental program doesn't meet the needs of women.

Once you identify any gaps, survey female employees to see where you can make direct, positive changes.

3. Stop feeling threatened.

Are you more likely to surround yourself with the best talent, or people who agree with you? Hiring only those who support you helps maintain the status quo, but also it keeps a company from growing and evolving.

"Typically, leaders like to stay leaders," said Holly Caplan, author of "Surviving the Dick Clique." She continued, "Conscious of it or not, the hiring manager will feel more comfortable with hiring a female who will not be a threat to leadership."

Shift your perspective and look at intelligent women as opportunities instead of intimidators. Create a mentor program that helps women reach their full potential. After all, it's better to have employees who push for change and innovation than a team of drones.

Most importantly, be sure you're not molding female employees to be just like you. Provide them with a variety of experiences and introduce them to leaders with different styles. This will provide them with a more well-rounded developmental opportunity. In exchange, your company will have capable, intelligent and innovative women driving the team forward.

Pet insurance can pay off in some cases

By Kaitlin Pitsker
Kiplinger

It happened in a flash. One minute, Dan Perlowitz of West Orange, N.J., had his dog Gracie's leash in hand, and the next she had broken away and run onto a nearby highway. She was hit by one car and rolled over by another, but, thankfully, she suffered only a broken rib and a concussion and healed with no complications.

The bill for Gracie's hospital stay and veterinary care — $4,063 — could have been painful too. But Dan and his wife, Jamie, had purchased pet insurance after adopting Gracie in 2014.

"Because we didn't know much about her past or what medical issues she might have, we wanted to have the insurance just in case," Dan says.

The policy from Healthy Paws, which costs $48 a month, paid for all but $659 of the tab, after excluding certain charges, applying a $100 deductible and a 10 percent co-payment.

The Perlowitzes are part of a small but growing group of pet owners who are buying health policies. About 1.6 million pets in the United States have coverage, according to the North American Pet Health Insurance Association — and pet owners have more options for coverage than in years past, with about two-dozen brands offering policies.

ANDREY KUZMIN/DREAMSTIME

The cost of a policy varies based on the age of your pet, its breed, where you live and the type of coverage you select. But a policy with broad coverage typically costs about $30 to $150 a month for a dog and $10 to $50 a month for a cat.

Most plans cover accidents and illnesses but usually don't cover routine exams and care. The policies won't cover pre-existing conditions, and some exclude exams or hereditary and congenital conditions.

If your pet is young and generally healthy, you may not recoup the cost of your premiums. But if your pet is old, a breed that is prone to health issues or becomes injured, the coverage may pay for itself.

When shopping for a policy, carefully review what's covered. The insurer should clearly spell out the details, including any limitations or exclusions.

"To increase the value of your policy, enroll your pets while they're young and before they've been diagnosed with any medical conditions," says Rob Jackson, co-founder of Healthy Paws Pet Insurance and Foundation. You will be less likely to be denied coverage based on an exclusion for a pre-existing condition.

As with other types of insurance, it pays to shop around. Start by asking for recommendations from friends who have coverage or from a local vet, or visit petinsurancereview.com or petinsurancequotes.com for an overview of offerings. You also may be able to buy discounted coverage through your employer.

Steve Rosen
Kids & Money

When to start talking to kids about money

If you're the parent of a child in grade school, you've probably introduced him or her to the tooth fairy. But what about allowances and understanding wants and needs while at the toy store?

If you have a teenager, have you had conversations about debit cards, compound interest and Facebook's stock price?

Not sure where to start? Does it feel awkward speaking to your children about money?

Take a cue from Patrina Dixon and Thomas Beattie — both of whom are parents and are devoted to helping children of all ages get a grip on their financial ABCs.

Dixon is a Connecticut-based financial educator and author of "It's My Money," a personal finance book geared to teens ages 13-18.

Beattie is chief executive officer of Voleo, a financial technology company that has created a stock trading app particularly useful for investment clubs. He also is a Junior Achievement volunteer who teaches elementary school kids about money basics.

As we close out financial literacy awareness month, I asked Beattie and Dixon for comments about the importance of teaching kids about money, and how to make it relevant.

Here are some of their tips, advice and strategies for parents, edited for clarity.

When to start

Dixon: Age 5 to 6, or "as soon as they can recite words to a hit song. The sooner you teach them, the better."

Beattie: "I joked about teaching my son about compound interest as soon as he could learn to speak. It turns out that's too early."

But Beattie agreed that "at around age 5, they can start making decisions at a small level, whether it's a bit of money for a birthday or special occasion, or whether they are fortunate enough to start earning a small allowance. Saving some or spending some on a toy provides a first lesson."

From that point, parents can ramp up the teaching. "I honestly believe that age-appropriate financial education is critical. But the thing about financial literacy is that it only sticks if it is relevant."

For example, Beattie said, "it is not effective to teach a child about mortgages. They can't relate to it. But the concept of paying different amounts for the same object depending on whether you pay in cash or with a credit card over time ... that surprises them."

Needs and wants

Dixon: Explain the differences with real examples, she said. "You need a place to live so you pay your rent or mortgage. You want a new pair of sneakers, but you don't have to have them."

Banking

Dixon: "Bring kids inside the bank and let them assist with the transaction. If you are making a deposit, let them complete the deposit slip and give both the completed deposit slip and money to the bank teller. I know it is easier to go to the drive-through, but going inside the bank and letting them help you with the transaction will go a long way."

Credit cards

Beattie: The message to your kids can be, "Credit cards are not bad but should be used responsibly." Parents also should explain the impact of falling behind on credit card payments, the need to pay the plastic off in full each month, and how you can earn rewards points for using a credit card.

Books

For young readers, there are many books with money themes. Dixon suggested "Wesley Learns to Invest," by Prince Dykes and "Kids Who Bank Presents Kidpreneurs," by Jatali Bellanton.

For teens, she recommends "Rich Dad Poor Dad for Teens," by Robert Kiyosaki.

Best advice they've ever received

Dixon: "Live below your means. Don't just spend because you have the money to spend. Save more."

Beattie: "Invest whenever you can afford to and as consistently as possible."

SHARI L. CAINE 1965-2018

Leader put Des Plaines museum 'on the map'

By Bob Goldsborough
Chicago Tribune

During a 21-year career at the Des Plaines History Center, Shari L. Caine modernized the museum's operations, expanded its staff, built partnerships with other organizations and developed new programs and exhibits, colleagues said.

"Shari started working here in 1997 as part of a new professionalization of the staff, and (she and others) brought the Des Plaines History Center up to snuff professionally, as far as the standards of museum work go," said Philip Mohr, the museum's senior curator.

Caine, 52, died of complications from neuroendocrine cancer on March 30 at Central DuPage Hospital in Winfield, said her husband, Dennis Fratamico. She had been a Hanover Park resident for 12 years and prior to that had lived in Des Plaines.

Caine was born in downstate Shelbyville and grew up in Mattoon. She earned a bachelor's degree in business administration from Southern Illinois University. After college, she moved to Mississippi to live near her mother, and she worked for the Mississippi Department of Human Services for several years.

Caine moved back to Illinois and began working as a church secretary and volunteering at the Children's Museum of Illinois in Decatur. That spurred an interest in museums as a career, and Caine returned to school to earn a master's degree in historical administration from Eastern Illinois University, her husband said.

Shari L. Caine had worked at the Des Plaines History Center since 1997.

After an internship at the Tinker Swiss Cottage Museum in Rockford, Caine began working for the Des Plaines History Center in 1997 as its special projects coordinator. She later was promoted to curator and then became executive director in 2011 after the museum's previous executive director, Joy Matthiessen, died.

For the next 6½ years, Caine worked to build partnerships with groups like the Des Plaines Park District, expand the museum's staff and focus on preservation of Des Plaines artifacts. Just a few months ago, Caine was front and center as museum leaders unsuccessfully tried to persuade McDonald's not to raze a museum on the site of Ray Kroc's first restaurant on Lee Street in Des Plaines.

"She was the consummate professional who really knew her business in terms of historical museums and historical collections," said Mark Thompson, president of the museum's board. "She was a very good ambassador for us, as well as being very good at running the operations of the history center."

Thompson noted that Caine "helped get the history center on the map with a lot of people." In particular, she worked with the Park District to cosponsor its Fall Fest, and "that helped increase our visibility in the community."

"She was such a genuinely nice person," Thompson said.

Mohr, who joined the staff of the museum in 2013, met Caine in 2010, while she was serving on the board of Eastern Illinois University's Historical Administration Program Association, working to raise funds for scholarships for historical administration students. After the financial crisis, Caine also rebuilt the museum's staff from a one-person operation to its current staff of four, said Mohr, who has been serving as acting executive director since Caine's death.

"I learned a lot from her as a young professional, and she taught me all about Des Plaines history and how to do research here, and I can say that she was really a true friend," Mohr said. "I was able to go to her with anything that I had as far as the museum goes or in my personal life. She was there for anybody who knew her. And I might be biased, but I think we're now among the premier local history sites in the Chicago suburbs."

Shortly after marrying early this year, Caine was diagnosed with cancer in mid-February, her husband said.

In addition to her husband, Caine is survived by her mother, Mary Abbott; and her father, Ed.

Services were held.

Dorothy Eileen Hartigan Zazula, 100, of Greenwood, SC, widow of Paul Zazula, died Saturday, April 28, 2018 at Wesley Commons. Born in Chicago, Illinois, on November 5, 1917, she was the daughter of the late William and Mary Cullen Hartigan. She recently celebrated her 100th birthday with family and friends at Wesley Commons in Greenwood, SC. "Dot" was born at the end of WWI and lived to see WW2, the Korean War, Viet Nam War, Desert Storm, the ongoing wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, eighteen U.S. Presidents, life changing inventions and medical procedures too numerous to name. Finally, and most importantly, she lived to see the Chicago Cubs win the World Series.

Dorothy was preceded in death by her husband Paul and brothers Joseph, William and James "Ed", sisters Marie and Ruth and a son-in-law, Richard Monarch. She is survived by her brother Charles "Bob" Hartigan; her sons, William (Teresa) Zazula and James (April) Zazula; her daughter, Mary Anne Monarch; grandchildren, Ralph (Kelly), Catherine (Jason), Ruth (Corey,) James (Jennifer), Joshua (Michelle), Becky (Cory), Megan (Jon) and John (Sada); and sixteen great grandchildren.

Private services will be held in Chicago at a date to be announced. Rather than flowers or donations, the family asks only that you treasure the people you love and take every opportunity to tell them. Lastly, raise a glass for an Irish toast that "she be in heaven 40 years before the devil knows she's gone". Messages and photos can be shared with the family by visiting Dot's life tribute page at www.harleyfuneralhome.com

Bring the heat

As weather warms up, Cubs figure offense will start to match pitching

PAUL SULLIVAN
On the Cubs

The Cubs said goodbye to winter Sunday at Wrigley Field, hoping the transition to summer-like temperatures Monday will set them on a prolonged run.

They've won four straight and nine of their last 13 after sweeping the Brewers with a 2-0 win Sunday, and we're still waiting for the offense to break out.

For now the Cubs will take what they're given. A win's a win, so if the pitching is going to carry them for now, that's fine.

Tyler Chatwood continued the Cubs starters' mastery over the Brewers, throwing seven shutout innings and allowing only two hits. He started by walking Lorenzo Cain on four pitches but settled in after a mound meeting with catcher Willson Contreras three batters in.

"Trust your stuff, trust (that) we're going to have a good day," Chatwood recalled Contreras saying. "After that I feel like I was able to pound the zone pretty well."

The Cubs tossed three shutouts in the series and allowed only one earned run. They've won seven of eight over the Brewers and posted five shutouts against them in April. It was the first time in history they've accomplished that in a calendar month and the first time they've done it to one team in a season since shutting out the Mets five times in 1973.

"I knew it was pretty good, but

Baseball's unwritten rules get new entry

Anderson vows to keep fun in his game despite Perez's 'playoff' decree

BY TEDDY GREENSTEIN
Chicago Tribune

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Fight Club has defined rules. Vegas getaways? One rule.

Baseball?

There are rules, unwritten rules, amendments to unwritten rules and adjustments to those amendments.

"I'm not that smart to know all the unwritten rules," Rick Renteria said Sunday. "I wish somebody would put them in a book because I'd like to see them."

Renteria, the White Sox manager, has only been involved in professional baseball since 1980.

Can you bunt to break up a no-hitter? Does it matter if it's a blowout or three-run game? Is it kosher to steal a base down eight runs in the eighth inning? How about down six in the sixth at Coors Field?

And the trickiest of them all: What is the appropriate way to celebrate? And show frustration? (Ask Javier Baez and Clint Hurdle about that one.)

"The pitcher enjoys when they strike out people," White Sox third baseman Yolmer Sanchez said, "so why can't a hitter enjoy if you hit a homer?"

A new unwritten rule emerged Saturday night after Royals catcher Salvador Perez explained his reasoning for barking at Tim Anderson after Anderson's leadoff home run.

"He doesn't know about getting excited," Perez said. "You have to be in (the) playoffs to get excited, win a World Series."

Like opponents, viewers shutting down Hawks

Cable ratings drop 45 percent over last 3 years

PHIL ROSENTHAL
On media

What's the most significant loss for the Blackhawks in the three seasons since their last Stanley Cup championship?

Forget about players and playoff series, or even the postseason berth they failed to earn this year for the first time in a decade.

It's local TV viewers, who have bailed on the team in droves.

The Blackhawks' cable TV ratings on their home outlet have plummeted 45 percent in those three seasons, from a 4.3 average household rating in the Chicago area in 2014-15 to 2.36.

Combined with there being fewer TV homes in this market, that represents a loss of 71,708 local homes, per Nielsen estimates.

The Hawks averaged 149,521 households watching their games on what was then called CSN in 2014-15, but just 77,873 had the games on the rechristened NBC Sports Chicago this season.

Those numbers don't count the games cherry-picked for national TV or WGN-9. But as a benchmark of viewer interest and audience trends, it's not pretty.

The Blackhawks remain a big draw at the United Center, continuing to lead the league in average home attendance. This season they averaged 21,654, which is 109.8 percent of seating capacity, also tops in the NHL.

Also, even in decline, the Hawks still have more households watching them on their local regional sports network than any other American NHL

Draft done, Nagy sets sights on the next steps

DAN WIEDERER
On the Bears

Matt Nagy wore an energized smile Saturday night, like a kid bounding down the exit path of Goliath at Great America. For the first time in his football life, Nagy had experienced the NFL draft from the front car, fully immersed in the anticipation and anxiety and exhilaration.

When the 48-hour ride was over, the new Bears coach spoke with wide eyes. He could still feel his blood pumping and was eager to share the experience.

The first-timer excitement in his recap was undeniable.

"It's the unknown of literally up to the minute or second for these picks and what's going to happen," Nagy said, his voice picking up speed. "And just when you think you're in a good spot, all of a sudden there's a trade, for example. You know? And now it's the excitement and the unknown of, 'Oh, no, they're going to get our guy.' And then they don't. And then it's a bunch of high-fives and fist bumps and all that.

"So for me, I try to go in it with the happy-go-lucky attitude. If (something) doesn't happen, if there is a guy there or scenario there that doesn't play out, it wasn't meant to be. Let's move on, right? It wasn't meant to be. And you stay optimistic."

Just as notable: With the draft's adrenaline rush over, Nagy was racing to the next ride, excited to begin what he was brought here to do.

"Now," he said, "we can go out

TOP OF THE SECOND

By Steve Rosenbloom

Perez needs to grin, bear it

Who made Royals catcher Salvador Perez the new chief of the Fun Police?

Was it Fun Commissioner Clint Hurdle? Did the Pirates manager who didn't like Javier Baez's bat flip deputize Perez?

Or maybe they're undercover cops who pop up at the dumbest times while working off the same idiotic list of unwritten rules apparently aimed at trying to kill any sense of players having fun during a game.

If you missed it, White Sox shortstop Tim Anderson homered to lead off the second game of Saturday's split doubleheader. As he left the batter's box, he hollered something, in part "(Bleep), let's go," according to Perez.

"As soon as he scored, I was like, 'Hey, bro, that was the second time,' " Perez said, according to the Kansas City Star. "He did that on opening day. He did the same thing. He said a bad word. He don't even play a (bleeping) playoff game. He don't know about getting excited or not. He's got to be in the playoffs to be excited, like us. We got a World Series."

There's a lot of stupid to unpack there. When Perez says it's the second time, does that mean the Fun Police let players off with a warning before unmasking their silly selves?

When Perez mentions that Anderson said "a bad word" — seriously, dude?

When Perez mentions that Anderson hasn't even "played a playoff game" and thus doesn't "know about getting excited or not," does that mean there's an unwritten rule about when you can have fun, and if it's only allowed in the playoffs, then why did the Rangers fire on Jose Bautista for his epic bat flip?

I have respect for the way Perez plays the game and what he has meant to a World Series winner, but with the Royals holding the worst record in the American League, I would think Perez has enough issues without adding to the stupidity. Maybe yell at some of your teammates, pal.

The episode continued into the bottom of the second when Perez reached second and he and Anderson jawed. The benches emptied, but no punches were thrown, nobody was ejected, and eventually, Anderson and Perez shook hands.

Anderson's response was simple: "I'm a leadoff guy so my job is to get my teammates going. It's not about them, it's about my teammates. I play the game with a lot of energy, lot of confidence. Just having fun."

COLIN E. BRALEY/AP

Sox shortstop Tim Anderson and Royals catcher Salvador Perez exchange words Saturday.

Oh, and getting back to the potty-mouth stuff that so offended Perez, this is rich: "I don't have any problems with the guy hitting a homer, taking a couple steps, walk two steps and keep running. But when you start to get loud, to say some bad words like '(bleep) let's go' and all that (bleep), I don't like that. I don't like that. He has to respect my team and my pitcher. We're professionals in here."

Here's a tip, Sal: Saying you're offended by bad words and then using a bad word to make your point — "and all that (bleep)" — sort of undermines your point.

And here's another tip, Sal: You don't like Anderson screaming stuff after he homers, then get him out. That's a baseball rule too. It's even written down.

Star-Spangled no-shows

I go to 20-25 games every year and I started noticing the Cubs players don't come out of their new locker room for the national anthem. To prove this I started taking pictures of the field during the singing of the anthem. What you see is the visiting team stand in form in full attendance. When you zoom in on the Cubs dugout all you see is the Cubs managers and maybe one or two players, otherwise the dugout is empty. I find this disrespectful to the fans, veterans and the visiting team. Neal Katz

I hear this complaint quite often. The Cubs have the right to do what they want, even if it means not standing in front of the dugout for the anthem. Some players do and some don't. It's their prerogative. Every team is different, of course. During the Astros' recent trip to play the Sox, someone wrote "respect the national anthem" on the bulletin board.

You miss the obvious point (on postponements). Baseball season starts too early and ends too late! It's nothing but greed on the part of both the owners and the players. Of course that's not going to change. However, a group of teenagers could figure out how to schedule the beginning of the season in warm weather or dome locations. Most fans would like opening day to be a pleasant experience rather than freezing their butts off watching a bunch of players covered in snow suits not performing up to professional standards. Greg L.

Sorry, but it's unfair to make the warm-weather teams and dome teams play a heavier percentage of games in April when kids are in school and attendance is typically much smaller than during the summer months. I hear this argument a lot. I agree April is a problem for scheduling, but that's not the solution.

The Penguins have the NHL's highest local household ratings among U.S. teams, averaging 5.81 percent of Pittsburgh-area TV homes. But Pittsburgh is the nation's No. 24 market, so that represents only 66,437 homes.

The Bruins, No. 5 in local ratings with a 2.95 household rating in the No. 10 Boston-Manchester, N.H., market, are runners-up to Chicago in average households with 71,500.

But household TV ratings in the third-ranked Chicago market for the Blackhawks in 2017-18 were down 29 percent from 2016-17, which was down 16 percent from 2015-16, which was down 8 percent from 2014-15.

The 2.36 average household rating this season, or 2.36 percent of all TV households in the market, is the team's worst local cable performance since 2008-09, when the Hawks averaged a 1.26 average household rating or just 44,010 homes.

That was when the Blackhawks began a run of nine straight postseason berths that ended this spring. It also was the first season they put their entire schedule on TV. Both were critical factors in the franchise's rebirth and rise in popularity.

Chairman Rocky Wirtz, who took over the team from his late father, Bill, the season before, moved quickly to reverse the long-standing and long-puzzling anti-TV policy by televising a handful of home games on local TV in 2007-08.

At the time, the Hawks' average household TV rating that season was a scant 0.63, or 21,855 homes, while average United Center attendance was only 16,814.

That provides some indication of what the organization had built and how quickly the Jenga tower of fan support can be shaken and come crashing back to Earth.

Blackhawks local cable ratings peaked in the 2012-13 season with 5.38 household average, or 187,482 homes, but that was buoyed by two anomalies.

First, there was an abbreviated 48-game season because of a league lockout. Second, the Hawks got off to a phenomenal 21-0-3 start in the first half en route to their second of three championships in six seasons.

Last season on NBCSCH started on a high note, a 5.12 household rating for the opening victory over the two-time defending champion Penguins. But of the last 20 Hawks telecasts this year, a run that began in February, they lost 16.

Some teams can weather that kind of mediocrity and sustain their ratings. The Blackhawks clearly cannot.

They did better than their also-struggling United Center stablemates, the Bulls, whose local cable numbers declined 10 percent from a 2.0 rating in 2016-17 to 1.8 this past season on NBCSCH.

That's below the NBA's leaguewide average on local regional sports networks this season, which was a 2.4 rating, a 4 percent season-to-season increase. Total viewership for NBA national regular-season telecasts — on ABC, ESPN, TNT and NBA TV — was up 8 percent from a year ago to 1.28 million people.

What all teams aspire to be is a franchise that somehow has amassed a dedicated fan base that remains engaged even as losses mount and insulated from when their sport or league seemingly falls from favor.

That would be the Bears.

Despite the NFL's average total viewership falling 9.7 percent from 16.5 million people in 2016 to 14.9 million, the Bears' broadcast and cable household ratings rose 4 percent in the Chicago market last season, from an 18.6 average household rating in the 2016-17 to 19.4.

The Chicago market's reduced size means the Bears were on in almost 4,000 fewer homes even with the better rating, but that's a decline of only 0.6 percent in an audience that continues to exceed 640,000 local households each game.

Imagine what some enthusiasm for new Bears coach Matt Nagy and a few victories might do.

Meanwhile, if the Blackhawks failing to make the Stanley Cup playoffs this season has helped anyone, it may be the local baseball teams. Without even a first-round four-game ouster to compete against, their NBCSCH ratings are up for the Cubs and White Sox despite disappointing starts.

Heading into the weekend, the Cubs' local cable household ratings were up 20 percent compared with the same point last season, from 3.5 to 4.2. White Sox ratings were up 38 percent from 0.8 to 1.1. The number of unique viewers for each team's games via the NBCSCH live stream is up as well.

The ballclubs have been playing in hockey weather, while the Blackhawks have a few months to try to figure how to get viewers to warm to them once again. Winning would be a good start.

Predators beat Jets in 2OT; Capitals tie series with Pens

Associated Press

Kevin Fiala scored 5:37 into double overtime, and the Predators beat the Jets 5-4 on Sunday night in Game 2 in Nashville, Tenn., to even the Western Conference semifinal series.

The Presidents' Trophy winners had the NHL's best road record during the regular season, but the Predators got the split they needed after dropping the opener. The series switches to Winnipeg, where the Jets posted the league's best home record, for Game 3 on Tuesday night.

"It's huge, a big difference being 2-0 or 1-1," said Predators goalie Pekka Rinne, who had a career playoff-best 46 saves. "Obviously, we'll take this. It was an emotional game, and now it's time to go on the road and we need to steal a couple of wins in their building."

Craig Smith and Fiala skated up on a 2-on-1, and Jets defenseman Dustin Byfuglien failed to block Smith's cross-ice pass to Fiala who beat goalie Connor Hellebuyck with a backhander for the winner.

Ryan Johansen scored two goals, Viktor Arvidsson had a goal and two assists, and P.K. Subban had a goal and an assist as the Predators won their 100th postseason game as a franchise and coach Peter Laviolette's 50th with the team.

Filip Forsberg also had three primary assists for the first time in the postseason in his career.

Mark Scheifele scored two goals and had an assist. Byfuglien had a goal and an assist, and Brandon Tanev had a goal for the Jets.

Tanev tied it at 3, putting the puck past Rinne's right skate at 5:11 of the third. But Scheifele forced overtime with his fourth goal in this series.

Capitals 4, Penguins 1: Alex Ovechkin scored his seventh goal of the playoffs, Braden Holtby made 32 saves and the Capitals held on to beat the Penguins in Game 2 in Washington to even the second-round series.

After blowing a two-goal lead for the third time in these playoffs in Game 1, this time the Capitals built on it.

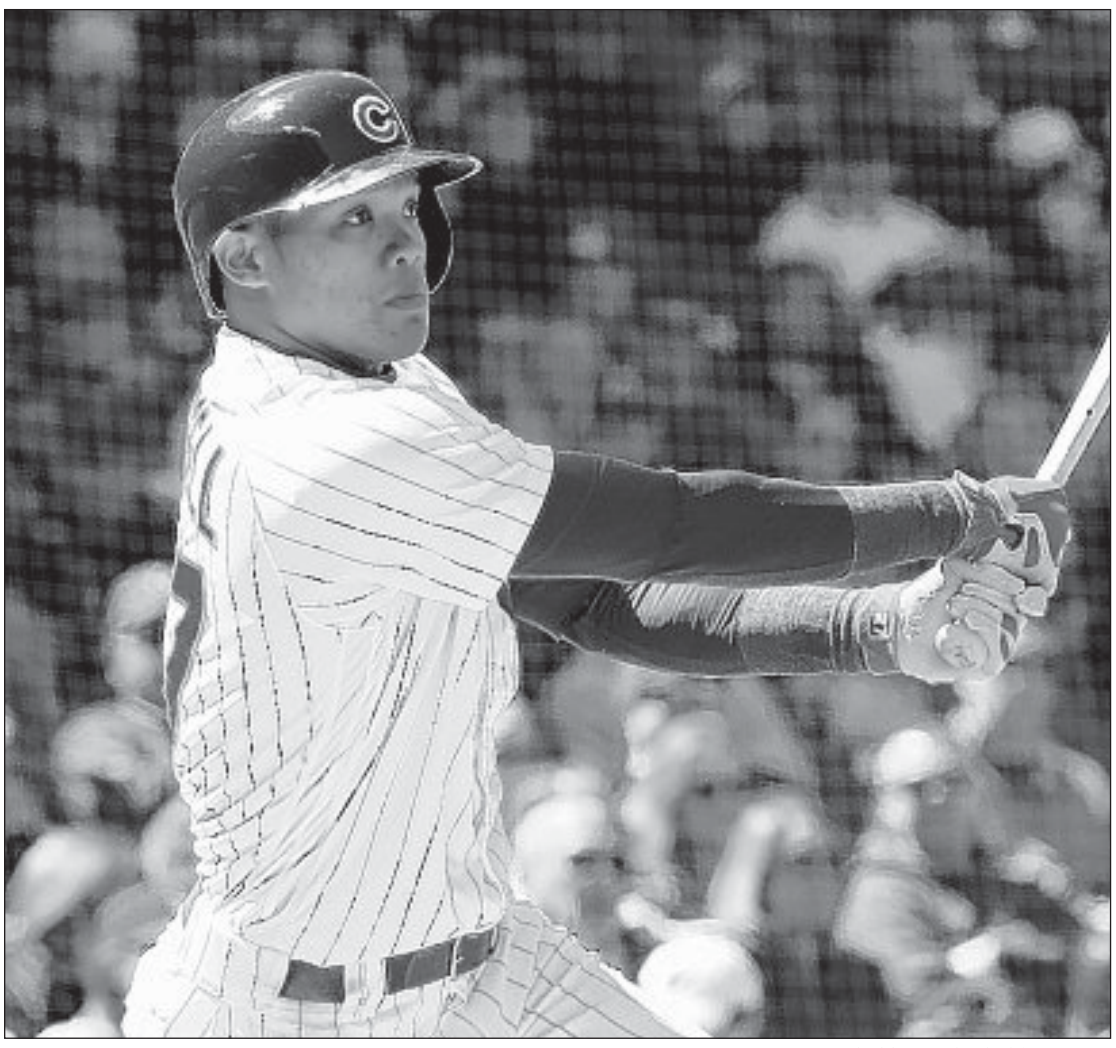
The Capitals also were the beneficiary of a questionable video review in the third period when the NHL ruled there were no definitive replays showing the puck crossed the goal line on what would have been the Penguins' second goal.

Jakub Vrana scored on the power play and Brett Connolly on a breakaway for the Capitals, who have beaten goaltender Matt Murray glove-side all five of their goals against him through two games.

Nicklas Backstrom scored an empty-netter to seal it with 6.1 seconds left.

Holtby robbed Sidney Crosby and Jake Guentzel with sliding pad saves to on the way to evening the series going into Game 3 Tuesday in Pittsburgh, which could mark the return of Penguins star Evgeni Malkin. In Malkin's third consecutive game out of the lineup with a leg injury, the Penguins felt his absence as it failed to mount much of an offensive attack.

CUBS 2, BREWERS 0



BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Addison Russell follows through on a fifth-inning triple, after which he scored on Tyler Chatwood's single.

Bringing the heat

that's pretty astonishing," manager Joe Maddon said.

Even more astonishing is the fact the Cubs hadn't won four straight while scoring three or fewer runs in a game since at least 1908. The starters did not allow an earned run in the sweep and have a combined 0.90 ERA over their last six starts, limiting opposing batters to a .145 average.

Of course, you'd still like to see Anthony Rizzo and Addison Russell break out, for Ian Happ to cut down on his strikeouts and for Contreras to improve on his .130 average with runners in scoring position.

When those things happen, as they should once the weather heats up, the Cubs could have the best-hitting lineup in the National League.

So far it's been a virtual rerun of last April for the Cubs offense, which means they've managed to keep their heads above water without being dominant.

At the end of last April, the Cubs had a slash line of .255/.339/.416 and averaged 5.1 runs per game while going 13-11. After Sunday's win, they had a slash line of .254/.336/.416 and averaged 5.2 runs per game with a 15-10 record.

In other words, it's basically the same offensive start, despite playing in brutally cold conditions at home and going without Rizzo, Ben Zobrist and Kris Bryant for stretches.

"The way we've played over the first three weeks, considering the weather and the delays and the cancellations, right around .500 is a really good record," closer Brandon Morrow said. "With the weather warming up a little bit, I think we're going to play better. And I think we've started that a little bit."

Maddon generally likes to shake up his lineup, which is a manager's prerogative. But recently he has stuck with right-handed-hitting Albert Almora Jr. and Javier Baez at the top against right-handers, seeing vast improvement from both, even though their 11-game hitting streaks both ended Sunday.

"Now they'll still chase on occasion, which you've got to expect," Maddon said. "But for the most part, the count gets deeper, you're not seeing that really big, all-out hack. You're seeing the ball go the other way."

Maddon said the fact the Cubs have been using all fields in their approach has been a factor in their being among the league leaders in runs. The switch from John Mallee to Chili Davis as hitting coach seems to already have had an effect.

"I don't think I've seen anybody go up there with just this heavy pull mode, trying-to-hit-home-runs kind of philosophy that we've had over the last several years," Maddon said. "I still believe we're going to do that. We're going to hit a lot of home runs this year.... We are, if anything, going back to an older method, which I think should be a contemporary method all the time."

Russell had an opposite-field triple off Zach Davies in the fifth and scored on Chatwood's RBI single. The Cubs added another run in the sixth on Russell's base-loaded sacrifice fly.

Jon Lester takes the hill Monday night when the Rockies come to town. Temperatures are expected to climb into the 60s, ushering in the first stretch of warm weather at home this season.

The Cubs survived the winter, while spring never arrived.

CUBS NOTES

Cubs send message if not statement

By Paul Sullivan
Chicago Tribune

It's too early to make any real statements, but no one in the Cubs clubhouse was downplaying the significance of their four-game sweep of the Brewers.

"Definitely (it's big), especially with all the hype rightfully surrounding them and the team that they have," closer Brandon Morrow said. "The starting staff was awesome, and we're scoring just enough and playing great defense behind us. It definitely was a big series."

The Cubs are 7-1 in the season series and won't see the Brewers again until June 11-13 at Miller Park.

But the Brewers are 15-6 against everyone else, so no one expects them to disappear from the National League Central race.

"When you can play someone in your own division eight times and do well, it's always a boon," manager Joe Maddon said. "I mean, they came in winning eight in a row. We'll take it. I have a lot of respect for them. Hey, we didn't beat up their pitching either, you know?

"So don't be deceived here. They pitched really well too. They played really well too. They're a very good ballclub, and we just happened to pitch a little bit better in this series."

Launch this: The Cubs continue to de-emphasize launch angles — the angle the ball flies after being hit — a stat that has been used extensively on MLB Network telecasts and the league's websites over the last few years.

"If you talk to (hitting coach Chili Davis), I'm sure he's not going to glorify the launch angle or whatever," Maddon said. "Everybody likes exit velocity. That's called line drives. Who does not want to hit a line drive?

"So that part (launch angles), I think, is kind of overemphasized. In the end I think it's kind of cute to write on a scoreboard. But to me, real hitting is about angles and presenting the bat head in a strike zone at the proper angle at the proper moment."

Kyle Schwarber said analytics have "kind of taken over this game right now," but it doesn't mean they have to treat every new-age stat as gospel.

"As much information as people can get in this game is cool, but for us there are things we're going to have to take and things that we're going to just leave alone," he said.

"That can be different for every guy. I'm not too worried about launch angle. I'm not too worried about exit velocity. I'm just worried about putting a good at-bat together and trying to do something good for the team that day."

Extra innings: Willson Contreras has begun using an interpreter for the first time since joining the Cubs in 2016. Contreras speaks and understands English well but asked for an interpreter after he believed he was misquoted recently while answering questions in English. ... Morrow has not allowed a run in 18⅓ consecutive innings dating to last year with the Dodgers, the second-longest active streak in the majors behind Andrew Miller's 18⅔ innings for the Indians. ... The last time the Cubs allowed only two runs in a four-game series was June 2-4, 1919, against the Pirates.

ROYALS 5, WHITE SOX 4

Cuthbert's homers too much for Sox

By Teddy Greenstein
Chicago Tribune

This five-game, four-day White Sox-Royals series featured a home-run barrage by Matt Davidson, a "respect the game" finger-wag by Salvador Perez, no weather delays (!), three Sox victories and an unlikely hero in the finale.

Cheslor Cuthbert, a backup infielder who probably did not go high in your fantasy baseball draft, hit two home runs in the Royals' 5-4 victory over the Sox.

His first snapped an 0-for-14 skid and ended a homerless streak of 109 at-bats that began in August. His second was a backbreaker for the Sox. It came one pitch after right fielder Daniel Palka failed to make a sliding catch on a ball hit by Jorge Soler with two outs.

"Just popped out of my glove after I got extended," Palka said. "Didn't quite squeeze it."

Hector Santiago, a reliever originally drafted by the Sox in 2006, allowed two runs in 4⅔ innings, saying: "I was just trying to get as deep as I can and keep us in the game. I think I did that for the most part. ... I'll take all the spot starts or innings they want me to eat up."

In a better place? A week before the end of the 2015 season, Tigers brass did something unusual: They sent pitcher Bruce Rondon home, citing an "effort level" that did not meet the team's standards.

"Other than saying that (general manager) Al Avila and myself completely agreed on it, there will be no other details or comment," then-Tigers manager Brad Ausmus said at the time.

Rondon pitched effectively (2.97 ERA, 0.96 WHIP) the following season, but the Tigers released him after an ugly 2017 (10.91 ERA).

Sox manager Rick Renteria spoke well of Rondon before Sunday's game, saying: "As far as I'm concerned, with us he's been great. You get no complaints from anybody in our clubhouse, any of the staff. We've asked him to do every single thing that we've wanted him to do, and he's doing it. We're really happy he's here."

Perhaps less happy after the 27-year-old right-hander surrendered Sunday's lead in the eighth. He hit Alcides Escobar with a 1-2 pitch, leading to Whit Merrifield's RBI single. The run was unearned because of a passed ball.

Remember him? Soler had a feast-or-famine day in right field. He lost his battle with the wind on a high fly by Palka that was misplayed into a two-run double. He later made an outstretched, sliding grab on a Yoan Moncada liner. The former Cub is having a solid year at the plate, hitting .307 with two homers and six RBIs. His on-base percentage is .436.

Returning the keys: Joe McEwing went 2-1 subbing for Renteria. The strategic highlights: 1) Getting a favorable lefty-righty matchup Saturday after allowing Royals manager Ned Yost to make a pitching change before McEwing inserted a pinch hitter; 2) Calling a safety squeeze in Friday's comeback victory.

No manager likes to give up an out with a bunt, but with one out, the alert Leury Garcia at third and the scuffling Adam Engel at the dish, the timing was right and the execution on point.

Renteria said McEwing is ready to land a big-league managing job: "The sooner he gets the shot, the happier he'll be and the sadder I'll be because I'll lose him."

Family man: Renteria returned to the team after attending his mother's funeral in Austin, Texas. Angela Renteria was 91.

"Our family is very grateful," he said. "We had a lot of outpouring from the game. We think she's in a much better place now. We see her laughing in our mind's eye now, and I'm sure she'll be up there cheering the White Sox on with my dad and probably arguing with me up there every now and then."

Anderson likes to have fun

Huh? So now there are different rules for the postseason?

Anderson hollered with excitement after leaving the batter's box, as he did on opening day after his two home runs at the same venue, Kauffman Stadium.

After Anderson tapped home plate Saturday, Perez said he told him: "I've hit some homers too. I keep running the bases. I don't get loud like you. That's the only thing I tell him. Keep doing what you're doing, bro. Have fun. It's a game, you know, but respect my team. That's it. He was mad about that."

After Perez reached second base in the first, Anderson said that he was not disrespecting the opponent. That chat lasted long enough for the benches to empty.

Acting Sox manager Joe McEwing got between the two, playing peacemaker: "They were just talking about the situation. But when players are that close, you just try to intervene and keep it that way."

Anderson got booed Saturday after his leadoff homer. And some Royals fans took pleasure in his misplaying a one-hopper and grounding into two double plays.

But Anderson, relaxed and upbeat, had no problem talking about the incident: "I'm a leadoff guy, so my job is to get my teammates going. It's not about the (other team). I play the game with a lot of energy, lot of confidence. Just having fun."

And if people don't appreciate him yelling after home runs?

"So what?" Anderson said. "If they don't like it, pick another vocation."

Anderson is the heartbeat of the Sox, a geyser of energy whom the team locked up ($25 million over six seasons) before he accrued a single year of service time.

The Sox adore him. Chicago fans seem to, as well.

"I love the kid to death," Renteria said. "I don't think he should rub anybody the wrong way. He's here to give us a spark, give his teammates a spark, and he never does it with the intent of disrespecting the opposition."

And yet if someone pens baseball unwritten rules, Anderson might get a chapter.

Benches cleared in August after Anderson jawed with Blue Jays pitcher Marcus Stroman after a strikeout. On the last homestand, Justin Verlander barked about Anderson's efforts to steal bases with the Sox down 5-0.

"He steals on 3-0 in a 5-0 game; that's probably not great baseball," Verlander said. "Maybe it is, maybe it isn't, I don't know. But he celebrated that, though."

So even within his own complaint, Verlander can't say where the line is.

Anderson played through grief last year after the death of close friend Branden Moss, the godfather to daughter Peyton.

"They're trying to take the fun out of baseball," Anderson said. "I went through too much last year to not have fun. I'm having fun this year. I'm going to be me."

Kingham sets down 1st 20 in debut

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Nick Kingham accomplished something Sunday that only one major-league pitcher had achieved in the last century.

In his big-league debut, Kingham carried a perfect game into the seventh inning and led the Pirates to a 5-0 shutout of the Cardinals. He joined Johnny Cueto in 2008 as the only pitchers in the last 100 years allowing one hit with no walks and at least nine strikeouts in his debut.

"That's how you plan it up, not to let anybody on," Kingham said. "It's incredible how it happened. Just kind of starting from the get-go, it went well. It's corny, but it took everybody. I'm really fortunate and really happy about it."

The right-hander retired 20 straight batters before Paul DeJong singled down the left-field line with two outs in the seventh. Kingham, 26, finished with nine strikeouts on 98 pitches, 72 for strikes.

More than the numbers, manager Clint Hurdle was pleased with Kingham's poise.

"Watching him, it was just his next start," Hurdle said. "It had to be more than that. He compartmentalized very well."

Elias Diaz went 3-for-4 with two RBIs as the Pirates won their fifth straight hours after Kingham was recalled from Triple A for a spot start.

Right-hander Luke Weaver (2-2) took the loss after allowing four runs on six hits with six strikeouts in $5^1/_3$ innings.

"(Kingham) obviously was having a good game, so you have to stay with him and put up the zeroes just like you normally would," Weaver said. "You just try to put that to the side and let him do what he's doing, and you focus on the task at hand.

"It was just a well-pitched ballgame from him."

ON THIS DATE

1958: Ted Williams of the Red Sox became the tenth major league player to reach 1,000 extra-base hits in a 10-4 loss to the Kansas City Athletics at Fenway Park.
1970: Cubs outfielder Billy Williams became the first player in National League history to play 1,000 consecutive games. The Cubs lost 9-2 to the Braves at Fulton County Stadium.
2017: Anthony Rendon had 10 RBIs, three home runs and six hits as the Nationals took advantage of Noah Syndergaard's injury and beat the Mets 23-5 to set a franchise scoring record.

AROUND THE HORN

■ Yankees: Gary Sanchez hit a two-run homer to fuel a 2-1 victory over the Angels, running the Yanks' winning streak to nine. CC Sabathia (2-0) gave up one run on five hits in seven innings. The Angels' Albert Pujols singled for his 2,996th hit.

■ Red Sox: Sandy Leon's go-ahead RBI single with two outs in the eighth provided a 4-3 victory that snapped the Rays' winning streak at eight. J.D. Martinez had four singles and drove in two runs. Rick Porcello gave up three runs on seven hits in $7^2/_3$ innings, striking out six and walking none.

■ Angels: Shohei Ohtani's injured left ankle has improved, but he will not pitch Tuesday against the Orioles. The Angels said the RHP still might start Wednesday's or Thursday's games.

■ Giants: Evan Longoria's three-run homer lifted the Giants past the Dodgers 4-2 as they took three of four in the series. Dodgers 1B Cody Bellinger was yanked in the fifth for what manager Dave Roberts called a lack of hustle after Bellinger stopped at second on a potential triple, then was picked off base.

■ Braves: Ronald Acuna Jr. doubled twice and reached base four times to cap his first week in the majors, and the Braves crushed the Phillies 10-1. Acuna is hitting .421 (8-for-19). Ozzie Albies drilled the game's first pitch for a homer, added a two-run double and scored three runs.

■ Mariners: Ryon Healy homered twice and had four RBIs, Robinson Cano and Mitch Haniger also went deep and the Mariners defeated the Indians 10-4 to take three of four. Haniger's home run was his 10th, tied for the major-league lead.

■ Astros: Gerrit Cole struck out 12 in $6^2/_3$ innings, and George Springer and Jose Altuve each had two RBIs in an 8-4 win over the A's. Cole has struck out 10 or more in four of his six starts.

■ Nationals: Gio Gonzalez struck out eight in seven innings, and Matt Wieters and Michael A. Taylor homered to beat the Diamondbacks 3-1. D'backs starter Robbie Ray left in the second with a strained oblique muscle.

Horschel, Piercy earn win

By Brett Martel
Associated Press

AVONDALE, La. — Billy Horschel and Scott Piercy won the Zurich Classic team event Sunday, closing with a bogey-free 5-under 67 in alternate-shot play.

Horschel became a two-time winner at TPC Louisiana. He captured his first PGA Tour title at the 2013 Zurich Classic when it was a traditional every-man-for-himself event.

Horschel and Piercy surged into the lead with birdies on the 10th and 11th holes. They followed that with seven pars to finish the event at 22-under 266 and hold off Jason Dufner and Pat Perez by a stroke. Dufner had a 14-foot putt for the tie on 18 but left it a foot short.

This was the second year of the Zurich's switch to a two-player team format.

The victory was Horschel's fifth and Piercy's fourth. They each earned $1.04 million and 400 FedEx Cup points. The result didn't count toward the world ranking.

Horschel and Piercy began the day three shots back but immediately surged into contention with birdies on the first two holes.

Heading into the final round, Kevin Kisner and Scott Brown, the 2017 runners-up in a playoff, topped a crowded leaderboard that featured 13 teams within four shots of the lead. By the time the top five teams had all reached the back nine, they were all within two shots of one another.

This time, Kisner and Brown faded on the back nine, with three bogeys and one double-bogey on 16 after going into the water. Their final-round 77 dropped them all the way back to a tie for 15th at 15 under.

Louis Oosthuizen and Charl Schwartzel were third.

TALLADEGA, Ala. — Joey Logano won at Talladega Superspeedway to end a nearly yearlong losing streak.

Logano's last victory was April 30 of last year at Richmond but his car failed inspection, the benefits from the win were stripped and it cost him a shot in the playoffs.

On Sunday, he made sure that losing streak didn't hit a full year.

"It feels so good to be back in victory lane. There's no feeling like that," Logano said. "It has been a long time coming. We knew the win was right around the corner. I don't have to worry about the whole playoffs thing anymore. We're in!"

He had one challenge from Kurt Busch, who pulled out of line in traffic and tried to catch Logano but had no help from a drafting partner and could not get the lead.

Logano screamed, "We're back!" on his radio as he crossed the finish line.

It is Logano's third career win at Talladega.

Busch came in second, his career-best finish at Talladega, as Ford drivers went 1-2.

Chase Elliott was third in a Chevrolet for Hendrick Motorsports, while Kevin Harvick was fourth in a Stewart-Haas Racing Ford. Ricky Stenhouse Jr. was fifth, David Ragan sixth and Aric Almirola seventh as Ford drivers took six of the seven spots.

Elliott said the Fords had too strong and steady of a strategy for him to have any chance at making a move to catch Logano.

"I thought for sure one of them wanted to win more than they showed," Elliott said. "If it was me, I would have wanted to do something or try. They were not interested in advancing. They were not going to help me move forward."

Busch said his intention was to work with Stenhouse, the defending race winner, to help SHR get a victory from Busch or Harvick.

"Two Stewart-Haas cars running second and third should have been able to pull this off," Busch said. "I'm happy that a Ford won. It wasn't the right one. Kevin was in good position. I was going to roll with him in any direction that I could. We just got broken up by Stenhouse.

Harvick felt Busch made his move too early.

"The Fords are so fast, we had five or six lined up there, and Kurt went a lap before I was ready," Harvick said.

James lifts Cavs in Game 7

Associated Press

LeBron James scored 45 points and got some needed help in Game 7 to stay unbeaten in the opening round of the NBA playoffs, leading the host Cavaliers to a 105-101 win over the Pacers on Sunday.

James improved to 13-0 in the first round and kept the Cavs' strange season alive — for the time being. It took everything James and the Cavs had to hold off the Pacers, who came in confident after a 34-point win in Game 6.

The Cavs will open their Eastern Conference semifinal series against the top-seeded Raptors on Tuesday in Toronto.

The 33-year-old James played 43 minutes Sunday, leaving late in the third quarter and heading straight to the locker room to be treated for cramps.

The Cavs got a huge lift from Tristan Thompson, who played just 24 minutes in the first six games but made a rare start as coach Tyronn Lue used his 34th different starting lineup this season. Thompson added 15 points and 10 rebounds, Kevin Love made four 3-pointers, and George Hill returned after missing three games with back spasms to score 11 in 19 second-half minutes.

"Five guys in double figures," said Lue, who has taken heat for some decisions in the series. "But I'm just happy for Tristan, because he's been here with us for so long and been through all of the things we've been through over the course of the last four years, and to step in and play the way he did."

Victor Oladipo scored 30 for the Pacers.

"Amazing," Oladipo said of James. "He did what he always does. It's not shocking. He's the best in the world, and that's what the best does."

Rockets 110, Jazz 96: James Harden scored 41 points and the Rockets raced out to a huge lead and cruised to an easy victory in Game 1 of their Western Conference semifinal.

The Rockets were up by 25 at halftime.

The Jazz, who didn't wrap up their series with the Thunder until Friday night, struggled to keep pace with the energy of the top-seeded Rockets, who hadn't played since eliminating the Timberwolves on Wednesday.

The Jazz got 21 points each from Jae Crowder and rookie Donovan Mitchell while playing without starting point guard Ricky Rubio, who sat with a strained left hamstring.

Celtics hobbled: Coach Brad Stevens said swingman Jaylen Brown likely won't play in Game 1 of the Celtics' Eastern Conference semifinal series against the 76ers on Monday.

Brown still has some soreness from a hamstring injury he suffered Saturday against the Bucks.

Stevens said he expects Brown, who averaged 14.5 points and 4.5 rebounds during the regular season, to be available at some point during the series.

At Memphis, Bears second-round draft pick Anthony Miller went from unheralded walk-on to the program's all-time leading receiver.

and do the X's and O's part."

Now comes the challenging part. And the fun part. Nagy must take the roster general manager Ryan Pace has strengthened in recent months and work to free the Bears from the last-place shackles they've worn since 2014.

There's no doubt the Bears have made improvements since January, starting with Nagy's arrival and ending with this weekend's seven-player draft haul. Pace's fourth Bears draft class — three players on offense, four on defense — seems promising enough. It is particularly so with what the Bears collected in the first two rounds, grabbing inside linebacker Roquan Smith, offensive lineman James Daniels and receiver Anthony Miller.

It's been impossible to find much dissent in the selection of Smith at No. 8. Last year's Butkus Award winner and SEC Defensive Player of the Year is as intelligent as he is tenacious. And Nagy gushed Saturday night when talking about what Smith will bring to an already strong defense. Nagy lauded Smith's passion and maturity. He envisions the young linebacker as a three-down playmaker, a matchup piece in coverage and a presence against the run.

"Everyone talks about (Roquan going) sideline to sideline," Nagy said. "But he is violent when he hits you."

Nagy seemed equally energized by the arrival of Miller, an aggressive playmaker whose competitive fire and drive complement his athleticism. The Bears have fallen in love with Miller's climb — from unheralded walk-on to the all-time leading receiver in Memphis history. They're equally smitten with the verve it has given Miller.

"Anybody who knows his story knows that he has every right to have that confidence," Nagy said.

That Miller is one of six new pass catchers the Bears have added since March — a group that also includes Allen Robinson, Trey Burton, Taylor Gabriel, Bennie Fowler and Javon Wims — feels significant. Suddenly, the days of Mitch Trubisky slinging passes to Josh Bellamy and Markus Wheaton seem like a distant memory.

And that certainly contributes to the eagerness Nagy has to start turning his team loose on the field.

"My whiteboard upstairs is starting to get kind of busy," Nagy said. "And it gets busy with circles. Now it can start getting busy with names."

Drawing definitive conclusions on a draft class right after it is formed remains one of the NFL's hardest-to-avoid traps. But Pace, at least, showed appropriate awareness on that front Saturday night. He has lived through 34 losses in three seasons in Chicago and understands the improvements the Bears have made to this point in 2018 are all relative.

"There are still things we want to accomplish," Pace said. "There are still pieces we want to add."

Pace called these last four months "a blur," a proper description to summarize January's coaching search, March's free-agency frenzy and another grueling draft process.

"But I feel so good right now," Pace said. "The whole building is energized. There's just such a positive vibe around here."

To his right, Nagy was nodding, pumped to take that vibe plus his new roster and do something with it. His eagerness for the next steps was obvious.

NFL DRAFT

Broncos get an A-, Saints get an eh?

By Mark Maske
Washington Post

Another NFL draft is over. Let's spotlight the teams that did the best and worst.

Best

Broncos: A- The Broncos, thought to be in the QB market, reacted appropriately when Bradley Chubb fell to them at No. 5 overall. Pairing Chubb with Von Miller as a pass-rushing dynamic duo could move the Denver defense back toward dominant. Second-round WR Courtland Sutton and the two third-rounders, RB Royce Freeman and CB Isaac Yiadom, are capable of being solid contributors.

Giants: A- Taking RB Saquon Barkley second overall will help the Giants to get the most out of what's left of QB Eli Manning's career. Barkley could be a Pro Bowler soon. Getting G Will Hernandez in the second round and pass rusher Lorenzo Carter in the third round were solid moves.

Cardinals: A- Whether there were, by Josh Rosen's calculations, nine mistakes or three mistakes made by the teams drafting ahead of the Cardinals, they made an excellent move to trade up to get Rosen at No. 10. He's the most polished QB in this class and could take over as the starter relatively quickly. WR Christian Kirk midway through the second round was a good value.

Worst

Seahawks: C- It's fine if Seattle wanted RB Rashaad Penny, but the Seahawks probably didn't need to use the No. 27 overall selection to get him. The defense is in serious transition and the Seahawks didn't begin addressing that until the third round.

Browns: C- The Browns are far closer to respectable than they were when this draft began. But this is about making the most of your draft-pick resources. It's difficult to say that new GM John Dorsey did that. The Browns went with QB Baker Mayfield and CB Denzel Ward with the Nos. 1 and 4 overall selections when they could have had Sam Darnold and Bradley Chubb.

Raiders: C- Coach Jon Gruden already has been busy defending the Raiders' picks. Addressing the offensive line wasn't a bad idea, but it's not clear whether the Raiders' offensive-line moves in this draft will work out. Taking T Kolton Miller at 15th overall probably was too high.

Saints: D+ Their big trade-up in the first round for DE Marcus Davenport was puzzling. Davenport very well could become a productive pass rusher, although he must make a significant jump from Texas-San Antonio. But to give up next year's first-round pick as part of the trade package to move up 13 spots to get Davenport was curious, to say the least. The Saints seem to think they are adding a final piece or two to a championship team and they can afford to mortgage some of the future. They'd better be right.

Joc Pederson hits an RBI single against the Giants in San Francisco on Saturday. Pederson hi t three home runs against the Astros in the World Series but is riding the bench this season.

Benched but not broken

Pederson finds calm despite drastically reduced playing time with the Dodgers

By Mike DiGiovanna
Los Angeles Times

It was an indelible image from last year's World Series, Joc Pederson soaring around the bases after his Game 6 home run, screaming and pounding both fists on his chest. The Dodgers outfielder was so euphoric he said he almost blacked out circling the bases.

"It was unforgettable," Pederson recalled, "but the memory seems a little distant right now."

Pederson, 26, has to strain his eyes to see that summit from the valley in which he now stands. A near hero in the World Series with three homers against the Astros, Pederson has been reduced to a bench player scrambling for at-bats.

Three years removed from an All-Star rookie season in 2015, two years removed from a 25-homer, 68-RBI season in 2016, Pederson is so hungry for playing time he has been working out at first base, a position he has never played, in an effort to increase his versatility.

As humbling as it has been for Pederson, the Dodgers see his demotion as an opportunity for growth.

"I think he needed this," third base coach Chris Woodward said. "Throughout his career he was so good at every level, and he had early success in the big leagues, that it kind of leads to an 'I'm-good-enough' attitude. Not that he didn't work hard, but I think he was a little content at times.

"You see him now, he doesn't take anything for granted. Me and (manager Dave Roberts) were talking about this. The first time you're kind of tested and you have to earn your playing time ... I'm not saying he didn't earn it before, but he's definitely earning it now."

The left-handed-hitting Pederson started 137 games in center field in 2015 and 114 games there in 2016. His power — he had on-base-plus-slugging percentages of .763 in 2015 and .847 in 2016 — helped to offset his lengthy slumps and a combined 300 strikeouts.

The emergence of leadoff man Chris Taylor as an offensive force and a competent center fielder pushed Pederson out of his spot midway through 2017, and Peterson's extended slump and the acquisition of Curtis Granderson led to a demotion to Triple A in August.

Pederson revived his career with his World Series outburst, batting .333 (6-for-18) with three home runs, two doubles and five RBIs. His three-run homer highlighted a 6-2 win over the Astros in Game 4, and his solo shot capped a 3-1 Game 6 win.

But the surprise emergence of left fielder Matt Kemp as one of the team's most productive hitters this month pushed Pederson to the bench again. Pederson had started nine of 26 games and was batting .286 with one home run and 11 RBIs after Sunday's 4-2 loss to the Giants.

"I'm going to make the best of the situation no matter what," Pederson said. "I think by fighting it, by telling yourself it's tough, it doesn't put you in the right mind frame to maximize the opportunities you get. So being more positive, I think, will always be better than being negative about any situation you're in."

Pederson's Zenlike approach has impressed his bosses.

"I haven't seen one moment where he's kind of pouted," Woodward said. "I'm proud of him because he's sticking to it every day, he's sticking to a swing that he feels will give him productive at-bats when he's not getting playing time, which is probably the hardest thing to do in baseball. His at-bat quality has been really good, his attitude is really good, his preparation is really good."

Pederson started consecutive games for the first time this season the weekend before last and homered off Stephen Strasburg in a 4-0 win over the Nationals. He drew a seven-pitch pinch walk to start a tiebreaking seventh-inning rally against the Marlins on Tuesday night. He had two hits in Wednesday's loss to the Marlins.

"His swings are better, they're under control, they're consistent," Woodward said. "He hit a tough pitch off Strasburg. That was huge for us. He's staying in the zone, not swinging at balls."

With the offense struggling, Roberts can't afford to sit Kemp, who is hitting .310 with four homers and 12 RBIs. But Pederson could play more at the expense of right fielder Yasiel Puig, who is batting .193 with no homers and seven RBIs.

Joc Pederson celebrates his home run in Game 6 of the 2017 World Series against the Astros in Los Angeles.

"Joc's work has been very professional, very consistent ... he's handled (his role reduction) really well," Roberts said. "I've talked about his at-bat quality. I'm going to make more of an effort to get him some more starts."

Woodward believes Pederson's tenure as a utility player will be temporary.

"I don't see him being a backup player his whole career," the coach said. "He's too talented."

Pederson, who is making $2.6 million this season, remains confident about his future with the organization that drafted and developed him.

"I believe in myself, and I know I belong here," Pederson said. "I'm going to get some opportunities, and I'm going to be prepared for those. ... You can always look at the future and try to predict, but the game is so crazy, a lot of crazy things happen."

Like Kemp, a player the Dodgers had every intention of trading this winter, emerging as a No. 3 hitter. And Pederson rising from the rubble of a brutal 2017 to star in the World Series after not making the playoff roster in the division series and playing sparingly in the championship series.

"I guarantee you no one would have bet on me when I was in Triple A to do what I did in the World Series," Pederson said. "It's me versus myself, really."

Talent has never really been an issue with Pederson. Finding a consistent approach and swing that leads to reliable production has been the biggest challenge — one that, oddly enough, Pederson seems to be gaining with the least consistent playing time of his four-year career.

"Yeah, it's been a strange start to the season, and I've already been through a lot in my career, but it makes me a better person," Pederson said. "There have been some high roads and some failures, you know?

"I'm learning why I've struggled at times and how to be a consistent everyday player rather than a two-week best player in the league and a two-week worst player in the league."

TONI L. SANDYS/WASHINGTON POST

Sidney Crosby (87) skates away with his stick raised after scoring the winning goal against Capitals goaltender Braden Holtby in the third period of Game 1 on Thursday night.

Intensity turned up to 11

If 27 years of playoff history is a reliable guide, Penguins will prevail over Capitals in East semis

By Will Graves | Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Sidney Crosby doesn't think the Penguins have some sort of mystical edge over the Capitals. He doesn't believe that all those series and all those years and all that dominance don't mean a thing with the two longtime rivals meeting in the playoffs for the 11th time in the Eastern Conference semifinals.

Of course, it's kind of easy to say that when you're on the side that always wins.

Eras change. Stars change. Coaches change. Styles change (well, sort of). The result when the Penguins are on one bench and the Capitals are on the other and a spot in the next round in the pursuit of a Stanley Cup is on the line does not. The Penguins have won nine of the 10 previous meetings.

Epic collapses. Unlikely comebacks. Wild finishes. Emotional scar tissue from losses that come from being the hockey equivalent of Sisyphus. Hall of Famers (and future Hall of Famers) all over the place —— particularly if you wear black and gold.

Crosby, Alex Ovechkin and company have a lot to live up to. But before this series is complete, let's press our finger on the bruises — or relive the joy, depending on your point of view — of the magic and misery that came before.

The round: Patrick Division finals.

The series: Penguins in 5.

The defining moment: The Capitals scored three times in the first 10:26 of the third period of Game 2 in Pittsburgh to take the lead. Randy Gilhen — he of the three career playoff goals — jumped onto the ice during a delayed Capitals penalty and emerged from a sea of bodies to tie it with less than five minutes left in regulation. Kevin Stevens won it with a wrist shot off a pretty setup by Ron Francis 8:10 into overtime to even the series. The Capitals scored three goals total the rest of the way as the Penguins advanced to the conference finals for the first time in franchise history.

Gut-punch level: 2. The massively talented Penguins had seven Hall of Famers on the roster (eight if you include the ageless and sure-to-be inducted Jaromir Jagr) and won their first Cup two rounds later.

The round: Patrick Division semifinals.

The series: Penguins in 7.

The defining moment: The Capitals sprinted to a 3-1 series lead. After getting drilled at home in Game 5, they led 4-2 four minutes into the second period of Game 6. And then Mario Lemieux happened. Super Mario scored or assisted on three power-play goals over the final 30 minutes as the Penguins tied the series, then shut the Caps down in Game 7, a 3-1 win on the road to propel them to a second straight Cup.

Gut-punch level: 8. The Pens had a bit of a Cup hangover after winning it all in '91 and appeared on the verge of collapse after the Capitals crushed them 7-2 in Game 4. And then, well, consider this the start of a trend.

The round: Eastern Conference quarterfinals.

The series: Capitals in 6.

The defining moment: The Caps again jumped out to a 3-1 series lead only to lose Game 5. Back home for Game 6, the Capitals went up 3-0 but watched the Penguins cut it to 3-2 after the first period. Momentum teetering, Caps defenseman Calle Johansson beat Tom Barrasso 1:25 into the second to restore their two-goal lead, and they closed out the Penguins for the first — and only — time.

Gut-punch level: 6. The Penguins viewed 1994 as a redemption tour after their bid for a three-peat was derailed by the Islanders in the 1993 playoffs. The Penguins won the Northeast Division and had the third-best record in the league only to lose to a Capitals team that started the season 0-6 and fired coach Terry Murray at midseason and replaced him with Jim Schoenfeld.

The round: Eastern Conference quarterfinals.

The series: Penguins in 7.

The defining moment: Lemieux sat out the lockout-shortened 1994-95 season due to fatigue and the Capitals took advantage in the playoffs. The Caps — stop us if you've heard this before — headed to Pittsburgh with a 3-1 lead and jumped ahead four separate times in front of a stunned crowd at the Igloo. Kevin Stevens, however, drew the Penguins even with 8:18 left in regulation and Luc Robitaille kept their season alive with his OT winner 4:30 into the first extra period to give the Penguins a 6-5 victory. They went on to win Games 6 and 7 by a combined 10-1.

Gut-punch level: 9. For a franchise that didn't exactly have a reputation for answering when pushed, the Capitals' remarkable play in Game 5 went against the grain and they didn't have to worry about Lemieux. And yet ... they lost.

The round: Eastern Conference quarterfinals.

The series: Penguins in 6.

The defining moment: Make it defining moments, all of them seeming to come in an epic Game 4. The Capitals led 2-1 and didn't have to contend with Lemieux after he was ejected late in the second period for fighting Pat Peake. Regulation ended tied at 2. So did the first overtime. And the second (after the Caps' Joe Juneau failed to convert the first overtime penalty shot in NHL history). And the third. With 45 seconds left in the fourth extra period, Petr Nedved threw a shot from outside the left circle that slipped by Olaf Kolzig and into the net to tie the series. The Pens captured the next two to advance to the conference finals.

Gut-punch level: They might not have invented the number yet to rate the emotional toll of this one. Say "Nedved" around Caps fans at your own risk.

The round: Eastern Conference quarterfinals.

The series: Penguins in 5.

The defining moment: The Capitals lost 7-0 in Game 1 but had a chance to even the series when Game 2 went to overtime. Jagr, however, effectively ended the competitive portion of things with a power-play goal 5:49 into overtime as the Penguins — who finished a middling third in the Atlantic Division — knocked off the Southeast Division champions with relative ease.

Gut-punch level: 3. The Caps' record was a bit of a mirage in a division that included the teams (Atlanta and Tampa Bay) that finished with the two worst records in the NHL.

The round: Eastern Conference quarterfinals.

The series: Penguins in 6.

The defining moment: The last great stand of the Lemieux-Jagr partnership. Super Mario scored the game-winning goals in both Game 2 and Game 5 and Martin Straka's OT winner finished off the Capitals in six games. The Caps were built on coach Ron Wilson's defensive style, but the Penguins — as they almost always did — found a way to squeak by anyway. They allowed just 10 goals in six games.

Gut-punch level: 4. At this point, the rivalry had gotten to the point where the Capitals appeared ready for the other shoe to drop.

The round: Eastern Conference semifinals.

The series: Penguins in 7.

The defining moment: Let's just go with the whole thing. The NHL pulled itself out of the 2004-05 lockout largely on the back of Crosby and Ovechkin. Meeting in the playoffs for the first time, they somehow exceeded massive expectations. They put up matching hat tricks in the Capitals' Game 2 victory. The Penguins responded by ripping off three straight wins, only to have the Caps force a Game 7 with an overtime victory in Pittsburgh in Game 6 (helped by three Ovechkin assists). Would this be the year? Spoiler alert: No. At home in Game 7, the Capitals collapsed. Crosby opened the scoring, the Penguins were leading by four goals just 2:12 into the second and that was it.

Gut-punch level: 7.5. It probably should be higher because of the Caps' unusual rally in Game 6 on the road, but the Penguins were coming off a season in which they were a Stanley Cup runner-up and just proved to be more mature when it mattered.

The round: Eastern Conference semifinals.

The series: Penguins in 6.

The defining moment: The Pens were in a malaise in December and fired coach Mike Johnston in favor of Mike Sullivan. General manager Jim Rutherford overhauled the roster to one built on speed and depth. All three goal scorers in the clinching Game 6 win — Carl Hagelin, Nick Bonino and Phil Kessel — were brought in by Rutherford to ramp up the team's quickness. Together they formed the "HBK" line, and Bonino's jam into the net 6:32 into overtime showcased the depth the Penguins needed to take some of the pressure off Crosby and Evgeni Malkin.

Gut-punch level: 9. The Capitals captured the Presidents' Trophy by posting 120 points, 11 more than the next-best team. They had home ice and a Vezina Trophy-winning goaltender in Braden Holtby, who lost in regulation only nine times during the regular season. Still, Holtby was outplayed — just a tad — by 21-year-old rookie Matt Murray.

The round: Eastern Conference semifinals.

The series: Penguins in 7.

The defining moment: Maybe Matt Niskanen's controversial shot to Crosby's head in Game 3 that forced Crosby to miss Game 4? The Capitals' comeback from a 3-1 deficit to force Game 7? Let's go with Penguins goaltender Marc-Andre Fleury. The winningest netminder in franchise history had lost his job to Murray over the course of the season but was pressed into action when Murray was injured before Game 1 of the Pens' opening-round series against the Blue Jackets. Fleury was brilliant, no more so than in Game 7 against the Caps. He stopped 29 shots for his ninth career playoff shutout, including a save on an Ovechkin one-timer with the butt end of his stick late in the second period to preserve a one-goal lead.

Gut-punch level: 6. Why 6? Call it the emotional calluses of disappointment. If this loss had been to, say, the Rangers, it might have been more traumatic. But this is what happens when the Capitals play the Penguins.

Composed by a pimply but prodigiously talented 23-year-old, conceived as a concept album headlined by the lead singer of Deep Purple and episodically eclectic all the way to its glittery boots, Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Jesus Christ Superstar" really had no business morphing into, inarguably, the most successful and loved British musical of all time.

But it did.

If you'd told the average Chicago opera lover in 1971 that the rock show on Broadway that fall, the one with the screaming guitars and the screeching tenors, the one charged with everything from irreligiosity to anti-Semitism to blasphemy to just not really being a musical, would in 2018 command the storied stage of the Civic Opera House, she would have declared so dystopian a future to be a cultural Armageddon utterly inconceivable in our beloved Middle West.

Jo Lampert gives an arresting performance as Mary Magdalene.

But here we are. As first conceived in 2016 on the outdoor stage of Regent's Park in London but recast and massively expanded for the North American premiere of Timothy Sheader's new production, "Jesus Christ Superstar" has arrived at the Lyric.

And it's fabulous.

Why? Let me tell ya what's a-happening.

First and foremost, Sheader does not impose some faux directorial conceit, some ungodly attempt to unify the narrative of the show. Over the years, I've seen 'em all, kids, and they never work. "Jesus Christ Superstar" is an album: Each song has about as strong a relationship with another as your typical Track 2 did with Track 3. By foregrounding hand-held mics and sometimes even mimicking the classic album fade-outs, Sheader and conductor Tom Deering embrace rather than resist those sudden shifts and thus the experience is, structurally, as close as I have ever seen this show be to listening to a beloved conceptual album, be it "American Idiot," "The Who's Tommy" or, well, "Jesus Christ

"SNL" alum Julia Sweeney sits in front of the Art Institute of Chicago, which she visits weekly.

Sweeney is set for first show as a stand-up

By Morgan Greene
Chicago Tribune

Have you ever laughed, loudly, in the Thorne Miniature Rooms at the Art Institute of Chicago?

Probably not. Serious place.

But know that if you ever walk past the bronze lions and embark on a long stroll through the Michigan Avenue museum with Julia Sweeney, you just may find yourself cracking up in front of a mini Massachusetts drawing room.

On a recent afternoon, during her weekly visit to her favorite museum, Sweeney — former "Saturday Night Live" cast member, creator of the awkwardly androgynous character Pat, devout secular humanist and Wilmette resident — talks about comedy, family and everything she still wants to do.

First on the list: stand-up comedy. Her debut, "Julia Sweeney: Older and Wider," officially opens Wednesday at Second City.

Despite the self-deprecation in the title, Sweeney is buoyant and brimming with ideas. Right now she's thinking about "comeditorials," funny one-hour lectures she wants to create on potential topics like Fasting and Insulin Resistance, Saudi Arabia Wahhabism and Motherhood and the Pleistocene. She's thinking about her favorite comedians working right now (full list logged on her phone). She's thinking about "Lady Bird," her favorite movie of last year, which she's seen five times. She wants to know what you think about "Phantom Thread."

Sweeney's passion for everything, even an age-old wooden horse on display in a clinical corner of a gallery, is infectious.

"When I was young, I thought the only people who had a sense of humor were our generation," Sweeney says, wandering past Chinese jars and figures preserved from long-ago dynasties. "And now I know that ancient people laughed. We've lived and

Shedd vet bound for Africa to rescue thousands of poached rare tortoises

By Steve Johnson
Chicago Tribune

The radiated tortoise is considered one of the most beautiful tortoises in the world and, in part because of its gorgeous, geometrically patterned shell, one of the most endangered.

But the scene that greeted Madagascar authorities when they entered a house April 10 because of foul smells would have been horrific no matter how significant or charismatic the animals inside.

Almost 11,000 of the reptiles native to the southern portion of the southeast African island were found throughout the structure, and they apparently had been there weeks, if not longer, without food or water, stockpiled in preparation for becoming part of the illegal pet trade, most likely in Asia.

"As soon as I saw that, I reached out to some of my colleagues at the Turtle Survival Alliance to see if they might need some help," said Dr. Matt O'Connor, a Shedd Aquarium veterinarian.

The answer, as O'Connor knew it would be, came back "Yes."

"Honestly every day there's probably a confiscation somewhere, but on the order of like 20 to 50 animals," said the Glen Ellyn native, 36. "But rarely is there one of this size. In sheer numbers it's the worst one I'm aware of."

So O'Connor is scheduled to get on a plane Monday morning and fly there, part of a 13-person team embarking on a two-week rescue stint, helping to care for the animals with the hope of eventually rereleasing them to the wild. His travel is being funded by his employer, which has also set up a donations page to help the tortoise rescue effort.

"It's pretty much all bad and then some," he said, although the good news is that even under such stresses, turtles are resilient.

O'Connor's expertise will be especially important because in 2015, he was part of a team that traveled to the Philippines to care for a stash of 4,000 confiscated Palawan turtles. That means he's done in-the-field triage on turtles, determining which animals merit the most attention.

"The guy the Shedd Aquarium is sending, he's a veteran of this kind of situation, and we're really happy to get him there," said Turtle Survival Alliance President Rick Hudson. "It's huge getting people that are experienced in dealing with the symptoms you see in these big confiscations" — dehydration, malnutrition and infection, mostly.

ERIN HOOLEY/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Shedd veterinarian Matt O'Connor, shown Sunday at the aquarium, said the Madagascar confiscation "is the worst one I'm aware of."

"We don't even have electricity there. We need people that can make judgments without a whole lot of diagnostics," he said.

Zoos and aquariums have become critical parts of such rescue efforts. Shedd, for instance, has sent animal care specialists to the

Chris Evans portrays Captain America in the superheroes-packed record-breaker "Avengers: Infinity War."

'Infinity War' opens with record $250M

A whole lot of superheroes added up to a whole lot of ticket sales.

The superhero smorgasbord "Avengers: Infinity Wars" opened with predictable shock and awe, earning $250 million in box office over the weekend and edging past "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" to set the highest opening weekend of all time.

"Infinity War," which brings together some two dozen superheroes in the 10-year culmination of Marvel Studio's "cinematic universe," also set a global opening record with $630 million, even though it hasn't yet opened in China, the world's second-largest movie market. It opens there May 11.

According to Walt Disney Co.'s estimates Sunday, "Infinity War" overwhelmed the previous global best ("The Fate of the Furious" with $541.9 million) but narrowly topped "The Force Awakens" in North America. The "Star Wars" reboot debuted with $248 million in 2015, which would translate to about $260 million accounting for inflation.

But both intergalactic behemoths belong to Disney, which now owns nine of the top 10 opening weekends ever — six belonging to Marvel releases. That includes "Black Panther," which has grossed $1.3 billion since opening in February and still managed to rank fifth at this weekend's box office, thanks partially to Marvel fans self-programming a double-feature.

ASK AMY

College deal may not be enforceable

Dear Amy: My son is graduating from high school. I made him sign a note stating that if I helped him edit his college essays, he would practice his writing skills over the summer. (Many books recommend that parents, teachers and guidance counselors should help students edit their college essays, and that obtaining feedback is valuable.)

My child has now been accepted into two honors colleges — partly due to these submitted essays and partly due to a relatively high SAT score, GPA and extracurricular activities.

These honors programs require advanced writing skills. I know, however, that his writing skills are weak and I fear he will do poorly. He has a B in AP English, mainly because of multiple-choice tests.

I believe he has the ability to write well, if he practices, but with less than three months to go before he leaves for college, and after finding no suitable practice books, how should I make him practice?

— Needing Much Practice

Dear Needing: You seem to be claiming at least partial credit for getting your son into two college honors programs. At the same time, you slyly diminish his work and accomplishments.

By your estimation, he should not have been admitted, because he cannot do the work. You, however, seem like a good candidate.

The contract you made your son sign says: "I'll polish your work so you can get into a good school. But then you'll have to guarantee that you'll learn how to polish your own work." You haven't offered any tools for him to fulfill his part of the contract.

Your son should succeed in college — or not — on his own. Given the level of your involvement so far, he could face a shock when he gets there. Many students do, but they rise to the challenge by developing study strategies, visiting the writing center or asking professors for help.

It can be very hard for an involved parent to disengage, and yet you must. (When I was pushing one of my daughters to attend a specific university, she snapped: "If you like it so much, why don't you go there?")

Lower the heat on this exercise. If your local community college offers a summer English or writing course, encourage him to take it. Also encourage him to read, read, read.

Dear Amy: My accomplished and gorgeous friend is going through her second divorce. She has two small children.

Everyone who loves her supports her decision to divorce wholeheartedly, as her second husband was abusive and she stayed in the marriage much longer than was healthy. However, during this difficult time she became involved with a married work supervisor. It was all predictable: He said his marriage was in name only; he was planning to divorce, etc.

Several months later, he is still married and living with his wife, and the only prospect he offers is that someday he will separate, but won't ever divorce her because of all the property they share.

It has been painful to see my friend suffer due to false promises and an uncertain future.

I'm tired of listening and offering support because she goes back to idealizing this guy, who seems nothing but bad news to her (and her children). How do I support her but not alienate her? I am afraid this will happen if I start saying that she should run as fast as she can.

— Worried Friend

Dear Friend: You should suggest that she see a therapist to examine her choices and to work through her problems.

Your focus should always pivot back to her children: What is best for them? How do her choices affect them?

She needs to absorb this truism: "When you always do what you've always done, you'll always get what you've always got."

Dear Amy: I was disappointed to see that in your response to "Confused," you implied that community colleges are not "full-time schools." Community college is definitely full time. Students there take full course loads and work just as hard as other college students.

— Upset

Dear Upset: I am so sorry I made this error. I should have written "four-year" instead of "full time," and I apologize. I heartily support the mission and success of community colleges.

'WESTWORLD' EPISODE 2 RECAP

5 things to know about back story show

By William Lee and Nina Metz
Chicago Tribune

Each week William Lee and Nina Metz recap and discuss the second season of "Westworld," which airs at 9 p.m. Sundays on HBO.

Note: Spoilers ahead

Dolores is still on the rampage, while William is trying to piece together the final game devised for him by Robert Ford. We're also getting important flashbacks to a time before the park even opened.

1. Westworld's origin story comes into focus

Nina Metz: So, this is fun because it gets us out of Westworld — yay! — and into the real world, back in time several decades when the hosts were in their final stages of readiness. Ford (Anthony Hopkins, whom we only hear rather than see this season) and his partner Arnold (one day to be reborn as the android Bernard) are ready to show off their handiwork to Logan Delos, creep extraordinaire and potential investor. Of course Logan's first instinct is to treat the cocktail party hosts as sex dolls. Did Arnold anticipate that? Perhaps that's why he held Dolores back from the presentation. At any rate, those grim duties fall to Angela, whom we know as both a host-greeter in the first season and now as a gunslinger in Dolores' posse.

William Lee: Shock of shocks, this week's episode strongly resembled a more normal linear TV show where we're actually getting into how we got here. To me, the thing that stood out in the first meeting with Logan was first his astonishment with how realistic the hosts were, then his realization that they were too good. "We're not here yet," he says, broaching an intriguing topic: Just how did these robots become so lifelike? I think Arnold had to have known that presenting a beautiful robot to the money men would have them thinking dirty thoughts, which likely guaranteed its funding. Is the greatest flaw of the humans in this series that they are too predictable?

NM: Ha! Yes, predictable — but also not, since their uninhibited thoughts and behaviors at the park are apparently worth data-mining without their knowledge (paging Cambridge Analytica!). It's an idea pitched by none other than William himself, who has turned Full Cynic, here telling Dolores he can't buh-lieve he fell in love with her because she's just a thing — actually, not even that, he says correcting himself.

That got me thinking about an article I read in The New Yorker last week about a service in Japan from which you can rent a family — meaning actors — who will regularly fill the role of spouse or child or parent if your own is not in your life because of death or estrangement. Apparently the relationships have become more authentic and meaningful than anyone on either side of the transaction anticipated. The whole thing is a fascinating study in the way human relationships form even within artificial frameworks.

The need to connect is real — and I think the show doesn't always fully acknowledge this. And it makes me kind of side-eye the notion that William would be so disgusted by Dolores' not-realness. But then again, everything about him is still such a mystery.

2. Renegade Dolores meets Renegade Maeve

WL: Is it just me, or was the whole Maeve vs. Dolores meeting slightly underplayed? This is the first meeting of the two badass rebel leaders; it should have felt more epic, no? Instead the gathering was understated, though tense, likely to illustrate that though these two unbound spirits have ambitious goals that align, they have separate agendas. Things could change if their best-laid plans fall apart and they suddenly need each other's talents. Or will they become competing warlords?

JOHN P. JOHNSON/HBO

Evan Rachel Wood plays android Dolores in "Westworld."

NM: Surprisingly truncated! I was very excited to see them come face to face, and here's what I liked about their exchange: Maeve is the first to really challenge Dolores' rampaging ethos, and she does it not out of desperation (the humans) or saddened shock (Teddy) but from a place of strength: Dolores has become all-powerful, and it's worth asking if she's now become the very thing she despises. As Maeve so artfully sums up their differing approaches: "Revenge is just another prayer at their altar, darling — and I'm well off my knees."

3. Judgmental much?

NM: "No one is here to judge what we will do to you," Dolores taunts a park guest before it's lights out. Far away and maybe in the same timeline: "Judgment wasn't the point," an annoyed Man in Black complains, slinging back whiskey with his compadre Lawrence. Everyone's consumed with judgment this episode!

WL: Talk not only about judgment, but divine rebellion and hell. Speeches that reference Westworld being "away from the prying eyes of God" — or of having "toiled in God's service for too long — so I killed him." My gut says biblical talk always confers a good/evil struggle, but here it's revenge mixed with right-to-exist, all in a soup bowl. Did you notice the Man in Black's "fight the verdict" comment, like he's seeking a reprieve? Another biblical reference? I think it was a lot to expect that William/Man in Black would suddenly see the humanity within entities that he's spent a lifetime indulging his dark impulses in.

NM: Well, the rules have changed and William is now accountable for his past actions — which certainly has echoes of the #MeToo movement, right? Here's the thing: He knows that Dolores and the others are now functionally human in mind and spirit, free to make their own decisions — and yet the revolution, as he calls it, is just a distraction happening in the background. I think a lot of us would find the rise of the machines is as thought-provoking as it is scary, but you wouldn't know it from William; he's still using the hosts to further his own ends and yeah, I'm judging him for that. It sounds like I hate William/Man in Black, which isn't exactly right; I just think we're not given enough reasons to care about him. "I built it," he tells Lawrence of the place they're headed, "and it was my greatest mistake." He's talking about that dig site his younger version showed to Dolores, right?

WL: As for El Lazo, it was amazing to see "Breaking Bad's" Giancarlo Esposito make an appearance as an upgraded version of William's scheming desperado. I only wish that he and Jeffrey Wright had shared a scene together where both could shine in their own way.

4. Arnold is up to something with Dolores, right?

WL: What's Arnold's endgame in all of this? This episode opens with him bringing an elegantly dressed Dolores online in the real world, and she is overwhelmed by the sparkling skyline outside the window. We also see, despite his words to the contrary, that Dolores is clearly a favorite of his. But during their conversation — which is peppered with talk of Arnold's two worlds connecting and how much his son Charlie and Dolores share in common — we can't help but wonder what he was planning all along. Dolores, who only remembered the encounter (or that she was once in the real world) during this episode, potentially has loads of information and secret programming inside her waiting to come alive at the appropriate time. Makes it very hard to get comfortable. What do you think?

NM: I'm really puzzled why Arnold would show Dolores his home — and why "Westworld" is spending time showing us this scene. There's surely a reason. But for now, lacking any other context, it actually feels ... corny? Dude, no one wants a tour of your half-built house. I'm more interested in what showrunners Jonathan Nolan and Lisa Joy imagine the future looks like outside the park. From what we've seen, it's pretty indistinguishable from 2018.

5. The Valley Beyond isn't a place, it's a weapon

NM: "Doesn't matter what you call it, I know what we're going to find there," Dolores tells Teddy of The Valley Beyond, and funny thing, it sounds like she and the Man in Black are headed to the same spot — so this is part of Ford's game, right? Wait, is Dolores actually not making her own decisions? Is this just a different program loop she's in for an entirely differently storyline designed especially for William?

As a side note: The show always makes me laugh with its combination of poetic euphemism (The Valley Beyond) and the clinically blunt (the subterranean Sector 19 Remote Refurbishment Outpost).

WL: That line about The Valley Beyond being a weapon no doubt left many viewers like myself furrowing our brows trying to decipher what this latest piece means. Redditors have already been theorizing what exactly "The Valley Beyond" means, poring over the conflicting codes buried in the show. Is it an actual place where the robots can possibly cross over into the real world, or is it metaphor more fitting in "Lost" or "St. Elsewhere"?

As this is a Western setting, it seems appropriate that the rebel leader Dolores and the Man in Black would be headed to the same place for a final high noon showdown. Considering that Dolores' android brain could be filled with predetermined actions by Arnold, who knows if she, or Maeve, are doing anything of their own so-called free will? Then again, it's only Episode 2.

Bella Voce looks back on storied past

By John von Rhein
Chicago Tribune

As guest director Anne Heider pointed out in her remarks to the audience at the vocal ensemble Bella Voce's season finale, heard Saturday night in Buchanan Chapel at Chicago's Fourth Presbyterian Church, to have survived, much less thrived, for 35 years is no mean achievement for a small classical music group prowling the competitive savanna that is the city's performing arts scene.

Heider

But thrive it has under the vigorous leadership of Andrew Lewis, who was named artistic director after Heider's retirement in 2005. A founding singer in the group formerly known as His Majestie's Clerkes, she was admired for the pristine performances of a wide repertory she inspired during her more than 16 years as artistic chief. She left Lewis with one of the crown jewels of choral music in the city, and he has made it shine all the brighter in his dozen seasons, and counting.

So it was only fitting in this anniversary season that he should invite Bella Voce's artistic director emerita back to curate and conduct a retrospective of works significant to the a cappella ensemble's 35-year history. Several centuries of works central to Bella Voce's mission of creating dialogues between early music and the music of our time were represented. A significant legacy was celebrated in style.

Heider's programs always were astutely assembled, and her guided tour of some of Bella Voce's great successes brought telling contrasts of style and period that felt all of a piece because the performances were of such high quality and expressivity.

Saturday's diverse program moved from medieval and baroque polyphony of the Netherlands, England and Germany, to English music by William Byrd, Hubert Parry, Ralph Vaughan Williams and John Tavener to 20th-century classics by Frank Ferko and Einojuhani Rautavaara that brought Bella Voce to national attention in the 1990s and beyond.

The simplicity and directness of Tavener's 1984 "Funeral Ikos" — inspired, like so many of the late British composer's works, by Greek Orthodox liturgy — seemed to inhabit the same spiritual world as the 17th-century Mexican composer Juan De Lienas' "Salve Regina."

Excerpts from Ferko's "Hildegard Motets" and Rautavaara's monumental "Vigilia" invited similar time-traveling in their richly harmonized homages to sacred musical manners and traditions. Neither of these scores is the least bit easy to perform well, but, under Heider's precise direction, Bella Voce's 24 singers brought out their idiosyncratic spiritual essence. Much the same could be said for the rest of their performances.

The only drawback was the problematic sound of Buchanan Chapel, which is dry and ill-suited for sacred choral music composed with the resonant acoustics of churches and cathedrals in mind. Clarity is the chief virtue of the space, and in that respect it worked to the advantage of the pure, finely blended, carefully tuned and sensitively balanced choral sound that is Bella Voce's signature.

World premiere at Bach Week

Never in its 45-year history has the Bach Week Festival included a world premiere, but that precedent was shattered Friday night in Evanston's Nichols Concert Hall, where the latest edition of this worthy North Shore institution opened with the first performance of Marcos Balter's "Ensuite."

Formerly based in Chicago but now working in New York, Balter composed the 45-minute solo cello piece on commission from Katinka Kleijn, the gifted and fearless Chicago Symphony Orchestra cellist who's one of the most virtuosic advocates of new music around. Her superb performance was the late-night pendant to the festival-opening program of Bach's "Brandenburg" Concertos Nos. 3 and 5, and Cantata 51, "Jauchzet Gott in allen Landen."

The artist has played all the Bach unaccompanied cello suites at various Bach Week festivals, so it made perfect sense for Balter to favor her with a new piece inspired by those masterpieces. The result felt less like an homage than a radical modernist reappraisal of the Bachian ethos — deconstruction carried to negation.

Brief quotations from the prelude to Bach's Suite No. 1 at the beginning, the gigue from Suite No. 3 near the end, float in a strange, otherworldly fog of pitched but mainly unpitched sounds. The structural and harmonic rigor of Bach is alien to Balter's unsettled sound world. Long stretches of music are poised at the threshold of audibility, sustained at such unhurried length as to suggest a kind of Zen-like contemplation beyond time. Bach's presence, if you want to call it that, is defined by its absence.

The five sections merge with the barest of pauses in between. During one of them, a field of minute cries, scrapes, whistles, trills, drones and multiphonics comes at you as if from underwater. When bits of "actual" Bach drift into view, the effect is downright startling, like a space alien wearing a powdered wig. "Ensuite" is nothing if not thought-provoking, but it was mainly Kleijn's superhuman virtuosity that made it work for me, more than the music itself.

The performances of the real Bach pieces heard earlier amounted to more of a mixed bag.

Neither the third "Brandenburg" nor the cantata "Praise ye, God, in every land" sounded quite settled in, and one has heard the usually reliable soprano Josefien Stoppelenburg in more technically secure form than she sounded on this occasion.

Pianist Sergei Babayan, a festival mainstay, is an accomplished exponent of the Bach keyboard concertos played on modern piano, and I admired his incisive account of the D minor concerto (BWV 1042), which was neatly accompanied by festival music director Richard Webster and a seven-member string orchestra. Unfortunately the piano tended to overbalance the rest of the ensemble, a problem that might have been avoided had there been a lid on the Steinway concert grand.

That left the adroit solo team of violinist John Macfarlane, flutist Marie Tachouet and harpsichordist Jason Moy to lead the other musicians in a crisply spirited "Brandenburg" Concerto No. 5, quite the finest performance on the program.

The 45th Bach Week Festival will conclude with J.S. Bach choral and instrumental works, and music of Telemann, at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Anderson Chapel, North Park University, 5149 N. Spaulding Ave.; $10-$30; 800-838-3006, www.bachweek.org laughed for a long time."

Sweeney, 58, wears a beige jacket, two-toned green petal necklace and cat-eye glasses. She stops in front of the Equestrienne, an earthenware piece from the Tang dynasty.

"This breaks my heart," she says. "I love it so much. And I think it's funny, also, somehow, even though it's kind of sad."

This week, the Equestrienne's inner monologue is: "Oh, my daughter's going to Ohio State. I have mixed feelings about it. I think it's good. But I really hoped she would go to California. And yet, I'm continuing on, on my horse."

Sweeney laughs, a sustained and breathy chortle, before she stops at another earthenware piece from sixth-century China, Entertainer, a tomb figure with its hands on its hips, looking up and horribly uncomfortable.

"This is so often how I feel onstage," she says.

Then on to the wooden Dragon King: "This guy's the dragon king? Really? ... Terrible posture, no self-confidence. 'I don't want to be here and now I have to wear this stupid hat. A thousand years later, I'm still being humiliated at the Art Institute.' "

Sweeney assesses the relics with wonder and awe. And then laughs at them.

On the way down to the Thorne Miniature Rooms, Sweeney says her upcoming Second City show is her favorite yet. Less baggage and a move toward the mundane and profound: getting older, raising a kid, figuring it out. In "Older and Wider," Sweeney fans can still expect material about religion and family controversy — her daughter's former boyfriend is outed as a Trump voter — but, for the first time, she's calling the performance stand-up.

Sweeney thought of her past work, like the Grammy-nominated "God Said Ha!" and "Letting Go of God," as monologues. She followed the industry's cues: "Women tell stories and men tell jokes." Then she started watching stand-up comedians and thought, "Oh, I'm doing that."

When Sweeney shared the new stand-up plan with her daughter Mulan, a watcher of Netflix comedy specials, Mulan told her: "You're going to do great. You know why? There's no older women at all!"

Sweeney told her daughter that there are a lot of funny older women. Then came the realization they just weren't popping up in her queue.

"I can't change that," says Sweeney. "But I also feel like people are embarrassed by that in this way that might work to my advantage. I'll take it!"

After moving to Los Angeles in the '80s and a few years working in the accounting department at Columbia Pictures, Sweeney got in with the Groundlings and began to work her way up, forming the Pat character that would become synonymous with her time on "SNL." In Sweeney's first season, she was one of three women in a cast with 13 men.

"I never felt more in the center of the universe," Sweeney says, now strolling through the Alsdorf Galleries. "On the other hand, oh my God, I was so miserable. Because, first of all, just being a person who's 29 on a show and the sexual politics. Not just because of the misogyny, which of course was there, but just being a young person and navigating the world."

A funky modern canvas wheels by; workers warn those on its path to clear out. Sweeney mimes a giant sneeze and circles back to "SNL." "Now I think, why wasn't I walking around in a bikini, for one thing? Instead, my whole attitude was, 'I'm sorry I've been successful on this show, I hope it doesn't get in the way.' "

Strangers occasionally still recognize Sweeney as Pat; friends tell Sweeney they look at her and "just see Pat." "You know, it is kind of true," Sweeney says, laughing. "Because when I see myself, I think, that girl looks like Pat."

After "Older and Wider" closes out its Chicago run, Sweeney plans to move back to California and audition. She wants to perform. She'd love to play John Mulaney's mom on a TV show. When asked if there's anything she wants to do outside of the arts, the answer is a quick "no."

As she heads up to the impressionists and pauses in front of a painting by Mary Cassatt, Sweeney says, "There's something radical about her. She just did this everyday thing, like a kid getting their feet washed."

Sweeney talks about how it feels to be a woman after the pressures of youth wear away, how it really does get better. "It's just nice to be older," she says. "I've been waiting to be older my whole life. I'm so glad I didn't die before now."

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

IN PERFORMANCE

Ragged but gentle, Prine sings moving life stories

By Bob Gendron
Chicago Tribune

Don't ever accuse John Prine of trying to cover up flaws. Aware of the occasionally inconsistent sound of his gruff voice just minutes into his stellar concert Friday at a sold-out Chicago Theatre, he likened it to a fluctuating radio signal before stating, "It gets pretty, then it gets ugly, and then it gets pretty ugly."

Such lacerating wit and self-awareness have long informed the Maywood native's material. The same can be said for the imperfections and limitations that characterize most of the personalities inhabiting his songs. No wonder Prine's lived-in voice — as burred, knotted, worn and furrowed as the bark on a centuries-old live oak yet also as relaxed, casual and familiar as the shade the tree provides — naturally suited the characters and situations in his narratives.

While Prine remains decades removed from churning out album after album in the 1970s, his timbre and hairline appear to be the only things to have changed. The 71-year-old performed all but one song off his impressive new "The Tree of Forgiveness" record, his first original effort in 13 years, with the material seamlessly blending with signature tunes ("Sam Stone") and addressing many of the themes that make his work timeless in relatability and import.

Prine treated the two-hour show with an aw-shucks ease that underlined the everyday ordinariness of the people he sang about and the real feelings they harbored. He captured the lows of misery ("Way Down") and loneliness ("Angel From Montgomery") as well as the highs of timely devotion ("Boundless Love") and realized dreams ("I Have Met My Love Today") with penetrating detail and deceptive simplicity. His subjects understood the value of routine ("Grandpa Was a Carpenter"), the significance of home ("Summer's End") and the need to embrace absurdity in the face of life's constant trials ("That's the Way the World Goes Round").

Not that humor always proved strong enough a salve to ward off darkness or death. Yet even Prine's tragedies restored wayward protagonists' dignity by way of profound empathy. The latter arrived via delicate melodies, straightforward lyrics, gentle if raspy deliveries and an ace backing quartet's refined mix of country, folk and blues. Without proselytizing or lecturing, Prine conveyed what it means to be human — and the yearned-for connections, memories and relationships that compose our life stories.

In doing so, Prine delved into the fears, worries and losses few dare speak about but that almost everyone shares. He proved masterful serving as narrator, confessor, bartender, wanderer, sharp-eyed reporter, editorial cartoonist and romantic partner all the while in between maintaining a lighthearted outlook on his own mortality ("When I Get to Heaven") and that of the planet ("The Lonesome Friends of Science").

The joyous vibes carried over to a moving finale. Joined by his band, his oldest brother Dave on violin, wife Fiona and openers the Milk Carton Kids, Prine turned "Paradise" into a bluegrass-rooted celebration played by — and for — family and friends. Just like any loose back-porch session should be.

Hosanna-worthy production at Lyric

Superstar." In that regard it is more successful than even the original London production in 1972, which remains seared on my soul.

Second, the full resources of the Lyric are thrown at the show, which means adding a full orchestra to the rock band at the core of Lloyd Webber's score and, yet more crucially, beefing up the size of the vocal ensemble to include both Broadway singer-dancers and members of the Lyric Chorus. This massively expands the extant anthemic quality of the piece — Lloyd Webber's greatest achievement — and it's musically thrilling in the same way it is exciting to hear your favorite rock artist headline a symphony. Despite the lack of famous names, this production is a lot more spectacular than the production you just saw on TV, and there are no commercials. And there is no Broadway tour coming through Chicago that could vocally match the multitudinous harmonics you can hear here. Not in this day and age. Behold the unfair advantage of the nonprofit; but that's not the theatergoer's problem.

Third, Sheader and his designers, Tom Scutt and Lee Curran, kiss off the retro camp, which usually attaches itself to this material like kudzu.

This is the most millennial-friendly "JCS" ever. Right from the start, "JCS" was a groundbreaker in terms of diverse casting, and this production both honors that history and spins it forward.

Watching this young cast with its gray hoodies and scary eye shadow and self-performative and intimidating attitudes, I'll confess moments of nostalgia for the show's hippy-dippy, everything's-all-right, pastel-flowing, gentle-bearded, turned-on, tripped-out, boomer-friendly past, but that is not our present moment, dear reader, and this is the right kind of stylistic update.

The most arresting performance of the night is from Jo Lampert, whose take on Mary Magdalene, she who wonders of love, is completely different from any you have seen before, and vocally spectacular to boot. Another moment that will fascinate anyone who, like, me, long ago committed to memory every note of the show is Heath Saunders' performance as Jesus of "Gethsemane" (the impossible song with the famous high-G tonal shout). He sings most of it while also playing guitar, which innately pushes his voice into a more regular rhythm than you usually hear, and that then allows him to achieve a very stark contrast in the final stanza. It's very cool to hear.

Michael Cunio's Pilate is also far from the usual; he's the most sympathetic Pilate I've experienced, and that adds emotional context into sections of the show that usually lack such feeling. Add in an unpretentious Judas (Ryan Shaw), a moving Peter (Andrew Mueller) and a Caiaphas (Cavin Cornwall) who sounds exactly like you think he should but rarely does, and you've got quite the "JCS" experience.

Scutt's setting features a verdant stand of trees — a nod, I think, to the show's beginnings in Regent's Park, where the greenery is real. At the Lyric you can see violinists and the like poking out from the grove, backing all the harder-edged drama in the foreground. It struck me as a metaphor for the moment and a really smart way for an opera company to do a show that will still be alive, well and beloved when we're all dead and gone.

California coast to aid in seasonal marine mammal rescue efforts.

"Zoos are just critical to our mission," said Hudson. "They are able to respond to these types of crises and deploy people when the time comes. ... Up to 30 have contributed just for this event."

This one is especially profound, the highest body count in his organization's almost two decades of existence. "At first we didn't believe the numbers," Hudson said. "We thought they had to be an exaggeration."

Not only are many of the animals in dire straits — the first U.S. volunteer team to respond to the discovery is there now; O'Connor's will be the second — but getting radiated tortoises ready for rerelease into their dry, thorn forest habitats takes six months of monitoring or more, Hudson said.

"This is a real all-hands-on-deck moment, and it's not going to be over after two or three waves of people. We're going to be working these tortoises for a long time," he said.

The radiated tortoises are found only on Madagascar, which evolution has made into a hotbed of biological uniqueness but poverty has turned into a pressure cooker. The radiateds are prized as pets in Asia and hunted for meat on their home island.

A find of nearly 11,000 animals in one place may suggest abundance to the layperson. But the numbers deceive, Hudson said. The animal is thought to have suffered an 80 percent population decline in recent decades; entire areas where the radiated tortoise once thrived have been picked clean, and a 2010 article in Science had experts fearing extinction within two decades.

Madagascar authorities initially arrested three men suspected of dealing in the protected species, including the owner of the home in Tulear, according to news reports. And just Friday, Hudson said, he got word that the poacher camp believed to have fed this stockpile had been found on the coast, four or more hours south by boat.

Fully grown turtles "were being slaughtered for meat and the juveniles were being taken to Tulear for stockpiling and eventual export," he said.

Those reproduction-killing demographics are another reason he believes the population is in danger of what happened to its cousin the ploughshare tortoise from the north of the island.

"That species is pretty much gone from the wild. We're trying to prevent the same thing from happening," Hudson said.

While the Turtle Survival Alliance knows that caring for confiscated tortoises is dealing with the symptoms of tortoise decline, it's still an important thing to do while it and other conservation organizations try to address the disease brought on by foreign demand, lax oversight and local poverty.

O'Connor (who is the son of a Tribune editor by the same name) said he is cautiously optimistic about being able to help the animals. About 10,000 made it out of the house alive, and the first team on the ground has already processed close to two-thirds of them, he said.

Turtles' hardiness makes them appealing to smugglers, but it also improves their odds surviving such terrible conditions. In O'Connor's Philippines experience, workers saw about a 10 percent mortality rate, he said, compared with up to half of the animals dying in other types of species confiscations.

He'll bring a tackle box full of gear and medication, antibiotics, mostly. He has four years of high school French, which he's hoping will help since that's one of Madagascar's official languages; one of the prime goals in these situations is teaching the locals how to care for animals themselves after the volunteers depart.

Another thing they'll do is take and analyze blood samples to use this opportunity to try to learn more about the species.

" 'Triage' is the word of the day," O'Connor said. "So we expedite our exams, prioritize who needs what." And it's something of a hamster wheel, because typically the animals that need medicine are on a three-day cycle: "By the time you finish doing all the tortoises, you're literally behind on doing all the rechecks."

He didn't know how much, or even where, he'd be sleeping. But he's confident it'll be worth it. He called the Philippines experience, along with getting hired at his hometown Shedd, a career highlight.

"Getting to watch the progression of these really sick turtles and getting them to a healthy plane and getting to release them, there's nothing better than seeing that outcome," he said. "That's really the ultimate goal of what we do: getting people to care about these animals in their wild settings and help them where they actually live."

WATCH THIS: MONDAY

Jonny Lee Miller

"Elementary" (9 p.m., CBS): It's getting a much-later-than-usual-start on its season, but the mystery series returns for its sixth round with "An Infinite Capacity for Taking Pain" as the modern Sherlock Holmes (Jonny Lee Miller) tries to deal with the medical prognosis he's been given. Though Watson (Lucy Liu) wants to lend support, Holmes feels more kinship toward a man (Desmond Harrington) he apparently helped attain sobriety.

"Kevin Can Wait" (7 p.m., CBS): Kevin (Kevin James) gives the term "silent partner" a different meaning — and you can bet the "silent" part goes out the window — in the new episode "Brew Haha," as he offers to go in with Kendra and Chale (Taylor Spreitler, Ryan Cartwright) to buy Enzo's. Soon, Kevin makes it known just how frequently and loudly he'll be giving his opinions in running the place, sending the others fleeing to Vanessa (Leah Remini).

"Man With a Plan" (7:30 p.m., CBS): Joe's (Stacy Keach) health has been a subject on this show before, and it comes up again in the new episode "The Burns System" as he goes shopping for a car with Adam (Matt LeBlanc). However, Joe's suddenly edgy behavior during the excursion gives Adam reason for worry. Andi (Liza Snyder) finds out a secret — and secret pet that — Emme (Hala Finley) has been keeping. Kevin Nealon also stars.

"Superior Donuts" (8 p.m., CBS): The experiences of series co-star Diane Guerrero — whose family was deported — inform the new episode "The ICEmen Cometh," in which her character Sofia fears that her brother Rafael (Erik Rivera) will be ordered back to Colombia by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents. She seeks Franco's (Jermaine Fowler) help.

"Good Girls" (9:01 p.m., NBC): It's literally a life-or-death matter for the women (Christina Hendricks, Retta, Mae Whitman) as they try to put Rio (Manny Montana) out of business — before he puts them out of much more than that — in the new episode "Remix." The ladies' concerns are stoked even more when they need the funds for the kidney transplant that becomes possible for Sara (Lidya Jewett).

"Dallas Cakes" (9:30 p.m., Food): This new unscripted series showcases the formidable creativity of bakers from the Dallas area, who specialize in taking the wildest imaginary creations of their clients and transforming them into jaw-dropping customized confections. Each of the 10 half-hour episodes in Season 1 feature a trio of bakers as they conceive, create and then deliver their final works of art.

What call would you make?
A.3—This is a terrific hand after partner's takeout double. Game will be easy if he doesn't have too many wasted values in hearts. Bid four spades.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ 7 6 ♥ Q 9 8 6 ♦ A Q J 6 ♣ Q 10 4
Partner opens one spade and right-hand opponent passes. What call would you make?
A.4—Forcing one no trump players can bid one no trump, planning to bid two no trump next unless partner rebids two hearts. Most don't play that, so bid two diamonds and try to put on the brakes short of game if partner has a minimum.

■ A gloriously warm end to a very chilly April.

■ A cool start with daybreak temperatures ranging from the middle 30s inland to the lower 40s downtown.

■ Unlimited sunshine, windy and much warmer.

■ Temperatures climb into the middle/upper 70s propelled by gusty south winds at 15-25 mph.

■ Fair and mild overnight. Lows hold in the mid-50s.

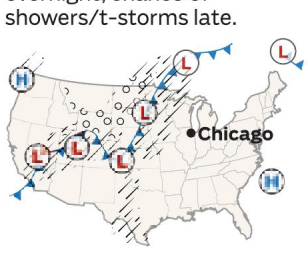
NATIONAL FORECAST

What has been a very chilly Chicago April will end on a warm note Monday, as brisk southerly winds send the mercury into the 70s for only the second time this month. April will finish as the city's fourth coldest dating back to 1871. The month's chill, which produced nine days with observed snowfall, was still noticeable early Sunday, when widespread freezing temperatures numbed the area, including record-tying lows of 27 at Rockford and 31 at Chicago. May will open much warmer, with temperatures reaching the lower 80s Tuesday, the city's warmest readings since Oct. 9. The warmth will set the stage for Chicago first thunderstorm activity since February. Frequent rounds of showers and thunderstorms later this week could deliver heavy rainfall as the delayed-growing season finally revs up.

TUESDAY, MAY 1

HIGH	LOW
82	61

Summer weather arrives. Partly sunny, very windy and warm. Highs reach the lower 80s. Gusty south winds at 20-30 mph. Clouding up overnight, chance of showers/t-storms late.



WEDNESDAY, MAY 2

HIGH	LOW
78	60

Mainly cloudy but several intervals of filtered sun. Warm with highs in the mid/upper 70s. Scattered afternoon thunderstorms become more frequent and numerous overnight.

THURSDAY, MAY 3

HIGH	LOW
75	55

Clouds dominate, with some sun. Continued warm. Scattered showers and thunderstorms during the day with several more rounds of storms at night. Heavy rainfall possible.

FRIDAY, MAY 4

HIGH	LOW
67	48

Morning cloudiness breaks and thins, trending into a partly sunny day. Seasonable highs in the middle and upper 60s. West winds at 10-20 mph. Partly cloudy skies overnight.

SATURDAY, MAY 5

HIGH	LOW
67	45

A mix of sun and clouds. Another seasonably mild day with highs in the middle 60s but turning cooler lakeside in the afternoon. Northwest winds at 10-15 mph becoming northeast.

SUNDAY, MAY 6

HIGH	LOW
65	45

Some sun early, then clouds gather with a chance of showers in the afternoon or evening. Mid-60s inland, but southeast winds at 10-18 mph keep it cooler along the Illinois shore.

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

Friday night's showers left behind a large amount of residue on vehicles. Parking lots looked as if they had been attacked with paintballs full of dust! Why was there so much dust in the raindrops?

— Many readers

Dear readers,

Many of you questioned all the dirt left by Friday night's showers. The answer is that it was caused by strong winds blowing across hundreds of miles of terrain — including huge tracts of land being plowed as part of spring planting.

The winds sent dirt (and some pollen) airborne — and it fell, being washed from the air by Friday night's showers. I noticed it on my car as I left work at WGN. This isn't uncommon this time of year as farmers ready their fields for the upcoming planting season. Many areas, west and southwest of Chicago are very dry, having had a lack of winter snow and spring rains.
