GOP gives accuser a deadline

President expresses doubts over allegation made against nominee

BY ALAN FRAM AND LISA MASCARO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump on Wednesday questioned the allegation that Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh sexually assaulted a fellow high school student over 30 years ago, and Republicans warned the accuser the window was closing to tell her story before a confirmation vote.

Trump's skepticism, the most explicit challenge top Republicans have mounted to Christine Blasey Ford's credibility, came as GOP Senate leaders tried to firm up support for Kavanaugh. A potentially climactic Judiciary Committee showdown is scheduled for Monday with Ford and Kavanaugh invited, but her attendance is uncertain, casting doubt on whether the hearing will be held.

Ford has said she wants the FBI to investigate her allegation before she will testify. Democrats support that, but Trump and Senate Republicans have been emphatic that it won't happen.

Leaving the White House to survey flood damage in North Carolina from Hurricane Florence, Trump conceded that "we'll have to make a decision" if Ford's account proves convincing. Despite that glimmer of hesitancy, the president stood behind Kavanaugh, who would fill the second high court vacancy of Trump's term.

"I can only say this: He is such an outstanding man. Very hard for me to imagine that anything happened," Trump said.

The Republicans are resisting all Democratic efforts to slow and perhaps block what once seemed a smooth path to confirmation that would promote the conservative appeals court judge by the Oct. 1 opening of the Supreme Court's new term. Ka-

Disgraced officer long tied to torture

Ex-commander accused of decades of brutality

Jon Burge, the disgraced Chicago police commander and felon whose sordid legacy of torture and other misconduct exacted an agonizing price from the city, has died in Florida at age 70, according to police union officials and a Florida funeral home.

Details about his death were scarce as the union and family members declined to speak with members of the news media, which spent years reporting on the numerous cases in which Burge was accused of torturing suspects in order to obtain confessions.

Representatives of Zipperer Funeral Home in Ruskin, Fla., confirmed receiving Burge's body but declined to share any further information, citing the family's wishes. Burge, who had previously been treated for cancer, lived in nearby Apollo Beach.

"They (family members) let us know they're not doing anything in any newspapers," said Sarah Zipperer.

Stories of the violence committed under Burge — including beatings, electric shock, suffocation with typewriter covers and games of Russian roulette — proved to have a long reach. Although most of Burge's alleged misconduct took place in the 1970s and '80s, his accusers played a funda-

Mayor, aldermen shred bid to curb N. Side scrap yard

Attempt to cut hours of troubled but connected outfit falls short

BY MICHAEL HAWTHORNE | Chicago Tribune

Mayor Rahm Emanuel's administration and a group of aldermen vigorously defended a clout-heavy scrap yard on Tuesday, brushing aside neighbors who shared stories about noxious pollution and loud noises from one of the last industrial operations in a fast-gentrifying corridor along the North Branch of the Chicago River.

One of the neighborhood's elected representatives, Ald. Brian Hopkins, 2nd, introduced a measure months ago to revoke a special waiver that allows General Iron Industries to collect flattened cars, used appliances and other scrap metal around the clock and operate massive shredders from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily.

City rules normally restrict scrap yards to operate from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m.

After Hopkins forced colleagues to call his measure for a vote, Tuesday's long-delayed hearing quickly devolved into heated personal attacks from a former federal prosecutor hired by the company's owners, and repeated interruptions of neighborhood residents by Ald. George Cardenas, 12th, chairman of the city's Health and Environmental Protection committee.

Hopkins, Ald. Michele Smith, 43rd, and community groups in Lincoln Park and Bucktown contend the scrap shredder is a menace to the public, citing clouds of metallic pollution that routinely waft into nearby residential areas and three crackdowns on General Iron by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the latest of which came in July.

Corey Widen was investigated after letting daughter Dorothy walk her dog alone.

The Wilmette mother at the center of a child welfare investigation that began after she let her 8-year-old daughter walk their dog around the block is using her newfound platform to shine a light on the troubles of others she says are unfairly caught in the system.

After Corey Widen's story, which was first reported in the Tribune, made its way around the world, the 48-year-old mother of two said the response was staggering.

"I've had well over 100 people writing to me, some asking for help," said Widen, who was investigated last month by the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services after an anonymous tipster called local police, then child welfare investigators to report that he saw her daughter Dorothy walking her dog, Marshmallow, alone.

While police declined to pursue, DCFS investigators opened an investigation. Officials soon closed the case, saying they did not find evidence of neglect. But Widen said she endured a stressful few weeks of state investigators questioning her, her children, other family members and her daughter's doctor — all because of what Widen saw as a common-sense chore for her daughter.

Widen is far from the first parent to be investigated for inadequate supervision for seemingly common childhood pastimes, but the swift resolution of her case highlights a disparity that exists within

But Tuesday morning was different. She noticed a Latino family; six children, some barefoot and dingy, and what appeared to be the mother and father, attempting to sleep on the seats of the train, Aguilar said.

"When I saw a barefoot girl lie down on the floor of the passway (of the train), barefoot and cold, trying to sleep, my heart broke and I knew something was wrong," she said.

She tried to speak to the two adults to find out what was wrong and guide them to find help, but communication was limited because of language barriers.

She is not fluent in Spanish, and the two

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

John Kass

Kanye for Mayor? Daley, Preckwinkle better hope not

Kanye West, world-famous music superstar, says he's returning home to Chicago. Here's a thought:

Mayor Kanye West.

Yeah, you heard me. And why shouldn't Kanye West run for mayor? Everyone else in Chicago is running. Me too.

I'd gladly accept his endorsement for the #KassforMayor campaign, but if he's not going to help me Make Chicago Kass Again, I won't complain.

"I've got to let you all know that I'm moving back to Chicago," West said the other day at Harold Washington Library, during an appearance at fellow Chicagoan Chance the Rapper's open mic event for high schoolers. "I'm never leaving again."

And the crowd went crazy.

"Kanye! Kanye! Kanye! Kanye!"

You think young people would ever cheer like that for Toni Preckwinkle or Billy Daley?

Preckwinkle's so desperate for attention that she's having crazy old U.S. Rep. Maxine Waters at her Cook County Democratic Party fundraiser in October. That should work out just fine. Maybe they could do a ventriloquist act.

And Billy Daley?

You've probably heard of the definition of insanity, which is doing the same thing over and over and over — for example, pounding your head against a wall —while expecting a different result.

But Chicago has had the same results for 40 years, with Daleys running things. And now we're told that what Chicago really wants is more Daley?

Is reaching for a half-century of Daley a rational act? Or could it be, perhaps, just a wee bit psycho?

Which brings me back to Mayor Kanye.

He'd make an amazing candidate. Kanye loves Chicago. He was raised here. And don't tell me that he can't fulfill the residency requirements.

The political class here made Rahm Emanuel a certified resident when he lived in Washington. Will Chicago politicians dare deny Kanye, an African-American, the same opportunity?

He's an artist. And he has independent political views. This means he wouldn't be bossed around by a bunch of fat pink political men in pinstriped suits.

Kanye is already rich. He made his money on his own. It wasn't squeezed out of taxpayers. So, he wouldn't go into politics for the money.

Also, City Hall needs some glamour. Right now, there is no glamour, unless you're fascinated by bond salesmen asphalt guys.

Did I say Kanye is married to Kim Kardashian? That means glamour.

Imagine if Mayor West and first lady Kim Kardashian and Deputy Mayor Chance the Rapper showed up at the Grammys.

And then flew everybody in private jets to City Hall to continue the party.

Yeah, I've read the rumors that Kim wants to stay in LA. But c'mon. She won't turn down being first lady of Chicago.

But he's not a candidate yet. And there are many other candidates, too many to count.

I split them into groups for easy sorting, old eggs and good eggs, or old sausage and good sausage, old stinky cheese and fine cheddar.

Those who were in the race months ago and challenged incumbent Mayor Emanuel showed guts. They're the good cheddar. You might not agree with them, but they showed they cared enough about Chicago to challenge the dragon. People like Lori Lightfoot, Paul Vallas, Garry McCarthy and so on.

But then Emanuel ran his political numbers through his Jason Van Dyke/Laquan McDonald calculator and realized black voters weren't the only ones who didn't like him and that he better quit and save himself some pain.

I hear he will write a book. Think he'll mention me? His old boss, Barack Obama, now a big-shot producer at Netflix, might option it for a dramatic series, like "The Rahmfather" or "I Tollja to Hide the (Bleepin') Video!"

Emanuel's departure, as the entire city knows by now, triggered the ambition of old politicos like Bill Daley, bro of boss, son of boss, who announced the other day, and Preckwinkle, the Cook County Board president and chairman (boss) of the Cook County Democrats, who is expected to formally announce her candidacy Thursday.

Preckwinkle will have another honored guest at her Cook County Democratic Party fundraiser starring Maxine Waters at the Hilton Chicago: former political boss Joe Berrios.

I called the Cook County Democratic Party headquarters and a guy on the phone said tickets start at $200. But a few thousand would get me into a VIP reception with Maxine, Toni and Joe. How cool is that?

After decades of Daleys, Bill Daley wants voters to put all that aside and judge him solely on his special and unique qualities.

But he'll keep the name.

"I'm not going to change my name," Daley told the Tribune recently. "That's not going to happen."

Oh, really, Bill? If you truly want voters to judge you for your abilities and not your name, there is a solution. Just change your name immediately to a new name.

Like Boris Krapnick.

All Daley has to do is campaign as Joe Krapnick, and convince the media to repeat endlessly that "Boris Krapnick has experience," or "Krapnick is a leader!" and you know what will happen?

We'll all see how many Joe Krapnick votes are out there.

I've never met Kanye West. But I guarantee he'll never change his name to Joe Krapnick.

But what if he changed it to "Mayor"?

If accuser is lying, why is she asking for inquiry?

REX W. HUPPKE

J. SCOTT APPLEWHITE/AP

If there's one person in America who should want a full, detailed investigation of the sexual assault claim against Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, it's Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh.

He'll likely be confirmed either way, given the partisan fervor to jam another conservative onto the high court before the midterm elections in November. But wouldn't a judge with any sense of integrity — or even an eye toward his own legacy — want to avoid a weighty asterisk on the capstone of his career?

Without a fair and proper hearing on these allegations, one that at least includes the witness Kavanaugh's accuser says was in the room, Kavanaugh will always be remembered as a judge who made it to the Supreme Court sneakily. A man who didn't advocate to clear his own name and let a woman's life be destroyed in the process. He might go on to be as fair and principled a justice as we've ever seen, but that stain will remain.

I don't know whether Kavanaugh did the horrible things he's accused of doing. He has emphatically denied the allegations, and many have described him as a good and decent man.

But many — from close friends who knew she was considering coming forward with her claim against Kavanaugh to colleagues and nearly 600 alumnae from her high school — have also described Christine Blasey Ford, a clinical psychology professor at Palo Alto University in California, as a good and decent woman. Her allegation that a drunken Kavanaugh pushed her into a bedroom at a high school house party in the 1980s and sexually assaulted her while a friend of his watched is certainly credible.

She came forward, anonymously at first, with notes from a therapist she spoke to about the incident long before Kavanaugh was a candidate for the high court and with a successful polygraph conducted by a former FBI agent.

Does that mean it happened? Of course not. But it means Ford is coming forward with more than just some idle claim. It's worthy of a thorough investigation, one that Kavanaugh himself, if he's innocent, should be demanding.

But he's not. He's willing to appear at a hastily scheduled hearing Monday in front of the Senate Judiciary Committee and give his side of the story. But it's Ford — who is also invited to testify at that hearing — who is calling for an FBI investigation into her claim before she testifies.

A letter her lawyers sent to the committee late Tuesday reads in part: "A full investigation by law enforcement officials will ensure that the crucial facts and witnesses in this matter are assessed in a non-partisan manner, and that the committee is fully informed before conducting any hearing or making any decisions."

That seems like a sensible request. And let me stress: It's the accuser who is asking investigators to dig more deeply into her accusations. That's not the behavior of someone making outrageous claims.

Why on Earth would a judge — a person who has devoted his life to the practice of law — not want a thorough investigation at least as badly as his accuser?

As it stands now, the Senate Judiciary Committee doesn't even plan to call the one potential witness to the alleged assault, Kavanaugh's high school friend Mark Judge. That friend, via an attorney, notified the committee Tuesday that he doesn't want to testify:

"I have no more information to offer the Committee and I do not wish to speak publicly regarding the incidents described in Dr. Ford's letter."

Respectfully, it shouldn't make a bit of difference whether Judge wishes to testify — that's what subpoenas are for — and he has already spoken publicly, defending Kavanaugh and saying he has "no memory of this alleged incident." But that carries no weight unless it's under oath. If he's not willing to say that under oath, you have to question how confident he is that those words are true.

The fact that Ford, in her description of that night in high school, placed a witness who was friends with Kavanaugh in the room only adds to her credibility. And for the committee to not consider it crucial to get testimony from that witness is absurd.

But again, what's even more absurd is that Kavanaugh himself isn't begging his former classmate to testify. Kavanaugh is the one who should want his name cleared and his accuser's claims discredited via a fair investigation and hearing.

Even President Donald Trump seems to think all the bases should be covered, saying Tuesday: "With all of that, I feel that the Republicans — and I can speak for myself — we should go through a process, because there shouldn't even be a little doubt."

There shouldn't be any doubt. Not a bit. And the one person who should most want all doubt eliminated is the person who stands on the precipice of a lifetime appointment to a monumentally influential court where he'll be expected to make sound, fair decisions based on evidence and the rule of law.

The person who should be demanding an FBI investigation into these accusations is Judge Brett Kavanaugh. That should be more important to him than anything right now.

But instead, the only person asking for a thorough investigation is Ford, the woman Republicans are aggressively trying to discredit and ignore, the woman who, according to The New York Times, has had to leave her home due to death threats and all manner of online harassment.

I don't know who is telling the truth.

But I know that right now, the woman who claims a drunk, 17-year-old future Supreme Court nominee climbed on top of her, tried to take her clothes off and covered her mouth with his hand sounds a lot more confident in her story than the man heading toward a seat on the high court. A seat that may well wind up irrevocably tainted.

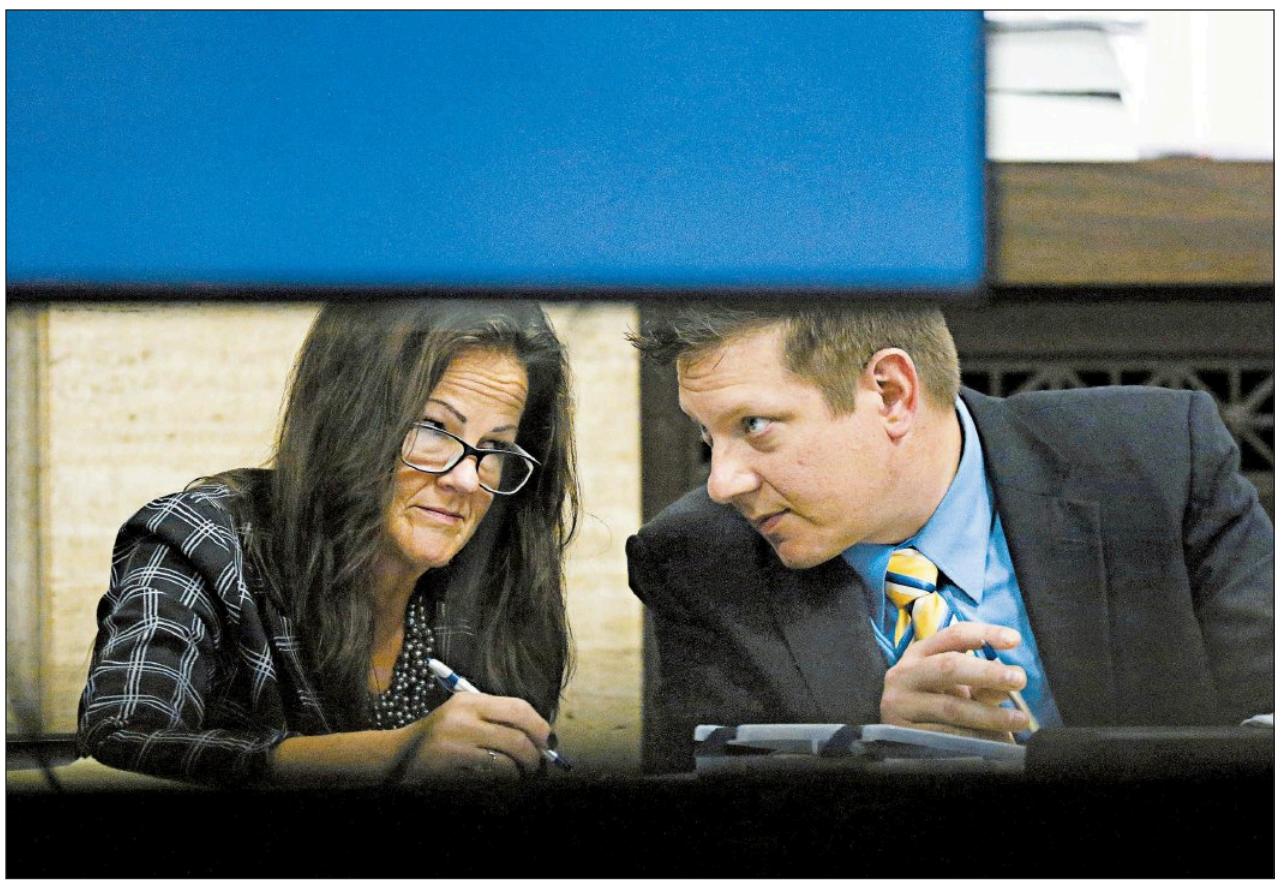
By Jason Meisner, Megan Crepeau and Christy Gutowski
Chicago Tribune



JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Dr. Ponni Arunkumar, Cook County medical examiner, describes bullet entry and exit wounds on Laquan McDonald.

Over the next two hours, Cook County jurors viewed on large video screens photos of all 16 entrance wounds from shots fired by Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke.

There were holes in McDonald's neck, his chest, back, legs, arms and one hand. Graphic images illustrated where bullets scorched the teen's skin, shattered bones, tore through his lung and lodged in his abdomen. One photo — a close-up of McDonald's mouth — showed where bullet fragments were pulled from his teeth.

"When all the holes are added, it comes to a total of 24 holes on Laquan," Chief Cook County Medical Examiner Ponni Arunkumar testified about all the entrance and exit wounds.

Arunkumar's testimony in the third day of Van Dyke's murder trial, while clinical in many ways, also marked a vivid account of an autopsy that stunned Chicago when it came to light four months after Van Dyke fatally shot McDonald on a Southwest Side street in October 2014.

The public attention brought by the sheer number of shots sustained by McDonald eventually pressured City Hall to release police dashboard camera footage of Van Dyke firing all 16 rounds in his gun at McDonald as the teen appeared to walk away from police with a knife in his hand. The ensuing fallout led to months of protests, political upheaval and a federal civil rights investigation that excoriated the Police Department for a pattern of excessive force and an entrenched code of silence that shielded cops accused of wrongdoing.

While many of the graphic details in the autopsy report were previously known, Arunkumar's testimony — aired on live television and streamed on the web — was the first time the photographs depicting McDonald's extensive wounds were made public.

With the lights in Judge Vincent Gaughan's courtroom dimmed, jurors were attentive and somber as they viewed the photos, many taking notes as Arunkumar detailed the size of each wound, the trajectory of the bullets and the damage they caused to McDonald's body. Arunkumar was a supervisor in the medical examiner's office at the time of McDonald's death but did not personally perform the autopsy.

Members of McDonald's family, including one woman clutching a tissue, remained in the courtroom for the testimony. The teen's great-uncle, the Rev. Marvin Hunter, sat grim-faced as image after image of jagged-edged, dark-red bullet wounds peppering McDonald's body were displayed.

Seated at the defense table, Van Dyke mostly stared straight ahead, occasionally glancing at a small video screen and open laptop computer.

Also present in the courtroom gallery was the Rev. Jesse Jackson, who took notes and at times closed his eyes during Arunkumar's testimony. During a lunch break, Jackson likened McDonald's fatal shooting to a "legal lynching," drawing parallels to Emmett Till and Rodney King.

"What struck me about watching, listening to the prosecutor make the case ... was the intentionality and intensity of the shots," the civil rights leader told reporters in the lobby of the Leighton Criminal Court Building. "Each shot drew blood. ... Multiple shots to the back."

Although the autopsy painstakingly documented each of the shots that struck McDonald, Arunkumar testified that pathologists were unable to ascertain the order in which the shots struck him or — in most cases — whether he was still on his feet or had fallen to the street when he was struck. She only ventured to say that one wound — a shot to his right hand — occurred while he was likely lying on the pavement.

Displaying a close-up photo of that wound, including a bright red, ragged injury next to McDonald's tattoo reading "Good Son," Arunkumar said "fragments of pavement" may have contributed to the injury.

"Was Laquan McDonald alive for each and every gunshot?" asked special prosecutor Joseph McMahon.

"Yes," the pathologist answered.

Arunkumar also testified that toxicology tests ordered by the Cook County state's attorney's office in 2015 found a low dose of PCP in McDonald's blood that still could have caused visual disturbances, drowsiness, agitation, hallucinations, aggressiveness and other behavior.

Van Dyke, 40, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder, 16 counts of aggravated battery and one count of official misconduct in McDonald's death. Prosecutors have argued that Van Dyke had no legal justification for opening fire because the teen posed no threat, but Van Dyke's attorneys have attempted to paint McDonald as an out-of-control, violent person who disobeyed police commands to drop the knife he was carrying.

On cross-examination of Arunkumar, Van Dyke's lead attorney, Daniel Herbert, revealed that a defense expert is expected to testify later in the trial that a gunshot wound to McDonald's chest was the fatal injury, contradicting Arunkumar's conclusion that each of the 16 shots contributed to McDonald's death.

Herbert also pressed Arunkumar about whether two particular wounds to McDonald's neck and chest were sustained while the teen was still standing up.

She said the teen had likely not yet fallen to the street, but he also could have been "turning, falling, it's hard for me to say."

The effort by Van Dyke's defense team to pin down which shot killed McDonald struck some legal experts as a curious strategy.

"I am not sure where they are going," said Terry Ekl, a former prosecutor and longtime criminal defense attorney. "It's likely that they want to argue that the shot to the chest killed McDonald and that the victim was standing and facing Van Dyke with the knife in his hand at the time the shot was fired. They would then argue that the other 15 shots were not relevant ... since McDonald was already dead."

Before Arunkumar took the stand, prosecutors and Van Dyke's attorneys sparred over when precisely McDonald died — a dispute potentially related to whether Chicago police officers at the shooting scene should have tried to give medical attention to the teen.

A Cook County sheriff's officer who trailed Chicago police cars to the scene testified Tuesday that when he arrived, officers were standing around talking with each other while McDonald was lying in the street "gasping for air and gurgling." The sheriff's officer, Adam Murphy, told jurors he put on gloves and knelt near McDonald, telling him that the ambulance was on the way. He said he believed he then heard the teen take his last breath.

Chicago Fire Department paramedic Mark Smith testified Wednesday he responded to 41st Street and Pulaski Road, where he found McDonald lying unresponsive in the street. McDonald had a faint pulse when he got into the ambulance, though his heartbeat gradually weakened as they made their way to Mount Sinai Hospital, Smith testified.

"He had a pulse," Smith said.

"His heart was still beating?" prosecutor Joseph Cullen asked.

"Yes, sir," the paramedic said.

Randy Rueckert, one of Van Dyke's lawyers, pressed Smith on whether McDonald appeared unresponsive at the shooting scene and if his heart had stopped in the ambulance.

Smith confirmed both points.

But Smith told prosecutors moments later that paramedics still performed CPR after McDonald's heart stopped and took him to the hospital to attempt further resuscitation efforts.

Alan Gayan, a registered nurse who was working in Mount Sinai's emergency room that night, told Van Dyke's lawyers that records indicated McDonald had no heartbeat or pulse — that he was already dead — on his arrival.

Prosecutors later challenged that conclusion, noting that Gayan was not a medical doctor.

The dispute over whether McDonald died in the ambulance or in the hospital continued Wednesday afternoon as Herbert asked Arunkumar on cross-examination if she knew McDonald had "essentially died" before he reached Mount Sinai.

"(He had) no pulse when admitted to the hospital, but they did perform ... surgeries to try to resuscitate him," Arunkumar said.

GOP challenger says Mendoza 'hedging' on mayor question

By Mike Riopell
Chicago Tribune

Democratic Illinois Comptroller Susana Mendoza stuck to her script Wednesday that she's focusing on her re-election and not a run for Chicago mayor as Republican challenger Darlene Senger pressured her to commit to a four-year term with the state.

"I would like to see a commitment that on Nov. 7 if you're elected you're going to be there for four years, and you're kind of hedging it," Senger said during a meeting with the Chicago Tribune Editorial Board.

"I'm not hedging on anything," Mendoza replied. "I'm very committed to be comptroller."

The candidates, including Libertarian Claire Ball of Addison, are vying for a four-year term in control of the state's checkbook, after Mendoza won a 2016 special election to fill the final two years of the late Judy Baar Topinka's term.

Mendoza has replied to frequent questions about whether she'll run for mayor by saying she won't answer until after the November election. She again on Wednesday did not rule out a possible mayoral run.

Senger is a former Illinois House member from Naperville known for her work on a bipartisan plan to cut state worker pensions that ultimately was overturned by the state Supreme Court. After her legislative career, she joined GOP Gov. Bruce Rauner's administration.

Senger favors amending the state constitution to combine the comptroller and treasurer offices, a question that would have to go on the ballot before voters before it was approved.

Mendoza said Illinois' biggest public embezzlement cases came when one person held both jobs, such as when Dixon Comptroller Rita Crundwell was convicted of stealing almost $54 million over 22 years from her northwestern Illinois city known for being the boyhood home of former President Ronald Reagan.

"Put it on the ballot for (people) to decide," Senger said.

"But it's a terrible issue," Mendoza replied. "If they wanted to put slavery on the ballot, would you advocate that they do that? No."

Ball supports having a separate state comptroller and treasurer with some of their services combined.

The trio also split over whether the state should amend its constitutional provision that says state worker pension benefits can't be "diminished or impaired." Senger and Ball called for an amendment, and Mendoza said she'd vote against it if it was on the ballot.

Mendoza served two terms as Chicago's city clerk before winning the comptroller job and quickly emerged as a vocal critic of Rauner after defeating his chosen candidate in a race that was viewed as a proxy war between the governor and his chief political nemesis, Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan.

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Candidates for Illinois comptroller, Claire Ball, from left, incumbent Susana Mendoza and Darlene Senger meet with the Chicago Tribune Editorial Board on Wednesday.

Senger, meanwhile, faced questions about an email she sent while part of the Rauner administration that sought to tie 2015 deaths from Legionnaires' disease at the state-run veterans home in Quincy to Democratic U.S. Sen. Tammy Duckworth, who previously worked as the state Veterans' Affairs director.

"We can maybe tie this back to Duckworth," Senger's 2017 email said.

Rauner has been criticized by Democratic challenger J.B. Pritzker for "fatal mismanagement" of the Legionnaire's problem.

Senger on Wednesday called Duckworth a "hero" and said the veterans agency has had problems "over several governors and several administrations."

"The comment came out of a, basically a discussion, a question I had, which is, let's go back and look at the history of how many pneumonia cases happened over time," Senger said.

Mendoza called Senger's email "disqualifying."

"There's no proof of any kind that she oversaw any Legionella cases," Mendoza said. "The first reaction should have been not maybe we can tie this back to Tammy Duckworth, it should have been, 'Oh my God, did this really happen on our watch?' "

Wednesday's meeting came days after a former backer of Jesus "Chuy" Garcia last week started a draft effort to try to get Mendoza to run for Chicago mayor.

Illinois' general election for statewide candidates like comptroller is Nov. 6. The filing deadline for the Chicago mayor's race is Nov. 26, giving any candidate an approximately three-week window between elections to gather the 12,500 valid petition signatures needed to get on the city's mayoral ballot.

As Garcia eyes race, 'Chuy for Chicago' raises cash

By John Byrne
Chicago Tribune

Jesus "Chuy" Garcia hasn't gotten into the Chicago mayoral race yet, but a close associate of the Cook County commissioner has started a political committee to begin raising money for the potential campaign.

The "Chuy for Chicago" committee was created Wednesday with the State Board of Elections "to explore the candidacy of Jesus 'Chuy' Garcia for mayor of the city of Chicago," according to a statement of organization posted on the board's website.

The committee's chairman, Manuel Perez, has been managing Garcia's campaign for U.S. Congress. He said that while Garcia didn't oversee the creation of the committee, "he didn't object to it."

"We told him we were going to do it," Perez said. "He has been thinking about (running for mayor), and he's leaning in that direction."

By forming the committee, Garcia supporters can make and collect unlimited contributions to a Garcia mayoral campaign, since state caps on how much individual donors can give have been lifted in that race.

When outgoing U.S. Rep. Luis Gutierrez announced last week he would not run for mayor, he told reporters he planned to try to draft Garcia into the race by collecting signatures on his behalf to get him on the ballot. Volunteers began circulating petitions for a possible Garcia mayoral bid over the weekend.

Though Gutierrez had previously endorsed Garcia to succeed him in Congress and Garcia is currently running for that seat in the Nov. 6 election, Gutierrez said it was more important for Garcia to be mayor.

Garcia took Mayor Rahm Emanuel to a run-off in 2015 before losing. He was sitting out this mayoral election to instead try to win the congressional seat, but with Emanuel opting not to seek a third term, Garcia is reconsidering.

He's far from the only one reassessing his chances with the well-financed incumbent out of the way. Bill Daley, a former commerce secretary, onetime White House chief of staff and son and brother of two Chicago mayors, said this week he would run. So did Gery Chico, an attorney and top official in Mayor Richard M. Daley's administration who came in second to Emanuel in 2011.

And sources close to Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle have said she will announce her candidacy Thursday.

A dozen challengers had already announced their candidacy, including former Chicago Police Board President Lori Lightfoot, former Chicago Public Schools CEO Paul Vallas, former Chicago police Superintendent Garry McCarthy, businessman Willie Wilson and Cook County Circuit Court Clerk Dorothy Brown, among others.

Sweet lactation suite for mama Bears fans

Soldier Field adds pod for nursing, pumping needs

By Katie Galioto
Chicago Tribune

Just as the first quarter of Monday night's Bears game wrapped up, Jessica Griffin left her seat in Soldier Field and walked briskly to the trailer-like pod located near Gate 25, toting her breast pump in a clear stadium-approved plastic purse.

With a nod to its female fan base and the need for a quiet, sanitary space for mothers to nurse or express milk, Soldier Field unveiled its new "mobile lactation suite" at the Bears home opener this week against the Seahawks. The team is following the lead of airports, businesses and other sports arenas across the country that have introduced similar amenities in recent years.

"Families, daughters, sons, mothers, die-hard football fans, millennials — we want to make it great for everyone," said Doug Carnahan, the Bears vice president of corporate partnerships. The Bears teamed up with Advocate Health Care to purchase the portable pod, dressed in blue and orange graphics and dubbed the "Mama Bear Den."

Many fans walked by the pod at Monday night's game without a second thought, but others paused out of curiosity.

"Mothers of the midway!" one man shouted when he saw the stadium's new addition, a play on the team's Monsters of the Midway nickname.

A mother forced her Bears jersey-clad son to pose for a picture in front of the lactation suite. "I used to feed you this way," she said, giving the teenager a look as if daring him to complain.

"These could very well be the season ticket holders of tomorrow," Carnahan said. "Their parents are Bears fans; their grandparents are Bears fans."

Produced by Vermont-based Mamava, the pod at Soldier Field isn't the only one in town, according to the company's digital map, which shows the location of each designated nursing spot. There's one in Union Station, two at Navy Pier, a few scattered at office buildings — and more popping up fast.

Mamava was founded in 2013 with the goal of having "an impact on the culture of breastfeeding in the U.S. through the support of nursing women," company spokeswoman Ann Pechaver said. Since then, it has placed more than 500 units in 44 states.

The company operates under the philosophy that women should be able to breastfeed or pump wherever they wish, as mandated by law, Pechaver said.

"The pod was really designed to create that perfect accommodation," she said.

That can be crucial for moms who find the prospect of breastfeeding their children daunting, said Jennifer Albert, a nurse and lactation consultant in Advocate hospitals.

In the past, mothers have had to duck into public bathrooms, storage closets and other odd spots.

"You're exposed to all kinds of germs in a bathroom," Albert said.

Some politicians agree. Sen. Tammy Duckworth, D-Ill., introduced a bill requiring all large- and mid-sized airports to provide private nursing rooms for mothers. The measure was incorporated to this year's Federal Aviation Administration Reauthorization Act, which was approved by the House in April and will likely be taken up by the Senate soon, as a deadline nears.

Griffin tested the waters Monday evening as she locked the door on the pod at Soldier Field, which features an outlet for electric breast pumps and is stocked with baby wipes, disinfecting wipes and paper towels.

Inside, the wall read: "Huddle here as long as you need."

There was a knock on the door. Stadium employee Lasinda Thompson needed to express and asked if she could join Griffin in the Mamava suite. Employers are required by law to provide nursing women with a private place that's not a bathroom to express milk, a rule that took effect with the passage of President Barack Obama's health care overhaul. Thompson used to have to pump in Soldier Field's first-aid facility.

"I wish there was a radio in there, just so I could hear the game," said Griffin, a mother of four who was spending her night out cheering on the Bears.

Group pans new Jackson Park agreement

Contend revised terms for use still not in public interest

By Lolly Bowean
Chicago Tribune

Environmentalists suing the city of Chicago and the Chicago Park District to halt construction of the Obama Presidential Center in Jackson Park on Wednesday criticized a new agreement over use of the park, saying the revised terms were still not in the public interest.

And although the proposed user agreement, announced Tuesday, would give the city ownership of the $500 million campus, it does not justify construction in a public park, said Herbert Caplan, president of Protect Our Parks. Under the deal, the city will take ownership of the center for 99 years and lease it back to the Obama Foundation for $10.

"The provisions of (the) proposed new Obama Center ordinance, many laughable, try to patch all the holes in the old ordinance and give it a new paint job," Caplan wrote in a prepared statement. "The city wizards invent more magic."

Protect Our Parks also questioned the agreement's provision that the city pay for remediation costs arising out of environmental testing and make the land around the center ready for development. In the case of the center's underground garage, being built on landfill from the Columbian Exposition, the costs to taxpayers could be significant, the group said.

After months of silence on the matter, the Obama Foundation's top brass went on the offensive against the lawsuit for the first time to the Chicago Tribune's Editorial Board on Tuesday. In that meeting, the foundation's chief executive, David Simas, said the agreements with the city would ensure the facility falls under public control and serves a public purpose.

Simas pointed to two new ordinances, one of which outlines how ownership will be transferred to the city while the foundation will operate the center and maintain it. According to the proposed user agreement, the foundation has to demonstrate to the city that it has enough funding to build the campus. The foundation also has to create an endowment to ensure the facility can operate independently.

The foundation is not named as a defendant in the lawsuit. Instead, the federal lawsuit targets the city and the Park District and argues, among other things, that the city officials could not legally offer public park land for the project.

The lawsuit calls the project an "institutional bait and switch," because it will be a center and not a library that will house former President Barack Obama's official archives.

Caplan answered the foundation's perspective on Wednesday.

"Who are they trying to fool," he wrote in an email rebuttal. He called the user agreement "their creative efforts to conjure up a new variety of their deceptive bait and switch and shell-game tricks."

Officials with the foundation declined to comment on Caplan's rebuttal, saying they voiced their opinions already.

The matter is scheduled to go back to court on Thursday morning.

Almost from the time the Obamas selected Jackson Park as the site for the center, it has revealed divisions between residents — some along race and class lines.

The lawsuit has stirred memories of litigation that led Star Wars creator George Lucas to drop his plans for a Lucas Museum along Chicago's lakefront.

The City Council has approved much of the legislation related to building the center. But the project still has to finish a federal review process before any construction can begin.

On Monday, the city abruptly halted a separate construction project in Jackson Park that would have essentially made it easier for the center to be constructed without displacing athletic activities for a group of high school students. That project, which was paid for with a $3.5 million grant from the Obama Foundation and would have relocated a track and soccer field from one section of Jackson Park to another, will likely be the focus of the upcoming court hearing.

mental role in former Gov. George Ryan's decision to vacate Illinois' death row in 2000 and declare a moratorium on capital punishment in the state.

Lawsuits from Burge's victims, meanwhile, have cost taxpayers many millions in settlements and judgments, much of it paid out of city coffers in the past decade.

Burge himself never was charged directly in any of the torture allegations, though he was fired from the Chicago Police Department in 1993. Years later, in 2010, he was convicted of lying to federal authorities about his conduct and sentenced to prison. He was released in 2014 and returned to his waterfront home south of Tampa.

News of Burge's death began to surface publicly Wednesday at the trial of Officer Jason Van Dyke, charged with murder after he shot a Chicago teenager 16 times.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, who was in the courthouse to observe the trial, said Burge left a stain on the city.

"As a person, may his soul rest in peace," Jackson said. "As a policeman, he did a lot of harm to a lot of people and left on this city a mark. It stains us for a long time. His legacy, unfortunately, is tied in with forced confessions and wrongful convictions."

Current police and city officials were silent on the passing of Burge, but police union officials, past and present, offered support.

Dean Angelo, former head of the Fraternal Order of Police in Chicago, told reporters during a break in the Van Dyke trial that he had gotten word of Burge's death and "it came as kind of a shock." The police union posted condolences on social media along with a message asserting that the "full story" about Burge has never been told.

"Jon Burge put a lot of bad guys in prison that belonged ... in prison," Angelo said in the lobby of the Leighton Criminal Court Building. "People picked a career apart that was considered for a long time to be an honorable career and a very effective career. I don't know that Jon Burge got a fair shake based on the years and years of service that he gave the city. But we'll have to wait and see how that eventually plays out in history."

Diverging assessments of Burge's legacy have been a lightning rod that further polarized the long-tense relationship between the mostly white Chicago Police Department and the black and brown communities it patrols. Burge's conduct and the subsequent department cover-ups are a seminal scandal in that history.

By tolerating and supporting Burge's behavior for years, the department affirmed a police culture in which the mistreatment of black men was acceptable, critics say. That issue has never been more prominent than at the trial of Van Dyke, whose 2014 shooting of 17-year-old Laquan McDonald might have gone unexamined if a judge had not ordered the release of video showing that police had misrepresented the facts of how his killing took place.

Former Chicago Reader reporter John Conroy, who was among the first journalists to pay serious attention to the Burge allegations, said Wednesday that Burge "couldn't have done what he did without supervisors looking the other way."

Burge was a talented investigator whose worse instincts were allowed to run amok in a corrupt system, said Conroy, now senior investigator at the MacArthur Justice Center.

"What's overlooked in all of this is that Burge was ambitious and a leader of men, and if the first time he'd gone astray and beaten somebody up, if somebody had pulled him aside ... Jon Burge wouldn't have become the abhorrent figure he did," Conroy said. "It comes back to a lack of supervision."

The widespread impact of the allegations against Burge included questions about the conduct of former Mayor Richard M. Daley, who was Cook County state's attorney in the 1980s when much of the alleged torture took place, and former State's Attorney Richard Devine, whose office opposed inmates' allegations of torture.

A Vietnam War veteran, Burge joined the Police Department in 1970. He worked as a detective and in supervisory jobs at Calumet Area headquarters through the mid-1980s, but allegations of torture surfaced early. In 1973, Anthony Holmes alleged that he was electric-shocked and "bagged" after his arrest for murder, according to G. Flint Taylor, a civil rights lawyer who represented several Burge victims. Holmes, who was paroled after spending 33 years in prison, has maintained his innocence.

Much of the scandal surrounding Burge grew out of brutal crimes. Andrew Wilson alleged he was tortured after his arrest — with his brother Jackie Wilson — for the murder of two Chicago police officers in 1982. Madison Hobley made similar allegations after he was charged in a 1987 arson that killed his wife, young child and five others. Hobley was sentenced to death row before being pardoned and freed by Ryan.

Burge and detectives under his command were alleged to have tortured and abused more than 100 suspects in the 1970s and '80s.

Burge was suspended in 1991 and fired in 1993 by the Chicago Police Board for the torture of Andrew Wilson. Thirteen years later, special Cook County prosecutors found evidence of widespread abuse by Burge and detectives under his command but concluded that the statute of limitations on criminal charges had passed.

In 2008 he was arrested in Florida after being indicted on charges of perjury and obstruction of justice for denying involvement in torture in his written answers in a 2003 lawsuit.

In one example, Burge was asked to "state whether you have ever used methods, procedures or techniques involving any form of verbal or physical coercion of suspects while in detention or during interrogation, such as deprivation of sleep, quiet, food, drink, bathroom facilities, or contact with legal counsel and/or family members; the use of verbal and/or physical threats or intimidation, physical beatings, or hangings; the use of racial slurs or profanity; the use of physical restraints, such as handcuffs; the use of photographs or polygraph testing; and the use of physical objects to inflict pain, suffering or fear, such as firearms, telephone books, typewriter covers, radiators, or machines that deliver an electric shock."

He answered: "... I have never used any techniques set forth above as a means of improper coercion of suspects while in detention or during interrogation."

At his 2010 trial, a number of former convicts testified that Burge had used cattle prods on their genitals, suffocated them with plastic and beaten them with phone books.

Burge testified in his defense, denying in court that he ever tortured suspects or condoned torture. He said he had never witnessed a cop abusing a suspect in his 30 years with the department. He was convicted and served time in a North Carolina prison.

Despite costing the city tens of millions of dollars in legal expenses because of lawsuits related to the torture and abuse, Burge continued collecting a $4,000-a-month police pension. Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan filed suit to challenge the decision, but the Illinois Supreme Court ruled that she did not have standing to take up the matter.

At last count, the city and Cook County have spent nearly $100 million combined on Burge-related settlements and legal fees.

In 2013, Mayor Rahm Emanuel issued an unexpected public apology for the damage Burge did to the city, calling the era a "dark chapter" that needed to be put in the past. In 2015, a reparations settlement with some Burge victims mandated that Chicago Public Schools teach eighth-graders and high school sophomores about Burge's crimes. The curriculum went into effect in 2017.

Burge's cases were most recently in the news when a Cook County judge in June ordered the release of Jackie Wilson after deciding that his confession in the 1982 murder of the two police officers had been physically coerced by detectives under Burge's command. It was Wilson's brother, Andrew Wilson, whose allegations of torture first drew attention to Burge in the late 1980s. Andrew Wilson died in prison in 2007.

Top aide accused of 'inappropriate behavior'

By Hal Dardick and Gregory Pratt
Chicago Tribune

Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle on Wednesday said she fired her chief of staff for engaging in "inappropriate behavior on his personal time," a disclosure that came just ahead of a Thursday launch of her mayoral bid.

Preckwinkle said she became aware Friday of an allegation against John Keller. She said the allegation "was corroborated" but did not offer specifics.

"I confronted Mr. Keller; he did not deny the allegation," Preckwinkle, the county Democratic Party chair, said in a statement. "Yesterday, I demanded and received his immediate resignation."

Calls and text messages to Keller, a longtime Preckwinkle aide and campaign operative, were not returned. In a resignation letter that Preckwinkle's attorney released Wednesday, Keller said he was "honored to have served as your chief of staff since January of 2017. It is with mixed emotions that I submit this letter of resignation effective immediately."

Her office initially announced the Keller's resignation at 9 p.m. Tuesday in a tersely worded news release that said he resigned earlier in the day "for personal reasons." After Preckwinkle was asked to explain the reasons for Keller's departure, her aides followed up with Wednesday's statement.

In a section labeled "background," Preckwinkle's aides said she "has made the prohibition of harassment, including the prohibition of sexual harassment, a priority in Cook County."

The statement went on to note all county employees "underwent extensive sexual harassment training" this year as required under a new ordinance.

Illinois politics has been rocked by the #MeToo movement against sexual harassment since last fall. House Speaker Michael Madigan, who also chairs the state Democratic Party, has parted ways with several top aides.

In June, Madigan ousted Tim Mapes, his longtime chief of staff, after a staff member accused the top aide of sexual harassment.

Last month, then-Republican state Rep. Nick Sauer of Lake Barrington resigned following his ex-girlfriend's allegations of improper sexual activity online.

For Preckwinkle, Keller's resignation also highlighted the issue of turnover in top executive county positions, which some critics see as a fault in her management style.

The Tribune asked Preckwinkle about the staff turnover in June 2017, when she announced she would run for her third and final term as County Board president. She noted that some of her former chiefs of staff had gone on to successful careers elsewhere. Those include Kurt Summers, the city treasurer, and Kim Foxx, the state's attorney.

"My view is that if you're going to be an effective leader in public service, you have to have a pretty high bar for performance," she added. "You have to hold yourself accountable, but you also have to hold your staff accountable. I don't think I'm a bear or anything."

Keller was named to the top administrative post in Preckwinkle's office in January 2017, becoming her fourth chief of staff in the previous 16 months. Keller's predecessor, Brian Hamer, resigned without giving an explanation for his departure.

Hamer's nine-month tenure was longer than that of his predecessor, Tasha Green Cruzat, who left after just seven months to become president of Voices for Illinois Children, a children's advocacy agency. Cruzat had replaced Foxx, a Preckwinkle protege who gave up the job to wage her successful run for state's attorney.

Questions about Keller arose as Preckwinkle's staff proceeded apace in their planning of a Thursday afternoon news conference at a Kenwood hotel to announce she was joining the crowded field to replace Mayor Rahm Emanuel, who last week announced he would not seek re-election.

Keller has been a trusted aide to Preckwinkle since 2006, when he went to work as the director of her re-election campaign for 4th Ward alderman. He was deputy campaign manager during Preckwinkle's winning 2010 Democratic County Board president campaign. After she won, Keller became manager of the general election campaign.

Since then he's held various county jobs, leaving for about two years to work in the state Department of Commerce and Economic Opportunity under former Democratic Gov. Pat Quinn and then as an independent political consultant before returning to the county payroll.

Sessions criticizes Chicago's consent decree at speech

By Emily K. Coleman
News-Sun

U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions did not address President Donald Trump's attack on his performance during a Waukegan appearance Wednesday and instead focused on promoting Trump's support for police.

Speaking to law enforcement officials at a police training conference in Waukegan, Sessions criticized Chicago's proposed consent decree, which calls for sweeping changes to the Chicago Police Department, calling it "irresponsible."

The comments earned quick rebuttals from the American Civil Liberties Union and Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel's office, who said Sessions was in town to see what was leading to murders being down 24 percent since the beginning of last year.

"I know Jeff Sessions is having a tough day with his boss, but it's no excuse for lashing out at others and making up alternative facts," Adam Collins, the spokesman for the mayor's office, said in an email.

Trump's latest jab at Sessions was to remark that he has no attorney general.

Sessions spent Wednesday meeting with Chicago area police department leaders and had a round table discussion with community members, including, he said, "mothers whose sons were gunned down and students from high school who are exposed too often to unspeakable violence."

"The people in these neighborhoods are entitled to the same safety and security as the people living in the mansions and gated communities on the North Shore," he said. "They deserve the same protection as every American. They deserve to go to sleep at night without the fear of a stray bullet hitting coming through the wall as their children sleep.

Sessions also visited an intelligence center in Chicago's 15th police district, Collins said.

The Strategic Decision Support Centers, which were established in the districts with the most violence, house civilian data analysts from the University of Chicago Crime Lab who work with officers from the district studying crime trends, helping them make sure they are putting resources in the right places at the right time.

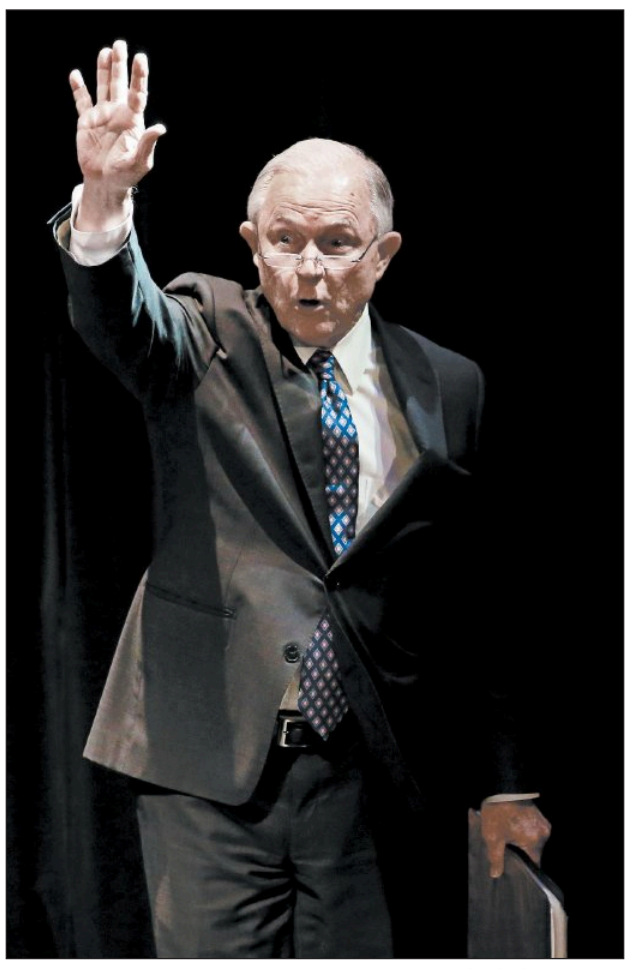
Murders are down 24 percent since the centers were opened at the beginning of last year, according to numbers provided by Collins. Shootings are down 30 percent, leading to 631 fewer shooting victims.

Sessions did acknowledge the decrease in violent crime, saying, "Police here are doing everything in their power to reverse these trends," but that "their hands still remain tied" by the ACLU agreement.

"Hundreds of people were gunned down for another year," Sessions said. "And yet, there's been recent discussion of even more restrictions on the police. Clearly, that is not the answer. That's not the way we're going to make communities safer. We need to get back to community-based policing, not further limit the very tactics that have the best chance to reduce crime and violence."

He said addressing Chicago's violence was of the utmost importance, but that the city's political leaders have made "colossal mistakes," including agreeing to a deal with the ACLU of Illinois.

The agreement, which is overseen by a retired federal judge, was reached in 2015 in the wake of an ACLU study that found African Americans were stopped by police at a disproportionately higher rate than Hispanics and whites, especially in predominantly white neighborhoods. In the settlement, the Chicago Police Department agreed to keep track of all investigatory street stops and protective pat-downs.



ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Attorney General Jeff Sessions spoke to law enforcement officials at a police training conference in Waukegan.

Sessions blamed the changes for the climb in murders and other violent crime pointing, as he has before, to a University of Utah study that came to the same conclusions.

"When policing went down, crime went up," he said. "There's a clear lesson here that if you want more shootings, more death, listen to the ACLU, Antifa, Black Lives Matter and groups who don't know the reality of policing. If you want public safety, then listen to the police professionals."

Karen Sheley, the ACLU of Illinois' director of the police practices project, called Session's assertions a promotion of "revisionist history" that ignores the local context of things contributing to crime, including the state budget impasse that was "starving" not-for-profits serving communities in Chicago, the release of the tape showing the shooting of Laquan MacDonald and the firing of the police superintendent.

"Yet again, this administration encourages unlawful behavior and strong-arm tactics, instead of supporting commitments by local police to do the hard work of building respect and relationships with the communities they serve," Sheley said. "Black and Latino Chicagoans have lived through the decades of excessive force, unconstitutional and harassing stops, and coercive interrogations leading to false confessions."

Sheley said through the agreement and the upcoming consent decree, the city is committing to having a police department that "follows the rules and truly serves the community."

'I'm moving back to Chicago,' West says

Rapper announced plans at event for high schoolers

By Morgan Greene
Chicago Tribune

Kanye West may be making another homecoming.

The Chicago-raised rapper said Monday night that he plans to move back to Chicago.

"I've got to let you all know that I'm moving back to Chicago," said West at "Open Mike," Chance the Rapper's open mic event at Harold Washington Library for high schoolers. "I'm never leaving again."

West

And a few have already been debunked.

West took to Twitter earlier this month to announce he would be teaching a course at the School of the Art Institute. The school confirmed West was not currently teaching at SAIC and said there were no immediate plans for him to do so.

Since then, however, the spokeswoman, PR director Bree Witt, said school officials met with West at his request about "exploring opportunities with the School of the Art Institute of Chicago," she said in an e-mail. "And as an honorary alum, we welcomed a discussion about how our community can best benefit from his interdisciplinary experience and expertise. We discussed several options, including an artist talk and workshop, and while nothing has been confirmed at this time, we continue to remain open to opportunities that will deepen our students' experience.

"The discussion was very broad, with a number of things covered, including the possibility of doing an artist talk or workshop, but no concrete plans have been made."

West also tweeted: "We're doing Chicago Comedy Jam. We're going to restore the Regal Theatre."

West does not appear to be associated with the Chi City Comedy Jam, slated for Oct. 5-6 at the Arie Crown Theatre, and no official restoration plans have been announced for the shuttered South Shore theater.

West also said he stopped by Theaster Gates' Stony Island Arts Bank and found it "super inspiring" and said an office for his Yeezy shoes would appear in Chicago.

In May, West was embroiled in a controversy surrounding Donda's House, the Chicago nonprofit named for his late mother, after a Twitter feud erupted between West's wife, Kim Kardashian West, and co-founder Che "Rhymefest" Smith. West was accused of neglecting the youth arts organization and was found to no longer be on the nonprofit's board of directors.

It's unclear whether West's move would include his wife or their three children. A representative for West did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

ALEXIS AGUILAR IMAGE FROM VIDEO

City rallies online to aid fearful family

adults did not speak English. According to Aguilar, although she could not confirm the family was homeless, it was clear they needed help because "it seemed like they hadn't slept or cleaned up for days."

But when she tried to provide them with information to find help, she noticed that they seemed afraid to speak to her, Aguilar said. Before exiting at the Washington stop, she gave them a number to a shelter in the Chicago area, some water and cash. But she was unable to get their names or any information about where they were going.

Feeling helpless, Aguilar resorted to Facebook, where she posted the video in which you see two children covering themselves with a small blue blanket, a barefoot girl lying in the corridor of the train, the two adults in seats with their heads down attempting to sleep, two other children in the back seats and a child dressed in a red sweater.

She hoped that by posting the video, someone in the community might recognize the family and offer them the help and resources they need.

It went viral, with several thousand people sharing the video and comments pouring in as those in the community attempted to piece together the family's whereabouts.

And they did.

The first hint came from Martin Fierro, 36, who said he and his sister saw the family about a month ago in the Logan Square neighborhood.

Fierro said the family approached him and his sister to ask for help and told them they had left the place where they were living because deportations seemed to be increasing and they feared separation, he said in a phone interview.

"But when my sister tried to call for help, they left. You could tell they were afraid," Fierro said.

Details about where the family is from were not immediately available, and it was unclear whether any or all members may be living in this country without documentation — or even caught up in the immigration system.

About 10 p.m. Tuesday, a woman identified as Beatriz Fernandez posted on Facebook that she'd found the family in Chicago "by the Burger King near North Ave."

Tony Contreras saw the notice and immediately replied, asking Fernandez to call him.

"There are many people here who can help," Contreras wrote, shortly after driving to the family's location. A few others did the same. Eventually the family was convinced to accept help, with the promise that they would be safe, and their identities and location would not be revealed.

By midnight, community members had found the family an apartment, Aguilar said. "The family has been found and are safe," she wrote in a follow-up post on Facebook.

Aguilar set up a GoFundMe account for the family that surpassed its $5,000 goal by noon Wednesday. Contreras, who is in direct contact with Aguilar, said the family, which in addition to the parents includes the six children ages 7-13, will have access to that money shortly.

Provisions for the family also are being accepted at Body Shot Boxing Club, 600 W. Cermak Road.

Aguilar and Contreras said they will not disclose any information about the family.

"I don't want to jeopardize anybody. All I'm doing is helping them out. I helped them get a place last night. They are in a warm, safe place," Contreras said in a Facebook Live post Wednesday afternoon. "

I just want to keep everybody safe, that's all that matters."

Aguilar, who posted the viral video of the family on the train, told a reporter she's amazed at the outpouring.

"I really wanted to raise awareness so that the family could get the proper help," she said.

This case may point to the ongoing fear of separation at the border among families from Mexico and Central America to the U.S.

Dagmara Avelar, program manager of the Illinois Coalition for Immigrant and Refugee Rights, wrote in an email that "the crisis of the possibility of family separation is not only moral and emotional; it is also legal and financial. Many families cannot afford legal representation, nor can they easily replace the salary of a breadwinner."

She added that the coalition has a hotline that can connect families in crisis with reliable and immediate information, referrals to legal, ministry and social services — while also providing a long-term connection to local help.

Good News! Stem Cell Therapy for Pain now offers solutions for you!

Stem Cell Therapy for Pain devotes much of its time treating chronically ill patients – especially those in pain. With 3 years experience, serving Northern Illinois with multiple practices, it continues to utilize cutting-edge technology to help restore patients' health. The institute recently announced its latest state-of-the-art healing procedure: regenerative stem cell therapy.

Stem Cell Therapy for Pain recently announced its latest state-of-the-art healing procedure; regenerative stem cell therapy. Stem Cell Therapy for Pain is now offering painless stem cell injections for pain and advanced procedures for arthritic and/ or degenerative conditions, especially those found in the knees, hips, should, neck and lower back.

These remarkable treatments can repair tissue in the body that has been damaged from age, disease or degeneration. They do this by pinpointing the impaired areas, removing the swelling with powerful anti-inflammatory properties and healing them by regenerating new cells and tissue.

This innovative therapy is particularly effective in treating such conditions as degenerative arthritis, degenerative cartilage and ligaments, bone spurs, degenerative joint disease, bursitis, tendinitis, and especially Osteoarthritis of the Knee.

According to the Stem Cell Therapy for Pain chief medical officer, patients can experience a significant decrease in pain and an improvement in range of motion within weeks of treatment.

"We are so excited about the results we are seeing with our patients. More Importantly, our patients are excited about living their lives enjoying the activities they enjoy. We invite you to attend one of our upcoming seminars near your home, to learn more about this incredible healing technology and how it might be able to help you or someone you love finally live a pain free life."

CHRIS WALKER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Dorothy Widen, 8, left, and her mother Corey Widen make plans this week for a science project as they descend the stairs in their Wilmette home.

Results differ for different parents

the child welfare system, said Rachel O'Konis Ruttenberg, executive director of the Family Defense Center, a Chicago organization that defends parents under investigation and advocates for DCFS reforms.

"The consequences are so much more dire for low-income and families of color," O'Konis Ruttenberg said. When DCFS first comes in contact with a family, those with financial means tend to hire a lawyer to assist them, she said, but "low-income families don't have the resources to get an attorney and get in front of it."

Widen said she has a friend, a lawyer who works on such cases, and she was able to use her friend's expertise during the investigation. But those who do not know attorneys, and don't have the funds to hire them, aren't so lucky, O'Konis Ruttenberg said. And the process can be lengthy, often interfering with employment opportunities once a parent is in the DCFS system.

In 2013, Natasha Felix let her children, ages 5 to 11, play with their 9-year-old cousin at a playground she could see from the window of her East Ukrainian Village home. A passerby called DCFS, setting off a two-year ordeal before Felix could get an "inadequate supervision" finding against her thrown out in court. While her case worked its way through the system, Felix said she could not volunteer at her children's school and she had limited job prospects as a home health aide.

"It has been extremely stressful," Felix, then a 27-year-old single mother, told the Tribune at the time, as she fought the finding in court. "It makes you paranoid about every decision you make."

DCFS data show the office fielded more than 276,000 calls to its hotline — the same avenue that launched the Widen and Felix investigations — during its last fiscal year, which ended June 30. More than 81,000 of those calls resulted in investigations, and from those, the office found fewer than 20,000, or less than 25 percent, to have sufficient evidence to support the allegations, according to DCFS reports. The rest were deemed "unfounded" claims because there was no evidence to support them, said spokesman Neil Skene.

Since news of Widen's case went viral, she and her story have been featured on several network and cable TV shows, and in publications across the U.S. and in other countries.

O'Konis Ruttenberg said she was pleased that during media appearances Widen acknowledged the racial and income disparities, and pointed out that her case could have turned out differently had she not contacted a lawyer friend or spoken out publicly. For this, the Family Defense Center plans to award Widen with its Spotlight Award during its annual banquet next week.

"She helped build awareness for the families we serve," O'Konis Ruttenberg said. "Even though she was not threatened to have her kids removed, she was able to help the message that this is a very upside-down child welfare system."

Experts say Illinois, like many states, has vague child-endangerment laws that also often contradict cultural norms. O'Konis Ruttenberg pointed out that baby-sitting classes advertised at local park districts are often offered to children as young as 11, yet Illinois statute lists age 14 as the minimum age a child can be legally left alone.

But the law isn't clear-cut in its description of a "neglected minor," defining it as a child younger than 14 left "without supervision for an unreasonable period of time without regard for the mental or physical health, safety or welfare of that minor." And DCFS investigations are separate from criminal cases and can still be pursued even if law enforcement has decided not to investigate.

In the past few weeks, O'Konis Ruttenberg said she has met with Widen and other mothers to brainstorm ways to improve the system, including the possibility of legislation modeled after parts of Utah's so-called "free range parenting law."

In May, Utah legislators voted to protect certain parenting decisions by revising the state's child-neglect law to include unique phrasing, listing certain activities as legal, including allowing children to play at the park unsupervised, walk to and from school alone, and sit unattended in a parked car — all under certain conditions.

Of the moms she met with, "half embrace 'free-range parenting,' and half don't. They all talked about making decisions about what your kids can and can't do, and felt judged," O'Knois Ruttenberg said."They talked about it weighing on them and how it made them feel less confident" about parenting decisions.

Widen said the law as well as judgment by other parents seem to trump "common sense." She has heard from many other moms who have gone through similar situations, and she believes parents report other parents in an effort to "force you to parent like they want you to. Part of our culture needs to change," Widen said.

"This is a classic example of what I've been telling people about for a while," said Lenore Skenazy, the Wilmette native and New York writer who formed the free-range parenting movement 10 years ago after receiving media backlash for letting her then-9-year-old son ride the New York City subway alone.

Skenazy has expanded her efforts to encourage childhood independence through her recently formed nonprofit, Let Grow. The organization's main push is to get schools to encourage families to allow their children to experience freedom and free play.

The group's projects include working with teachers to suggest to students that they ask their parents to allow them to do age-appropriate activities like riding their bike on their own, Skenazy said. The organization also works with schools to open their grounds for free play before and after school, she said.

"If you're the only mom or dad sending your kid out to play, there's no one for them to play with ... and someone might think it's not OK," she said. "If you have everybody at school all zooming around the neighborhood, then you have re-normalized it."

Skenazy said once this way of life is again part of the status quo, judgment of parents who offer their children independence could vanish, along with child welfare cases like Widen's.

"People just need permission to do this again," she said.

neries, General Iron today is bordered on three sides by the Lincoln Yards development — one of the sites city leaders are pitching for Amazon's second headquarters. While the scrap yard's owners have announced they are planning to relocate from wealthy, largely white Lincoln Park to a low-income, predominantly Latino neighborhood on the Southeast Side, the move isn't expected to happen until at least 2020.

Cardenas and other aldermen offered decidedly more positive stories about General Iron. Emanuel administration officials testified that dozens of city inspections haven't found anything wrong at the scrap yard and questioned whether Hopkins' measure would hold up in court.

"We don't want to be counterproductive to business in the city," Cardenas said. "We need to be more compassionate to these industries."

Though the vast majority of scrap dumped at General Iron arrives by tractor-trailer or barge, Ald. Proco "Joe" Moreno, 1st, focused on the itinerant peddlers who line up daily with shopping carts full of cans and anything else metal plucked from surrounding streets and garbage cans.

"These people who work hard ... are cleaning up our alleys," said Moreno, noting that many of the peddlers are Latino or African-American. "They are performing an incredible service."

Said Ald. Tom Tunney, 44th: "We want to keep them in our city. It's a tough business. It's a dirty business. But it's got to be done."

Ald. Walter Burnett, 27th, stopped by the hearing to vouch for the Labkons, the family that has owned General Iron for four generations. "I've broken bread with them," he said.

The Labkons also have spread more than $500,000 in political contributions among local politicians during the past seven years, according to campaign finance records.

Burnett got $16,000. Other recipients included Emanuel, $51,500; Tunney, $39,750; and Cardenas, $15,000.

A dozen City Hall lobbyists have been on the family's payroll in recent years, including John Borovicka, who worked for Emanuel when the mayor was a congressman; Victor Reyes, a former political operative for Mayor Richard M. Daley; and John R. Daley, son of Cook County Commissioner John Daley and the former mayor's nephew.

One of the Labkons' latest hires is Patrick Collins, a former assistant U.S. attorney who led the corruption trial of former Gov. George Ryan. During Tuesday's City Hall hearing, Collins sat at the witness table next to Adam Labkon, the scrap yard's operations manager, and repeatedly questioned Hopkins' integrity as the alderman sat stone-faced a few feet away.

"This family has been dragged into this so Ald. Hopkins can grandstand," Collins said, his voice rising. "They've been treated like garbage. If Ald. Hopkins wants to continue to abuse this family, he should do so using proper procedures."

Restricting the scrap yard's operating hours would force the company out of business, Labkon added, putting 130 mostly Latino and African-American employees out of work. Chicago streets and alleys would end up "severely congested" with scrap metal, he said.

The handful of neighbors who testified in support of Hopkins were quickly cut off by Cardenas, who questioned how long they had lived in the city and asked how many times they had filed complaints through official channels.

"If a lot of you other aldermen had this facility in your ward, you would be doing what (Hopkins) is doing," said Don Goschy, who has lived in Lincoln Park for 35 years.

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

General Iron Industries, on North Clifton Avenue in Chicago, collects junk for its massive shredders.

Georgia Nicholson, who lives across the street from General Iron, says she hoses metallic particles off her patio several times every day. "I don't know why the city doesn't see these things," she said.

Another longtime Lincoln Park resident called the hearing a charade.

"With the election for a new mayor around the corner," Warren Baker said, "we as a community of 130,000 strong need to make sure the next mayor puts the health, safety and well-being of Lincoln Park/Bucktown children and families ahead of the politics of one family."

In the end, all of the committee members other than Hopkins voted to shelve his proposal. Cardenas then adjourned the hearing.

"My job is to represent the people of my neighborhood who have been telling me since before I got elected about the explosions, about the noise, about the dust, about the oily film that they find on their cars, on their sidewalks, on their wading pools," said Hopkins, who along with Smith and Ald. Scott Waguespack, 32nd, is calling for the city to turn the site into a new park. "There is absolutely no question that General Iron is a nuisance and is a health hazard to the neighborhood."

Raffle over, McHenry VFW looks to future

Pandemonium to resume when next game begins

By Robert McCoppin
Chicago Tribune

Now that the dust has settled from the McHenry VFW's $7 million Queen of Hearts raffle, everyone involved can take a break — but officials expect the pandemonium to resume as soon as the next game begins.

That's because the next raffle will start off with a prize pot of around $3.4 million, more than enough to attract huge crowds again, and has the potential to grow even bigger than the game that just ended.

A woman identified publicly only as Lori S. was the big winner of that game Tuesday night when her raffle ticket was chosen from more than 2 million others and the queen of hearts was unveiled, meaning she will take home 60 percent of the pot, or about $4.2 million before taxes.

She texted to the VFW post a picture showing her coupon that matched the winning raffle ticket and planned to meet Thursday with post officials to get her cashier's check, but she preferred to remain anonymous, McHenry Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 4600 Cmdr. Dwane Lungren said.

The post keeps 20 percent of the pot, or $1.4 million, while the other 20 percent goes to start the next game. In addition, the past week's sales, estimated by post members at around $2 million, also get rolled over to the next game.

Organizers, though, are considering some changes for next time that could provide more chances to win. In the last game, the three other queens in the playing card deck, as well as two jokers, were each worth 5 percent of the pot. Officials are considering whether to add more smaller prizes, such as 1 percent prizes for aces and kings, and prizes larger than $100 for having a raffle ticket drawn, Lungren said.

"We'd like to have a lot more money paid out for more incentive for players," Lungren said. "It makes more people happier they're winning something from it."

Post officials will meet with city officials in a couple of weeks to discuss whether any other changes are necessary for parking and security. The next game was scheduled to begin Jan. 8, but that could get moved back because of the difficulties of running the game in the dead of winter, with traffic cops and long lines of people standing outside.

With a small charity handling such large amounts of cash, a watchdog official warned, officials should make sure there are controls in the process to prevent theft.

CharityWatch, a nonprofit watchdog group in Chicago, gives the national Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U.S. and Foundation an F rating, primarily because less than half of the organization's proceeds go to nonfundraising activities. The agency does not rate local VFWs like the one in McHenry, but CharityWatch President Daniel Borochoff said that officials should make sure that different people handle the collection, counting and safekeeping of the money, and that more than one person verifies each step in the process, to avoid any person manipulating the proceeds.

The post will have to file an annual IRS Form 990, stating how it spends its revenue, broken down for construction, operating expenses and donations to other charities.

In addition, Borochoff said, the post should be transparent about where the money goes, noting that only 20 percent of raffle players' money goes to the post, and it's not tax-deductible.

"It's gambling," he said, "not a donation."

Trump comforts devastated Carolinas

'We will never forget your loss,' president tells residents

By Catherine Lucey
Associated Press

NEW BERN, N.C. — President Donald Trump handed out hot dogs, hugs and comforting words in the Carolinas on Wednesday as he surveyed the wreckage left by Hurricane Florence.

With residents still recovering from torrential rains that left widespread destruction and injury, Trump sought to strike a balance between comforter and cheerleader.

During a packed day, Trump visited both North and South Carolina, distributed meals at a church, walked amid piles of sodden furniture in damaged neighborhoods, offered hugs and handshakes to residents and discussed the response efforts with local and state officials.

"America grieves with you and our hearts break for you. God bless you," he said during a briefing at a marine base in Havelock, N.C. "We will never forget your loss. We will never leave your side. We're with you all the way."

The emotional words and comprehensive itinerary stood in contrast with Trump's trip to Puerto Rico last year after Hurricane Maria, when he drew criticism for tossing rolls of paper towels into the crowd. Or his initial visit to Houston after Hurricane Harvey, when he did not meet with any storm victims.

Neverthless, exhaustion and frustration are building in the Carolinas as thousands of people wait to go home days after Hurricane Florence unleashed epic floods blamed for at least 37 deaths, including those of two women who drowned when a sheriff's van taking them to a mental health facility was swept off a road.

There wasn't any presidential fanfare 100 miles inland in Fayetteville, N.C. There, Roberta and Joseph Keithley had been sleeping on cots set up in a school classroom since Friday. They still didn't know if their home was ruined.

"It's getting a little frustrating, but you have to deal with it and roll with the punches," said Roberta Keithley, 73. "It's just another hurdle to get over in life."

To the south, daybreak brought a return of floodwaters to Nichols, S.C., which also was inundated by Hurricane Matthew two years ago. The flooding from Florence had subsided, only to get worse again.

Access improved to Wilmington, a North Carolina port city of 120,000 that was cut off for days by high water. But officials said they don't know when evacuees would be able to return home, and it may be next week before conditions improve drastically since the Cape Fear River isn't expected to crest at the city until Monday or Tuesday.

"Understand: There is a lot of water inland, and it is continuing to make its way downstream," county manager Chris Coudreit said.

Nearly 3 feet of rain fell in places, and dozens of cities had more than 10 inches of rain. Roads remained dangerous, and some were still being closed as swollen rivers emptied toward the ocean.

North Carolina officials said about 7,800 people remained in shelters, down from about 10,000 on Monday despite Gov. Roy Cooper's plea to stay put.

Some of those who left shelters may have been headed toward the coast on U.S. 421, where a long line of cars, utility crews and trucks loaded with generators sat in a jam.

About 161,000 homes and businesses were still without electricity in North Carolina, around a quarter of them in the county where Wilmington is located. An estimated 900,000 homes and businesses lost power in the Carolinas and Virginia.

Trump made his whirlwind tour through the Carolinas five days after the storm. North and South Carolina both backed Trump in the 2016 election, and the president largely saw people who were happy to greet him.

There were still flashes of Trump's outsized persona and unconventional style — he asked about the status of Lake Norman, where he owns a golf club, telling officials, "I can't tell you why, but I love that area."

He also joked with a family who had a large yacht they didn't own wash up against their house. "At least you got a nice boat out of the deal," he told them. "What's the law? Maybe it becomes theirs."

Trump later traveled to Conway, S.C., where more flooding is expected. He toured a neighborhood where a street was already submerged under water.

"Is everybody OK?" he asked those gathered, assuring them it was "going to be OK."

"Lot of money coming from Washington," he promised.

North Carolina's farmers, meanwhile, are beginning to count up their losses.

The flooding has killed an estimated 3.4 million chickens and 5,500 hogs, authorities said. Farmers are also concerned about cotton, sweet potatoes, peanuts and corn, but swamped roads and fields have made it difficult to assess the damage.

Koreas summit jump-starts stalled U.S.-N. Korean talks

By Matthew Pennington
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A better-than-expected outcome of the summit between the two Koreas kick-started stalled negotiations between Washington and Pyongyang, boosting President Donald Trump's high-stakes push to get the North to give up its nuclear weapons by the end of his first term in office.

But it left open a burning question: Will the concessions North Korean leader Kim Jong Un is offering be enough to convince the U.S. to meet any of his demands?

Trump, characteristically, hailed the result of the talks in Pyongyang between Kim and South Korean President Moon Jae-in as "very exciting" and a sign of "tremendous progress" in his effort to get North Korea to denuclearize, which Kim agreed to do in vague terms when he met with Trump in Singapore in June.

Diplomacy between the U.S. and North Korea that had gotten nowhere since the summit clicked into gear again.

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo on Wednesday invited North Korean Foreign Minister Ri Yong Ho for talks in New York next week, during the annual gathering of world leaders at the United Nations. North Korean representatives were also invited to meet with the U.S. envoy for North Korean policy, Stephen Biegun, in Vienna "at the earliest opportunity."

"This will mark the beginning of negotiations to transform U.S.-DPRK relations through the process of rapid denuclearization of North Korea, to be completed by January 2021, as committed by Chairman Kim, and to construct a lasting and stable peace regime on the Korean Peninsula," Pompeo said in a statement, using the initials of the country's official name, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea.

With scant progress in the past three months, Trump has been open to criticism that he had been too eager to hold an unprecedented meeting with the North Korean leader in the summer and gained little in return. Moon, who was the handmaiden of the Kim-Trump dialogue back in the spring, was under considerable pressure this week to extract concessions from Kim that could sustain the rapprochement between Washington and Pyongyang.

While Kim didn't commit Wednesday to giving up his arsenal of nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles that pose a threat to the U.S. mainland, he did promise to dismantle North Korea's main rocket launch site in the presence of international experts, and offered to shutter its Nyongbyon nuclear site. That's where the North has a plutonium reactor and a uranium enrichment facility that can produce fissile material for atomic bombs. Dismantling it wouldn't reduce North Korea's atomic stockpile, thought to be enough for 40 to 60 bombs, but it could help cap it.

The catch is that Kim wants the U.S. to take unspecified "corresponding steps" — a likely reference to North Korea's desire for the U.S. to declare a formal end to the Korean War, in which fighting ended in 1953 without a peace treaty. The North is also vying for the U.S. to allow relief from sanctions that are hurting its struggling economy.

Washington will be reluctant to grant hasty concessions given North Korea's poor history in following through on its nuclear promises after negotiations.

The Trump administration has been demanding denuclearization, or at least concrete progress toward that goal, before it grants rewards.

SEONGJOON CHO/BLOOMBERG NEWS

Rail station viewers in Seoul tune in Wednesday to the summit between South Korean President Moon Jae-in, left, and North Korean leader Kim Jong Un in Pyongyang.

That's become the principal bone of contention between the two sides. On the eve of the Moon-Kim summit, an editorial in a North Korean state newspaper, Rodong Sinmun, blamed the U.S. for its diplomatic deadlock. It said Washington was "stubbornly insisting" the North dismantle its nuclear weapons first, while failing to show its will for confidence-building measures, "including the declaration of the end of war, which it had already pledged."

Trump himself, who is eager for results in his signature foreign policy, sounded open to considering reciprocal steps, telling reporters Wednesday: "We'll see what he's looking at." Trump also declared, "we're making tremendous progress" with North Korea, citing its halt in nuclear and missile testing since last November.

Kim agreed to allow outside experts to observe the dismantling of its Sohae launch site, where it has tested missile engines and blasted rockets into space. Pompeo welcomed that as a step agreed to by Trump and Kim in Singapore, and said it would be done in the presence of U.S. and international inspectors.

North Korea has long been reticent of such outside scrutiny. It expelled U.N. inspectors from its Nyongbyon nuclear site a decade ago when international aid-for-disarmament talks collapsed and hasn't allowed them back in since. The U.S. is demanding their return to see all facilities at Nyongbyon dismantled.

Jenny Town, research analyst on North Korea at the Stimson Center think tank in Washington, said shutting Sohae, a site with a huge launch tower and other facilities in which North Korea has invested heavily in recent years, would be a major concession from Kim. The North's satellite launches are regarded with deep suspicion by the U.S. and are prohibited under U.N. Security Council resolutions because the same technology might be used for missiles.

"The North Koreans have always held out launches as their right as a sovereign nation. They've never been willing to negotiate on that particular point. So they have eliminated an obstacle that has derailed negotiations in the past," Town said.

Wis. Dem's mom wants ad pulled featuring Republican son

MADISON, Wis. — The mother of a Wisconsin congressional candidate Randy Bryce doesn't like to see her sons fight.

Nancy Bryce, in an open letter Wednesday, called for an attack ad featuring Randy's brother James to be taken off the air.

"My family deserves better than this," she wrote. "All families deserve better than this."

Randy Bryce, known by the nickname "Iron Stache," is a Democrat running to replace House Speaker Paul Ryan, who is leaving Congress. Bryan Steil, a former Ryan aide, is the Republican running in the southeastern Wisconsin district.

Bryce burst onto the national scene with a slick campaign launch video last year where he wipes away tears as his mother talks about the pain she is in and drugs she's taking for multiple sclerosis.

Her son James Bryce is a police officer and a Republican who has given money to Ryan and Steil and even contemplated running against his brother for the seat.

In an ad released Tuesday that was paid for by the Ryan-aligned super PAC the Congressional Leadership Fund, James Bryce endorses Steil and says he can't vote for his brother because he has "shown contempt for those in law enforcement."

Randy Bryce has been arrested nine times, first for drunken driving in 1998 and more recently for protesting the policies of Ryan and Republicans. The campaign ad shows an image of his mug shot and video of police taking him away in handcuffs at a protest.

In her letter, Nancy Bryce doesn't criticize her son James for cutting the ad, but she blames Ryan, the Republican Party and the super PAC running the spot as part of a $1.5 million buy in the Milwaukee television market.

"I'm used to my sons getting into disagreements with each other," she wrote. "And I understand that my boys see the world differently when it comes to politics. Unfortunately, some political operatives see it as a chance to exploit those differences for their own benefit."

She said those behind the ad aren't considering "a mother's pain at seeing her children used as tools in a political fight," and she called on Steil to denounce the ad and to ask the CLF to pull it.

Steil's campaign manager, Andrew Iverson, declined to comment but the super PAC stood by the ad.

"This ad explains everything Wisconsin voters need to know about the race," said CLF spokesman Michael Byerly.

Tragic stories of Hurricane Maria

Slow-motion disaster kept Puerto Ricans from getting the care they needed

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Ramona Gonzalez did not drown when Hurricane Maria drenched Puerto Rico. She did not die in the tempest, or from destruction wrought by the storm's 154 mph winds.

The disabled, 59-year-old woman died a month later, from sepsis — caused, says her family, by an untreated bedsore.

The storm and its aftermath took the lives of unfortunates such as Gonzalez, many of whom could have been saved with standard medical treatment. This was a slow-motion, monthslong disaster that kept Puerto Ricans from getting the care they needed for treatable ailments.

A year after Maria roared across the Caribbean, reporters for The Associated Press, the news site Quartz and Puerto Rico's Center for Investigative Journalism have put together the most detailed portrait yet of the agonizing final days of victims of the storm, interviewing 204 families of the dead and reviewing the accounts of 283 more to tell the stories of heretofore anonymous victims.

President Donald Trump cast doubt on the storm's widely accepted death toll Thursday, tweeting that "3000 people did not die" when Maria hit after a near-miss by Hurricane Irma in September 2017. He said the death count had been inflated "by the Democrats in order to make me look as bad as possible," by adding unrelated deaths to the toll from causes like old age.

But the joint investigation reflects how Puerto Rico's most vulnerable fell victim to the dire conditions created by the storms.

Disabled and elderly people were discharged from overwhelmed hospitals with bedsores that led to fatal infections. Medical oxygen ran out. People caught lung infections in sweltering private nursing homes and state facilities. Kidney patients received abbreviated treatments from dialysis centers that lacked generator fuel and fresh water despite pleas for federal and local officials to treat them as a higher priority, according to patient advocates.

There was Ernesto Curiel, a diabetic who died of a heart attack after weeks of walking 10 flights twice a day to fetch insulin from his building's only working refrigerator. Alejandro Gonzalez Vazquez, 47, unable to obtain his anti-psychotic medication, committed suicide instead of boarding his flight back to the U.S. mainland. Juana Castro Rivera, 52, died of leptospirosis, a disease transmitted by contaminated water. After several visits to a community clinic, she was diagnosed — too late — by a hospital in a neighboring municipality.

Along with post-storm conditions, each death has a complex mix of causes that can include serious pre-existing conditions and individual decisions by patients, caregivers and doctors, making it difficult to definitively apportion blame in every case. But critics say many could have been saved by better preparation and emergency response.

"I was looking for help and no one came," said Maria Gonzalez Munoz, who spent 30 days after the storm caring for her sister in her blacked-out home.

A photo of Efrain Perez, who died after being turned away from a public hospital days after the hurricane hit.

"No one was asking after us, no one from the government," said Gonzalez Munoz, 66.

The hurricane's true death toll has fueled debate since the first days of the storm, in large part because of the near-unique nature of the disaster.

Largely due to decades of neglect and years of fiscal crisis, the Puerto Rican electrical grid collapsed into the United States' longest-ever blackout after Maria hit on Sept. 20, 2017. That spawned a long and deadly tail for the storm, with hundreds of deaths coming long after the first weeks of the storm, as medical equipment failed and sick people weakened in the suffocating heat.

Researchers from George Washington University hired by Puerto Rico's government estimated last month that 2,975 people had died because of Maria in the six months after landfall, a number Puerto Rico accepted as official.

Though Trump continued to assert this week that his administration's efforts in Puerto Rico were "incredibly successful," both the local and federal governments have been heavily criticized for inadequate planning and post-storm response. The GWU report found that Puerto Rico had no plan for communication with its citizens in a crisis. The Center for Investigative Journalism found in May that the island's health department had no emergency response plan for hospitals and other medical facilities.

As for the Trump administration, more than half of federal emergency personnel in Puerto Rico were not qualified for their assigned tasks as of October 2017, a month after landfall, according to a Sept. 5 report by the U.S. Government Accountability Office.

vanaugh's glide to approval was interrupted last weekend when word of Ford's allegation became public, but GOP senators are showing no signs of slowing their drive to confirm him as quickly as possible.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, wrote to Ford's attorneys that the hearing was still scheduled for Monday morning, and he pointedly said she must submit her written statement by 10 a.m. Friday "if she intends to testify" that day.

Lisa Banks, a lawyer for Ford, released a statement late Wednesday that cast no light on whether her client will appear.

She wrote that Ford wants "a full non-partisan investigation" and said Ford is willing to cooperate. But she said Grassley's plan to call just Kavanaugh and Ford "is not a fair or good faith investigation" and said "multiple witnesses" — whom she didn't name — should appear. "The rush to a hearing is unnecessary, and contrary to the Committee discovering the truth," Banks wrote.

Ford has contended that at a house party in the 1980s, a drunken Kavanaugh tried undressing her and stifling her cries on a bed before she fled. Kavanaugh has denied that claim.

Meanwhile, Ford's relatives have signed a letter supporting her decision to come forward with the allegation. Ford's mother-in-law, sisters-in-law and other members of her husband's family released a letter Wednesday asking that her "private and difficult recollection be treated seriously and respectfully."

Trump's remark Wednesday was noteworthy because most Republicans have handled the question of Ford's credibility more gingerly. They say they want to give Ford, a professor at Palo Alto University, every chance to tell her story.

High court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, right, leaves home Wednesday in Chevy Chase, Md. He has denied the allegation.

Charges unlikely in Kavanaugh case, experts say

By Michael Balsamo and Eric Tucker
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Democrats have been calling on the FBI to investigate a woman's claim that Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh sexually assaulted her when they were both in high school. What they're asking for, though, isn't a criminal investigation that could lead to charges.

Instead, they want the FBI to examine Christine Blasey Ford's allegations, which Kavanaugh denies, to determine whether they are credible enough to cast doubt on Kavanaugh's fitness for office.

Whatever the FBI does, the prospect of criminal charges being filed against Kavanaugh appear unlikely, legal experts say. If a crime had taken place, it would almost certainly fall under local jurisdiction, not federal. That means it would fall under the laws of Montgomery County, Md., where the statute of limitations would seem to preclude charges.

Although the FBI conducts background checks for federal nominees, the agency does not make judgments on the credibility or significance of allegations, according to a statement issued by the Justice Department. Instead, the department compiles information about the nominee's past and provides its findings to the agency that requested the background check. In this case, that would be the White House.

There has been no suggestion that Kavanaugh may have committed a federal crime, so the FBI would not conduct a criminal investigation. But Senate Democrats are pushing for the FBI to reopen Kavanaugh's background investigation.

Greg Rinckey, a lawyer specializing in employment law and the security clearance process, said FBI background checks aren't meant to dig up decades-old claims that never resulted in a police report or criminal charges.

"That's not really what the FBI is looking for," Rinckey said. "The FBI is looking for any kind of current problem. What do I mean by current — seven to 10 years."

The allegations Ford detailed to The Washington Post appear to be misdemeanors that would be beyond the statute of limitations under Maryland law, said Randolph Rice, a Baltimore-based attorney who specializes in sex crimes. The allegations could be interpreted as second-degree assault and a fourth-degree sex offense, Rice said. Both are misdemeanors and would be far beyond the statute of limitations, which is typically one or three years, depending on the offense.

Even if the statute of limitations weren't an issue, investigators would have a difficult time pursuing charges because the alleged attack happened in 1982. Still, they may want to verify parts of her story by trying to interview witnesses.

"I'd really want to see her. I really would want to see what she has to say," Trump said. "If she shows up that would be wonderful. If she doesn't show up that would be unfortunate."

Seven weeks from midterm elections in which congressional control is at stake, Democrats have been unhesitant about casting Republicans as trying to strong-arm a victim of abuse.

The two parties' tactics illustrate how they are trying to navigate a political climate in which the #MeToo movement of outing sexual abusers has galvanized many female voters. A substantial delay could push confirmation past the November elections, when Democrats have a shot at winning Senate control, plus allow more time for unforeseen problems to pop up.

"Dr. Blasey Ford is calling for an impartial FBI investigation of her serious and credible allegations. Meanwhile Republicans are trying to bully her into a rigged hearing before a neutral investigation and without the only identified eyewitness," No. 2 Senate Democratic leader Dick Durbin of Illinois tweeted.

Ford and her Democratic allies also want the committee to interview Mark Judge, a Kavanaugh friend who Ford has said was in the bedroom during the attack. Judge has said he doesn't remember the incident, never saw Kavanaugh act that way and has no desire to testify publicly.

There were signs the GOP's strategy of planning a televised hearing while also offering Ford the chance to testify in private was keeping possible Republican defections in check. The party controls the Senate 51-49 and the Judiciary panel 11-10.

GOP Sen. Susan Collins of Maine said she hoped Ford would reconsider a decision not to testify and "it's not fair to Judge Kavanaugh" if she refuses. "Otherwise, there are these very serious allegations hanging over the head of a nominee who has emphatically denied them," she said on WVOM radio in Bangor.

As for a possible FBI intervention, Grassley said in his letter to Ford's lawyers, "We have no power to commandeer an Executive Branch agency into conducting our due diligence."

Also Wednesday, Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., said she will vote against Kavanaugh. McCaskill is the first of five undecided Senate Democrats in competitive re-election races to come out against Kavanaugh.

Associated Press

NEWPORT BEACH POLICE DEPARTMENT

Dr. Grant Robicheaux and Cerissa Riley have been charged with drugging and sexually assaulting intoxicated women.

LOS ANGELES — A California physician who appeared in a reality TV dating show and an alleged female accomplice have been charged with drugging and sexually assaulting two intoxicated women, prosecutors said, adding that on Wednesday investigators identified three more possible victims and believe there could be many others.

Michelle Van Der Linden, a spokeswoman for the Orange County District Attorney's Office, said prosecutors have received numerous calls since Tuesday, when the initial charges were announced against Dr. Grant Robicheaux and Cerissa Riley.

Defense attorneys say the suspects deny the claims.

"All allegations of nonconsensual sex are unequivocally denied by Grant Robicheaux and his girlfriend Cerissa Riley," attorneys Philip Cohen and Scott Borthwick said in a statement.

The attorneys said none of the allegations involve Robicheaux's medical practice or patients.

Robicheaux, 38, of Newport Beach and Riley, 31, of Brea were arrested Sept. 12 after being charged with rape by use of drugs, oral copulation by anesthesia or controlled substance, and other crimes, District Attorney Tony Rackauckas told reporters.

He said investigators were examining thousands of videos and images on Robicheaux's phone.

Some videos show women who "appear to be highly intoxicated beyond the ability to consent or resist, and they're barely responsive to the defendant's sexual advances," Rackauckas said.

Authorities say women met the pair during social encounters where they became intoxicated and ended up at Robicheaux's apartment.

"The second defendant, being a female, is key," Rackauckas said. "A woman purporting to be his girlfriend clearly played a significant role in disarming the victims, making them feel comfortable and safe."

The district attorney showed reporters video of Robicheaux appearing in the Bravo reality TV show, "Online Dating Rituals of the American Male" and photos of the two suspects in various locations. He said the images may "jog the public's memory" and possibly encourage other people to come forward.

Bravo said in a statement that the show aired for one season, is no longer in production and there are no plans to bring it back.

Robicheaux and Riley were released on $100,000 bail each and are scheduled for arraignment Oct. 24.

"We believe the defendants used their good looks and charm to lower the inhibitions of their potential prey," Rackauckas said, releasing an array of information about locations and events associated with Robicheaux and Riley. The two women who were allegedly assaulted met the pair during social encounters.

"Women who have encountered these two might have felt a false sense of security due to the fact that both defendants are clean cut, good-looking," Rackauckas said.

The two alleged victims first came forward to police in 2016.

Police say Robicheaux and Riley met the first victim in April 2016 at a restaurant in Newport Beach, and then invited her to a party on a boat. At some point, police say the couple drugged the woman and escorted her to Robicheaux's apartment, where police say they raped her. The following day, the woman contacted police and underwent a forensic exam, which found that she had multiple controlled substances in her system.

In October 2016, Robicheaux and Riley met a second victim at a Newport Beach bar, where police say they kept drinking with the victim "until she was no longer conscious." The couple then allegedly took her back to Robicheaux's apartment, where they are accused of sexually assaulting her. But the woman woke up and screamed so loud that neighbors called police.

Trump again pans Sessions: 'I don't have an attorney general'

By John Wagner and Matt Zapotosky
The Washington Post

NICHOLAS KAMM/GETTY 2017

President Trump said he has not been happy with Attorney General Jeff Sessions' handling of immigration issues.

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump escalated his attacks on Attorney General Jeff Sessions, offering a scathing assessment of his performance on the job and in his confirmation hearing.

"I don't have an attorney general. It's very sad," Trump said in an interview with Hill.TV released Wednesday, in which he also said the former senator from Alabama came off as "mixed up and confused" when he appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee in January 2017.

Trump has long been publicly critical of Sessions' decision to recuse himself from the investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election and said that he has regretted nominating him to lead the Justice Department.

But in the Hill.TV interview, Trump offered broader criticism, including on Sessions' handling of immigration issues, which has been cheered by Trump allies.

"I'm not happy at the border, I'm not happy with numerous things, not just this," Trump said, referring to the Russian investigation.

Sessions has implemented some of the most aggressive and controversial steps to try to crack down on illegal immigration — emphasizing "zero tolerance" for those who come to the country illegally, defending the policy of separating families, and issuing a ruling that limits those who qualify for asylum, among other things.

A Justice Department spokesman declined to comment Wednesday.

Trump doubled down on his criticism of Sessions as he left the White House to survey hurricane damage in the Carolinas.

"I'm disappointed in the attorney general for many reasons, and you understand that," he told reporters.

After taking another public tongue-lashing from the president, Sessions gave a speech Wednesday to law enforcement officials in Waukegan, Ill., in which he effusively praised Trump.

"Under his strong leadership, we are respecting police again and enforcing our laws," Sessions said, according to a written version of the speech. "Based on my experience meeting with officers like you across the country, I believe that morale has already improved under President Trump. I can feel the difference."

In the interview, Trump suggested he appointed Sessions out of blind loyalty.

"I'm so sad over Jeff Sessions because he came to me," Trump said. "He was the first senator that endorsed me. And he wanted to be attorney general, and I didn't see it."

Trump said Sessions did "very poorly" during the confirmation process.

"I mean, he was mixed up and confused, and people that worked with him for, you know, a long time in the Senate were not nice to him, but he was giving very confusing answers," Trump said. "Answers that should have been easily answered. And that was a rough time for him."

Citing Justice Department regulations, Sessions announced his recusal from the Russia investigation in March because of his prominent role in the Trump campaign. Part of the investigation now led by special counsel Robert Mueller is focusing on whether Trump's campaign coordinated with Russia.

In the interview, Trump questioned Sessions's self-recusal, asserting that the FBI "reported shortly thereafter any reason for him to recuse himself."

It was not immediately clear what he meant.

Career Justice Department ethics officials had told Sessions he had to step aside from any campaign-related investigations.

Trump, as president, could fire Sessions at any time, but for more than a year, he has chosen instead merely to insult his attorney general.

Trump has previously suggested he is unlikely to fire Sessions before the midterm elections in November.

Ghosts of buildings, graft haunt Mexico

Year after quake, destroyed buildings and corruption still rampant, frustrating rebuilding and sapping morale

By Mark Stevenson and Peter Orsi
Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Throughout Mexico City, uninhabited buildings with gaping cracks lean at precarious angles and some displaced people are still living outdoors a year after a magnitude 7.1 earthquake killed 228 people in the capital and 141 more in nearby states.

Bureaucracy and physical and legal hurdles have delayed demolition of hundreds of tottering structures. In other cases, owners carried out repairs that were purely cosmetic — masking damage that is likely to be revealed in the next quake. Corruption has continually undermined attempts to enforce building codes.

Tearing down buildings in a metropolis of 21 million is a daunting task. "It has to be done surgically, almost brick by brick," noted Ruben Echeverria, spokesman for the northern borough of Gustavo A. Madero.

But the slow pace of demolition, let alone rebuilding, is frustrating both to those who lost their homes and to those left living amid shattered eyesores that look like they could collapse at any time onto sidewalks and streets still cordoned off after the Sept. 19, 2017, quake.

Of about 411 buildings marked for demolition, only 62 have been taken down, and almost 1,000 more that were seriously damaged have yet to be reinforced.

On a recent morning, a handful of people returned to the six-story beige- and salmon-colored apartment building across from a park in the trendy Condesa neighborhood they had called home until the quake punched yawning holes into the masonry and left it listing to one side. They had just gotten word that it was finally going to be torn down, and civil defense workers took them inside one-by-one to rescue belongings — small furniture, pictures, tax documents, water-stained pillows — trapped inside during the nearly 12 months when nobody was allowed to enter.

"Seeing it like this, in ruins, it hurts. Basically if you walk through certain parts of the Condesa, what there is, is ruins," said Mila Molints, a yoga teacher and voice-over artist who was a partner in a tea shop on the ground floor. "And I think that's very sad that there are still these holes like monuments to the earthquake."

Molints said the delay has taken a toll on residents' confidence in authorities.

"In the end, I think the government's function is to protect its citizens," she said. "But I think it would be better for the government to take charge of these situations, or at least pay attention."

That seems a tall order: It wasn't until three months after the quake that the city government passed rules prohibiting the same engineer or architect from signing off on the safety of a building that he or she designs. The quake placed in doubt the city's reliance on self-policing — developers hire the regulatory experts who certify the safety of the buildings they put up.

An investigation by the civic group Mexicans Against Corruption revealed one case in which a structural engineer approved the designs of three buildings that collapsed, killing dozens of people. The same engineer had his license renewed and was even consulted on regulatory changes and building reinforcement after the quake.

Nobody has been successfully prosecuted for building collapses, even though experts found evidence of deficient construction in several cases where builders submitted false paperwork, used cheap materials or simply built atop older, unstable structures.

Nor has a single apartment building been reconstructed. What authorities have managed to erect is a daunting bureaucratic pyramid of paperwork for victims to get their buildings evaluated, repaired, demolished or replaced.

Rebeca Moreno, who works with a coalition of civic groups formed after the quake to help victims, said the government "came out with 122 regulations about what had to be done, and the victims couldn't be checking the internet all the time to see what new rules they had to follow to start repairing or rebuilding."

"They required that people prove ownership of their properties when it is known that 50 percent of people in Mexico City don't have proof of ownership, they don't have titles," she said, because the cost of registering properties has historically been high.

What little progress has been made seems to have come from the unsung heroes: demolition workers who break down the upper floors of buildings too tall to use heavy machinery, and quake victims who have slept outside, demonstrated and blocked streets to pressure the government.

REBECCA BLACKWELL/AP

This photo combination shows an apartment building in Mexico City, top, on Sept. 19, 2017, the day of last year's 7.1 magnitude earthquake, and one year later.

Leticia Rosales, a retired government office worker, is one of the lucky ones. Workers are busy laying the foundation of a new apartment tower to replace hers, which was badly damaged and later razed.

Still, her meager government monthly aid stipend of 3,000 pesos ($160) is coming to an end, and she still doesn't know how much she will have to chip in for rebuilding.

"They haven't told us how much, and that's what has all the neighbors in anguish, because a lot of people were still paying mortgages on their old apartments," Rosales said.

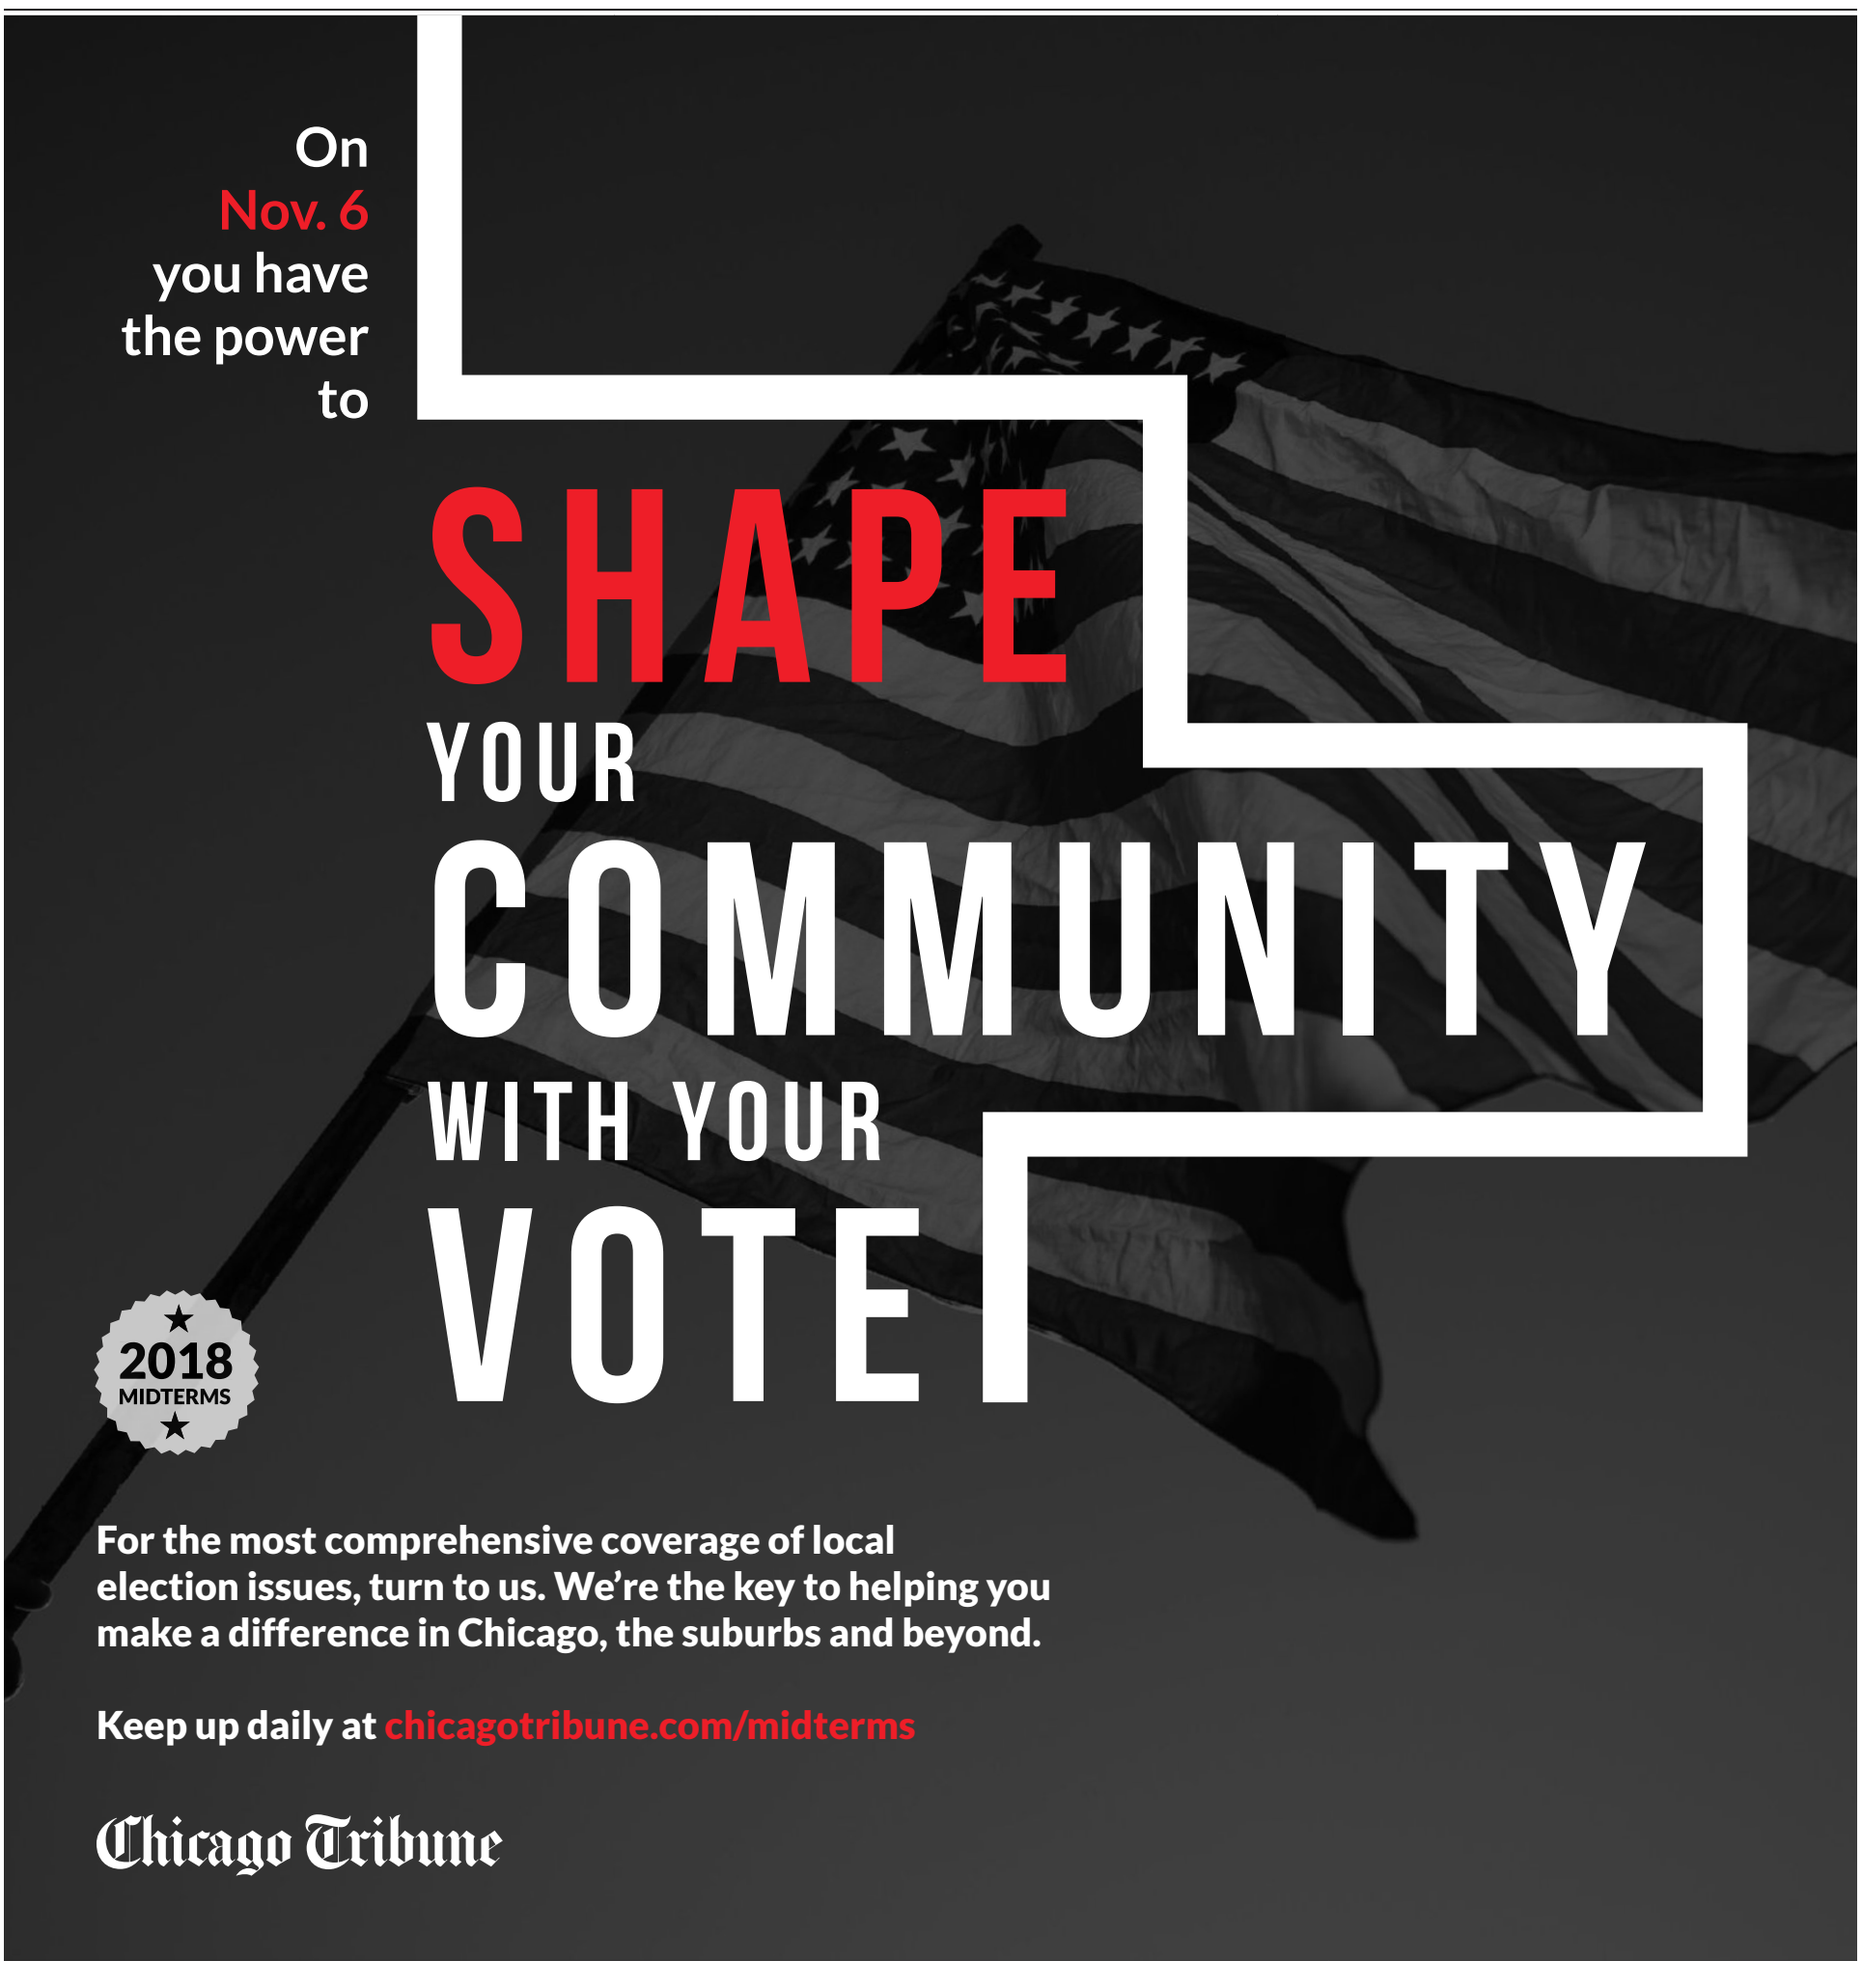
For many who couldn't find their ownership documents or never had them, the quake and its aftermath meant a total loss.

At the building in Condesa, industrial engineer Simon Zuman lost his apartment, his office and his street-level falafel counter catering to neighbors and the dog-and-stroller set who frequent the park on weekends.

Zuman has relocated to a newer building in the neighborhood, where he has lived his whole life and is loath to leave despite its vulnerability to quakes atop the spongy ground of a former lakebed. He's also reopened the falafel counter around the corner.

Inside the place he called home for 16 years, he took a last look at its cracked columns and crumbled walls. Gathering a few things such as mementos from his university days, he got ready to drive away.

He said he wasn't sure whether he'd return the following week to watch the demolition: "I don't know. Maybe yes. It will help me close the circle."



In Yemen, families are eating leaves to survive

Amid unending war, hunger stalks many

By Maggie Michael

HAMMADI ISSA/AP PHOTOS

A severely malnourished infant is breastfed in Aslam, Yemen. War has wrecked the nation's fragile ability to feed people.

CAIRO — Many families with starving children in an isolated pocket of northern Yemen have no food except the boiled leaves of local wild vine, a sign of how some are falling through the cracks of international relief efforts trying to prevent widespread death from famine around the country.

The main health center in Aslam district was crowded with emaciated children during a recent visit by the Associated Press. Excruciatingly thin toddlers, eyes bulging, sat in a plastic washtub used in a make-shift scale as staff weighed each one. Their papery skin was stretched tight over pencil-like limbs and knobby knees.

At least 20 children are known to have died of starvation already this year in the province that includes the district. The real number is likely far higher, since few families report their children's deaths when they die at home, officials say.

"We are in the 21st century, but this is what the war did to us," said the health center's chief, Mekkiya Mahdi.

Yemen is more than three years into a civil war that has wrecked the country's already fragile ability to feed itself. The war pits Shiite rebels known as Houthis, who hold the north, against a Saudi-led coalition, armed and backed by the United States. The coalition has sought to bomb the rebels into submission with an air campaign in support of Yemeni government forces.

Around 2.9 million women and children are acutely malnourished; another 400,000 children are fighting for their lives only a step away from starvation.

At least 8.4 million of Yemen's 29 million people would starve if they didn't receive international aid, a number that grew by a quarter the past year, according to U.N. figures. It is likely to jump by another 3.5 million because the currency's tumbling value leaves more people unable to afford food, the U.N. said.

Humanitarian officials warn that in the face of unending war, hunger's spread is outstripping efforts to keep people alive.

When AP approached U.N. agencies with questions about the situation in Aslam, they expressed alarm and surprise. In response to the AP's questions, international and local aid groups launched an investigation into why food wasn't getting to some families, a top relief official said. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of issues involved in operating in the war-ravaged country.

As an immediate response, the official said, relief agencies are sending over 10,000 food baskets to the district, and UNICEF Resident Representative Dr. Meritxell Relano said the organization is increasing its mobile teams in the district from three to four and providing transportation to health facilities.

A severely malnourished girl is weighed at the Aslam health center in Hajjah, Yemen.

In first six months of this year, Hajjah province, where Aslam is located, recorded 17,000 cases of severe acute malnutrition, higher than in any full year, said Walid al-Shamshan, head of the Health Ministry's nutrition section in the province.

"It's a steady deterioration and it's scary," al-Shamshan said. Even after treatment, children often deteriorate once again when they go home to villages with no food and contaminated water.

Aslam is one of Yemen's poorest districts, located in the Houthi heartland. Its population of 75,000 to 106,000 includes both local residents and growing numbers of people displaced by fighting elsewhere.

It saw one of Hajjah province's highest jumps in the number of reported children suffering from severe acute malnutrition: From 384 cases in January, an additional 1,319 came in over the next six months. That comes to around 15 percent of the district's children.

There appeared to be multiple reasons why aid was not reaching some of the starving, beyond the rapid increase in those in need.

The lion's share of assistance goes to displaced people, with 20 percent going to the local community, said Azma Ali, a worker with the World Food Program. Agencies' criteria give priority for help to the displaced and households without a breadwinner, though local residents also struggle to find food.

Under heavy pressure from Houthi authorities, international agencies like WFP and UNICEF and their Yemeni partners are required to use lists of needy provided by local officials.

Critics accuse those officials of favoritism. That especially works against the local population in Aslam, where many belong to the "Muhammasheen," Arabic for the "Marginalized," a community of darker-skinned Yemenis shunned by the rest of society and left to work as garbage collectors, menial laborers or beggars. The Marginalized have no weight with officials to ensure aid goes their way.

One humanitarian coordinator in Hajjah said local Houthi authorities distribute aid unfairly.

"The powerful hinder the work of the humanitarian agencies and deprive of aid those people who are in most need," he said. He spoke on condition of anonymity for fear of problems with the authorities.

Some residents said local officials demand bribes to get on food lists — the equivalent of around 15 U.S. cents, but still too much for many.

Food deliveries come irregularly or are too small or are missing items, residents and aid workers said.

People in Aslam have become increasingly reliant on leaves from the local Arabian Wax Leaf vine, known in Yemeni Arabic as "halas."

Zahra was recently treated at the health center but is dwindling away again. Her parents can't afford to hire a car or motorbike to take her back to the clinic. If they don't, Zahra will die, said Mahdi.

Zahra's mother said only "the big heads" — the better-off and well-connected — end up with international aid.

Ontario heads backward to old sex-ed curriculum

COLE BURSTON/BLOOMBERG NEWS

The decision to revert the sex-education curriculum fulfills a campaign promise by Ontario Premier Doug Ford.

TORONTO — In elementary schools across Ontario this month, the first day of school was filled with the usual mix of nervousness and excitement for young students.

But many teachers had back-to-school jitters themselves thanks to a recent announcement from the new provincial government.

In July, the center-right government of Premier Doug Ford said it was scrapping the sex-education curriculum updated in 2015 and replacing it with a version from 1998, when same-sex marriage was not yet legal in Canada and social media and cyberbullying were unknown to most parents.

It also set up what critics are calling a "snitch line" that allows parents to anonymously report teachers for not teaching the old version.

The decision, which fulfilled one of Ford's campaign promises, was the latest in a series of changes made since he was sworn in as premier in late June.

He has quashed the province's carbon-pricing policy, clashed with the federal government over asylum seekers, halved the number of city councilors in Toronto and scrapped a basic-income pilot project.

Like many of those decisions, the sex-education switch has left officials scrambling, spawned a barrage of legal challenges and provoked public backlash.

"If you take the 1998 curriculum at face value, it's outrageously out of date," said Lauren Bialystok, a professor in social justice education at the University of Toronto's Ontario Institute for Studies in Education.

The rollback, she said, would put the health and safety of children at risk and lead them to adopt "dangerous conceptions of sexuality, consent and body image."

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, comprehensive sex-education programs "have been shown to reduce high risk behavior, a clear factor for sexual violence victimization and perpetration."

The 2015 curriculum, welcomed by educators as a long-overdue update, included new topics such as same-sex relationships, masturbation, gender identity, consent and the dangers of sexting.

It was also controversial at the time among some religious groups and socially conservative organizations, which felt that some of its topics were age-inappropriate and best left to parents to address.

Thousands of students were kept home from school as a show of opposition.

Bialystok said the tempest mostly subsided as parents spoke with teachers who debunked many of the myths propagated at the time about the 2015 curriculum, such as that it taught students how to perform various sex acts.

In an academic survey she did of teachers last year, the overwhelming majority said they supported the update.

"Now they're in effect being muzzled," she said, noting that while some school boards have said they will support teachers who wish to teach topics from the newer curriculum, others have not, leaving teachers in a difficult position.

Ford has not elaborated on what it is about the 2015 curriculum that he opposes, saying only that he thinks it was not subjected to enough consultation.

Anna, an eighth-grade teacher in Toronto, said she will embed material from the 2015 curriculum into lesson plans for subjects other than health.

She plans to show students clips of HBO's "The Handmaid's Tale" and have them read Judy Blume's "Deenie." She spoke on the condition that only her first name be used because of concerns that she could lose her job.

Education Minister Lisa Thompson said her ministry would launch consultations for a new curriculum that might be introduced in 2019.

The Ford government will fight legal battles over the curriculum rollback.

Both the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the province's largest teachers union have filed injunctions in a bid to stop the government from replacing the 2015 curriculum and to cancel the "snitch line."

Facebook adds Alaska's Inupiaq as language option

Britt'Nee Brower interacts with the new Inupiat Eskimo language option now available for Facebook.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — Britt'Nee Brower grew up in a largely Inupiat Eskimo town in Alaska's far north, but English was the only language spoken at home.

Today, she knows a smattering of Inupiaq from childhood language classes at school in the community of Utqiagvik. Brower even published an Inupiaq coloring book last year featuring the names of common animals of the region. But she hopes to someday speak fluently by practicing her ancestral language in a daily, modern setting.

The 29-year-old Anchorage woman has started to do just that with a new Inupiaq language option that recently went live on Facebook for those who employ the social media giant's community translation tool. Launched a decade ago, the tool has allowed users to translate bookmarks, action buttons and other functions in more than 100 languages around the globe.

For now, Facebook is being translated into Inupiaq only on its website, not its app.

"I was excited," Brower says of her first time trying the feature, still a work in progress as Inupiaq words are slowly added. "I was thinking, 'I'm going to have to bring out my Inupiaq dictionary so I can learn.' So I did."

Facebook users can submit requests to translate the site's vast interface workings into any language through crowdsourcing. With the interface tool, it's the Facebook users who do the translating of words and short phrases. Words are confirmed through crowd up-and-down voting.

Besides the Inupiaq option, Cherokee and Canada's Inuktut are other indigenous languages in the process of being translated, according to Facebook spokeswoman Arielle Argyres.

"It's important to have these indigenous languages on the internet. Oftentimes they're nowhere to be found," she said. "So much is carried through language — tradition, culture — and so in the digital world, being able to translate from that environment is really important."

The Inupiaq language is spoken in northern Alaska and the Seward Peninsula. According to the University of Alaska Fairbanks, about 13,500 Inupiat live in the state, with about 3,000 speaking the language. There are also thousands of speakers in Canada and Greenland.

Myles Creed, who grew up in the Inupiat community of Kotzebue, was the driving force in getting Inupiaq added. After researching ways to possibly link an external translation app with Facebook, he reached out to Grant Magdanz, a hometown friend who works as a software engineer in San Francisco. Neither one of them knew about the translation tool when Magdanz contacted Facebook in late 2016 about setting up an Inupiatun option.

Facebook opened a translation portal for the language in March 2017. It was then up to users to provide the translations.

Creed, 29, a linguistics graduate student at the University of Victoria in British Columbia, is not Inupiat, and neither is Magdanz, 24. But they grew up around the language and its people.

"I've been given so much by the community I grew up in, and I want to be able to give back in some way," said Creed, who is learning Inupiaq.

Both see the Facebook option as a small step against predictions that Alaska's Native languages are heading toward extinction under their present rate of decline.

"It has to be part of everyone's daily life. It can't be this separate thing," Magdanz said.

Initially, Creed relied on volunteer translators, but that didn't go fast enough. In January, he won a $2,000 mini grant from the Alaska Humanities Forum to hire two fluent Inupiat translators.

Creed changed his translation settings last year. But it was only weeks ago that his home button finally said "Aimaagvik," Inupiaq for home. "I was really ecstatic," he said.

Russia to study Israeli data about plane downed in Syria

MOSCOW — Russian President Vladimir Putin has accepted Israel's offer to share detailed information on the Israeli airstrike in Syria that triggered fire by Syrian forces which downed a Russian reconnaissance plane, the Kremlin said Wednesday.

Syrian forces mistook the Russian Il-20 for Israeli aircraft, killing all 15 people aboard Monday night. Russia's Defense Ministry blamed the plane's loss on Israel, but Putin sought to defuse tensions, pointing at "a chain of tragic accidental circumstances."

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu called Putin on Tuesday to express sorrow over the death of the plane's crew and blamed Syria.

The Israeli military said its fighter jets were targeting a Syrian facility involved in providing weapons for the Hezbollah militia and insisted it warned Russia beforehand.

Woman who helped kidnap Utah teen freed from prison

DRAPER, Utah — A woman who helped kidnap Elizabeth Smart when she was 14 and stood by as the Utah girl was sexually assaulted was released from prison Wednesday after 15 years amid concerns that she might still be a threat to other young people.

Wanda Barzee, 72, left the state prison in Draper, avoiding a throng of reporters gathered outside.

Court documents say she will stay in unspecified emergency housing chosen by her probation officer until another home is approved.

Barzee's release followed a surprise announcement last week that Utah authorities had miscalculated her sentence and she would be freed earlier than expected. Under the terms of her release, Barzee must undergo mental health treatment.

World Bank: Global poverty rate drops to record low 10%

WASHINGTON — Global poverty has fallen to a record low.

The World Bank said Wednesday that 10 percent of the world's population lived on less than $1.90 a day in 2015 — the last year for which numbers were available — down from 11.2 percent in 2013. That means 735.9 million people lived below the poverty threshold in 2015, down by 68.3 million from 804.2 million.

Poverty dropped everywhere but the Middle East and North Africa.

The poverty rate fell to 41.1 percent from 42.5 percent in Sub-Saharan Africa, to 12.4 percent from 16.2 percent in South Asia, to 4.1 percent from 4.6 percent in Latin America and the Caribbean, to 2.3 percent from 3.6 percent in East Asia and the Pacific and to 1.5 percent from 1.6 percent in Europe and Central Asia.

Owner of 3D-printed gun firm is accused of sex with minor

DALLAS — The owner of a Texas company that is being sued by several states over its plan to disseminate blueprints for making untraceable 3D-printed guns had sex with an underage girl and paid her $500 afterward, police allege in an affidavit filed Wednesday.

Austin police officials said Cody Wilson was scheduled to fly back to the U.S. from Taipei, Taiwan, but he didn't board the plane, and that law enforcement agencies are trying to locate him.

Police said it's unclear why Wilson went to Taiwan, but he is known to travel extensively.

The girl accused Wilson of having sex with her at an Austin hotel on Aug. 15, Austin police Detective Shaun Donovan wrote in a request for a warrant to arrest Wilson on a sexual assault charge. The court filing doesn't say how old the girl is, but Texas' age of consent is 17.

According to the affidavit, Wilson met the girl through the website SugarDaddyMeet.com. The girl said she met Wilson in the parking lot of an Austin coffee shop before they drove to the hotel, where Wilson had sex with her and afterward gave her $500 in cash.

Video surveillance shows Wilson and the youth getting out of a vehicle at the hotel and then exiting an elevator together on the seventh floor, Donovan wrote. Later footage shows them returning to the elevator.

Hotel records revealed that Wilson registered the same room in which that the girl reported he had sex with her, the detective wrote.

U.S.: Iran is top terror sponsor; global attacks fall

WASHINGTON — Iran remains the world's leading state sponsor of terrorism, the Trump administration said Wednesday in an annual report that also highlighted another drop in terrorist attacks worldwide.

The State Department's annual survey of global terrorism accused Iran of intensifying numerous conflicts and trying to undermine governments throughout the Middle East and beyond.

The number of worldwide terrorist attacks dropped by 23 percent last year compared with 2016, according to the report, a change largely due to gains against the Islamic State group in Iraq. The number also had declined in 2016 over the previous year.

Re-imposing sanctions is one part of a larger effort by the U.S. to cut Iran off from funds used to support proxy forces and support other "malign activity."

Manafort's cooperation no concern, Trump says

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump said Wednesday that he's not concerned about what his former campaign chairman is telling investigators in the Russia probe.

Trump told reporters at the White House that if Paul Manafort tells the truth to special counsel Robert Mueller's team then he doesn't see a problem.

Trump's comments come just days after Manafort ended his nearly yearlong fight against Mueller. Manafort pleaded guilty to two felony charges related to his unregistered Ukrainian lobbying and millions of dollars he laundered through offshore accounts.

The plea deal provided Mueller with a key cooperator as he continues to investigate Russian election interference and any possible coordination with Trump associates.

In Somalia: Several senior officials with the al-Shabab extremist group have been killed or wounded in an airstrike in southern Somalia, Somali intelligence officials said Wednesday.

The intelligence officials said the overnight airstrike hit a training school and nearby hospital in Sakow.

In Pakistan: Former prime minister Nawaz Sharif, his daughter and son-in-law were released from prison Wednesday after a court suspended their sentences and granted them bail pending their appeals hearings. Their sentences were handed down earlier this year in a corruption case against them.

The Obama center and Chicago's next mayor

From the start, Mayor Rahm Emanuel has been both pitchman and troubleshooter for the proposed Obama Presidential Center in Jackson Park on Chicago's South Side.

The mayor steered his old boss' s project through Plan Commission and City Council approvals earlier this year. He has touted the center's "tremendous economic, educational and cultural" opportunities. This week, his administration is introducing legislation that sets up a 99-year agreement for the center's operation on Chicago Park District property.

But with Emanuel's decision to not seek re-election, the people behind the center are losing their most important advocate. The next mayor of Chicago will inherit a project brimming with promise but subject to the wishes of several competing interests — the Obama Foundation, which is building the center; environmentalists who don't want the center in the park; and long-neglected South Side neighborhoods desperate for economic development. For those last Chicagoans, this proposal offers hope and change.

Chicago's next mayor will inherit ... well, nobody really knows. If we could have a moment with each mayoral candidate, we'd explain that this situation is delicate. That the center is far from a slam-dunk. That the competing interests will try to lure candidates into their respective camps.

Here are a few reasons why the next mayor could encounter turbulence at Jackson Park:

The environmental group Protect Our Parks has filed a federal lawsuit against City Hall and the Park District. The group says the city doesn't have the authority to essentially give away public parkland to the Obama Foundation, a private organization. While the foundation isn't a defendant in the suit, its CEO, David Simas, says he believes the suit has no merit. But until a federal court agrees, the lawsuit threatens the project.

Recall that Star Wars creator George Lucas envisioned a private museum on public lakefront parkland — and got derailed by a lawsuit challenging his vision. Lucas abandoned the idea after the federal judge in the case said he did not believe it would benefit the public but would instead "promote private and/or commercial interests." The Obama Foundation says the public benefit here is obvious — and has agreed to transfer ownership of the center to the city once it's built. Will that persuade a judge to toss the lawsuit? Or will the case lurch along? We'll see you in court — someday.

Assuming the next mayor supports the project, he or she also could still be navigating federal reviews of the center's impact on Jackson Park. Proposed road closures and the park's listing on the National Register of Historic Places mandate the reviews. And City Hall already has made one misstep with the feds: With their reviews ongoing, the city and Park District cut down park trees and began moving an athletic track to make room for the center. City officials abruptly stopped the track relocation, but only after federal officials raised concerns about the work. Starting that work while the feds still were reviewing the project was an unforced error.

And atop the to-do list for Emanuel's successor if the project gets go-aheads: maximizing the benefit to South Siders, while minimizing its impact on traffic flow in their neighborhoods.

Foundation officials say economic development for South Side communities would top $3 billion over the decade after the center opens. The next mayor would help shape that future. A nonprofit group led by Obama's former education secretary, Arne Duncan, was formed more than a year ago to help plan that growth, but South Siders have yet to learn much about the group's strategies or timetables.

The Obama center plan also calls for the shutdown of Cornell Drive, a six-lane thoroughfare that cuts through Jackson Park and is an important connector for South Side motorists. City Hall says widening Lake Shore Drive and Stony Island Avenue would offset Cornell's shutdown. But the next mayor would have to ensure that traffic moves smoothly. Along the way we'll learn whether he or she shares Emanuel's enthusiasm for spending $175 million for the infrastructure improvements.

The Obama center would be a big plus for Chicago, and Emanuel deserves credit for taking it this far. His successor inherits the potential, but possibly these obstacles as well.

So, in our hypothetical huddles with the candidates, we'd advise them not to shoot from the lip: Emanuel and his decisions are fair game; many of the candidates got into the race to defeat him. But this proposal should be too crucial to the South Side to become a chew toy for candidates eager to build their anti-Rahm cred. We'd remind the candidates that for South Siders and other Chicagoans who see the promise of an Obama center, squandering this opportunity would be a sorry mistake.

Campus sex assault: Call police and prosecutors

A year ago, U.S. Education Secretary Betsy DeVos rattled college officials nationwide by signaling that she would shred Obama-era regulations on campus sexual assault. Those rules — from the notorious 2011 "Dear Colleague" letter — urged colleges to get tougher on sexual assault allegations or possibly forfeit millions in federal funding.

Many colleges cracked down. But accused students and their families complained that inept campus judicial systems trampled their legal rights. DeVos agreed that the "Dear Colleague" changes tilted the system too much in favor of alleged victims.

The education secretary hasn't yet unveiled the new standards, but preliminary proposals reportedly would bring several changes. Among the most dramatic:

■ Colleges no longer would be required to investigate complaints that originate off campus or outside school-sponsored programs. Schools would be allowed to address more complaints via an informal resolution process if that doesn't short-change the complainant.

■ School investigations no longer would begin with what on many campuses is a tacit assumption of an accused student's guilt. Specifically, it could become more difficult to decide that a student committed a sexual assault: The Obama-era standard of "preponderance of the evidence" could rise to a tougher-to-meet standard, "clear and convincing evidence." That's still short of the criminal justice standard of evidence "beyond a reasonable doubt."

But campus authorities probably would need to be more certain going forward that an assault did happen before they declare a verdict of guilt.

Whatever the rules, the goal is still the same: Make campuses safer. Punish perpetrators and comfort victims. Deter assaults, harassment and rape. But the new approach would come closer than the Obama-era rules to adding another imperative: Don't railroad students accused of misconduct. That's essentially what the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled recently in the case of a University of Michigan student accused of sexual assault. The court said that an accused student is entitled to cross-examine witnesses.

What's the best way to achieve fair outcomes? We hope the revised rules contain a terse directive: Campus officials, when you receive allegations of assault, don't play cop, district attorney, judge and jury. Call law enforcement. Let professionals investigate and decide if criminal charges are warranted. And if they levy charges, let them pursue justice.

Why the police and prosecutors and not the profs and provosts? Because the authorities are likelier to be trained and experienced at these jobs. They know how to handle interrogations and evidence. They don't have a vested interest in protecting the college's reputation, as administrators surely do. Nor are they subject to campus culture. They can go where the evidence leads.

By contrast, the more campus officials dabble in their own version of investigating and judging such allegations, the greater the chances that such cases will be mishandled.

We understand that not so many years ago, some complaints by sexual assault victims trailed off into limbo. Law enforcement authorities sometimes responded halfheartedly or clumsily.

But attitudes among the public and law enforcement officers have dramatically changed. Today there's a far greater recognition of sexual violence and a desire to combat it. There's the thunderous toppling of powerful men by #MeToo allegations. Many sexual harassment, assault or abuse allegations, even if decades old, no longer are dismissed. An allegation rooted in the 1980s has had the power to stall a confirmation vote on a U.S. Supreme Court nominee.

The encouraging upshot: More alleged victims step forward because they have more confidence that law enforcement officials will take them seriously.

That's a profound and welcome development. And it should be the norm for campus sexual assault cases. Colleges and universities are in the educating business, not the criminal justice business. Campuses should offer a full panoply of services for alleged victims. Schools can set restrictions within the campus community on accused students, and if they're convicted, can impose penalties including expulsion. But college officials should stop short of trying to oversee and execute these complex investigations and adjudications.

Instead of a "Dear Colleague" letter to college administrators, how about a "Dear Prospective Prison Inmate" letter to arriving students, outlining the repercussions for criminally abusive behavior? We expect the prospect of jail time, not a mere slap-down from campus administrators, would influence students' behavior from Day One.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

A couple of Stanford engineers who had been cursed with smoking habits invented what is now the most popular smoking-cessation tool on the market, and the FDA has just declared war on it, because it looks trashy. The FDA has ordered five big players in the vaping business — JUUL, Vuse, MarkTen, blu, and Logic — to submit plans for keeping their products out of the hands of minors, giving them 60 days to do so ...

Unlike cigarettes, JUUL and other vaping products do not rely on the combustion of tobacco — or on tobacco, period — which eliminates about 90 percent of the negative health effects associated with smoking cigarettes. ... But the FDA nonetheless intends to stand in the way of JUUL and other products that could help millions of Americans, disproportionately poor, take an important step toward improving their health. Why? Because elite squeamishness about Greenwich kids aping low-rent habits has more weight in the policymaking mind than does reducing asthma and cancer in poor people in the downscale places where cigarette smoking is most prevalent.

Kevin D. Williamson, National Review

The Trump administration made contact with would-be coup plotters in Venezuela ... Fortunately, the administration didn't provide any support for an attempted coup, but it is troubling that they were even willing to consider it. ... A coup would in all likelihood lead to another authoritarian regime, and encouraging a foreign military to topple an elected government is a throwback to the worst policies of the Cold War. A coup would not make Venezuela any less of a failed state, nor would it end the country's humanitarian crisis. It would be much more likely to exacerbate all of the country's existing problems by adding civil war to the mix.

Does the Senate want the truth about Kavanaugh?

STEVE CHAPMAN

How would the Senate proceed if its highest priority were establishing the truth? That objective should be paramount with regard to the allegation that Brett Kavanaugh, at age 17, tried to rape a 15-year-old girl. Getting the truth is the most important thing for Christine Blasey Ford, the alleged victim, but also for Kavanaugh.

Unless, of course, he is guilty. In that case, the best outcome for the nominee is a quick, minimal inquiry that lets him skate past the charges and onto the Supreme Court. The way Senate Republicans are handling the matter suggests they are afraid of what they will learn if the digging goes too deep.

Would Democrats prefer to delay his confirmation vote in hopes of gaining seats in the Senate in November? Of course. Would Republicans prefer to vote sooner in case they lose control of the chamber? Sure. In a political environment, political motives are inevitable.

But how would Republicans behave if such accusations had surfaced about a nominee chosen by a Democratic president? It's hard to say they would favor a speedy resolution. They postponed the vote on Barack Obama's nominee Merrick Garland, who was accused of no crime, until the twelfth of never.

With Ford, they have been models of chilly condescension. Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., said, "I'll listen to the lady, but we're going to bring this to a close." As for Ford's request to postpone her appearance until the FBI can investigate, Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, scoffed that she is "not really in a position to make conditions."

Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, insists on hearing from her Monday. "Nothing the FBI or any investigator does would have any bearing on what Dr. Ford tells the committee, so there is no reason for any further delay," he said.

Really? Any evidence unearthed by an investigation would have a bearing on what questions she is asked, what answers she might give and how the senators assess her veracity.

Politics aside, what is the rush when the allegations are so grave? Yes, the alleged episode involved adolescents, but we're not talking about popping a bra strap. We're talking about a claim that Kavanaugh tried to violently rape a 15-year-old girl and, had she not resisted, would have raped her. But his defenders show a bizarre lack of curiosity about whether the attack happened and a desire to minimize it if it did.

A full investigation could yield details that could be examined to assess the credibility of Ford's account and Kavanaugh's denial. It could elicit information from Mark Judge, the Kavanaugh friend she says was present during the attack — who, his lawyer says, "does not wish to speak publicly regarding the incidents described in Dr. Ford's letter." An unhurried timetable would also allow time for any other professed victims to come forward.

But Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, indicated the accusation was irrelevant. "If that was true, I think it would be hard for senators to not consider who the judge is today" — which, Hatch attested, is "a really good man."

In an op-ed in The Wall Street Journal, Lance Morrow, a fellow at the conservative Ethics and Public Policy Center in Washington, put an intellectual gloss on this approach. If the attack occurred, he argued with majestic serenity, it doesn't really matter, because it happened long ago "under the blurring influence of alcohol and adolescent hormones. No clothes were removed, and no sexual penetration occurred. The sin, if there was one, was not one of those that Catholic theology calls peccata clamantia — sins that cry to heaven for vengeance."

I'll let Catholic theologians make that call. But no one is calling for vengeance. The worst Kavanaugh may endure is being denied a coveted job promotion.

His supporters act as though he deserves confirmation unless he can be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. But the standard that applies for sending someone to prison is higher than the standard for sending someone to the Supreme Court. Douglas Ginsburg had to withdraw in 1987 because he had smoked marijuana, which even then was considered less serious than rape.

The Senate should spare no time or effort to get as close to the truth as possible, and let the chips fall where they may. For an innocent man to be denied a seat on the Supreme Court would be a shame. For a guilty one to be confirmed would be a crime.

OP-ART JOE FOURNIER

PERSPECTIVE

Speaker Madigan: How I'm addressing sexual harassment issues

By Michael Madigan

Over the past year, women across our country have bravely come forward to shed light on a culture that permits and facilitates harassment in the workplace. Because the sheer number of stories has revealed just how prevalent these problems are — from Hollywood to Wall Street and throughout politics, the media and academia — some have attempted to use this disturbing prevalence to shield themselves from accountability for actions under their control.

That is nonsense and I reject that, which is why I've reviewed both my state and political operations, identified wrongdoers and removed six individuals. As a leader in this state, I know we all have a responsibility to create a better Illinois for everyone.

I have made it a personal mission to take this issue head-on and correct past mistakes. I wish I would have done so sooner. Since the beginning of this year, I have met with more than 100 women working in the Capitol, both within my office and outside my office. I asked questions that I should have asked before and made changes to create a better environment.

One of the first meetings I attended was with a group of women in their 20s and 30s. I heard stories of inappropriate behavior, both inside and outside of the Capitol. What's worse, these young women did not feel there was anyone willing to listen or take action to alleviate their concerns.

What became clear is that I didn't do enough, and that we, collectively, have failed in the Capitol to ensure everyone can reliably, confidentially and safely report harassment. I thought the pathways were there, but they weren't.

Throughout the course of these meetings, when I learned of activities that did not reflect an appropriate workplace environment, I acted by terminating or demoting those responsible. In one meeting I learned of a supervisor who was not taking staff concerns seriously, and subsequently learned that supervisor had failed to report allegations of abuse and harassment. That supervisor was removed and no longer works in any state office. In another case, I learned of an individual making inappropriate comments to several female staffers. That individual no longer works in my office.

I also heard stories where the prior process for reporting and handling these issues did work. I learned of a legislative secretary who was being harassed by a male lobbyist. Despite this lobbyist's attempts to suppress her, this woman summoned the courage to report his abuses. We immediately investigated and contacted the lobbyist's employer. He is no longer a lobbyist.

I am committed to enacting change. At my initiative, we retained Maggie Hickey, a former federal prosecutor and inspector general. She is conducting an independent investigation of all allegations of discrimination and harassment. Hickey will bring to light any additional problems. When she does, I am committed to acting immediately.

While this independent investigation takes place, my new chief of staff, Jessica Basham, is leading a review of our policies and practices. Our office is taking immediate steps to improve. We have established a new process to bring complaints so that Basham knows of any future allegations and reports them to me. We will enforce in-person sexual harassment training. Directors and supervisors will receive continuing training on how to better handle workplace behavior. I am accountable for my office and will ensure that any issues are dealt with quickly and appropriately.

I have the responsibility to make sure our workplace is safer, equitable and nondiscriminatory. Harassment of any kind and workplace bullying will simply not be tolerated — period. There will be a zero-tolerance policy for any kind of harassment. Leaders cannot leave these issues to others. Now is the opportunity to ask ourselves what we are doing to make Illinois a better workplace for everyone.

Poland used to be OK with Trump. Then, he posted a photo.

By Rick Noack

BERLIN — Poland is one of the few European countries where President Donald Trump is still not only welcome but indeed sought after. When Polish President Andrzej Duda visited the White House on Tuesday, he repeatedly praised the president and even floated the idea of naming a possible future U.S. military base in his country Fort Trump.

The Polish government did everything it could to turn Tuesday's visit into one of Trump's more enjoyable moments.

Yet, somehow, Trump managed to offend the Poles so deeply that the fallout was all over Polish news sites on Wednesday morning.

What happened? At the end of their meeting, the two leaders agreed to sign a strategic partnership pact to boost defense, energy, trade and security ties. But what could have been a peaceful moment for both presidents immediately took an awkward turn.

While signing the document, Trump sat comfortably in his chair while the Polish leader was forced to stand next to him and awkwardly reach over the table to sign. Poland's Duda still somehow managed to smile at the camera, as Trump looked on with a stern face. The scene was captured on camera by the White House and was tweeted out shortly after — much to the bewilderment of Polish journalists, politicians and researchers.

"It's nice of President Trump that he moved a bit, because otherwise our president would have had to sign the document on his knees," Polish radio correspondent Pawel Zuchowski sarcastically commented on Twitter.

THE WHITE HOUSE

In an interview with Polish news site Gazeta.pl, international diplomacy scholar Janusz Sibora called the incident an "offense."

The Polish news site compared the meeting of the two allies with Trump's ceremonial signing of an agreement with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un in June, when both leaders sat at the same table.

"The message is clear: Americans do not respect Poles," Sibora told the Polish news outlet. "If we sign such an important document in that way, we should ask ourselves whether this wasn't detrimental to the honor of Poland."

There was no sign, however, that Duda himself was bothered by the photo, and there has been no statement about it from the government. In fact, much of the anger seems to be emanating from the opposition.

"Signing a Polish-American declaration at the desk of the American president, while he is sitting, and (the Polish president) is standing is a symbolic confirmation (of) @AndrzejDuda as a customer (of) @realDonald Trump. We have never been so low," Pawel Zalewski of the opposition liberal-conservative party wrote on Twitter.

According to Polish tabloid Fakt, other politicians and former ministers described the picture as "unbelievable" and as a "humiliation."

"I'm ashamed," Roman Giertych, a former deputy prime minister, was quoted as saying by the paper. Many commentaries did not exclusively blame the Trump administration, however, but also their own government for refraining to raise objections to the White House.

On Facebook, an account associated with former centrist Polish president and Nobel Peace Prize winner Lech Walesa appeared to troll Duda with a photo of Walesa sitting with Trump standing next to him. The photo appeared to have been taken during a prior meeting of the two, but it was unclear where or when it happened. "You find difference," read the caption.

The angry responses following Duda's White House visit come as the Polish government is seeking closer ties to the Trump administration, despite opposition protests. After a number of controversial measures, Poland has been increasingly at odds with the European Union, of which it is a member state. After its critics accused Poland of infringing upon judicial independence, the country was suspended from the European Network of Councils for the Judiciary this week. The EU sanction was the latest in a string of attempts to rein in what critics say are undemocratic changes in the country.

But Poland's right-wing government hopes to have found a powerful ally in Trump, who shares some of the same political goals and has refrained from joining the chorus of critics lashing out at what it sees as a dismantling of democratic rights in the center of Europe.

For months, Warsaw has tried to persuade the United States to set up a permanent U.S. military presence in Poland, to bolster the country's defense against Russia. Poland appears to be willing to spend a substantial amount in exchange.

"If they're willing to do that, it's something we will certainly talk about," Trump said Tuesday. But to more critical observers watching from Warsaw, the photo that was released only a short time later spoke a very different language.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Unfair standard

Currently in the news there are two big stories that concern the actions of 17-year-olds.

In the trial of Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke, his supporters argue that the shooting of 17-year-old Laquan McDonald was justified because McDonald was out late, carrying a small knife, and not responding to police commands. Van Dyke has said that he thought McDonald might hurt someone — although he has not identified any specific individuals who were in immediate danger.

In the other story, supporters argue that the actions of a 17-year-old Brett Kavanaugh are irrelevant to his confirmation to the U.S. Supreme Court because they happened when he was in high school.

An allegation of attempted rape is being brushed aside as a youthful indiscretion.

Would his supporters say the same if this were attempted murder?

We need to ask ourselves why society holds poor, young black men to such a high behavioral standard in order not to be shot — but have such a low standard for a white man who has experienced nothing but privilege and access to power when he is being considered for a position that would wield even more power.

— Janice Cody, Chicago

Tarnished credibility

Obama Foundation Board President Martin Nesbitt confessed, in an interview with the Tribune Editorial Board, that he'd never previously bothered to visit the site of the new Obama Presidential Center:

"I've been to Jackson Park thousands of times. Until we walked this site looking at it in contemplation of the center, I had never stepped foot on that piece, part of Jackson Park," Nesbitt said. "Nor did I ever feel comfortable taking my children there, because a highway runs right through it."

Well, I've been to that side of the park (conservatively) a couple of thousand times. I run and bird there regularly. There's an often-busy public running track and athletic field. There are frequent family picnics and other community events. There was once a baseball field and a nice stand of mature trees, until the Chicago Park District uprooted them for construction this summer.

Cornell Avenue, not a highway, runs through the park. It is a tremendous convenience to South Side commuters that will cost the taxpayers a reported $175 million to reroute. It is well-patrolled by police and not terribly busy except during rush hour.

If the foundation board values its credibility, it should base its case on observable fact, not mistruths.

— Paul W. Mollica, Chicago

Obama's losing legacy

It's about time that the city has come to its senses, at least briefly (re: the Sept. 18 article "City halts relocation project in Jackson Park"). The private Obama Foundation intends to bulldoze ahead with the Obama Presidential Center, to be built on about 20 acres of public land, even before a federal review has been completed.

Of course, the site is totally inappropriate. Moreover, the design is grandiose in conception and the 225-foot-high main building resembles a Mayan structure. It is out of place in Jackson Park. It will even have an athletic center where Barack Obama can shoot hoops with Obama Foundation Board President Martin Nesbitt.

What about the many hundreds of local youths who will now be deprived of access to public basketball courts and athletic fields?

Our former "yes we can" president will stop at nothing to leave a bricks-and-mortar legacy instead of a legacy of ideas. The Obama Foundation would have us believe that the Obama center, which will essentially be a private club, will "transform the South Side." I voted for Obama twice; his legacy is now one of disappointment.

— Ronald Kallen, Highland Park

Congressional cowards

Heather Wilhelm bases her argument on a false impression in her recent column "Save the Democrats! Vote Republican": Individual Republicans can be found with the requisite moral and intestinal fortitude to stand up to President Donald Trump, et al.

They have not. They will not. The last, U.S. Sen. John McCain, died, and U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham apparently buried his own spine with him.

The party has no lions, satisfied to follow Trump and his followers, regardless of the consequences, as long as some get tax cuts and the rest sleep to the sound of rattling sabers.

When the living lions stand up, I might change my mind.

Until they actually do, the Republican Party edges closer to its end week by week, and our democratic republic rests in the peril the GOP faced when it elected Trump.

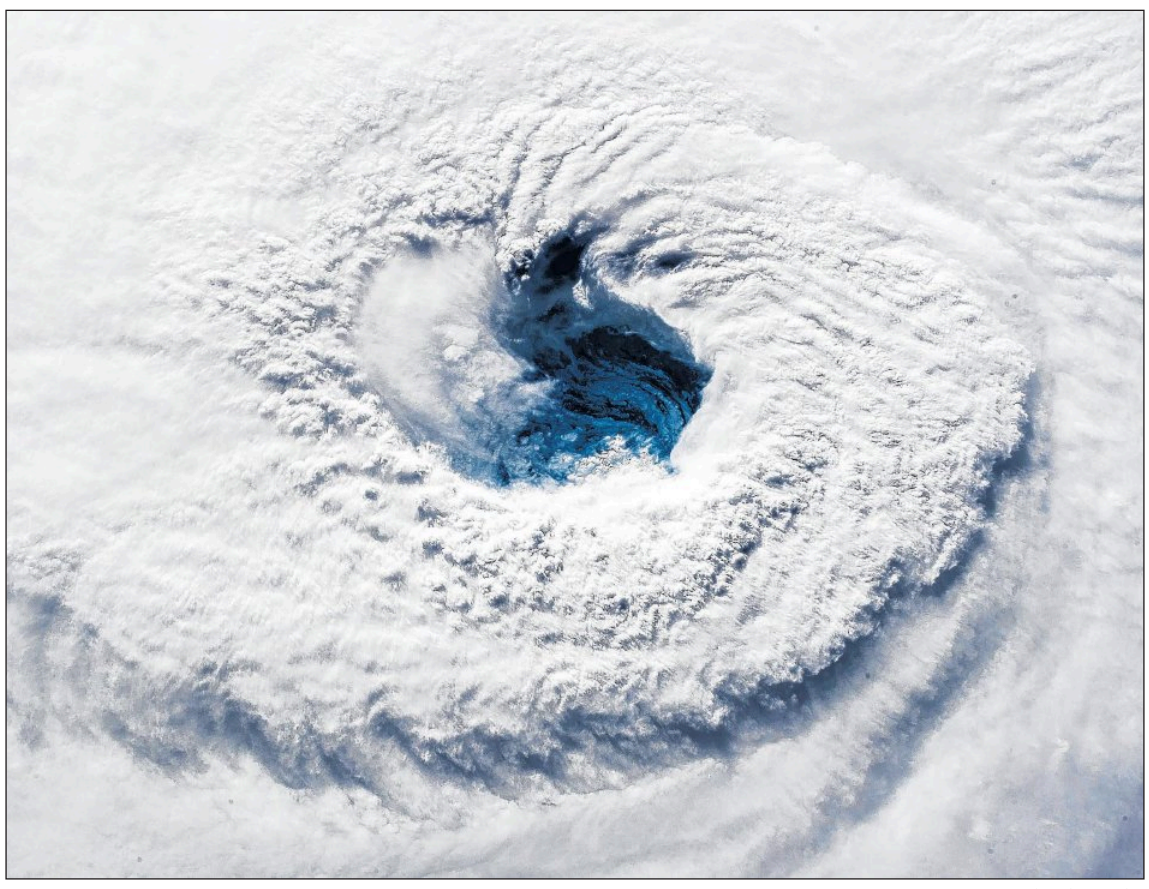
PERSPECTIVE

Are we on the verge of civil war?

VICTOR DAVIS HANSON



ALEXANDER GERST/NASA

Americans keep dividing into two hostile camps.

It seems the country is back to 1860 on the eve of the Civil War, rather than in 2018, during the greatest age of affluence, leisure and freedom in the history of civilization.

The ancient historian Thucydides called the civil discord that tore apart the fifth-century B.C. Greek city-states "stasis." He saw stasis as a bitter civil war between the revolutionary masses and the traditionalist middle and upper classes.

Something like that ancient divide is now infecting every aspect of American life.

Americans increasingly are either proud of past U.S. traditions, ongoing reform and current American exceptionalism or they insist that the country was hopelessly flawed at its birth and must be radically reinvented to rectify its original sins.

No sphere of life is immune from the subsequent politicization: not movies, television, professional sports, late-night comedy or colleges. Even hurricanes are typically leveraged to advance political agendas.

What is causing America to turn differences into these bitter hatreds — and why now?

The internet and social media often descend into an electronic lynch mob. In a nanosecond, an insignificant local news story goes viral. Immediately hundreds of millions of people use it to drum up the evils or virtues of either progressivism or conservatism.

Anonymity is a force multiplier of these tensions. Fake online identities provide cover for ever-greater extremism — on the logic that no one is ever called to account for his or her words.

Speed is also the enemy of common sense and restraint. Millions of bloggers rush to be the first to post their take on a news event, without much worry about whether it soon becomes a "fake news" moment of unsubstantiated gossip and fiction.

Globalization has both enriched and impoverished — and also further divided — America. Those whose muscular labor could be outsourced abroad to less expensive, less regulated countries were liable to lose their jobs or find their wages slashed. They were written off as "losers." Americans whose professional expertise profited from vast new world markets became even richer and preened as "winners."

Geography — history's intensifier of civil strife — further fueled the growing economic and cultural divide. Americans are increasingly self-selecting as red and blue states.

Liberals gravitate to urban coastal-corridor communities of hip culture, progressive lifestyles and lots of government services.

Conservatives increasingly move to the lower-tax, smaller-government and more traditional heartland.

Lifestyles in San Francisco and Toledo are so different that it's almost as if they're two different planets.

Legal, diverse, meritocratic and measured immigration has always been America's great strength. Assimilation, integration and intermarriage within the melting pot used to turn new arrivals into grateful Americans in a generation or two.

But when immigration is often illegal, not diverse and massive, then Balkanization follows. Currently, the country hosts 60 million non-natives — the largest number of immigrants in America's history.

Yet unlike in the past, America often does not ask new immigrants to learn English and assimilate as quickly as possible. Immigration is instead politicized. Newcomers are seen as potentially useful voting blocs.

Tribalism is the new American norm. Gender, sexual orientation, religion, race and ethnicity are now essential, not incidental, to who we are.

Americans scramble to divide into victimized blocs. Hyphenated and newly accented names serve as advertisements that particular groups have unique affiliations beyond their shared Americanism.

America is often the target of unrealistic criticism — as if it is suddenly toxic because it is not perfect. Few appreciate that the far worse alternatives abroad are rife with racism, sexism, civil strife, corruption and poverty unimaginable in the U.S.

The last few elections added to the growing abyss.

The old Democratic Party of John Kennedy and Bill Clinton is now trending into a radical democratic socialist party. Meanwhile, the old Republican Party is mostly gone, replaced by tea party movements and the new Donald Trump base.

Former President Barack Obama came into office from Congress with the most left-wing voting record in the Senate. Trump was elected as the first president without either prior military or political experience.

Obama issued dozens of controversial "pen and phone" executive orders, bypassing Congress. And Trump is systematically overturning them — doing so with similar executive orders.

Will America keep dividing and soon resort to open violence, as happened in 1861? Or will Americans reunite and bind up our wounds, as we did following the upheavals of the 1930s Great Depression or after the protests of the 1960s?

The answer lies within each of us.

Every day we will either treat each other as fellow Americans, with far more uniting than dividing us, or we will continue on the present path that eventually ends in something like a hate-filled Iraq, Rwanda or the Balkans.

DENTAL IMPLANTS

EON CLINICS
Dental Implant Solutions for Life

Have you ever been afraid to smile?

Are you unhappy with the way your teeth look? Are you having trouble eating? As dental implants become increasingly popular, patients discover that they can achieve a lot more than just to repair a smile. There are numerous quality of life benefits that result from the procedure.

Most prosthodontists agree that dental implants are the best choice for natural and effective tooth restoration available, regardless of the state of your jaw!

Get your smile back!

Dental implants are placed into your bone to simulate the roots of a natural tooth. The implant keeps the bone strengthened which, in turn, keeps your jaw from thinning. Dental implants not only repair beautiful smiles, but they also maintain the natural structure of the face!

Eating can be easier.

You can enjoy eating again! Dental implants allow patients to chew as they once did with their natural teeth. Food can stick to the gums and cause irritation. With dental implants, you can maintain your natural chewing pattern without fear of dentures slipping or loose teeth falling out. You can avoid food scratching at your gums when you bite down, and you can enjoy your meal without food sticking to your gums.

Improved self-esteem.

Don't be afraid to smile! Dental implants function and look just like your natural teeth. No need to worry about hiding your teeth when you smile or having your teeth fall out while you're eating. Dental implants can improve your appearance and make your day-to-day life more comfortable.

Better health.

With proper care, your overall oral health will improve with dental implants. Decreasing the gaps and decaying teeth in your mouth will decrease the areas for bacteria to spread. In turn, this can help prevent gingivitis and other oral diseases.

Are you a candidate?

The great news is nearly everyone is a candidate for dental implants. For information on how dental implants can change your life, please call EON Clinics at 312-827-6453 and schedule your FREE consultation.

City looks to ease building sign regulations

Salesforce eyes huge office lease, forcing tweaks to Trump-inspired limits

Ryan Ori
On Real Estate

The 20-foot-tall letters spelling "T-R-U-M-P" on the city's second-tallest building prompted Chicago aldermen four years ago to regulate the installation of large signs on office buildings.

Now, Mayor Rahm Emanuel wants to tweak that ordinance to help secure a huge expansion by software firm Salesforce in a new riverfront skyscraper.

The city's Department of Planning and Development on Wednesday unveiled a plan that would allow larger signs on office towers, depending on how high signs are placed. The proposal will be introduced at Thursday's City Council meeting.

San Francisco-based Salesforce is in talks to lease 500,000 square feet or more in the proposed third and final tower in the Wolf Point development along the Chicago River near the Merchandise Mart, where it could potentially add thousands of jobs, according to sources.

One potential stumbling block has been Salesforce's desire to create prominent signage atop an approximately 60-story tower, as the company has done in other cities.

O'Hare improves but still ranks near bottom in airport customer satisfaction study

By Mary Wisniewski
Chicago Tribune

O'Hare International Airport has improved but still ranks near the bottom in passenger satisfaction among the nation's largest airports, placing 17th out of 19, according to a study released Wednesday.

The 2018 North American Airport Satisfaction Survey by J.D. Power, a marketing information services firm, found that overall satisfaction at airports had reached an all-time high, with airports finding creative ways to address the challenges of constant construction projects and increased passenger capacity.

Though O'Hare ranked low in the survey, it did earn slightly more points for customer satisfaction in 2018 than in 2017. It got 735 points, up from 723 but still below the segment average of 758. The airport improved in all categories measured by the study, which examines, in order of importance: terminal facilities; airport accessibility; security check; baggage claim; check-in/baggage check; and food, beverage and retail, said Michael Taylor, who leads J.D. Power's travel practice.

O'Hare's performance should improve more when the city completes a planned 8-year, $8.7 billion expansion, Taylor said. He said the airport's current terminal design is outdated, and that newer airports have broader hallways that make passengers feel less crowded.

"Absolutely, O'Hare is going to be better," said Taylor. "It's going to be short-term pain for long-term gain." He noted that for several airports, including O'Hare, Boston Logan and Los Angeles, it is the "lull before the storm" as they prepare for big construction projects. LaGuardia Airport in New York City is already going through the process.

Improvements at O'Hare will include a new Global Terminal, additional gates and a more "streamlined experience"

Local steel pipe-maker postpones IPO plans

Analyst cites uncertainty from Trump tariffs

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz

ITSUO INOUYE/AP

Prices of hot rolled coil, Zekelman Industries' main raw material, have increased as a result of the administration's tariffs, the Chicago-based pipe-maker said.

Chicago-based Zekelman Industries, a major steel pipe and tube manufacturer, has postponed a plan to sell shares of its stock to the public.

The company cited macroeconomic conditions for the delay, according to investment research firm Renaissance Capital, which in a note listed uncertainty about steel tariffs as a likely factor in the decision.

Zekelman, which filed to delay its initial public offering Tuesday, did not respond to requests for comment.

Analysts were surprised by the change in course, as the shares appeared to be an attractive buy.

"It's a strong company, they're a leader in their segment, they have a good track record, they know how to produce free cash flow in a cyclical industry," said Kathleen Smith, principal at Renaissance Capital and manager of the firm's IPO exchange-traded funds. "This company is certainly capable of going public."

Zekelman, founded in 1877, has never been traded publicly before. It had sought to list on the New York and Toronto stock exchanges and offer 41.8 million shares at a price range of $17 to $19, for a total of about $471.5 million.

The plan was to use the net proceeds of the sale to pay down debt, according to its prospectus. The company, which reported $2.6 billion in sales over the 53 weeks that ended

By Ally Marotti
Chicago Tribune

Nokia laid off about 100 people from its Naperville office this week, bringing the total job cuts there this year to about 300 as the company continues a cost-reduction program launched more than two years ago.

Wednesday was the last day of work for those roughly 100 employees, said Lisa Schvach, the director of the DuPage County Workforce Development Division. Schvach's division, which administers federal job training dollars, received notification of the layoffs from Nokia.

The layoffs are the most recent in a global staff reduction the Finnish telecommunications company implemented more than two years ago, after its acquisition of French-American rival Alcatel-Lucent. Nokia said in 2016 that the program is meant to reduce operating costs and that staff reductions could continue through the end of 2018.

Since the acquisition, Nokia also closed an Arlington Heights office, moving employees to Naperville, spokeswoman Carol DeMatteo said.

Most of the employees in Naperville are telecommunications engineers, said DeMatteo, who confirmed the number of job cuts.

She declined to comment on whether there will be more cuts this year and wouldn't give the total head count in Naperville.

The company employs 13,000 people in North America.

Schvach's agency has served more than 300 former Nokia workers in recent years and enrolled almost 140 people in job training programs.

"They've been letting people go since mid-2015," Schvach said.

Typically, Nokia does not give the county advance notification of its layoffs, and Schvach said she has not been notified of further staff reductions.

WeWork, Ill., N.Y. reach settlement

Agree to scale back noncompete agreements

Chicago Tribune

WeWork Cos. has reached a settlement agreement with authorities in Illinois and New York to end its use of overly broad noncompete agreements for almost all of its employees, according to the states' top law enforcement officers.

The agreement releases 1,400 employees across the U.S. from noncompete agreements and allows for less-restrictive pacts for another 1,800 employees, the attorneys general of Illinois and New York announced Tuesday.

The New York-based co-working company previously used noncompete agreements that prohibited nearly all its employees from taking jobs with competitors, according to Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan's office. That included cleaners, mailroom workers, executive assistants and baristas, some of whom earn as little as $15 an hour, according to Madigan's office.

"(Tuesday's) settlement puts an end to WeWork's unnecessary use of noncompete agreements and removes career obstacles for current and former employees, allowing them to make better decisions for their lives," Madigan said in a news release.

The company said in a statement that it "was already in the process of revamping our employee processes."

"We are pleased to confirm that we now have updated documents developed collaboratively" with attorneys general in New York and Illinois, the statement said. The deal doesn't apply to about 100 executive leadership employees, the company said.

WeWork, which has six co-working spaces in Chicago and plans to open two more on the Near North Side, has about 100 employees in Illinois, according to the attorney general's office.

Illinois has cracked down on other companies that required low-wage employees to sign noncompete agreements.

Madigan's office sued Champaign-based sandwich chain Jimmy John's in 2016 for what it called "highly restrictive noncompete agreements." The company settled with Madigan's office in December 2016 for $100,000.

The following month, an Illinois law took effect that prohibits noncompete agreements for employees earning less than $13 an hour.

The attorney general's office also alleged illegal use of noncompete agreements in a lawsuit filed in October against Tennessee-based payday lender Check Into Cash. The case is ongoing.

June 30, has $1.3 billion in outstanding debt, resulting in part from a series of acquisitions. Zekelman has acquired six pipe and tube manufacturers since 2006 and is considering additional acquisitions, it said in its prospectus.

Most of its products, which are purchased by 2,000 customers primarily in the U.S. and Canada, are used in infrastructure and nonresidential construction projects, and are marketed under the Atlas, Wheatland, Sharon Tube, Western Tube & Conduit and Picoma brands.

Company CEO Barry Zekelman has been vocal in his support of the Trump administration's tariffs on Chinese steel, telling media outlets that reducing steel imports will create greater demand for his products, allowing him to ramp up production and create more jobs. In March he announced $1,000 bonuses for each of his 2,300 employees, which he said will be annual as long as the tariffs are in place.

Zekelman's primary raw material is hot rolled coil, and it sources 69 percent of it domestically; most of its imported supply comes from Canada.

Prices of hot rolled coil have increased since the start of the year as a result of the administration's tariffs, to $917 per ton in June from $651 in January, the company said in the prospectus. It seeks to pass the increased costs onto customers.

In its prospectus, the company said it believes the recent sanctions against "unfairly traded steel" will "meaningfully enhance our competitive positioning relative to foreign sources of supply" by reducing imports.

With no additional details from the company on which "macroeconomic conditions" could be causing the postponement of the IPO, analysts were left to speculate.

A company usually postpones an IPO because investors aren't interested or there is pushback on the valuation, but Zekelman was priced below many of its peers and is a strong company, Renaissance's Smith said.

Renaissance Capital pointed to possible cyclical challenges in the industry and the uncertainty of U.S. tariffs and other countries' potential retaliatory tariffs as reasons Zekelman might want to come back to market at a later time. There could also be investor reluctance given the poor stock performance that other steel pipe and tube manufacturers have been experiencing in the past three months due to tariff concerns, Smith said.

from curb to gate, said city Aviation Department spokeswoman Lauren Huffman.

O'Hare was rated in the category of "mega" airports, defined as those handling more than 32.5 million annual passengers, while the "large" category included airports with 10 million to 32.4 million passengers. Midway International Airport ranked 12th out of 24 in the large category, with an above-average point total.

A former Chicago resident, Taylor noted that Midway has already "really advanced" its food, beverage and retail offerings, and they are expected to improve even more. At Midway, the city is expanding the security checkpoint, increasing parking spaces adjacent to the terminal and improving concessions, Huffman said.

Huffman said Chicago airport users will have a "lot to look forward to," thanks to major capital programs at both airports.

"These projects will not only improve capacity, but they will grow Chicago's leading connectivity," she said.

The J.D. Power study, now in its 13th year, is based on responses from 40,183 North American travelers.

Ranking highest among mega airports were Las Vegas McCarran International Airport and Orlando (Fla.) International Airport in a tie, followed by Detroit Metropolitan Wayne County Airport and Denver International Airport. At the bottom, below O'Hare, is Los Angles International and Newark Liberty.

Ranking highest among large airports was the John Wayne Airport in Orange County, Calif.

Earlier this week, O'Hare was named the best-connected U.S. airport in the nation for 2018 and a leading international hub second only to London's Heathrow, according to a report by OAG, an air travel intelligence company. The report based O'Hare's ranking on the number of connections possible relative to peak travel times.

Apple CEO Tim Cook has been able to shape some of the administration's policies.

Cook savors sway

While publicly a critic of Trump, Apple CEO lobbies D.C. hard

By Tony Romm and Damian Paletta
The Washington Post

Apple Chief Executive Tim Cook has been one of President Donald Trump's staunchest critics in Silicon Valley, opposing the White House on everything from immigration to climate change.

But the 57-year old tech leader has also become one of the technology industry's savviest political operators — a behind-the-scenes Trump whisperer, able to shape some of the administration's economic policies in ways that benefit Apple and some of its tech peers.

Those efforts seemed to pay off Monday, after Trump unveiled tariffs on roughly $200 billion in goods imported from China, the latest salvo in the trade war Washington is waging against Beijing. The initial list of imports the White House had threatened to penalize included some of Apple's most well-known products, the company said earlier this month, such as its recently updated Apple Watch smartwatch, HomePod home assistant and AirPods wireless headphones (but not the iPhone). On Monday evening, though, those products were spared. Thousands of other imports weren't so lucky, and Americans could soon be paying more for things like refrigerators and toys.

For months, Cook had lobbied Trump personally against adopting such tariffs, according to people familiar with the Apple executive's efforts and Cook's public comments. Apple warned the Trump administration in a regulatory filing this month that the government's proposal could result in higher prices on some of the world's most popular consumer electronics. "Our concern with these tariffs is that the U.S. will be hardest hit, and that will result in lower U.S. growth and competitiveness and higher prices for U.S. consumers," Apple said. Apple added that the policy would have amounted to a "tax on U.S. consumers."

Asked on Tuesday about the Trump administration's decision, Cook told ABC's "Good Morning America" that he believed the White House "looked at this and said that it's not really great for the United States to put a tariff on those type of products."

The Trump administration has acknowledged Cook's effect on its thinking. "We've spoken to Mr. Tim Cook many times," said Larry Kudlow, the White House economic adviser.

Cook's appeals to Trump on trade appeared to intensify this spring. The Apple executive scored a rare invite to the White House state dinner to honor the visiting French president in April, and a day later, Cook privately huddled with Trump at the White House to express his view that "tariffs were not the right approach" with China, Cook later told Bloomberg Television.

The outreach eventually spared Apple from at least one headache: The company's iPhone dodged steep new fees entering the country in Trump's earlier round of tariffs. But Trump still ratcheted up his attacks on China in the weeks to follow and proposed two more rounds of tariffs covering a host of goods, including Apple-made consumer electronics, over the summer.

That touched off another all-out lobbying blitz on Apple's part. Cook paid an early August visit to Trump National Golf Course in Bedminster, N. J., to dine with the president again to talk tariffs, according to two people familiar with the meeting but not authorized to speak on the record.

"The iPhone is assembled in China but the parts come from everywhere," Cook told ABC in response to a question about the tariffs. "The glass comes from Kentucky, there are chips that come from the United States and of course the research and development is all done in the United States."

Cook's successful outreach reflects a dramatic departure from Apple's tumultuous early relationship with Trump, even before he entered the White House. Frustrated with Trump's comments on the campaign trail about immigrants, women and minorities, Cook withdrew Apple from the 2016 Republican convention that nominated Trump for president. Then, Cook helped raised money for Trump's Democratic foe, Hillary Clinton.

In the weeks after Trump's inauguration in January 2017, Cook emerged as a fierce critic of some of the new administration's signature policies, including its decision to withdraw from a major international climate agreement and end a program that protected some young immigrants from deportation.

At the same time, Cook has seized some opportunities to praise the Trump administration, including the tax cuts Trump signed into law last year. Quietly, Cook also has sought to build bridges with Trump and his top aides to advance Apple's agenda on key business issues issues.

Trump-inspired limits may change the Kennedy family, believes large signs should be allowed when they are displayed higher on a building, unlike the massive sign on the Trump International Hotel & Tower.

"It's common sense," said Greg Van Schaack, a Chicago-based senior managing director at Hines. "A sign that's 800 feet in the air should be bigger than a sign that's 300 feet in the air, which should be bigger than a sign 100 feet in the air."

Downtown Ald. Brendan Reilly, 42nd, could not immediately be reached for comment, but his office said he does not object to the sign ordinance revisions.

If the proposal is approved, it would be a compromise from rules created in 2014, after Donald Trump caused an uproar by installing his sign on Trump Tower. That sign has a total surface area of 2,891 square feet, according to the city.

A statement from Emanuel's office hinted at the potential Salesforce lease as a factor in creating new rules, without actually naming the company.

"The city will make modest adjustments to clarify and tighten up standards to obtain high-rise signage approval and ensure consistency in how those standards are applied," mayoral spokesman Adam Collins said in a statement. "The adjustments will also better accommodate the needs of large anchor tenants, strengthening Chicago's attractiveness to large companies that create large numbers of jobs. The adjustment would accommodate a Fortune 500 company that will soon create thousands of jobs in Chicago."

Collins declined to say whether that company is Salesforce. Salesforce declined to comment.

Crain's Chicago Business first reported in August that Salesforce was considering a big expansion at Wolf Point. At that time, there were estimates that Salesforce — which has about 1,500 Chicago workers now — could add as many as 5,000 workers in the city. Those estimates are high, according to sources.

A 500,000-square-foot office likely would not be enough space for 5,000 workers, much less 6,500 employees if offices are consolidated, real estate experts said.

The company also has looked at other options including Friedman Properties' planned redevelopment of the fire station at 444 N. Dearborn St. Friedman wants to demolish the existing fire station and replace it with a new station at the base of a 29-story tower. Salesforce currently has workers in more than 200,000 square feet combined in several River North and Loop offices, the largest of which is at 111 W. Illinois St.

Van Schaack declined to comment on Salesforce. Hines has zoning to build as high as 950 feet, but he said the planned 1.3 million-square-foot office tower is likely to be about 800 feet — or about 60 stories — tall. Previous reports of the Wolf Point office building potentially including a large exterior video board were incorrect, Van Schaack said.

The ordinance change, if approved, would allow signs of up to 200 square feet of surface area if they're between 150 and 199 feet off the ground. The range gradually increases, up to an allowed 1,100-square-foot sign if it's at least 800 feet above the ground.

Currently, only tenants that occupy at least 51 percent of a building's leasable space can have a large exterior sign. Under the proposal, companies would have to occupy at least 350,000 square feet or employ more than 1,000 people within a building where it has a sign.

"We know that a company's ability to advertise its presence can be a big factor in its decision to locate in a specific building, or even within a specific city, so it's important for Chicago to keep its regulations consistent with the market — without unduly cluttering the business card that is our skyline," David Reifman, commissioner of the Department of Planning and Development, said in a statement.

Amazon may add up to 3,000 cashierless stores

EU regulators looking into antitrust issues

By Tony Romm and Abha Bhattarai
The Washington Post

BESS ADLER/BLOOMBERG

Europe's antitrust regulators have opened a preliminary investigation of Amazon.com to see whether the e-commerce giant has stifled smaller competitors who sell clothing, toys and other goods through its website, marking the region's latest inquiry into the business practices of a U.S. retail giant.

The concern at hand is whether Amazon's use of sales data from third-party merchants gives it a leg up in selling its own products, said Margrethe Vestager, the European Union's competition chief, on Wednesday. More than half of Amazon's sales now come from third-party merchants that do business on the company's site, as the retailer aggressively recruits small and medium-size sellers to join its marketplace. (Jeff Bezos, the founder and chief executive of Amazon, owns The Washington Post.)

"The question here is about the data," Vestager said at a news conference. "If you as Amazon get the data from the smaller merchants that you host ... do you then also use this data to do your own calculations on what is the new big thing? What is it that people want? What kind of offers do they like to receive? What makes them buy things?"

Amazon declined to comment.

Vestager added that the EU has not formally opened a case but is in the process of gathering information from third-party sellers.

"It is very early days in this antitrust investigation into Amazon's business practices," she said. "We are trying to make sure that we sort of get the full picture."

If the EU intensifies its scrutiny, it could result in years of regulatory headaches for Amazon, along with potential penalties that could force it to change its business practices or even subject the e-commerce giant to steep fines.

Equipped with expansive consumer protection and competition laws, Vestager has previously penalized Apple for its tax practices, punished Facebook for its privacy missteps and levied a record $5 billion fine against Google in July on grounds that the company had disadvantaged rivals of its Android smartphone platform. Vestager's tough enforcement targeting the tech industry stands in stark contrast to that of regulators in the United States, who often have opted against similar inquiries.

Critics of the tech industry's expansive footprint, however, encouraged Vestager on Wednesday to proceed with the investigation — and called on the Trump administration to do the same.

"It's about time. We've been encouraging enforcers on both sides of the Atlantic to do this for a number of years now," said Barry Lynn, the leader of the Open Markets Institute, which has advocated for more antitrust scrutiny of tech giants.

Previously, Vestager has aired antitrust concerns about the way in which tech companies amass vast stores of consumer data — and the competitive advantages that sometimes can result. "Data is an asset," she said in an April interview. "You can mine it; you can work it; you can do completely different things." As a result, Vestager said, regulators think about data as a "completely different creature" than they did five years ago.

Shares of Amazon, which this month became the second publicly traded U.S. company to be valued at $1 trillion, have more than doubled in the past year.

Amazon's stock fell more than 1 percent following the news Wednesday.

Bloomberg News

Amazon.com is considering a plan to open as many as 3,000 new Amazon Go cashierless stores in the next few years, according to people familiar with matter, an aggressive and costly expansion that would threaten convenience chains like 7-Eleven, quick-service sandwich shops like Subway and Panera Bread, and mom-and-pop pizzerias and taco trucks.

Chief Executive Officer Jeff Bezos sees eliminating meal-time logjams in busy cities as the best way for Amazon to reinvent the bricks-and-mortar shopping experience, where most spending still occurs. But he's still experimenting with the best format: a convenience store that sells fresh prepared foods as well as a limited grocery selection similar to 7-Eleven franchises, or a place to simply pick up a quick bite to eat for people in a rush, similar to the U.K.-based chain Pret a Manger, one of the people said.

An Amazon spokeswoman declined to comment. The company unveiled its first cashierless store near its headquarters in Seattle in 2016 and has since announced two additional sites in Seattle. The first store outside Amazon's hometown opened Monday in Chicago. Two of the new stores offer only a limited selection of salads, sandwiches and snacks, showing that Amazon is experimenting with the concept simply as a meal-on-the-run option. Two other stores, including the original Amazon Go, also have a small selection of groceries, making it more akin to a convenience store.

Shoppers use a smartphone app to enter the store. Once they scan their phones at a turnstile, they can grab what they want from a range of salads, sandwiches, drinks and snacks — and then walk out without stopping at a cash register. Sensors and computer-vision technology detect what shoppers take and bills them automatically, eliminating checkout lines.

The challenge to Amazon's plan is the high cost of opening each location. The original Amazon Go in downtown Seattle required more than $1 million in hardware alone, according to a person familiar with the matter. Narrowing the focus to prepared food-to-go would reduce the upfront cost of opening each store because it would require fewer cameras and sensors. Prepared foods also have wider profit margins than groceries.

Amazon's other bricks-and-mortar initiatives include about 20 bookstores around the U.S., including one on Southport Avenue in Chicago's Lakeview neighborhood, and the natural grocery chain Whole Foods Market, acquired last year. Amazon Go is the most distinctive of all of its physical stores.

At a Washington, D.C., event last week, Bezos said Amazon was "very interested" in physical stores, but only if it has something new to offer. "If we offer a me-too product, it's not going to work," he said.

Such an expansion could put Amazon back into an investment cycle. Bezos is willing to lose money on long-term initiatives when he smells opportunity. Amazon Web Services, the company's fast-growing and profitable cloud-computing business, was unprofitable for years and Bezos stuck with it, according to a person familiar with the matter.

Adding 3,000 convenience stores would make Amazon Go among the biggest chains in U.S. The internet giant is considering plans to have about 10 locations open by the end of this year, about 50 locations in major metro areas in 2019, and then as many as 3,000 by 2021, said the people, who requested anonymity discussing internal plans.

The Tribune previously reported that Amazon was planning stores in Willis Tower and an office building connected to the Ogilvie Transportation Center. The company has declined to comment.

The U.S. currently has 155,000 convenience stores, with 122,500 of them combined with gas stations, according to industry group NACS. Nonfuel purchases at convenience stores totaled $233 billion in 2016, with cigarettes and other tobacco products the best-selling items.

Amazon is targeting dense urban areas with lots of young, busy, affluent residents willing to spend a little more than a typical fast-food experience for better quality food, the people said. The target locations make it less of a threat to suburban gas station-convenience store combinations and more of a threat to big cities' quick-service eateries, such as Subway Restaurants, Panera Bread Co. and Pret a Manger. U.K.-based Pret has 450 locations worldwide, including New York, Boston and Chicago, focusing on fresh, healthy grab-and-go foods.

The trade deficit under President Trump's watch rose 10 percent last year to $552 billion, after being flat for years.

ANALYSIS

U.S. trade deficits balloon under Trump

President talking less on his fixation of Chinese imports

By Don Lee
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump built his trade policy on an obsession with cutting fat U.S. deficits with China, Mexico, Europe and others.

But for weeks, Trump has barely mentioned that once-singular economic focus.

He has written no Twitter posts about trade deficits since July. And the subject was conspicuously missing from his statement Monday announcing new tariffs on $200 billion worth of Chinese imports.

The reason is that U.S. trade deficits have soared since he took office, driven up by strong consumer spending but also by the blizzard of tariffs he unleashed to lower deficits.

Eager to avoid anticipated higher prices, American businesses have responded to tariffs by increasing imports from China and elsewhere.

The overall U.S. trade deficit rose 10 percent last year to $552 billion, after being flat the previous two years. The deficit rose 7 percent more this year through July.

"There's no good answer for him; that's why he's not talking about it," said Derek Scissors, an economist at the conservative American Enterprise Institute, referring to the large and growing negative U.S. trade deficit.

Trump addressed the deficit at a news conference Tuesday.

"I watch trade deficits because to me, deficits are very important," Trump said. But then he added a rare note of skepticism about deficits. "They're not everything, and they're not exact," he said. "Sometimes you can have ... a deficit and that's not such a bad thing."

And at least in the short term, deficits are likely to keep growing.

Stronger economic growth, boosted in part by tax cuts, has given people more money to buy imported products, and American companies will keep trying to hedge against more and higher tariffs to come.

"Everybody in their right mind is thinking about how they can get products to the U.S. and store them," said Matt Priest, president of the Footwear Distributors and Retailers of America.

Shoes were excluded from the administration's list of about 6,000 Chinese-made goods that beginning Monday will be subject to 10 percent tariffs, rising to 25 percent in January. But Trump has threatened to impose duties on more Chinese goods worth $267 billion.

If that happens, footwear and virtually every other product from China will be hit with tariffs because annual imports from China total about $505 billion.

China this week responded by announcing tariffs on $60 billion in U.S. imports.

The U.S. trade deficit with China surged to $376 billion last year and is running 9 percent higher through July.

Trump has been railing about America's trade deficit back to the 1980s when Japan was America's biggest trade problem, not China. Some economists see the U.S. deficit as a symptom of U.S. industrial weakness, but even they would take issue with how Trump has presented the trade balance as a kind of win or loss figure.

Trump's fixation with the deficit also seems to have confused and steered earlier negotiations with China and other parties.

In a previous round of talks, Beijing thought it had a deal that would satisfy Trump's desire to cut the deficit as it offered to buy a lot more U.S. soybeans, liquid gas and other American products, only to have Trump later reject it.

With Trump more recently having toned down his fiery rhetoric about big trade deficits, it may have become easier for administration officials to convey a clearer message to Beijing about what the U.S. wants from China: Real reforms that would address systemic problems involving protection of intellectual property, market access for American companies, and other state-controlled mercantilist policies, in compliance with Beijing's World Trade Organization commitments.

Spam calls driving you crazy? It may get worse in 2019.

By Hamza Shaban
The Washington Post

Nearly half of all cellphone calls next year will come from scammers, according to First Orion, a company that provides phone carriers and their customers caller ID and call blocking technology.

The Arkansas-based firm projects an explosion of incoming spam calls, marking a massive leap from 3.7 percent of total calls in 2017 to more than 29 percent this year, to a projected 45 percent by early 2019.

"Year after year, the scam call epidemic bombards consumers at record-breaking levels, surpassing the previous year and scammers increasingly invade our privacy at new extremes," Charles Morgan, the chief executive and head data scientist of First Orion, said in a blog post recently.

The barrage of fraudulent calls has taken a more dire turn in recent months, as scammers have targeted immigrant communities with urgent calls claiming ambiguous legal trouble. Across several U.S. metropolitan areas with large Chinese populations, scam callers have posed as representatives of the Chinese Embassy while trying to trick Chinese immigrants and students into revealing their credit card numbers.

Other spam calls involve fraudsters pretending to be a representative from a bank, a debt collector or cable company.

The Internal Revenue Service has also warned taxpayers about phone scams. Callers use telephone numbers that mimic IRS assistance centers, claim to be IRS employees and use fake names and phony badge numbers. The IRS says that victims are falsely told they owe money to the government and are urged to pay up through a gift card or wire transfer. Scammers may also take advantage of the devastation caused by Hurricane Florence, the IRS warned. Scammers can pose as a charitable organization, preying on the generosity of Americans who wish to help those affected by the storm.

Scammers also trick people into answering their calls with a scheme known as neighborhood spoofing, in which they manipulate caller ID information so that their actual phone number is masked.More than half of all complaints received by the Federal Communications Commission — more than 200,000 of them — are about unwanted calls. The FCC said Americans received about 2.4 billion unwanted automated calls every month, according to 2016 estimates.

Elk Grove company to build plant in Indiana

HOBART, Ind. — An Illinois company plans to build a manufacturing plant for the logistics industry in northwestern Indiana, creating up to 580 new jobs.

Elk Grove, Illinois-based Wynright Corp. announced plans Tuesday for the $26 million, 320,000-square-foot plant at a Hobart business park. The new plant will make material handling systems for the logistics industry.

Wynright designs, makes and installs intelligent material handling systems, including conveyor and sorting systems, automated storage and retrieval systems and various robotics. The company's key markets include footwear, apparel and grocery distribution, third-party logistics and general distribution. The (Northwest Indiana) Times reports that the plant is expected to open in late 2019.

Why it matters whether your bank is FDIC-insured

Bank failures sound scary. All of a sudden, the federal bank regulators rush in unannounced and shut the operation down. And whether you hold accounts at that bank or not, you'll find out at the same time as everyone else – after the fact.

But while that may sound scary, for the vast majority of a bank's depositors, there really is no significant danger. That's because the U.S. has a sophisticated, well-run insurance system called the FDIC, which protects your funds should a bank fail.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is a government entity started during the Great Depression to restore confidence in the U.S. banking system. And confidence and trust is exactly the sense it should bring you today. Because unless you have a very large sum deposited at a single bank, FDIC insurance has your back.

The way it works is that all deposits up to $250,000 held by a single individual at a single FDIC-insured bank will be reimbursed by the government if the bank is seized. But even if you have more than that amount held in bank accounts, you can still protect yourself. If you're married, you can hold up to $250,000 in each spouse's name, for $500,000 in total coverage. Or, you can split your deposits among more than one bank, so you don't exceed $250,00 with any one institution.

Of course, this works if you hold your deposits at an FDIC-insured bank, which is most of them. However, banks do exist that provide private deposit insurance instead of FDIC coverage. It's possible you'll be just as safe with these privately insured banks, but many savers feel more comfortable sticking to government-backed insurance.

Fortunately, it's easy to check if a bank is federally insured. Just check the bank's materials or website for the FDIC logo.

OBITUARIES

Founded Target Market News magazine, firm

By Bob Goldsborough

DAVID KLOBUCAR/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2002

Ken Smikle died of congestive heart failure on Sept. 12.

Kenneth Smikle was a writer and editor with several publications in New York before starting Chicago-based Target Market News, a trade magazine and research firm that focuses on providing data and news related to marketing and advertising aimed at African-Americans.

"Ken was one of the most magnificent people I've ever known. He was so smart, bordering on genius," said former U.S. Sen. Carol Moseley Braun, a longtime friend. "And he gave more than he took."

Smikle, 66, died of congestive heart failure at University of Chicago Medicine on Sept. 12, said his son, Jason. He had been a resident of the South Side's Kenwood neighborhood since 1987.

Born in New York City's Harlem neighborhood, Smikle grew up in Jamaica, Queens, and graduated in 1970 from Benjamin N. Cardozo High School in Queens, where he played trombone in the band. He then attended York College of the City University of New York, where he studied radio and television production.

In 1974, Smikle and his brother, David — who now goes by Dawoud Bey and is a Columbia College Chicago professor — teamed up with a friend, Gerald Gladney, to start a business that published two magazines, one of which covered the black arts community.

Smikle subsequently joined Harlem's Amsterdam News as its arts editor, and was a music editor at Record World magazine. He freelanced for Essence magazine and the National Leader magazine and briefly worked as editor of the National Leader before joining Black Enterprise magazine as a senior editor in 1984.

In 1987, Smikle moved to Chicago and started Target Market News. Smikle soon found himself being frequently quoted in major news media. He started producing an annual report titled "The Buying Power of Black America."

"While an editor at Black Enterprise magazine, I could see millions of dollars flowing in and out of the marketing business in efforts targeted at black consumers, and no publication was writing about that," Smikle told the Tribune in 1995. "I saw the possibility for a new publication devoted exclusively to this area."

Smikle never retired from Target Market News. In 2002, he submitted a bid to buy Sengstacke Enterprises Inc., the financially ailing owner of the Chicago Defender. The company wound up being sold to Real Times Inc. in 2003.

Smikle's wife of 34 years was former WMAQ-Ch. 5 reporter Renee Ferguson.

"We balanced each other's perceptions of the world and enjoyed doing so every day," Ferguson said.

Ferguson noted her husband's love of jazz and the fact that he saw life as its own form of jazz, powered by imagination and improvisation. His favorite artist, Herbie Hancock, was a good friend.

"He taught me to love jazz, and I taught him to love pumpkin pie," she said. "Clearly I got the better end of the deal."

Music producer Jun Mhoon, a friend for 40 years, called Smikle "a very strong, stubborn, persistent and brilliant journalist who was a loving father, husband and good friend." Recalling his passion, Mhoon noted that "he argued about everything ... but even when he was right, he'd still have to argue about why he was right."

Ferguson said "we both loved people and taught each other to understand how one's point of view was shaped by life's experiences."

"We helped each other grow. Our love, our family, the uplift of people was the ground note of both of our lives," said Ferguson, an Oklahoma native. "(We were) the New Yorker and the Okie."

Smikle also is survived by two sisters, Sandra Bernard and Georgianna Machicote.

A celebration of life service will take place at 10 a.m. Saturday at the First United Methodist Church at the Chicago Temple, 77 W. Washington St.

ON SEPTEMBER 20 ...

In 1870 Italian troops took control of the Papal States, leading to the unification of Italy.

In 1881 Chester Arthur was sworn in as the 21st president of the United States, succeeding James Garfield, who had been assassinated.

In 1873 panic swept the floor of the New York Stock Exchange in the wake of railroad bond defaults and bank failures.

In 1899 political philosopher Leo Strauss, cited as an influence among Washington foreign-policy conservatives in President George W. Bush's administration, was born in Kirhhain, Germany.

In 1954 the live television drama "Twelve Angry Men" was presented as an episode of the CBS anthology series "Studio One."

In 1962 James Meredith, an African-American, was blocked from enrolling at the University of Mississippi by Gov. Ross Barnett. (Later, Meredith succeeded in earning a degree.)

In 1976 Playboy magazine released an interview in which Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter admitted he had "looked on a lot of women with lust."

In 1979 Jean-Bedel Bokassa, self-styled head of the Central African Empire, was overthrown in a French-supported coup while on a visit to Libya.

In 1980 Spectacular Bid ran as the only entry in the Woodward Stakes at Belmont Park in New York after three potential challengers dropped out in horse racing's first walkover since 1949.

In 1998, after playing in a record 2,632 consecutive baseball games, Baltimore Oriole Cal Ripken Jr. sat out a game, ending his 16-year run.

In 2000 Independent Counsel Robert Ray announced the end of the Whitewater investigation, saying there was insufficient evidence to warrant charges against President Bill Clinton and Hillary Rodham Clinton.

In 2001 President George W. Bush addressed a joint session of Congress regarding the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and named Pennsylvania Gov. Tom Ridge to head the new Office of Homeland Security.

In 2003 Aquila al-Hashimi, a member of Iraq's Governing Council, was shot in Baghdad; she died five days later at age 50.

In 2004 CBS News apologized for a "mistake in judgment" in its story questioning President George W. Bush's National Guard service, saying it could not vouch for the authenticity of documents featured in the report.

In 2005 the number of U.S. service members killed in Iraq topped 1,900. Also in 2005 Holocaust survivor and Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal died in Vienna; he was 96.

In 2011 Burhanuddin Rabbani, the Afghan government's point man on negotiations with the Taliban who was a former Afghan president and onetime warlord, was assassinated by a suicide bomber.

In 2012 the space shuttle Endeavour, carried atop a modified 747, flew over Tucson, Ariz., as a tribute to former U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords before landing in California.

In 2014 the Vatican selected Blase Cupich, 65, bishop of Spokane, Wash., as the successor to Chicago Archbishop Cardinal Francis George.

In 2017 Hurricane Maria ravaged Puerto Rico, knocking out electricity to the island and triggering landslides and floods; at least 30 people were killed during the Category 4 storm's rampage through the Caribbean.

Boskey, James A.
On Monday, September 17, 2018, James A. Boskey, the most generous man in the world, passed away at the age of 70.
James was born on June 8, 1948 in Chicago, IL to William and Gertrude Boskey. He received his degree in mathematics from the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign and went on to become a computer programmer. On July 11, 1970, he married his grade-school sweetheart, Betty Anne Sabados, and they raised three sons together: Jason, Derek, and Peter.
James had a passion for computers, and often lent a helping hand fixing his friends' and family members' computers after they clicked on something they shouldn't have. He loved cooking soups and stews, which he would always make in big batches so he could share them with everyone he knew. He was also an avid music lover and a collector of Beatles memorabilia. He loved hanging out with his friends and was known for his sense of humor and being the life of the party.
James was preceded in death by his father, William; his mother, Gertrude; and his wife, Betty. He is survived by his children Jason (Denver), Derek (Ellen), and Peter (Kimberly); his sisters Mary Vincent, Trudy Meyer, and Teri Sherred; his brothers Bill, Don, and Dave; and his grandchildren Dylan, Emma, Natalie, Jillian, Erzsebet, and Alexander.
Visitation: Friday, September 21, 2018 from 3-9 PM at Vandenberg Funeral Home, 19604 S. Wolf Road Mokena, IL. 60448. Funeral Service: Saturday, September 22, 2018 at 11:00 AM at Vandenberg Funeral Home. Interment is private. For information on services, please call 708-479-1210 or www.vandenbergfuneralhome.com.

Schmidt, George N.

Union activist, journalist and retired Chicago public school teacher George N. Schmidt died peacefully at home on Sept. 17, just a few weeks before his 72nd birthday. He died of lung cancer, diagnosed in August, complicated by a series of strokes.

He was the editor of Substance, an independent newspaper in Chicago covering public education that he helped found in 1975.

George was preceded in death by his parents, Neil and Mary Schmidt. He is survived by his wife of 20 years, Sharon (nee Griffin); sons Dan (29), Sam (17) and Josh (13); brother Thomas; sisters Joan (late Don O'Toole) and Terry (Glenn Foreman), their daughter Jade; father in-law and mother in-law Emory and Jean Griffin; brother in-law James Griffin (Jennifer Bierman), their nieces and nephew Alison, Kyle, and Amy; and dozens of Schmidt and Lanigan aunts, uncles and cousins.

George's multifaceted career spanned five decades. He helped many thousands of people with his tireless energy, intense focus, intellectual gifts, desire to serve and unwavering commitment to the the truth.

A University of Chicago alumnus, George was a brilliant English teacher, who worked inside his classroom and within the Chicago Teachers Union – serving in various roles including delegate, mentor, consultant and researcher – for quality education for students and fairness for school workers.

While he believed that public schools and unions are essential in improving the lives of working class people, George knew the institutions needed watching. He used print newspapers and an online news service to hold accountable those in power. Much of his ongoing critique of the Chicago Board of Education was against racist policies.

His fight against injustice began in the 1960s when he worked with soldiers in the GI Movement, organizing against the Vietnam War, in part through the production of underground newspapers.

George was a voracious reader, who sought to understand everything in history and politics. He loved poetry and literature, as well as biographies, essays and news writing. As a reader and writer, he relished the truth, which had to include the context of events. George was compelled to tell the full story.

He loved his sons and wife passionately, enjoying and encouraging their gifts. George will be dearly missed by them and by so many others whom he helped or inspired over the years.

A complete obituary will be available on the Substance News website on Oct. 1. See www.substancenews.net. Those who wish to contribute testimonies for publication at Substance may email them to Georgeschmidtstories@gmail.com.

Loop Church pastor Mark Brouwer will conduct a funeral service at 2 p.m.. on Saturday, Sept. 22, in the Mt. Olive Church sanctuary, 3850 N. Tripp, Chicago.

Friends and family may pay their respects at the visitation on Thursday, Sept. 20 from 4 to 9 p.m., or on Saturday, Sept. 22 from 1 to 2 p.m., at Mt. Olive Church.

In lieu of flowers, donations in George's name may be sent to Loop Church, 11 E. Adams St., Suite 1200, Chicago IL 60603 (loopchurch.org) or FAIR, 124 W. 30th Street, Suite 201, New York, NY 10001. Fairness & Accuracy In Reporting is the nonprofit progressive national media watch group (fair.org).

Quintet of NL teams can block Cubs from returning to Series

Paul Sullivan
On the Cubs

You don't need Windex to see the National League playoff picture has gotten much clearer as we head into the final sprint of the season.

The ongoing collapse of the Diamondbacks coming shortly after the Phillies' flop basically has reduced the field of contenders to a half-dozen with a week and a half remaining.

Assuming the Cubs and Braves win their divisions, that leaves the Dodgers and Rockies battling for the National League West title and the Brewers, Cardinals and West runner-up fighting for two wild-card spots. And with the Cubs likely to finish with the league's best record, they'll face the winner of the wild-card game in their N L Division Series opener Oct. 4 at Wrigley Field.

Cubs' 30-day odyssey ends with 1-hit dud as Hamels gets rocked

By Mark Gonzales | Chicago Tribune

PHOENIX — The Cubs' stretch of 30 consecutive days with a scheduled game wasn't so bad after all.

The Cubs finished with an 18-11 record despite a 9-0 loss to the Diamondbacks on Wednesday night that dropped their lead over the Brewers in the National League Central to 2½ games with their magic number remaining at 8.

"There are worse things than showing up to the baseball field every single day," Daniel Murphy said before left-hander Cole Hamels was peppered for seven runs in six innings against a lineup filled with backup players.

First baseman Christian Walker, starting in place of slugger Paul Goldschmidt, smacked a three-run homer during a four-run first, and Chris Owings added a two-run homer during a three-run sixth.

Trevathan's impact on 'D' is pronounced

By Colleen Kane | Chicago Tribune

During the Monday Night Football broadcast of the Bears- Seahawks game, Jason Witten, the longtime Cowboys tight end in his first season with ESPN, slipped a few times and mispronounced the Bears inside linebacker's name as Truh-VAY-thee-an rather than Truh-VAY-than.

The announcers had several opportunities to tackle the pronunciation during the Bears' 24-17 victory considering Trevathan's performance, which was good enough to earn NFC Defensive Player of the Week honors Wednesday. He totaled eight tackles, two sacks for minus-6 yards, two quarterback hurries and a forced fumble.

Late Monday night after the game, Trevathan tweeted at Witten and ESPN to learn the proper way to say his name.

"I'm like, 'Come on, man, it's Year 7,'" Trevathan said Wednesday at Halas Hall. " 'I played against you, man. That's all I have is my name. You can at least get that right.' I know it's a tough business. This is his first time. It's tough

Federer rallies tennis faithful

Roger Federer fans don't simply cheer when they see him in the flesh. They scream.

So if you were strolling around Millennium Park at lunchtime Wednesday and heard shrieking, now you know why.

The public event at Pritzker Pavilion introduced Chicago to the Laver Cup, which is tennis' answer to golf's Ryder Cup. The three-day event, featuring many of the world's top male players, begins Friday at the United Center.

"We know this is a sports-crazy city," Federer told the crowd. "We are very thrilled to be here."

Team Europe, captained by Bjorn Borg, won last year's inaugural event in Prague.

"We're here to defend our title," Borg said, "and we're going to keep the cup in Europe."

John McEnroe, Borg's one-time rival and polar opposite in terms of personality, countered: "I think they call that fake news."

McEnroe is captain of Team World, which features South African Kevin Anderson. The 6-foot-8 Anderson played at the University of Illinois and is married to Kelsey O'Neal, who grew up in Glenview and played golf at Illinois.

"People love tennis here," Anderson said. "I hope this is the first step to bringing more tennis to Chicago."

The event is named in honor of Rod Laver, who won a record 200 singles titles, 11 Grand Slams and five Davis Cups for Australia. Laver plans to watch as a neutral observer, perhaps pulling for an underdog.

"I'll drink with the winners," he told the Tribune recently, "whoever they are."

Federer helped create the event to honor Laver and, as he explained Wednesday, to "bring all these different generations of players together so we can have a good time and learn from one another."

New to the event is Novak Djokovic, the Serbian who won the U.S. Open this month.

"I was watching it on the TV last year and it was very exciting to see a new concept," he said. "Guys who have shared rivalries were playing on the same side of the court. There was great team spirit. That's what (tennis is) missing a little bit because it's mostly individual tournaments. I wanted to be a part of it and have this great experience."

ABEL URIBE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

McEnroe believes his group of six players, which includes Americans John Isner, Jack Sock and Frances Tiafoe, will have more team spirit and perhaps better doubles play.

"I like this because I played team sports — basketball and soccer," McEnroe told the Tribune on Wednesday. "Sometimes you can blow off a little steam and can rally. Some guys are better team players. That's what we have going for us."

Team Europe is better on paper, with higher-ranked players, so McEnroe told the Chicago fans they will be needed to give his group an edge.

The Laver Cup features sights and sounds you don't get at Wimbledon — coaching, raucous cheering, chest bumping, celebratory pushups, all on a black court.

The format calls for shorter matches. If the players split sets, they go straight to a 10-point tiebreaker.

McEnroe's last singles title came in Chicago in 1991 at the UIC Pavilion. He beat younger brother Patrick, who is serving as vice captain.

The players and captains were given jerseys of every Chicago pro sports team, but McEnroe reminded people he's from New York and said, "If I wear any of those jerseys, I will be arrested."

Wednesday's event started about 40 minutes later than planned. At one point a member of the crowd screamed, "Let's go already!"

Hoiberg contract status will be key

Do you think this is a make-or-break year for Fred Hoiberg? He definitely hasn't gotten the most ideal situations in terms of player personnel, but I'm not sure what Gar/Pax's level of commitment is if the team flounders to the same extent it did last season.

Adrian R., Detroit

Well, let's pause to remember they were trying to maximize their draft lottery position last season. But that's a separate issue from your question. It's a make-or-break year simply from the contract status. It's never an ideal situation to have a lame-duck coach, and this is Year 4 of a five-year deal. So it's either commit to him with an extension next offseason, replace him or go the lame-duck route for 2019-20. Hoiberg has a lot of offensive tools to play with this season. He'll be judged accordingly.

Any chance of hiring a new coach if the Bulls get off to a horrid start? If so, who's a good candidate?

Gregory W., Chicago

This, to me, is the more intriguing question. After all, management has a track record of hitting a wall with coaches. The instance with Scott Skiles proved the only time current management made an in-season change with one of its own hires (Paxson inherited Bill Cartwright). With Vinny Del Negro and Tom Thibodeau, the change came after the season. There are internal expectations for improvement. As mentioned, management believes it has given Hoiberg myriad offensive weapons. Now it's on him and his staff to make it work. That said, management also has said it knows the franchise has a lot of work left to be in championship contention. So it's not like win-loss expectations are unreasonable. But if the Bulls started, say, 3-20 like last season, there would be some serious disgruntlement. Whether it would be enough to make the rare in-season change and give, say, associate head coach Jim Boylen an interim chance, only management knows. For what it's worth, I don't envision that slow of a start anyway, so it could be a moot point.

Five teams can block Cubs from returning to Series

It has been an interesting race, and the playoff scenarios still are so complicated it's hard to remember where everyone stands until you click your favorite sports app and glance at the standings.

"It's been this way for a couple months now," Brewers manager Craig Counsell said. "Everybody wants to scoreboard watch. It doesn't tell you anything on a daily basis really. There's a bunch of teams involved, and you know winning games is your best tonic every night.

"It's fun in a lot of ways because there are more teams involved and there's more interest and more games are meaningful at this point. But it just feels like there's a big bunch of teams, and trying to figure out what's going to happen next is a little bit useless."

One thing seems certain: Five teams stand in the way of the Cubs heading back to the World Series:

Brewers

If the Brewers win the Oct. 2 wild-card game, the Cubs would meet them in the NLDS. They went 11-8 against the Brew Crew in the season series but lost seven of the last 10 meetings.

The Brewers staff posted a 2.75 ERA against the Cubs, limiting hitters to a .216 average. On the plus side, Cubs fans would have access to tickets to Game 3 and, if necessary, Game 4 at Miller Park. Try as they might, the Brewers can't stop their fans from scalping tickets to Cubs fans, and a 50-50 turnout would be about as good as they can hope for.

"All the Cubs fans will be here, but that's good," second baseman Jonathan Schoop said. "That's baseball. It's fun, a loud crowd. It was the same in Baltimore whenever we played the Yankees or Boston. You get used to it."

Dodgers

After back-to-back meetings in the N LC S, no one would be surprised to see Cubs-Dodgers III.

LA is 17-7 since Aug. 24 and takes a 1½-game NL West lead over the Rockies into tonight's series finale at Dodger Stadium. Chris Taylor's walk-off home run in the 10th inning Tuesday gave the Dodgers momentum, and they have clinched the season series, so any tiebreaker would be played at Dodger Stadium.

With Clayton Kershaw and Walker Buehler as their 1-2 punch and an offense that leads the NL in home runs by a considerable margin, the Dodgers would be favored to beat a young Braves team in an NLDS matchup.

The Cubs won four of seven against the Dodgers this season. The team with home-field advantage in the NLCS has won both times, with the Cubs beating the Dodgers in six games in 2016 and the Dodgers winning 4-1 in October.

Cardinals

Manager Mike Shildt took over for Mike Matheny the day before the All-Star break with the Cardinals one game over .500. They are 15 games over .500 after Wednesday's 7-3 loss to the Braves with a 1-game lead over the Rockies for the second wild-card spot and 2½ behind the Brewers for the top spot, pending Wednesday's night games.

But after a 22-6 August, the Cardinals are running on fumes in late September and are 8-10 in the month.

Naturally, a squirrel sighting emerged at Busch Stadium last weekend to bring the Cardinals luck — as tradition dictates whenever the media needs a lucky mascot to write about down the stretch.

"I wasn't trying to kick it out," Shildt told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "Got him salsa and he was happy."

It's going to take more than a rally squirrel for the Cardinals to beat the Cubs if the teams were to meet in the NLDS. MVP candidate Matt Carpenter has tailed off and is in an 0-for-16 slump.

The Cards have won nine of 16 against the Cubs, and the archrivals face off in the final three games of the season at Wrigley, by which time the Cubs will have clinched the division if they maintain their pace.

Would Joe Maddon throw the B team at the Cards to rest his players or try to knock them out of a wild-card spot?

Stay tuned.

Braves

With a magic number of six to clinch the East entering Wednesday night, the Braves are a virtual lock to face the West winner in the NLDS.

They've held off challenges from the Phillies and heavily favored Nationals and are poised to win their first division title since 2013.

With the best road record in the National League at 45-30, the Braves are a dangerous bunch. Or maybe not. They are 39-38 at home, which doesn't say a lot for their new stadium, SunTrust Park.

And they're 43-23 against the East but four games under .500 against the rest of the majors.

The Cubs and Braves split the season series 3-3, which included makeup games from two rainouts and a memorable 14-10 Cubs win April 14 at Wrigley Field. That game featured freezing drizzle and wind, and the Cubs trailed 10-2 but scored nine runs in the eighth to pull off an epic comeback.

The Braves wondered why they even had played in such brutal conditions.

"We were just lucky no one got hurt," Freddie Freeman said. "You never know what can happen the next couple of days, how people are feeling. Win or lose, that was a tough one to play."

Rockies

It's still astounding to see the Rockies in contention with a 4.47 team ERA and fewer runs scored (705) than allowed (711).

They've lost seven of 12 heading into Wednesday night's game against the Dodgers, and slugger Trevor Story is out for a few days after suffering a right elbow injury Monday while making a diving stop at short.

Nolan Arenado, an MVP candidate only a couple of weeks ago, needs to pick it up to have a realistic shot at catching either Javier Baez or Christian Yelich. He enters Wednesday hitting .238 in September with three home runs while Baez and Yelich are taking it up a notch.

But even if the Dodgers win the West, the Rockies still have a chance in the wild-card race if they finish strong and the Cardinals fall apart. Both seem possible.

The Rockies end the season with a seven-game homestand against the Phillies and Nationals, two teams emailing it in after pretending to contend.

If the Rockies wind up playing the Cubs in the NLDS or NLCS, the teams appear to be evenly matched on paper — they split six games and each team scored 33 runs.

But they haven't played since the Rockies beat Yu Darvish on May 2 at Wrigley — which seems like a lifetime ago in Cubs years.

Cubs' odyssey ends

The Cubs were limited to one hit — an Addison Russell single to open the third. But left-hander Robbie Ray struck out the side and finished with eight strikeouts in six innings. Kris Bryant struck out four times.

To illustrate the length of the Cubs' odyssey, Murphy joined the Cubs in a trade from the Nationals on Aug. 22 — one day after it started.

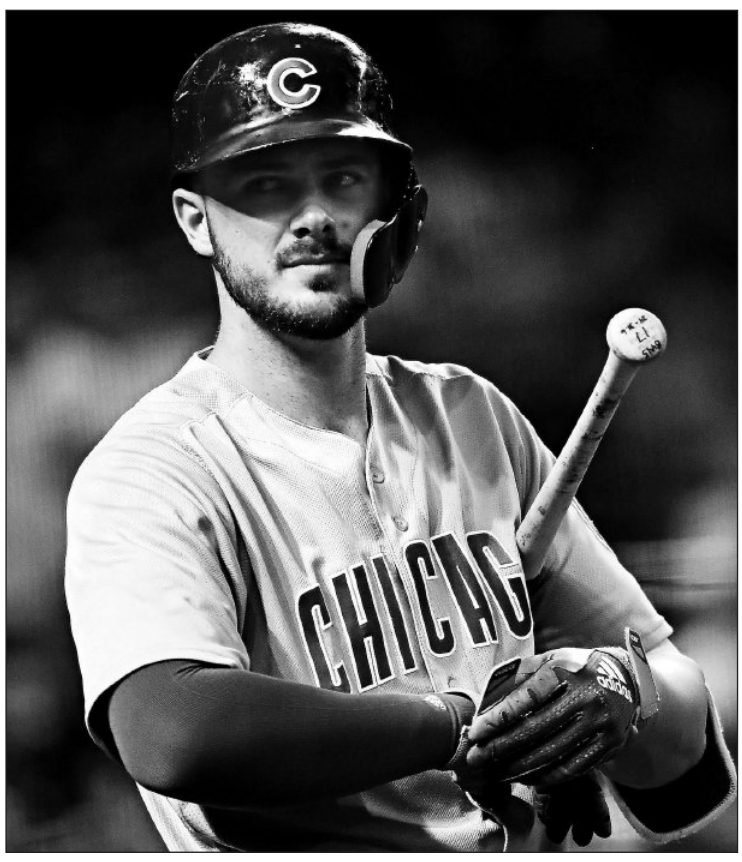
Despite playing 17 of 30 games of this journey on the road, the Cubs' pitching staff fought off fatigue to post a 3.17 ERA. The Cubs outscored their opponents by 23 runs despite scoring just 11 runs in their last six home games.

"I'm happy and proud with the way the guys have handled this," manager Joe Maddon said. "They're not going to know what to do with themselves (with a day off Thursday)."

But there still is unfinished business. Maddon doesn't expect anyone to appear at the clubhouse Thursday, but the Cubs know they can't let up with a division title zooming into focus with postseason home-field advantage at stake.

"Everything is trending in the right direction," Anthony Rizzo said. "But we have to go out, and Javy (Baez) needs to be Javy. Kris needs to be Kris. Guys need to be themselves and put really good at-bats together. The more we do that, the more success we'll have."

The starting pitchers' recent endurance allowed a well-worked bullpen to recover. That rest will be essential as the Cubs attempt to clinch the division title as soon as possible to rest their regular position players and evaluate their bullpen options for the playoffs.



Kris Bryant adjusts his batting gloves before he strikes out swinging in the first inning Wednesday night against the Diamondbacks.

"They have a lot of innings, a lot of outings, and a couple of guys really stepped up for us after the (All-Star) break," left-hander Mike Montgomery said. "Playoff baseball is a little different. Games are shorter and more about win at all costs as opposed to saving guys' arms. I think we have the guys to do it, and we're feeling pretty confident going into this last stretch.

"The last couple of days, everyone has been in a good mood. You get to a point where you don't even think about it. You're going to play today. Everyone is in a good place right now."

The Cubs' offense will be back to full strength this weekend against the White Sox if Kyle Schwarber and Tommy La Stella have recovered from their back injuries.

That option is essential, particularly because the Cubs have faced only 33 left-handed starters and may face only one (Carlos Rodon of the Sox) before their regular season-ending series against the Cardinals the following weekend.

"We've normally played well back home," Maddon said. "Three (games) at the White Sox, but we're still in our own beds. We're still in that same routine schedule. I want to believe it's going to help us even more. The fact we've been all over the map and done as well as we have, it makes sense to be encouraged by going home right now."

Medical staff, Strop won't push recovery plans

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

PHOENIX — Pedro Strop said the Cubs medical staff is not pushing his recovery in the wake of closer Brandon Morrow being ruled out for the season.

"It all depends the way I heal," Strop said Wednesday, six days after suffering a left hamstring strain that initially ruled him out for the regular season. "If I heal well, and if I'm able to do stuff, I'm not going to lie to them. I'm not going to try to be the hero. If I can, I can. If I can't, I can't. As of right now, we're working as hard as possible to get back.

"If I can get an outing before the playoffs, it should be perfect. I don't think I'm going to need an outing for the playoffs."

Strop has continued to play catch while performing jogging and agility drills. He reminded beat writers that he needed only three appearances — all in the final week of spring training — to be ready for the regular season after suffering a left calf injury and a bout of the flu.

"I'm trying to do everything pain-free, not trying to do too much," Strop said.

Strop expressed no regrets about hustling to first base to try to prevent a double play that resulted in his injury on Sept. 13 in the 10th inning of a win over the Nationals.

"Adrenaline and the passion of the game takes you to that level," Strop said. "I didn't want to give it up."

Live and learn: Manager Joe Maddon was philosophical about his decision to use Morrow for a third consecutive game June 2 — after which the discomfort in his right forearm first surfaced.

"It's hard to say," Maddon said, one day after Morrow was ruled out for the season. "The guy has had problems in the past. We had that (14-inning) game, and he was the last man standing. The work wasn't heavy before that. I just went along with it. It's hard to tell if that's the jumping off point."

Maddon pointed out Morrow threw only two pitches in his first of three consecutive appearances, but he acknowledged Morrow felt discomfort after that three-game stretch.

"I can't dispute that," Maddon said of Morrow, who threw 34 pitches in those three games. "In situations like that, it's hard to determine if that was the determining factor. It's unfortunate, if in fact, that was the moment it did happen. But that doesn't mean he can't clear himself of that in the future."

Webster added: Reliever Allen Webster, who pitched in 28 games for the Red Sox and Diamondbacks from 2013-15, was added to the roster.

Webster, 28, posted a 2.65 ERA and struck out 24 in 17 innings in the Arizona League and for Double-A Tennessee and Triple-A Iowa.

Maddon observed on videotape that Webster pitched differently than he had earlier in his career, becoming more reliant on a sharp slider and transitioning from starter to reliever.

"I went home for a couple of days, and they called and told me just in case to stay in shape," Webster said. "I came out here and threw at the minor-league complex last week."

Kipnis' walkoff slam ruins Sox gem

Bullpen melts down in 9th inning to spoil Covey's sharp outing

By Steve Herrick
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Jason Kipnis' grand slam with one out in the ninth gave the Indians a 4-1 win over the White Sox on Wednesday night.

Kipnis hit a 3-2 pitch from Ian Hamilton into the right-field seats for his 1,000th career hit and was doused with buckets of water by his teammates as he conducted a postgame television interview.

Sox starter Dylan Covey and two relievers had held the AL Central champions to two hits through eight innings before the comeback.

Josh Donaldson started the ninth with an infield hit. Pitcher Juan Minaya fielded the ball that rolled about 30 feet up the third-base line, but Donaldson beat the throw to first.

Melky Cabrera popped up a bunt attempt to Frare. Hamilton then replaced Frare but hit Yan Gomes with his first pitch to load the bases for Kipnis.

Oliver Perez (1-1) recorded the final out in the ninth for the Indians.

Daniel Palka hit his 26th home run in the sixth for the Sox, who fell to 0-8 at Progressive Field this season.

Kopech has surgery: Top pitching prospect Michael Kopech underwent Tommy John surgery on his right elbow that will cause him to miss the 2019 season.

Dr. Neal ElAttrache performed the surgery Tuesday in Los Angeles.

Kopech, 22, was 1-1 with a 5.02 ERA in four starts after the Sox called him up. He was placed on the 60-day disabled list Sept. 8 with a torn elbow ligament and is expected to be ready for 2020 spring training.

"Michael understands intellectually what it's going to require to come back," manager Rick Renteria said. "We're confident that he'll be able to do that and become the kind of pitcher we know he can be."

BRAVES 7, CARDINALS 3

Freeman won't allow Braves to slip

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Freddie Freeman spent the last four seasons playing for Braves teams that averaged 90 losses a year.

Now that they are back challenging for a division title, the All-Star first baseman knows his club can't afford any long losing streaks.

Freeman hit a two-run homer and drove in three runs, Touki Toussaint pitched into the sixth inning and the NL East-leading Braves snapped a four-game skid with a 7-3 victory over the Cardinals on Wednesday.

"It's been four days, so I thought this was a big win for our team," Freeman said. "I thought we played a quality baseball game today, and hopefully we can carry that into this Philly series."

The Braves began the day with a $5\frac{1}{2}$-game lead over Philadelphia and open a four-game home series against the Phillies on Thursday. The Braves need any combination of six victories or Phillies losses to clinch their first division title since 2013.

The Cardinals, who had won three straight, began the day leading the Rockies by $1\frac{1}{2}$ games for the second wild-card spot.

Closer A.J. Minter, working in a non-save situation in the ninth, walked two to load the bases, but he ended it by striking out Jose Martinez and getting Paul DeJong to pop up.

Freeman's 23rd homer, an opposite-field shot to left-center, put the Braves up 2-0 in the fourth against Jack Flaherty. Freeman went 3-for-3 and is hitting .405 over his last 11 games.

"He's getting the ball in the air, and it's carrying, and that's always a good thing," manager Brian Snitker said.

Toussaint (2-1), a rookie making his fourth career start, allowed five hits, two runs, three walks and struck out eight in $5\frac{2}{3}$ innings.

AROUND THE HORN

■ Rays: Tommy Pham homered twice while extending his on-base streak to 21 games, and the late-surging Rays completed a three-game sweep of the Rangers with a 9-3 victory. The Rays (85-66) have won 14 of their 17 games in September. ... Adrian Beltre hit his 13th homer of the season for the last-place Rangers. It was the 475th of his career to match Stan Musial and Willie Stargell for 30th all-time.

■ Yankees: Luke Voit hit two homers off David Price, Miguel Andujar put another one barely into the right-field seats and the Yankees stalled the Red Sox's division-clinching celebration again with a 10-1 victory. Luis Severino (18-8) pitched seven innings of one-run ball, and the Yankees had no need for All-Star closer Aroldis Chapman on the day they activated him from the disabled list. Mookie Betts had two strikeouts and no hits in his return to the Red Sox lineup. The Red Sox lead the division by $9\frac{1}{2}$ games and entered the three-game series needing one victory to lock up the division.

■ Phillies: Rhys Hoskins became the seventh-fastest player to hit 50 career home runs, and the Phillies kept pace in the NL East with a 4-0 victory over the Mets. Zach Eflin and five relievers combined on a six-hitter for the Phillies, who won consecutive series for the first time since July 25 and stayed $5\frac{1}{2}$ games behind the division-leading Braves, who beat the Cardinals 7-3. Seven of the Phillies' final 11 games are against the Braves, including a four-game series beginning Thursday in Atlanta.

■ Brewers: Gio Gonzalez pitched six innings on his 33rd birthday, and Jesus Aguilar hit a three-run homer in the Brewers' 7-0 victory over the Reds. The Brewers boosted their lead for the top NL wild card to three games.

■ Mets: RHP Zack Wheeler will be shut down for the rest of the season as a precaution, ending a career-best year in which he logged nearly 100 more innings than in 2017. Wheeler missed two full seasons after undergoing Tommy John surgery in 2015.

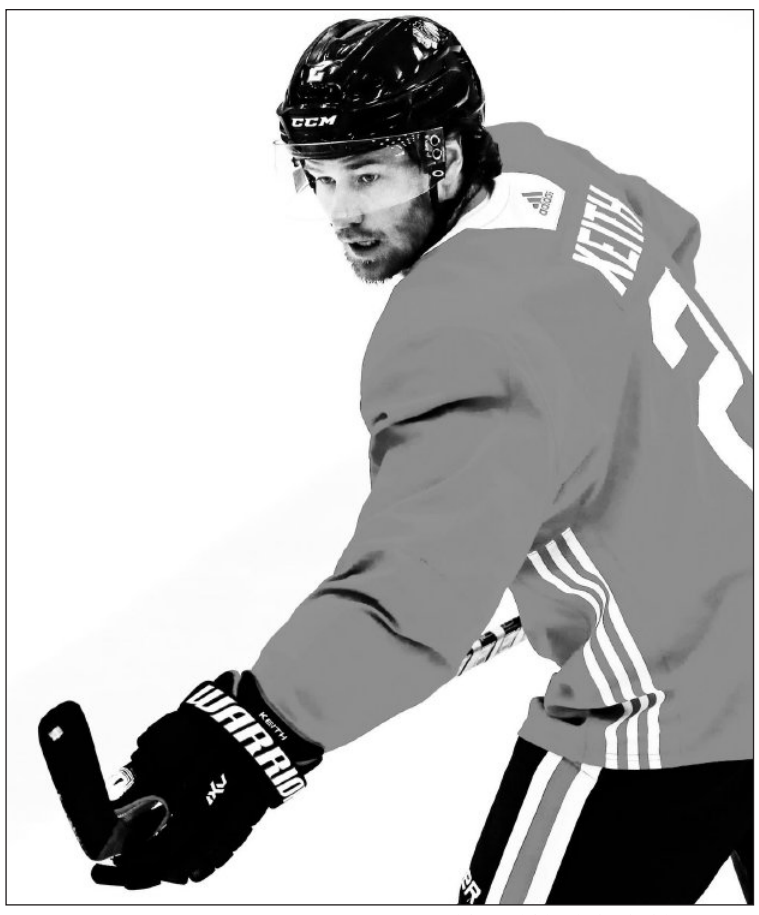
BLACKHAWKS NOTES

Keith sees no reason to cut his ice time

By Jimmy Greenfield
Chicago Tribune



JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

At 35, could defenseman Duncan Keith see a reduction in playing time this year? Blackhawks coach Joel Quenneville doesn't see it happening.

Try to take food away from a hungry animal and you'll get an idea of what it's like asking Duncan Keith to cut back on playing time.

"The last thing he's worried about is cutting back, and if you want to cut back he looks at you like, 'Why?' " Blackhawks coach Joel Quenneville said after training camp Wednesday at MB Ice Arena.

At 35, Keith is at an age when a reduction in playing time isn't unthinkable. In fact, his average of 23 minutes, 50 seconds of ice time last year was his lowest since the 2006-07 season. He has averaged 25:13 per game during his career.

Quenneville is cognizant of playing Keith too much, but he's just as aware the Hawks need him to play a lot of minutes this season especially with fellow defenseman Connor Murphy out eight to 12 weeks with a back injury.

"He wants to play like every single player that's in any position," Quenneville said. "They want to play and they want to play more, and in his situation, more might be a little too much. But our team this year, we're going to need him to play minutes and we're going to need him to play an important role as well."

Keith has long been known as a fitness fanatic whose remarkable conditioning has kept him a step ahead of opponents. By all accounts, the Hawks came into training camp in great shape after grueling workouts that began months ago for many players.

"Everybody seems like they're lean and in good shape and ready to go," Keith said. "I think that's just a sign of the times more than anything. I think every team is in good shape and there's no time to slack off in the offseason anymore. The league is so fast and it's just the way it is now. Hopefully, that translates on the ice."

Crawford shortens workout: Corey Crawford's 20-minute on-ice workout Wednesday morning seemed to end earlier than expected, but Quenneville said it was part of a plan and there hasn't been a setback in Crawford's recovery from a concussion.

"No (issues)," Quenneville said. "He's been on the ice six days in a row and (Thursday) he's not skating (either). But that's part of the schedule. He was in the gym as well. We still like the progress and the way he's going along here."

Quenneville wouldn't rule Crawford out for the Oct. 4 season opener at Ottawa, but with him still unable to participate in team practices it's looking more doubtful. Still, Quenneville said he has been happy with Crawford's progress.

"I think that every single day his movement, his conditioning, he's feeling good," Quenneville said. "And I think that's half the battle, you're getting conditioning out of it. Then all of a sudden you get in different positions and movements and then there's progress along the way with the velocity of shots and then all of a sudden there's traffic and there's bodies and so we're trying to add a little bit something and a different look every single day."

One-timers: Patrick Kane, Jonathan Toews, Alex DeBrincat and Chris Kunitz are among the veterans who will travel to Detroit and play in Thursday's preseason game against the Red Wings. Anton Forsberg and Kevin Lankinen will share goaltending duties. ... defenseman Jan Rutta was absent from the morning practice and afterward the Hawks said he was day to day with a groin injury. ... The Hawks reassigned goalie Alexis Gravel, forward Philipp Kurashev and defenseman Jake Ryczek to their junior teams while forward Shaw Boomhower, who was in camp on an amateur tryout contract was released.

Report: Butler wants to be dealt

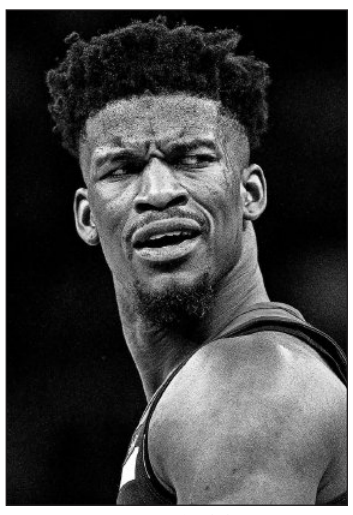
By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune



MINNEAPOLIS STAR TRIBUNE

Jimmy Butler reportedly has said he'd only sign an extension with the Nets, Knicks or Clippers.

Jimmy Butler never wanted to leave the Bulls. But he does want to leave the Timberwolves.

Despite his strong relationship with Timberwolves coach and President Tom Thibodeau, Butler has requested a trade from the franchise that gave up Zach LaVine, Kris Dunn and the rights to Lauri Markkanen to acquire him from the Bulls, the Athletic reported. With training camps set to start next week, Butler requested to be moved in a meeting with Thibodeau on Tuesday in Los Angeles.

Butler, who can become an unrestricted free agent next summer, has detailed three teams with which he'd be willing to sign an extension, the Athletic reported. Then again, in Kyrie Irving and Kawhi Leonard, there's recent precedent for All-Star players to be dealt to teams not on their wish lists.

Coincidentally, Butler's future has been tied to that of Irving's, a friend who also can become an unrestricted free agent next summer.

Butler loved playing in a major market while making his rise with the Bulls. ESPN.com reported that Butler's preferred teams are the Nets, Knicks and Clippers.

Thibodeau was expected to take the long view regarding Butler, hoping to appeal to his competitive side and get the Timberwolves off to a strong start to convince his All-Star that championship contention was realistic. At the very least, the market to trade Butler would be considerably wider at the February trade deadline — or even come December, when trade restrictions for recently signed free agents are lifted.

But there are no signs of Butler backing off his demand, which could make for an awkward, drama-filled start to training camp for the Timberwolves.

The Bulls know about Butler and drama. Despite Butler creating headlines for calling out coach Fred Hoiberg and joining Dwyane Wade in criticizing younger teammates, management's decision to trade him in June 2017 wasn't based on that.

More simply, he represented their biggest asset. And management and ownership, which enjoyed a close relationship with Butler, made the decision to undertake a full rebuild.

That Butler stood poised to qualify for a designated player exception factored in the decision as well. Butler, 29, would've been eligible for a maximum extension with the Bulls worth upward of $200 million.

So the Bulls pulled the trigger on the trade and remain high on Markkanen, LaVine and Dunn as building blocks. As for the Timberwolves' future, it just got a lot cloudier.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

BEARS NOTES

Nagy makes progress

By Rich Campbell
Chicago Tribune

Matt Nagy felt better about his play-calling rhythm in the Bears' 24-17 win over the Seahawks on Monday than he did in the season-opening loss to the Packers.

Nagy was self-critical after the Bears blew a 20-point second-half lead to the Packers. He had second-year quarterback Mitch Trubisky throw on a failed third-and-1 and third-and-2 in the fourth quarter. That game was only his seventh calling plays in the NFL and his first doing so while shouldering head coaching responsibilities.

"Everyone's talking about Mitch right now and him growing in the offense, and so there's also the other side of it with me being the play-caller," Nagy said.

"There might be some plays that were bread-and-butter in Kansas City that aren't bread-and-butter here, and that's OK. So I'm learning that. And once I start figuring that out, and then the quarterback starts figuring that out and the players around him, the wide receivers, and we start molding it together like a piece of clay, then it'll start coming to fruition."

Nagy said running back Jordan Howard would probably be better served by having more carries than the 14 he received against the Seahawks or the 15 he had against the Packers.

The Bears have trailed in a game this season for only the final 2 minutes, 13 seconds against the Packers. But additional game circumstances factor into that workload, such as the defensive matchup, Nagy said.

Turbo charged: Receiver Taylor Gabriel has played 90 percent of the Bears' snaps through two games, which far outpaces his previous single-season high of 58 percent with the Browns during his rookie season in 2014.

His 63 offensive snaps against the Seahawks were the second-highest single-game total of his career.

"He has never been in that No. 1, No. 2 role before as a wide receiver," Nagy said. "He's understanding now that there's a lot more plays and a lot more accountability. So that's important that he really focuses in on that and understands that it's important to be 100 percent every single play you're out there."

That accountability, Nagy said, includes conditioning. Gabriel is running around a lot more than he ever has in games. The Bears frequently send him in motion before the snap and use him in a variety of ways after it.

Gabriel had three carries for 17 yards against the Seahawks and four receptions for 30 yards. Nagy likes how his speed stretches the defense, which explains the carries on wide runs, often using jet-sweep action.

"Taylor has definitely opened things up for us," Trubisky said. "You never know what we're going to do, and it's all about keeping the defense off balance. But it's awesome to see ... how his speed really backs off the defense.

"Hopefully when guys start playing him tighter, then we go by them."

Injury report: The Bears had only one player on their injury report Wednesday: safety DeAndre Houston-Carson (right forearm) was limited during practice.

Right guard Kyle Long (right ankle) fully participated and said he came out of the Seahawks win feeling well.

Trevathan has big impact on defense being on the air. I'm sure he'll get it right, but I just had to make that clear."

What's clear to the Bears is Trevathan, who has 15 tackles in two games, is doing his part to fire up a defense that leads the NFL with 10 sacks and two pick-sixes and is tied for first with the Browns with five forced fumbles.

The seventh-year veteran contributed to two of those categories with one play late in the fourth quarter Monday. With the pocket collapsing, Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson scrambled forward and Trevathan charged him from behind. The ball popped out of Wilson's hands as Trevathan pulled him down and Bears outside linebacker Leonard Floyd recovered the fumble.

"(The key) was just the coverage aspect of it because he held it for a long time," Trevathan said. "The secondary was working their tail off. The D-line was working on the same page with the level rush. He just scrambled. I just remembered every play is a chance to get it back in our offense's hands so they can make the plays."

Trevathan, who earned his first Player of the Week honor, was quick Wednesday to talk about the entire defense's contributions. And when asked whether the award would be the Bears' last this year, he said, "Heck, no."

Much of the talk on TV and around Lake Forest the season's first two weeks rightly has been about the addition of Khalil Mack, and he, Aaron Lynch and Trevathan worked together for Trevathan's first sack late in the second quarter.

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

"When they're doubling somebody, we have players who can make plays and fill in."
— Linebacker Danny Trevathan

As Lynch came around the backside, Mack and Trevathan pushed their blockers toward Wilson, who fell for minus-6 yards. That type of play is exactly what the Bears hoped adding Mack would do for the defense.

"(Mack) frees me up," Trevathan said. "He's getting doubled every play. You have to keep an eye on him each play. He's an X-factor. It makes us open to making more plays and vice versa when they double team the other people. We're all working together. When they're doubling somebody, we have players who can make plays and fill in."

Mack said Trevathan was one of the first players to text him after the Bears acquired him Sept. 1. Trevathan played four seasons with the Broncos, including the 2015 Super Bowl championship season, before joining the Bears in 2016, and Mack said his experienced leadership shows.

Coach Matt Nagy echoed that sentiment Wednesday.

"He has come out with such high energy, enthusiasm," Nagy said. "He's flying around, shooting the gaps. He's just bringing that leadership that we expected from him when we got here in training camp. He has followed through with that. The guys feed off that. They feel that. They understand what it takes. It's not just every other play. It's every play, and that's what he has done."

The Bears defense will have another shot to make an impact Sunday against a Cardinals offense that has totaled a league-worst 175 yards and three points per game.

Trevathan will have another chance to make sure his name is heard. Witten won't be calling the game and Trevathan said he hasn't heard back yet from him about the tweet.

"I'm pretty sure I have one coming," he said with a smile. "But I'll be ready for whatever he says."

NFL NOTES

Bengals are running short in backfield

Associated Press

Giovani Bernard is the last veteran running back standing for the Bengals, and even he was limited in practice on Wednesday.

The Bengals (2-0) head to Carolina (1-1) with Bernard as their only experienced back who knows their system. No. 3 back Tra Carson was waived Wednesday after suffering a hamstring injury in practice.

The Bengals signed free agent running back Thomas Rawls, who was released by the Jets at the end of training camp.

The challenge is to keep it going with only one proven ball carrier.

"I feel like people are freaking out, but my goodness, it's football," Bernard said before his limited practice. "Guys are going to go down, and the next man has to step up and be prepared."

Joe Mixon hurt his right knee during a 34-23 win over the Ravens on Thursday night. He had a surgical procedure over the weekend to remove a piece of torn cartilage. He walked without a limp or a brace Wednesday, saying the knee felt good. He'll be sidelined for a few games as the knee recovers.

Mixon's injury opened the way for Carson to move into a bigger role behind Bernard, but he got hurt during practice Monday.

Mariota not 100 percent: Marcus Mariota wakes up every morning hoping his injured right hand feels better.

Unfortunately for the Titans quarterback, the weakness is still there, along with numbness and tingling in two fingers.

That's why Mariota was limited Wednesday at practice for the Titans, even as he cut up a glove to cover those two fingers hoping to give himself a better grip.

"I think it's close, but again we're going to just take it one day at a time," Mariota said.

Mariota hurt the elbow on his throwing arm in the season opener, a 27-20 loss in Miami. He was intercepted twice after the injury, and Mariota still finds himself dealing with the expected injury that affects both the velocity with which he throws and the spin he can put on the ball.

Extra points: A female Uber driver in Arizona is suing Buccaneers QB Jameis Winston, accusing him of sexual assault and seeking more than $75,000 in damages. The NFL in June suspended Winston for three games for violating the league's personal conduct policy, after an investigation into the incident. ... The Eagles signed WR Jordan Matthews and placed Mike Wallace on injured reserve. Matthews played his first three seasons with the Eagles before he was traded to the Bills in 2017.

IN BRIEF

AUTO RACING: Colton Herta and Patricio O'Ward will move up to the IndyCar Series in 2019 as drivers for Harding Steinbrenner Racing. Harding Racing just completed its first IndyCar season. Herta and O'Ward made their IndyCar debuts in last weekend's finale at Sonoma Raceway. Steinbrenner Racing had teamed with Andretti Autosport in Indy Lights competition with Herta as its driver. George Michael Steinbrenner IV owns Steinbrenner Racing.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL: Ohio State assistant coach Ryan Day earned an extra $487,000 for steering the Buckeyes during Urban Meyer's suspension. That's the lump-sum bonus the university will give Day for acting as head coach from Aug. 1 through Sunday. Meyer served a three-game suspension for mismanagement of former assistant Zach Smith. Day makes $1 million as co-offensive coordinator and quarterbacks coach. The No. 4 Buckeyes were 3-0 in the games Day coached.

NBA: Mavericks owner Mark Cuban will contribute $10 million to help further the cause of women in sports and raise awareness about domestic violence after an investigation substantiated numerous incidents of sexual harassment and improper workplace conduct within the franchise going back more than 20 years. The investigation faulted the Mavericks for allowing an environment where workplace misconduct was rampant.

NHL: The Sabres can prepare for the start of the season with their full complement of forwards after signing Sam Reinhart to a two-year, $7.3 million contract. Reinhart was a restricted free agent and the team's lone offseason holdout.

SOCCER: Cristiano Ronaldo was supposed to be the missing piece in Juventus' bid to win the Champions League. But his first match in the competition for his new club lasted less than half an hour as he was sent off after appearing to pull at an opponent's hair. Juventus still went on to win 2-0 at Valencia, thanks to two penalties. It was Ronaldo's first red card in 154 Champions League games, and the decision means he could miss a return to Old Trafford when Juventus plays Manchester United next month. ... Life in the Champions League without Ronaldo began for three-time defending champion Real Madrid with a comfortable 3-0 win over Roma. ... Ireland will join the other four British Isles nations in exploring bidding for the 2030 World Cup. The English Football Association already had announced plans to assess a bid with Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

TENNIS: Playing in her first tournament since winning the U.S. Open, third-seeded Naomi Osaka impressed her Japanese fans with a powerful 6-2, 6-1 win over Dominika Cibulkova to reach the quarterfinals of the Pan Pacific Open in Tokyo. Osaka was in control of the second-round match from the outset, breaking Cibulkova's serve in the first game at a sold-out Tachikawa Arena.

ALSO: Former UFC light heavyweight champion Jon Jones is eligible to return to competition by late October after completing a 15-month suspension for a doping violation. The U.S. Anti-Doping Agency announced the length of Jones' ban for his second violation of the UFC's anti-doping policy. He tested positive last summer, and his ban will conclude Oct. 28.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS

Profile in courage

Illinois football players inspired by 9-year-old who has cerebral palsy

By Shannon Ryan
Chicago Tribune

TUSCOLA, Ill. — As Katie Parker began filming her son while he prepared to take three hops on his right leg during a therapy session, he became frustrated when he stumbled after one or two hops. Then Colton Rahn recalled his inspiration.

"He said, 'I'm doing this for Mikey,' " said Jason Rahn, Colton's dad.

Hop. Hop. Hop. He did it.

Colton, a 9-year-old from Tuscola, has defied doctors' expectations since developing cerebral palsy shortly after his birth. He has spent most of his life working to improve use of his right arm and leg in physical and orthopedic therapy sessions.

But the disorder hasn't stopped him. It's hard to say it has even slowed him down much.

Colton grinned when asked about Illinois football players, especially his favorite player, receiver Mike Dudek.

Dudek's persistence to return to the field from knee injuries during his career motivates Colton.

"He's cool," Colton said sheepishly.

Really, Colton has served as an inspiration to Illinois fans and players who have connected with him over the last few years.

"Colton was an inspiration to me the moment I met him," Dudek said in a statement the Illinois athletic department provided. "Seeing what he goes through on a daily basis, always with a smile on his face, shows the type of warrior he is. We all love Colton and are thankful he is such a big fan of our team and program."

Colton has attended Illini fan days and a few games. He became the star of a biddy basketball game last year when Illini players surprised him by showing up in droves to cheer for him — and watched him make an unscripted game-winning basket, his first of the season.

His bedroom is decorated with autographed Illini gloves, jerseys and posters. It's not uncommon to see Illini players wearing #ColtonCourage bracelets.

This summer, Illinois players Reggie Corbin, Del'Shawn Phillips and Justice Williams volunteered to coach a flag football team that Colton's parents organized after finding no nearby teams for their son to safely enjoy his favorite sport. Corbin was impressed as Colton played center, able to use only his left hand in shotgun formation.

"He was so positive," said Corbin, a junior running back. "He didn't complain. He came to practice every single day and was the first person there. He was the most productive kid in the entire league. Out of 100-and-something snaps, there was only one bad snap and the ball was wet. He's a normal kid. He never expected special treatment. He just kept going."

Colton was stunned when his dad told him he had tickets to attend Friday night's Illinois-Penn State game at Memorial Stadium.

Jason Rahn said he hesitated to accept the offer from a fan because walking the ramps and scaling the steep stairs to the upper deck will be a struggle for Colton, who walks with stiffness in his right leg and can tire easily. Ticket prices prevent the family, saddled with stacks of medical bills, from attending most games.

But Colton is pumped to watch the Illini in person.

"To say he is excited is an understatement," his father tweeted. "Keeps asking if he is going to see his 'guys' after the game."

RAHN FAMILY

Colton Rahn played this summer in a flag football league organized by his parents.

'You've got to work for it'

Attending football games and playing sports weren't part of the future doctors initially described when Colton was diagnosed with cerebral palsy, a disorder of movement, muscle tone or posture caused by damage to the developing brain.

"At 14 months old, he didn't walk, didn't talk, he would only army-crawl on his elbows," Parker said. "If you had him standing, he could stay there holding something. They said this is what we should expect: 'He won't walk. He won't talk. He won't feed himself.' "

That answer was unacceptable.

"I said, 'What other options do we have?' " Parker said. "I don't believe in limiting people. I never have, and Colton's only made that belief stronger."

Progress would have been unlikely without the fierce persistence of his parents and Colton's own determination. Even to get Colton diagnosed took unwavering perseverance as doctors would shoo away Parker's concerns as just the pestering of an overly paranoid new mother.

But she had seen the signs since shortly after Colton's birth in January 2009.

After a pregnancy with no complications, Colton wouldn't latch to breastfeed the night after he was born, and nothing soothed him. As he grew, his parents noticed his refusal to use his right arm. By eight months, he rolled on his side to hold his bottle with his left foot and left hand.

"It was still: 'You're the crazy mom. It takes time,' " Parker said doctors told her. "I'm like: 'Listen to me. I'm the mom. I've never seen a kid do this. There's something not right here.' "

When Colton was 1, she took him to an orthopedic clinic hosted by the Elks where a doctor almost immediately told Parker he suspected Colton had cerebral palsy.

The family learned that Colton had a stroke around the time of his birth and was told "half his brain is dead" because of a blood clot on the left side. Appointments with neurologists and many tests followed. Parker battled red tape, filled out long insurance forms and dealt with dismissive medical professionals to enroll Colton in physical and occupational therapy.

Shortly before he turned 2, they learned he needed glasses. They also saw him take his first steps.

Colton's parents accepted the fate that life would sometimes be harder for their son. But they vowed early not to set low expectations for him.

They resist the urge to coddle him when he struggles, knowing he has the resolve and ability to achieve a task. It can be heartbreaking, but the bigger picture — adult independence, physical progression, raising a strong and resilient child — is always on their minds.

When he wanted a bottle on a table at a campground, Parker told her then-toddler he had to go grab it himself.

"You've got to work for it," she said. "He was screaming at me. And then he just walked straight across to get it, like multiple steps in a row. We all cried. Nobody else thought it would happen."

During the summers when Colton was 7 and 8, he was fitted with a constraint cast — one orange, one blue, of course — that eliminated use of his left hand, forcing him to work on developing his right.

Parker got the idea for the cast from reading about stroke patients.

Colton is naturally right-handed but relies on his left. Even when he celebrated after games, his parents and Illini coaches would remind him to high-five with his right.

He wears an eye patch for several hours — including during gym class, which bothers him — to strengthen his eye. He has experienced at least two seizures, including a more severe one in February that negated some of the progress he had made in therapy, and takes medication.

"I was always taught pain is weakness leaving your body," Parker said. "It's going to suck, but you're going to overcome it."

High toll, small victories

When Colton expressed interest in sports, his parents encouraged him. They created the 71-member flag football league this summer and refereed every game for Colton's team.

Parker said she has taught Colton not to believe in the word "can't."

Doctors have proposed various surgeries for his eye, arm and leg, but the family hopes other methods will work before putting him under anesthesia, which can pose greater risks for someone with Colton's medical issues. They'll learn early next month whether the eye patch has worked or if surgery is recommended.

The emotional and financial tolls are exhausting on his parents, who also have a 6-year-old son.

The therapy sessions and doctor appointments require trips in one direction to Carle Foundation Hospital in Urbana and in another to Sarah Bush Medical Center in Mattoon. Parker used up all of her vacation at previous jobs and frequently worked overtime to take Colton to appointments.

She said one boss told her she had to choose between motherhood and working, so she quit. She later took low-paying jobs such as working at a gas station but now works in the scheduling department at Carle. Jason Rahn works as a territory salesman, driving around central Illinois.

Medicine, eye procedures, therapy, gas to get to appointments, corrective shoes, adaptive jeans that button easily — it all adds up.

The couple said they had a car repossessed as they struggled to pay off medical bills. Parker said she has lost friends because of her lack of spare time. She and Rahn haven't had a date night in a year and a half.

"People don't understand what two working parents give up," Rahn said. "You literally give up your credit and vehicle to make sure they get what they need."

But there are moments they can claim as little victories, validating their belief in persistence.

When Colton climbs the jungle gym at the park, cautiously but with the same enthusiasm as any 9-year-old. When he runs on the soccer field. When he gets off snap after snap in flag football, refusing to take breaks.

And when he walks into Memorial Stadium on Friday night to see "his guys" play, that will be another victory for Colton.

" 'Colton Courage' — it's become this mantra," Rahn said. "He's living in this world that isn't made for him. He's dealing with it, having the courage to go through it."

"We've told him," Parker said, " 'Don't give up. The more bull-headed you are, the further you're going to make it.' "

"The disability," Rahn added, "doesn't define the child."

What is and isn't working for Irish

By LaMond Pope
Post-Tribune

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Quarterback Brandon Wimbush gave himself a D-plus after throwing three interceptions in Notre Dame's Week 2 win against Ball State.

The redshirt junior was more careful with the ball Saturday against Vanderbilt, finishing with zero turnovers in a 22-17 victory. And he was more cautious after the game when asked again to grade his performance.

"I learned from one of our own in our building who played here to not give grades as a quarterback, so I'm going to hold back on that," Wimbush said. "But I thought the offense performed how we wanted to perform."

All eyes are on Wimbush, who has 589 passing yards, one touchdown and four interceptions. He has completed 55.3 percent of his passes.

Overall, the offense is searching for consistency. Notre Dame is No. 99 nationally in total offense (365.3 yards per game) and tied for 103rd in scoring (23.3 points per game).

As the No. 8 Irish (3-0) prepare for Saturday's game at Wake Forest (2-1), here's a look at what has worked and what needs improvement on offense.

What's working

Opening act: Notre Dame began the Michigan and Ball State games with touchdowns and finished its first possession against Vanderbilt with a field goal.

A key is sustaining the production for four quarters.

"We just get into a good flow early on," coach Brian Kelly said. "What we probably need to do is be more repeaters of plays. In other words, go back to plays that have been successful and come back and repeat them."

Wimbush on the run: Running back Tony Jones Jr. had a career-high 118 rushing yards against Vanderbilt. Just as crucial, Wimbush was became a factor again in the running game, with 84 yards and one a touchdown.

After using his legs against Michigan, Wimbush didn't run much against Ball State. The Vanderbilt game showed again why he's needed in that department.

"It spread out the defense and kept them on their heels," Jones said.

The Irish had their best rushing game, gaining 245 yards.

Red-zone results: It hasn't always been conventional, but the Irish have converted eight of their 10 trips to the red zone, scoring six touchdowns. Last year, Notre Dame went 42-for-46 in red-zone opportunities, including 35 touchdowns.

This year's twist includes a package for backup quarterback Ian Book in the "blue zone" (closer to the 5-yard line).

It will be interesting to see how that substitution strategy continues to play out.

What needs work

Impact plays by impact players: The Irish have talent at wide receiver, including Miles Boykin and Chase Claypool. However, both finished with just one catch against Vanderbilt. Boykin has eight catches for 161 yards this season, and Claypool has seven catches for 100 yards. Neither has scored a touchdown.

"Nobody is discouraged, nobody is down on anybody," Kelly said. "We're confident that there's better football ahead. We're certainly not where we need to be."

Limiting pressure: After a bumpy day that included four sacks by Ball State, the offensive line got back on track against Vanderbilt by not allowing a sack. Kelly liked the group's physicality and communication Saturday.

"It was just five guys playing much better in unison," Kelly said.

Bumping up third-down rate: The Irish are converting 36.4 percent of third downs. That number must improve.

Kelly said ideally they want to be closer to 80 percent on third-and-short (1 to 3 yards) situations.

"If you're getting close to 50 percent (overall), you're probably having a good day," Kelly said.

By Sam Farmer
Los Angeles Times

The fact that it was Colin Kaepernick and the 49ers only made the situation worse.

Nate Boyer felt a connection with the quarterback. He even had an autographed football that Kaepernick had signed and written, of all things, "God Bless Our Troops." And the 49ers? That was Boyer's favorite team.

So when he heard that Kaepernick sat during "The Star-Spangled Banner" before an NFL exhibition game in 2016, it struck close to home.

"Initially, I was pretty disappointed," recalled Boyer, who was in Lubbock, Texas, working a fundraiser for veterans when he learned of the gesture.

Boyer had seen death and devastation in Africa, had multiple war deployments as a Green Beret and even had a period of homelessness.

Boyer had a perspective about sports, and understood more about the NFL than the average fan, having spent a few weeks in training camp with the Seahawks as a long snapper.

He wasn't mad, but he was entirely ready to dismiss Kaepernick as just another coddled and churlish star, acting up when his starting job was in jeopardy.

"I kind of just wrote him off initially, to be honest," said Boyer, 37, of Los Angeles. "I was around a bunch of veterans. One of the dudes I was with was a paraplegic from military service."

Never could Boyer have dreamed that his life and Kaepernick's would soon intersect, and that he would play a small but critical behind-the-scenes role in the most controversial sports protest in a generation. Kaepernick's act led to some type of protest on virtually every NFL team, divided fans, became a central talking point for President Donald Trump, and recently inspired a major advertisement campaign by Nike, coinciding with the 30th anniversary of the company's "Just Do It" slogan.

A year before Kaepernick's protest, Boyer had a bit of fleeting fame. He had served in the military, then cracked the University of Texas football roster as a 29-year-old freshman after teaching himself how to be a long snapper — hiking the ball back for punts and kicks — by watching YouTube videos.

Before joining the team, Boyer had never played organized football. Soon, he was leading the Longhorns onto the field carrying the American flag.

As if that weren't unlikely enough, he made it to NFL camp with the Seahawks as a 34-year-old rookie and wound up logging three plays in an exhibition game, even making a tackle, before he was released. His was a feel-good story, the kind that comes and goes around the league every summer. People got to know who he was, even though he had little chance of ever making a roster.

Seeing as he had a foot in both worlds, pro football and the military, several publications approached Boyer to write an editorial about Kaepernick. He declined, reasoning he wasn't going to change any minds. It wasn't until the Army Times came to him a second time that Boyer agreed, as long as he could write it as an open letter.

"I haven't really written much at all," said Boyer, who acknowledged he wasn't a very good student growing up in El Cerrito, Calif., just north of Berkeley. "But I definitely write from a really honest place. I don't try to find the perfect words for everything. I just say what's on my mind and my heart and let it flow."

In his letter, addressing Kaepernick directly, Boyer wrote about volunteering in the Darfur region of the Sudan, something he did after giving up on his dreams of being a firefighter and putting his acting aspirations on hold.

"Unfortunately, I also know that racism still exists in our country, as it does in every other country on this planet," Boyer wrote, "and I hate that I know that."

He discussed why he turned to the military after the Sudan, embracing the motto of the Army Special Forces: De oppresso liber, Latin for "to free the oppressed."

MICHAEL ZAGARIS/GETTY

Ex-Green Beret Nate Boyer stands as Eric Reid and Colin Kaepernick of the 49ers kneel during the national anthem in San Diego on Sept. 1, 2016.

"I'm not judging you for standing up for what you believe in," Boyer wrote. "It's your inalienable right. What you are doing takes a lot of courage, and I'd be lying if I said I knew what it was like to walk around in your shoes. I've never had to deal with prejudice because of the color of my skin, and for me to say I can relate to what you've gone through is as ignorant as someone who's never been in a combat zone telling me they understand what it's like to go to war."

He closed by promising to keep listening, with an open mind, about the protests.

"I look forward to the day you're once again inspired to stand during our national anthem," he wrote. "I'll be standing right there next to you. Keep on trying . De Oppresso Liber."

The letter went viral, and Boyer fielded dozens of radio and TV interview requests. He was at NFL Network in Culver City when he received a phone call from Kaepernick's publicist saying the player wanted to meet him before the 49ers played in San Diego the next night.

Boyer agreed, and the following day the quarterback sent an Uber that took him on a three-hour ride through heavy traffic to the team's hotel. Kaepernick was waiting in the lobby, as was teammate Eric Reid, who would join the protest.

"We talked about where we were both coming from," Boyer said. "I understood the message behind it at that point. But it's hard for a lot of people to get past the gesture because of when it's happening. It's during the anthem, and that's a sacred time for a lot of people."

He explained to Kaepernick that veterans might feel "you don't have their perspective and their understanding, just like they don't have yours."

Boyer asked the quarterback what his goals were, what the change he sought might look like.

"He couldn't really articulate it at that point, but it was very early on in the process," Boyer recalled. "I said, 'Well, if you're not going to stand, first of all, I think sitting on the bench isolated from your team is not very inspiring. It looks like you're sitting it out or you don't care."

While making it clear he would not stand, Kaepernick asked Boyer if there was another way he could protest. Kneel rather than sit, he was told, that way you can be alongside your teammates.

That next game, Kaepernick knelt during the anthem, and Boyer, hand over his heart, stood alongside him on the sideline in street clothes.

"I was showing that I support his right to do that, I support the message behind what he's demonstrating for," Boyer said. "But I'm also standing with pride because I feel differently in a lot of ways too. But there's nothing wrong with feeling differently and believing different things. We can still work together to make this place better."

Boyer found he could relate to Kaepernick, because he had spent plenty of his own time on a road less traveled. Instead of heading for college after high school as his sister and brother did, he spent a year working on a fishing boat in San Diego. When he decided to try acting, he moved to Los Angeles and lived out of his 1993 Honda Civic hatchback.

"I'm about 5-11," he said, "but it was definitely tight quarters, for sure."

He kept a sleeping bag in his car, and sometimes would find a park in Beverly Hills to spend the night, somewhere that looked safe.

"I guarantee that my parents were plenty worried about me," said Boyer, whose mother earned a doctorate degree from the University of California, Berkeley in civil/environmental engineering, and whose father is the longtime track veterinarian at Golden Gate Fields.

Boyer said he has taken issue with some of Kaepernick's decisions, among them wearing socks with cartoon pigs dressed as police officers, and a T-shirt featuring late Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

The quarterback opted out of his contract with the 49ers after the 2016 season and has not signed with another team.

Kaepernick is suing the league, alleging he has been blackballed because of his protests.

"I don't agree with the fact that he said he wouldn't vote because he doesn't want to vote for an oppressive system like ours," said Boyer, who said he hasn't talked to Kaepernick in more than a year. "I thought that was incorrect. There's a lot of people of all colors who shed a lot of blood, and there were people in the civil rights movement who did a lot to secure those rights."

Boyer, who shares a Studio City apartment with two friends, is involved with multiple charitable causes, among them MVP: Merging Vets and Players and, along with Eagles defensive end Chris Long, Waterboys, aimed at providing clean well water to East African communities. Boyer is also working in the film industry, with a special emphasis on telling the stories of veterans.

Two years after the protests began, he is frustrated because he feels their message and intent have been misinterpreted or intentionally hijacked.

From liberals: " 'Hey, don't you know it was a Green Beret who told Colin to protest in the first place, told him to take a knee?' " Boyer lamented: "And I'm like, 'I didn't tell him to do anything. I definitely didn't tell him to protest. What I did was meet with him, make suggestions on different ways to do it after he was already protesting. And worked with him to kind of come to a middle ground."

And from conservatives: "(They) put all veterans in this box and say, 'You're offending every veteran.' That's also ridiculous. Or, 'He's protesting the anthem.' He's not protesting the national anthem. It has become an anthem debate, but that's not what the protest is about. It's about racial inequality, police brutality."

Whether people agree or disagree, Boyer wishes the message hadn't been intercepted.

"It's not fair to Colin, it's not fair to me, and it's not fair to the cause," he said. "And it's not good for our country."

By Marc Morehouse
Cedar Rapids Gazette

MATTHEW PUTNEY/AP

Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz, a longtime offensive line guru, has some definite thoughts on the way cut blocks currently are officiated in the Big Ten.

IOWA CITY, Iowa — The poor offensive lineman has his back to the play. He has no idea where the running back is in relation to the tackle box.

The poor offensive lineman is just doing his job, trying to survive and thrive in the pit. Hey, there's some legs. Throw a cut block. You know, like they're coached to do. The way Iowa coach Kirk Ferentz has coached offensive line play his entire adult life.

He's 63 and has spent 29 of that involved in coaching Iowa offensive lines in some way.

So, as it often happens in football, the interpretations become skewed in games and you have a sitting 20-year head coach all but say this "tackle box" rule is impossible to officiate. You have silent officiating crews and a silent Big Ten conference on the topic.

The tackle box is one element. Linemen with initial position completely inside the tackle box — inside the alignment of the offensive tackles — may legally block below the waist inside the tackle box until the ball leaves the tackle box.

All other offensive players are allowed to block below the waist only if the force of the initial contact is directed from the front. "Directed from the front" is defined as within the clock face region between "10 o'clock and 2 o'clock" forward of the area of concentration of the player being blocked.

This rule feels like it's in to curb blind cut blocks and save some ACLs.

Last week, Iowa guard Levi Paulsen didn't square up and was hit with a 15-yard penalty.

"The cut blocking rules are a very, very fine line," Paulsen said. "Even during the game, I walked up to that ref and said, 'Sir, what criteria did I miss on that cut block?' His explanation was that I wasn't 100 percent square with him when I went to initiate my cut block. He said his body was turned. It's such a fine line."

Ferentz has more than registered his disagreement with the rule, and it's nothing personal. He just questions tracking the running back through the tackle box and then throwing a flag. On the other end of that, the "squaring up" thing has bitten Iowa in the past.

Ferentz called a moratorium on these questions Tuesday, so here's your last take from him on it — until the next one — for 2018.

If this sounds like the lost scene where Butch and Sundance actually surrender to the Bolivian army, well, it is a little bit of admitting that it's time to change the thinking to fit the rule.

"Here's where I'm at: We can't cut on the second level, because they have a rule they can't officiate," Ferentz said Tuesday. "I'm not upset with the officials on the field. To officiate it properly, it ought to be reviewable, like targeting. We got that cleaned up and it doesn't seem to be a huge issue anymore, but who wants to review a cut block? That's ridiculous. It could be fixed so easily. One stroke of the pen.

"But it's not a tempo rule, it's not an RPO rule, so it's not very fashionable and no one really cares. It's really frustrating. We're screwing up a good game here a little bit."

In his weekly news conference after the Northern Illinois game, when Iowa was hit with a couple of these penalties, Ferentz got specific with his complaints.

"To put it in simplistic terms, there's a certain area within the center box where you play football, whether you're an offensive guy or defensive guy, and defensive guys are supposed to know how to use their hands to play cut blocks," Ferentz said. "They used to teach that back when defense was really important. But now the way they've got this rule structured, defensive guys can just turn and run, and it's ridiculous, and my stance is there's a certain area where they've got to play defense, and if they can't, they should be penalized by getting blocked.

"The way the rule reads right now — I'm glad you asked. I'll take this and run with it. The rule is stated, OK, the way I coached it for however many years I was a line coach, the rule is just the opposite. So if a linebacker turns and runs, OK, you can't cut him. Well, I coached for a long time. If a guy runs, cut him because he can't play a cut block, right? And when you're in the middle you're supposed to play defense.

"It's a dumb rule, and the bottom line is this: The rule stinks, but the worst part of it is, OK, it really makes it a hard job for the guys that officiate. And I'm not mad at the center judge the other day. I understand what he was saying, and there's another variable tied into it; is the ball in the box or out of the box when the cut — the ball was in the box, OK, for the record, but the problem is, we put so much on the officials, these guys are humans, and it's just unreasonable.

"You have rules that are really tough to enforce, and then dumb things happen on the field. It's just — it's really frustrating. But it's bureaucracy at its best, so I guess I'll have to live with it, huh? We're still going to coach it the same way. It's ridiculous."

In 2016 at Rutgers, the Hawkeyes squeaked out a 14-7 win. During that game, offensive tackle Ike Boettger was called for an illegal block below the waist. That wiped out a 75-yard touchdown run by running back LeShun Daniels and kept the game way too interesting for way too long.

That highlighted this portion of the rule "may not block an opponent below the waist in a direction toward the original position of the ball unless the ball carrier has clearly crossed the line of scrimmage."

Now, it's where is the running back? Was it a square-up block? Oh, and the reason blocking below the waist is an emphasis this season.

"Another significant change has to do with low blocks. You've seen us change the rules on the low blocks the last 10 years," Big Ten director of officials Bill Carollo said. "Maybe eight out of the last 10 years we've tweaked the low-blocking rule and continue to add and change the rule that low blocking is illegal with certain exceptions.

"One exception rule this year if a player on offense is downfield at five yards or more, it is illegal to block low. So low blocks downfield now are just like punts, kickoffs change of possessions; they cannot block low five yards beyond the line of scrimmage."

You can see where that might be information overload for a coach and certainly for a player.

With 20 years as a head coach in the Big Ten, it's pretty apparent what Kirk Ferentz's approach to this is.

Block and let them sort it out.

"I think coach Ferentz is going to say, 'Go cut block,' " Paulsen said. "On the backside of a lot of our plays, we're cut blocking. So, I don't think coach rears back on it at all. We're the same offense we've been all season. If we take a cut block here and there, you saw it last week. We went back 15 yards and went and scored. I don't think he's going to hold back at all."

Has it made Iowa's linemen tentative?

"I wouldn't say tentative, I'd say more aware," Paulsen said. "In my first two years, it was throw a cut block no matter what. If you're in front of the guy or behind him, you throw a cut block. Odds are you're going to get there or get a piece of them. Now, it's made us more aware of our fundamentals."

Paulsen said Iowa didn't practice cut blocking a lot when offensive coordinator Brian Ferentz was offensive line coach (2012-16). Offensive line coach Tim Polasek brought big, orange bouncy balls into practice in 2017 and practiced cut blocks. Paulsen said it's given them a keener eye on the principles of cut blocking and how it's supposed to work.

This seems like a lot about what used to be simple, doesn't it?

Coaches don't want their players moving tentatively. It's pretty hard to block and wonder if what you're doing is wrong.

"We don't want to shy away from it, obviously he made the call," center Keegan Render said. "Just keep being aggressive and keep going out and doing what you're doing.

"I might think it's legal, but it's not up to us. You have to play through it."

When Paulsen jogged over to the sidelines last Saturday night, after having the 15-yard illegal block penalty hung on him, he didn't get the requisite earful from his head coach.

"He said, 'Hey, we're just going to keep playing our football," Paulsen said.

RELENTLESS CURIOSITY

David Hockney touts cigarette health benefits, his groundbreaking new gallery show

By Steve Johnson | Chicago Tribune

David Hockney, who was decidedly not raised on the internet, made sure to hit the "I Was Raised on the Internet" exhibition at the Museum of Contemporary Art when he was in Chicago last week opening a gallery show.

But although the 81-year-old British modern master has been a relentless explorer of new image-making technologies, including multi-camera video work and 3-D photographic constructions for "Time and More, Space and More ..." at Gray Warehouse, it was not "Internet's" assemblage of web-related artmaking that most stuck with him.

"I'll tell you what," he said during a wide-ranging interview hours before the opening party for his exhibition, "the best thing in the Museum of Contemporary Art was the little Calder cat," the 1966 sculpture Cat Mobile on view in the show "Heaven and Earth: Alexander Calder and Jeff Koons."

"It was marvelous, that cat."

And while he was here for the opening of his first Chicago gallery show since 2014, Hockney also checked out the Art Institute for some more retrospective art viewing. He spent six hours with curators going through the collection of drawings, including works by Rembrandt, Picasso and Degas, said Paul Gray, a partner in Richard Gray Gallery, which has long represented Hockney in Chicago.

In conversation the artist took time to puckishly tout the health benefits of the cigarettes he continues to smoke, to comment on his emergence as a style icon, to question the value of virtual reality and 3-D films, and to praise Chicago artist Kerry James Marshall.

Most of it was done with a twinkle in his eye and his voice. "I have a sense of humor," he said. "Laughter is the best medicine. You know why laughter is the best medicine? I was told this. Because when you're laughing, you have the least fear in your body. That makes sense to me."

It was all evidence of the relentless curiosity of Hockney, who arose out of the Pop Art movement in the 1960s without being entirely of the movement. In addition to working in, as the artist put it, "any technology that's about picture making," including Polaroid collages early on and iPads more

Michael Moore visits Flint, Mich., in the film "Fahrenheit 11/9."

Michael Moore's new presidential documentary

By Helena Andrews-Dyer
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - Michael Moore is 45 minutes late and somehow right on time. At the D.C. screening of "Fahrenheit 11/9," his new documentary about President Donald Trump (but not all about Trump), the 64-year-old filmmaker got to his own red carpet just before the lights went down.

He's ambling past the theater when one of the movie's producers waves him inside, "Michael! Michael!" He stops to take a photo of the marquee with his name on it as if it's his first time at-bat and heads inside to promote the film hitting the big screen Friday. Before the documentarian's lingering fans crowded him for selfies, we managed to get a few questions in about the movie Moore called "a molotov cocktail into the system."

Q: We have to start with the name. "Fahrenheit 11/9" is a mirror image of your most commercially successful film, "Fahrenheit 9/11." Was the symmetry poetic?

A: It was just a coincidence that he was announced as president at 2:29 in the morning on 11/9/16, and right away it sort of hit me that as bad as we thought

Tom Petty performs during halftime at Super Bowl XLII. "Tom Petty — An American Treasure" is scheduled for release Sept. 28.

Adria Petty opens her laptop and shares with a visitor home movie footage that her father shot in 1980.

Adria, 44, discovered the footage — which she edited into a new video for the previously unreleased song "Keep A Little Soul" — while going through her dad's effects after his death last year at age 66. The song makes an appearance on a forthcoming four-disc box set mining her dad's considerable trove of archival recordings, photos and memorabilia that have gone into "Tom Petty — An American Treasure," scheduled for release Sept. 28.

In the the nearly four-decade-old Super 8 mm film, Petty, then 28 and basking in the acclaim from his breakthrough third album "Damn the Torpedoes," is clearly in great spirits as he revels in the rough-and-tumble glories of life on the road, something he'd only dreamed of as a scrawny kid in Gainesville, Fla. He's clowning around some inglorious hotel room, getting shots of himself in the bathroom mirror, then turning the camera on his Heartbreakers bandmates goofing off on a hotel balcony.

Adria then makes a confession.

The abruptness of his death shocked millions of music fans, but that says nothing of the seismic quake it represented for his family, friends and bandmates.

"When my dad died, and everybody was in this really hopeless place, I listened to Tom Petty Radio a lot, which I didn't do before," she said, referring to the channel on SiriusXM satellite radio that premiered in 2015 and features a 24/7 playlist packed with the music of Petty, the Heartbreakers, the Traveling Wilburys rock superstar juggernaut and other Petty-adjacent rock, folk and blues records the

Nanny becomes canine-care provider

Dear Amy: I'm a nanny, and the family I work for has a very sweet lap dog they inherited from their grandma, who recently passed away.

I think sentiment and grief led them to keep a dog very poorly suited to their lifestyle.

They spend a lot of time out of the house and the dog has to be crated while they are gone, especially as the house is being redone and the workers aren't careful about keeping him from going into the street.

The family is very loving and treat the dog well, but a problem has arisen: He always behaves better when I'm around. He doesn't bark, he falls asleep at my feet, and he doesn't try to chase cars when we go on a walk.

They are working to improve their relationship with the dog, but I've been put in an awkward place. They have started joking that I should take the dog. All of this has made me feel guilty when I leave at the end of the day!

I don't think it's my place to tell them how to take better care of this dog. This isn't my dog and the family is working through their difficult adjustments!

How do I ease the guilt and let go? I definitely don't want a dog.

— Nanny in Need

Dear Nanny: This family has acquired a new member, and this increases your workload.

You might be able to negotiate a raise based on this extra work. "Monetizing" this sweet pup will remind your employers that you are a professional caregiver.

If they are on vacation, for instance, you should agree to canine-care only if they are willing to pay you a fair wage for dog-sitting. Don't let them pressure you to take the dog home with you — even for a limited time — because then, I assure you, you will end up with him.

It sounds as if you have the golden touch with children and canines — and this is no surprise because caring for children and dogs requires a similar skill set: patience, gentleness, and firm and loving course corrections.

Your clients are acknowledging your skill with this dog when they joke that you should take him.

But you should — and you must — be as firm and clear with them as you would be if they attempted to foist a child upon you.

The next time they joke or hint about this, you should say, "Well, there is no way I will take the dog, but I have gotten to know him and if you want I'd be happy to show you some of the things I've learned."

Dear Amy: My family was invited to my cousin's wedding. We replied that we would all be there. My cousin sent me a message that they received our response and our daughter is not allowed.

My wife and I are extremely upset! Our daughter is a toddler, but well-behaved. My instinct is to politely respond that we will no longer be attending the wedding. There will be several family members coming from out of town whom we barely see and would have liked the opportunity for them to see our daughter.

They are certainly free to invite whomever they want to their wedding, but to me the whole point is to gather family and friends to celebrate the union of two people.

What should I do? I feel like I will still be angry with him come the day of the wedding because my daughter is part of my family and should be there.

— Upset Cousin

Dear Upset: You don't get to decide what the point of your cousin's wedding is. A wedding is a sacred ceremony and — in this case — also a party for grown-ups.

I infer that this wedding is being held near where you live, which would make it easier for you to secure child care, as well as welcome out-of-town family members to your home for an introduction to your toddler.

If you can't understand this and can't manage to rein in your anger, then it sounds as if your family should stay home.

Dear Amy: The question from "Inconsolable" made me see red. This woman was upset that her extramarital affair had ended.

I'm glad you called her out as the selfish person she is!

— Relieved

Dear Relieved: This was the rare question that elicited absolutely no sympathy from me.

recently, he's written a book, 2001's "Secret Knowledge: Rediscovering the Lost Techniques of the Old Masters," suggesting that those painters used lens techniques to cast their subjects' images onto canvas, resulting in breakthrough realism.

"That's almost a lifetime of dedication to thinking about seeing," Gray pointed out.

But all that poking around has also left a body of work that some people, the artist said in an interview with London's Tate Modern, before his recent major retrospective there, see as "bitty," as in bits of this, bits of that. He disagrees.

"Well lots of people used to say, 'Oh, he's changed again.' But I always thought, 'Well, I did this now because I've done that.' I was always finding out things," he said in Chicago.

He brought up the oversized "A Bigger Book," a $2,500 limited-edition retrospective volume published in 2016 by the art house Taschen: "That big book, the great big Taschen book, that made me look back at my work. And I haven't really looked back. I say, I live in the now. But when we did this book, I realized the book would be marvelous for my work, because every page could be very different. ... I know in the end there will be a David Hockney style because in the end, that's all it can be."

The Chicago show, free and open to the public during Gray Warehouse hours, is not the Hockney you might think you know, the paintings of swimming pool scenes in Los Angeles executed decades ago, moist and sunny and fraught with emotional undercurrents.

"It's so funny that artists become known for something, And even if it's a relatively modest contribution to their overall career, it becomes ubiquitous," Gray said. "David really hasn't made that many paintings of swimming pools. ... And yet that's what he's so well known for."

Gray said that in response to a question about whether he wouldn't rather have for his gallery a new suite of pool paintings than these more experimental works.

"He's the epitome of curiosity, which I consider to be one of the strongest markers of intellect," the art dealer said. "Of course, commercially, one likes to have things that one can sell. But we've been in business more than 50 years. And you get a level of confidence that things are going to be fine commercially, which allows you to do whatever you want to do. And I think that's analogous to the way it is with great artists.

"It's not that they ever become complacent, but they begin to develop a level of confidence in their own ability that allows them to break out of a mold and not make more of the same."

The work on display in Chicago is mostly massively scaled, and there is only a small selection of paintings, small, affecting, vibrant self-portraits. Behind them, the video installation "The Four Seasons, Moldgate Woods, 2010-2011" occupies four walls, an array of nine screens per wall, the images on each wall chronicling a deliberate ride down the same bucolic road in England in one of the four seasons.

"We made them because I thought, well, I know video isn't painting," Hockney said. "Video brings its time to you. Whereas you bring your time to painting. That can never ever change."

And beyond that is a gallery filled with what Hockney and Gray bill as "photographic drawings," works that play with concepts of perspective and point of view in ways the artist sees as groundbreaking or, as he put it, "rather exciting." It's a technique you have to see to begin to grasp, and even then it's a shade disorienting.

"You're used to the limitations of photography," said Gray, "and he's pushing that to the sidelines and saying, 'Maybe it's not so limiting.' "

Hockney arose out of the Pop Art movement in the 1960s without being entirely of the movement.

For the large-scale 2018 work "Pictures at an Exhibition," on the wall behind him as he sat and talked, the artist said he took 3-D photographs of people in or near folding chairs set up in front of a suite of his paintings, then hand placed them into the bigger image.

"When you photograph something in three dimensions, that's not a point of view because it's round," he said. "It only becomes a point of view when I place them in there. And I place every figure carefully. Each one was photographed separately. The faces are just a little bit blurred because faces move a little bit."

"I think this is the future of photography because it's less flat, isn't it?" he added.

The English video artist Tacita Dean, in the foreword to the Gray exhibition catalog, elaborates:

"The recent series, of what David calls photographic drawings, radicalizes the picture plane in a way that is utterly new, especially within the medium most associated with verisimilitude that is photography," she writes. "Something extraordinary has happened. David appears to have found space within a singular two-dimensional image where everyone else has stopped looking. Of the studio, and born out of the studio, these new works break painting and photography free ..."

Even if they are confounding to your sense of visual tradition, there is no denying that these images draw you in, make your eyes dance around, seeking information, or maybe a moment of familiarity. They are worth making the effort to visit.

On seeing the Kerry James Marshall retrospective "Mastry," at MOCA Los Angeles: "That was really good. That pulls you in. His work pulls you in. That was the best show I've seen at MOCA in Los Angeles."

On cigarettes and longevity, artistic and otherwise: "I'm still working. I'm producing probably more than I've ever done now. And I'm still excited by it. I think that's what keeps me going, having something to do. That's what kept Picasso going. Even though I smoke. Picasso smoked, I've pointed out. He died at 92. Monet smoked. He died at 86. Matisse smoked. Renoir. Loads of people smoke. I don't know what they're going on about."

On the limits of virtual reality: "Virtual reality, I'm not really that impressed with. I think it will be good for pornography, where you need volume for (breasts) and (buttocks) and that. But you're not there, really. You have no hands, really."

On the possible end of abstraction: "Abstraction I think was necessary in Europe. But it wasn't necessary in China or Japan. Because they always understood what abstraction was. I think abstraction in Europe was probably because of the photograph. They saw what would happen to shadows and things, and I think that's why abstraction was needed in Europe. But it now might be over. I don't know. It might be. Certainly everything's an abstraction on a flat surface, really, even the photograph."

On his emergence as a style icon: "I always was a bit of a dandy. My father was a bit of a dandy. He always had his suits made, but he never had any money. The last time I asked for money from my parents, I got a postal order for half a crown, which was about 50 cents. I thought, 'Well, you're on your own, David.' I now realize that was a great advantage for me. Because I know people who've been waiting for money from their parents, and they're wasting their lives, aren't they?"

On ego: "I have an artist's vanity. I want my work to be seen, that's all. I don't have to be seen. That's the vanity of an artist. They all want their work to be seen, don't they? I mean, you wouldn't do it if you didn't."

BOOK REVIEW

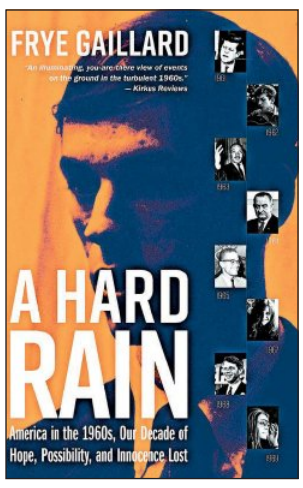
By Timothy J. McNulty
Chicago Tribune



'A Hard Rain'

By Frye Gaillard, NewSouth, 687 pages, $35

Anger and resentment are evident throughout the land, but other than a few large, peaceful marches and numerous lawsuits, the country isn't torn — at least not yet — by the kind of protests that rocked the United States in the 1960s, the kind that ended with police and the National Guard deploying billy clubs and tear gas against civil rights marchers, anti-war college students and their sympathizers.

In "A Hard Rain," the estimable Southern journalist Frye Gaillard aims to capture a time when the nation was absorbed with racial violence, sweeping social change, a devastating war, assassinations and a cultural shift that is still playing out 50 years later. The title is from Bob Dylan's iconic song, "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall," and his broad subtitle, "America in the 1960s, Our Decade of Hope, Possibility, and Innocence Lost," is the umbrella for his masterful account of hundreds of stories, reflections and reports from a decade saturated with transformational events.

For older readers, Gaillard provides flashbacks of times pitting rich against poor, hawks versus doves, hippies against squares. For younger readers, it is a compendium of events — the Cuban Missile Crisis, the Vietnam War — that may spark discussion between generations: What did you do in Vietnam, Grandpa?

The assassination of John F. Kennedy in 1963 was as shocking and seminal as the attack on Pearl Harbor was for an earlier generation and 9/11 for the current generation. The murders of Kennedy's brother Robert and of Martin Luther King Jr. in 1968 were numbing events that made many Americans question what their country had become.

However, there was other cause for inspiration: the counterculture gathering at Woodstock along with the moon landing in 1969; the warm, calming rituals of Mister Rogers and the Trappist monk Thomas Merton, who drew connections between Eastern and Western religious thought. Gaillard walks readers through that pockmarked landscape of trauma and excitement, skillfully laying each year over subsequent years.

FRYE GAILLARD COLLECTION 1968
Frye Gaillard's meeting with Robert F. Kennedy at Vanderbilt University was a formative life experience.

Gaillard in 2018

To attempt a history spanning territory that wide is daunting, and in his generous acknowledgment section, Gaillard declares: "Because this is a work of synthesis, the contributions of other authors, journalists, historians and interview subjects are crucially important." Indeed, he mentions David Halberstam's "The Fifties" as an inspiration. When I picked up Halberstam many years ago, I questioned the hubris of trying to profile and explain such a complex period.

Gaillard, a writer-in-residence at the University of South Alabama who has written more than 25 books, has taken a different tack, casting a wide net over each year and using chunks of narratives by other writers and participants along with his own reporting experience. For instance, he begins the book on Feb. 1, 1960, at the Woolworth's in downtown Greensboro, N.C., describing the decision of four black college students to try to order from a whites-only lunch counter, leading to a sit-in. That daring act led to similar protests all across the South.

Gaillard's personal recollections and interviews suffuse this history, and many anecdotes involve people unsung or forgotten in the rush of events. He writes that a few years after the 16th Street Baptist Church bombing in Birmingham, Ala., he spoke with Claude Wesley, whose daughter Cynthia was one of the four young girls killed. Gaillard asked how the father felt when King urged the community to forgive the bombers and keep peace. Wesley answered with a profound acceptance and forgiveness.

As Gaillard relates in "A Hard Rain," in his initial story Gaillard wrote that faith was "such a startling contrast to that hideous act that put it to the test." He reflects later: "This was the essence of the civil rights struggle, I thought — the idealism of the 1960s, powerful and pure, but no longer innocent, for it had now come face to face with its opposite, in a way that all of us would know soon enough."

The story lines here are engrossing, and Gaillard packs a lot into each chapter. He declares in the preface: "I hope to offer a sense of how it felt." Fair enough. Still, I found it difficult to absorb all 687 pages chronologically. It's just as enjoyable to scan the index, as you would an encyclopedia, for a topic of interest, such as the unionization efforts of Cesar Chavez, the controversial cover of Time magazine "Is God Dead?" or the anti-war efforts of Dr. Benjamin Spock and Muhammad Ali. Along the way, you're sure to discover serendipitous stories that will delight or depress you.

Whether recalling Truman Capote's "In Cold Blood" as an exhilarating new genre of literary nonfiction or describing in mournful detail the mayhem of the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago, Gaillard writes with determination to make the events of the 1960s relevant. He is a gifted storyteller, and I'm giving copies of this book to my sons and daughter to help them understand how we got to now.

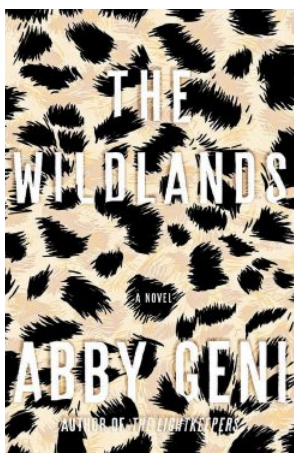
BOOK REVIEW

Domestic tension fuels new novel by Abby Geni

By Sarah Courteau
The Washington Post



'The Wildlands'

By Abby Geni, Counterpoint, 368 pages, $26

In the opening pages of "The Wildlands," two siblings in an Oklahoma basement face off when one wants to venture into the path of a category 5 tornado to find their father. It's not the last time domestic tensions fuel discord in Abby Geni's second novel. But the overarching conflict is bigger than one family: To what lengths should people go to protect the animal kingdom from the ravages of humans — and at what human cost?

Geni tells her story from the alternating perspectives of two motherless sisters, 9-year-old Cora and 22-year-old Darlene McCloud. The tornado that launches "The Wildlands" occurred when Cora was 6; it razed her family's farm and sucked her father into the sky, orphaning her and the other McCloud children — the soccer-playing Jane; the charismatic and volatile Tucker; and Darlene, who abandoned her college dreams to care for her younger siblings.

In the aftermath of the tornado, Tucker grows increasingly alienated and soon disappears, only to return three years later to commit an act of ecoterrorism that leaves him injured. Bleeding and on the run, he enlists the help of Cora, who agrees to flee with him. "I had never bothered to consider the way I loved my sisters; our mutual affection was as unremarked as oxygen," Cora reflects as she explains why she left with her brother. "But Tucker was something else. His love for me, and mine for him, was intoxicating, sweetening the very air I breathed."

The glimpses of Tucker's mind through his conversations with Cora offer a tantalizing window into the sibling whose story isn't fully told. Geni brilliantly captures the magnetism of a fanatic whose diagnosis of society's ills is spot-on but whose conclusions are deranged. As Tucker heals and the two begin a westward trek, he indoctrinates his sister with lectures and stories that feature them as heroes. In thrall to her brother, Cora becomes a half-witting accomplice to escalating acts of violence that culminate in bedlam at a Southern California zoo.

Meanwhile, Cora's kidnapping pierces the tough exterior Darlene has developed under the strain of supporting her sisters. She is frantic to recover Cora and furious that her brother has risked their sister's well-being to further his own agenda. Her practicality butts up against his obdurate idealism in a principled conflict that is as fraught as that in Herman Melville's "Billy Budd."

Yet "The Wildlands" fails to leverage the dramatic heights of its setup, in part because Darlene and Tucker are never allowed to truly clash. The perspectives also deflate the central tension: Cora's sections are told in first person, and Darlene's are written in third, but the two voices are scarcely distinguishable. Further, though Cora's sections are supposedly written when she's looking back as an adult, they contain few of the judgments or reflections that time would lend to her narration. The effect is a sameness that flattens Geni's characters and ultimately robs them of credibility.

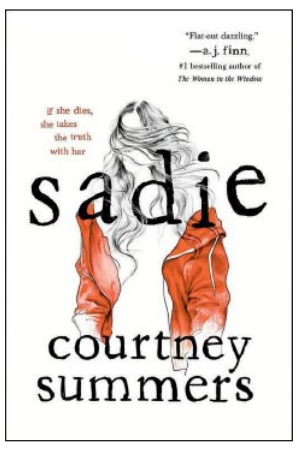
Still, there are haunting passages, as when Cora — whom Tucker has disguised as a boy and refers to as "Corey" — reckons with her new, male identity. "When Tucker and I walked into a convenience store, the clerk saw two brothers on the road together, both watchful and lanky, communicating in grunts and nods, similar in gait and bone structure, sharing an unmistakable ease. Cora had become an unspoken name, a girl hidden in plain sight, a memory." Darlene's sections never come to life in the same way.

Geni has built a small oeuvre around the interface between the natural and human worlds. Her collection "The Last Animal" included stories in which the relationships between people and animals were prisms through which to view human experiences, such as marital infidelity and familial loss. In her first novel, "The Lightkeepers," she explored the pitilessness of nature and the biologists who study it on a remote island off the California coast.

Sarah Courteau's work has appeared in The New York Times, the Oxford American and other publications. She is at work on a family crime novel set in the Ozarks.

Young adult roundup

By Christine Heppermann
Chicago Tribune

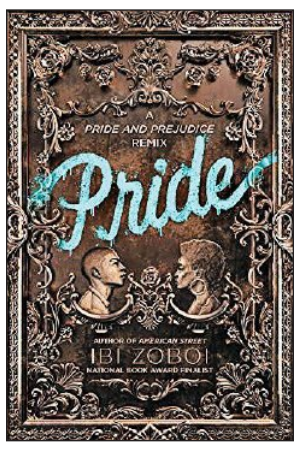


"Sadie" by Courtney Summers, Wednesday, 320 pages, $17.99, ages 14 and up

By now the components are familiar: a decaying American town; a hard-scrabble cast of characters, each with a piece to add to the quilt of information; a documentarian increasingly obsessed with sewing all the pieces together; and, more often than not, a dead girl. Yet the heroine of Courtney Summers' smart, subversive thriller is no true-crime cipher. Sadie refuses to relinquish control of her own story.

The novel opens with script from the first episode of "The Girls," a (fictional) podcast that promises to investigate the murder of 13-year-old Mattie Southern from Cold Creek, Colo., and the disappearance soon thereafter of her 19-year-old sister, Sadie Hunter. Host West McCray, a New Yorker, spreads the tropes thick, managing to belittle and romanticize at the same time.

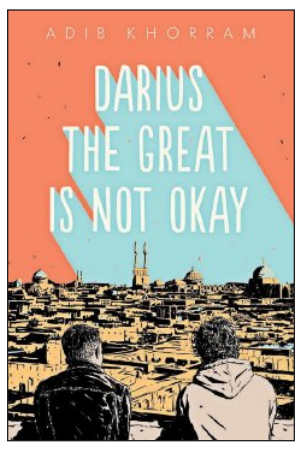
West's perspective does not completely shape the narrative, because Sadie gets to have her say. Summers ingeniously alternates between the podcast version of events and Sadie's fierce present-tense account of her time on the road tracking the sexual predator she vows to make pay for the damage he did to her, to her sister and, she suspects, to other young girls. Hers is not a comforting story, but it's one that needs to be told.



"Pride" by Ibi Zoboi, Balzar + Bray, 304 pages, $17.99, ages 12 and up

"It's a truth universally acknowledged that when rich people move into the hood, where it's a little bit broken and a little bit forgotten, the first thing they want to do is clean it up." That's 17-year-old Zuri Benitez invoking the famous first sentence of "Pride and Prejudice" to denounce the gentrification that threatens to push her Haitian-Dominican-American family out of their apartment in Brooklyn's Bushwick neighborhood, the only home Zuri has ever known.

Jane Austen's piercing comedy of manners provides the ideal template for Ibi Zoboi's shrewd, timely second novel — her first, "American Street," was a National Book Award finalist — though, for Zuri, "pride" is more often a strength than a weakness. She and her older sister Janae are bookish introverts, like their dad; and while her outgoing mother and three younger sisters can be loud and embarrassing, Zuri can be just as loud when defending them to the hot-and-haughty Darius Darcy, whose family owns the new mini-mansion across the street. Like her Austen counterpart, Elizabeth Bennet, Zuri learns that judgment goes both ways and that Darius, one of few black students at his posh prep school, has more layers than she'd assumed.



"Darius the Great Is Not Okay" by Adib Khorram, Dial, 320 pages, $17.99, ages 12 and up

In Iran visiting his maternal grandparents, Darius Kellner from Portland, Ore., who calls himself a "Fractional Persian" because his father is white, stands before a statue of his namesake. "I didn't feel strong or smart or brave. ... Darius the Great was a diplomat and a conqueror. And I was just me." Darioush, as he's known in Iran, rarely gives himself enough credit. But readers will warm to his sweet, sensitive nature and sympathize with his doubts about himself and his relationship with his dad.

Just as Darioush, a tea aficionado, takes his time to brew the perfect cup, so debut novelist Adib Khorram doesn't rush his descriptions of Persian culture. Not knowing much Farsi, Darioush sometimes feels like an outsider at family gatherings. His mother warned him that Iranians tend not to believe in medicating depression, so he is prepared when, for instance, his grandfather tells him he doesn't need pills, he just needs to "try harder" not to be sad. Still, as Khorram eloquently shows, most divides can be bridged by respect and love.

show's namesake loved.

"Besides having the DNA, as a layman, I'm also just a huge fan, and I always had a lot of respect and awe for my dad's craft and his authenticity," she said, sitting at the kitchen table of the house in Venice she's just about to vacate to move to New York.

"So I would listen to Tom Petty radio and they would say 'Tom Petty — American treasure.' I would hear these fans calling in, and I'd be crying on my way back home," she said. "I started thinking about what an American treasure he was as a songwriter. There was so much of the catalog that people didn't hear in those concerts for the last 20 years that spoke to who my dad was."

She references "Have Love Will Travel" and "Keeping Me Alive," songs recorded about two decades apart and which both appear on "An American Treasure," noting that they're works that capture the "energy of my dad just sitting and strumming his guitar."

She adds, "When he died, I realized how many conversations we had when he was just sitting in there strumming his guitar."

All told, "An American Treasure" encompasses 60 tracks, from cornerstone hits including "Breakdown," "Refugee," "Listen To Her Heart," "Free Fallin'," "I Won't Back Down," "Louisiana Rain" and "Anything That's Rock 'n' Roll" to never-released songs such as "Keep A Little Soul," "Gainesville," "Bus to Tampa Bay," "Two Men Talking" and "Lonesome Dave." The new set duplicates just one track — a demo recording of "The Apartment Song" — from the 92-track, six-CD Petty box set "Playback" from 1995.

In compiling the set, Adria worked closely with her stepmother, Dana Petty, as well as guitarist-songwriter Mike Campbell and keyboardist Benmont Tench, founding members of the Heartbreakers, in addition to longtime Petty recording engineer Ryan Ulyate.

"We just want to share his brilliance with everyone," Campbell said. "The stuff that's left off the records is so good, and I think he would be proud to have these things come out and have people experience them. He wrote them. Some of them were finished, some of them weren't. He would have liked them to have been heard."

The set also includes a smattering of tracks by Mudcrutch, Petty's early-'70s Florida band that preceded and included core members of the Heartbreakers. That group reunited in 2008 and has since released two studio albums and done a couple of tours.

GENARO MOLINA/LOS ANGELES TIMES 2017

Forthcoming box set mines Petty's trove of archival recordings, photos and memorabilia.

" 'American Treasure' came about because I was sitting around with a bunch of people and we were all lost in this pretty deep hole," Adria said. "I was talking to Mike and Ben, kind of begging them about 'How do we carry on without my dad being the creative voice who makes decisions? How do we get familiar with what's not been released and begin to take in 40 years or more of a life?' "

What to include, and what to leave off, wasn't always an easy choice. "We argued a lot," Campbell said with a laugh. "Really — a lot."

Many of those choices came down to intensely personal connections to particular songs.

" 'You and Me' was one I picked," Petty's widow, Dana Petty, said in a separate interview at the Malibu house she and Tom shared since they wed in 2001. Without knowing it, she sat on the same couch, even the same cushion, her husband had occupied a little less than a year earlier in the foyer of his home recording and rehearsal studio during what turned out to be his final interview.

"That was the last song he heard the day he died," Dana said. "He had me look online and find Martyn Atkins' video that was never finished that he shot in the desert. [Atkyns] ended up putting a video together of him riding a dirt bike around the desert, and it was so sweet. He got really nostalgic that day."

All concede that they continue to struggle in varying ways with Petty's death — ruled by the Los Angeles County Sheriff-Coroner's office to have been the result of an accidental overdose of prescription painkillers Petty had been taking to contend with the cracked hip he weathered throughout the Heartbreakers' 40th anniversary tour in 2017.

For Dana, it's heartache over the unfulfilled promise that "Tommy... my best friend, my rock" made to lease an airplane and start to do some traveling with her, something Petty rarely took enough time away from his music to do.

For Adria, tears still flow when it hits her, often, that her 5-year-old daughter, Everly — after the Everly Brothers, the name signifying "perfect harmony" to Adria — will not grow up knowing her rock star grandpa.

For Campbell, "We were more than close. There were so many deep strains in our band. And we lived a dream together. We dreamed a dream, and it all came true for all of us — together. That creates a love that's deeper than any other love I can imagine: the songwriting, and the song playing, and making records, playing all those shows in front of all those people together.

"Tom could have been a solo artist, but he loved the band," Campbell added. "And we loved him and we stuck together because we loved it so much, and that's something you never get over."

For Tench, echoing his bandmate: "There's a sound you make with another person, especially if they're exceptional like him, and that is a sound that's gone. The sound of me playing with him. The sound of just Mike and him. The sound of all of us playing with him, it's gone. Since I was 18, I've made that sound with those people. Mike and I can still make our sound, but we don't get to make that sound with Tom. And that's a big, big, big deal to me."

In his final interview two days after the triumphant final show of a three-night homecoming stand at the Hollywood Bowl, and just five days before he died, Petty told The Times he expected soon to be undergoing hip replacement surgery now that the tour was in the history books.

Like Adria, Tench, who also has a show on the Petty channel, takes solace these days in listening to the "Buried Treasure" program that Petty hosted, and which SiriusXM continues to air.

"They keep playing these shows over and over and over again because he did so damn many of them," Tench said, "and they are so damn good."

Being able to continue to hear Petty's voice — speaking as well as singing — has been a mixed blessing for all the participants in the "American Treasure" project.

"To be honest with you, it was really hard at times to hear his voice," said Campbell, sitting on a sofa next to Tench and strumming a vintage resonator guitar in Campbell's home studio in the San Fernando Valley, where the group's 1999 album "Echo" was recorded. "I mean, it's not that long.... At times, it was really emotional. Thank God for Ryan, because he did a lot of the lifting and went through a lot of the tracks. I couldn't sit there that much because it was just too intense.

"It is overwhelming," Campbell said. "We all were suffering through it for him. We were doing it for him."

Tench agreed: "It wasn't easy for me emotionally in the sense that it would lift me and then I would come down. But it lifted me more than it brought me down, because it kept — in a way, although it's a look back — it kept us moving forward, because it was discovering things and realizing , 'Oh, it's this and this and this.'

"It's really good for me, because it feels like it's alive," Tench said. "And I'm not in denial. I'm still gobsmacked. I'm completely gobsmacked."

To help ease their own pain, and that of legions of Tom Petty & the Heartbreakers fans, the "An American Treasure" organizing quintet eventually settled on 60 tracks, many of them studio recordings never previously released. There are also dozens of live performances and alternate takes of classic songs and deep cuts, some framed with the chatter among musicians before and after recorded takes.

For Adria, the goal was personal — not to remind the world of her father's more than two dozen singles that made the Billboard Top 100, or 10 Top 10 albums, among 20 that Petty placed on the Billboard 200 Albums chart over four decades.

"My dad wasn't a walking anthem," she said. "I started to think of my dad as being at one with his Dove guitar writing songs all the time.

"I really wanted this to highlight him as a songwriter," she said. "I want fans to know what it was like for me, hearing him strumming his guitar down the hall, working on a song, and then hearing that song being finished and recorded."

She's describing a process that Petty himself said never grew old.

"I compare songwriting to fishing: There's either a fish in the boat, or there's not," Petty said in that final interview, in which he expressed enthusiasm about various future projects.

"Sometimes you come home, and you didn't catch anything, and sometimes you caught a huge fish," he said. "That was the work part of it to me. To play live was fairly easy. That's simplifying things a lot, but that part of it didn't seem as challenging to me as coming up with a song.

"It's all about songs," he said. "If Iook back at it, I just think about I always had to write another song. We always needed another hit song. In those days, that's how it worked; you brought out a song for the radio. And I got pretty good at that. I would just always be writing.

"It's kind of a lonely work," he said. "Because you just have to keep your pole in the water. I always had a little routine of going into whatever room I was using at the time to write in and just staying in there till I felt like I got a bite."

The new box is a testament to that work ethic. Campbell, Tench, Ulyate, Dana and Adria Petty stress that the unreleased material is anything but rejects. At various points in separate interviews, all marveled at one track or another that had never seen the light of day.

"Our criteria," Campbell said, "is that Tom was sitting here with us. Would he approve of this or not? And a lot of times, you'd go, 'He wouldn't like this stuff. He wouldn't want anybody to hear this.'

"But the other stuff," Campbell said, "I think if he was here, he'd say there was some validity to it, I'm proud of that and it should be here.' So we always kept him right by our side through this whole process. .... I think we did a pretty good job of picking things he would be proud of."

Tench concluded, "It's been good for me to go through and hear this stuff. It's validating, it keeps it alive. A friend of mine said, when my mother passed away, that people pass away, but the love doesn't leave. This whole thing has been proof of that to me. And the music is an aspect of the love, and the music does not leave."

KAITI SULLIVAN/AP

it was when we made "Fahrenheit 9/11," we are in much worse condition right now.

Q: Did you immediately think "this is my next movie"?

A: I immediately tried to see if my grandfather being Canadian was enough to get some papers. It's not.

Q: You'd leave America in the rear view?

A: I can't go anywhere. Are you kidding? We're in the fight of our lives here and we're going to win it, but it won't be won by hoping we're going to win.

Q: In several interviews you've suggested that A-listers throw their hats into the political arena. Aren't there enough famous folk in politics?

A: What's wrong with celebrities? People like them. Why don't we elect somebody that we like. Wouldn't you vote for Tom Hanks?

Q: Have you talked to Tom Hanks about that?

A: Yes, I have.

Q: His response?

A: No. I said, "I'll even run as your number two. I'll do all the dirty work! You just stand there and cut ribbons and smile."

Q: So who else?

A: How about Michelle Obama? She'd win. That's the way the Democrats have to start thinking. Think out of the box. Don't run a politician. Run somebody beloved by the American people who's smart and who will fight for the average everyday person who's struggling to keep their head above water.

Q: Why not run yourself?

A: Oh. Um. You know I was the first 18-year-old elected in the state of Michigan when they lowered the voting age to 18. I ran for board of education because I wanted to fire the principal and the assistant principal. I won, and a year later they were gone. So I learned at an early age that if you got involved, you could affect change. Then I retired from politics at 22. Everybody should do it. You should do it.

Q: But I'm on the other side.

A: And that's where I have to stay. Over here. I think I serve the country better by making movies like this. I hope I do.

Q: Do you hope President Trump watches the film?

A: Oh, I know he'll watch the film. Are you kidding? First of all, anything that has him as the star of it or his name in it ... I made a film before the election called "Michael Moore in TrumpLand" and he tweeted positively about it when he heard about it. He hadn't watched it, but he saw that his name was in the title. To a malignant narcissist, that's all the matters. But I hope he does see it.

WATCH THIS: THURSDAY

Danielle Savre

"Station 19" (8:01 p.m., ABC): Continuing his progress as a new firefighter, Ben (Jason George) scores an achievement that his peers celebrate in an encore of the Season 1 finale,"Not Your Hero." The decision on who will be named 19's new captain is delayed by the immediate need to battle a blaze in a skyscraper, leaving several lives in peril. Chandra Wilson guest stars in her "Grey's Anatomy" role. Danielle Savre also stars.

"The Gifted" (7 p.m., FOX): Hoping to take his sadistic Hound program national, the sinister Dr. Campbell (Garret Dillahunt) attends a summit with a deadly anti-mutant emphasis, so members of the Mutant HQ team mobilize to stop him at all costs in an encore telecast of the two-hour Season 1 finale. After she learns more about her own past, Polaris (Emma Dumont) make an important decision that could have wide-ranging consequences.

"Supernatural" (7 p.m., CW): Though Gabriel (guest star Richard Speight Jr.) isn't the first partner they would choose, Sam, Dean and Castiel (Jared Padalecki, Jensen Ackles, Misha Collins) must work with him to retrieve Mary and Jack (guest star Samantha Smith, Alexander Calvert) in the somewhat literally titled episode "Beat the Devil." Rowena (guest star Ruth Connell) crosses paths with Lucifer (Mark Pellegrino), possibly determining the fate of someone else.

"Claudine" (7 p.m., TCM): Diahann Carroll earned an Oscar nomination as best actress for this well-received 1974 romantic dramedy, in which she stars as a single mother of six in Harlem. With the aid of financial assistance from welfare checks, she's able to eke out a living for her large brood, but the complicated bureaucratic rules that govern what she must do to qualify for that support complicate her life.

"How to Get Away With Murder" (9 p.m., ABC): Despite its title, this soapy mystery series definitely qualifies as a guilty pleasure, one that launches its fifth season next week. For fans who may want a refresher about where this cliffhanger-prone show left things, an encore of the Season 4 finale, "Nobody Else Is Dying," finds Annalise (Viola Davis) and her inner circle confronted by a suspicious death.

"Snowfall" (9 p.m., 10 p.m., 12:01 a.m., FX): Season 2 of this critically acclaimed yet ratings-challenged period drama about the early days of the American drug culture concludes with a finale called "Education," which finds Franklin (Damson Idris) paying the piper for his actions. Elsewhere, Teddy (Carter Hudson) does everything he can think of to help his partners.

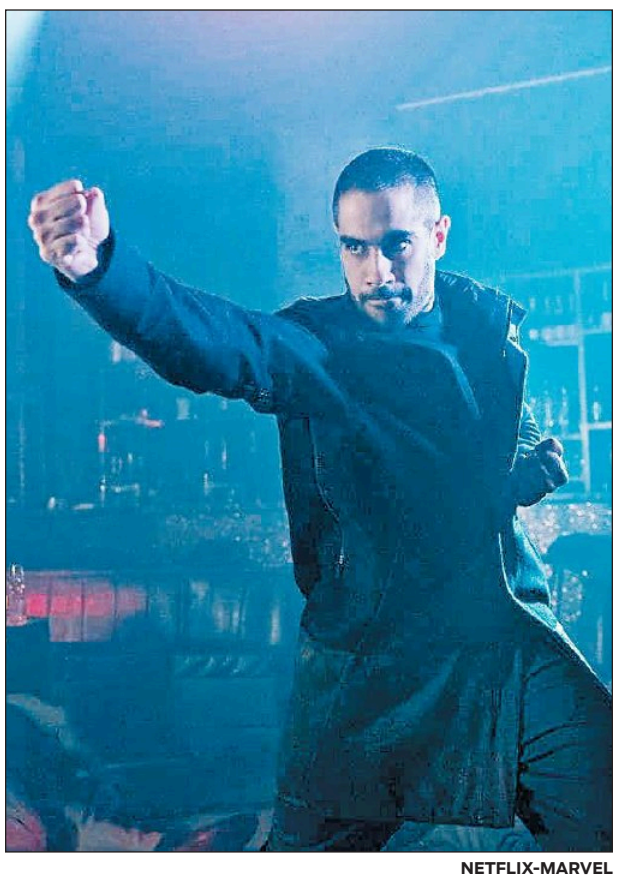
Sacha Dhawan knocks down walls on 'Iron Fist'

By David Betancourt
The Washington Post



NETFLIX-MARVEL

Sacha Dhawan stars as Davos in "Iron Fist."

Before Sacha Dhawan became one of the most violent and intriguing antagonists in Marvel's live-action entertainment era, he was sitting on a bus in London, reading Iron Fist comics, convinced he would never land the role of the mystical martial artist the Steel Serpent.

Each flip of the page revealed few similarities between Dhawan and the classic villain he had auditioned to play for Marvel and Netflix's "Iron Fist" series.

"I kind of thought there's no way in a million years I'm ever going to get this job," Dhawan told The Washington Post.

But surprisingly to him, Dhawan got the role for "Iron Fist's" polarizing first season, playing a brother/best friend to "Iron Fist" protagonist Danny Rand (Finn Jones).

After it came out, famed comic book writer and current Marvel television producer Jeph Loeb called Dhawan to let him know Season 2 of "Iron Fist" was a go, and that Davos would play a much larger and darker part in the plot.

Knowing he was about to make the transition from friend to foe in "Iron Fist's" second season, Dhawan began four months of intense training and weightlifting to bulk up, to prepare for turning on the evil switch in front of the cameras.

Dhawan studied various forms of martial arts, including wing chun, choy li fut and boxing, working with his trainers to create a style of fighting for Davos that worked well for both the character and Dhawan's abilities.

"I wanted to give the impression that between Season 1 and Season 2, Davos, he had lost everything, but it meant that he trained harder and wanted to come back harder," Dhawan said. "I started off in London with a range of different trainers and then (was) really upping my training regimen, sometimes training twice, even three times a day and living a bit of a kind of lifestyle as Davos would, where your life just revolves around eating and training and focus and discipline. It was a real challenge."

The culmination of all that training came during Season 2's fifth episode, "Heart of the Dragon." The episode opens with Davos, having just stolen the power of the Iron Fist from Danny Rand, destroying a cement wall with a red chi-fueled closed fist. In that scene, Dhawan wears the Iron Fist mask many fans have been clamoring to see more of. He says a decision was made that he would not continue wearing the mask, so he would not cover up the anger that was written on his face in every scene. But in the moment, he was overcome with emotion and felt like a superhero.

"It was something that I never thought was possible for someone who's a British Indian actor," Dhawan said. "I was thinking about Davos at that time, thinking about his mom and father in K'un-Lun, and me, Sacha Dhawan, thinking about my mom and dad back in the U.K., and I'm thinking, 'I did it, Mom and Dad.' It was a very proud moment, not just for me, but for other British Indians or Indians all over the world (to see) that this is possible. It's a real big step for the Marvel universe."

Horoscopes

Today's birthday (Sept. 20): Weave your stories together this year. Connect and coordinate passion projects. Try new experiences, flavors and views. Friends achieve a triumphant goal together this summer before work and health hurdles prompt changes, leading to intuitive self-discovery.

Aries (March 21-April 19): Today is a 6. Team harmony requires effort. Don't share unfinished work. Edit with your core group before presenting more widely. Avoid controversy or hassle. Clean up after yourself.

East-West vulnerable, North deals

	North ♠ A Q 10 8 ♥ Q 9 6 ♦ 9 8 7 3 2 ♣ 3
West ♠ K J 5 ♥ 10 5 4 3 ♦ K 10 ♣ Q 10 8 2	South ♠ 7 6 ♥ K J 8 7 2 ♦ Q 6 ♣ A K 9 7	East ♠ 9 4 3 2 ♥ A ♦ A J 5 4 ♣ J 6 5 4

South in today's deal was GeO Tislevoll, a Norwegian expert who has lived in New Zealand for many years. We met him some years ago in Australia and regret not asking him why he spells his first name like that. He and his partner arrived in game after an aggressive auction.

Tislevoll won the opening club lead in hand with the ace and led a spade to dummy's queen. He followed by cashing the ace of spades and ruffing a spade. So far, so good. He now cashed the king of clubs and ruffed a club. The high 10 of spades was led from dummy. When East followed suit, Tislevoll ruffed this with the jack of hearts as West, discarded the 10 of diamonds. The last club was ruffed with dummy's nine of hearts. Leaving this position:

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1♥	Pass
2♣*	Pass	3♣	Pass
4♥	All pass

Drury, heart fit with 10-11 points

Opening lead: Two of ♣ North ♠ Void ♥ Q ♦ 9 8 7 3 ♣ Void

West ♠ Void ♥ 10 5 4 3 ♦ K ♣ Void	South ♠ Void ♥ K 8 7 ♦ Q 6 ♣ Void	East ♠ Void ♥ A ♦ A J 5 4 ♣ Void

Tislevoll led dummy's queen of hearts, won by East with the ace. East cashed the ace of diamonds and gave West a diamond ruff, but West had to lead a trump back into declarer's king-eight. Making four! The contract might have been defeated if West under-ruffed the 10 of spades. Interested readers can work out the defense on their own.

CHICAGO WEATHER CENTER

chicagoweathercenter.com | By Tom Skilling and WGN9

THURSDAY, SEPT. 20 NORMAL HIGH: 73° NORMAL LOW: 52° RECORD HIGH: 91° (1931) RECORD LOW: 36° (1991)

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
91	71

■ Warm front to the north. Chicago area in the "warm sector" of the low pressure system.

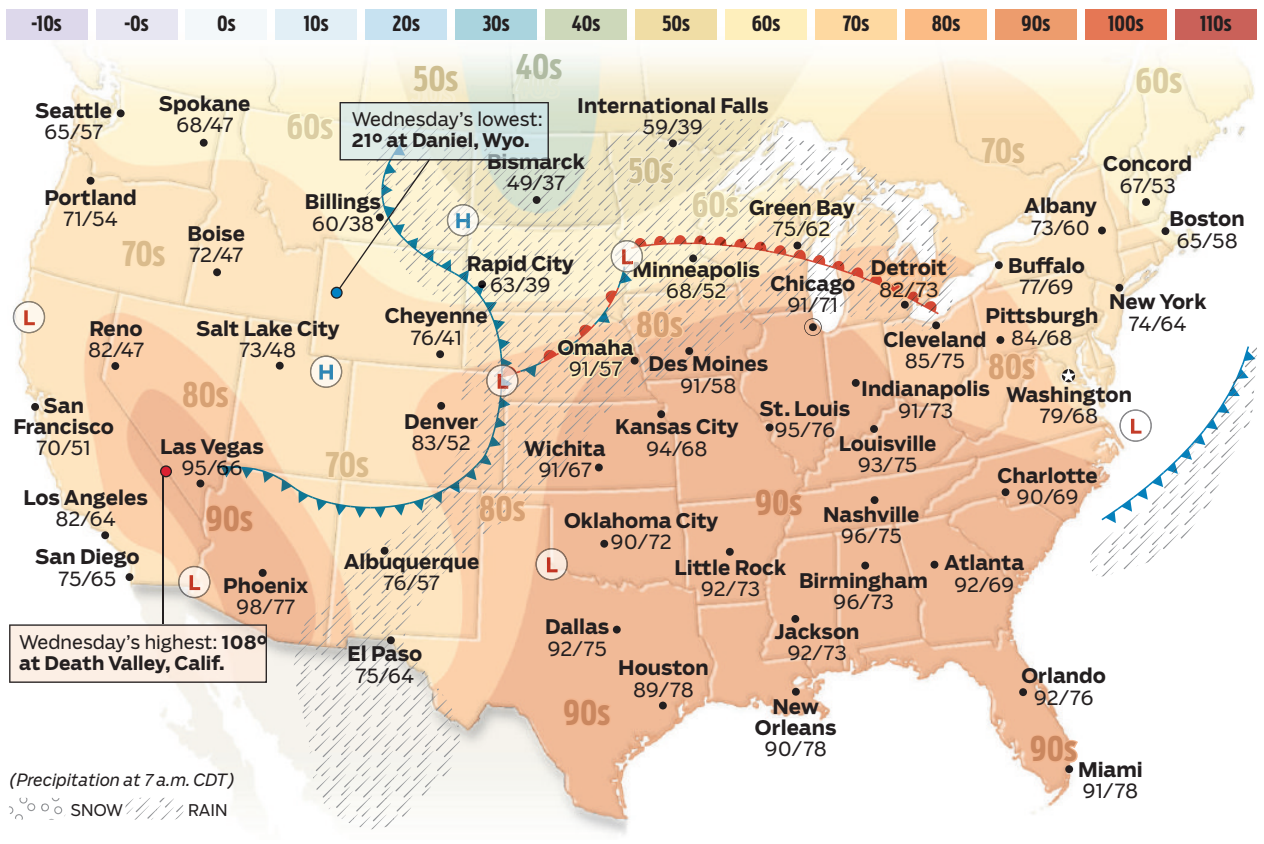
■ Some residual cloudiness and showers early associated with the departing warm front.

■ Becoming partly cloudy, hot and humid with a chance of thunderstorms in the afternoon. Very windy with southwest winds gusting to 30 mph. Highs in the lower 90s (old record for this date 92°set last year) with a heat index approaching 100°.

■ Good chance of t-storms late at night or early a.m. Friday along and ahead of a strong cold front.

NATIONAL FORECAST



As a warm front moves north into Wisconsin, gusty winds out of the southwest pull a blanket of unseasonably warm and humid air over our area. Afternoon highs will top out in the 90s — possibly equaling or exceeding the record 92 degrees for this date set last year. Afternoon heat indexes will approach an uncomfortable 100 degrees.

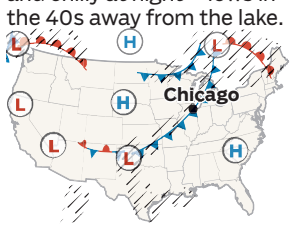
A strong cold front will sweep in from the northwest, passing over our area late at night and early Friday, bringing with it an abrupt turnaround in temperatures and humidity. A cool, dry Canadian-source high pressure will follow, with winds shifting to the northeast. Highs Friday will probably occur early, with readings likely in the 60s during the afternoon.

The cool high pressure will dominate Saturday and then modify somewhat by Sunday, with readings climbing back into the 70s.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 21

HIGH	LOW
75	55

A slight chance of showers early, becoming partly sunny. Much cooler with highs actually occurring before sunrise. Readings in the 60s along the lake. Partly cloudy and chilly at night – lows in the 40s away from the lake.



SATURDAY, SEPT. 22

HIGH	LOW
67	53

Fall-like, cool Canadian-source air coincides with the Autumnal Equinox. Cool - partly cloudy with high temperatures in the 60s. Overnight lows in the 50s – 40s in areas away from the lake. East to northeast winds.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 23

HIGH	LOW
74	57

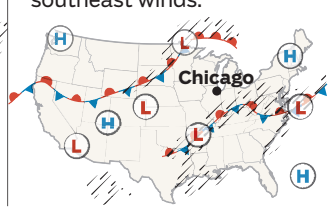
MONDAY, SEPT. 24

HIGH	LOW
77	60

Partly sunny and a little warmer with afternoon highs in the upper 70s – a little cooler along the lakefront. Clouding-up with a chance of showers at night, especially southern portion. South to southeast winds.



TUESDAY, SEPT. 25

HIGH	LOW
76	53

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26

HIGH	LOW

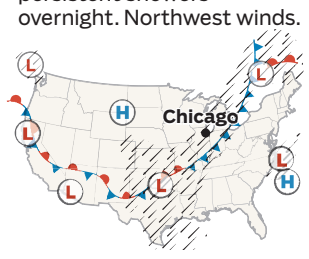
Mostly cloudy and seasonably cool with scattered showers. High temperatures in the mid to upper 60s. Clouds and a few persistent showers overnight. Northwest winds.



ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

— Margaret Robertson, Chicago

Dear Margaret,

A product of one of the worst fire seasons on record, a firenado developed in British Columbia as part of the Chutanli wildfire, pulling fire hoses into the air and throwing logs across the fire line for nearly an hour.

A firenado is an intense tornadolike whirlwind that forms in the plume of heated air rising above a large fire.

It is made visible by smoke and, if the fire is large enough, by flames that are drawn into the whirl.

TIP of the DAY

Add a rain barrel to your landscaping. A rain barrel is a small, aboveground tank that collects and stores rainwater for later use. There are a few types, but the most common barrels collect rainwater from your roof. Adding one or two rain barrels to your home can be good for your plants, the planet and your wallet. It's an inexpensive, practical habit — especially in dry states where droughts are more common. Less than an inch of rain can fill a rain barrel. Cutting back on water use for your lawn and garden not only reduces your water footprint, it also can reduce your water bill.

How to talk to your contractor

By Dan DiClerico
HomeAdvisor

DREAMSTIME

Avoid miscommunication with your contractor by using a written contract that clearly spells out the full scope of your project — all the way down to specifics like paint colors.

Bad communication is the downfall of any relationship, especially the one between homeowners and their contractor. Besides causing friction and frustration, the lack of communication can lead to lousy end results, like a new kitchen you don't really love, for example, or a seemingly simple home repair that winds up costing way more than expected.

Here's how to have good communication with your contractor from start to finish.

When choosing a contractor, checking references and credentials is important, but you also need to take stock of the intangibles, including trust and rapport. Do you feel like you can speak freely with the contractor? How well does he listen? If he's distracted or dismissive during the initial meeting, it's only going to get worse once the project is underway.

If there are other pros on the team, say a designer or architect, pay close attention to the group dynamic. There's always a little push-pull between design and construction, but you want a team that can collaborate on these problems without the need for constant mediation.

Some contractors are phone guys, while others prefer text, email or even handwritten notes. Large remodeling companies might even use construction management software that lets the client track things like scheduling, payments and deliveries. Any mode of communication can work, so long as everyone is clear on the protocol from the beginning. And so long as everyone sticks to the protocol until the end.

You wanted the bathroom walls blue but your general contractor paints them green. You can swear you agreed to three recessed canister lights in the hallway, not two. These types of miscommunications will be avoided with a written contract that clearly spells out the full scope of the project. It should include a breakdown of the labor and material costs, right down to the model numbers.

Stay away from so-called allowances, basically blank spaces in the contract for items that are yet to be determined. Besides opening the door to misunderstandings, allowances can blow your budget, for example if products end up costing much more than you expected.

No matter how thorough you are in the planning phase, you still need to check in regularly once the work gets underway. The demo phase often turns up hidden surprises, from termites to structural damage, that you'll want to discuss in person with your contractor. At the back end of the project, it's a good idea to review finish details, like paint colors and tile patterns, before they're applied once and for all.

Good communication continues after the project is complete, in the form of online reviews. If you had a bad experience, other homeowners need to know about it. Hopefully that won't be the case, and you'll be posting a positive review. That will keep up good relations with your contractor and help him secure the new business he deserves. And it will also ensure your place at the front of the line when it comes to future projects.

By Gregg Ellman
Tribune News Service

Surviving the cold at football games and other events will be a lot more comfortable and luxurious with the new Hot Seat from Pop Design.

The Kickstarter campaign just started for what Pop Design (popdesignproducts.com) calls the world's first heated stadium chair.

With USB-powered ThermaGridz technology, stay cozy warm with the heat, which will penetrate deep into you.

According to Pop Design, ThermaGridz uses low-voltage USB-powered heating in a grid pattern of single core wire wrapped around glass fiber and coated in silicone, which produces Far Infrared Ray heat.

With a portable USB battery (not included), you'll stay warm for 1.2 hours with a 2500mAh battery or up to 7.25 hours with a 15,000mAh battery.

There are three temperature controls (high, 115 Fahrenheit; medium, 110 F; and low 100 F), and 600D fabric covers the chair to avoid any hot spots.

SoftTushion foam is built into the seat's armrests and adjustable back for long-term comfort even without the heat.

The welded steel-frame chair is 16 inches wide, but you can drop down the armrests for a larger 20.5-inch-wide seat. An adjustable back is 16 inches, and you get 16 inches of depth in the seat.

Other features include hidden pockets, which unfold from the armrests for items including smartphones or keys. There's a larger 15-by-4-inch pocket on the back.

One of the hidden zipper pockets on the front of the left armrest also acts as a cup holder, and the bottom of the chair is anti-slip and waterproof. After the game, it folds flat and has adjustable backpack straps.

Some fall colors for a stylish season

By Cathy Hobbs
Tribune News Service

When you think of fall colors, what comes to mind? Red, yellow, green, orange? While there are certainly a number of fabulous fall colors, for many the challenge lies in how to use these colors purposefully in decor.

Brown

Brown is a great foundation color and to many, a softer alternative to black. Brown can be used in many ways in a home, whether through the use of a wood finish or furniture or with the help of accessories and accents. Considered a neutral color, brown pairs well with other colors, or even different tints, tones and shades of brown in the same room. Looking for suggestions? Pastel colors such as powder pink or soft blue can be strong pairings. Finishes such as brass and chrome also work well.

Black

A longtime staple for interior designers and decorators, black is making a bold comeback. Strong and dominant, black can add luxury and richness to nearly any space, but it should be used sparingly. For example, in a bedroom, two nightstands with a black finish will work well, but adding in a black dresser may overwhelm. Black also works well as an accent color. Two to three black accents in a room whether through the use of lighting, artwork or accessories can work beautifully.

Orange

Orange is a happy color that can help brighten and lighten a space while also adding a sense of warmth. Lighter shades of orange can work well in children's rooms, while darker, richer tones can add a sense of elegance in living rooms and other social areas such as family rooms.

Red

Strong and bold, red is a statement color. Red works well as a pop of color in a space. As such, it pairs best with light colors or neutrals such as white, taupe or gray. When it comes to red, don't be afraid to use it in unexpected areas such as kitchens and bathrooms.

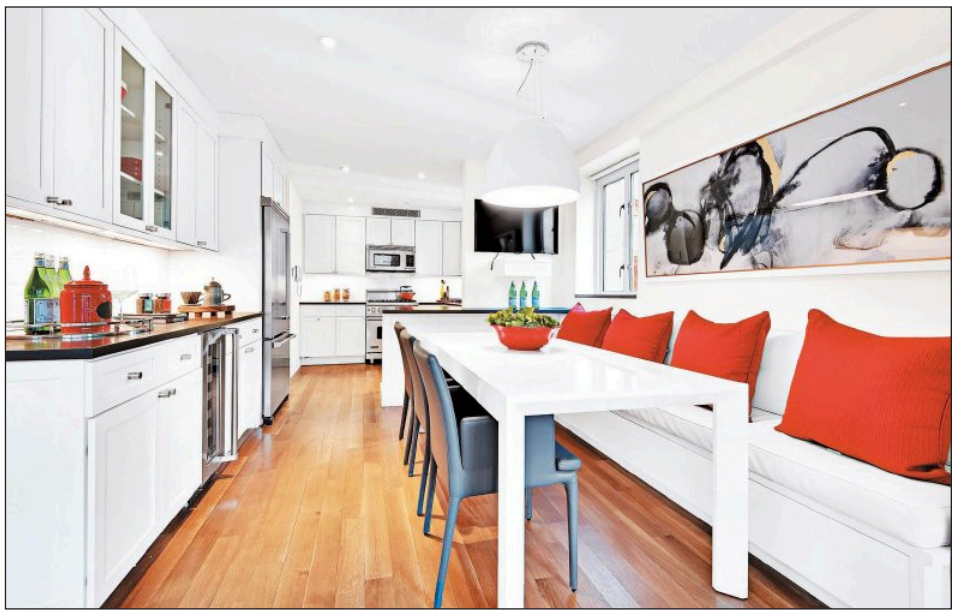
Orange can help brighten up a space, with lighter shades working well in children's rooms and darker tones enhancing living and family rooms.

Yellow

Yellow and all its shades, tints and tones is popular for fall. From chartreuse to mustard yellow and shades in between, yellow can be used in the fall and beyond. Not sure what colors will blend with yellow? Try neutral foundation colors such as brown, black and white. Don't forget finishes such as gold and brass are part of the yellow family and can work well in your decor as well.



Red is a statement color and works well as a pop in almost any space. The bright shade pairs best with light colors or neutrals such as white, taupe or gray.

HOME REMEDIES

Check your home for drafts

By Paul F. P. Pogue
Angie's List

You might not yet be thinking about the chillier months to come. But right now is an excellent time to check your home for drafts and air loss, and to prepare your home for winter. You'll stay warmer and save energy in the process.

Take your own steps to stop air leaks: Conduct your own energy audit around your home. Pay special attention to drafts around windows or doors, especially if you haven't installed new energy efficient windows. Add or replace worn weather stripping or caulk anywhere air is leaking in.

Look in your attic. If you see exposed joists, you should add more insulation. The amount of insulation you need depends on where you live — the colder the climate, the more insulation you should have.

Check your HVAC filters and change them if needed. That plays a big role in the efficiency of your air conditioning and heating. It's also a good idea to extend your HVAC system's useful life!

Look around the electrical outlets and switches on your home exterior. These are frequent culprits for energy loss. Installing a foam pad, which you can buy at any hardware store, behind the outlet plate will solve this problem.

Your air ducts play a critical role in energy loss. Because they carry all the conditioned or heated air through the home, even a small gap can have a big impact. Identify and plug up holes to prevent this loss.

If you're seriously considering improvements to HVAC systems or insulation for better efficiency, sooner is better than later. An insulation upgrade will begin saving money immediately.

Schedule an energy audit: To really maximize your home's energy efficiency, schedule a professional energy audit for a comprehensive look at air leaks and insufficient insulation, which wastes energy.

Look for third-party certification to verify that they're following an established set of guidelines and not just looking to sell a new HVAC system. Respected certifications include (but aren't limited to) the Building Performance Institute (BPI), the Home Energy Rating System (HERS) and Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED).

Common tools for energy auditors include thermal imagers that can detect heat and cold loss on surfaces (and thus tell how well your insulation is working, or what patches need filled) and a blower-door test that runs negative pressure through the home and to detect leaks. Some companies offer them as part of an overall energy audit; others charge extra, so be sure you know up front what you're getting.

An energy auditor should provide you with a detailed written report that lays out all their findings and the problem areas they identified. This report should include any applicable images and graphics and suggest solutions for each problem.

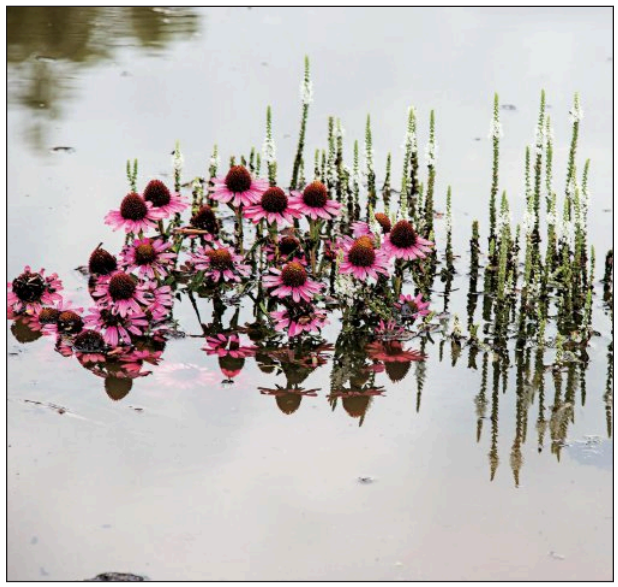
When hiring, ask your energy auditor what experience they have outside the field. Tangible experience in HVAC, construction or home inspection gives them a lot of understanding of the ins and outs of energy loss.

How to deal with drainage issues following heavy rains

By Tim Johnson
Chicago Tribune

The recent heavy rains have made some drainage issues in the corner of my garden much worse. Some of the plants have died, and others are not looking so good. The water has been pooling in this corner after heavy or long periods of rain. I have lost other plants here over the years. A friend told me to install a dry well with gravel to help solve this problem. What is a dry well, and will it help?

— Allison Johnston, Lake Forest



CHICAGO BOTANIC GARDEN

Pooled water after heavy or long rains can kill plants. Several options are available to alleviate the problem.

A dry well is simply a hole dug in the ground and filled with gravel. This is unlikely to do much to improve the drainage in the wet area of your garden, even if it is large, as it will quickly fill with water while the surrounding soil remains too wet. A key thing to keep in mind when trying to correct any drainage problems is that you need to collect the excess water from the bed and move it out of the area. Water flows from the high to the low point. There are different ways to do this, depending on each site's conditions.

Installing drain tile can help in certain garden situations where the soil is too wet. The drain should be installed in the lowest area of the bed and the soil above the drain should not be compacted or heavy clay, which would prevent water from reaching the drain. Even a very thin layer of clay soil over the drain tile can block water from reaching it. The pipe must slope evenly from the highest point of the bed to the lowest point where water can discharge out of the garden to work properly.

Use perforated PVC pipe or a flexible black pipe, and install #8 gravel or 5/8-inch roofing gravel around the pipe to help collect water and help prevent silt from plugging up the pipe. Perforated PVC pipe will generally last longer and can be installed so that a plumber can clean out the piping if it gets clogged with silt or tree roots in the future. Pipes that are 4 inches in diameter are typically adequate for most home applications. Adding drain tile will not improve the drainage if it does not collect and transport the water out of that area of the garden.

A French drain is a trench filled with gravel and will help dry an area out provided that the trench is pitched properly and there is a place for the water to run to. A trench with gravel will not improve the drainage in a garden unless the water runs out of the lowest end of the trench and away from the area. Otherwise, the trench with gravel will fill up with water while the surrounding soil remains too wet.

If the corner of your garden is the lowest part of your garden and you cannot grade the soil to move the water away, then you could explore adding a drain tile system. Place a catch basin in the lowest spot to collect the surface water. You would need to pitch the drain tile that is underground so as to run water away from the corner, which may be challenging based on your description of your garden. This becomes a more complex installation and may require a village permit to install.

If you have catch basins as part of an existing drainage system, be sure to clean debris out of them on a regular basis to keep the drainage system working properly. Debris will build up in the bottom of the catch basin and eventually plug up the piping. Try installing plants that are adapted to the conditions in that area of your garden if you are unable to improve the drainage.

It's Mother Nature vs. retaining wall

By Tim Carter
Tribune Content Agency

Q: Tim, I've seen quite a few failed retaining walls. Many have bulges or have tipped over. What needs to be done to ensure I only do mine one time? I've seen photos of walls hundreds of years old that look like they were built yesterday. What's the secret?

A: I, too, have seen my share of failed retaining walls. I grew up in hilly Cincinnati, and retaining walls can be found all over the city and in the suburbs.

You may recall that point in high school physics class when a frustrated student demanded, "Give me an example of when I'll ever use this stuff in real life!"

Well, this is one of those times.

Gravity wants to tip over all retaining walls. It's all part of Mother Nature's plan to transport rock and soil back into the oceans. Those engineers who design retaining walls that last can say they won an arm-wrestling competition with Mother Nature — at least temporarily, as she always bats last.

The problem you face with retaining walls is this: The taller they are, the more weight they're holding back. It's very complex. This is why any wall taller than 6 feet should be designed by an engineer who's got experience in retaining walls.

Short walls 2 feet high that you might build in your yard can be done with little fear of failure. But once you get higher than that, things can go wrong fast.

I'll never forget the first retaining wall I built. It was a 50-foot-long wall that started out 1 foot high but ended up 42 inches high. I built it in front of another retaining wall and there was just 3 feet of dirt behind the wall, not a hill rising up behind the wall.

After five years I noticed the tall end of the wall seemed to be tilting outward.

I had used regular brick, 4-inch back-up concrete block and some vertical steel rods in between the brick and the block to try to ensure the wall would not tilt. I lost that arm-wrestling match!

Years later, I discovered the freezing weather contributed to the failure. The soil behind my wall would freeze and expand. Each year the ice would push the wall out another quarter-inch or so. A much thicker wall and pea-gravel fill between the soil and the wall would have prevented the failure.

I have great retaining wall step-by-step tips and videos for you at my website. Go to go.askthebuilder.com/retainingwall.

Q: I need to patch some cracks in my older blacktop driveway, and I don't want to do it a second time. Let me state upfront I'm no fan of the liquids or black caulks that end up looking worse than the crack itself. Have you figured out a way to patch blacktop cracks and disguise the repair?

A: I agree about the black caulk products and liquid crack fillers. They look like a facial scar to me. You may not pay much attention to aged blacktop, but what you're really seeing are tens of thousands of small rocks that have lost their jet-black coating of liquid asphalt.

Just last week I patched quite a few cracks in my own aged blacktop driveway.

I've perfected a method of doing it so you simply can't see the crack repair, even if you stand 10 feet away.

I start by cleaning out the crack of all debris. If the crack is wide enough, I use my battery-powered demolition hammer with a ¾-inch wide bit. I chisel the sides of the crack so the bottom of the crack is wider than the top. The profile resembles a dovetail carpentry joint or the shape of the hole in a tooth just before a dentist fills a cavity.

I make sure the crack depth is at least 1 inch before squirting in an epoxy I discovered about six years ago. It comes in caulking tubes and has a nozzle that mixes the two components that come out of the tube.

I keep the epoxy about ⅛ inch below the top of the blacktop and then begin to press into the fresh epoxy small stones that match the ones in the blacktop. You'll find these all along the edge of your driveway. I embed stones as small as ⅛ inch into the epoxy all in a random pattern as you see in the blacktop. The last step is to scatter dry sand onto any visible epoxy and tamp it with my finger. Hours later, you can sweep away the excess sand.

I've got step-by-step photos of this blacktop crack-filling process and a link to the epoxy I've tested at my website waiting for you. Go to go.askthebuilder.com/crackrepair.

Listings that linger can offer opportunity

By Ellen James Martin
Andrews McMeel Syndication

SAWAYA PHOTOGRAPHY

Homes that are overpriced initially can frequently go unsold for an extended period of time.

A decade ago, after the residential real estate market tanked, bargains were rife and qualified buyers had their pick of properties at reasonable prices. But now the picture is vastly different.

"Today, home prices are at or approaching record highs in many markets," says Lawrence Yun, chief economist for the National Association of Realtors.

Yun forecasts that some of the nation's most overheated real estate markets will experience sales slowdowns as 2018 progresses.

And buyers determined to snag a decent deal in a popular neighborhood should consider what's known as a "stale listing," according to real estate pros.

"Stale listings can be a treasure trove of good values," says Stephen Israel, the president of a real estate firm affiliated with the National Association of Exclusive Buyer Agents.

What sets stale listings apart is that they've sat unsold for longer than the average selling time for their neighborhoods. But Israel cautions that selling times can vary widely depending on the popularity of a community and the local economy.

"Look at each home individually and find out its listing history. It may be the home was listed with a different agent before and then later relisted with a new agent. Because of that, you may need to dig to determine how long it's really been up for sale," he says.

Sid Davis, a real estate broker and the author of "A Survival Guide for Buying a Home," says the most common reason a property goes unsold for a lengthy period is that it was overpriced when it hit the market. Even after a series of price reductions, such a home typically retains its stigma, which continues to drive away potential buyers.

"The longer a house is on the market, the less it sells for. That's one of the tenets of real estate," Davis says.

Here are a few pointers for buyers.

Inform yourself about values in your target neighborhood. Many who are open to the idea of buying a stale property are novice buyers on limited budgets.

Very often, the owners of a stale property will ratchet down the price in incremental drops. The key for a prospective bidder is to know when the sellers are approaching a realistic price point.

"You and your agent need to do a thorough analysis of the area so you'll have a good feel for the true value of any house you like," Davis says.

The key to determining market value is to closely examine the data on recently closed home sales on similar properties — known as comparables, or comps for short.

"When deciding how much to bid on a stale listing, don't focus on the list price," Davis says. "Instead, orient your offer to what the market is really paying for that kind of a house in that neighborhood."

Set up alerts for when price drops occur. Have you found a home that's appealing, but believe it's overpriced? Israel suggests you track that property closely, waiting for its owners to take a price cut that brings it closer to its true market value.

To stay alert to potential pricing changes for the property of your choice, Israel recommends you ask your real estate agent to keep you updated by email or text.

Time your bid advantageously.

Are you focused on a property whose owners have finally agreed to a major price reduction after the place has lingered on the market? You may be tempted to come in right away with your bid.

But Israel says it could be wise to wait a few days before bidding on a formerly overpriced place. That's because typical sellers will wait a while after cutting their price before entertaining offers.

"Of course, there are always exceptions. If you're really in love with the house and think the sellers are finally realistic on price, don't wait any longer. Bid right after the price drop or you could risk losing your dream house to another offer," he says.

NEW HOMES MARKETPLACE

Viewing a model home can help to seal the deal for homebuyers

With all of the helpful online tools available to homebuyers today, why do builders go to the expense of constructing model homes and decorating them for public viewing?

While changing market conditions have seen a decrease in the number of model homes showcased in a given new home community, the model home is still an important component in the purchasing experience.

"Buying a home is a major financial and lifestyle decision, and as builders we want to offer every tool possible to make the process as easy and comfortable as possible for buyers," says Anna Harmon, director of Marketing and Public Relations for Shodeen Homes. "A furnished model home helps buyers envision how space can be used to accommodate their possessions, and walking through the home gives a better perspective on how the home will live."

Some model homes are "inventory homes" and are for sale, says Jeremy Lund, sales manager for Shodeen Homes.

"These inventory models are decorated with a neutral palette of colors, come with a warranty, and buyers can connect with the actual home they are buying. They can still choose some features such as crown molding on kitchen cabinets or decorative backsplashes. Shodeen Homes has found that this is a popular way to buy a home, especially for buyers with a tight timetable for their move," he says.

Shodeen Homes is a respected homebuilder with communities throughout the Fox Valley and far western suburbs as well as in the Lake Geneva region of southern Wisconsin.

Model homes are especially useful for 55-and-more buyers, says Jeff Samuels, of Samuels Homes, who is offering luxury townhomes at Victoria Park in Libertyville.

Townhome model at Victoria Park in Libertyville.

"Our buyers want to establish an emotional connection with the home they are buying, and they like to spend time in a model home to be able to achieve total comfort with their decision," Samuels says. "Our buyers are computer-literate and do preliminary research onine, but they have owned other homes and they want the reality of touching features and evaluating the quality of what they are seeing. They value the opportunity to see the relationship of one room to another and to assess the size and scale of the rooms, traffic patterns and natural light. No digital photo can establish the connection these buyers want with the home they choose."

A model home can have a major impact on the popularity of a new home community, and the soon-to-open model at Westleigh Farm in Lake Forest is bringing prospective buyers out for VIP preview tours by appointment. The model grand opening is set for Saturday, Oct. 20, and Sunday, Oct. 21.

"Buyers of upscale homes feel that there is no substitute for visiting a model home and visualizing how the home feels and lives," says Joseph Balistreri, director of Business Development for the Ryan Building Group and Project Manager for North Shore Builders. "The Westleigh Farm model will showcase both quality standard features and special options. Buyers can see how their own furnishings will fit in the home and how the floor plan will work for their lifestyles. Virtual walk-throughs are helpful but they don't reveal the intangible factors that motivate a buyer to choose a home."

Westleigh Farm will include 34 upscale single-family homes on a scenic 47 acre site with gardens, ponds, orchards, walking paths and open space. North Shore Builders will build 26 ranches with finished lower levels and eight sites are set aside for design/build custom homes. Pre-grand opening prices start at $1.1 million and include a free three-car sideload garage.

The 4,700-square-foot model has an elegant French Eclectic exterior with a steep pitched roof, and stucco and stone exterior with painted wood trim. The home features an open concept main-floor living area, and a sampling of features include the finished look-out basement that includes a recreation room with bar, island and appliances, two bedrooms, exercise room and cigar room. Other special features include a screened-in deck off the master bedroom, a covered deck off the great room, a breakfast sunroom, and a site overlooking an orchard and the Howard Van Doren Shaw-designed stable that serves as the Country Estate entry. Freedom from lawn mowing and snow removal ensure a "lock and leave" lifestyle for those who travel frequently."

Located on the site of the King Family Estate, said to be the inspiration for F. Scott Fitzgerald's classic "The Great Gatsby," Westleigh Farm also boasts a David Adler-designed clubhouse.

It's no secret to friends and family that Jackie Pyter has "the designer's eye," and can visualize the customizing features that she and husband Rick want in their new home at Victoria Park. With the collaboration of builder Jeff Samuels who is offering the luxury townhomes, the Pyters are creating a one-of-a-kind environment that reflects their tastes and personalities.

Libertyville residents for 38 years, Jackie and Rick began planning for a downsizing move about three years ago.

We were sure that we wanted a ranch plan so we could have a first-floor master bedroom, bath and laundry room," Jackie said. "We began to look around the Libertyville area, and we had read some news reports about Jeff Samuels and his excellent reputation as a custom builder. When we met him, he didn't yet have a model home at Victoria Park but he did tell us that he could extensively customize our home. This was a key factor in our decision to move to Victoria Park.

"By the time we viewed the model, we had looked around a great deal and we agreed that we had not seem any other home of the quality of the Victoria Park homes. We thought Samuels' homes were very unique," she said.

"I love to cook and we do a lot of entertaining, so we wanted this area to be thoughtfully planned and skillfully crafted," Jackie said. "We extended the already large kitchen island, and Jeff added a table at the end of it for our casual dining. He also was able to add a taller cabinet to the island facing the dining room so that food preparation clutter could be hidden from our guests. The top of this cabinet acts as a buffet with a granite top, ideal for entertaining with a buffet-style dinner.

"Because the kitchen is my happy place, I enjoy having a television nearby while I work, but initially we weren't sure just where to put it for unobstructed viewing. Jeff solved the problem by creating a space to recess it into a wall near the work area, and my grandson is crafting a barn door, sized to cover the television when it is not in use. This is a unique and practical solution that perfectly meets our needs," Jackie said.

Samuels and the Pyters also chose to harness their creativity in finishing the basement with its 9-foot ceiling.

"We used this space to finish a family room, a work room where I can do carpentry and an office/music room where I keep my collection of guitars," Rick said. "We also added a third bedroom and full bath and a large built-in storage closet. We also included a gas burning stove, and Jeff was able to create a small landing and turn the bottom two steps to add a design element and eliminate the typical basement stairs look. This is a completely customized and inviting living space."

Other custom features in the home include a stone fireplace in the great room with a black walnut wood mantle accented by a "live edge," a process whereby the tree bark is removed around the edge and the edge is sanded and finished for a beautiful natural look. The Pyters also redirected the traffic flow around the foyer, made changes in the master bath to include a claw-foot tub and walk-in shower.

"Whether we shared an idea or a photo of a feature we wanted, Jeff could interpret the element for the correct balance and look for our home," Jackie said. "He is also cost-conscious and made sure we understood the financial aspects of each custom feature. Jeff is a great collaborator and he can make any design idea a reality."

Jackie and Rick Pyter are working with Samuels Homes to express customizing creativity in their new home at Victoria Park in Libertyville.

Samuels Homes is offering 12 luxury townhomes at Victoria Park, an already established community for those 55 and more. Half of the homes are ranches and half are the two-story designs with first-floor master bedrooms. All have full basements, and the homes are priced from the low $400,000s.* The model home at Victoria Park is open weekends 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and weekdays by appointment. Please call Jeff Samuels at (847) 417-3170 for more information or an appointment. Also visit samuelshomes.com. Prices and specifications subject to change without notice.

NEW HOMES MARKETPLACE

Westleigh Farm announces model home grand opening

Seeing is believing, and homebuyers will now have the chance to visit an innovative model home that offers an exciting new perspective on luxurious one-level living in a scenic Lake Forest location.

VIP preview tours are now taking place by appointment, and the grand opening of the model is planned for Saturday, Oct. 20, and Sunday, Oct. 21.

"These homes have been designed to reflect the quality and elegance that is characteristic of the Lake Forest lifestyle," says Joseph Balistreri, project manager for North Shore Builders. "The home is set in a scenic 47-acre community, with more than half of the land dedicated to open space, ponds, orchards, meadows and walking paths. Those who travel frequently or have second homes will appreciate having lawn maintenance and snow removal taken care of for them."

Located on the site of the King Family Estate, said to be the inspiration for F. Scott Fitzgerald's classic "The Great Gatsby," historical touches include a Howard Van Doren Shaw stable that serves as the Country Estate entry and a David Adler-designed clubhouse by the famed architect. The upscale enclave will include just 26 single-family ranch homes to be built by North Shore Builders, and eight sites are set aside for design/build custom homes. Prices start at $1.1 million.

Featuring the French Eclectic exterior, the home has a stucco and stone exterior accented by a steep roof. A covered porch and inviting foyer provide a warm welcome to the model.

The impressive model includes 4,700 square feet of space, with three bedrooms and a study and 3½ baths. The open concept living area boasts an upgraded Estate Chef's kitchen with Viking appliances, ceiling-high Amish handcrafted cabinets, island/breakfast bar and a breakfast sun room. This area is open to the spacious great room with fireplace and the large covered deck extends the living area to outdoor beauty overlooking an orchard. Nine-inch wide plank wood floors accent the living area, and a formal dining room, master suite, study (or fourth bedroom) and powder room complete the gathering area.

The master bedroom with a private covered screened-in deck includes a room-sized walk-in closet and opulent bath with double vanities plus a deluxe shower and separate soaking tub. The home also features a main-floor laundry and the owners' entry with closets and bench plus access to the three-car sideload garage.

The look-out lower level is a recreational paradise with a large recreation room with a full bar and island with appliances. An exercise room with floor-to-ceiling windows, a cigar room with paneled walls and vent, and two bedrooms and a bath make this area ideal for entertaining and overnight guests.

A selection of three ranch designs range from 3,523 to over 4,497 square feet with finished basements, and a choice of exteriors include The Colonial Revival, Farmhouse Revival, Shingle Cottage and French Eclectic.

'Tour of Homes' ends this weekend

The event is open to the public from noon to 5 p.m. Sept. 22-23.

The scattered site tour, which offers the public a chance to see some of the very best being offered by new construction in the region, features homes in some of the most sought-after suburban communities in Tinley Park, Orland Park, Lemont, Lockport, Frankfort, New Lenox, Manhattan, La Grange, Burr Ridge, Channahon and Plainfield.

According to Shannon Rocha, executive officer for SSHBA, the annual Tour of Homes gives consumers the opportunity to visit a large number of new homes in a limited timeframe, while showcasing the quality that the SSHBA builders provide. The homes featured are in a wide range of prices, from $300,000 to $500,000.

Visitors on the tour will enter their first home and receive a foldable map consisting of a photo of each home and a listing of the SSHBA builders. While at the homes, consumers will be greeted by the builder's sales staff and asked to fill out a short registration form. Each person that fills out the entry will receive a raffle ticket to win prizes. They will receive a raffle ticket for each home they fill out a form. The more homes you visit — the better your chances to win.

"We have found that a majority of the attendees are just curious and may not be in the market for a new home at the moment, but our builders have sold homes months later as a direct result of the tour," says Rocha. "We feel that getting people into the homes to see them in person is the best way to get sales in the future. We hope that prospective buyers will walk away from the homes wanting to buy from an SSHBA builder."

The home construction industry has come back very strong over the last five years after enormous stresses related to the recession that began in 2007 stifled new home construction. The 2018 Tour of Homes is not only a celebration of the American Dream to own a home, but a showcase for the newest designs and floor plans.

RateSeeker, LLC. does not guarantee the accuracy of the information appearing above or the availability of rates and fees in this table. The institutions appearing in this table pay a fee to appear in this table. Annual percentage rates (APRs) are based on fully indexed rates for adjustable rate mortgages (ARMs). The APR on your specific loan may differ from the sample used. All rates are quoted on a minimum FICO score of 740. Conventional loans are based on loan amounts of $165,000. Jumbo loans are based on loan amounts of $453,101. Lock Days: 30-60. Points quoted include discount and/or origination. Payments do not include amounts for taxes and insurance. The APR may increase after consummation and may vary. FHA Mortgages include both UFMIP and MIP fees based on a loan amount of $165,000 with 5% down payment. Points quoted include discount and/or origination. Fees reflect charges relative to the APR. If your down payment is less than 20% of the home's value, you will be subject to private mortgage insurance, or PMI. VA Mortgages include funding fees based on a loan amount of $165,000 with 5% down payment. If your down payment is less than 20% of the home's value, you will be subject to private mortgage insurance, or PMI. "Call for Rates" means actual rates were not available at press time.
