BY RICK PEARSON AND MIKE RIOPELL
Chicago Tribune

A bitter race for Illinois governor that has played out in TV attack ads for more than 16 months carried over to the debate stage Thursday as Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner and Democratic challenger J.B. Pritzker assailed each other's character and integrity before voters.

But in the first face-to-face meeting of the contenders for governor, it was Rauner's exchange with third-party candidate Sam McCann, a Downstate Republican state senator running under the Conservative Party banner, that was the sharpest.

McCann, of Plainview, has sought to exploit divisions surrounding Rauner among the GOP's social conservative base over the governor's signing laws expanding abortion, immigration and transgender rights. The division was laid bare in Rauner's narrow March primary victory over state Rep. Jeanne Ives, a Wheaton Republican.

Rauner has sought to tarnish McCann's third-party candidacy by alleging he was backed by the governor's chief political nemesis, Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan, to help Pritzker.

On Thursday night, Rauner called McCann a "phony candidate," prompting McCann to respond, "Get used to it, brother. Get used to it."

Rauner said of McCann: "He has received funding from Mike Madigan for his campaign. He was put on the ballot by Mike Madigan's attorney."

Jurors told shooting of McDonald not justified

BY MEGAN CREPEAU, CHRISTY GUTOWSKI AND STACY ST. CLAIR
Chicago Tribune

Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke was not justified in shooting Laquan McDonald once — let alone 16 times — as he walked down the street armed with a knife, an expert witness told jurors Thursday shortly before the prosecution rested its murder case.

The testimony by former FBI agent Urey Patrick bolstered the prosecution's position that there were other ways to apprehend the 17-year-old that night as McDonald distanced himself from officers on the scene.

The risk posed by McDonald "did not rise to the necessity of using deadly force to stop it," testified Patrick, who relied on the infamous police dashcam video of the shooting to reach his conclusions.

"He never said anything to anybody, never made any threats, never made any move towards the police officers confronting him," said the expert on deadly use of force by police. "Here in this video he's walking away from them."

It marked a strong finish for the prosecution after sparring much of the previous day with the defense over which bullets killed the Chicago teen and how quickly he died.

Wrapping up their case on the fourth day of testimony — more quickly than many expected — prosecutors walked Cook County jurors moment by moment through the graphic video with Patrick and Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle greets supporters Thursday after announcing her plans.

Preckwinkle launches run for mayor 'because it's necessary'

BY BILL RUTHHART AND HAL DARDICK
Chicago Tribune

Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle walked into the sweltering banquet room in a Hyde Park hotel packed full of supporters Thursday afternoon to declare she's running for Chicago mayor, a job she previously had passed on pursuing.

In launching her campaign, Preckwinkle alluded to many of Chicago's ongoing problems: violent crime that claims too many lives, neighborhoods that long have had little economic opportunity and dozens of neighborhood schools that have disappeared as the city's student enrollment has shrunk.

All of it, she said, begged a question.

"There are those who have asked, and will ask, why I want to take on this job. I understand their thinking," said Preckwinkle, 71, who is unopposed on the November ballot for a third term running the county. "I've faced no shortage of challenges while in public office. Why would I want to tackle even more?"

Preckwinkle then gave an answer befitting a politician who holds the most powerful post in the Cook County Democratic Party: "I'm doing this because I can. I'm doing this because it's necessary. I don't make this decision lightly."

"Because I can" isn't exactly "Yes, we can," but Preckwinkle's no-frills 20-minute speech reflected a no-nonsense approach she's long brought to bear, first as a schoolteacher and gun control advocate and later as a Hyde Park alderman and the

Proposal would jail CPS staff for contacting kids

BY JUAN PEREZ JR.
Chicago Tribune

A powerful Chicago alderman is proposing a city ordinance that would outlaw personal communications between staff and students in any of the city's public or private elementary and high schools.

The measure put forth by Ald. Edward Burke, 14th, at Thursday's City Council meeting would build on recently enacted Chicago Public Schools policies that govern how its employees interact with students, following a Tribune investigation of the district's failures to address sexual misconduct.

"It appears the Chicago Board of Education didn't do a very good job of enforcing its own policies," Burke told the Tribune. "Getting judges into the process and the legal system into the process, I think, gives (the ordinance) a certain weight that doesn't exist with a policy or a procedure — and maybe it'll spur the legislature to do something similar statewide."

If approved, employees of any city school could face jail time and steep fines for communicating with students on their personal mobile devices or social media accounts instead of school-based networks that can be monitored by administrators.

Offenders could face up to $2,500 in fines and up to 30 days in jail, according to the proposed ordinance. Repeat offenders would face up to 180 days in jail and up to $5,000 in fines.

The ordinance would also re-

Kavanaugh accuser open to testifying next week

An attorney for Christine Blasey Ford, the woman who is accusing Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh of sexually assaulting her when they were teenagers, said Thursday that her appearing at a hearing Monday to detail her claims is "not possible" but she could testify later in the week. Her lawyer cited concerns of safety and fairness for delaying a hearing. Nation & World

Unplugging from politics, almost, at the farmers market

All I wanted was to unplug from politics and water my tomatoes, pick up some Swiss chard at the farmers market for lamb fricassee with an egg/lemon sauce, maybe get some peaches.

And just avoid the barking of the political dogs for one day. Just one.

Is that too much to ask?

To be far from the ravenous mob of old-time Chicago politicians, rushing in bravely to grab City Hall power now that Rahm has gotten out.

And also far from that fight over Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh; and the battle between Gov. Rauner and Boss Madigan's Plumber's Helper.

And also to distance myself from the viciousness among Snoop Dog, Kanye and Nick Cannon. Nick? Don't ever tell stories about a man's wife. It's just not done, man. It's just not done.

As I pulled in to park at the farmers market, I did cringe about one thing: what some would say about this column.

So, I might as well just write it for them and be done.

"Kass, with so many important things to write about, you focus instead on Swiss chard and sourdough? You're an idiot!"

Thanks for reading.

But at the farmers market Thursday morning there were no idiots, only peace.

The peace of greens and fruit and hearth-baked bread from organic flour. The peace of growers who could talk endlessly of produce. The peace of a man smiling idiotically to himself, thinking of sentences involving vegetables.

And cooks wandering about at 8 in the morning, dreaming of a masterpiece for dinner. You could see them thinking as they reached for things. You could hear their minds clicking on recipes, combinations, savory, sweet.

Ah. Peace.

The last of the Michigan peaches, the last of the squash, and tables full of new sweet crisp apples. And beets and such. And tomatoes too.

But who really needs tomatoes when you've still got bushels ripening on the vine in your own backyard? (Yeah, it's bad manners to do a tomato brag, but sometimes it just spills out.)

There was a woman walking quickly out of the market with a bag of bread loaves. I could tell it was the Katic sourdough by the stretch in her bag.

I asked if she left me any sourdough.

"There's more," she said. "Don't worry, I didn't take them all. Can I ask you something?"

Sure.

"Are you really running for mayor?"

I told her that any dead suburbanites who vote for me for mayor of Chicago will receive lifetime City Hall pensions.

"So, you're running then? I knew it!" she said. "But you don't live in Chicago!"

Neither do you, I said, slowly backing away and leaving her to her multiple loaves.

At the Katic bakery stall there were six people in front of me. I did some quick sourdough lust math in my head and hoped they'd leave me a loaf.

"Why are you so anti-Feinstein and so pro-Kavanaugh!" said an older, thin man who looked like he'd never eaten biscuits and gravy for breakfast in his life.

The woman next to him, I presumed she was his wife, nodded approvingly. And he smirked, thinly, as if speaking to a subhuman creature.

All I wanted was sourdough, dammit, and I thought about telling that to the judge, later, by way of mitigation. Maybe the judge would believe me.

But the smirking thin man, like some professors I loathed years ago, broke in on my fantasy argument to the judge.

"You like Kavanaugh?" he said.

Yes. It takes a village.

I bought my sourdough and scrambled away.

A man named Milos from Montenegro said hello, and his wife was nice. There were many nice people there. Unfortunately some weren't interested in lamb fricassee, simmered for hours in stock, with celery and chard, finished with dill and mint and that killer egg lemon sauce. And a hunk of Katic sourdough on the side.

They wanted to talk politics too.

So, I nodded, agreeably, to anything anyone said to me, like some village idiot; because I'd just spotted the Michigan peaches. And I was helpless before them.

That's when I met Laurie Whitman, in front of the peaches. She told me I needed a vacation.

It's true, I said, wondering when was the last time Betty and I took a vacation that didn't involve soccer tournaments.

Unsolicited, a woman working at the Tidey Farms stand piped up, saying their peaches were just as good as Calhoun County peaches from Illinois. She cut one, a giant, and I tasted it, made a proper food porn face and pronounced her Tidey peaches worthy.

Now what about that vacation, Laurie Whitman?

"On a catamaran voyage in the Greek Islands," she said. "You and your wife would love it. You sleep on the boat. They cook for you, like a five-star restaurant. You stop at small, noncommercial, beautiful islands. You swim. You snorkel. You eat."

And drink?

"Yes. And the sunsets, and the sunrises, and the air, and the water," said Laurie. "We're going again next year."

To sit on a deck, with a frappe, a smoke, islands on the horizon, the light thin and clear, different from the fat light of our American Plains.

Fresh real yogurt and island figs for breakfast. Grilled fish for dinner. Wine. Stars. The sea. The moon.

Just Betty. And no papers. No politics. No column.

I could write that, but what's the point?

"Does everything have to have a point?" said my editor.

I promised him that someday, I'd hold him to that.

In the midst of a historic trial, a visit to Laquan McDonald's grave offers this moment of clarity

MARY SCHMICH

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Flowers and a statue of Mary adorn the grave of police shooting victim Laquan McDonald at the Forest Home Cemetery in Forest Park.

On Wednesday I drove out to Laquan McDonald's grave.

For reasons I can't entirely explain, I wanted to see it, maybe because in the photos that have appeared with stories about his short life the grave looks so quiet and solitary, so different from the furor surrounding his violent death.

Under the blue September sky, I headed west along I-290, listening to periodic radio updates on the trial of Jason Van Dyke, the Chicago police officer who shot and killed Laquan one night in October 2014.

Whizzing along, I wondered if other drivers were listening to the same radio station and if so what they were thinking. A lot of them were probably preoccupied by other concerns. They were hungry or tired, mad at the boss, worried about a child. No matter how important this trial is to the city, the people in it have their own lives to live.

On the radio, somewhere between the Damen and Homan off-ramps, I listened to a reporter describe that day's testimony from the medical examiner who detailed the wounds on Laquan's body.

Entry wounds, exit wounds, 24 holes in all, the reporter recounted, adding that there was debate in the courtroom over which of Van Dyke's 16 shots killed Laquan.

At exit 20, just past Oak Park, I got off the expressway, then headed south to Forest Home Cemetery.

I'd learned from the cemetery's website that it was the last resting spot for all kinds of people. Ernest Hemingway's parents are buried there. So are famous radicals including Emma Goldman and Lucy Parsons. There are mobsters who died in the 1929 St. Valentine's Day Massacre, along with victims of the 1915 Eastland ship disaster. In one spot lie markers for unnamed casualties of the 1880-81 smallpox epidemic.

"Forest Home Cemetery offers a uniquely varied look at History," says the headline on the TripAdvisor site.

I wasn't sure exactly where Laquan was buried, but I knew the lot number, so I wended along the dirt paths, past wilted balloons and tired flowers, over a bridge that spans the DesPlaines River, until I found the number 32 on a tree.

It was a peaceful spot, shaded by old trees, free of people, quiet except for the distant whoosh of cars.

I wandered briefly, past stone markers big and small, past a patch of fresh dirt the size of a casket and next to it a small sign that said "Loving Mother."

Every grave was proof of someone's grief, every stone a unique lament.

Then there it was, not the biggest headstone but a substantial one, flanked by a statue of the Virgin Mary and two vases of artificial flowers:

BELOVED SON & BROTHER
LAQUAN J. MCDONALD
Sept. 25, 1997
Oct. 20, 2014

In the news reports and in the courtroom, Laquan is inevitably reduced to something less than real. He's a knife-wielding figure in a dark police dashcam video. He's a bullet-pocked sketch. He's a victim or a troublemaker or a cause.

In the grass and stone of the cemetery, he felt, pure and simple, like a life lost.

Looking at his grave, it was hard not to think about the fact that he was shot at 9:57 p.m. Oct. 20, 2014, and that another Chicago police officer arrived on the scene with a Taser at 9:58 p.m.

One minute between a gun and a Taser, between life and a headstone.

On Thursday, the prosecution rested its case against Van Dyke. The defense will now have its turn to counter the testimony of the prosecution witnesses, one of them an expert who said that "the risk posed by Mr. McDonald did not rise to the necessity of using deadly force to stop him."

Van Dyke's attorneys will argue otherwise. They'll offer their own experts and make the case that despite the video that shows Laquan walking away from the officers when the first shot is fired, Van Dyke made a reasonable call.

Whatever the verdict, it will go down in Chicago's long history of hard relations between the police and African-Americans.

And cemeteries are a way we keep track of our history, so it seems fitting that Laquan is buried in the midst of so many others whose lives and deaths have shaped Chicago.

On the Forest Home website is a link to "people of interest buried at the cemetery."

One day the list should include the name Laquan McDonald.

Madigan writes he 'didn't do enough' to curb harassment

By Mike Riopell
Chicago Tribune

Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan wrote he "didn't do enough" to ensure people could report sexual harassment at the Illinois Capitol, where complaints continue to cloud state politics.

"I have made it a personal mission to take this issue head-on and correct past mistakes," Madigan wrote in an op-ed published by the Chicago Tribune. "I wish I would have done so sooner."

Madigan

Complaints of sexual harassment have rocked the longtime speaker's political and government organizations, putting him on the defensive after years of setting the agenda. Madigan has called for independent reviews, and he has ousted top aides and operatives, including top deputy Tim Mapes. He has also faced criticism from within his party about his handling of the complaints and writes there "will be a zero-tolerance policy for any kind of harassment."

Madigan's op-ed sounds a contrite tone in the closing weeks of the campaign in which Democrats and Republicans are battling for seats in Springfield. The leader of the state Democratic Party wrote in the op-ed that he has met with more than 100 women to ask about how he could do a better job.

"One of the first meetings I attended was with a group of women in their 20s and 30s. I heard stories of inappropriate behavior, both inside and outside of the Capitol. What's worse, these young women did not feel there was anyone willing to listen or take action to alleviate their concerns," Madigan wrote.

"What became clear is that I didn't do enough, and that we, collectively, have failed in the Capitol to ensure everyone can reliably, confidentially and safely report harassment. I thought the pathways were there, but they weren't," he wrote.

In the op-ed, he lays out several harassment incidents without many details. In one case, he says he removed a supervisor who didn't report abuse and harassment. He also says someone who made "inappropriate comments to several female staffers" doesn't work in his office.

Madigan also wrote that he "learned of a legislative secretary who was being harassed by a male lobbyist."

"Despite this lobbyist's attempts to suppress her, this woman summoned the courage to report his abuses," he wrote. "We immediately investigated and contacted the lobbyist's employer. He is no longer a lobbyist."

The speaker writes he is "committed to acting immediately" if other issues are raised by Maggie Hickey, a former federal prosecutor and inspector general for Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner whom Madigan picked to further investigate "all allegations of discrimination and harassment."

Madigan chief of staff Jessica Basham said Hickey doesn't have a specific timetable for her review.

Publication of the op-ed comes on the eve of the first televised debate between Rauner and Democratic challenger J.B. Pritzker.

Sexual harassment was a regular theme in the Democratic primary from which Pritzker emerged, and Pritzker is among Democratic contenders whom Rauner routinely ties to Madigan.

Mapes' departure in June came after a House staff member accused him of sexual harassment over several years and fostering a difficult work environment that included a "culture of sexism, harassment and bullying." The staffer's allegations followed a string of complaints from women about men's behavior at the Capitol, particularly Democrats.

Last October, victim rights advocate Denise Rotheimer accused state Sen. Ira Silverstein of using her advocacy for a crime victim rights bill as an opening to pursue a personal relationship and produced hundreds of Facebook messages documenting their interactions. A newly appointed legislative inspector general concluded Silverstein had acted in a way that was unbecoming of a lawmaker, and he lost his re-election bid.

In February, the Chicago Tribune disclosed sexual harassment allegations from Alaina Hampton, who was working on Democratic House campaigns and had received aggressive and inappropriate text messages from Kevin Quinn, a top aide in Madigan's political organization. Madigan then ousted Quinn, the brother of Ald. Marty Quinn, the point man in the speaker's 13th Ward.

Shortly after Hampton came forward, a lawmaker and several staffers approached Madigan with complaints about abusive behavior from longtime political operative and lobbyist Shaw Decremer. Madigan then parted ways with Decremer. The speaker also selected a law firm to look into Hampton's complaints.

In May, North Side Rep. Kelly Cassidy complained she felt targeted by Mapes, Madigan's then-chief of staff, after she was critical of how the speaker handled the sexual harassment complaints. Cassidy said Mapes called the Cook County sheriff's office to inquire about a part-time job she held, which she viewed as a "warning."

Later in May, top Madigan deputy Rep. Lou Lang of Skokie resigned his leadership posts after a former medical marijuana advocate accused him of retaliation, verbal abuse and "inappropriate behavior," though Illinois legislature's top watchdog recently wrote that "evidence does not support" abuse complaints against him.

On the Republican side, state Rep. Nick Sauer resigned nearly two months ago following a report of accusations that he sent nude photos of an ex-girlfriend to other men online. Rauner called the resignation the "right thing to do."

And House Republican leader Jim Durkin this month pulled support from a Downstate lawmaker, citing "allegations" about his behavior and claiming a "zero tolerance policy on harassment of any kind," but declined to provide further details.

The Rev. Tom Boharic blesses a memorial to the 10 children who died in Little Village that the city is said to be seeking to tear down.

Family of children who died in Little Village fire try to preserve memorial

By Elvia Malagon
Chicago Tribune

The families of 10 children who died in a Little Village apartment fire are trying to preserve a memorial garden after they heard rumors that city officials were going to tear it down.

The rumors spurred relatives to start an online petition that had garnered more than 1,000 signatures by Thursday, in addition to about 100 signatures on paper that relatives got by walking through Little Village. Thursday afternoon, Matt DeMateo, from New Life Centers of Chicagoland, and other community organizers met with relatives, including three of the mothers of the children, and said they would help set up meetings with city officials to maintain a memorial.

Yolanda Ayala, the mother of five of the children who died, said she visits the memorial daily to say good morning and good night.

"I mean, like, whether it stays or goes, they're going to see me," she said. "I lost five kids, so whether there's crosses, balloons, candles, bears or nothing, they are always going to see me every day."

Ald. George Cardenas, whose 12th Ward includes the block where the fire took place, said there have been reports about gang activity and drinking around the memorial. Cardenas said his office is working with community groups to come up with a permanent solution for a memorial. And he said everyone will have to agree eventually to a timeline for the current memorial's removal.

"We are treading lightly," Cardenas said.

Marjani Williams, spokeswoman for the Department of Streets and Sanitation, said city crews have not altered the memorial and have not gotten a request remove it, although Cardenas' office did put in a request to clean up the block. Williams said Streets and Sanitation was reaching out to Cardenas to make sure everyone was communicating about the memorial.

The 10 children — ranging in ages from 3 months to 16 years old — died in an apartment fire during a sleepover in the 2200 block of South Sacramento Avenue in Little Village. Firefighters responded about 4 a.m. Aug. 26 and found a fire that had grown so hot and large that it could have been smoldering for up to half an hour before someone called 911, fire officials have said. The cause of the fire has so far been classified as "undetermined," pending further investigation.

The children were identified as Amayah Almaraz, 3 months; Alanni Ayala, 3; Gialanni Ayala, 5; Ariel Garcia, 5; Giovanni Ayala, 10; Xavier Contreras, 11; Nathan Contreras, 13; Adrian Hernandez, 14; Cesar Contreras, 14; and Victor Mendoza, 16.

Soon after the fire, New Life Centers brought materials to help the families create a memorial garden in a grassy area in front of the property where the fire happened. A Little Village artist painted in cursive the names of each child on white crosses that also include red wood hearts. As the weeks passed, relatives and friends dropped off small items for each child.

The family put up a sign asking the public to respect the space. "If you come and Pay Respects all we ask IS DON'T GANG BANG, And Don't be out here all hours of the night PLEASE!"

Jessie Cobos, who cared for many of the children, said a memorial in the neighborhood is needed because some relatives don't have the means to make the drive to visit where the children are buried.

"We are trying to mourn and say goodbye the best way that we know how," Cobos said. "We are not taught how to, you know, live without yours, and she (Yolanda) lost half her family and that's not something that I could come up to her every day and tell her, 'It's going to be OK,' because I know it's not. But what helps her get through it is passing by here in the morning and saying good morning to them crosses and coming home at night and saying good night."

Freeman named first female NIU president

By Dawn Rhodes
Chicago Tribune

Northern Illinois University has elevated its acting president into the permanent role, marking the first time the school has installed a female leader in its 119-year history.

Trustees formally named Lisa C. Freeman NIU's newest president in a vote Thursday morning. Freeman had served as interim president since July 2017. She now takes over a university where enrollment has steadily declined and that has been bruised by a series of controversies.

"It is a great honor to be the first woman president," Freeman said in an interview. "But I will be happiest when being a woman president isn't noteworthy. While I'm the first woman president of NIU, I expect not to be the last."

Freeman

Freeman took over as interim amid a tumultuous change of leadership for the DeKalb-based campus.

Her predecessor, Doug Baker, resigned in June 2017 following the release of a blistering state ethics watchdog report alleging financial mismanagement by him and some of his staff. Freeman worked as the executive vice president and provost for four years before being tapped to replace Baker, but the state report did not implicate her in any wrongdoing.

NIU's board of trustees moved quickly over the summer to make Freeman president despite initially expressing an interest in conducting a broader search for a new leader.

A committee of faculty, staff and board members started meeting in January to develop a profile for the ideal president and plan the search.

But in July, trustees announced that NIU would not pursue a national search at all. Instead, saying that Freeman fit the bill of the committee's wish list, the board offered up the interim president as the sole candidate for the job and embarked on a series of listening sessions in the community to solicit feedback.

Part of this strategy, officials said, was to save time and money.

Freeman's four-year contract pays her a $450,000 base salary with the potential for a $25,000 performance-based bonus each fiscal year. The contract also gives the board the option to pay her another $25,000 in deferred compensation for every year she completes as president.

Freeman said Thursday she would donate any bonus money to the NIU Foundation.

Not all faculty leaders were sold on selecting Freeman in this way, according to a transcript of the board meeting obtained by the Tribune. Michael Haji-Sheikh, an engineering professor, said he thought board members were not being truthful about how they looked for a new president. He also said that not subjecting Freeman to the competition of a search could undermine her.

"So the faculty, when something goes wrong, will say, 'Well, they never went through a search,'" Haji-Sheikh said.

Other professors agreed with the board that NIU had a known entity in Freeman and was making a wise choice.

"You roll the dice and you might find someone better than her, but you might not," said Scot Schraufnagel, a political science professor. "We kind of want to hang on to her because she's doing a great job."

Her appointment gained support among students as well. "I think Lisa is one of the best, if not the best, president we could have at this university at this point," said Tristan Martin, a senior and speaker of the student senate.

In a scenario familiar to NIU, Freeman must try to bring stability after a tumultuous time at the university.

Northern Illinois was already embroiled in a series of scandals when Baker was hired in 2013, including accusations that university police had mishandled an allegation of sexual assault by an officer. Baker promised a course-correct when he accepted the position.

But in May 2017, the state Office of the Executive Inspector General released a report concluding the university spent more than $1 million in taxpayer funds and ignored competitive bidding laws to improperly hire five employees and pay for their travel and lodging expenses. All this took place during Baker's tenure, the state watchdog said.

Baker denied the allegations but resigned two weeks after the report's release.

Freeman has pledged to recommit the university to transparency and shared governance. To help address the spending problems under Baker, Freeman made public a running quarterly log of any reimbursements she sought for travel and hospitality costs.

Judge denies routine request to toss case

a second witness.

McDonald's mother, Tina Hunter, who attended the trial Thursday for the first time since testimony began this week, bowed her head while the video played multiple times, but she could still hear the witnesses narrating her son's death in detail. She began to quietly weep and buried her face in a tissue as the Rev. Jesse Jackson, sitting with the family, put his arm around her and gently rubbed her back.

Hunter, who has never spoken publicly about the shooting, left the Leighton Criminal Court Building without commenting.

Van Dyke, 40, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder, 16 counts of aggravated battery and one count of official misconduct in McDonald's death. Prosecutors have argued that Van Dyke had no legal justification for opening fire because the teen posed no threat, but Van Dyke's attorneys have attempted to paint McDonald as an out-of-control, violent person who disobeyed police commands to drop the knife while high on PCP.

In the minutes before the shooting, other police officers had called for a Taser unit to help apprehend McDonald and tried to corral him with their squad cars. Patrick praised those efforts, telling the jury that the other officers responded in a manner proportional to the risk posed by the teen.

"He is a risk. There's no question. He's been noncompliant, and he is armed with a knife. But there is nobody within reach of him, and he is moving away from the only people on the scene who could be imminently in reach of him," he said.

Even if McDonald posed an imminent threat at one point, that threat had ended by the time he had been shot and fell to the street, testified Patrick, who has taken the stand as an expert witness across the country. In police-involved shootings, he said, officers will continue shooting usually for a second or a second and a half before they are "capable of recognizing" that the threat has ended.

Prosecutors have previously established that McDonald fell to the pavement less than two seconds after he was first shot but that Van Dyke continued firing for about another 12 seconds, emptying his 16-shot semiautomatic gun.

"Mr. McDonald went down very suddenly, very hard," Patrick said. "He is at this point clearly incapacitated."

Despite an intense cross-examination by lead defense attorney Daniel Herbert, Patrick remained steadfast in his position that McDonald did not pose a threat that justified Van Dyke firing his gun.

Still, the defense may have gained some ground when Patrick, the author of a widely respected book on the use of force in policing, said the fact that other officers did not shoot had no bearing on whether Van Dyke was justified. Prosecutors frequently have reminded jurors that Van Dyke was the only one of 10 officers on the scene to shoot.

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Tina Hunter, the mother of slain teen Laquan McDonald, wipes her eyes during testimony in the murder trial of Officer Jason Van Dyke on Thursday.

Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke listens during the fourth day of his trial for the shooting death of Laquan McDonald at the Leighton Criminal Court Building.

Urey Patrick, a use-of-force expert hired by prosecutors, testifies Thursday that the shooting was not justified.

Herbert also suggested for the first time during his questioning that Van Dyke may have believed McDonald had a gun since he pulled his pants up at one point by the waistband. But Patrick said he didn't find that a reasonable conclusion given the video and radio traffic before the shooting. Indeed, Van Dyke never raised that concern with investigators after the shooting, according to previously released city records.

Before Patrick testified, an FBI ballistics expert helped shore up for the jury where and when the bullets from Van Dyke's gun were striking McDonald in the video taken from a police dashboard camera.

Since the video has no audio, the expert, Scott Patterson, told the jury he had to rely on visual cues to determine when each shot was fired. He said his analysis was further complicated by the flashing lights of the squad car behind Van Dyke that made it difficult to see muzzle flashes and the slide of Van Dyke's pistol kicking back to indicate a shot.

Patterson, an FBI ballistics expert, testified that a slowed-down version of the video depicted several key moments, including Van Dyke's partner, Joseph Walsh, flinching and ducking as the first shot was fired, indicating that he "wasn't ready for a projectile to be fired."

He also noted the "plumes" of debris — not "puffs of smoke" as some have said — that were kicked up where bullets were hitting the roadway after McDonald fell, in some cases after passing through his body.

Patterson said the visual evidence shows that about 14 seconds passed between shots being fired by Van Dyke. McDonald fell to the pavement 1.6 seconds after the first bullet was fired, he said.

During Patterson's testimony, jurors also were shown a video of a "rate of fire" test conducted by the FBI that generally mirrored the conditions of McDonald's shooting. When that test shooter fired 16 bullets within 14 seconds from a distance of about 10½ feet — as Van Dyke did — it resulted in a "deliberate" and "methodical" rate of fire, Patterson said.

"He was taking his time to aim each shot," Patterson testified.

On cross-examination, Herbert tried to raise doubt in the jury's mind about the competence of Patterson's testimony. He noted that not even Patterson could say from his analysis of the dashcam video that every bullet hit McDonald or where it struck.

The jury, though, heard Wednesday from Cook County's chief medical examiner that each of the 16 shots struck McDonald. Jurors also were shown photos of 24 entrance and exit wounds on the teen's bullet-riddled body.

The prosecution ended its case by calling Chicago resident Jose Torres, the last of its 24 witnesses. Torres, who witnessed the shooting while driving his son, Xavier, to the hospital, testified that he had an unobstructed view of McDonald as the teen walked down the street. His son gave similar testimony earlier in the week.

McDonald, the elder Torres told jurors, had his hands to his sides and was walking away from officers in the seconds before the shooting. The officers shouted at McDonald, who turned his head and looked at them before gunfire erupted, Torres said.

Torres testified that he heard more gunshots fired after McDonald had fallen to the street than when he was standing up. He wasn't sure how many bullets were fired, Torres said, but it was "enough to upset me."

" 'Why the f are they still shooting him when he was on the ground?' " he recalled himself asking out loud.

Torres stood his ground on cross-examination even as Randy Rueckert, one of Van Dyke's lawyers, suggested that a squad vehicle had pulled in front of his vehicle, blocking his view of the shooting.

"You're confusing me," Torres fired back after Rueckert peppered him with questions about how many police squads he saw that night and their direction of travel. "I don't understand what you're trying to get to.

"There was no other vehicle in my line of sight," he continued. "I had a clear view of Laquan McDonald."

Rueckert did not follow up with evidence to support the suggestion that Torres' view had been blocked and quickly ended his questioning.

Even though they were witnesses to McDonald's killing, Torres and his son were shooed away from the scene by police and never gave a statement that night, the Tribune has previously reported.

Torres contacted the city agency that investigates police shootings after hearing news reports in which police claimed McDonald had lunged at officers with the knife. In an interview with the city's Office of Inspector General, Torres said he reached out because he had two sons close to McDonald's age and felt like justice was being subverted.

"I couldn't live with myself," Torres told investigators. "If something like that would happen to my kids, I would wish somebody would come forward and say something."

Jurors were not told about Torres' efforts to call city officials' attention to the shooting.

After the prosecution rested, Herbert argued outside the jurors' presence that the state had not met its burden of proof and asked Judge Vincent Gaughan to toss out the case entirely — a routine request that rarely is granted.

The defense argued that prosecutors had not proved anything about Van Dyke's state of mind when he fired his weapon, and regardless that the officer's gunfire was legal because McDonald was fleeing a lawful arrest. Prosecutors countered by saying it was clear that Van Dyke knew he could cause harm to McDonald when he fired.

"The defendant was not justified in firing any of the 16 rounds," prosecutor Joseph Cullen said. "Each time he fired, it became even less necessary."

Gaughan swiftly denied the defense's request.

After Gaughan announced his decision, Van Dyke's wife, Tiffany, began crying in the courtroom. Van Dyke, who had been smiling after court recessed for the day, saw her weeping and walked into the gallery to comfort her. He was heard explaining to her that it's very rare for judges to acquit defendants in the middle of a trial and that the ruling was not an indication of the jury's eventual verdict.

Van Dyke's attorneys will begin presenting their self-defense case Monday.

Burke proposal would put school guidelines into law

quire local organizations that serve youth to create written policies that define appropriate forms of communication between children and staff.

Last month, the Chicago Board of Education approved sweeping policy requirements that govern how students and staff interact online, even as board members expressed concern about the need to train workers and kids on the new rules. CPS teachers, coaches, vendors and volunteers now cannot communicate with students via personal mobile devices, texts, personal email addresses, nondistrict accounts and instant messages.

Burke's proposal would take those policies and convert them into a local law that must be followed by all elementary and secondary schools that operate within the city, and put violators at risk of criminal prosecution.

School employees would be prohibited from communicating with students via the student's mobile device, personal email or social media accounts or non-school-approved group messaging applications. Employees would also be barred from communicating with current students via their personal email and social media accounts.

School systems would be allowed to "authorize exceptions," including for pre-approved safety-related communications, bulk text message notifications or programs for at-risk youth.

"CPS is committed to supporting all constructive efforts to better safeguard our students, and we will be working with Ald. Burke to ensure his proposal supports our shared goal of protecting students and holding adults accountable," district spokesman Michael Passman said in a statement.

Policies that curb online interactions between students and school staff aren't unusual, though such rules do underscore the challenge of regulating communication in the age of smartphones and digital media.

Until the Tribune's investigation, CPS' formal rules on electronic communications dated to years before the iPhone and Facebook even existed. Cellphone policies were left to individual schools.

While the district distributed "guidelines" to principals that included restrictions on staff interactions with students on social networking sites last year, a review of the district's response to sexual misconduct by former Illinois Executive Inspector General Maggie Hickey this summer concluded the district's efforts were "insufficient and ineffective" because most officials didn't even know the guidelines existed.

Some principals acknowledged employees at their school consistently violated such guidelines anyway — for example, by permitting coaches to send private text messages to students.

"It appears that, to date, society hasn't done as good a job as it should in protecting kids," Burke told the Tribune. "But if this procedure, or rule, or policy in the Chicago school system is worthwhile, then why isn't it applied to all schools?"

State legislators have responded to the CPS sexual abuse scandal with a set of proposals that would swiftly revoke the licenses of educators found by districts to have sexually abused students and would make such disciplinary action more transparent to the public.

More than a half-dozen City Council members have co-sponsored Burke's proposal so far: Ald. Michael Scott Jr., 24th; Ald. Patrick O'Connor, 40th; Ald. Daniel Solis, 25th; Ald. Brendan Reilly, 42nd; Ald. Margaret Laurino, 39th; Ald. Pat Dowell, 3rd; and Ald. Matthew O'Shea, 19th.

"These new laws will help to further protect our children by putting new safeguards into the Municipal Code while ensuring that violators face strict penalties," O'Connor said in a statement.

Burke also plans to call for hearings on the proposal, which he said could include a call for testimony from CPS CEO Janice Jackson.

Mayor says union 'wrong' for defending Burge

By Gregory Pratt
Chicago Tribune

Mayor Rahm Emanuel said the police union was "wrong" when it defended disgraced former Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge this week, calling the late ex-cop a "scar" whose actions tarnished the city and Police Department.

Emanuel was asked at a post-City Council meeting news conference what he thought about the Chicago Fraternal Order of Police union's declaration that the "full story" about Burge, who died this week in Florida, has never been told. Burge was convicted of lying about torture that occurred under his command during the 1970s and '80s

In response, the mayor touted his administration's work on police reform, including making reparations to Burge victims.

"Jon Burge's passing allows us to note we have a long road to go, but I actually think for the first time in a long time we're on the right path," Emanuel said.

The mayor's comments came two weeks after he opted not to seek re-election and mark the second high-profile instance in which he has flouted the union since then.

In making the statement, Emanuel touted the proposed consent decree negotiated between the city, state Attorney General Lisa Madigan and community groups that would govern sweeping changes to the Chicago Police Department. In August 2017, Madigan sued the Emanuel administration to force a court-overseen consent decree, and the mayor agreed to work toward one.

Until recently, Emanuel and Madigan had been at odds over whether Chicago police officers should have to document every instance in which they point a gun at someone, but Emanuel agreed to the measure after announcing he would not seek a third term.

Calling the Burge years a "dark chapter," the mayor said he hoped the consent decree will open another chapter for the city and ensure that new reforms to the department "stand the test of time."

Emanuel also touted his administration's actions in setting up reparations for Burge victims, saying there's "no statute of limitations on our moral responsibility."

"We're the only city to have actually funded reparations for victims of police abuse," he said. "We're not the only city with it, but we're the only city to take a moral stand in that direction."

Under Burge, police committed torture by electric shock, beat suspects and suffocated them with typewriter covers. Most of Burge's alleged misconduct took place decades ago, but the accusations against him played a key role in former Gov. George Ryan's decision to vacate Illinois' death row in 2000 and declare a moratorium on capital punishment in the state.

Lawsuits from Burge's victims, meanwhile, have cost taxpayers many millions in settlements and judgments, much of it paid out of city coffers in the past decade.

Burge himself never was charged directly in any of the torture allegations, though he was fired from the Chicago Police Department in 1993. Years later, in 2010, he was convicted of lying about his conduct and sentenced to prison. He was released in 2014 and returned to his waterfront home south of Tampa.

Students stable after lightning strike near school bus stop

By Matthew Walberg
Chicago Tribune

Three middle school students were hospitalized Thursday morning after lightning struck near where they were standing at a school bus stop in Round Lake Heights, officials said.

The students, who attend Palombi Middle School in Lake Villa, were "alert, communicative, and in stable condition," Lake Villa Community Consolidated School District 41 officials said in a Facebook post late Thursday morning.

The incident happened about 7:20 a.m. at Lotus and Ottawa drives in Round Lake Heights, according to Chief Greg Formica of the Greater Round Lake Fire Protection District.

The injured children were part of a group of middle school students who were standing under a tree near the bus stop in the far north suburb, according to Alex Barbour, assistant superintendent of School District 41.

"There were approximately nine students at that particular bus stop, and there was a lightning strike near the vicinity of where they were standing," Barbour said.

When responders arrived they found the three injured students on the ground, Formica said. The students were taken to Advocate Condell Medical Center in Libertyville. At the time, two were in stable condition and one was in serious condition, Formica said.

Round Lake Heights police reported in a statement posted on social media that the parents of each victim were notified and either responded to the scene or directly to Condell.

Barbour said he did not know who called 911 but that the bus arrived a few minutes after the incident and transported the uninjured students to the school, where officials contacted their parents. He declined to identify the injured students and did not know their current conditions but said he was told their injuries did not appear to be life-threatening.

"In fact, all of the students, according to the EMT, were responsive (at the scene)," Barbour said.

The middle school remained open, but Barbour said staffers were available to talk to students about the incident.

The students were caught outside during a line of thunderstorms that dumped more than a half-inch of rain on central Lake County. While not commenting specifically on the Round Lake Heights incident, National Weather Service meteorologist Todd Kluber advised finding an enclosed area like a building or a vehicle during an electrical storm.

Kluber also recommended avoiding open areas that are exposed to avoid being the tallest object in the area as well as staying away from beneath tall objects like trees or flagpoles.

"Lightning is going to try to find its quickest way to the ground," he said.

Mayor Rahm Emanuel speaks to the media following a city council meeting on Thursday.

Emanuel called to act on civilian police oversight

By John Byrne and Gregory Pratt
Chicago Tribune

Mayor Rahm Emanuel on Thursday said he's leaving it to aldermen to figure out civilian oversight of the Chicago Police Department, declining to throw his weight behind getting it done before his time in office ends.

Backers of a community group's plan to set up a civilian board held a City Hall news conference to call on the outgoing mayor to act on their proposal before he leaves office next spring.

The mayor was noncommittal. He told reporters he agrees to the need for such oversight but the decision rests with the City Council, a body he largely controls.

And he listed other entities that already do or will soon oversee police in Chicago, among them the Civilian Office of Police Accountability, the Police Board, the city Inspector General's Office, and the federal judge and monitor who will both be part of the federal consent decree Emanuel has agreed to after Attorney General Lisa Madigan sued the city. None of those entities, however, are primarily intended to give community oversight to the police.

"(Aldermen) are trying to find a majority (to support a civilian oversight proposal)," Emanuel said after Thursday's City Council meeting. "But I don't think the overall need, or that there is a vacuum as it relates to civilian oversight."

Members of the Grassroots Alliance for Police Accountability joined with aldermen who support their proposal to push for their idea. They worry that now that Emanuel has agreed to the consent decree, the civilian oversight board could fall by the wayside.

Civilian oversight is "a key structural reform" needed at the department, said Adam Gross, an attorney who has been providing policy and legal support to GAPA. Gross pointed out that the police accountability task force created by Emanuel to look at how to improve relations between Chicago residents and the department called for it.

"The consent decree, if it moves as the city hopes it will, will be over in a few years. We will have no court oversight at that point," Gross said.

And North Side Ald. Harry Osterman, 48th, called on Emanuel and the current City Council to vote on the issue rather than wait until after the February municipal elections.

In the GAPA proposal, the police superintendent and command staff would continue to run the day-to-day operations of the department, but a civilian commission would have final say on policy decisions.

The commission would be able to fire the superintendent, a decision currently left only to the mayor. The commission's oversight would extend beyond the Police Department to COPA, which investigates police misconduct allegations, and the Chicago Police Board, which decides discipline.

The alliance's proposal gives the civilian commission no authority to review individual disciplinary decisions by COPA. But the the commission would have the power to hire and fire the head of that police oversight agency as well as the head of and members of the Police Board. Those hiring decisions would be subject to City Council confirmation.

Emanuel has declined for months to take a public position on the proposals, saying he would let aldermen consider them. But police Superintendent Eddie Johnson has said he doesn't think a civilian board should have the power to set Police Department policy, as the GAPA plan would allow.

After the alliance came forth with its civilian oversight framework in April following two years of community meetings on the topic, Ald. Ariel Reboyras, an Emanuel ally who chairs the City Council Public Safety Committee, introduced two police oversight ordinances of his own to the council.

Reboyras' documents envision an oversight board more advisory in nature. Under his plans, the members would be appointed by some combination of the mayor, the City Council and other commissioners, rather than by publicly elected councils in each police district. Neither of Reboyras' proposals gives the board power to fire the superintendent.

Also Thursday, the council changed the zoning of a property in Jefferson Park, a move that could clear the way for construction of a 75-unit building with up to 30 apartments set aside for tenants with Chicago Housing Authority vouchers to subsidize their rent.

The proposed project has prompted a long, racially tinged fight, with the plan's supporters saying those against it don't want low-income African-American families moving into the bungalow belt neighborhood. Opponents argue they're simply worried about traffic congestion and school overcrowding.

And the council adopted Emanuel's ordinance to hike taxes on electronic cigarette products. The measure passed with just two "no" votes, one from downtown Ald. Brendan Reilly, 42nd, and the other from Northwest Side Ald. Nick Sposato, 38th. Both complained the mayor was ramming the tax increase through the council too quickly.

"I don't care if we're changing the city flag to a smiley face, we deserve more than 18 hours to consider that," Reilly said.

Tollway extends payment period

By Mary Wisniewski
Chicago Tribune

If you had trouble paying missed tolls online over the weekend or early this week, it wasn't you — it was the system. So the Illinois Tollway is extending some deadlines to pay.

The Tollway suffered a problem with its computer system on Saturday and again early this week, said spokesman Dan Rozek. This caused customers to be unable to make online payments, and for the phone system to be especially busy.

To help customers who encountered problems over the last few days, Rozek said the Tollway is extending payment deadlines, which means that customers with violation notices have three additional days beyond their initial deadlines to pay. Customers paying tolls online have an additional seven days beyond their initial deadlines to pay.

Rozek said the system is now operating as it should and customers should be able to pay. Missed tolls have to be paid online within seven days. To pay, visit www.illinoistollway.com/tolling-information/unpaid-tolls.

Toll violation notices are sent to customers who accumulate three or more toll violations within a 12-month period, with fines of $20 per violation plus the cost of the unpaid toll. The Tollway will send out a violation notice within 90 days of a user's third violation.

WASHINGTON — An attorney for Christine Blasey Ford, the woman who is accusing Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh of sexually assaulting her when they were teenagers, said Thursday that her appearing at a hearing Monday to detail her claims is "not possible" but she could testify later in the week.

Kavanaugh

Debra Katz, Ford's lawyer, relayed the response to top staffers on the Senate Judiciary Committee on Thursday, requesting to set up a call with them to "discuss the conditions under which (Ford) would be prepared to testify next week."

"As you are aware, she's been receiving death threats which have been reported to the FBI and she and her family have been forced out of their home," Katz wrote to the committee. "She wishes to testify, provided that we can agree on terms that are fair and which ensure her safety. A hearing on Monday is not possible and the committee's insistence that it occur then is arbitrary in any event."

The preference would be for Ford to testify Thursday, and she doesn't want Kavanaugh in the same room, her attorney told Judiciary Committee staff in a 30-minute call that also touched on security concerns and others issues, according to a Senate aide who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

No decisions were reached, the aide said.

Katz reiterated that Ford, a psychology professor in California, would like the FBI to investigate before her testimony.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said through a spokesman late Thursday that he would be consulting with colleagues on how to proceed.

Kavanaugh wrote to Grassley in a letter released by the White House that he looks forward to testifying. "I continue to want a hearing as soon as possible, so that I can clear my name," Kavanaugh said in the letter.

Amid the maneuvering, the nomination was roiled further late Thursday by incendiary tweets from a Kavanaugh friend and supporter who publicly identified another high school classmate of Kavanugh's as Ford's possible attacker.

Ed Whelan, a former clerk to the late Justice Antonin Scalia and president of the Ethics and Public Policy Center, pointed to floor plans, online photographs and other information to suggest a location for the house party in suburban Maryland that Ford described. He also named and posted photographs of the classmate he suggested could be responsible.

ALEX WONG/GETTY
Sens. Mazie Hirono and Kirsten Gillibrand defend Christine Blasey Ford on Thursday. Ford has accused nominee Brett Kavanaugh of sexual assault at a high school party in the '80s.

Ford dismissed Whelan's theory late Thursday: "I knew them both, and socialized with" them, Ford said, adding that she had once visited the other classmate in the hospital. "There is zero chance that I would confuse them."

Republicans on Capitol Hill and White House officials sought to distance themselves from Whelan's claims. Kavanaugh and his allies have been privately discussing a defense that would not question whether an incident happened to Ford, but instead would raise doubts that the attacker was Kavanaugh, according to a person familiar with the discussions.

Democratic senators, pointing to the Anita Hill hearings in October 1991, have defended Ford's request to have the FBI do its own probe before she testifies. Back then, the FBI report into Hill's allegations of sexual harassment against now-Justice Clarence Thomas was finished on Sept. 26, 1991 — three days after its inquiry began.

"Someone who is lying does not ask the FBI to investigate their claims," Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y., said Thursday on Capitol Hill. "Who is not asking the FBI to investigate these claims? The White House. Judge Kavanaugh has not asked to have the FBI investigate these claims. Is that the reaction of an innocent person? It is not."

Gillibrand said Senate Republicans' ultimatum of a Monday hearing was "bullying."

Republicans have rejected the comparisons to the Hill proceedings. Grassley wrote in a Wednesday letter to Democrats on the Judiciary Committee that the FBI investigated Hill's accusations against Thomas when they were still not public.

A senior Senate Democratic aide noted that reopening FBI background checks was fairly routine.

A handful of pivotal senators have yet to disclose how they will vote on Kavanaugh's confirmation, including GOP Sens. Susan Collins of Maine, and Lisa Murkowski of Alaska. On Thursday, Alaska Gov. Bill Walker and Lt. Gov. Byron Mallott, both independents, issued a statement opposing Kavanaugh's nomination.

"Mr. Kavanaugh's record does not demonstrate a commitment to legal precedent that protects working families," Walker and Mallott said in the statement, remarks that could put pressure on Murkowski.

Earlier Thursday, Senate Republicans had reiterated their resolve to press forward with a vote on Kavanaugh if Ford chose not to testify before the 21-member Judiciary Committee. "If she doesn't want to participate and tell her story, there's no reason for us to delay," Sen. John Cornyn, Texas, the No. 2 Republican in the chamber, told CNN.

Ford has alleged that while she and Kavanaugh were at a house party in the early 1980s, when the two were in high school, Kavanaugh drunkenly pinned her to a bed, groped her and put his hand over her mouth to stifle her screams as he tried to take off her clothes. Kavanaugh has denied the allegation.

Republicans have largely stuck to Grassley's decision to limit the hearing to two witnesses: Kavanaugh and Ford.

"What is happening with the Judiciary Committee, really, I would call it a railroad job," Sen. Mazie Hirono, D-Hawaii, said alongside Gillibrand on Thursday. "They are totally intent on getting Judge Kavanaugh on the Supreme Court come hell or high water ... You have to ask yourself why."

Hirono spoke at an event on Capitol Hill to highlight a letter of support that was said to have been signed by more than 1,000 alumni of Ford's high school in Maryland. A flood of anti-Kavanaugh protesters also descended on Capitol Hill while more Senate offices reported receiving threats related to the nomination.

Moon to act as envoy between Kim, Trump

Both sides looking to S. Korean leader on denuclearization issue

By Foster Klug and Eric Talmadge
Associated Press

SEOUL, South Korea — South Korean President Moon Jae-in, freshly returned home Thursday from a three-day summit with Kim Jong Un, said the North Korean leader wants the U.S. secretary of state to visit Pyongyang soon for nuclear talks, and also hopes for a quick follow-up to his June summit with President Donald Trump.

Only hours after standing with Kim on the peak of a volcano that's at the heart of Kim dynasty propaganda, Moon told reporters in Seoul that he will be carrying a private message from Kim to Trump about the nuclear standoff when he meets the U.S. president in New York next week on the sidelines of the U.N. General Assembly session.

Both Trump, who has repeatedly spoken of his good relationship with Kim, and the North Korean leader have expressed a desire to follow up on the June meeting in Singapore that was meant to settle an impasse that seemed to be edging toward war last year. But there are worries among observers about whether Kim is as committed to denuclearization as he claims.

Moon faces pressure from Washington to find a path forward in efforts to get Kim to completely — and unilaterally — abandon his nuclear arsenal, which is thought to be closing in on the ability to accurately target any part of the continental United States.

"There are things that the United States wants us to convey to North Korea, and on the other side there are also things that North Korea wants us to convey to the United States," Moon said at a press center in Seoul. "I will faithfully serve that role when I meet President Trump to facilitate dialogue between North Korea and the United States."

Moon, who set up the Singapore summit and is eager for another to happen, also told reporters that he'll convey to Trump his and Kim's desire to get a declaration on ending the Korean War by the end of this year. The war still technically continues because it ended in 1953 with a cease-fire, not a peace treaty. An end-of-war declaration would be the first step toward an eventual formal peace treaty, but the United States is wary about signing off on something that could result in Kim pushing for the removal of U.S. troops stationed in South Korea to deter the North.

Earlier Thursday, Kim and Moon took to the road for the final day of their summit, hiking to the peak of Mount Paektu, which is considered sacred in the North, their hands clasped and raised in a pose of triumph.

Their trip to the mountain on the North Korean-Chinese border, and the striking photo-op that will resonate in both Koreas, followed the announcement of wide-ranging agreements on Wednesday that they trumpeted as a major step toward peace.

However, their premier accord on the issue that most worries the world — the North's pursuit of nuclear-tipped missiles — contained a big condition: Kim stated that he would permanently dismantle North Korea's main nuclear facility only if the United States takes unspecified corresponding measures.

PYONGYANG PRESS CORPS
North Korea's Kim Jong Un and his wife, Ri Sol Ju, left, with South Korea's President Moon Jae-in and his wife, Kim Jung-sook, on top of Mount Paektu in North Korea on Thursday.

"Chairman Kim Jong Un has again and again affirmed his commitment to denuclearization," Moon said after returning to Seoul. "He expressed his wish to finish a complete denuclearization as soon as possible and focus on economic development."

Moon said North Korea's agreement to allow international experts to observe a "permanent" dismantling of a missile engine test site and launch pad was the same thing as a commitment to "verifiably and irreversibly" demolish those facilities.

Moon also said that Kim hoped to visit Seoul soon.

"I wish there would be an opportunity for my fellow citizens to see Chairman Kim Jong Un for themselves and hear him talking about the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, peace and prosperity with his own voice," the South Korean president said.

Earlier in the day, the leaders smiled broadly as they posed at the summit of Paektu, their wives grinning at their sides. They also toured the shores of the lake, where Moon and his wife filled bottles with its water and a South Korean pop singer delivered for the leaders a rendition of a beloved Korean folk song, "Arirang," which is used in both Koreas as an unofficial anthem for peace.

The mountain is important to the Kim family, members of which are referred to as sharing the "Paektu bloodline," and the volcano is emblazoned on North Korea's national emblem and lends its name to everything from rockets to power stations.

Illinois priest nearing citizenship faces deportation after voting

By Rick Montgomery
The Kansas City Star

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — His supporters say the Rev. David Boase was thrilled earlier this year when an immigration official said he had completed all steps to U.S. citizenship, short of taking the oath.

Later, however, a government letter broke the news that will culminate in a hearing next week in Kansas City: Citizenship denied. You need to go back to England.

Boase

While processing the final papers on Boase's path to citizenship, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services discovered that the retired Episcopal priest made the grave mistake of voting — just once — in a 2006 election.

Voting when not a U.S. citizen "is like a capital offense" in the eyes of federal authorities, said Jessica Piedra, a Kansas City immigration lawyer unfamiliar with Boase's case. Even if done unknowingly, "it's the worse thing you can do."

Boase, who migrated 14 years ago to Illinois to serve Episcopal churches, told USCIS he was unaware at the time that only citizens can cast ballots in federal elections. Moreover, Boase said he agreed to register while obtaining his driver's license at a state Department of Motor Vehicles office, after presenting his British passport as identification.

A DMV supervisor directed him to sign up to become a voter.

His case, which Boase is pledging not to fight, has stirred supporters to action.

"It's spreading through the social media accounts I think of everybody in the diocese," said Elizabeth Donald, a parishioner at St. Andrews Episcopal Church in Edwardsville, Ill., where Boase, 69, has filled a pastoral vacancy the past several months. She called the government's unsympathetic stance "madness."

Boase's lawyer in St. Louis, David Cox, said Thursday that the priest was a green card holder — legally in the U.S. for as long as he desired — and had truthfully answered all questions in applying for citizenship. That included an acknowledgment he had once voted, thinking it was OK.

The Telegraph newspaper in Alton, Ill., quotes Boase as saying his deportation is "inevitable" and he would accept voluntary departure if an immigration judge in Kansas City approves. Voluntary departures enable many deportees to return to the U.S. within a few years if they can secure the proper visas.

A GoFundMe account to help fund Boase's legal expenses surpassed its $5,000 goal. Except for voting in 2006, Boase appears to have done nothing wrong. A check of Illinois criminal records revealed no offenses.

Shooter, three dead, after shooting at Md. warehouse

By David McFadden and Michael Kunzelman
Associated Press

ABERDEEN, Md. — An employee at a drugstore warehouse got into an argument at work Thursday morning and began shooting colleagues, killing three before fatally turning the gun on herself, authorities and witnesses said.

Workers at the Rite Aide distribution center in northeastern Maryland described moments of "crazy" gunfire and people screaming and running in all directions after the shooting.

Others said they helped the wounded, one person tying blood-soaked jeans around a man's injured leg.

Harford County Sheriff Jeffrey Gahler said at a news conference that the woman was later identified as a temporary employee of the distribution center, Snochia Moseley, of Baltimore County.

"She had reported for her workday as usual, and around 9 a.m. the shooting began, striking victims both outside the business and inside the facility," Gahler said. "We do not at this time have a motive for this senseless crime."

Krystal Watson, 33, said her husband, Eric, works at the facility and told her told her that the suspect had been arguing with somebody else near a time clock after a "town hall meeting."

"And she went off," she said. "She didn't have a particular target. She was just shooting."

The sheriff said the call about shots fired came in at 9:06 a.m. and deputies and other officers were on the scene in just over five minutes. The shooting began outside the business and continued inside, he said.

It appears only one weapon was used — a 9 mm Glock handgun that was registered in Moseley's name — and no shots were fired by responding law enforcement officers, Gahler said.

Walter Zambrano, 64, who described himself as a worker at the distribution center, said he was in the bathroom when shooting broke out and saw nothing as he hid, frightened for his life.

The person was "shooting like crazy," Zambrano said, speaking in Spanish.

He said the gunfire seemed to go on several minutes, and when it was over he sprinted outdoors. On the way out, he said he saw a female co-worker down on the floor. The scene, he said, was one of chaos.

"Everyone was screaming, running this way and that. I didn't know which way to run," he said.

The sheriff said three victims were fatally shot and three more were wounded but were expected to survive. They were not immediately identified. Moseley died at a hospital from a self-inflicted gunshot wound, Gahler said.

The company didn't immediately respond to an inquiry about Moseley's employment history.

Mike Carre, an employee of a furniture logistics operation next to the distribution center, said he helped tend to a wounded man who came hobbling in, bleeding from his leg. He called 911 from a bathroom before helping colleagues wrap the man's jeans above his injury to cut off blood flow.

Carre said the man told him the shooter "just came in in a bad mood this morning. He said she's usually nice. But today, I guess it wasn't her day. She just came in to pick a fight with someone."

S.C. braces for more flooding as rivers swell to record levels

Jodi Pajaro, who evacuated, is hoping for the best as water is just inches from a home she owns in Nichols, S.C.

WILMINGTON, N.C. — As rivers swollen to record levels started to recede Thursday in North Carolina, officials tried to head off potential environmental disasters and prepared for more record flooding downstream in South Carolina.

Roads were still clogged with people trying to make it back to where the floods had crept back, leaving silty mud on walls and floors. Crews closed some bridges and reopened others as trillions of gallons of water continued its long, meandering journey to the Atlantic Ocean.

Potential environmental problems remained.

Duke Energy issued a high-level emergency alert after floodwaters from the Cape Fear River topped an earthen dike and inundated a large lake at a closed power plant near Wilmington. The utility said it did not think any coal ash was at risk.

State-owned utility Santee Cooper in South Carolina is placing an inflatable dam around a coal ash pond near Conway, saying the extra 2.5 feet should be enough to keep floodwaters out. Officials warned human, hog and other animal waste were mixing in with floodwaters in the Carolinas.

South Carolina Gov. Henry McMaster estimated damage from the flood in his state at $1.2 billion in a letter that says the flooding will be the worst disaster in the state's modern history.

North Carolina Gov. Roy Cooper said he knows the damage in his state will add up to billions of dollars, but said with the effects on the storm ongoing, there was no way to make a more accurate estimate.

Florence is blamed for at least 41 deaths in North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

In North Carolina, a familiar story was unfolding as many places that flooded in Hurricane Matthew in 2016 were once again inundated.

Pastor Floyd Benfield walked inside his Presbyterian Church of the Covenant in Spring Lake now that the Little River has retreated. Two years ago, flooding ruined the baseboards and carpet. This year, the water broke the windows, leaving the pews a jumbled mess and soaked Bibles and hymn books on the floor. "This sanctuary was built in 1909, and it never flooded until Hurricane Matthew," he said.

In Wilmington, things kept creeping back closer to normal in the state's largest coastal city. Officials announced the end of a curfew and the resumption of regular trash pickup.

But they said access to the city of 120,000 was still limited and asked people who evacuated to wait a few more days.

The storm continues to hamper travel. Parts of the main north-south route on the East coast, Interstate 95, and the main road to Wilmington, Interstate 40, remain flooded and will likely be closed at least until nearly the end of September, state Department of Transportation Secretary Jim Trogdon said.

More than 1,000 other roads from major highways to neighborhood lanes are closed in the Carolinas, officials said. Some have been washed out entirely.

In South Carolina, the flood was far from over. The water appeared to stop rising in Nichols, but the town of 360 was almost entirely submerged for the second time in three years.

Jodi Pajaro owned one of the few houses in Nichols that wasn't flooded in 2016 by the Little Pee Dee and the Lumber Rivers that flow past either side of the town. She evacuated like the rest of the residents and tenses up each time her cellphone dings. It is frequently photos from friends who are rescuers riding boats in town. In the last one she saw, the water was maybe an inch or two from her front door.

"It doesn't look good. I am heartbroken," she wrote in a text.

All that water from Nichols and Conway is heading toward Georgetown County, where five different rivers dump into the Atlantic Ocean. Authorities planned to start handing out 15,000 sandbags Friday.

"We're at the end of the line of all waters to come down," said Georgetown County Administrator Sel Hemingway, as he warned the area may see a flood like it has never seen before.

2 Iowa killings, 2 different reactions

Politicians mostly silent on death of Iowa State golfer

By Ryan J. Foley
Associated Press

KELSEY KREMER/THE DES MOINES REGISTER

Collin Richards appears in court after being charged with killing Celia Barquin Arozamena.

IOWA CITY, Iowa — The cases are strikingly similar: Two talented young women were stabbed to death by male strangers while doing athletic activities alone in normally safe parts of Iowa.

But politicians who quickly expressed outrage about the immigrant suspect charged with killing runner Mollie Tibbetts have been silent or more restrained about the white homeless man accused in the death of a college golf star from Spain.

Hours after Cristhian Bahena Rivera was arrested last month in Tibbetts' death, President Donald Trump declared that the farmhand had killed the "beautiful" young woman because of the nation's "disgraceful" immigration laws. The president recorded a video citing Tibbetts' slaying in his case for building a wall on the border with Mexico and adopting other policies intended to keep immigrants from entering illegally.

But Trump and many others who followed his lead have not weighed in on the death of Celia Barquin Arozamena, 22, who was attacked Monday while golfing on a course near Iowa State University. The White House press office did not respond to a request for comment on Barquin, the Big 12 women's golf champion this year and an engineering student.

Neither has Rep. Steve King, an Iowa Republican who tweeted that Tibbetts would be alive if immigration laws were enforced and added: "Leftists sacrificed thousands, including their own, on the altar of Political Correctness."

King represents Ames, which includes the university, and a part of western Iowa where the suspect accused in Barquin's death lived as a teenager and young adult in small towns. Court records show that Collin Richards repeatedly received chances to turn his life around but instead kept committing crimes and violated probation again and again.

Richards once threatened to "shoot up" a convenience store where he was caught shoplifting. He dragged his ex-girlfriend out of a home in a headlock, allegedly cutting off her airway and leaving her injured. He got high and stole a pickup after wrecking his own car. He burglarized a gas station to steal tobacco and beer and stole from his own grandparents' home. He was found with an illegally long knife during a traffic stop, and he injured a police officer during a scuffle.

None of that earned Richards prison time or a felony conviction, in part because prosecutors agreed to plea deals that reduced charges to misdemeanors and judges imposed sentences of probation.

Richards was sent to prison last year only after he tested positive for methamphetamine and marijuana, failed to complete an anger-management course he started four times and didn't pay court-ordered fees to a halfway house, court records show.

Even then, the two-year sentence was reduced to about seven months after credit for good behavior and some jail time already served.

After his release, Richards was arrested weeks later for public intoxication. Soon, he was living in a tent in a homeless encampment in the woods near the Coldwater Golf Links in Ames. He told an acquaintance that he had an urge to "rape and kill a woman," police said. He allegedly stabbed Barquin and left her body in a pond near the ninth hole.

Rivera followed a different path, allegedly entering the country from Mexico illegally as a teenager and later getting hired at a dairy farm by providing false identification documents. He was described as a reliable worker.

He had no prior criminal record in Iowa before, police say, he followed Tibbetts, a 20-year-old University of Iowa student, in a car while she was running on July 18 in the small town of Brooklyn. He's accused of killing her and leaving her body in a cornfield. He pleaded not guilty Wednesday, and his trial is scheduled for April.

After Tibbetts' death, Iowa Gov. Kim Reynolds said residents were angry "that a broken immigration system allowed a predator like this to live in our community." She also said she might be open to considering a plan to require Iowa employers to use the government's E-Verify system to check their workers' eligibility to be in the U.S., although it's not clear whether that would have prevented the farm from hiring Rivera.

On Tuesday, Reynolds referred to Barquin's death as "horrific" and "senseless" but said it was premature to determine whether any changes needed to be made to keep young women safe.

"As we all learn more about what happened in this senseless tragedy again, we will look for opportunities and ways that we can do better," she told reporters, according to the Des Moines Register.

On Wednesday, she urged Iowa State fans to wear yellow to Saturday's football game to honor Barquin.

Hundreds attend a remembrance ceremony Thursday in San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Throngs in Puerto Rico honor dead 1 year after Maria's fury

By Danica Coto
Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Clapping and raising their hands to the sky, hundreds of people clad in white gathered at an 18th-century fort in the Puerto Rican capital Thursday to remember the thousands who died in the aftermath of Hurricane Maria as the U.S. territory struggles to recover one year after the Category 4 storm hit.

Religious leaders and government officials recalled how Puerto Rico was ravaged by the storm that killed an estimated 2,975 people and caused more than $100 billion in damage.

"We're still trying to comprehend the magnitude of the devastation," said Jenniffer Gonzalez, Puerto Rico's representative in Congress.

She said the U.S. government has pledged $44 billion for the island's recovery, but that it won't be enough. "We're going to need a lot more to get back on our feet."

Across the island, people marked the one-year anniversary with gatherings large and small, solemn and anger-tinged — and, at times, hopeful.

In the coastal fishing and farming village of Yabucoa, the strains of one of Puerto Rico's most beloved songs filled the air at 6:15 a.m., the moment the storm made landfall there one year ago.

Tarps still covered many homes that have yet to be rebuilt in the town of 37,000, even as the nostalgic strains of "Amanecer Borincano" — "Puerto Rican Dawn" — resonated at the spot where Maria first unleashed its fury. "I am the light of the morning that illuminates new paths," a choir sang as dozens of local officials and residents gathered there. "I am the son of palm trees, of fields and rivers."

In San Juan, the crowd of worshippers gathered at the 230-year-old San Cristobal fort sang and prayed along with pastors and musicians on stage, with music echoing through the fort's heavy walls as the sun slowly sank into the sea behind them.

While the federal government has invested billions of dollars to help clean up and repair the U.S. territory, much work remains. Major power outages are still being reported, tens of thousands of insurance claims are pending and nearly 60,000 homes still have temporary roofs unable to withstand a Category 1 hurricane.

"I think it's inexplicable," Kumi Naidoo, Amnesty International's secretary-general, said during a visit to the island Thursday. "There's no justifiable reason I can see for this gross level of negligence."

Government officials argue that many changes have been made to better prepare Puerto Rico for future storms, but they acknowledge that significant obstacles remain.

"We still have a lot to learn from the challenge of future catastrophic events," Gov. Ricardo Rossello said.

Jose Ortiz, director of Puerto Rico's Electric Power Authority, told reporters that 20 percent of repairs made to the power grid need to be redone. He said crews didn't have access to the best materials at the time or were forced to rely on temporary fixes, such as using trees as makeshift power polls after Maria destroyed up to 75 percent of transmission lines.

In addition, municipal officials have complained that reconstruction efforts are too slow. Ariel Soto, assistant to the mayor of the mountain town of Morovis, said that 220 families there remain without a proper roof.

"We're still waiting for help," he said. "This hit us hard."

Berlin mayor trying to get Germans off water bottles

By Luisa Beck
The Washington Post

SEAN GALLUP/GETTY

Mayor Michael Mueller, right, and utility official Joerg Simon, sample one of Berlin's first public fountains.

BERLIN — When Germans are out and about, their water go-to is usually a bottle. But on a steamy afternoon in the nation's capital, Berlin Mayor Michael Muller set out to convert them to the tap.

"It's always available — and an environmentally friendly choice because it avoids the production of plastic and transport costs," he told a small crowd of perspiring environmental activists, photographers and city employees.

Muller, 53, leaned over a bow-wrapped drinking fountain, filled a wine glass with water and proposed a toast to the fixture, an amenity long taken for granted in American cities but a quasi-revolutionary notion in Germany.

Public drinking fountains are surprisingly rare in Germany, which prides itself on environmentalism, innovation and universal access to basic necessities. But Muller and his colleagues hope to change that, setting an eco-friendly example for other German cities by adding 100 new fountains to the roughly 50 already in the capital.

Germans are among the world's top five consumers of bottled water and the No. 1 drinkers of the fizzy kind. And that is despite the downsides: Bottled water, whether in plastic or glass, is expensive, heavy (bigger quantities are discounted), and a hassle to dispose of given Germany's rigid recycling rules.

Public drinking fountains have not traditionally been an option. Even with 150 in operation, Berlin will hardly have enough for its nearly 4 million residents, although it will be far ahead of Hamburg, which has six, Cologne, three, and Munich, none.

New York City, by contrast, has roughly 3,100 fountains for its 8.6 million people, Vienna has 980 and Paris has 974.

Asked why the thrifty, pragmatic Germans have been so slow to adopt an obvious public good, Muller shrugged.

"It's not rational," he said. "Maybe it's because there's no beer flowing out of the faucets."

Ironically, Berlin is catching drinking-fountain fever at precisely the moment when they are falling into disuse in the United States, victims of poor maintenance and the surging bottled-water market. In some cities, including San Francisco, Atlanta and Chicago, bottle-filling stations have become a popular eco-friendly successor.

Environmental activists and politicians worldwide have long pushed cities to increase public access to potable tap water. Earlier this year, Frans Timmermans, vice president of the European Commission, told member states they should take such action to improve public health and to lower their carbon dioxide footprints.

The manufacturing and transportation of billions of bottles a day contributes to carbon dioxide emissions and global climate change, according to scientists. And despite extensive recycling efforts by countries such as Germany and Sweden, most of the staggering 1 million plastic bottles bought worldwide every minute end up in landfills or the ocean. Researchers estimate that by 2050, the ocean will contain more plastic by weight than fish, and some warn it's making its way into the human food chain.

In Berlin, however, those pro-fountain arguments may not suffice.

"What if someone spit in it at 4 a.m.?" said Katrin Strohmeier, a 31-year old project manager who has lived in Berlin for about 10 years. She wouldn't think of using a public water fountain, she said, mostly because "I don't trust people not to be gross."

The fountains are cleaned every two weeks, and their water is tested monthly, according to Berlin's Water Works. Although few studies on water fountains exist in Germany, U.S. scientists have found that they are generally safe, as long as they are maintained and the water is monitored.

The latter is certainly the case in Germany, according to hydrologist Michael Schneider, of the Free University of Berlin. "The public water supply is supervised many times per year with a huge list of parameters," he said.

Donald Trump Jr. and girlfriend Kimberly Guilfoyle.

WASHINGTON — In the great dining dilemma of the Trump administration, there is no neutral territory. To serve is to face accusations of normalization, even complicity. Not to serve is to be tarred as uncivil, lacking proper table manners.

This was the painful lesson learned by the Red Hen of Lexington, Va., in June, when the restaurant's staff refused to serve White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders.

The latest restaurant caught in the culinary crosshairs of the country's hyperpartisan moment is the Midtown Tavern in Bozeman, Mont. It's where Donald Trump Jr. and his girlfriend, Kimberly Guilfoyle, formerly of Fox News, were scheduled to appear next week for a rally with Matt Rosendale, the state's Republican auditor, who is competing for the U.S. Senate seat held by Democrat Jon Tester.

But when the candidate's team announced the planned appearance Tuesday, the bar & grill's manager backpedaled.

"That's just not who we are," Jeff Wilcox said, according to the Bozeman Daily Chronicle.

But the manager did not attribute the cancellation to the Trump factor. "We just try to stay politically neutral," the manager told the paper. "We're a restaurant."

He said he had been unaware of the booking, which was the result of a misunderstanding. The Midtown Tavern "does not intend to take political sides," he told radio station KMMS.

Shane Scanlon, a Rosendale spokesman, told the Chronicle that more than 200 people had reserved tickets for the event and that the campaign needed another venue that could accommodate "the unprecedented demand."

The event has been relocated to the Gallatin County Fairgrounds, according to KMMS radio.

The president's son has stirred controversy on multiple fronts in recent days. On Sunday, he tweeted a photo of Anderson Cooper standing in waist-deep water during a hurricane, suggesting incorrectly that the CNN anchor was falsifying the danger of the storm. Cooper spent the first 10 minutes of his show Monday night rebutting the claims.

The same day, Trump Jr. posted an image to his Instagram account depicting a juvenile love letter as a way of belittling the accusation of sexual assault leveled by Christine Blasey Ford against Brett Kavanaugh, his father's nominee to the Supreme Court.

Medical examiner identifies Wisconsin workplace shooter

MADISON, Wis. — A Wisconsin software worker who opened fire on his fellow employees in their suburban Madison office had worked for the company for almost 18 months and had no criminal history in the state, authorities said Thursday.

Police killed the gunman Wednesday morning inside WTS Paradigm's Middleton offices while responding to reports of an active shooter. The Dane County medical examiner identified the shooter Thursday as Anthony Tong, 43.

Police said three people were seriously wounded and remained hospitalized Thursday. A fourth person was grazed by a bullet.

Middleton police said officers searched Tong's house where lived alone in Verona on Wednesday evening, but didn't say what they found. Investigators still don't know what prompted the attack.

At least 44 dead as Tanzanian ferry capsizes on Lake Victoria

KAMPALA, Uganda — At least 44 people died after a passenger ferry capsized on Lake Victoria, a Tanzanian official said late Thursday, and the death toll was expected to rise when rescue efforts resumed at daybreak.

Thirty-seven people were rescued after the sinking Thursday afternoon, said Mwanza regional commissioner John Mongella.

"I cannot speculate" how many people had been on board, he said. "Right now our focus is on rescue."

Such ferries on the large freshwater lake surrounded by Tanzania, Kenya and Uganda often carry hundreds of people and are overcrowded.

The ferry was traveling between the Tanzanian cities of Ukara and Bugolora and capsized near the area of Mwanza, officials said.

Cohen says he's giving special counsel 'critical information'

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump's former personal lawyer claims to be providing "critical information" in the special counsel's investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election.

Michael Cohen, who pleaded guilty to campaign-finance violations and other charges last month, tweeted Thursday that he provided information without a cooperation agreement.

The tweet was deleted almost immediately and later reposted by Cohen's lawyer, Lanny Davis.

ABC News reported Thursday that Cohen has met several times with investigators for the special counsel's office.

Cohen has said Trump directed him to arrange hush-money deals for porn actress Stormy Daniels and a former Playboy model.

New landslide kills at least 21, buries houses in Philippines

NAGA, Philippines — A massive landslide buried dozens of homes near a central Philippine mountain Thursday, killing at least 21 people and sending rescuers scrambling to find survivors after some sent text messages pleading for help.

The slide surged down on about 30 houses in two rural villages after daybreak in Naga in Cebu province, city police chief Roderick Gonzales said by telephone as he helped supervise the search and rescue. Seven injured villagers were rescued from the huge mound of earth and debris.

Some victims managed to send messages after the landslide hit, Gonzales said.

Nimrod Parba, a 26-year-old resident, said a relative trapped in a house beneath the rubble managed to call Thursday morning and begged to be rescued. The calls stopped, however, and the relative could not be reached hours later, Parba said.

Naga Mayor Kristine Vanessa Chiong said at least 64 people are missing.

The landslide hit while several northern Philippine provinces are still dealing with deaths and widespread damage wrought by Typhoon Mangkhut, which pummeled the agricultural region Saturday and left at least 88 people dead and more than 60 missing. An extensive search is still underway for dozens of people feared dead after landslides in the gold-mining town of Itogon in the north.

Cebu province was not directly hit by Mangkhut but the massive typhoon intensified monsoon rains across a large part of the archipelago, including the central region where Naga lies about 355 miles southeast of Manila.

Envoy: U.S., Canada race to meet NAFTA deadline

WASHINGTON — U.S. and Canadian negotiators are working around the clock on a deal to keep Canada in a North American trade bloc ahead of a Sept. 30 U.S. deadline.

Canada's Minister of Foreign Affairs Chrystia Freeland told reporters that negotiators from the two sides are "in pretty much constant contact."

She met with her counterpart, U.S. Trade Rep. Robert Lighthizer on Thursday.

Freeland is returning to Canada for a summit of women foreign ministers Friday but said she and Lighthizer remain in close contact by phone and email.

Canada was left out when the United States and Mexico reached an agreement last month to revamp the North American Free Trade Agreement. Freeland is trying to get the No. 2 U.S. trade partner reinstated.

Suge Knight enters plea of no contest for manslaughter

LOS ANGELES — Former rap mogul Marion "Suge" Knight has pleaded no contest to voluntary manslaughter after he ran over two men, killing one, nearly four years ago.

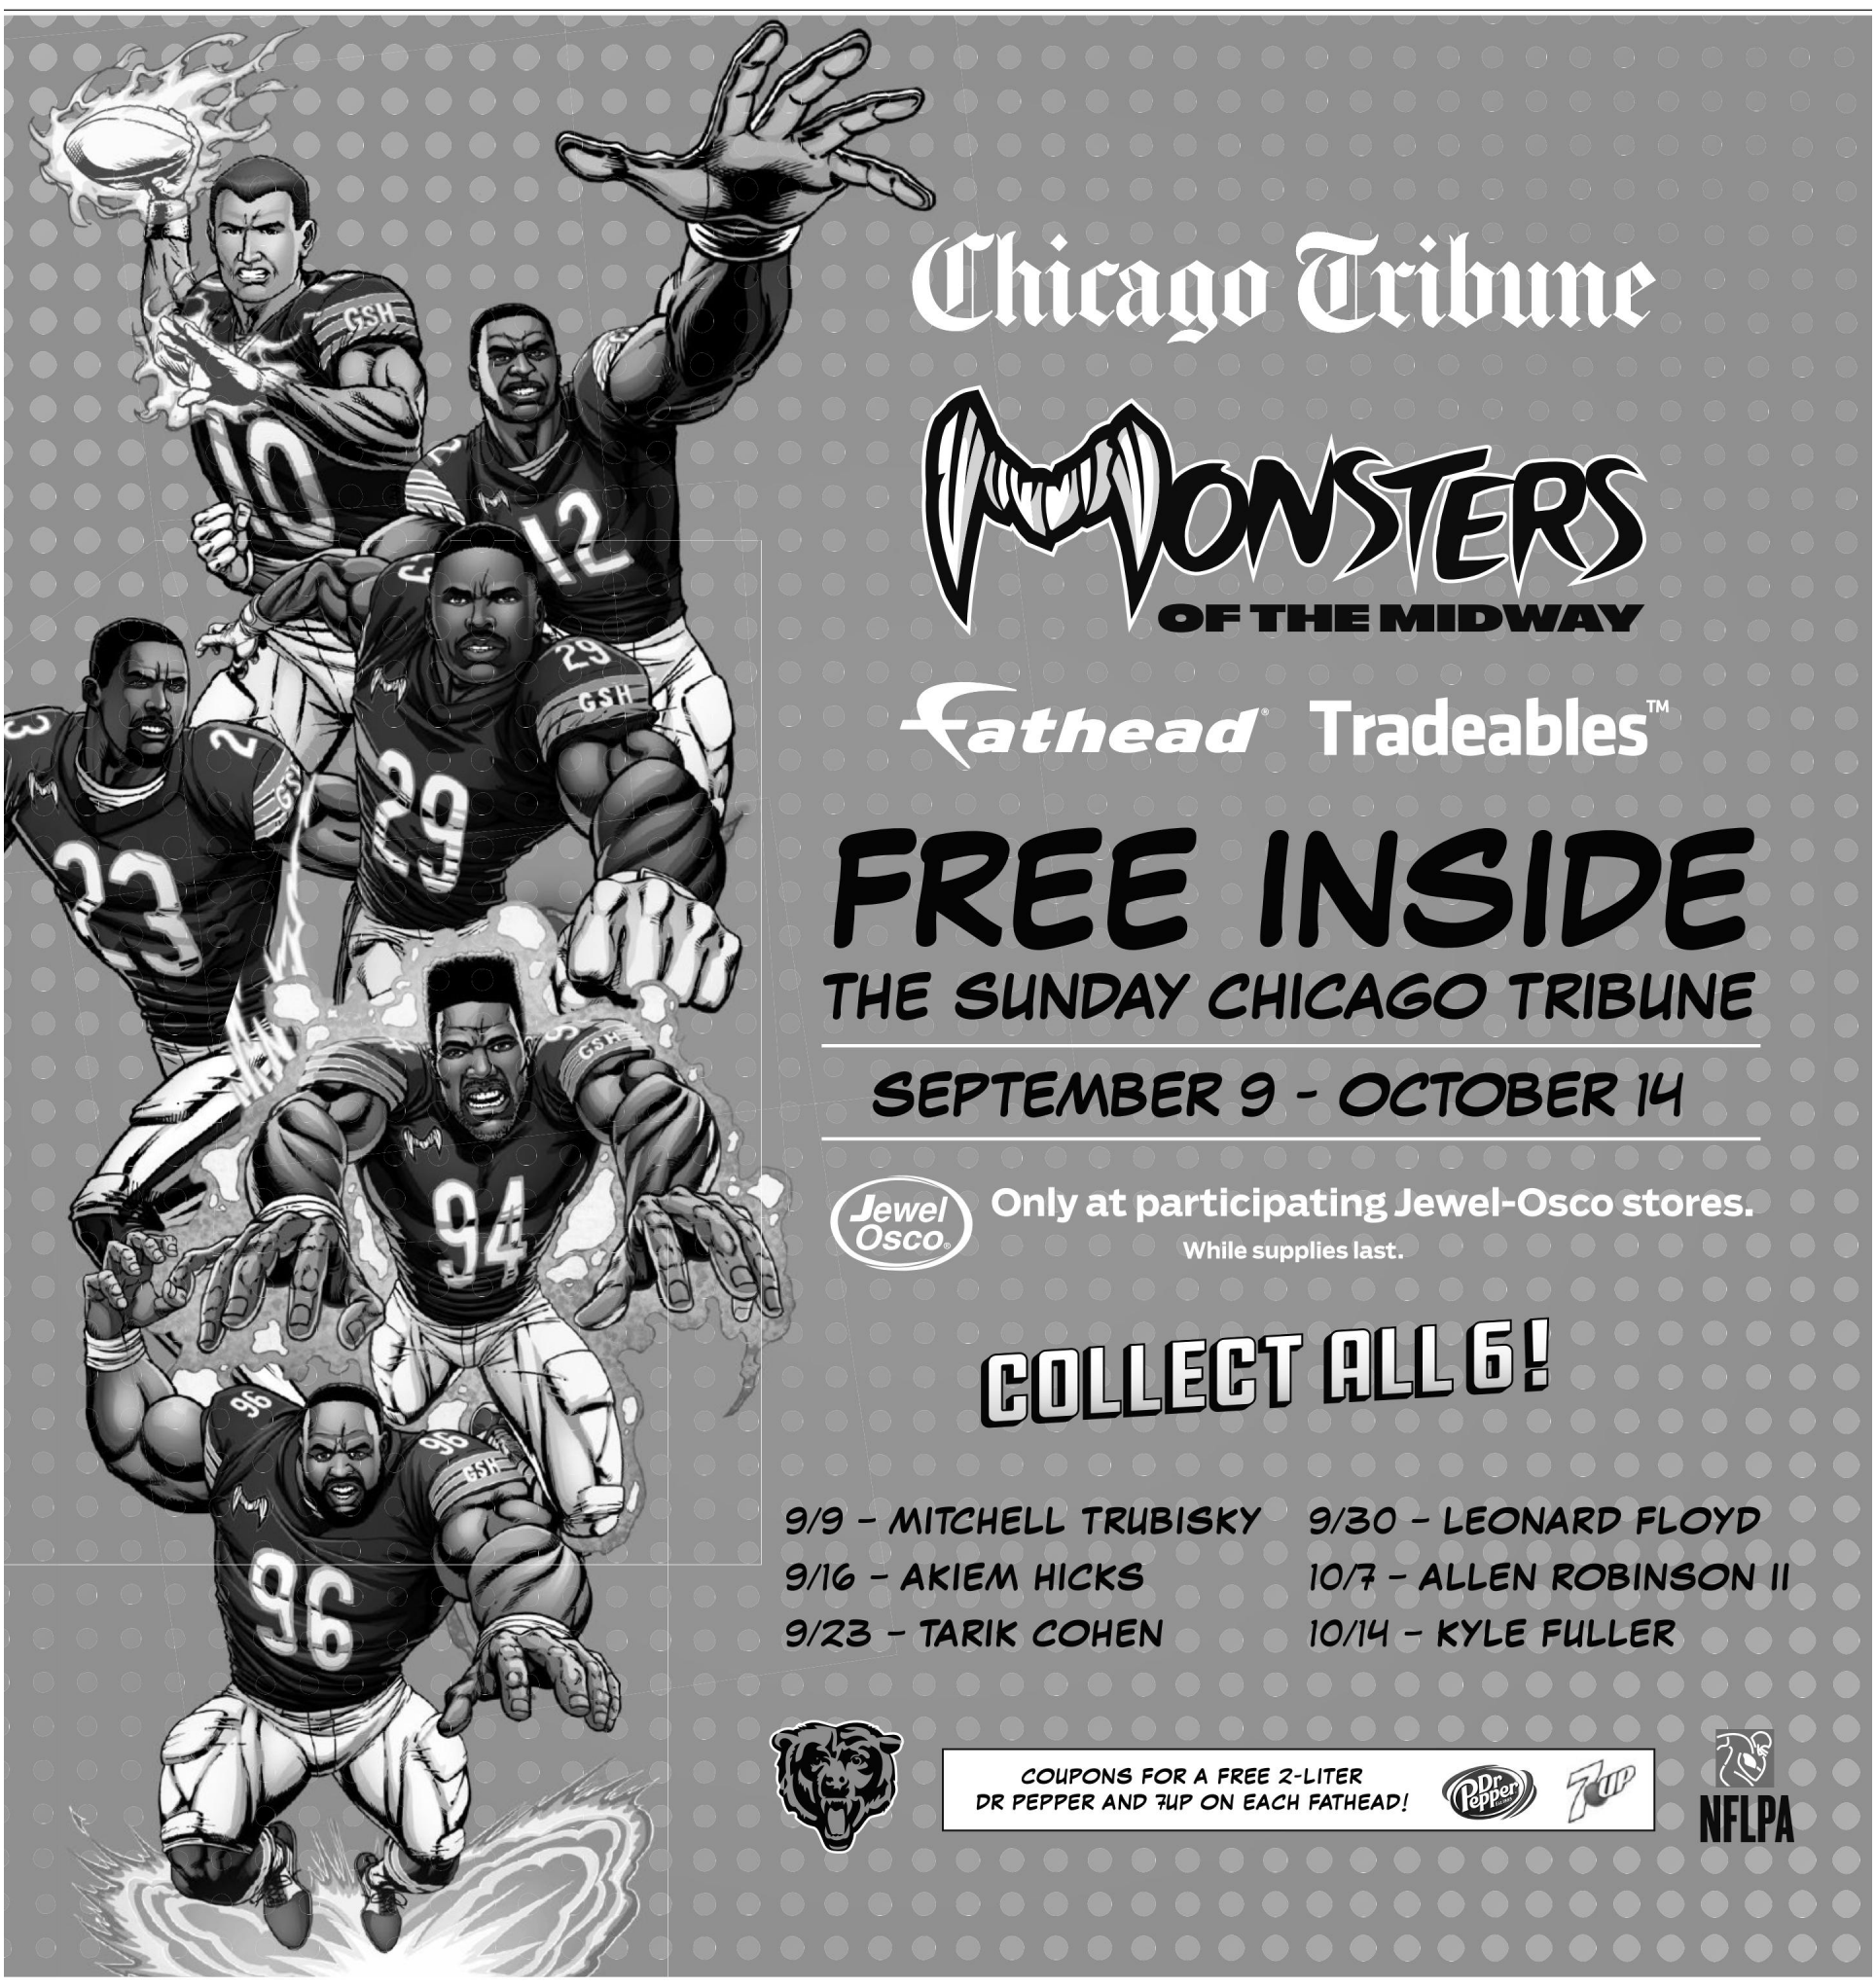
The Death Row Records co-founder entered the plea Thursday and has agreed to serve 28 years in prison.

Knight, 53, was charged with murder, attempted murder and hit-and-run after fleeing following an altercation in January 2015 outside a Compton restaurant. Knight and a consultant on the N.W.A. biopic "Straight Outta Compton" were involved in a fistfight that ended with Knight clipping the man, Cle "Bone" Sloan, with his pickup truck and running over businessman Terry Carter, who died from his injuries.

Knight's attorneys have said he was acting in self-defense.

Auto recall: Nissan recalled nearly 240,000 cars and SUVs worldwide due to a fire risk and is advising drivers to park the vehicles outdoors if they see the anti-lock brake warning lamp for more than 10 seconds. The recall is for 2015 to 2017 Murano, 2016 and 2017 Maxima, 2017 through 2018 Pathfinder and 2017 Infiniti QX60.

Deadly crash: Nine people, including seven immigrants who were in the U.S. illegally, were killed in a head-on collision on an Arizona highway, authorities said Thursday. The crash occurred late Wednesday about 120 miles north of the Mexico border. The driver and passenger in the other vehicle also were killed.



Rauner, Pritzker continue clash from TV ads

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Illinois Gov. Bruce Rauner, right, and Democratic challenger J.B. Pritzker traded accusations and insults Thursday night.

"You're a liar. You've been lying to the people of Illinois from the very beginning," McCann replied.

"You said you had no social agenda, and all you've been able to accomplish is to make yourself the most progressive liberal governor the state of Illinois has ever had," McCann said. "You're a liar and a thief."

That prompted Rauner to ask McCann if he was "getting paid on a per-interruption basis by Madigan or a lump sum?" Rauner added, "He has one purpose on being on that stage and (that's) to help Mr. Pritzker be victorious for Mike Madigan."

"We're here to take both of you out," McCann responded, referring to Rauner and Pritzker.

The exchange underscored bad blood between Rauner and McCann that was exacerbated when the governor backed a failed primary challenger to the state senator's 2016 re-election.

It also gave McCann, whose candidacy is being funded largely by the operating engineers union despite its endorsement of Pritzker, some much needed publicity in his long-shot bid for governor. And it helped Pritzker by adding another voice to criticize Rauner while drawing some attacks away from the Democratic contender.

Still, the hourlong debate put in person some of the name-calling featured in the millions of dollars in TV advertising that has been expended by the wealthy major candidates, Rauner and Pritzker.

Rauner continued his attempts to portray Pritzker's support for a graduated-rate income tax to replace the state's currently mandated flat-rate tax as "proposing a massive tax hike on all the people of this state."

That prompted Pritzker to interject, "Gov. Rauner, you're lying. You're lying again."

Pritzker has said his tax proposal would lower taxes on middle and lower incomes and raise taxes on the wealthy, and he accused Rauner of "standing up" for a currently unfair tax system."

But Pritzker once again declined to provide any specifics about income-tax rates, saying he would have to "negotiate" those with lawmakers.

"Mr. Pritzker cannot be trusted when it comes to taxes," Rauner responded. "This election is about taxes and corruption. Two things: taxes and corruption. Mr. Pritzker is a disaster on taxes. He cannot be trusted."

Pritzker responded by saying Rauner "has a casual relationship with the truth," adding, "he's been lying for three and a half years, and now he's lying about me."

Rauner also sought to draw a bigger distinction between the two candidates' wealth. In the past, the governor has noted he earned his income as a successful equity investor while Pritzker inherited his wealth as an heir to the Hyatt Hotels fortune.

Rauner told Pritzker on Thursday night, "It's easy for you to sit on the sidelines and criticize when you haven't done an honest day's work in your life."

"During the course of my life, I've stood up for working families all across the state of Illinois. I've expanded early childhood education," Pritzker replied. "I've become a national leader on it."

Libertarian candidate Grayson "Kash" Jackson contended that because of the wealth of the Republican and Democratic nominees, Rauner and Pritzker "have no clue what it's like to live in the conditions we live in." He proposed that residents earning less than the poverty level pay no income taxes.

After devastating effects from the state's historic budget impasse on higher education, Rauner pledged that if re-elected, "I will reverse the years of underfunding of our universities, just as I reversed a decade of education cuts from Madigan's majority in the General Assembly."

But Pritzker warned Rauner's pledges couldn't be trusted, alluding to the Republican governor's original opposition to a new funding formula for grade schools and high schools that he termed a "bailout" for Chicago Public Schools, and ended up signing a bill that gave even more money to CPS.

"Virtually everything that you just tried to take credit for happened in spite of you, not because of you," Pritzker replied to Rauner. "Seven-hundred thirty-six days without a budget in the state."

McCann, who also is seeking organized labor backing to go with his socially conservative credentials, criticized Rauner's failure to reach a labor agreement with the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, the state's largest employee union.

"He famously said in his first campaign that he would shut the government down just to destroy that union," McCann said.

McCann also took a more veiled shot at Rauner in discussing outmigration from Illinois to other states when he said businesses are looking for a good infrastructure as reasons for investing and creating new jobs in the state.

"You can't have a strong infrastructure system if you don't partner with the federal government," McCann said. "I look forward as governor of Illinois with partnering with our congressional delegation, partnering with the Trump administration, actually having a relationship with the president and the administration."

Rauner has walked a tightrope over the controversial president, reflecting the diversity of views in largely Republican Downstate areas that support Trump and those in the GOP-leaning suburbs that don't.

The first of four scheduled candidate forums leading up to the Nov. 6 general election was broadcast by NBC-Ch. 5 and Telemundo Chicago, and sponsored by the Union League Club of Chicago and the Chicago Urban League.

The stakes Thursday night were potentially highest for Rauner, the first-term incumbent who has been trailing Pritzker by double digits in two independently conducted polls.

Unlike his first bid for public office four years ago, when Rauner was able to use debates to repeatedly attack the record of Democratic Gov. Pat Quinn, the governor found his own tenure coming under scrutiny from Pritzker, who has never held an elected position.

Three other face-to-face meetings between Rauner and Pritzker are scheduled: Oct. 3 at ABC-Ch. 7 Chicago; Oct. 9 before the Chicago Sun-Times editorial board and Oct. 11 in Quincy.

As a precursor to the forum, state Comptroller Susana Mendoza released a report at a New York financial conference to try to buttress Democratic criticism of the governor's fiscal management over the state's historic budget impasse. Mendoza is an ardent Rauner critic.

The two-year budget vacuum was the result of a clash of ideologies with Rauner pushing for a pro-business, union-weakening agenda against Democratic majorities in the Illinois House and Senate. It ended last year when some GOP lawmakers crossed over to join Democrats in overriding Rauner's veto of a tax-hike budget package.

Mendoza's report noted that lack of funding to public universities and community colleges led to a loss of nearly $1 billion in economic output and a drop in students and jobs.

It also said grants to nonprofits decreased by 38 percent from the year prior to the impasse, a possible indication of social service providers closing their doors.

Preckwinkle entering a race awash in candidates

Preckwinkle made her announcement at the Chicago Lake Shore Hotel, a former Ramada and Hilton hotel where former President Barack Obama first announced his 1996 state Senate bid and where Harold Washington, Chicago's first black mayor, in 1982 announced his campaign for the city's top office.

"I can think of no better place," she said, "to announce my candidacy for mayor of Chicago."

Preckwinkle, who would be the city's first African-American woman to become mayor, highlighted her work to tamp down gun violence, reduce the county jail population and call out misconduct in the Chicago Police Department. As mayor, she said, she would emphasize the importance of neighborhood schools, push for an elected school board, help enforce police reforms under a new consent decree, work to decriminalize substance abuse and mental illness, collaborate with aldermen and promote neighborhood development along with growth in the Loop, proclaiming, "I'm not anti-downtown, I'm anti-only downtown."

Most of all, Preckwinkle said, she hopes to build a new political movement in Chicago — one that several of the supporters who introduced her said they hope echoes the groundswell of support Washington built in the 1980s.

"My hope is that today is more than a kickoff of a campaign, but the start of a movement — one that is rooted in a new coalition across gender, race, age and geography to demand a mayor's office that understands values and reflects the diversity of its residents and communities," Preckwinkle said. "That's why I'm here, why I'm running and I hope for your support."

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Toni Preckwinkle appears at a Hyde Park location where two prominent black Chicagoans, Barack Obama and Harold Washington, kicked off key political campaigns of their own.

'Queen Sugar'

Preckwinkle made no mention in her remarks of Mayor Rahm Emanuel, whose surprise departure from the race earlier this month led the Cook County Board president to reconsider a run at the fifth-floor mayor's office at City Hall. She did, however, thank former Mayor Richard M. Daley, saying she could not have executed the vision she had for her 4th Ward "without the help and support of Mayor Daley."

She also thanked Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan for stepping in to force the consent decree, in which a federal judge will enforce reforms to the Chicago Police Department. Left unsaid was the fact that Madigan had to sue Emanuel's office to make it happen.

Preckwinkle did mention Emanuel, however, during a news conference after her speech.

Asked why she waited until the mayor was out of the race to get in, Preckwinkle said she had worked to collaborate with Emanuel over nearly eight years — even though she toyed with running four years ago and has criticized him on school closings and police reform.

The field of candidates in the mayor's race now has swelled to 15, and some of the original dozen who joined the race before Emanuel dropped his bid for a third term wasted no time in taking shots at the new entrant Thursday, illustrating Preckwinkle's immediate status as a frontrunner.

Chicago principals association President Troy LaRaviere wondered where Preckwinkle was four years ago, when he said she shrank from challenging Emanuel and even failed to endorse the mayor's progressive challenger in the runoff, Cook County Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia, who serves as Preckwinkle's floor leader at the county and is considering another bid for mayor.

"Preckwinkle's failure to stand up to Emanuel tells me that she would fail to stand up to the banks, real estate developers and school privatizers who used Emanuel to rob and exploit Chicago residents," said LaRaviere, an African-American progressive who appeared in presidential campaign ads for U.S. Sen. Bernie Sanders. "Can we expect Preckwinkle to have the political courage to stand up to these interests when she couldn't even stand up to Emanuel?"

Former Chicago Public Schools CEO Paul Vallas took Preckwinkle to task for seeking the mayor's job while she's still on the November ballot, saying it was misleading to voters, supporters and campaign donors.

"At the end of the day, if you're going to run for mayor, then run for mayor," he said. "Don't run for two offices simultaneously."

And Ja'Mal Green, a young black activist who also is running for mayor, announced that he was going to start selling "Queen Sugar" T-shirts, complete with an image of a smirking Preckwinkle and the social media hashtag #peopleoverpolitics. That's a reference to Preckwinkle's failed effort at the county level to push through a penny-per-ounce sales tax on sugary and artificially sweetened beverages. The tax, which Preckwinkle initially passed but which later was repealed under public pressure, remains unpopular with many Chicagoans.

Green said Preckwinkle represents the same old "establishment" branch of the Democratic Party and a "breed of politics that Chicago no longer can afford."

Preckwinkle said the idea that because she leads the county Democratic Party she's no longer a progressive "is ridiculous."

"I am a progressive Democrat. I've been a progressive Democrat my whole life," she said. "I've worked hard to try to build the Democratic Party and move it in a progressive direction. When I became chair of the party, I did my best to knit it back together."

Chief of staff allegations

Preckwinkle, who had been planning her announcement for more than a week, had to deal with a thorny issue as she entered the race. On Tuesday she fired her chief of staff, John Keller, for what she described as "inappropriate behavior on his personal time" that was "corroborated."

During her post-announcement news conference, Preckwinkle was asked if she knew of any sexual harassment allegations against Keller before last Friday.

"No," she responded. "As I said, this allegation was brought to me on Friday. On Monday and Tuesday, we corroborated the allegation by talking to the victim and two witnesses, and I demanded his resignation. I have zero tolerance for this."

Preckwinkle also declined to elaborate on the allegations, saying that could jeopardize the accuser.

"The woman involved has asked for privacy, and I want to honor that," she said.

Preckwinkle enters the mayor's race as one of Illinois' top African-American politicians. She is the third candidate to enter the race since Emanuel announced earlier this month that he would not seek a third term so he could spend more time with his wife, Amy. Former Commerce Secretary and onetime White House chief of staff Bill Daley, the brother and son of two former mayors, announced his campaign Monday. Attorney Gery Chico, a former mayoral chief of staff for Richard M. Daley, formally announced his bid for mayor Thursday.

Garcia, U.S. Rep. Mike Quigley and state Comptroller Susana Mendoza also continue to weigh a mayoral run.

Other candidates seeking to become Chicago's 45th mayor, includeformer Chicago Police Board President Lori Lightfoot, Vallas, former Chicago police Superintendent Garry McCarthy, businessman Willie Wilson and Cook County Circuit Court Clerk Dorothy Brown, among others.

Emanuel said a few days after he got out of the race Sept. 4 that the next mayor of Chicago hadn't launched a campaign yet — a shot at the 12 challengers who already had declared runs against him. On Thursday, Emanuel was asked about Preckwinkle's chances of winning now that she's officially in the race.

"Here's the thing: I don't want to spend the next eight (months) commenting on any individual or the race," Emanuel told reporters before flashing a grin. "Except when we go off the record, and then I have a lot to say."

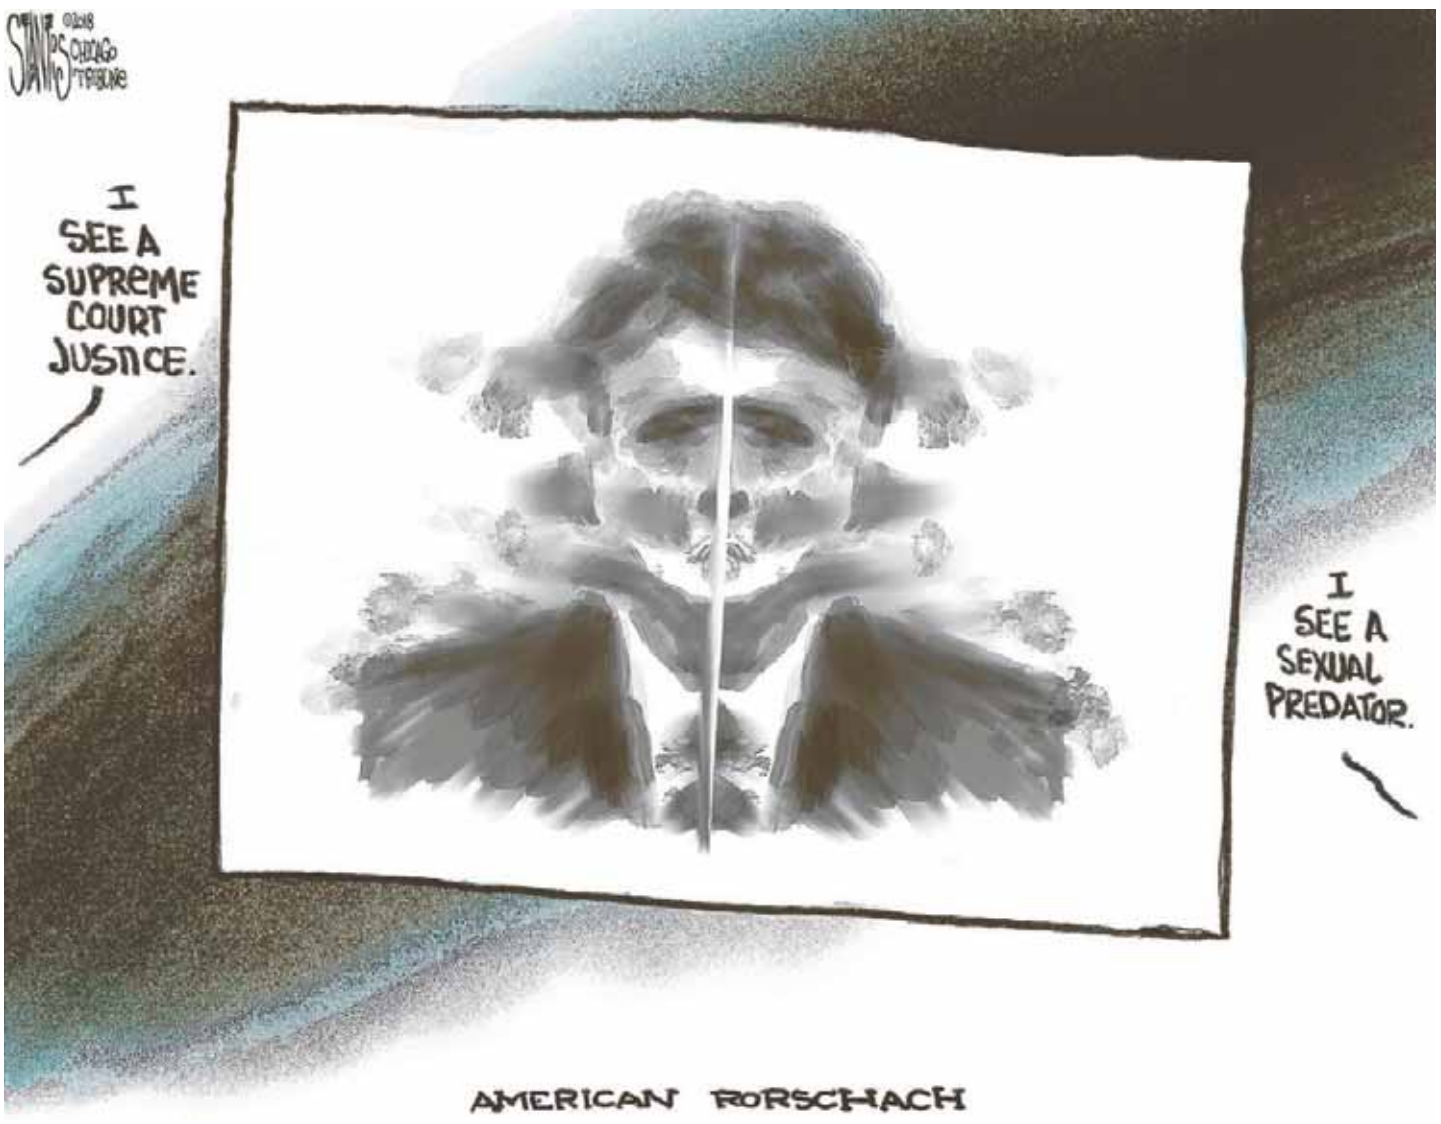
A prompt investigation, then a vote on Kavanaugh

Federal Judge Brett Kavanaugh was on the Republican-smoothed glide path to becoming Justice Kavanaugh of the Supreme Court. Then his confirmation process was upended by a sexual assault allegation dating to his junior year of high school. The issue now is how to handle a serious accusation about a long-ago incident in a politically charged atmosphere.

Christine Blasey Ford, a professor in California, was 15 years old when she says Kavanaugh, then 17, sexually assaulted her at a Maryland party in the summer of 1982. Kavanaugh denies the allegation.

What occurred 36 years ago? It's the responsible question to ask. Ford says she was traumatized by the incident. If it happened and Kavanaugh won't admit it, he fails the character test at the heart of the confirmation process and the U.S. Senate should not seat him on the high court. But Kavanaugh says he has "never done anything like what the accuser describes — to her or to anyone."

Ford's accusations are being taken seriously, and deservedly so. It's not appropriate to dismiss such behavior as a youthful indiscretion, and Kavanaugh isn't using that excuse. Like Ford, he deserves a fair hearing. His reputation is at stake, as is a possible job promotion.



SCOTT STANTIS

The solution for senators seems straightforward: The FBI should immediately investigate Ford's account of what happened at the party. The Judiciary Committee should hear from Kavanaugh, Ford and any other pertinent witnesses. With all available information on the table, the committee should proceed with a confirmation vote, potentially followed by a full Senate vote.

Politics complicates that scenario. But let's not get caught up in either party's calculus. Suffice to say Republicans, with a slim Senate majority and control of the committee, want to get Kavanaugh seated on the court — and soon. Democrats want to defeat Kavanaugh. They also could benefit by delaying the process past November's election when — who knows? — maybe they wrest Senate control.

The FBI's role would not be to conduct a criminal investigation; Ford's allegations don't involve a federal crime. Rather, the FBI would reopen its background check on Kavanaugh. Ron Hosko, a former assistant director of the FBI, told several news organizations the White House has the power to direct the FBI to act. Agents would interview Kavanaugh and Ford, presumably under penalty of perjury. The agency would seek other witnesses and then turn over that information to the Senate without making judgments about witness credibility.

There were only so many people at that party or in Kavanaugh's and Ford's circles of friends. It seems likely most of those people already know that their recollections are of sudden interest to the nation. The investigation shouldn't take long to complete. "There would be a sense of urgency about this," Hosko told CBS News. "They could do that tonight, assuming you have cooperative witnesses." It's worth remembering that in 1991, the FBI required just three days to investigate Anita Hill's sexual harassment allegations against then-Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

The Republicans want to hold a hearing on this matter. Kavanaugh says he's willing to testify. Ford's attorneys said Thursday that she is prepared to testify next week. They said it's her "preference" that a "full investigation" take place before her testimony. Assuming the White House deploys the FBI, the agency should be able to complete its task in time. If it takes a bit longer, so be it. The goal is for senators to possess all available evidence about what happened that night, and then cast their votes for or against Kavanaugh.

The tale of the misunderstood scrap yard

Leave it to Chicago's esteemed aldermen to stretch the bounds of sanctimony, and cast a known polluter as, sniff, gravely misunderstood.

General Iron Industries takes scrap metal — used appliances, flattened cars and more — and shreds it. The company's Lincoln Park tract was once surrounded by tanneries and steel mills; today it's hemmed in by the proposed Lincoln Yards development site. Roughly 47,500 people live within a mile of the scrap yard. Its track record as a good neighbor? Not very neighborly.

Since the late 1990s, it's been on the Environmental Protection Agency's watchlist of chronic polluters. General Iron has been the subject of EPA crackdowns three times in the last decade and a half. The latest came in July, when the agency cited General Iron for failing to contain lung-damaging particulate matter within the company's property. The EPA also accused the company of failing to reduce emissions of chemicals and heavy metals linked to birth defects and cancer.

All of that has made living near General Iron a noxious nightmare. Georgia Nicholson, who lives across the street from the scrap yard, says she washes metallic particles off her patio several times each day, the Tribune's Michael Hawthorne reports. In years past, other neighbors have complained about the noise, the fumes, "the oily film that they find on their cars, on their sidewalks, on the wading pools," says Ald. Brian Hopkins, 2nd, whose ward includes the site.

CHRIS WALKER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

An aerial view Wednesday shows the General Iron Industries facility in Lincoln Park.

In February, Hopkins sought to revoke a waiver that allows General Iron to collect scrap metal around the clock and operate its shredders from 5 a.m. to 10 p.m. daily. The city normally limits scrap yard operations to a 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. time frame.

This week, the City Council's Health and Environmental Protection Committee took up Hopkins' request. Hopkins made his case that General Iron is "a nuisance and a health hazard to the neighborhood." Emanuel administration officials said their inspections found nothing wrong at the scrap yard. Then other aldermen weighed in.

"We need to be more compassionate to these industries," said Ald. George Cardenas, 12th, the committee's chairman.

"We want to keep them in our city," said Ald. Tom Tunney, 44th. "It's a tough business. It's a dirty business. But it's got to be done."

And from Ald. Walter Burnett, 27th, who knows the family that owns General Iron, the Labkons: "I've broken bread with them."

Hmm. Seems like some aldermen have a soft spot for a certain scrap yard. Could it be because, as Hawthorne reports, the Labkons have doled out more than $500,000 in political contributions to local pols in the last seven years — including $16,000 to Burnett, $39,750 to Tunney, $15,000 to Cardenas and $51,500 to Mayor Rahm Emanuel?

Could it be because a dozen City Hall lobbyists have been on the Labkon family's payroll in recent years, including John Borovicka, who worked for Emanuel when he served in Congress?

Nah, that would make us cynics of the worst kind. How could we even think that ulterior motives explain why aldermen would passionately back up a scrap yard with a history of pollution violations?

Hopkins' request was soundly defeated. It's heartening to see aldermen so vociferously defend what they describe as a misunderstood scrap business. We wonder, though, if those same aldermen would be as enthusiastic if they were the ones sweeping metallic dust off their patios.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

The results of the West's over-reliance on covert action, outsourcing, and diplomacy in Syria is arguably the worst-case scenario. The lessons of the Syrian civil war are clear: The U.S. cannot stay out of destabilizing conflicts in strategically valuable parts of the world, no matter how hard it tries.

The humanitarian and political disasters that resulted from Western indifference to the Syrian plight is a grotesque crime that posterity will look upon with contempt. Finally, the failure to enforce prohibitions against chemical-weapons use on the battlefield has emboldened those who would use them recklessly. American soldiers will suffer the most in a world in which chemical warfare is the status quo of the battlefield of the future.

Noah Rothman, Commentary

The automatic, unquestioning support of Israel by the old establishment of American Jews has hurt both sides, and implicated the Jewish world in each one of Israel's less defensible actions: each child shot and killed in Gaza, every detainee spending years without charges or trial in Israeli jails. And the law recently passed in the Israeli parliament, affirming that Israel is the nation-state of the Jewish people, works in some ways to strengthen this associative bond — a bond that provides cover for the Israeli state's questionable actions while exposing American Jews, and Jews around the world, to outbursts of anti-Semitism based on complaints about Israeli policy.

These complaints can be legitimate, or they can be bigoted, but the fact remains that, as an empirical matter, there is no greater or more effective catalyst for anti-Semitism today than the crimes of Israel's occupation. The U.S. is the country that enables the occupation to continue, and without whose support Israel would be vastly more tentative in its actions both foreign and domestic, and might therefore be a more just state today, and perhaps even a safer one.

Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh testifies before the Senate Judiciary Committee at his confirmation hearing on Capitol Hill.

The question we should be asking about Brett Kavanaugh

ERIC ZORN

What's your confidence level in the accuracy of Christine Blasey Ford's allegation that U.S. Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh sexually attacked her when she was 15 and he was 17 in the early 1980s?

From zero — she's making it all up or is delusional — to 100 — her account would match perfectly with a video recording of the event, had one been made — I'm at about 95.

The story she tells is that Kavanagh and his friend Mark Judge, both highly intoxicated, pulled her into a bedroom during a party, and that Kavanaugh pinned her down, groped her, tried to remove her bathing suit and, when she tried to yell for help, covered her mouth with his hand. She escaped into a bathroom and locked the door only after Judge jumped into the action and sent all three sprawling.

Yes, some details are missing — Ford can't remember the date and location of the party, for instance. And others may be inaccurate — researchers have found that human memory is far from perfect, even when recalling events that at the time seem indelible.

But the ring of truth here is more like a gong: Her therapist has notes that show Ford talked about the incident six years ago. She began circulating her story anonymously before President Donald Trump nominated Kavanaugh and his was just a name on the short list. She took and passed a (legally inadmissible) polygraph exam. She placed Judge in the room, even though she had to believe that Judge would back up his friend.

Ford's mortified silence at the time, her description of the traumatic effects of the incident on her and her hesitation in coming forward also suggest to me that her account is genuine.

True, no other women have yet come forward to make similar claims, but given the threatening hell that Ford's life has become in the past week and given the inevitability that it will never get back to normal, who would expect them to?

What are the chances that Kavanaugh's categorical denials are accurate? That nothing like this ever happened? That this is a dreadful case of mistaken identity, a vicious partisan ploy or that Ford — a respected academic — is a crackpot? Do the math. Five percent.

I try to set politics aside when assessing claims like this. Sure, I think Kavanaugh will be disastrously conservative in his rulings, but I'm under no illusion that, if he's forced to step aside, the nominee who takes his place will be even a smidge more liberal. And if Kavanaugh were to the left of Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, I'd still be 95 percent sure Ford is telling the truth.

And I'd still be advocating for as thorough an FBI investigation as possible into her claims to help senators rule on the critical question.

And that question is not what Brett Kavanaugh did in the early 1980s.

I've consistently argued over the years that it's unfair and inconsistent for our culture to treat people under 18 as adults when it comes to legal culpability, but as children when it comes to rights and privileges.

Experience and research show that young brains aren't fully formed and teenagers often lack the judgment, maturity, temperament and perspective we expect of adults.

"From a moral standpoint it would be misguided to equate the failings of a minor with those of an adult, for a greater possibility exists that a minor's character deficiencies will be reformed.

"Indeed, the relevance of youth as a mitigating factor derives from the fact that the signature qualities of youth are transient; as individuals mature, the impetuousness and recklessness that may dominate in younger years can subside."

That was Anthony Kennedy, the retiring justice whose vacancy Kavanaugh hopes to fill, writing a 2005 Supreme Court opinion in a case involving a 17-year-old defendant.

We throw away too many young lives too easily in our quest for vengeance. Kavanaugh should have been punished at the time if he did what Ford says he did at that party, but he should not have had his entire life derailed.

The question we should be asking is what Brett Kavanaugh is doing in 2018.

If he's lying to us, declining to show remorse or to apologize for a terrible thing he did long ago, that would disqualify him morally from a lifetime appointment to one of the most powerful jobs in the nation.

Lying pales next to the alleged original offense, of course. But the lie, if it is a lie, renews and refreshes that offense, making it inarguably relevant to the decision that senators must make about Kavanaugh's nomination.

How sure do they have to be that the next Supreme Court justice is an honest man?

Even 95 percent sure sounds low, given how much Kavanaugh stands to shape our laws and our culture.

And right now, he ain't even close.

Emanuel out of race, but crime still the central issue

BY DAVID GREISING

No one, other than Mayor Rahm Emanuel, will ever know exactly why he decided against seeking re-election.

But there can be little doubt that the decision to sit on the Laquan McDonald video recording played a factor. In 2015, as he stood for re-election, Emanuel delayed release of the gruesome video until a court finally demanded the public see it — months after Election Day.

Emanuel has struggled to tamp down the outrage ever since, without much success. But that doesn't mean he has lost his political instincts altogether. In fact, the day after he announced he would not run again, Emanuel demonstrated that his spot-on instincts are still intact.

None of the dozen people who had challenged him to that point would have thwarted his re-election bid, the mayor predicted.

Until Emanuel's noncandidacy, a few of the tepid 12 had started to look like serious contenders. Former police oversight board leader Lori Lightfoot, former Chicago Public Schools chief Paul Vallas and former top cop Garry McCarthy had even drawn some blood.

But with Emanuel bailing, it's no longer enough to be the best anti-Rahm candidate. Left to stand on their own, the stature of the initial group of mayoral wannabes has shrunk before our eyes.

When Emanuel pulled out of the race, he remarked that Chicago's next mayor had not yet entered the race. And true to his prediction, bigger, shinier names are stepping forward. Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle launched her bid Thursday; Bill Daley, a son and brother of historic Chicago mayors, is running, and County Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia and state Comptroller Susana Mendoza are calculating their odds.

Each of the aforementioned vaulted ones can check boxes that may make them viable choices. Preckwinkle is a former Chicago alderman and is chair of the Cook County Democratic Party. Daley is popular with the business elite and has a national reputation. Garcia made a strong run for mayor last time, and Mendoza in her high-ranking state position has shown financial acumen others can't match.

Campaign money will be a factor, and all have shown an ability to attract supporters with money. Daley is using that advantage in explaining his plan to capture City Hall to the donor class who can put him on the fifth floor.

So much has changed about the mayor's race that it's worth asking whether the issues are going to be different, too, now that Emanuel is no longer a target.

The purely political calculations will differ, of course. With Emanuel gone, the unwelcome title of "Mayor 1 Percent" seems likely to transfer to Daley, a former secretary of commerce with the Clinton administration and a banker, with policy impulses a lot like Emanuel's. Preckwinkle may never shake the stigma she earned by passing, and then rescinding, the Cook County soda tax.

Pure politics aside, issues of substance will rise and fall. Each contender will jockey to claim he or she can step in as "Closer in Chief" and lure businesses to Chicago, just as Emanuel did. They'll need to have plans for the public schools, the city's balance sheet, the underfunded pensions and the rotting infrastructure.

Important as those topics are, there's one that will continue dominating political discourse, with or without Rahm in the race: the persistent and perplexing problem of crime on Chicago's streets.

The death of disgraced Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge — who turned police interrogation rooms into torture chambers — is a reminder that rogue cops are nothing new to Chicago, and rooting them out will require creative and forceful leadership. And with the city paying out hundreds of millions of dollars in recent years in legal settlements, mostly to settle police misconduct charges, the problem is financial too.

All one has to do is look at the case playing out in Judge Vincent Gaughan's courtroom at 26th Street and California Avenue, where Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke stands accused of killing McDonald. Van Dyke's infamous 16 shots are etched in the memory of voters across the city and could be on many of their minds when they go to the polls in November.

The Van Dyke verdict won't be the end of the story. Next will come public discussion of the draft consent decree between Emanuel and Illinois Attorney General Lisa Madigan. The decree is designed to fix the dysfunction in the Chicago Police Department, but groups like Black Lives Matter and the American Civil Liberties Union seem likely to turn the hearings on the decree into a public forum on police misconduct.

Emanuel has been widely praised for accomplishments in many parts of his job. The financial books are closer to being balanced, and downtown Chicago gleams, even if the neighborhoods are in disrepair. Despite his many talents and determination, the crime issue has proved beyond his capacity to fix, and those who want to succeed him must prove they've got ideas that might work.

Hard as it will be to come up with compelling ideas, that will be the easy part. Actually curing the crime problem will be a lot harder to accomplish. Emanuel has warned that the job of Chicago mayor is "extraordinarily difficult and all-consuming."

The intractable crime problem consumed Emanuel and proved more difficult than he could effectively handle. Now voters will get to choose who they think can get it right.

The daunting consequences of accusing a powerful man of misconduct

By Melanie Sloan

It's hard to publicly allege misconduct by a powerful man. No woman wants to be known primarily as a victim of harassment or, worse, assault. It's humiliating. We — women who have gone public — are so much more than accusers or victims. Yet once the news breaks, we are reduced in the eyes of the world to the role of accuser. The fact that we had a career, too — whether as a college professor, lawyer, actress, journalist, writer or waitress — gets lost.

Christine Blasey Ford had excellent reasons to want to remain anonymous in her allegations against Judge Brett Kavanaugh. It could hardly have been lost on her that — forevermore — rather than being known for her academic work, she would become infamous as a woman who alleged attempted rape by a Supreme Court nominee.

Last fall, when a reporter called me to ask about my employment with then-Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., the first words out of my mouth were "off the record." Because I wanted to corroborate what other women had alleged about sexual harassment by Conyers (which he has denied) and bolster their credibility, I agreed to share some of my own experiences with the caveat that the reporter not attribute them to me, but rather to a "former staffer."

I spent a day struggling over whether I, too, should publicly come forward. I knew that it would be much harder to dismiss allegations made by a named person. I knew that only when women come forward publicly will we ever consign the culture of secrecy surrounding male misconduct to the dustbin.

In the end, I decided to attach my name to my statements. But the consequences for coming forward are daunting. In at least some quarters, you are ridiculed, dismissed and labeled a liar, a lunatic — or both. Even some friends, family and colleagues are not supportive and instead question why you needed to stick your head out at all.

If the harassment or assault left you emotionally damaged and your career suffered, or caused you to leave your chosen field, you are unstable and not credible. If you overcame the harassment or assault and went on to career success, whatever happened must not have been as bad as you claimed, and you are not credible.

If you work in politics and reveal misconduct by someone on your side of the aisle, some of your compatriots may call you disloyal (at least behind your back); your political opponents will applaud you as a hero — even if some of them demonized you in the past when you took positions with which they disagreed.

Even while praising your courage, potential employers wonder if you are a troublemaker and may pass you over, preferring a candidate with less obvious baggage.

And unless you go on to even greater infamy — thanks to our appetite for scandal and the algorithms that feed us — this will be the very first thing discovered about you in any Google search, probably for the rest of your life. Monica Lewinsky's impressive anti-bullying campaign, for example, still turns up well after her involvement in the Bill Clinton impeachment scandal. Anita Hill has spent decades as a law professor, yet the first thing to pop up is her testimony during Justice Clarence Thomas' confirmation hearing.

So the downsides of walking into the klieg lights are substantial. But there also are benefits: On a personal level, the upside may be hope for long-delayed validation that what happened to you was, in fact, wrong and not your fault, and you might even obtain some sort of rough justice. But most important — at least for me — was understanding that if I did not come forward, I could not expect anyone else to do so either. And if none of us publicly shares our stories, forcing men — and not just the women they've hurt — to suffer real consequences, then how can we expect change?

Twenty-seven years after Hill endured a grueling hearing in which senator after senator attempted to undermine her credibility, another woman is nevertheless courageously considering whether to brave a similar grilling by another group of entirely male Republican senators. Maybe in the wake of the myriad women disclosing their own #MeToo stories, men will come to terms with exactly how unacceptable harassment and assault are. Maybe we won't have to watch the same narrative unfold yet again.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Burden of proof

I was a better survivor than professor Christine Blasey Ford.

I did everything right. I reported my assault as soon as I could in order to ensure I gave all of the details needed. I went to the hospital to complete the sexual assault nurse examination so that physical evidence could be collected. I met with a detective to provide my background, my story and my clothing from that night. I testified in court when subpoenaed, responding to the cross-examiner confidently and consistently.

I was a better survivor than professor Ford.

But my perpetrator was found "not guilty." My story was questioned, my credibility was doubted, my name was slandered. I followed the rules we create for victims, yet my victimization recurred again and again as I was slut-shamed by the defense lawyer, misled by the detective, rebuked by peers.

There is no such thing as a better survivor.

In a system that puts the burden of proof on the victim, we cannot expect anything of professor Ford. There is no right way; a survivor will be questioned, doubted, slandered regardless of the steps she takes, regardless of whether she follows the "rules."

We must not expect professor Ford to testify. Victimization is experienced over and over when survivors are forced into scrutiny. We can support her, believe her, stand with her, but ultimately we must listen. Listen to what she is experiencing, listen to what she experienced.

Listen.

I was a better survivor in 2016. That was the last time I reported assault. It was not the last time I was assaulted.

The whole truth

Wednesday's lead editorial "Kavanaugh and Ford: High school's long reach" notes that 65 women who knew Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh in high school signed a letter saying he had "always treated women with decency and respect." I wonder how many women, if any, wouldn't sign? Only an FBI investigation will expose the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth.

— Darold Barnum, Oak Park

Personal history

This is in response to Michael Drwiega's letter regarding the "ancient history" of Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh's behavior. When the story first broke that a woman was accusing Kavanaugh of an episode that dated back to high school, I felt the same way. I thought that it was ridiculous to care about something that happened when this man was a teenager.

As this story has unfolded, however, I realized that it was incredibly important to care about that long-ago incident. It is imperative that the Senate committee gets all the information it can about this. After all, the incident in question was an attempted rape, not teenage antics. A sexual attack like the one alleged is not something that can be in the personal history of a person presiding on the highest court in our country.

— Carol Wynn, Hawthorn Woods

Double standard

There is something about this whole Brett Kavanaugh situation that is bothering me even more than the accusations.

The Democrats had this information since July. A confirmation hearing was completed, but this was never brought up, even by Sen. Dianne Feinstein, who had a lot of time with Kavanaugh both privately and on the Senate floor.

Now the Democrats bring it up, and the motive seems clear that it is just to delay or derail another Donald Trump judicial appointment, as they have done the entire time Trump has been in office.

We all know very well if this had been a Democratic nominee and the Republicans did this, the Democrats would have cried "foul," and the media would have sided with them.

There is a double standard in our justice system, and nobody is calling it out. If the Clintons were Republicans, they would have been tried and convicted for multiple crimes long ago. Whatever happened with those allegations against U.S. Rep. Keith Ellison?

— Larry Craig, Wilmette

Two-way street

I take umbrage with John Kass' column, "Sen. Feinstein, have you no sense of decency?" I hark back to 2015 when the Republicans blocked Merrick Garland's nomination and ask the same question, "Republicans, have you no sense of decency?" In today's political climate, there is no reason to single out just one person for having no decency. It's both parties, and for that I am ashamed.

PERSPECTIVE

Senators are asking the wrong question on Kavanaugh

By Cass Sunstein

CHIP SOMODEVILLA/GETTY

The Senate's responsibility is to decide whether the president's choice for the Supreme Court is unfit for the job.

The scheduled testimony by Judge Brett Kavanaugh, responding to Christine Blasey Ford's accusation of sexual assault in the early 1980s, raises a central question: With respect to that accusation, who has the burden of proof?

In the coming weeks, the answer to that question might turn out to be decisive to Kavanaugh's prospects for confirmation.

Invoking the standard used in criminal law, some people have said Kavanaugh should be presumed innocent. Others say senators should avoid any presumption and ask instead: Who is more credible? Who is more likely to be telling the truth?

It's not so simple.

To ensure political neutrality and to cool emotions, let's try to put the current controversy to one side. Let's insist on bracketing any judgments about Kavanaugh in particular, and about what might or might not have happened several decades ago.

Instead let's ask a more general question: How should officials deal with an accusation that a potential Supreme Court justice has committed a violent crime? To make things simple, let's stipulate (without necessarily agreeing) that if the individual did commit that crime, he or she would be disqualified.

Suppose that a president, considering a large number of possible nominees, concludes that there is a 30 percent chance that an accusation against an otherwise superb contender is true. No president would be likely to nominate such a candidate. Apart from the inevitable political fight, no president is likely to think that of dozens or hundreds of highly qualified people, the very best choice for such an important position is someone who might well have committed a violent crime.

We could make the case harder by lowering the probabilities. Suppose that a president thinks that guilt is 20 percent likely, or 10 percent likely, or 5 percent likely. If the number approaches zero, a president might proceed to nominate the individual in question, thinking: I am not going to make my decision on the basis of unfounded accusations. But if the president believes that the likelihood of guilt is significant, another candidate will be chosen.

That brings us to the key question: Is the U.S. Senate any different?

Suppose senators believe the allegations are probably false but are 30 percent likely to be true. There is a strong argument that confirmation would be a terrible idea. Why should the Senate consent to a Supreme Court appointment for someone who might have committed a disqualifying act?

There are two countervailing considerations. First, a refusal to confirm a nominee is a pretty hostile act — especially if it is based on an accusation of criminal behavior. It is far more personal, and much more of a negative stain, than a president's decision not to nominate someone in the first instance. Reasonable senators might well be reluctant to vote against a nominee on the basis of an accusation that they do not, on balance, believe to be true.

Second, the Senate owes the president a degree of deference. We can argue about how much. But the president's job is to select the very best person for the job, which means that he has discretion to decide against potential nominees for any number of reasons. The Senate's job is much narrower. It is to decide whether the president's choice is unfit for the job.

These considerations suggest that senators might think that if a nominee to the Supreme Court has been accused of a disqualifying crime, the question is: Is it more likely than not than he did it? That's not crazy, but on reflection, it's probably wrong.

The Senate isn't a court of law. Senators are entitled to vote against confirmation of a Supreme Court nominee if they conclude that there is an undue risk that a nominee would be careless with the law, unfair to litigants or some kind of extremist.

If senators conclude that there is a significant chance that a nominee committed a crime of violence, they are also entitled to oppose confirmation — even if they think it more likely than not that the nominee is innocent.

AFTER CANCER, WEDDING PLANNING WILL BE A PIECE OF CAKE.

“We were on cloud 9,” said Cassandra, recalling the early days of her engagement to Eddie. Then, severe stomach pains led Eddie to the ER and a devastating diagnosis: Burkitt lymphoma, a highly aggressive blood cancer.

Given the rarity of the disease, Kimberly Kruczek, DO, Eddie’s doctor at Ingalls Memorial Hospital, conferred with Kenneth Cohen, MD, a lymphoma expert at the University of Chicago Medicine, which had recently teamed up with Ingalls.

The doctors agreed. Eddie would begin chemotherapy at UChicago Medicine immediately, with the goal of shrinking and ultimately curing the lymphoma.

“I lost my hair and my eyebrows,” said Eddie. But he never lost hope, thanks to unwavering support from his fiancée and his mother.

Eddie completed treatment and has been in remission a full year. But it’s next year that he and Cassandra are most focused on – when they’ll cut the cake at their wedding in Cancun, Mexico.

Apartment portion of Aqua Tower up for sale

Ryan Ori
On Real Estate

The developer of Aqua Tower is putting the wavy skyscraper's luxury apartments up for sale, looking to ride a wave of demand for downtown Chicago rental properties.

Magellan Development Group and its investment partner, J.P. Morgan Asset Management, have hired Jones Lang LaSalle brokers to seek a buyer for the rental portion of the 86-story tower, Chicago's 10th-tallest building, JLL said.

Aqua is known for its unique exterior, designed by architect Jeanne Gang, that resembles rippling water. The 859-foot-tall tower opened in 2009.

"For an asset with this level of international acclaim, we expect to see strong domestic and global interest," said JLL broker Liz Gagliardi. "We're seeing pockets of capital open up, including in Asia, that are interested in investing in the U.S. and are identifying Chicago as a market to allocate those dollars."

Gagliardi, who is representing the sellers along with JLL's Chuck Johanns, declined to name an expected sale price.

The only previous sale was in December 2010, when J.P. Morgan Asset Management paid Magellan $182 million for a majority stake. Chicago property values have soared over the past several years, and a full ownership stake is now likely valued significantly higher than the 2010 price.

The offering includes 474 apartment units on floors 19 through 52, as well as 967 below-ground parking spaces and 56,127 square feet of office and retail space at the base of the building, including in the pedway.

The sale does not include the Radisson Blu hotel below the apartments or the residential condominiums atop the tower, which are owned separately.

Magellan president David Carlins did not immediately respond to requests for comment.

The tower at 225 N. Columbus Drive is the tallest building in the 28-acre Lakeshore East development, a distinction Aqua will lose when another skyscraper designed by Gang — the 1,191-foot-tall Vista Tower, which will become Chicago's third-tallest building — is completed in 2020.

Magellan and J.P. Morgan Asset Management are looking to cash out years into a thriving downtown apartment market, but amid some fears of a potential glut of new units.

Despite concerns about overall supply, Gagliardi said Aqua stands out because of its apartments are 97 percent leased.

The residential population in the Loop and East Loop submarkets of downtown increased more than 35 percent from 2010 to 2017, Gagliardi said.

Despite a recent wave of downtown construction, and an ongoing boom in areas such as the South Loop, there are no apartment towers under construction in the immediate area, she said.

"It's interesting to note that when you look at the Loop and the East Loop, there's no new supply coming into the market in the next 24 months," Gagliardi said. "There's really an opportunity to grow rents during that time. It's an area that's had significant inherent demand, and will continue to have that."

Magellan does have plans to build additional residential towers in Lakeshore East in the coming years.

The developer in August presented a revised plan to build three new towers, the tallest of which would be 80 stories, with Australian partner Lendlease. That development phase, if approved by the city, would add as many as 1,700 apartments and condos east of Aqua along Lake Shore Drive.

Striking hotel workers ratify Marriott contract

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz
Chicago Tribune

Striking hotel workers ratified a contract with Marriott International, the union said Thursday. The pact could pave the way for a resolution of the 2-week-old work stoppage at more than two dozen Chicago hotels.

"Marriott signing just puts a lot of pressure on the other companies," UNITE HERE Local 1 union organizer Jairo Nunez yelled through a bullhorn outside the Hyatt Regency on Thursday, as picketing workers paused their banging and chanting to cheer the news. "This is proof that we can do it, so we have to keep fighting."

Marriott did not immediately respond to a request for comment. UNITE HERE Local 1 spokesman Elliott Mallen said there would be no official comment until a statement is released. But the union tweeted Thursday evening that the contract had been ratified at the Marriott hotels and the Hotel Blake.

Thousands of housekeepers, doormen, cooks and other hotel employees have been on strike since Sept. 7 to demand year-round health insurance and other improvements to work conditions as they negotiate new contracts. About 6,000 workers across 30 downtown hotels are covered by contracts that expired at the end of August.

Twenty-six hotels have experienced a work stoppage, including six hotels under the Marriott umbrella: JW Marriott, Sheraton Grand, Westin River North, Westin Michigan Avenue, W Chicago Lakeshore, and W Chicago City Center.

After picketing around-the-clock for the past two weeks, there were no signs of protesters in front of several of the Marriott hotels Thursday.

For workers continuing to picket outside of other hotels, word of the tentative agreement with Marriott was an encouraging shot in the arm.

"It's very exciting," said Yi Zhong Lam, 64, a housekeeper at the Hyatt Regency, who stood amid a long line of picketers.

Lam, who has 30 years on the job, said her biggest concern is the increased

Hard seltzer sales are bubbling up

Bubbly drinks sold as a 'better-for-you' way to catch a buzz

By Greg Trotter | Chicago Tribune

Hard seltzers, the feistier cousins of nonalcoholic sparkling waters like LaCroix, are surging in popularity — a small but growing reason for optimism within the flagging beer industry.

Time will tell whether the boozy bubbly waters, such as White Claw and Truly Spiked & Sparkling, continue to rise or fall flat.

Flavored malt beverages, driven by the explosive growth of hard seltzer sales, are one of the fastest growing segments within beer and are helping to offset some of the market share lost to wine and spirits in recent years. Time will tell whether the boozy bubbly waters — led by brands like White Claw, Truly Spiked & Sparkling and SpikedSeltzer — continue to rise or fall flat.

Not too long ago, hard sodas, such as Not Your Father's Root Beer, were the talk of the industry, a nostalgia-induced fad that lasted only a couple of years before sales began to sharply decline. But some executives and industry experts believe the less-sugary seltzers are likely to continue booming as more American consumers reach for products they consider to be healthier.

"They're selling the crap out of it. ... The biggest question is, Will the traction hold?" said Eric Shepard, executive editor of Beer Marketer's Insights, a trade publication covering the beer industry.

No hard seltzer has been more successful than White Claw, the top-selling brand in the Chicago market and throughout the U.S.

"Our aspirations are significant — not only transformational for the beer industry but transformational for our organization. ... We think the true potential of the brand is still relatively untapped," said Phil Rosse, president of Chicago-based Mike's Hard Lemonade Co., which makes White Claw.

Sales of White Claw have exceeded $117 million this year, according to sales data ending Sept. 2 provided by the company, which do not include sales at Costco or liquor stores. The entire Mike's Hard business is up more than 20 percent, largely due to White Claw, which launched in May 2016.

Court upholds hospital property-tax exemption law

By Lisa Schencker
Chicago Tribune

The state's highest court decided Thursday to uphold a law that allows many hospitals to avoid paying property taxes — an issue that's spurred debate in Illinois and across the country.

The Illinois Supreme Court affirmed a lower court's ruling that a 2012 law allowing not-for-profit hospitals to skip paying property taxes under certain conditions is constitutional. Many of the Chicago area's biggest names in health care are not-for-profit, including Advocate Aurora Health, Northwestern Memorial Hospital, University of Chicago Medical Center and NorthShore University HealthSystem, among others.

The law says that not-for-profit hospitals in Illinois don't have to pay property taxes as long as the value of their charitable services is at least equal to what they would otherwise pay in taxes.

About three-fourths of the state's more than 200 hospitals are not-for-profit.

The lawsuit was originally filed by Constance Oswald, a Cook County taxpayer and retired teacher, against the Illinois Department of Revenue in 2012. Oswald's lawyer, Edward Joyce, called the Thursday ruling disappointing.

"When you give these hospitals a pass on paying real estate taxes, people within the counties where the hospitals are located have to make it up," Joyce said.

The tax exemption law has allowed Illinois hospitals to better serve their communities, said A.J. Wilhelmi, president and CEO of the Illinois Health and Hospital Association, in a statement Thursday. He said he was pleased with the court's decision. The association was a defendant in the case.

"Taxing nonprofit hospitals would hurt the communities they serve by

Union Pacific CEO: Changes will cut freight delays for Metra users

By Mary Wisniewski
Chicago Tribune

The head of Union Pacific said Thursday that the freight railroad's plan for operational changes, starting in the Midwest in October, should help reduce freight congestion and benefit both Metra users and motorists in the Chicago area.

"I think it will reduce the amount of freight congestion that is occurring," said Lance Fritz, CEO, chairman and president of Omaha-based Union Pacific. "It doesn't occur frequently, but it will reduce it."

Fritz was in Chicago to speak at the Illinois Chamber of Commerce luncheon. He made his comments about Metra in an interview with the Tribune.

Metra often cites conflicts with freight trains as one of the reasons commuter trains are delayed. Union Pacific operates three Metra lines — the Union Pacific West to Elburn, the Union Pacific Northwest to Harvard, and the Union Pacific North to Kenosha. Metra owns the locomotives and cars on the lines.

Most conflicts with Union Pacific freight trains happen on the UP-Metra lines. Though there are some potential points of conflict with Union Pacific trains in Joliet for the Heritage Corridor, along 75th Street for SouthWest Service and at the Mayfair crossing for Milwaukee North, it does not happen often, said Metra spokesman Michael Gillis.

The new Union Pacific operating plan, known as Unified Plan 2020, will launch Oct. 1 and be rolled out in phases across the railroad's network. It will start in the north-south corridor that includes the Minneapolis-St. Paul area, Chicago and Texas, Fritz said.

The plan will switch the railroad's focus from moving trains to moving train cars, Fritz explained. This might mean that the railroad will move cars with greater frequency to and from customers, and may involve asking some customers to take or receive cars on more days of the week.

In the Chicago area, cars could move in and out of the Union Pacific Proviso Yard in Melrose Park with more frequency, Fritz said.

The end result should mean greater efficiency and shorter idle periods for trains, Fritz said. Other railroads, specifically Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and CSX, are already trying a version of this model.

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2017

Metra had no immediate comment on the UP plan.

In the interview, Fritz also hailed progress on the untangling of the rail bottleneck at 75th Street. Under a publicly and privately funded plan to ease rail congestion on the South Side, railroad and government officials plan to build a flyover bridge so freight tracks can go up and over another set of tracks near 75th Street and Western Avenue at what's known as the Forest Hill Junction.

A second planned set of reforms, which are not yet funded, would eliminate another choke point east of Forest Hill, where five tracks narrow into two.

"The 75th Street Corridor Improvement Project is critical for all freight railroads in Chicago," said Fritz. He referred to the 75th Street bottleneck as a "really big elephant that needs to be eaten piece by piece."

Fritz said the project also will help alleviate vehicle traffic congestion. He supports more grade separations, which separate roads from railroad tracks, around the Chicago area. "That's an area where the city could really pick up the pace," Fritz said.

In other comments, Fritz said that the outlines of the new free trade agreement between the U.S. and Mexico look promising, though he hasn't yet seen the details of the language. He said it's "very important" that Canada join in.

"The fact that we are a three-part trading block is very important to the United States economy right now," Fritz said. "So I hope Canada and the United States see a path forward to be able to get Canada into the agreement."

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has said Canada will not back down from demands for improvements to the agreement. Talks are continuing.

China rushes to fill U.S. orders ahead of tariffs

By Kyunghee Park, Daniela Wei and Matt Townsend
Bloomberg News

The race is on to get Chinese goods into the United States before President Donald Trump's tariffs bite. At sea and in the sky, the president's trade war with China has ignited a freight frenzy.

Hyundai Merchant Marine Co.'s vessels leaving China for the U.S. are full, deliveries to California ports are surging and cargo rates for journeys across the Pacific are at a four-year high.

The levies that kick in Monday have amplified the busy pre-holiday season as Chinese manufacturers rush everything from toys to bikes to car parts into American stores before tariffs hit. At Air China Ltd., freight to the U.S. is booming.

QILAI SHEN/BLOOMBERG NEWS
A Chinese freight frenzy is underway before U.S. tariffs on $200 billion worth of Chinese imports kick in on Monday.

In Jiangsu province on China's East Coast, E.D. Opto Electrical Lighting Co. dispatched a batch of car lights by sea to Los Angeles in late August, earlier than planned.

"It takes about 25 days, so I hope we can make it," said export manager Melissa Shu. The company is racing to complete an order for another U.S. customer who's prepared to pay extra for air freight if it means dodging the new tariffs, she said.

Starting Monday, a 10 percent duty applies to $200 billion of Chinese imports — Trump's biggest salvo yet in a trade war between the world's largest economies that now directly hits U.S. consumers. After that, American importers have until the end of the year to stockpile Chinese products before the tariff leaps to 25 percent.

As companies accelerate shipments from China to beat those deadlines, American consumers could get a leg-up: Anticipated price hikes on household goods at retailers like Walmart Inc. and Target Corp. might be held off in the short term. In China, this front-loading of exports helped push China's trade surplus with the U.S. to a record in August.

Trump has threatened duties on a further $267 billion of made-in-China goods, which would hit nearly all other consumer products, including mobile phones, shoes and clothes. That escalation could spur U.S. companies to pre-emptively load up on those goods, too, Deutsche Bank said in a report this week.

The National Retail Federation in the U.S. warned that duties will lead to higher prices and even product shortages.

In the industrial hub of Dongguan in southern China, toy maker Lung Cheong Group, which supplies Hasbro Inc., is getting squeezed by American customers watching their calendars.

"More clients in the last two months are asking if we can deliver goods ahead of the scheduled time to avoid the upcoming tariffs," said Chairman Lun Leung. For small high-tech toys that have higher retail selling prices, some clients are willing to upgrade from sea freight to air, he said.

Such expedited orders are helping to fill ports along the West Coast.

Imports to Northern California's Port of Oakland surged 9.2 percent in August. That was the busiest August in the port's 91-year history. At the Port of Long Beach, imports of containers rose 9.4 percent this year through August. That comes after a record 2017.

Spot freight rates from Shanghai to Los Angeles, the biggest U.S. port, reached $2,362 per 40-foot container in the week ended Sept. 13, the highest weekly level since December 2014, according to the Drewry World Container Index.

The threat of the looming tariffs is supercharging business at Hyundai Merchant Marine, South Korea's biggest shipping company, and APL, one of the largest shippers on the trans-Pacific route, during the industry's peak season, representatives for the companies said.

"We have a rush game with the tariff," said Rahul Kapoor, an analyst at Bloomberg Intelligence in Singapore.

While Monday's tariff may come too soon for some U.S. companies importing Chinese products, they still have a window of more than three months before duties surge Jan. 1.

U.S. economy on solid ground, reports signal

By Shobhana Chandra and Sarah Foster
Bloomberg News

The U.S. economy is doing just fine, thank you.

A string of reports Thursday showed the labor market is getting stronger, consumers are increasingly optimistic and manufacturers are expanding, adding to signs that gross domestic product remains on track for a solid performance in the third quarter.

Filings for unemployment benefits fell for a third straight week to a new 48-year low, as businesses hold on to existing staff amid a shortage of skilled workers, according to Labor Department figures. That's a good sign for the September payrolls report: The claims data, covering the week containing the 12th of the month, coincide with the reference period for the Labor Department's survey for the monthly figures.

The Bloomberg Consumer Comfort Index showed sentiment advanced last week to a fresh 17-year high on brighter views of the economy, personal finances and the buying climate. In addition, the report's monthly economic expectations index rose to 57.5 in September, the highest since March 2002.

A gauge of manufacturing from the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia rebounded in September from the lowest level in almost two years, as orders, shipments and employment picked up. At the same time, price pressures are easing, as a gauge of input prices fell to the lowest since January.

The economy is still facing some headwinds, including an intensifying trade war with China. Also, the Federal Reserve is expected to raise interest rates next week, which could boost borrowing costs for businesses and consumers. And the damage from Hurricane Florence may affect some indicators — such as employment and housing — though rebuilding should give a boost to the economy later on.

GPS apps not always best way to steer clear of disaster

By Matt O'Brien
Associated Press

Navigation apps are trying to help motorists avoid hurricane flooding. But can people really rely on their smartphones to steer themselves out of a disaster zone?

Amid heavy rain from Florence, some smartphone or in-car map directions in recent days have sent people in North Carolina onto flooded roads and others closed to traffic.

Google-owned Waze said Monday it's worked with local governments and its own community of volunteer map editors to mark closures of more than 1,300 roads in North Carolina and hundreds more in South Carolina and Virginia.

But the North Carolina Department of Transportation warned in a tweet on Sunday night that Waze and other travel apps are unable to keep up with Florence-caused road closings.

"It is not safe now to trust them with your life," the agency warned after another Twitter user credited Waze for helping her avoid floodwaters during Hurricane Matthew in 2016. "This storm, this flooding, these road closings are worse than Matthew, and they'll get even worse. Please stay safe!"

GPS-powered mapping systems have come a long way since updating an in-car navigation system required loading a compact disc with the latest geographic data. More cars now come with navigation systems that are updated remotely and automatically. Other drivers rely on apps such as Waze, Google Maps or Apple Maps.

It can still be hard to keep up with Mother Nature.

Miguel Melo, 22, said he was trying to drive from North Carolina to Florida to get to a friend's house when his SUV stalled out in high water in Lumberton. He was waiting with his stalled car on a service road parallel to flooded Interstate 95.

"The GPS brought me here. It's stupid, and it's really bad. I'm in trouble," said the Raleigh resident, who was parked in a dry spot of road.

State officials had warned in previous days that GPS was taking people down routes where roads had flooded and urged people to check a list of road closures before driving.

"A map in a catastrophe is only so good as its ability to capture real-time information either from sensors or people," said Steve Goldsmith, a professor who directs Harvard University's Data-Smart City Solutions project.

Court upholds hospital property-tax exemption law

diverting dollars that are better used to care for patients and to upgrade equipment, modernize facilities and hire needed staff," Wilhelmi said.

It's difficult to say exactly how much cash Illinois hospitals are saving by not having to pay property taxes, but a 2009 report by the Center for Tax and Budget Accountability estimated the property tax exemptions of 47 Chicago-area not-for-profit hospitals were worth a total of $279 million annually.

Similar laws have led to battles in other states as well. Critics of such laws say that not-for-profit hospitals operate like money-making businesses and should have to pay their fair share of taxes. Hospitals, meanwhile, have argued that they have charitable missions and they need the exemptions to provide the best care possible.

In Illinois, hospitals may seek exemptions via two routes: through the law upheld Thursday or through an older law that says hospitals may get exemptions if they're owned by charitable institutions. But the new law was passed in an attempt to clarify the older law after the state Supreme Court ruled in 2010 against a property tax exemption for Provena Covenant Medical Center, now called OSF Heart of Mary Medical Center.

Although the ruling Thursday ensures that Illinois' law will remain intact, for now, state courts are still considering the issue of hospital exemptions in another case involving Carle Foundation Hospital in Urbana that's now in a lower court.

Chicago hotel strike takes step toward resolution workload on housekeepers as the hotel adds more pillows to beds and more beds to rooms. Though she is close to retirement, Lam, who has spent at least five hours a day picketing, said, "I still need to strike to support the younger workers."

Hyatt Hotels, whose affected hotels include the Hyatt Regency McCormick Place and Park Hyatt, has negotiation sessions with the union scheduled for Thursday or Friday, said spokeswoman Stephanie Lerdall.

"Hyatt continues to negotiate in good faith," Lerdall said. "We have addressed health care in our ongoing discussions with Local 1 and in our proposals, and we look forward to the union's favorable response."

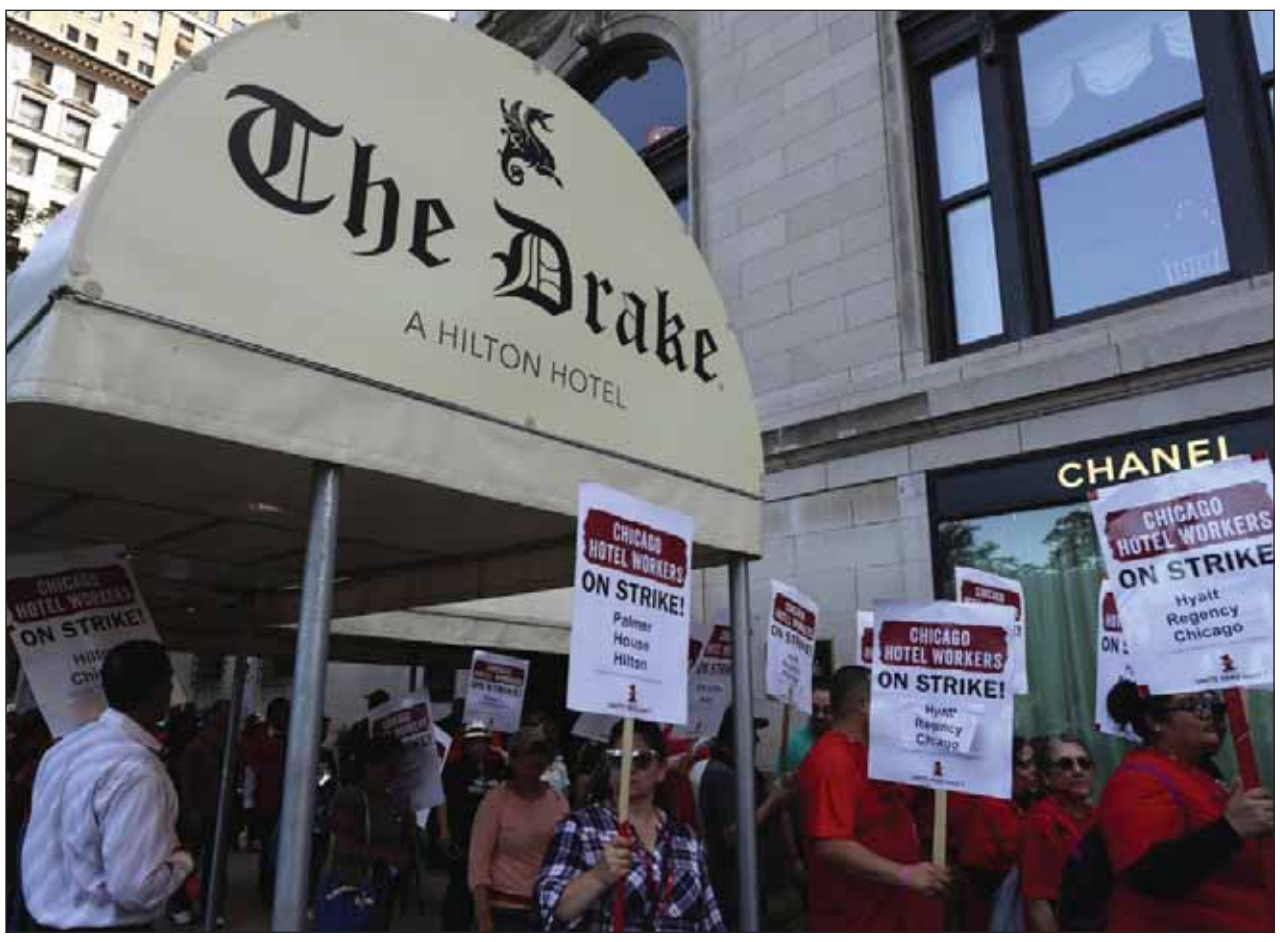
Hilton Hotels and Resorts, whose affected hotels include the Palmer House Hilton, DoubleTree Magnificent Mile, Hilton Chicago and the Drake hotel, said negotiations are ongoing.

Each hotel brand negotiates with the union separately. But generally the most efficient and effective strategy is to get one of the larger employers to establish a baseline agreement on the issue that other hotels in the city will follow, said Bob Bruno, labor professor at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

"The incentive (for the union) is to create a standard for the industry," Bruno said. "And the employers gain some value on that too."

Workers protesting outside smaller hotels saw an impending contract at Marriott as good news for them.

"We are more energized now," said Guadalupe Gomez, 55, who has worked as a housekeeper at the Inn of Chicago in Streeterville for 27 years. "We are happy to know this fight will have a good result."



JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Striking hotel workers and supporters picket outside the Drake hotel on Sept. 13 in Chicago.

Gomez, who was banging on a frying pan, said she was striking to ensure year-round health insurance for colleagues who lose the benefit when they get temporarily laid off during the slow winter months.

Outside the Kimpton Hotel Palomar in River North, strike captain Roger Rialmo said he wasn't sure if the strike would be successful when it began, but with Marriott's tentative agreement, "I really am 100 percent positive we will win."

"I really feel we are right behind them," said Rialmo, a server at the Hotel Palomar's restaurant, Sable.

The strike has disrupted operations at some hotels.

At the Sheraton Grand, guests are given a document at check-in listing the services that will not be available because of the strike, including housekeeping and room service, said guest P.J. Santoro, 34, who was in town from Orange County for a conference. The Sheraton's restaurants are also closed.

"For us it's just two days so we didn't really notice it," Santoro said said. "If you're on vacation it might be more annoying."

Most guests said their stays at the affected hotels felt like business as usual.

"I haven't noticed a difference," said George Ball, 66, of Aurora, who stayed at the Hyatt Regency on Wednesday night with his wife for a night in the city to see "Hamilton." "It's loud, but it's fine."

The affected hotels have kept operating thanks to having all hands on deck.

The Holiday Inn Chicago Mart Plaza trained management and staff before the strike began so that everyone would be ready to do jobs they don't normally do, said Tina Beverly, human resources director, who herself has stripped and made beds. Thanks to everyone's efforts, plus temporary workers, housekeeping and room service continued to be offered and reservations have been unaffected. About 35 of the hotel's 210 employees participated in the strike, she said.

"We knew what the workload would be each day and we scheduled accordingly," Beverly said.

Hotels also had to contend with the strike coming during peak wedding season, when brides and grooms depend on them not only for receptions but also for rehearsal dinners, post-wedding brunches and blocks of rooms.

Susan Cordogan, owner of wedding planning firm Big City Bride, said that "many hotels are taking extreme measures to uphold daily operations."

Marc Stookal, whose eldest son got married at the Palmer House Hilton the first weekend of the strike, said he and his wife were driving to the hotel from their home in Buffalo Grove when they heard the news on the car radio that the strike had begun.

"It was pretty disconcerting at the time because we didn't know how that would affect the house staff, the serving staff, the cooking staff," said Stookal, 62, a lawyer. They called the hotel wedding planner, who assured them a contingency plan was in place, and they arrived to a phalanx of noisy but polite strikers banging drums and a sympathetic staff working double-time inside.

The wedding went off without a hitch, with managers doing much of the serving and bartending, he said.

"They really did a nice job in accommodating us in what could have been a bad situation," Stookal said. "Because it worked out well, it's a good memory."

Hilton, whose Palmer House Hilton and the Drake are popular wedding venues, said in a statement that "we're hosting beautiful wedding receptions and group catering events, and continuing to receive large group reservation requests."

Some conferences scheduled at the affected hotels did move, not out of concern about service but so as not to cross picket lines.

The Economic Policy Institute, a left-leaning nonprofit think tank, announced Thursday that it planned to move its annual Economic Analysis and Research Network conference from the Kimpton Hotel Allegro to "stand in solidarity" with the striking hotel workers. The conference, scheduled for Oct. 3-5, involved nearly 300 hotel nights, the nonprofit said.

Hotels weren't alone in being affected by the strike.

Ken Norels was enjoying the peace and quiet outside the Sheraton on Thursday, one of the Marriott hotels were protesters had dispersed after the tentative agreement was reached. Norels, a ticket agent for Chicago Trolley, staffs a stand outside the hotel and had to listen all day to the bullhorns and drums.

"It was annoying as hell," he said. "But they got the job done."

last year and likely will again this year, said Mike's Hard spokesman Sanjiv Gajiwala. That surge in demand has led to some supply shortages this year, prompting the company to invest in more manufacturing lines that should boost supply by early 2019, Gajiwala said.

Who exactly are White Claw drinkers? They are both men and women, Gajiwala said. Some of them drink wine, spirits and light beer. Some are "lapsed" drinkers, he said, meaning they had stopped drinking altogether. But the common thread, according to the company's research, is that they're "healthy lifestyle" consumers.

Marketed as a "better for you" option for active, healthy types, most of the top hard seltzers are relatively low in calories — about the same as light beer — low in carbohydrates and gluten-free. Most, including White Claw, are even sold in skinny cans.

Hard seltzers fit into the "work hard, play hard" mentality of many young professionals, said Casey O'Neill, a member of the innovation team at Boston Beer that developed Truly Spiked & Sparkling, the first hard seltzer to hit the Chicago market. O'Neill said she came up with the idea for Truly about two years ago when she went out for drinks with friends after a workout. There weren't any good options for a light and refreshing gluten-free drink that wasn't either too sweet or too alcoholic, O'Neill said.

"That lit the light bulb," she said.

In perhaps a sign of the times, Truly and other flavored malt beverage brands are now driving sales growth for Boston Beer, the company long known for Sam Adams beer. Early next year, Truly plans to launch a rosé-flavored seltzer in the Chicago market — a mashup of two of the hottest trends in alcohol.

So far, hard seltzer has been dominated by the larger alcohol companies that already have national distribution networks in place. Anheuser-Busch InBev bought SpikedSeltzer in 2016 and rolled it out nationally last year. Chicago-based MillerCoors launched its Henry's Hard Sparkling Water last year. Diageo's Smirnoff Spiked Sparkling Seltzer is another top national competitor.

The national brands that succeed in the long run likely will win on pricing and execution rather than taste, said Chris Furnari, editor of Brewbound, a beer industry publication.

The consumers drinking these products are less likely to be loyal to a specific brand, Furnari said, recalling some gatherings this summer with millennial-aged friends and coolers of hard seltzers. The question Furnari said he heard several times was: "Can you get me a seltzer?"

> — Chelsea Phillips, vice president of Beyond Beer Brands for Anheuser-Busch

No requests for a specific brand or even flavor — just "a seltzer."

"There's a lot of run room for these products, but there are some question marks too," Furnari said. "Can this be a year-round thing? Is someone going to drink a seltzer in December?"

The marketing minds at Anheuser-Busch are at work on that very question. This Halloween, SpikedSeltzer will launch an ad campaign promoting the mermaid — featured on the brand's label — as a costume. SpikedSeltzer also can be used as a cocktail mixer, which will be promoted around the holidays.

Anheuser-Busch plans to ramp up marketing and investment behind SpikedSeltzer going forward, said Chelsea Phillips, vice president of Beyond Beer Brands for Anheuser-Busch.

"(Hard seltzers) are a wide-open space of nothing but opportunity that we've just begun to dabble in," Phillips said.

The opportunity for hard seltzers includes growing out West, where they've been slower to catch on, according to recent Nielsen data that show market-share growth. They also mostly sell in stores — not bars or restaurants. That too could change if demand continues to swell.

U.S. sales of hard seltzers in retail stores alone garnered $336 million in the 12 months ending Aug. 11, according to Nielsen data. That's an increase of 168 percent from the same period a year earlier.

That's a long way from when Nick Shields first Googled "hard seltzer" back in 2012.

"When it came up blank, I was a happy man," said Shields, co-founder of SpikedSeltzer, which is widely acknowledged as being the first hard seltzer on the market.

After launching in 2013, Shields and his partner Dave Holmes grew the Connecticut-based business to distribution in 13 states before Anheuser-Busch came calling in 2016. Being acquired by the largest beer company in the world was a "little stressful," but also necessary to grow the brand nationally, Shields said.

"We still have plenty of work to do," Shields said. "We're not resting on our laurels."

SAVINGS UPDATE

APR vs. APY… What's the difference?

Anyone who has shopped rates – whether for putting money in a CD or savings account, or for borrowing with a mortgage or credit card – has noticed banks and lenders using two acronyms that are almost, but not quite, the same. Sometimes they quote APR, other times APY. What gives?

APR stands for Annual Percentage Rate, and is the basic rate a bank either pays for deposits or charges for a loan. It's the fixed percentage applied to your balance over the course of the year.

But as many savers and borrowers know, interest grows when it compounds. And that's where APY comes in. APY stands for Annual Percentage Yield, and it's the rate you'll actually yield as a result of compounding.

Mortgages typically compound monthly and credit cards daily. For bank deposits, compounding may occur this often, or may just happen quarterly or semi-annually. The more compounding periods in a year, the bigger the gap between APR and APY.

That's because interest is charged on previous interest each period. Do it just twice a year and the compounding effect is slight. But if it's done 12 or even 365 times in a year, compounding will inflate the APY to a noticeably higher number than the original APR.

From there it's easy to see why mortgage and credit card lenders typically quote the lower APR, while banks soliciting your deposits tend to quote the higher APY.

How much of a difference can it make? Take a mortgage quoted at 4.5 percent APR. After compounding monthly, the rate you'll actually pay by the end of the year, or the APY, will be 4.59 percent.

Understanding this allows you to ensure you're comparing apples to apples – APR to APR, or APY to APY, but never mixed – whenever you shop rates.

Rate Criteria: The rates and annual percentage rate (APR) are effective as of 9/18/18. All rates, fees and other information are subject to change without notice. RateSeeker, LLC. does not guarantee the accuracy of the information appearing above or the availability of rates and fees in this table. ROBERT VENTURI 1925-2018

Led revolt against modernism and had big impact on Chicago

By Blair Kamin

GEORGE WIDMAN/AP

Architect Robert Venturi in his Philadelphia office in 1991 with a model of a new hall for the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The phrase "less is more" is inextricably linked to the great Chicago modern architect Ludwig Mies van der Rohe.

To which the highly influential Philadelphia architect Robert Venturi once replied: "Less is a bore."

Through books and buildings, Venturi, who died Tuesday in his Philadelphia home at age 93, led a revolt against the cool, sleekly abstract forms of mid-20th-century modernism, of which Mies and his followers at the Illinois Institute of Technology were the foremost exponents.

The revolutionary approach, which championed the use of color and decoration as well as references to architectural history and a building's physical context, came to be known as postmodernism, a term Venturi did not embrace.

In Chicago, postmodernism burst upon the scene in the 1970s when a group of architects called the Chicago Seven challenged the view that the city's architecture was best understood as a series of modernist episodes that led inevitably — and exclusively — to the steel-and-glass boxes of Mies.

The new thinking opened the way for such notable buildings as the NBC Tower, 333 West Wacker Drive and the controversial State of Illinois Building (now the Thompson Center).

Stuart Cohen, who began the Chicago Seven with architects Stanley Tigerman, Laurence Booth and Benjamin Weese, confirmed Thursday that Venturi's ideas laid the intellectual groundwork for the Chicago revolt.

"We wanted, in a sense, to make space for ourselves and the ideas we were promoting," Cohen said. "Those were ideas we would not have had but for people like Venturi."

Although Venturi has no finished buildings in Chicago, he had numerous ties to the city and even lectured at IIT in 2005, giving a talk titled "Mies Is More." By then he already had taken back his "less is a bore" line.

In 1991, Venturi received the Pritzker Architecture Prize, the field's highest honor, which is awarded by Chicago's billionaire Pritzker family.

His most important book, "Complexity and Contradiction in Architecture," was published in 1966 by New York's Museum of Modern Art in association with the Chicago-based Graham Foundation for Advanced Studies in the Fine Arts.

In the book, which Venturi called "a gentle manifesto," he argued for an architecture of "messy vitality" that would promote richness and ambiguity over unity and clarity.

He elaborated on that idea in his Pritzker Prize acceptance speech. "Frank Lloyd Wright said architects should design from the inside out," Venturi said. "But we now accept within our more complex view of things, as we acknowledge context as an important determinant of design, that we design from the inside out and the outside in."

Venturi's major buildings include a house for his mother in the Chestnut Hill section Philadelphia, whose symmetrical front gable, split down the middle, simultaneously followed and flaunted architectural convention. It was featured on a 2005 U.S. postage stamp.

He also designed the eccentric Sainsbury Wing of the National Gallery in London.

In one of Venturi's few Midwestern works, Fire Station No. 4 in the small-town architectural mecca of Columbus, Ind., the station number is emblazoned high on the building's facade and reveals the influence of pop art on his buildings.

In the 1972 book "Learning from Las Vegas," cowritten with his wife and architectural partner Denise Scott Brown, along with Steve Izenour, Venturi celebrated the signs and symbols of the commercial strip, which critics had typically characterized as vulgar.

Venturi received his undergraduate and graduate degrees from Princeton University in 1947 and 1950, respectively. He later designed buildings for that New Jersey campus and other academic institutions.

From 1954 to 1956 he was a Rome Prize Fellow at the American Academy in Rome, an experience that deepened his appreciation for the rich visual complexity of urban buildings.

in 2016, Venturi and Scott Brown became the first pair to win the American Institute of Architects' Gold Medal, the top award that the Washington, D.C.-based institute bestows on an architect.

The honor followed, and was viewed as a response to, a 2013 controversy sparked by an online petition drive which demanded — without success — that the Pritzker Prize jury revisit its 1991 decision to award the prize solely to Venturi.

Scott Brown survives Venturi. The cause of his death was "complications due to Alzheimer's" disease, according to a spokeswoman for Venturi and Scott Brown's firm, now known as VSBA Inc.

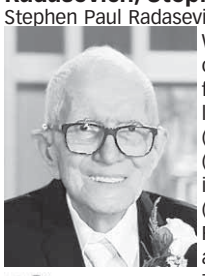
Radasevich, Stephen Paul



Stephen Paul Radasevich, 94, long-time resident of Woodridge; beloved husband of the late Nancy; loving father of the late Ray (the late Mindy), Robert "Rudy" (Eileen) and Maryan "Pie" (Richard) Veverka; and adoring Papa/Popo of Jimmy (Rockie) Veverka, Katie (Chris) Farnsworth, Julie Radasevich and Abby Radasevich. After 7 years in service of our Country in World War II and Korea, Steve began his lengthy career as a research chemist with Cities Service and later International Harvester. Steve loved to fish and golf and was fiercely loyal to ALL Chicago sports teams. Before the age of computers, Steve could fix darn near anything. He instilled his love of the outdoors, his handyman skills and his devotion to Chicago sports teams in his kids who passed them along to theirs — with the notable exception that the Radasevich side are Cubs fanatics and the Veverka side are Sox loyalists. Steve spent his later years enjoying his grandkids and watching any kind of sports on TV — as long as the sport involved some type of ball. Steve lost Nancy, the love of this life, in 2001 and his first born, Ray, in 2011. The last several years were particularly challenging, and Steve's family would like to thank the staff at Sunrise Senior Living in Naperville, Senior Star at Weber Place in Romeoville and Great Lakes Caring Home Health and Hospice for taking wonderful care of their dad/grandpa. Steve was a gentle soul and never missed a chance to ask how everyone else was doing. He will be dearly missed. Visitation 3-8 p.m. Sunday Sept. 23rd at Hallowell & James Funeral Home, 301 75th St., Downers Grove. Prayers 9:15 a.m. Monday Sept. 24th from the funeral home to St. Scholastica Church for Mass at 10 a.m. Interment Clarendon Hills Cemetery. In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Foundation for Speech and Hearing Rehabilitation, at FHSR P.O. Box 180018, Chicago, IL 60618 or at www.fhsr.org. Funeral info 630-964-6500

Bears pass rush conjures up memories of '80s hits

Brad Biggs
On the Bears

More than a quarter-century ago, the Bears terrorized opposing teams, offenses and especially quarterbacks to a historic degree.

Put a Madonna cassette into your Walkman, tell Mr. Gorbachev to tear down this wall and celebrate the return of the Bears defense '80s-style.

At long last, history is repeating itself. The sack is back.

After bringing down the Seahawks' Russell Wilson six times Monday, the Bears lead the NFL with 10 sacks. Only once have they had more sacks after two games since the statistic became official in 1982. That was in 1987 when they had 13, including nine in a season-opening victory over Phil Simms that was built up by ABC as a clash of the previous two Super Bowl champions on "Monday Night Football."

It's almost o-vah for Ken 'Hawk' Harrelson as a career of over-the-top partiality and catchphrases nears grand finale

Paul Sullivan
On the City Series

The Cubs find themselves in the catbird seat this weekend as they travel to the South Side for a three-game series against the White Sox.

They're virtually assured of a postseason spot, and the magic number is down to eight to clinch their third straight division title. But anything can happen in the City Series, and there's nothing left for the Sox but to try to spoil the Cubs' season.

Rick Renteria will be managing like it's Game 7 of the World Series, and Sox Park will be abuzz for this rare late-season Cubs-Sox affair, the latest since the actual World Series in October of 1906.

Adding to the drama is the Hawk Factor.

These will be the final calls by Sox broadcaster Ken "Hawk" Harrelson, ending an era of unabashed homerism that once was common among local announcers.

So sit back, relax and strap it down for what should be a typically wild City Series.

Pondering Cubs' rotation

Is every Cubs outing a referendum on their playoff rotation?

Seems like it. Seems like we always want to kick around the Game 1 starter and the rest of the rotation. It's one of baseball's many unwritten rules, I believe.

It might seem smarter to wait for the Cubs actually to clinch a playoff spot before addressing the topic, but who has patience?

OK then. It's time for "Cubs Playoff Rotation Roulette" — the game the whole family can play.

So, then, how did the ugly outing Cole Hamels endured against the Diamondbacks on Wednesday affect the four spots the Cubs would arrange for the National League Division Series?

What will Jose Quintana's start against his former White Sox team at Guaranteed Rate Field on Friday determine?

Quintana is the most interesting question in manager Joe Maddon's postseason rotation in the likely — and juicy — event the NLDS opponent is the Brewers.

Quintana is the least experienced likely playoff starter but owns the Brewers. He has a 2.17 ERA in six starts against them this season, which is high compared with his 1.60 ERA in 10 career starts. The way Maddon and the Cubs love their matchups, Quintana seems like a gimme as the Game 1 starter if it's the Brewers.

But not so fast. There are some other numbers working here. Such as Jon Lester's 2.31 ERA in two starts against the Brewers this season. More importantly, there's Lester's 1.80 career ERA in four NLDS games (three starts). Throwing Lester in Game 1 at Wrigley Field says, "Here's our best. Dare ya."

So, Quintana in Game 2?

Not so fast again.

Kyle Hendricks posted a 3.91 ERA in four starts against the Brewers this season, but his one start in Milwaukee left him with a 7.20 ERA. Yeah, that's a small sample size, but his three starts against the Brewers at Wrigley resulted in a 3.00 ERA.

So, Quintana in Game 3?

Yeah, that's the way I can see it going. You could argue Hamels in Game 3 based on his quality start in Milwaukee this month and his gaudy Cubs ERA of 1.57 before the damage the Diamondbacks' split squad did Wednesday night. Maddon might choose to go with the rejuvenated veteran who can be expected to meet the playoff moment.

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cubs left-hander Jose Quintana has proved dominant against the Brewers in his career.

But if the Cubs win the first two games, I would like Quintana — a guy with a 1.55 career ERA at Miller Park — to pitch the potential clincher.

And in the terrifying event that they lose the first two at home, then, definitely, I would like a guy with a 1.55 career ERA at Miller Park to pitch the potential elimination game.

Lester, Hendricks, Quintana, Hamels. That's the way I see it going if the Cubs face the Brewers. Clip & Save.

By the way, this daily game of "Cubs Playoff Rotation Roulette" in the NLDS of course presumes good health.

Oh yeah, and it presumes the Cubs win the division to open the NLDS at home.

Because if the next 10 games go otherwise and the Cubs get stuck in the wild-card game, then the rotation consists of, as TV analyst Jim Deshaies says, Johnny Wholestaff and every player gets into uniform at Anthony Rizzo's place.

Howard must be more involved

How do the Bears get this stalled running game going? — @pauliuskase

Call more running plays. Jordan Howard is at his best when he's fed the ball more than 20 times per game, and he has gotten only 29 carries through two games. This isn't the grind-it-out Bears offense you are accustomed to watching. They're much more diverse, and coach Matt Nagy has been calling a lot of different things with handoffs to Taylor Gabriel, direct-snap runs for tight end Trey Burton and a quarterback sweep for Mitch Trubisky. Howard should be more involved soon.

Through two weeks, it seems Matt Nagy has made too drastic of adjustments to the offensive game plans after halftime. How much of this is in my head, expected growth/development of the HC/QB duo or worrisome? — @drchrismurphy

He has come out with some terrific game plans to open things up, and I'm sure you would agree after the offense marched downfield to score touchdowns on opening possessions against the Packers and Seahawks. That's impressive. The offense looked pretty good in the first half Monday night, and the 10-3 halftime score was not reflective of the edge in play the Bears held. Keep in mind the opponents are adjusting at halftime as well. I think it's in your head.

What has happened to Kevin White? I thought he was having a good camp. — @tab_91

White hasn't been on the field much, getting 12 snaps in the opener and two Monday night against the Seahawks. I didn't think he particularly stood out during training camp, and the storyline that he was going to potentially bounce back for a breakout season was missing the mark. The Bears overhauled the position group in the offseason, for obvious reasons, and in the process pushed White down the depth chart. Allen Robinson, Taylor Gabriel and rookie Anthony Miller were all brought in to produce. There are not going to be a ton of opportunities for White when you also consider tight ends and running backs.

Mercy!

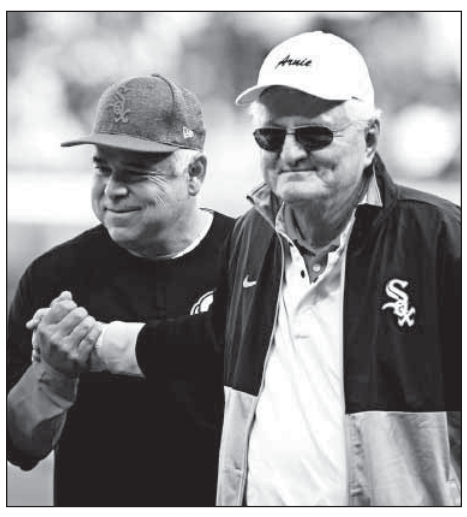
The Cubs fired Renteria in 2014 with two years left on a three-year contract, replacing him with Joe Maddon, who has a World Series ring and is on the verge of taking them to their fourth straight postseason. Renteria was hired as the Sox's bench coach in 2016 and replaced Robin Ventura last year to start the rebuild. The Sox seemingly will avoid a 100-loss season but have lost 10 of their last 13. There is nothing the Sox would like more than for Renteria to get a series win over his former team, and expect the Sox to show no mercy. While Maddon and Renteria are cordial, the City Series hasn't been as fun since Ozzie Guillen and Lou Piniella departed. In 2008, Guillen regaled the media with his hilarious Lou impersonation, mostly backing up while talking, swearing and complaining about the Cubs writers. When he did the impression for Piniella, the Cubs manager was asked what he thought. "If you hang around with Ozzie long enough, you don't think," Piniella replied.

Grab some bench

White Sox second baseman Yoan Moncada was made the so-called face of the organization after arriving in the Chris Sale deal, only to be eclipsed by a couple of new faces, Michael Kopech and Eloy Jimenez, the former Cubs prospect. Back in spring training we daydreamed of watching Kopech and Jimenez against the Cubs in an important series in late September. But when we awoke, Kopech had reconstructive elbow surgery after only four starts, and Jimenez never got the call-up, leaving the focus on Moncada, who is hitting .228 going into Thursday night's game in Cleveland and leading the majors with 205 strikeouts. Moncada should be able to avoid the all-time record of 223 strikeouts, set by Mark Reynolds in 2009. But if he's within two or three going into the final game of the season, it'll be interesting to see if Renteria lets him grab some bench. Sox hitters also lead the majors with 1,473 strikeouts (as of Thursday) and should be able to avoid the record of 1,571 strikeouts, set last season by the Brewers.

Yaz was...

"The greatest ballplayer who ever lived, in fact or fiction." That, of course, is Harrelson's description of Carl Yastrzemski, his former Red Sox teammate, whose name has been dropped on Sox broadcasts a few hundred times over the decades. Yaz won the batting title in 1968 with a .301 average, the lowest in history. Cubs veteran Ben Zobrist is battling for the NL lead with a .312 average, third behind Christian Yelich (.319) and Scooter Gennett (.317). Zobrist is hitting .352 since the All-Star break.



NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Expect manager Rick Renteria, left, to pull out all the stops in honor of Ken Harrelson.

You gotta be bleeping me!

Harrelson's classic T-shirt-ready motto was aimed at umpire Mark Wegner, whom he claimed "knows nothing about the game of baseball" after Wegner ejected Sox starter Jose Quintana in 2012 for allegedly throwing at a Rays hitter. Former Commissioner Bud Selig and Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf both reprimanded Harrelson afterward. Quintana, who seldom got run support with the Sox, will face his old team Friday in the series opener at his old stomping grounds, squaring off against emerging Sox starter Reynaldo Lopez. Harrelson's favorite foil over the years was umpire Joe West, who is scheduled to work the City Series. Harrelson once called West a "joke" on the air and "an absolute disgrace to the umpiring profession." But Harrelson later made amends with West, and in his latest book, "Hawk," called him "one of the greatest umpires I've ever seen." Cubs and Sox fans don't agree on many things, but most will agree to disagree with Harrelson on this.

Put it on the board ... Yes!

CITY SERIES

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Now in his fourth season with the Cubs, this campaign may represent Joe Maddon's best managing job despite a few head-scratching decisions.

It's always showtime

From Epstein to Russell, these eight still have plenty at stake over the last 10 games

Mark Gonzales
On the Cubs

Owning the National League's best record despite missing key players for extended periods this season says a lot about the Cubs and their high standards.

Even with a 2½-game lead in the National League Central with 10 games left (all in Chicago), there's plenty at stake — particularly for the following individuals — as the Cubs close in on their fourth consecutive playoff berth.

Theo Epstein

After expensive and largely unproductive offseason free-agent signings, the midseason upgrades (Cole Hamels, Jesse Chavez and Daniel Murphy) paid off instantly without taxing an already thinned farm system.

Because of some stagnation, Epstein may be tempted to part with one or two members of the young core of hitters in an effort to add much-needed starting pitching depth.

In a rare scene, Epstein spent plenty of time around the batting cage with hitting coach Chili Davis before the first two games of the Diamondbacks series.

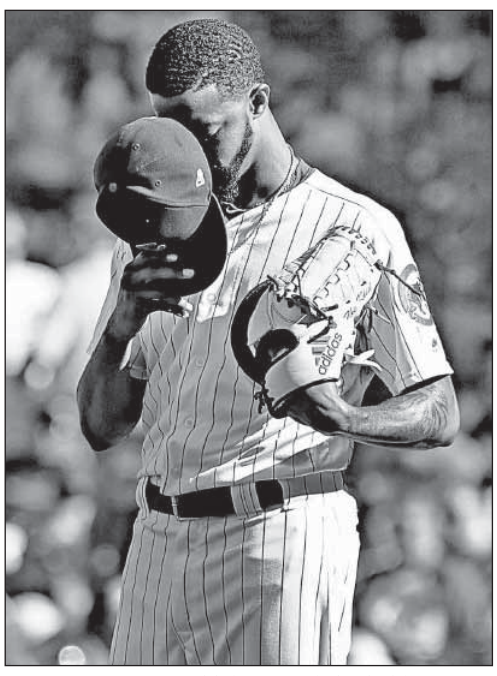
Yu Darvish and Tyler Chatwood will have a chance to resurrect their careers next spring, but falling short of an NL title could rattle the windows atop the Gallagher Way offices.

Joe Maddon

Because of the constant juggling subpar performances and injuries necessitated, this arguably has been the best managing job of Maddon's four seasons. His quick hook early in the season taxed the bullpen, but the Cubs have gotten to this point thanks to a major-league-leading 46 comeback victories.

The Cubs have forged this lead despite not having a true leadoff hitter, partly because of Maddon's fearlessness in using multiple players in the top spot, including slugger Anthony Rizzo.

But there have been a few 2016 World Series-esque head-scratching decisions, such as allowing closer Pedro Strop to bat for himself after he already had pitched 1⅔ innings. Strop suffered a hamstring injury while trying to avoid a double play and likely will miss the rest of the regular season.



NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Carl Edwards Jr. has been plagued by the lack of a consistent and accurate 95 mph fastball.

Any serious dialogue regarding a contract extension for Maddon may not start until next year, as Epstein tends to be extremely deliberate in evaluations.

Jose Quintana

No start may be more scrutinized than Quintana facing his former White Sox teammates Friday in the wake of the impressive seasons of former Cubs prospects Eloy Jimenez and Dylan Cease, who were traded for Quintana last July.

Many Sox unpaid advisers already have declared this deal a lopsided victory, and they're likely to be correct. However, Jimenez and Cease have yet to play in the majors, and Quintana's team-friendly contract provided the Cubs with fixed costs with team options through 2020 that allowed them flexibility to sign reliever Steve Cishek, among other free agents.

Quintana, 29, has lowered his ERA from 4.46 to 3.95 in his last six starts, finally resembling the pitcher who was one of the most coveted targets last summer.

But with a rested bullpen and victories at a premium, Quintana might not get a chance to work out of jams.

Carl Edwards Jr.

These are interesting times, considering that Edwards has slipped in the late-inning pecking order after an effective first two months before suffering right shoulder issues.

The lack of a consistent and accurate 95-mph fastball resulted in seven walks in his six appearances before a scoreless inning Sunday. The sharpness of his curve may dictate if he can be trusted in crucial situations.

Willson Contreras/ Addison Russell

The combined lack of power and significant dips in batting average for Contreras and Russell has been one of the greatest mysteries of the 2018 season.

Any contribution to a division title should be viewed as a victory at this point, but their stagnation presents the front office with plenty to ponder this winter.

Still, Contreras' arm remains one of the Cubs' best defensive weapons. Russell has dealt with a sore right shoulder, which only adds toquestions about his long-term future at shortstop.

Kyle Schwarber/Ian Happ

Schwarber's defense has improved to the point that he could start in left field in an American League park this weekend if his stiff back has loosened. His .239 batting average is somewhat acceptable because he has 25 home runs (second on the team) and a .356 on-base percentage.

Happ provides defensive versatility and some big moments, such as his three-run homer to beat the Reds on Sept. 14. But his offensive development remains bumpy as his .346 on-base percentage is offset by 162 strikeouts in 372 at-bats.

Happ needs regular at-bats to polish his hitting — but victories are the priority for the Cubs.

WHITE SOX 5, INDIANS 4 (11)

At last, Sox win game in Cleveland

By Steve Herrick
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Matt Davidson hit a run-scoring single with two out in the 11th inning to lift the White Sox to a 5-4 win over the Indians on Thursday night, the Sox's first victory at Progressive Field this season.

The Sox were outscored 58-19 in dropping their first eight games in Cleveland, including a 4-1 loss Wednesday on Jason Kipnis' grand slam in the ninth.

Yolmer Sanchez doubled off Adam Cimber (0-3) to start the 11th and moved to third on a groundout. After Avisail Garcia was intentionally walked, Ryan Cordell struck out before Davidson singled to right.

Hector Santiago (6-3) pitched three scoreless innings. He hit Eric Haase with a pitch to start the 11th but retired Francisco Lindor on a fly ball, struck out Michael Brantley and got Jose Ramirez on a groundout to end the game.

Kipnis batted with runners on first and second and two out in the 10th. He sent a grounder to the right side, but the ball struck Brandon Barnes, who was on first base, ending the inning. Kipnis was credited with a single.

The Indians tied the game with two runs in the eighth on a wild pitch and a bases-loaded walk. Lindor and Brantley, who hit back-to-back homers in the third, started the rally.

Lindor tripled off Aaron Bummer and scored on a head-first slide when the pitch in the dirt skipped away from catcher Omar Narvaez.

A single by Brantley and two walks loaded the bases with one out. Juan Minaya, the fourth reliever of the inning, struck out Yandy Diaz but walked Melky Cabrera, tying the game. Kipnis popped out.

Sox starter James Shields allowed two runs in six innings. He worked out of a bases-loaded jam in the first and got out of the third and sixth with double plays.

Narvaez hit a solo homer in the third, and Yoan Moncada had a two-run double in the second. Garcia's RBI single gave the Sox a first-inning lead.

Josh Tomlin allowed four runs and eight hits in four innings. The right-hander began the season in the Indians rotation but was moved to the bullpen in May. His only win came on Sept. 8 against Blue Jays when he retired one batter in a relief appearance.

Tomlin has started twice in the last week. Indians manager Terry Francona has juggled his rotation to get Corey Kluber and Carlos Carrasco in line to pitch the first two games of the AL Division Series that begins Oct. 5.

CUBS NOTES

Mills to Morrow: Bone bruise rehab 'stinks'

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

Alec Mills has experienced what Cubs closer Brandon Morrow will endure the next two months, and Morrow's patience will be tested as much as his healing powers.

"I had to do two months of absolutely nothing," Mills said.

In 2017, Mills didn't pitch from May 12 to Aug. 19 because of a bone bruise in his right pitching forearm — an injury Morrow currently is experiencing.

"It's frustrating, but (the doctors) know what they're doing," he said. "You have to listen."

The layoff was tougher for Mills because his injury occurred early in the season when he was with Triple-A Iowa and he was limited to rehabilitation and arm care with no throwing for an extended period.

"It stinks," said Mills, who threw 15 of 18 pitches for strikes during two scoreless innings Tuesday. "It's our jobs. We want to be pitching and contributing as much as we can. But it's part of the business. So it happens. You have to take it as it comes and do the best you can."

Mills said he would try to take his mind off baseball once he left the Cubs complex in Arizona, where he performed his rehab in the summer heat.

Softer is better: Kyle Hendricks can afford to relax before his next scheduled start Sunday against the White Sox and left-hander Carlos Rodon.

"I have the soft contact up and the home runs down," Hendricks said of his recent outings.

Since the start of August, Hendricks has allowed three home runs in 56⅓ innings, a significant improvement from his 19 homers allowed in 127 innings over the first four months.

In Monday's 5-1 victory over the Diamondbacks, Hendricks succeeded without enticing the Diamondbacks' batters to chase elevated fastballs — a ploy Hendricks has tried in the past.

"It was a different kind of game where I was able to establish (the strike zone) down early," said Hendricks, who lost his shot at a shutout when A.J. Pollock led off the ninth with a home run. "I might have thrown only five to 10 (elevated fastballs). I ran some balls in on batters. I threw enough changeups for strikes early that I was able to get them to chase pitches down.

"When you can't get hitters to chase down, that's when you have to elevate more or change your game plan. But when you keep going to it and get those swings, it's something you can stick to until you have to change."

Safe from Hurricane Florence: Reliever Dillon Maples reported his family was safe after enduring Hurricane Florence in his native North Carolina.

"They just got hammered with a ton of rain," Maples said.

ATHLETICS 21, ANGELS 3

Hard-charging A's refusing to let up

Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — With a postseason berth in their sights, the Athletics are leaving nothing to chance.

Marcus Semien had three hits and a career-high five RBIs, Stephen Piscotty homered and drove in four runs and the A's hammered the Angels 21-3 on Thursday.

The A's reduced their magic number for clinching a playoff berth to five. Since June 15, they are a major-league-best 58-25.

Going into Thursday, the A's trailed the Astros by four games in the AL West, led the Rays by 5½ games for the second wild-card spot, and were 2½ games behind the Yankees for the first wild card.

The Angels were outscored 31-2 in the last two games of the series.

"Honestly, when I saw the score up there on the board, it looked like a football score," Piscotty said. "It doesn't happen all that often, but it's a crazy game."

The A's tied a team record for runs first set on June 18, 2000, against the Royals.

Piscotty was 2-for-3 with a three-run homer. He's 4-for-6 with two home runs and nine RBIs in his last two games and has seven home runs and 22 RBI this month. Matt Chapman was 2-for-4 with a double and two RBIs.

Edwin Jackson (6-3) struck out seven, walked three and gave up two runs in 5⅓ innings of three-hit ball.

"When you're getting runs like that, it's always fun," Jackson said. "The main thing you want to do is continue to pitch and see how many shutout innings you can have to get them back in the dugout to continue to hit."

Mike Trout hit his 36th home run for the Angels. They have lost five of their last seven.

AROUND THE HORN

■ Yankees: Mookie Betts and the Red Sox won their third consecutive AL East championship, clinching on enemy turf with an 11-6 victory over the rival Yankees. Betts homered, doubled twice and drove in five runs, finishing with four hits as the Red Sox overcame Giancarlo Stanton's go-ahead grand slam in the fourth inning.

■ Braves: Lucas Duda's pinch-hit double drove in the go-ahead run in the seventh, and the Braves took an important step toward winning the NL East by beating the Phillies 8-3. The Braves lead the Phillies by 6½ games following the opener of the four-game series. The Braves' magic number is four to clinch the division.

■ Rays: Justin Smoak homered with two outs in the ninth to give the Blue Jays a 9-8 victory, dealing a blow to the Rays' wild-card hopes. Smoak hit his 25th homer of the season and third career walk-off blast. Sergio Romo (3-4) blew his eighth save in 30 opportunities.

■ Marlins: Derek Jeter is signaling that Don Mattingly is expected to return next year as manager, providing dugout continuity for a last-place team in transition. Mattingly has one season to go on a four-year contract he signed when he joined the Marlins in 2016. When asked about Mattingly returning in 2019, Jeter said, "He's under contract." The Marlins will finish last in the NL East in Jeter's first year as CEO.

■ Angels: Francisco Arcia began the day behind the plate, did a brief stint on the mound and ended up in the record books. Arcia pitched two innings of relief and hit his sixth home run in the Angels' 21-3 loss to the Athletics. In doing so, Arcia became the first player to catch, pitch and homer in the same game, according to the Angels.

■ Mets: INF Wilmer Flores will miss the rest of the season because of soreness in both knees. Manager Mickey Callaway said Flores has early-onset arthritis in both knees and will receive injections to alleviate the pain.

Time for colorful Hawk to sign off

Polarizing broadcaster set to fly away after 33 years in Sox booth

Phil Rosenthal
On media

"The Hawk Harrelson Show" concludes its Chicago run after 33 seasons with three White Sox-Cubs telecasts this weekend.

There will be no cliffhanger ending. There almost certainly will be tears. When it comes to emotion, Harrelson is more apt to choke up than choke back.

It's hard to imagine Harrelson won't be welcomed back to the Sox booth in a guest role from time to time, if he's up for it. But why undercut the drama by contemplating that?

The last two seasons with reduced workloads have built toward this curtain call Friday and Saturday on WGN-9 and NBC Sports Chicago for the grand finale Sunday.

Fans who embrace him as theirs — blind spots, idiosyncrasies and all — will savor it.

The detractors who call him a homer, an anachronism, a blowhard and worse are free to avail themselves of the Cubs feed on NBC Sports Chicago on Friday and Saturday and ABC-7 on Sunday.

To each his own. The conflict, love and disaffection all make for a good show.

Someone recently asked why Harry Caray, who could loudly root, root, root for the home team with the best of them, wasn't as polarizing in Chicago as Harrelson has been.

There are many answers. One is that Caray, like most fans, was also capable of criticizing the home team in addition to (and sometimes especially) its management.

Harrelson was Sox management for a time. More to the point, he is perhaps Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf's biggest fan whose last name isn't Reinsdorf. It may be Harrelson's sincere belief that Reinsdorf can do no wrong, but Reinsdorf is human.

When the Sox honored Hawk with an on-field ceremony this month, he went out of his way to bring up baseball's 1994-95 work stoppage, which cost a promising Sox team a serious title shot.

Harrelson placed the blame solely on players union boss Donald Fehr. But it's not as though Reinsdorf was a passive figure in the events leading to the impasse and in pressing fellow owners to take a hardline stance during the standoff.

It's not as though Harrelson is incapable of criticizing a team owner the way he will tee off on, say, an umpire or columnist. His inability to hold his tongue precipitated his departure for Chicago after a 1975-81 run announcing Red Sox games in Boston.

Harrelson was speaking to college students at a sports seminar in early 1981. Someone asked about the dismantling of the Red Sox that winter.

They had traded Rick Burleson, and a clerical screwup cost the team its hold on Fred Lynn and Carlton Fisk, leading it to trade Lynn to the Angels on unfavorable terms and lose Fisk to free agency (and ultimately the White Sox).

Haywood Sullivan, the Red Sox general manager and co-owner, was deservedly in Harrelson's crosshairs along with the rest of the ownership group.

"The club is in disarray, confused and chaotic," Harrelson told the students, according to reports at the time. "If they don't have the money to pay Lynn and Burleson, they can't afford to own the ballclub.

"Fisk is the symbol of Red Sox baseball, and the way management is treating him is beyond me. ... They're operating out of weakness and desperation. ... The heart of the team is gone."

Harrelson, who casts himself as the hard guy with a soft emotional center, complained the Red Sox were "almost the laughingstock of the American League. I don't see them as a contender anymore, and I can't stand to see what's happening to them."

Sullivan, who had managed Harrelson with the Kansas City A's and played a role in bringing him to the Red Sox as a player in 1967, the year they won the AL pennant, was stoic publicly.

"I've heard the tape and all I have to say is that he's a private fan entitled to his own opinion," he said.

Privately, Sullivan raged and called for Harrelson's head. WSBK stood by Hawk, but clearly Harrelson sensed he didn't have a long future as a Red Sox announcer.

So he was more than open to a change of Sox when Reinsdorf and Eddie Einhorn expressed interest after the abbreviated '81 season. And seldom has been heard a discouraging word about them.

Harrelson might carp today about then-GM Ron Schueler not drafting A.J. Pierzynski in 1994, but he's reluctant to offer an on-air critique of a current GM.

Over the years, despite leaving them behind, Harrelson has maintained a soft spot for the Red Sox — or the Carmines, as he calls them to keep alive an antiquated nickname.

It's a callback to days of yore when the Red Sox sometimes were referred to as the Carmine Hose, a reference to the shade of red in their uniforms. Who will pick up the Carmine mantle in his absence?

Harrelson is credited with coining nicknames of his own, Hall of Famer Frank Thomas' "The Big Hurt" chief among them.

It was Dick Howser who nicknamed him Hawk, and Harrelson says Howser's inspiration in 1959 was a cartoon character named Henrietta Hawk.

The character he seems to be referring to, however, is the Henery Hawk of Merrie Melodies and Looney Tunes fame, introduced in 1942's "The Squawkin' Hawk."

A tough-talking yet naive, overly aggressive chickenhawk who can't be intimidated despite his small stature, Henery was often paired with Foghorn Leghorn.

Typical line from the cartoon Hawk: "Are you comin' quietly, or do I have to muss ya up!?"

Which sounds a bit like something Harrelson would say.

Harrelson, in his 1969 memoir, "Hawk," recalled once suggesting he could break his Washington Senators out of a slump in similar fashion.

"Maybe I should start a fight," he recalled offering Gil Hodges, the Senators manager. "A good free-for-all might get us all pulling together."

Hodges, whom Harrelson branded "unfair, unreasonable, unfeeling, incapable of handling men, stubborn, holier-than-thou and ice cold," frostily rejected the offer.

"This shows me something about what kind of person you are," Hodges told him.

To the final episode, Hawk Harrelson has had a flair for drama, when to avoid it and when to play it for all it's worth.

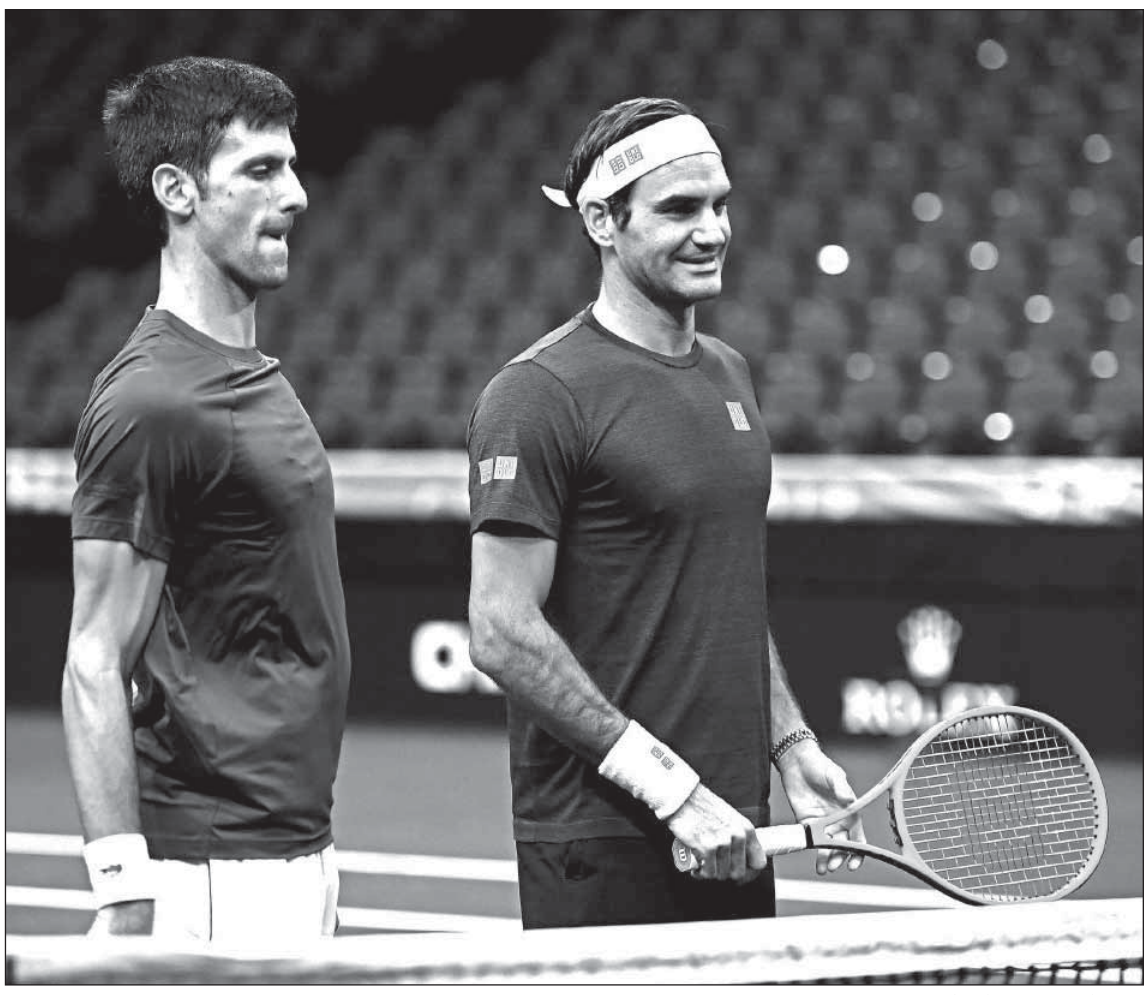
LAVER CUP



STACY REVERE/GETTY

Novak Djokovic, left, and Roger Federer will play doubles together Friday for the first time in the Laver Cup.

Here to serve

Everything you will need to know about unique tennis event

By Teddy Greenstein
Chicago Tribune

The buildup to the Laver Cup has been jovial. The world's best tennis players have made light of transitioning from the ultimate solo endeavor (golfers at least have a caddie) to a team sport for this three-day competition at the United Center.

Even normally top-secret injury info is fair game for teammates who normally try to exploit one another's weaknesses.

Roger Federer, who is assisting captain Bjorn Borg in composing lineups for Team Europe, has been asking teammates: "How's your knee? How's your shoulder?"

"Normally we don't talk together," Federer said.

The jovial vibe disappeared Thursday when a reporter asked during the Team World news conference about the "seriousness level" attached to the 2-year-old event.

"That question really annoys me," replied John Isner, the outspoken American. "It's 100 percent serious. This is not an exhibition at all. At all."

Now I'm both answering and asking the questions, so I expect chummy responses. Here goes:

What is the Laver Cup?

It is tennis' answer to the Ryder Cup, which golf fans salivate over every two years. Tennis' Davis Cup is country versus country and goes on forever, it seems. The Laver Cup features five sessions (afternoon and evening Friday and Saturday plus Sunday afternoon) with a total of 12 matches — 13 if needed to break a tie.

Team Europe is stronger on paper than captain John McEnroe's Team World, which has three Americans plus Illinois alumnus Kevin Anderson of South Africa.

Why Chicago?

A world-class city, a tennis-starved market, a giant indoor venue, an international airport and a mayor who rolls out the red carpet for big events. Plus Federer, the key figure in creating the event, called Michael Jordan "my hero growing up. ... It's very cool to be in the city of Michael."

Who will play Friday?

Friday's four matches are worth one point each, Saturday's four are worth two apiece and the four Sunday are worth three. All six players must compete in at least one singles match, so the weaker players are used Friday. McEnroe called it saving "the best for last."

The singles matches: Frances Tiafoe (World) vs. Grigor Dimitrov (Europe); Jack Sock (World) vs. Kyle Edmund (Europe); and Diego Schwartzman (World) vs. David Goffin (Europe).

How about Friday's final match?

It is unprecedented. Federer and Novak Djokovic, who have combined to win 34 Grand Slam singles titles, will play doubles together for the first time.

"I think I will take the deuce side, if Novak is OK with that," Federer said.

"I think I'm OK on the backhand," Djokovic replied.

They will take on Sock and Anderson. Asked about the Federer-Djokovic pairing, Sock shot back to laughter: "Who's that?"

"A legendary team," he added.

When I want a break from watching, where should I go?

The Laver Cup Fan Zone in the parking lot across Madison Street. It has a viewable practice court, a giant LED screen streaming live footage, an arcade-style tennis game, a Wilson Fan Zone experience featuring various equipment and a large Hall of Fame showcase.

New CEO of the International Tennis Hall of Fame Todd Martin will pop in, guiding fans who want to participate in a new initiative — participating in the Hall of Fame voting process.

Fans also can cast votes online at vote.tennisfame.com.

Q&A: Federer has unlikely teammate

By Amy Carr
Chicago Tribune

What happens when your rival becomes your teammate?

Tennis fans witnessed Roger Federer and Rafael Nadal in an epic embrace after last year's team victory in the Laver Cup, but a Federer/Novak Djokovic bear hug is harder to imagine.

Federer and Djokovic will be unlikely teammates on Team Europe when the Laver Cup begins Friday at the United Center. And even Federer isn't quite sure how that will play out.

We caught up with Federer this week to talk about the team, his incredible shotmaking, and how he plans to stay in the game for years to come.

How does the Laver Cup compare to other team tennis events, like the Olympics and Davis Cup?

I don't think you can (compare it). Sure it's a team event, so there are similarities to some extent, but just having different nationalities on the same team is not something we really have in tennis, and it's a three-day event. It's fast, and it's something to honor the great legends of the game in the world, Rod Laver being one of them. But it goes beyond Laver for me because in tennis, we don't have much of a platform for retired players. They commentate or they coach. And I find that quite disappointing. The Laver Cup gives a platform, like (Bjorn) Borg/(John) McEnroe being captains. Patrick McEnroe and Thomas Enqvist being coaches.

The idea (for Laver Cup) was to have the different generations, so you would have young guys on the team who could rub shoulders with the likes of Rafa, Novak, myself and then rub shoulders with the likes of a Bjorn Borg and John McEnroe.

Is it difficult to go from being rivals with somebody, like Djokovic, to being a teammate?

I don't think normally it's a problem. With Novak, it's different because I know him well, but I don't know him that well. With him, I'm very excited to see how the week's going to go because (neither) of us know really, really what we think of each other. I don't know what kind of a team leader he will be. With Rafa, I have done so many promotional events around tournaments. I've done foundation matches with him, and I know his family very well. So I'm much closer to Rafa. And, also (Andy) Murray, I did a foundation event with him and a lot of other top guys. Novak is one of the only guys I haven't done it with. So that's going to be interesting just to see the dynamics there.

You continue to amaze with trick shots, like that around-the-net post shot at the U.S. Open against your Team World opponent Nick Kyrgios. Do you think we'll see anything like that this weekend?

Oooh, yeah, that was a classic. Possibly. It also depends a lot on Nick. The best players push you to hit the best shots. The court lends itself (to shots) very well, too. It's faster balls, with a slower court, and that allows you to play really good tennis. Last year, the tennis was exceptional in Prague, and I hope we see something similar here again in Chicago. And it's interesting because the World team, except for (Diego) Schwartzman, are all really big servers. And then on the other side we have the likes of (Grigor) Dimitrov and (Kyle) Edmund and (David) Goffin and Djokovic who are incredible defenders. So, the matchups actually might work very well. And, you know, when one guy's attacking and one guy's defending, that always lends itself very well for great shot-making.

As you get older, how hard is it to keep your game at this level?

Well, the unfortunate part is that I would love to play more, but I can't. Number one, because of (having four) children. Number two, because of my body. So, the schedule needs to work for my mind, for everything. And that's the hard part. I have to, unfortunately, play fewer tournaments, and when you play less, you become more vulnerable. So, this is where I have to become very confident and trust myself that even with little play in matches, I can still deliver. It might not always be pretty, but I can get it done. And that's where practice becomes super important, that I do incredible work in the quality of my practices. Not so much quantity, but it's a lot to do with quality. And if I get that balance right, I can play for many more years. But if I do it wrong, I might get injured or start losing a lot, and it's like a downward spiral. ...

Recovery, especially from an injury, takes longer. I wouldn't say like a recovery of being tired from a match is longer, but it's just when something hurts, it might instead of maybe hurting for three days, maybe now it's six days. Or maybe it was a week, and now it's three weeks. I just have to be very clever on how I go about it. So, I think that's the secret.

A secret no more

Chiefs' Mahomes putting up record numbers, already has everyone talking

By Sam Farmer
Los Angeles Times

Talk about escapability. Patrick Mahomes was the one who got away.

The Cardinals had their heart set on taking the Texas Tech quarterback with the No. 13 pick in the 2017 draft. But the Chiefs were fixated on the same player, trading up to leapfrog the Cardinals and select him at No. 10.

With Mahomes off to a record-setting start this season, former Cardinals coach Bruce Arians still feels the sting.

"We were going to draft him; he was our guy," said Arians, now a CBS Sports analyst. "(Former Chiefs general manager) John Dorsey knew it and snuck ahead of us and got him."

That was a masterstroke, because Mahomes, in his first year as a starter, has been phenomenal for the 2-0 Chiefs. He followed his four-touchdown performance in an opening road victory against the Chargers with six more touchdown passes against the Steelers in Pittsburgh on Sunday. The 10 scoring passes are the most by any quarterback in history through his team's first two games.

If Mahomes were to throw for three or more scores at home Sunday against the 49ers, he would eclipse Peyton Manning's league record of 12 in his first three games of 2013.

What's more, in that win over the Steelers, Mahomes became the youngest quarterback to throw six touchdowns in a game, doing so a day before his 23rd birthday.

"You could look at the first game and say, 'All right, he got off to a good start. Let's see what he can do on the road in Week 2 against (Ben) Roethlisberger and the Steelers,' " said Rich Gannon, a onetime Chiefs quarterback and NFL most valuable player. "He just literally put on a performance. It was a freak show."

Not everyone was blown away. In his three seasons as Texas Tech's starter, Mahomes saw his touchdown numbers increase every year, from 16 to 36 to 41. He threw for an NCAA-record 734 yards in a game against Oklahoma in 2016, breaking another record with his 819 all-purpose yards.

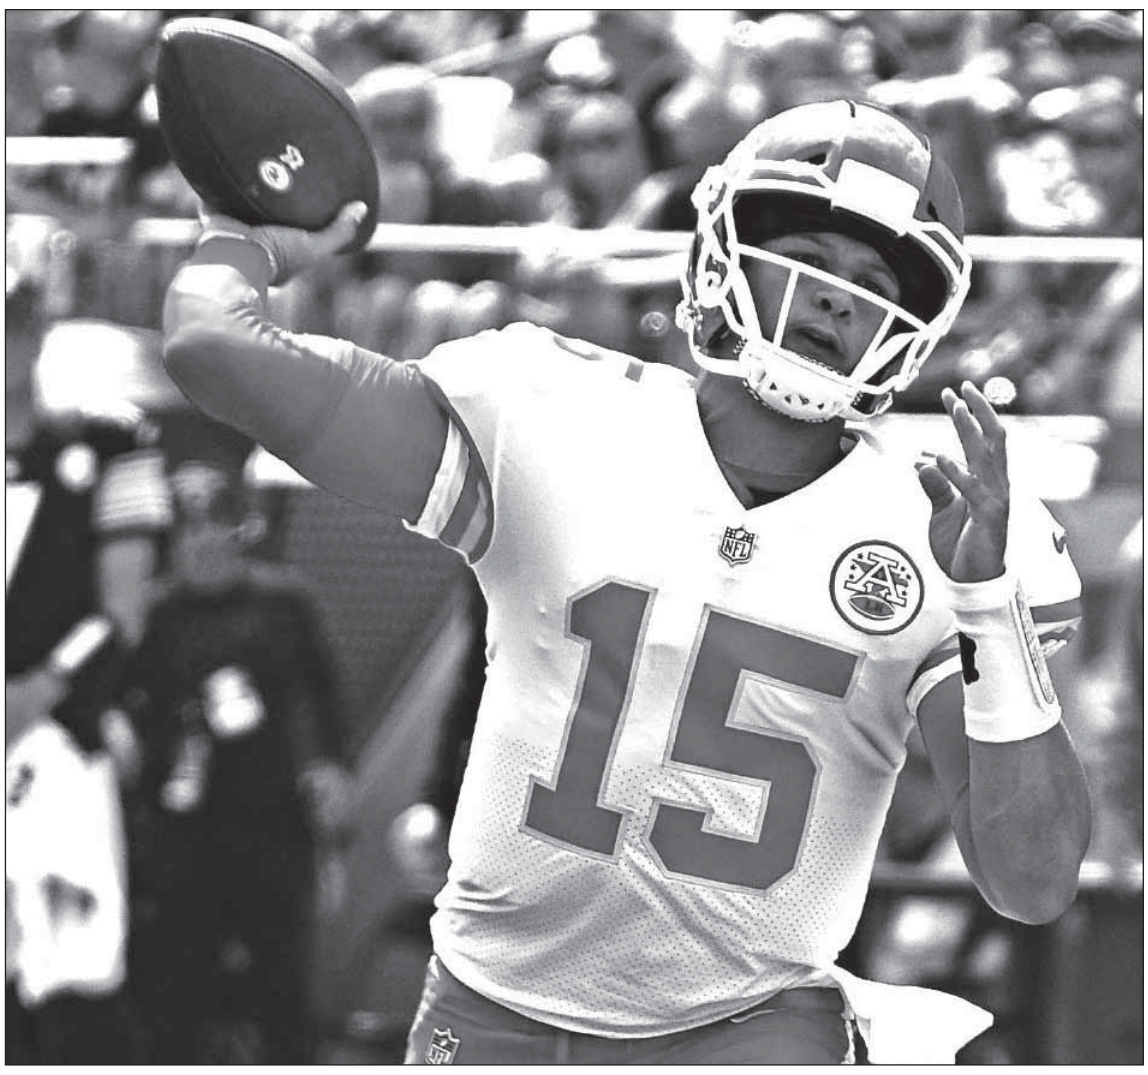
"I'm not an expert, don't get me wrong, but I know football pretty much," his mother, Randi Mahomes, told the Los Angeles Times this week. "My boss was talking to me about it, saying, 'Gosh, this is so exciting. You know, in the NFL, they don't just throw six touchdowns in a game.' And I was like, 'But Patrick's always done that.' "

Just another ho-hum outing for a guy who is carving his way into the hearts of the Chiefs faithful.

"With this guy, you never feel like, 'Well, we've fallen behind and we can't make up ground,' " Gannon said. "You could fall behind by a couple, three scores and not panic with a guy like this."

It helps immeasurably that the Chiefs are so loaded with offensive playmakers such as running back Kareem Hunt, who led the league in rushing as a rookie last season, catch-everything tight end Travis Kelce, wideout Sammy Watkins and — the player who haunts the dreams of defensive coordinators — the blistering-fast Tyreek Hill.

As he showed almost 20 years ago with Donovan McNabb in Philadelphia, Chiefs coach Andy Reid specializes in patiently preparing young quarterbacks to step into the fray, and then draws up plays that fit their skill set.



DON WRIGHT/AP

Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes has thrown 10 touchdowns in two games in his first season as a starter.

"There's always plays that Coach Reid just draws up every week," Mahomes said. "I always say that they always work. He just gets on the board in his room and just starts drawing plays. The possibilities are endless."

It was Mahomes' expertise on the dry-erase board that bowled over the Cardinals coaches.

"I loved his mental makeup more than anything," Arians said. "He's top four on the board I've ever had, up there with Peyton (Manning) and Andrew (Luck). Amazing recall."

Mahomes, a marketing major, wasn't just an Academic All-American but Big 12 Scholar-Athlete of the Year in 2016, the first Red Raider athlete to earn that honor.

In the run-up to the 2017 draft, Arians put Mahomes to the test on the board, drawing up five or six plays and two or three protections. They watched some video on safety blitzes, and Arians gave him a few audibles that would enable him to change the protections at the line of scrimmage.

"So probably two hours later, we're out on the field and he's throwing," the coach recalled. "I walked up and said, 'Man protection. Weak safety's blitzing,' and he said, 'Rightie! Rightie!' I was like, 'Holy cow, he's right!'

"Maybe 10 throws later, I walk up and I'm the strong safety in slide protection and he says, 'Rip! Rip!' He was right again. I've had a couple starters that it took two years to fix those protections. This guy did it in one meeting."

Even non-experts notice the arm. Mahomes has a howitzer, the ability to get the ball virtually anywhere, whether he's dropping back, rolling out or making the most of a broken play. No part of the field is safe.

Agent Leigh Steinberg, who represents Mahomes, has heard all the stories. He has tried to dial down the excitement so Mahomes can play without all the pressure on his shoulders. The mantra Steinberg uses — and texts Mahomes after games — is: "Trust the process."

"I spent the entire offseason trying to lower expectations," Steinberg said. "So many times, a young quarterback goes out and throws an incompletion, throws a couple of interceptions, and people call him a bust."

Then there's the guy who goes out and throws 10 touchdowns with no interceptions.

"Well, guess what?" Steinberg said. "The secret's out."

Week 3 picks

By Sam Farmer
Los Angeles Times

Last week: 8-7-1 (6-10 vs. spread)
Overall: 16-14-2 (13-18-1 vs. spread)

SAINTS (1-1) AT FALCONS (1-1)
Noon Sunday
Falcons by 3 (O/U 53)
The Saints will bounce back after a lackluster Week 2 performance. They have more firepower than the Falcons, and losing defensive stars Deion Jones and Keanu Neal really hurts the Falcons. Drew Brees gets it done. Saints 31, Falcons 27

PACKERS (1-0-1) AT REDSKINS (1-1)
Noon Sunday
Packers by 3 (O/U 45½)
Andrew Luck tore up the Redskins in Week 2. The Packers are coming in with Aaron Rodgers, and it doesn't matter if he's on the road or playing on a tender knee. The Packers will run a little too. Packers 28, Redskins 21

COLTS (1-1) AT EAGLES (1-1)
Noon Sunday
Eagles by 6½ (O/U 47½)
The Eagles need to win this, and good teams don't lose two in a row. Carson Wentz might have some rust, but he'll have the backing of a typically solid defense that will bounce back from an embarrassment in Tampa. Eagles 27, Colts 23

BILLS (0-2) AT VIKINGS (1-0-1)
Noon Sunday
Vikings by 16½ (O/U 41)
The Bills aren't good, and they're heading into a meat grinder. The Vikings are one of the league's top teams, and they're steamed after a blowing a chance to knock off the Packers at Lambeau Field. It won't be close. Vikings 31, Bills 10

RAIDERS (0-2) AT DOLPHINS (2-0)
Noon Sunday
Dolphins by 3 (O/U 43½)
The Raiders got their passing game going in Denver but then did Raiders stuff — dumb penalties, defensive miscues, etc. The Dolphins are 2-0, which is a head-scratcher, but they're home against zero pass rush. Dolphins 24, Raiders 20

BRONCOS (2-0) AT RAVENS (1-1)
Noon Sunday
Ravens by 5½ (O/U 43½)
The Broncos aren't a powerhouse, but there's a lot to like about them, including a good defense and a quarterback who can win close games. But this is a tough one, on the road against a defense that can be smothering. Ravens 21, Broncos 17

BENGALS (2-0) AT PANTHERS (1-1)
Noon Sunday
Panthers by 3 (O/U 44)
This should be close. The Bengals are rolling on offense, even though they've now lost Joe Mixon for a couple of weeks. But solid teams tend not to lose two in a row, particularly when the second game is at home. Panthers 27, Bengals 24

GIANTS (0-2) AT TEXANS (0-2)
Noon Sunday
Texans by 6 (O/U 42)
The Giants have plenty of offensive weapons, but their line is really bad. The Texans are coming off a humiliating loss to a bunch of Titans backups. Will Fuller's return helps Deshaun Watson and the Texans win. Texans 23, Giants 17

TITANS (1-1) AT JAGUARS (2-0)
Noon Sunday
Off (O/U off)
The Jaguars are legit. They're one of the league's elite teams, and they're at home. Their defense is an East Coast answer to the Rams and isn't likely to falter this week, no matter who's at quarterback for the Titans. Jaguars 28, Titans 17

49ERS (1-1) AT CHIEFS (2-0)
Noon Sunday
Chiefs by 6½ (O/U 56½)
Patrick Mahomes threw four touchdown passes in the opener, then six more in Week 2. That's scary. The Chiefs can score in so many ways, plus they're at home. The 49ers scored 30 on a bad Lions defense. Chiefs 34, 49ers 27

CHARGERS (1-1) AT RAMS (2-0)
3:05 p.m. Sunday
Rams by 7 (O/U 48)
Never count out Philip Rivers, and the Chargers offense is explosive. Their defense isn't the same without Joey Bosa but is talented nonetheless. The Rams look excellent in all three phases. This is the game of the week. Rams 28, Chargers 24

BEARS (1-1) AT CARDINALS (0-2)
3:25 p.m. Sunday
Bears by 6 (O/U 38)
The Bears defense is too good for a Cardinals team that didn't cross midfield against the Rams until the final play of the game last week. The Cardinals need to reboot and rebuild a team around rookie QB Josh Rosen, who should be starting. Bears 24, Cardinals 13

COWBOYS (1-1) AT SEAHAWKS (0-2)
3:25 p.m. Sunday
Seahawks by 1½ (O/U 41½)
The retooled Seahawks have taken a big step backward. The offensive line can't protect Russell Wilson, who has been sacked a league-high 12 times through two weeks. Cowboys aren't very good, though, and Seattle is still a tough place. Seahawks 24, Cowboys 21

PATRIOTS (1-1) AT LIONS (0-2)
7:20 p.m. Sunday, NBC
Patriots by 6½ (O/U 52½)
The Patriots aren't going to lose back-to-back games, and certainly not in prime time. They come back and handle business against a Lions defense that is bad, and a running game that's worse. Patriots 31, Lions 20

STEELERS (0-1-1) AT BUCCANEERS (2-0)
7:15 p.m. Monday, ESPN
Steelers by 1 (O/U 54)
Is Ryan Fitzpatrick going to throw for 400 yards three weeks in a row? Not against a Steelers team that, albeit flawed, isn't going to lay an egg in a prime-time game. This will tell us a lot about both teams. Steelers 30, Buccaneers 21

NFL NOTES

Mayfield delivers victory for Browns

Associated Press

Mayfield

For the first time in 635 days, the Browns found a way to win.

Baker Mayfield showed them how.

The No. 1 overall pick replaced injured starter Tyrod Taylor and sparked the Browns, who got two 1-yard touchdown runs from Carlos Hyde and beat the Jets 21-17 on Thursday night in Cleveland for their first win since Dec. 24, 2016.

And so ends the Browns' 19-game winless streak, the NFL's second-longest since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger.

The Browns (1-1-1) trailed 14-0 in the first half before Mayfield came in for Taylor and led four scoring drives while winning an unexpected matchup against Jets rookie quarterback Sam Darnold. The Browns passed on taking Darnold in the draft and instead chose Mayfield, the Heisman Trophy winner from Oklahoma.

Mayfield finished 17-for-23 for 201 yards in a little more than a half after coming in after Taylor suffered a concussion.

Jones good to go: Falcons wide receiver Julio Jones says he's "good" to play against the Saints on Sunday despite missing his second day of practice with tightness in his calf.

Jones says his absence from practice was "just precaution." He says he "felt some tightness" in Sunday's 31-24 win over the Panthers.

The Falcons also held out running back Devonta Freeman (sore right knee), linebacker Corey Nelson (calf) and defensive ends Takk McKinley and Derrick Shelby, who have groin injuries. Nelson was hurt in Wednesday's practice. Freeman did not play against the Panthers.

On target: While the Vikings and Browns changed kickers after only two games, the Bengals gave Randy Bullock a two-year contract extension for his perfect start.

He's made every field goal and extra-point attempt, helping the Bengals remain unbeaten.

The seventh-year kicker has settled into the job after beating out fifth-round draft pick Jake Elliott last year, prompting the Bengals (2-0) to offer the contract extension through 2020. He signed it on Tuesday.

Bullock is one of 11 kickers in the NFL who have yet to miss.

Extra points: TE Rob Gronkowski is dealing with an ankle issue as the Patriots prepare for their Week 3 matchup with the Lions. Gronkowski was a limited participant in practice after participating in Wednesday's workout. DE Trey Flowers and S Patrick Chung missed practice for the second straight day as they continue to go through the league's concussion protocol. ... Broncos QB Case Keenum returned to practice after missing a day with a sore knee. Keenum didn't want to miss Wednesday's workout but said he understood that being cautious in September will give him a better chance of staying in the lineup all season. ... Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes' 10 TDs are the most in NFL history by a QB in his team's first two games. Peyton Manning has the most through three games with 12 in 2013 for the Broncos and Tom Brady is second with 11 in 2011.

Bears running back Jordan Howard said he must learn how to read his blockers better in the offensive line's new run scheme to get more carries.

A rushin' resolution

Bears plan to give Howard, running game a jump-start

By Rich Campbell
Chicago Tribune

Jordan Howard lifted himself from the Soldier Field turf Monday night about nine yards behind where he had hoped to be. All he could do was flick the ball to the referee.

The Bears were trying to eat yards and drain clock with a 14-point lead and less than four minutes remaining against the Seahawks. A 5-yard loss on second-and-7 was hardly what Matt Nagy envisioned when he called an inside zone run to the right behind two tight ends.

But a blocking breakdown resulted in their worst run of the game. They punted two plays later.

"We as an offense," Nagy said, "can't let that happen."

And that wasn't Howard's only vexing rush of the game. His totals of 14 carries and 35 yards just didn't match up with the fact the Bears never trailed in their 24-17 victory.

"In this offense, generally, when you have the lead, that's when you get 8-10 carries just on top of that in the fourth quarter," Nagy said. "That hasn't been happening."

Why not, exactly?

That's the question Nagy carries to Arizona for Sunday's game against the Cardinals. After all, he's the play-caller. It's his choice.

The answer is multi-faceted. For one thing, Nagy has quarterback DNA. Gone is the 2017 approach of playing defense with the offense. He wants Mitch Trubisky to let it rip, inexperience be damned.

But the Bears' 42 percent run rate is 13th-most frequent in the NFL. Perhaps that should be higher, given that they have trailed for only 2 minutes, 13 seconds in two games. But it's not like they're ignoring the run.

Offensive linemen have an introspective outlook. On Howard's 5-yard loss, defensive end Frank Clark got into the backfield virtually untouched between right tackle Bobby Massie and right guard Kyle Long. It was either a missed assignment or the result of Long stumbling off the ball.

"We need to stay on our blocks for the entirety of the play," Long said. "Moving the line of scrimmage is always our first priority in the run game. Maintaining our blocks from snap to whistle is imperative.

"Too often, myself included, I'm looking to go get the linebacker or safety. If we just stay on the down guy, good things tend to happen."

Massie echoed that the Bears need to stay on their blocks until the whistle. That must be a point of emphasis this week from line coach Harry Hiestand.

After the Packers game, in which Howard rushed for 82 yards on 15 carries, Hiestand acknowledged the need to improve the timing and execution of combination blocks.

"There's nothing like game speed and game experience with it.," Hiestand said. "I think we're on the right track, not as good as it needs to be, though. We have a good understanding of it, but we have to do it more consistently."

The Seahawks had eight defenders in the box on only three of Howard's 14 carries, so the Bears weren't outnumbered up front.

Nagy, Long and Massie each downplayed the transition from the inside/outside zone blocking attack of the last three seasons to a scheme that involves more straight-ahead power blocking.

Nagy said that blocking style has more to do with the offense's identity. But, as Howard explained, it does slightly affect his vision. Specifically, what he must read to be effective.

"Sometimes in outside zone, you have to read the end man on the line of scrimmage," Howard said. "On power blocking, you have to read the flow of the linebackers. I feel like power hits a little quicker. I just have to master it in practice."

Howard, though, downplayed how that has affected his production through two games.

Since joining the Bears in 2016, he has maintained openly that he benefits from getting enough carries to develop a rhythm and wear down opponents with his physical style.

Offensive linemen feel the same way.

"You keep pounding on a D-line, (even) if they stop it early, in the fourth quarter you have handed the ball off 28, 29 times, they're going to break," Massie said. "They ain't going to be able to hold up."

Nagy, though, implied the offensive line must win blocks more consistently to prove it warrants such a big workload.

Howard is determined to do his part too.

"I don't know how many I'm going to get a game," Howard said, "so I just have to take advantage of my reps and make them count."

Pass rush conjures up '80s memories

"We gave a gigantic effort," Hall of Fame defensive lineman Dan Hampton said. "We basically ran Simms off the field. It was a bona fide big-time night."

The X's and O's have changed, but for the first time since the Buddy Ryan-designed and inspired defenses of the 1980s, the Bears have the personnel to hunt and haunt quarterbacks. It's unlikely this unit will challenge the NFL record of 72 sacks in a season set in 1984 by the Bears, but that's not to slight what Vic Fangio's unit has done so far because it's clearly the beginning of something special.

The game has changed and offenses are designed to get the ball out quickly. With the money being paid to quarterbacks, no one wants to see their passer's helmet bouncing off the turf time and time again. Since 2000, only one team has come within 10 sacks of the '84 record, and that was the Saints with 66 in 2000. The Steelers led the league with 56 last season.

Khalil Mack is the player who takes this defense to the next level. Everyone knows that. But what makes this defense scary for opponents — and worthy of an early comparison to the unrelenting Ryan defenses — is the ability of so many complementary players to get to the quarterback. Eight of the 10 sacks have come with only four rushers, and as Mack settles into the scheme and Fangio gets more exotic, it's going to be fascinating to watch what develops.

"If you can't tell," Mack said, "it's very contagious."

The Bears have had nine combinations of linemen on the field for the 10 sacks, a sign of how much they can rotate personnel in the front seven, and outside linebacker Leonard Floyd has yet to play with the use of his right hand because he has worn a club to protect broken fingers. Eight players have a sack and Floyd will surely get some up soon.

Mack has been on the field for seven of the 10 sacks. Besides his two, he has created other opportunities by flushing the quarterback out of the pocket or collapsing the edge. Mack cut off Wilson's bootleg on a play fake when the Bears were in an interesting six-man line of (from left to right) Mack, Jonathan Bullard, Akiem Hicks, Eddie Goldman, Bilal Nichols and Floyd. Free safety Eddie Jackson rolled down into the box and when Bullard got his hands on fullback Tre Madden in the backfield, Wilson was forced to eat the play and Jackson finished what Mack started.

"We haven't really blitzed," Jackson said. "That's the crazy part. We're just getting started. When everything gets rolling, it is going to be something fun to see."

The Bears finished with 70 sacks in 1987 when the season was shortened to 15 games by a players' strike. Perhaps the record would be higher had they played a full schedule, but the Spare Bears, replacement players, did their part with 23 sacks in three games, including 11 in a 35-3 demolition of the Eagles.

Challenges will arise as opponents change up what they're doing and seek ways to attack the defense. The biggest factor right now, other than the arrival of Mack, is that the Bears have trailed for only 2 minutes, 13 seconds through the first two games. Cardinals quarterback Sam Bradford isn't going to elude many pass rushers, but he's treating the ball like a hot potato, which explains why he has taken only three sacks but has an NFL-worst average of 4.0 yards per attempt.

Build a lead and you can go get the quarterback more often.

"Two games doesn't a season make," Hampton said. "Now it's going to be interesting to see how offenses counter and if they're going to do more chipping with backs and tight ends and slide blocking toward Mack. Ten sacks in two games, that's pretty heady stuff and it's not a one-man crew.

"Akiem Hicks and Eddie Goldman are doing a hell of a job collapsing the pocket, but Mack is the guy that stirs the drink. He's a special player, a really special player."

Seventy-two was a special number in this city before the Bulls won that many games in 1996. Seventy-three has to be the goal, however difficult it might be to achieve.

BEARS NOTES

Floyd ditches bulky cast for brace

By Dan Wiederer and Colleen Kane
Chicago Tribune

Bears athletic trainer Andre Tucker approached coach Matt Nagy earlier this week with positive news: No more Q-tip for Leonard Floyd.

At first, Nagy offered a confused look.

"I didn't know what the heck Andre was talking about," Nagy said Thursday. "But then I figured it out. (The cast on Floyd's right hand) looks like a Q-tip. That thing's gone."

Floyd has traded in the bulky cast that was protecting his surgically repaired right hand for a more flexible brace. He fractured the hand during the preseason game against the Broncos last month and has been limited since.

With an opportunity to get rid of the cast, the outside linebacker should get a boost physically and mentally as the Bears head to Arizona to play the Cardinals on Sunday.

"Now," Nagy said, "some fingers are alive. He's getting a little bit closer to where he needs to be. ... I'm sure his fingers can breathe now, which is nice."

The Bears lead the NFL through two games with 10 sacks, and that's with Floyd still looking for his first. Perhaps the third-year pass rusher can break through this weekend as he rounds into form. Floyd did recover a fourth-quarter fumble in Monday's win over the Seahawks.

Overall, coordinator Vic Fangio has been satisfied with Floyd's contributions.

"In light of the circumstances that he's played with, with one hand, he's done fine," Fangio said. "To come to any conclusions about his play over the first two games would be not very prudent."

First look: Fangio said rookie linebacker Roquan Smith played well in his first NFL start Monday but has room for improvement.

Smith, who missed much of the preseason because of a 29-day contract holdout and a hamstring injury, played 89 percent of the defensive snaps against the Seahawks. Fangio said he had a couple of missed tackles and some issues in a coverage at the end of the game.

"When we put (the coverage) in and worked on it the most, he wasn't there in training camp," Fangio said. "And he didn't execute it like we wanted him to at the end of the game there, which allowed some of those completions.

"That's more on me than him because I should have realized that he wasn't there when we worked on it and made sure he was honed up on it. But I really liked the way he played. He had some really nice plays. Good tackler. Obviously he can run, and we're thrilled to have him."

Rounding into shape: Fangio said he thinks outside linebacker Aaron Lynch will keep improving with more time on the field.

Lynch, who played for Fangio with the 49ers, missed most of the preseason with a hamstring injury, but the Bears kept him on the roster, citing their history together as part of that decision. He had two tackles and a sack Monday.

"I don't think me being with him in the past was a major part of that decision," Fangio said. "Even if I wasn't here, we would've kept him. When he was out there, which wasn't a lot, obviously you do see his potential and what we'd like to get from him. He just has to stay healthy.

"He's still rounding into shape, both in efficiency of execution and just his body being in shape. Hopefully he'll keep improving, and I think he will."

Injury report: Safety DeAndre Houston-Carson, who has a broken forearm, was the only player on the injury report for the second straight practice. Houston-Carson was limited.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Some odds & amends

TEDDY GREENSTEIN
On college football

MORRY GASH/AP

After losing to BYU, Wisconsin shouldn't be a three-point favorite at Iowa. We're still backing the Badgers.

This is Stubborn Week in Big Ten football.

Michigan State has done nothing to warrant being favored on the road against an undefeated team, barely beating Utah State and folding late at Arizona State.

Same for Wisconsin, which is favored at 3-0 Iowa. Last we saw the Badgers, they couldn't keep up with Team Vowel (aka BYU) and its touchdown-catching Moroni Laulu-Pututau.

So what's next for Michigan State and Wisconsin? Do we support them (financially) based on our preseason evaluation?

Picks are against the spread (from VegasInsider.com consensus at 9 a.m. Thursday), and selections are in bold:

Friday

Penn State (minus 28) at Illinois: The Illini showed us something before the Fold-ier at Soldier. They're also adding healthy bodies. And with the Nittany Lions possibly looking ahead to next Saturday's tussle with Ohio State, I'll take the points.

Saturday

Nebraska (plus 17½) at Michigan: It was an emotional week in Lincoln after Scott Frost suggested players not fully invested should hit the road. Offensive lineman Tanner Farmer backed him up: "You'll always have some guys on a team who resist buying in. That can be the difference between winning and losing games." Banged-up Michigan backs Karan Higdon and Chris Evans are expected to play, but I'll take the Huskers to back up their coach and cover the big number.

Boston College (minus 6½) at Purdue: The spread has dropped just a half-point even though everyone seems to be picking the overdue Boilermakers to win or at least cover. This is not the slow and steady Boston College you thought you knew. The Eagles are averaging 52.7 points and probably won't face much resistance in West Lafayette.

Buffalo (minus 5) at Rutgers: Jim Delany should look at this line and think: What have I done? A Big Ten team is nearly a touchdown underdog to Buffalo at home?! And, yes, I'll take the Bulls.

Minnesota (plus 1½) at Maryland: Is this another year in which Maryland looks good only against Texas? I'll go with that theory and take the Gophers.

Tulane (plus 37) at Ohio State: Tulane is guaranteed $1.5 million and a beating. With the Penn State game looming, will Urban Meyer rest his starters earlier than usual, keeping the final tally down? Maybe, but I'm envisioning 49-10. Bet the Bucks.

Michigan State (minus 5) at Indiana: Call me stubborn. The Spartans have done nothing to warrant our faith and the Hoosiers played them down to the wire in 2016 and 2017. But given an extra week to refocus and prepare, the Spartans, to me, are irresistible.

Wisconsin (minus 3) at Iowa: When the line opened at 3½, I would have grabbed the Hawkeyes. Ohio State will tell you just how lethal they are at Kinnick Stadium under the lights. At 3, I will slide the other way, favoring the matchup of the Badgers' NFL-caliber offensive line against Iowa's young linebackers.

Last week: 5-7.
Season: 16-20.

Penn State at Illinois

TV/radio: 8 p.m. Friday; FS1, WSCR-AM 670.
Line: Penn State by 28.
Records: Penn State 3-0; Illinois 2-1.

KEYS TO THE GAME

1. Create turnovers. Illinois has forced a turnover in 17 straight games, including at least two in every game this season. The Illini's six interceptions lead the Big Ten, with two apiece by Del'Shawn Phillips and Jartavius "Quan" Martin.

2. Return injured and suspended players. Five players, including three starters, have missed the first three games because of suspensions for violating unspecified team rules. Illinois needs all the bodies it can get against the Nittany Lions. Projected starters Bennett Williams and Nate Hobbs would provide some needed protection in the defensive backfield, where Illinois got burned last week against South Florida for a game-winning score. On offense, a reliable hand such as tight end Lou Dorsey also would be welcomed back. Quarterback AJ Bush Jr. was "close" to returning to action last week after suffering a hamstring injury.

3. Hope to be overlooked. The biggest showdown of the Big Ten slate looms next weekend when the Nittany Lions host Ohio State — two top-10 programs vying for dominance in the East Division. The Illini's best bet at an upset may be catching Penn State overlooking them and toward next week's hyped matchup.

THE WINNER

Penn State 45, Illinois 17.

BLACKHAWKS

Davidson looks to get career back on track

BY JIMMY GREENFIELD | Chicago Tribune

ALEX GALLARDO/AP

After stops in Montreal, Edmonton and New York last season, Brandon Davidson hopes to stick with the Blackhawks.

Waived in December by one of the worst teams in the NHL. Traded for a third-round pick in February to a team wanting him for a playoff push.

Yeah, last season was a strange one for Brandon Davidson.

Getting cut by the Canadiens was a low point for Davidson, who is in camp with the Blackhawks on a professional tryout contract. But when the Oilers picked up the 27-year-old defenseman it was a chance to get his career back on track with the team that drafted him in the sixth round in 2010.

"It was a whirlwind of events that happened," Davidson said. "I had a bad start in Montreal and I couldn't find my rhythm. I just lost some confidence. I don't really know how, I was just trying to maybe do too much and couldn't find my game at all. The more I did, the less things kind of worked out for me. Edmonton was a familiar place for me. I knew the coaches, I knew the players. Ideally, it was an easy transition going back and playing for them."

Things went so well for Davidson that his agent entered into discussions with the Oilers on a two-year contract before the Islanders acquired him for a third-rounder just before the trade deadline. Davidson understood it was just business.

"When a team offers a third-round pick for a guy they took off waivers, I think it's a no-brainer," he said.

Davidson was hopeful he could stay with the Islanders, but there was a ton of upheaval in the organization with management changes and the loss of center John Tavares. In July, he started to look for a new team. The Hawks signed him to a PTO in late August, hoping to bring in a veteran defenseman who could compete for a spot and add depth, and that's exactly who they have seen so far during camp.

With Connor Murphy and Gustav Forsling out until at least November, Davidson has a good chance to be the Hawks' seventh defenseman to start the season.

Coach Joel Quenneville was pleased with what he saw of Davidson in Tuesday's preseason opener.

"He's got some physicality," Quenneville said. "His puck movement was crisp. He's a pro that has been around as well. Gives us some size, a little physicality. We're real happy with his game (Tuesday) night."

If the 6-foot-2, 208-pound Davidson ends up helping the Hawks, he can look back to last season's odyssey as the starting point.

"I lived in a hotel for six months and just grinded and tried to really find myself and find my love for the game," he said. "It seemed to kind of go hand in hand, the harder I worked the more things kept coming to me.

"In all, it was a very successful season. I was able to grow as a player and learn the ups and downs and learn how to ride that curve."

Line dancing: The Hawks expect great things from the new Patrick Kane-Nick Schmaltz-Brandon Saad line and got a glimpse of what they would love to see in Thursday night's 4-2 preseason loss to the Red Wings in Detroit.

On an odd-man break in the second period, Saad took a pass from Schmaltz and slipped it under a defender's stick to Kane, who one-timed a shot past goalie Jonathan Bernier to give the Hawks their first goal of the game.

Forward MacKenzie Entwistle, acquired from the Coyotes in the Marian Hossa trade, also scored for the Hawks.

Anton Forsberg (13 saves) allowed one goal and Kevin Lankinen (11 saves) gave up a pair, including the game-winner to Evgeny Svechnikov with 5 minutes, 45 seconds left in the third.

The Red Wings also added an unassisted Gustav Nyquist empty-netter in the final minute.

Web.com Tour has new stop

Chicago Tribune

The Chicago area has a new stop on the Web.com Tour.

The Western Golf Association on Thursday announced the creation of the Evans Scholars Invitational, which will debut in May 2019 on the PGA Tour's top developmental circuit.

The four-year deal runs through 2022, with the WGA managing the event and all proceeds benefiting the Evans Scholars Foundation, the WGA's 88-year-old charity that provides college scholarships and housing to caddies.

The 2019 event will be played May 23-26 at The Glen Club in Glenview.

The Evans Scholars Invitational essentially replaces the Rust-Oleum Championship, played the last three years at Ivanhoe Club near Mundelein, as the area's Web.com Tour stop. The Rust-Oleum was not on the 2019 schedule the PGA Tour released Thursday.

In a statement, WGA Chairman Frank Morley pointed out that the organization now runs annual events at four levels of a player's development: the Western Junior, the Western Amateur, the Evans Scholars Invitational and the BMW Championship, which is part of the PGA Tour's FedEx Cup playoffs.

This will be the second Web.com Tour event to be played at The Glen Club, which hosted the LaSalle Bank/Bank of America Open from 2002 to '08.

The top 25 in earnings at the end of the tour's regular season receive PGA Tour cards for the next season, with another 25 spots available in the three-event Web.com Tour Finals.

Tiger Woods is pumped as he sinks a 25-foot eagle putt on the 18th hole Thursday.

PGA TOUR CHAMPIONSHIP

Woods, Fowler on top

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

ATLANTA — The crowd at East Lake was larger and louder than it has been in five years, which was the last time Tiger Woods played in the Tour Championship.

It was no coincidence.

Woods played one of his best rounds of the year in his return to the FedEx Cup finale and caused the biggest cheer of a sun-baked Thursday afternoon by making an eagle putt from just over 25 feet on the par-5 18th for a 5-under 65 and a share of the lead with Rickie Fowler.

It was the second time in as many FedEx Cup playoff events that Woods was tied for the 18-hole lead. He shot a 62 at Aronimink in the opening round of the BMW Championship two weeks ago on a rain-soaked course that allowed just about everyone to go low.

This felt even better on a tougher East Lake course.

"This was by far better than the 62 at Aronimink," Woods said. "Conditions were soft there. This, it's hard to get the ball closer. If you drive the ball in the rough, you know you can't get the ball close. You just can't control it."

Fowler, who missed two playoff events recovering from a right oblique injury, putted for birdie on all but two holes for his 65 as he tries to avoid ending the season without winning.

Justin Rose, in his debut as the No. 1 player in the world, got up and down from a bunker for birdie on the 18th for a 66 and was tied with Gary Woodland. Rory McIlroy, Justin Thomas and Tony Finau, all of whom will be in France next week for the Ryder Cup, were another shot behind.

Woods already considers this a successful year just by making it into the 30-man field at East Lake, where everyone has a mathematical shot at capturing the $10 million bonus. He started the season in January after a fourth back surgery that limited him to 16 PGA Tour events over the previous four seasons.

"To be able to play golf again and to earn my way back to this level is something that I was hoping I would do at the beginning of the year, but I didn't know," Woods said. "And I've done it."

Woods has 54 holes remaining. Two weeks ago, he went from a share of the first-round lead to five shots behind on a course where attacking flags on soft greens was the only option for low scoring.

Woods will play in the final group Friday with Fowler, who has seen plenty of him at home in Florida in the months before Woods returned to golf. Fowler had finished his round and was doing interviews when he heard the head-turning roar of Woods making eagle.

They will be teammates at the Ryder Cup.

Ranking the Big Ten game-day experiences — and it starts in the Valley

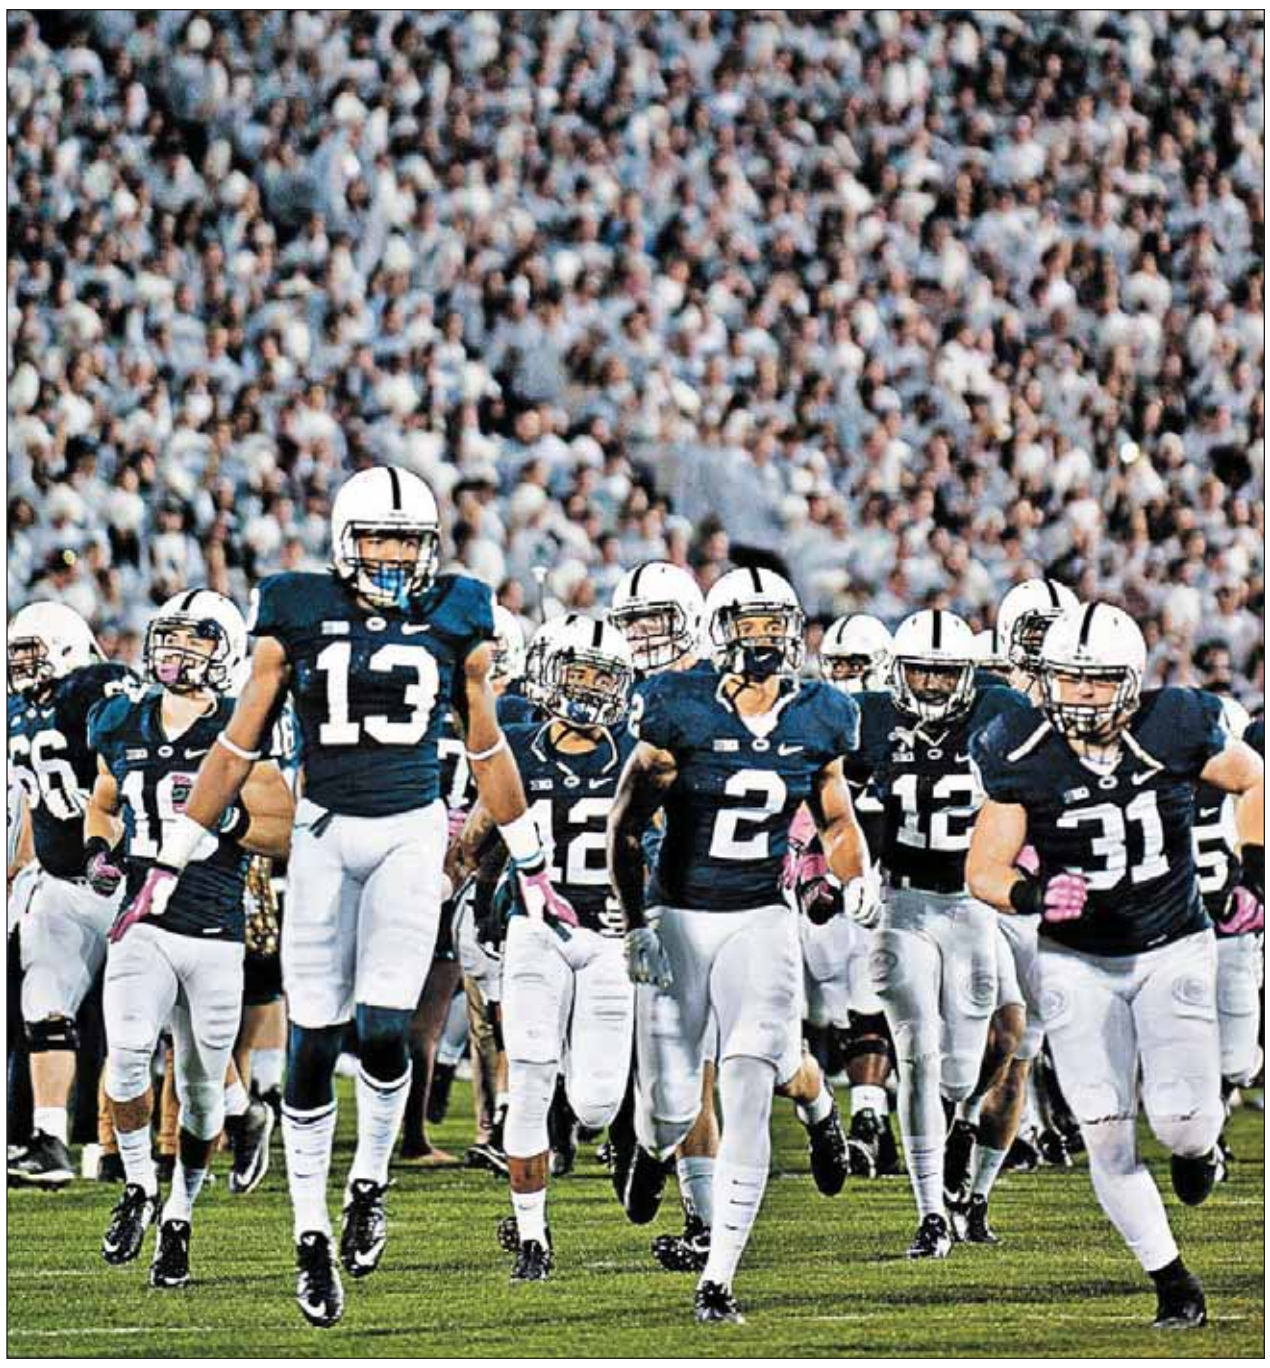
By Shannon Ryan and Teddy Greenstein
Chicago Tribune

Leaves are turning. Beer is flowing. Everyone is back on campus.

Ah, college football has returned. Chances are if you're a Big Ten fan, you've returned to your alma mater for equal doses of football and nostalgia.

What makes a perfect Big Ten football experience — besides reminiscing with college friends about your glory days? We weighed factors such as atmosphere, tailgating, tradition, food and even parking to rank the fan experience at each Big Ten venue from best to worst.

Put some of these on your bucket list. Feel free to skip others (hint: the East Coast).



ABBY DREY/CENTRE DAILY TIMES

A whiteout for a night game at Beaver Stadium makes for one of the best atmospheres in all of college football.

1. Penn State
More than 100,000 fans descend into a cozy Pennsylvania town every home football weekend and transform it into one of the grandest parties in college sports. Lots open on Thursday night as a pop-up town of white tents and RVs clusters around Beaver Stadium. Students set up camp for first-come, first-served seating in their section, helping build anticipation before game day. Stroll through the tailgating area before kickoff and you'll likely be invited to share a beer or brat under someone's tent. It's hard to beat the raucous atmosphere of a whiteout during a night game in State College with fans chanting: "We are. Penn State." The downside? Traffic is miserable with a two-lane road in and out of town.

2. Wisconsin
Tradition and winning combine for a fantastic atmosphere. Wisconsin has it all. When "Jump Around" blasts at Camp Randall before the fourth quarter and the stadium literally starts rocking, you know you're at one of the Big Ten's best parties. Wisconsin doesn't have a central tailgating area, but feel free to pop onto a lawn for a house party and buy a red Solo cup and tap a keg. Fans mill in and out of bars on Regent Street. Grab a couple of Spotted Cows and some brats to feel like one of the locals. Even when the weather turns cold, Badgers fans remain loyal and jovial. They even stick around for the postgame celebration with the marching band, known as "The Fifth Quarter."

3. Nebraska
Even if the game is a dud, you will never forget your first trip to Memorial Stadium. It's well-situated near both campus and downtown Lincoln, where the most intense pregaming takes place. The "O Street" area is full of college bars, and the Haymarket part of downtown is primo for those in their late 20s and 30s. The experience as a fan of the visiting team is unmatched, with upbeat "Sea of Red" locals saying, "Welcome to Lincoln! Hope you enjoy the game!" and inviting you to their tailgate for free food and drink. Eat a corn dog and ask about the third-string punter. Huskers fans will know his name.

4. Iowa
When "Back in Black" plays at Kinnick Stadium, the crowd roars in anticipation of "The Swarm" — one of the best traditions in the Big Ten as Iowa players lock arms before jogging onto the field. Iowa added another heartfelt tradition recently with "The Wave" as fans show support to patients in a children's hospital that overlooks the stadium. Spectators feel like they're on top of the game in the classic brick stadium that's filled with history and friendly fans. While the stadium seats about 70,500, there's often a sea of more than 100,000 fans in black and gold milling around. Did we mention there's an all-you-can-eat-and-drink buffet in Hawkeye Village?

5. Ohio State
It's impossible to cross the river next to Ohio Stadium without hearing Keith Jackson's voice: "On the banks of the Olentangy ..." The first time you see the "Shoe," you might be awed by its grandeur. A massive tailgating scene is split by the Jesse Owens Plaza north of the stadium. The OSU Marching Band bills itself as TBDBITL: The Best Damn Band in the Land. Around 10,000 fans typically go to neighboring St. John Arena about two hours before kickoff for a concert/pep rally called the Skull Session. High Street has great bars, if that's your scene. One negative: Ohio State fans have a rep for being nasty toward those not wearing scarlet and gray.

6. Michigan
The Big House is an intimidating, massive stadium — a crater with a football field at the bottom. There doesn't seem to be a bad seat in the stadium. Attending a home Michigan game is a bucket-list item. It's not too wild inside the 109,000-seat Michigan Stadium, but that fight song sure will stick in your brain. (You're humming it now, aren't you?) Fans party before the game on grassy lawns, with some of the best tailgates set up at neighboring Pioneer High School. As far as college towns go, Ann Arbor offers more than just seedy college bars for its well-heeled alumni heading back to campus.

7. Michigan State
The campus has one of the most underrated walks in the Big Ten: Stroll along the Red Cedar River on a fall day once the leaves have turned, and you'll be glad you made the trip. Spartan Stadium is a little blah, but the tailgating scene is vast, and much of it is on grass (bonus points). Leave enough time to stroll through campus, passing the MSU Museum. Destination: The Peanut Barrel for Long Island Iced Tea and Crunchy's for burgers in downtown East Lansing. No matter the weather, the stadium PA announcer will bellow, "It's a beautiful day for football!"

8. Indiana
The Hoosiers have a late-arriving crowd, especially for noon games. There might be 15,000 fans inside Memorial Stadium for kickoff — and twice that many in one of the giant parking lots. If there's a basketball scrimmage that day and the football team is having a rough season, the grills will remain fired up all afternoon. The scene is impressive, and the fans are friendly — unless you're wearing Purdue gold and black. Hoosier Village, behind the south scoreboard, provides a buffet and live entertainment. And spots such as sports-mad Nick's English Hut in charming downtown Bloomington are just a mile away.

9. Minnesota
TCF Bank is the most modern stadium in the Big Ten — and an impressive upgrade from the Gophers' days of playing in the Metrodome. Fans appreciate finally having a home on campus. There are plenty of concession stands, including places to buy a beer. One of the largest video boards in college sports is a nice feature. If the Gophers can establish consistent winning and attendance, this could be a top venue to watch a Big Ten game. Of course, there's also the frigid temperatures late in the season.

10. Northwestern
Detractors call Ryan Field an oversized high school stadium, and the area around it reflects a vibe that does not exactly scream "big time." That said, there's plenty to do at Wildcat Alley, which has kid activities, food trucks and a DJ. There's also an adult version of Wildcat Alley that serves a rotation of local craft beers. It's easy to reach Ryan Field via the L or Metra, and it's a short walk to the sports-themed Bluestone on Central Street. If you're jonesing for a burger, get the double cheese at Mustard's Last Stand, a Paul Burton punt from the stadium. Its grill has been magic since 1969.

11. Purdue
One of the hardest questions to answer is: What is there to do in West Lafayette, Ind.? The city lacks the character and identity of many other Big Ten towns. But from the tailgates at Slayter Hill, to the costumes for the early morning bar-hopping tradition known as "The Breakfast Club," to the All-American Band playing, Boilermakers fans make for an enthusiastic experience. Credit Purdue for being one of a handful of Big Ten schools that permit alcohol sales. But Ross-Ade Stadium is rarely full and lacks the buzz of a big-time atmosphere.

12. Illinois
Give Illinois credit for working to enhance its game-day experience in recent years. The self-dubbed "Littyville" includes a new Grange Grove, an "Illini walk" of fans cheering the players as they march into the stadium and a pregame fan fest with local bands and bouncy houses for kids. That's the good. The bad: Memorial Stadium is one of the deadest venues in the Big Ten. The student section is rarely full, with many opting for the bars — or maybe even the library — instead of the stadium.

13. Rutgers
East Coasters love their nosh (aka food), and Rutgers has a quality tailgating scene. (One banner reads, "RUTailGatERS.") The fans with access to the coveted Scarlet Lot are the most intense, arriving at dawn for noon games at the regrettably named HighPoint Solutions Stadium. Greg Schiano started the "Scarlet Walk," wherein players walk off the bus and circle a statue of William Leggett, captain of the 1869 team that took down Princeton in the first college football game by the extremely old-school score of 6-4. If off-campus munching is your preference, restaurants are a couple miles away in New Brunswick.

14. Maryland
Google "Maryland tailgating scene" and you'll come across a 2017 video in which a Maryland student performs a "smash-and-chug" with a beer can. It's notable for two reasons: 1) The student is female, and 2) she smashes the can on her forehead. Suffice to say not all Maryland football fans have such, um, school spirit. Most students are into hoops. On top of that, nearby College Park is not charming — and not really a college town. As one sportswriter put it, "I covered the program for five years when they were winning, and game days were dreadful."

Long, obscure history of "phantom big-leaguers"

By Dave Sheinin
The Washington Post

On May 23, in need of an additional bullpen arm, the Yankees called up reliever Ryan Bollinger from their Double A team in Trenton, N.J. The news, delivered by his Trenton manager, left the 27-year-old lefty, a veteran of multiple independent leagues and pro ball in Australia and Germany, in tears. When Bollinger met the Yankees in Arlington, Texas, for the finale of a three-game series against the Rangers, the team gave him uniform No. 61, which he wore as he watched from the visitors' bullpen, never appearing in a game the Yankees would win, 12-10.

The next day he was sent back to Trenton.

And just like that, Bollinger was granted membership — provisional for now — in a strange, little-known and not-exactly-desirable club: that of the "phantom big-leaguers," a loosely defined group of star-crossed, largely obscure minor-leaguers who, in one way or another, were promoted to the majors but never appeared in a big-league game.

Nearly three weeks ago, The Post published a lengthy feature story on Brian Mazone, a minor-league journeyman and soft-throwing lefty, who in 2006 was tabbed by the Phillies to make a spot-start in a game against the Astros, only to have the game rained out.

Returned to Triple A because the Phillies no longer needed him, Mazone was never added to the Phillies roster and would never make it back to the majors — and thus does not appear in any official Major League Baseball register.

In other words, his one and only shot at the big leagues got rained out.

While Mazone is likely the only player in history to have suffered that precise set of circumstances, he is far from alone in one larger sense: Baseball history is riddled with examples of players who made it to the cusp of the majors, or even had their promotions made official with a roster move, but never made it on the field. And in this age of 10-day disabled lists, constant bullpen turnover and frequent roster moves, it seems to happen several times a year.

In the wake of the Mazone story, The Post heard from dozens of readers and tweeters offering the names of players who had met similar fates. And one of those readers, Bill Hickman of Rockville, Md., happens to be a longtime member of the Society for American Baseball Research (SABR) who maintains several databases of what he calls "Near Major-Leaguers" — the entries in which, taken together, number in the thousands.

Two of Hickman's databases — featuring players who appeared on the spring training rosters of big-league clubs, and nonroster invitees in spring training camps between 1950-99, none of whom appeared in a regular-season MLB game — contain the names of more than 6,500 players.

JOHN MCDONNELL/THE WASHINGTON POST

Brian Mazone, above, a minor-league journeyman, was tabbed by the Phillies to start a 2006 game, only to have the game rained out.

But it is the third database — featuring 433 players (for now) who have appeared on a major league roster during the regular season but never appeared in a game — that hammers home just how many minor-leaguers creep right up to the edge of big league status but for one reason or another never make it into a game and thus get their names in the record books.

"I admire the fact they were able to get that close," Hickman said when asked what drew him to those near miss players. "I really appreciate the fact there are so many young men who go into the minor leagues, and so few who even get that far."

As you would expect, some of the stories behind the names on Hickman's list are excruciating in their near miss details.

In 1979, catcher Harry Saferight was a September call-up of the Pirates, and though he never got in a game, three different times he was in the on-deck circle when the game ended.

Outfielder/catcher Lee Robinson spent more than a month with the 1974 Dodgers without getting in a game.

In 2011, catcher Brian Jeroloman also spent more than a month with the Blue Jays but didn't get into a game — because he had a broken hand. (The Blue Jays never bothered to place him on the disabled list because with expanded September rosters, they didn't need his roster spot.)

"I always tell people not to feel bad for me," Jeroloman, who kept playing until 2016 but never made it back to the majors, once told MLB.com. "This is part of a baseball. It's part of the life I chose."

Hickman is among those who sometimes refer to these near miss players as the "Bill Sharman Society" — a designation coined by longtime sportscaster, political pundit and SABR member Keith Olbermann — in honor of the Naismath Memorial Basketball Hall of Famer who won four NBA titles as a guard for the Celtics and another as the coach of the Lakers.

Sharman, who passed away in 2013, was also an accomplished baseball player, and in September 1951, as a first baseman/outfielder in his second year in pro ball, he was called up to the majors by the Brooklyn Dodgers, on whose roster he spent nearly two weeks — culminating with the Oct. 3, 1951, playoff game against the New York Giants that was made famous by Bobby Thomson's pennant-winning "Shot Heard 'Round the World" — but never got into a game.

He continued playing baseball until 1955, by which time he was already a two-time NBA all-star, but never made it back to the majors. This makes Sharman the most famous member of the Phantom Big Leaguers' Club, or if you prefer, the Bill Sharman Society.

Olbermann said he became interested in phantom big-leaguers while researching Irving Lewis, a dead-ball-era catcher who spent time on the Boston Braves' roster in 1912 but never appeared in a game, and whose 1912 baseball card is considered one of the scarcest in the world.

Lewis' story resonated for him, he said, because as a teenage Yankees fan, Olbermann had seen pitching prospect Ed Ricks called to the majors in 1977 only to be sent back without appearing in a game, never to make it back up again.

Ricks' fate, Olbermann said, "seemed elementally, fundamentally unfair." When he realized how many players had met similar fates over the years, it resonated with the lifelong baseball fan in him. "This wish, come true: 'If I could only be on the team, just once. Wouldn't even have to play!' Every kid ever interested in sports has had that thought," Olbermann said. "It is viscerally understood by all of us."

But even Hickman's exhaustive research has gaps. Because it includes only players who never appeared in a game (thus gaining entry into the official record-keeping), it doesn't include, for example, Larry Yount, one particularly snake-bitten pitcher whose story was referenced within The Post's Mazone profile.

In 1971, Yount, the brother of eventual Hall of Famer Robin Yount, was set to make his big league debut for the Astros but hurt his elbow warming up in the bullpen.

Called into the game, he jogged to the mound, took a few more warm-up tosses — but couldn't continue.

He walked off the mound and into the dugout, never to be seen in the majors again. But because he had been announced as the Astros' new pitcher, Yount's entry into the game became official, and in the record books he is credited with one pitching appearance but zero batters faced.

Of course, the SABR database of "Near-Major Leaguers" also misses Archibald Wright "Moonlight" Graham, who played a single inning in right field for the 1905 New York Giants but never got to bat — and whose story was memorialized in the book "Shoeless Joe" and the movie "Field of Dreams." Players like Graham, whose big-league careers consist of just one game (or, as that phenomenon is known, a "cup of coffee"), have their own researchers, databases and mystique.

As for Ryan Bollinger — the 27-year-old Yankees farmhand whose first time on a big league roster, this May, ended without any game action — there is still time for him to get his name stricken from the ranks of the Bill Sharman Society. He went a combined 8-6 with a 3.87 ERA between Double A and Triple this season. Perhaps he is a future "cup of coffee" candidate, or perhaps he goes on to a lengthy, fruitful big league career.

But Bollinger already has two strikes on him. On July 31, more than two months after his first call-up, Bollinger was promoted to the majors by the Yankees for a second time in 2018 — and again, he was sent back down the next day without having appeared in a game.

Breanna Stewart and the Storm are in a strong position to defend their WNBA championship next season.

Storm starting new dynasty?

Champions boast both talent, youth to stay on top

By Percy Allen
The Seattle Times

Looking back, the questions directed at Breanna Stewart were off the mark.

During her three years in the WNBA she had to answer for the Storm's two early playoff exits and many wondered if the 24-year-old star would ever breakthrough and win a league title.

Considering her unparalleled college resume — four NCAA titles and four Most Outstanding Player of the Final Four awards — and the fact she played on a team stacked with three All-Stars, capturing a WNBA championship — in hindsight — was a foregone conclusion for the league and Finals MVP.

The more pertinent question now is how many titles will Stewart win before she's finished with a career that's destined for the Hall of Fame?

"Can I get some days off first?" Stewart said smiling when asked about the Storm's prospects next year just minutes after capturing a three-game sweep over the Mystics in the finals.

In many ways, the Storm are poised for another run at the title next year and beyond.

All-Star point guard Sue Bird confirmed she's returning for her 17th season. Before the season, the Storm locked up All-Star guard Jewell Loyd, Natasha Howard, Alysha Clark, Kaleena Mosqueda-Lewis and Sami Whitcomb to multi-year deals.

Reserves Crystal Langhorne, Noelle Quinn and Mercedes Russell are believed to be the Storm's only free agents. (WNBA teams don't disclose contract information).

Free agency starts Jan. 1 and players can begin signing contracts Feb. 1.

A date for the WNBA draft hasn't been set. The Storm have the last pick (12, 24 and 36) in each the draft's three rounds.

"You always want to get better as a team, but I'm of the mindset of, if it's not broke don't fix it," coach Dan Hughes said. "Obviously, this is a good group and you want to keep it together for a long as possible."

Aside from Bird, the league's oldest player who turns 38 next month, the Storm has a young starting lineup that consists of Stewart (24), Loyd (24), Howard (27) and Alysha Clark (31).

And top backups include: Jordin Canada (23), Whitcomb (30), Langhorne (31) and Mosqueda-Lewis (24).

"They're the defending champs, they're young, they're really talented, they're smart and they know how to play with each other," Mystics coach Mike Thibault said.

"Teams are going to have to figure out some ways to match up and have as much firepower as they do because even on the nights that you play pretty good defense, they still — they just have so many weapons to put the ball in the basket.

"They have so many unsung (heroes). Everybody talks about Stewie and everybody talks about Sue, but when you look at the series that Natasha and Alysha Clark and the game that Jewell had the one game, you have so many weapons. And then they bring somebody like Sami Whitcomb off the bench."

The Storm will begin next season as the title favorite, but there hasn't been a repeat WNBA champion since the Sparks won back-to-back titles in 2001 and '02.

The now-defunct Comets, who won four in a row between 1997-2000, is the only other team to win consecutive titles.

"The great ones I've been around — and I'm talking coaches and players — always want to bring something more to the table the next year," said Hughes, whose mentor Van Chancellor led those championship teams in Houston. "That's where my thinking goes.

"As good as we are and as good as some of the players are, you don't ever want to lose that edge and trying to find a way to get a little bit better."

Still, the last last 15 WNBA champions, including the Storm in 2004 and 2010, failed in their attempt to win two straight.

"The way we're built if you look at all the pieces, it's got championship written all over it," Bird said.

"But I'm hesitant to say here comes a dynasty because you could have said that about 2004 with that team and look what happened the next couple of years. There are a lot of teams that have won where you could have said that.

"Look at Phoenix in 2014. ... So much can happen in this league, so I'm hesitant to say it. But the pieces are there."

Before this season, the Lynx dominated the WNBA while winning four of the previous seven championships. But they lost star guard Lindsay Whalen to retirement and shows signs of aging.

The same appears true for 2016 champion Sparks and Mercury, who pushed the Storm to five games in the semifinals.

Quite possibly, the Storm's toughest challengers next season will be the Mystics, Dream and Sun — the top three finishers the Eastern Conference this season.

The Storm players realize how truly special this 2018 season was and believe they can do it again next year.

They had the best record in the league at 26-8 and tied a WNBA record with 13 road wins.

The Storm also set league records with 3-pointers in a game (17) and season (307).

"We have a taste of what it's like and we know what we're capable of now," Loyd said. "It's something that we know that we can do. It's not out of reach. It wasn't luck. We did that. And once you get one, you want another one.

"I want another championship. And Stewie? We all saw what she did at UConn. She's not satisfied with just one. She's an animal. I don't see us slowing down. I only see us getting better."

NHL's best referee keeps his own book

By Stephen Whyno
Associated Press

Wes McCauley is considered by many players to be the NHL's best referee based on his consistency, interactions with players and coaches, and a demeanor that is both entertaining and professional. McCauley is known to fans for his animated announcements and to players for his communication skills and willingness to admit his mistakes. That combination makes him a must-see even when his work keeps him in the background.

Wes McCauley keeps his good calls close and his bad calls closer.

Any time the veteran NHL referee is feeling too good or gets down on himself, he breaks out a binder full of his missed calls and looks through it.

"It's a humbling book," McCauley said. "Trust me, I've made a lot of mistakes. There's times you wish you could saw your arm off."

McCauley's arms have signaled countless penalties, goals and no-goals since his NHL career began in 2003. Over the last 15 years, he has developed a reputation as not only the most animated referee in the game but the best in hockey based on his consistency, rapport with players and coaches and a demeanor that's equal parts entertaining and professional.

In an NHLPA poll last spring, almost half of players chose McCauley as the league's best referee, honoring a man in stripes who's far more used to getting barked at than complimented.

"I don't think I'm that good," McCauley told The Associated Press. "My job's just to officiate hockey games and to do the best I can and to move on to the next game and really to stay out of the highlights."

McCauley has his own highlight reels because he enjoys hamming it up when he makes announcements. When he reaches to his right hip to turn on the microphone, it's must-see entertainment.

His flair for the dramatic once sent former Rangers coach Alain Vigneault into a laughing fit on the bench, and it has been the subject of mocking from veteran officials for just how demonstrative he can be when whistling a penalty or waving off a goal. McCauley knows he's more exuberant than he has to be, but that's part of the fun for him and players.

"He's real," Avalanche forward Nathan MacKinnon said. "He's obviously an animated guy and definitely calls a good game."

McCauley earned the votes of 47.8 percent of players as the NHL's best referee, well ahead of Kelly Sutherland (17.7 percent), Tim Peel (4.4 percent), Dan O'Halloran (2.7 percent) and Trevor Hanson (2.7 percent). The 46-year-old from Georgetown, Ontario, is the most popular and respected ref because he gets it right more often than not, apologizes when he doesn't and knows how to explain his calls to players and coaches.

"Consistency. You kind of know what you're getting with him," Rangers forward Chris Kreider said. "In any sport when you talk about refereeing, if a ref isn't very visible and prevalent and the game is decided by the players ultimately, then that's a good ref and that's Wes."

McCauley gets that. He played four seasons at Michigan State from 1989-93, had a cup of coffee in the minors and figures his relationships with players from that era bought him the benefit of the doubt, and some of that still exists.

"He's in charge out there, and there's really not a lot of gray area," said Capitals coach Todd Reirden, who went to Bowling Green and played against McCauley in college. "He stands his line and he lets the players play, but he also has a great pulse of what's going on and I think that's from his experiences of playing the game at a collegiate level and also some at a pro level. He relates really well with the players and with the coaches."

McCauley vividly remembers botching a call in Game 3 of the Stanley Cup Final when he didn't see that Washington's Chandler Stephenson, not Vegas defenseman Deryk Engelland, tripped teammate Nicklas Backstrom and called a penalty. As with many other calls, he hoped it wouldn't directly affect the result and apologized to Engelland later.

That's a common theme during McCauley's career.

"I still remember one time he made a bad call and he found me the next time we were playing and said:Hey, I just want to let you know I know that call was really bad. I've been thinking about it a lot and I wanted to apologize,'" Winnipeg center Mark Scheifele said. "When he has the respect level for the game and for us as players, we have respect for him. And I think that's why he's known to be the best referee out there."

Best referee out there? "Now you jinxed me — now I'm going to be up and down like a toilet seat next season," McCauley quipped. Maybe earlier in his career that was a danger, though McCauley now has 957 regular-season and 131 playoff games under his and has worked six Stanley Cup Final series.

Over that time, McCauley has developed a balance between knowing players see him as an obstacle to winning while still communicating with them to the point they know him personally. Even if players aren't happy with his calls, they appreciate McCauley's honesty and ability to have just as big a mouth as they do.

"You automatically sometimes snap at the refs," Stars center Tyler Seguin said. "Sometimes you blame the refs for things that were even out of their control. And he finds a way to take it, give it back a little and then move on pretty quickly and he's always been very respectful to the players and I think that's what makes him a great ref."

McCauley's life experiences helped make him a great ref. His dad, John McCauley, worked 15 years as an NHL referee before an eye injury took him off the ice and led to a director of officiating job before his unexpected death at age 44. His brother, Blaine, suffered an eye injury that cost him his hockey-playing career and changed Wes' view forever.

"My biggest thing is when I step on the ice, I want the players to feel like, 'Oh, OK we're going to get a fair shake tonight,' " McCauley said. "I've never really taken it for granted, so I try to go out there and referee every game the best I can."

"Love, Gilda" serves as a devoted documentary portrait of both Gilda Radner's stardom and her offstage travails.

'LOVE, GILDA' ★★★

AN ODE TO AN 'SNL' SUPERSTAR

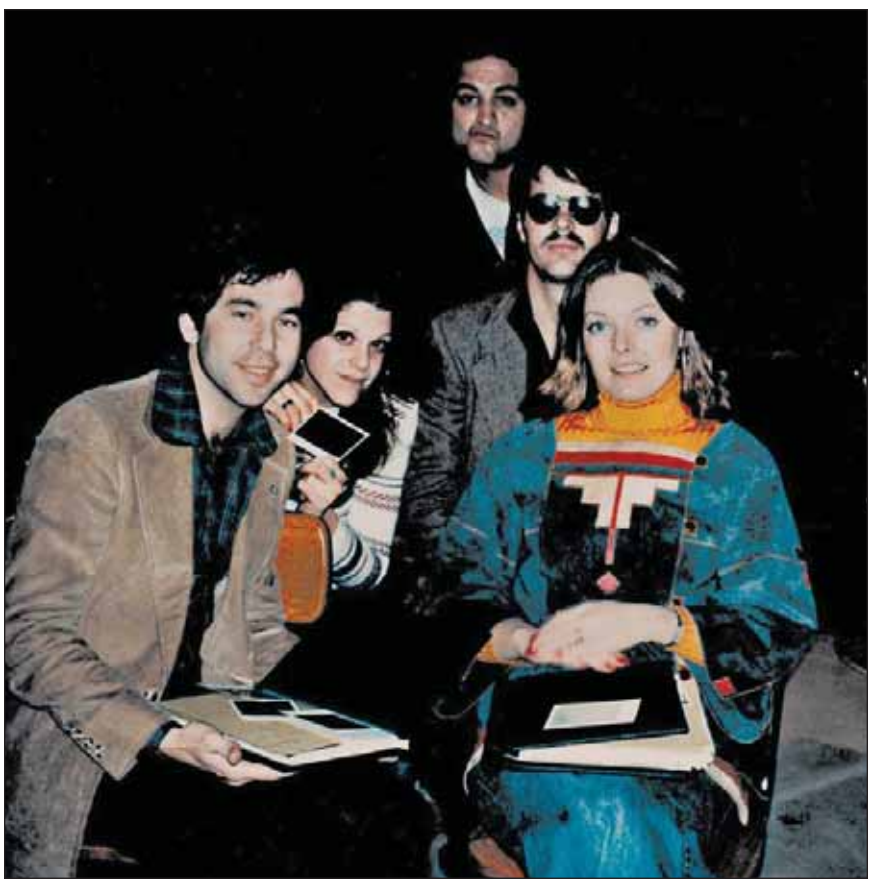
Detroit-born Gilda Radner was the first female hired for the originally titled 'NBC's Saturday Night'

By Michael Phillips | Chicago Tribune

Gilda Radner, the funniest woman on television in the 1970s, got hired by Lorne Michaels for what was originally called "NBC's Saturday Night" before anybody else — before John Belushi, before Chevy Chase, before Dan Aykroyd, before Jane Curtin, Laraine Newman, Garrett Morris.



"Saturday Night Live" writer Tom Schiller and cast members Radner, John Belushi, Dan Aykroyd and Jane Curtin, all part of the original 1970s show lineup.

Those who watched the show in 1975 or a year or two later, when it was getting huge and starting to change the culture, had their favorites. But the Detroit-born Radner was the one everybody cherished. She brought a huge smile, a wryly forlorn quality around the eyes, and a fearless attack to every sketch, lame or inspired. Radner naturally gravitated toward the midpoint between chameleons like Belushi and Aykroyd, and more easygoing improv aces such as Bill Murray, who filled the Chevy Chase slot once Chase left to become Hollywood-famous.

Most of the men tried. None of the women got the same chances.

The documentary "Love, Gilda" works different ways for different viewers. For older fans, it's a welcome excuse to reminisce. For newcomers it's an entertaining primer on Radner's life, times, demons and famous inventions.

Chief among those inventions were "Weekend Update" contributors Roseanne Roseannadanna and sweet, addled Emily Litella, wondering why everyone's complaining about all the "violins" on television. Radner based Litella on her nanny, Dibby, the caretaker she considered "a second mother" and the one who did not bug her about her weight the way her birth mother did.

Director Lisa D'Apolito throws no stones in "Love, Gilda." It's a quick, breezy, tactful account. Current and recent "SNL" performers including Maya Rudolph, Amy Poehler and Melissa McCarthy appear in the movie, reading excerpts from Radner's journals, and speaking from the heart about what Radner's presence on "SNL" meant to their younger selves. (Poehler acknowledges that her own early "SNL" contributions tended to be "weak, 2.0 versions" of characters Radner created decades earlier.)

Radner's father, whom she adored, died when Gilda was barely a teenager. By then her mother, who preferred a warmer climate than Michigan's, relocated the family to Florida for four months every year. The routine didn't help young Gilda feel settled or attached in any lasting way. Her mother needled her about Gilda's weight fluctuations; Dexedrine-like diet pills became a staple, and Gilda put up with a depressing amount of verbal bullying at school.

A writer (Oscar Isaac, right) recalls happier times with the love of his life (Olivia Wilde) in "Life Itself," from writer-director Dan Fogelman.

'LIFE ITSELF' ★

'This Is Us' creator serves up a sentimental soup

By Michael Phillips
Chicago Tribune

Not to be confused with Roger Ebert's autobiography, or anything good, actually, "Life Itself" is an emotional mugging, not a movie. Writer-director Dan Fogelman, creator of NBC-TV's warm bath of feels "This is Us," tells his story in five chapters and a million platitudes. When a key character admits he's "smothering," it's not just his fictional self he's acknowledging; it's the entire greezy script. Meanwhile, on the soundtrack, Fogelman exploits "Make You Feel My Love" (from "Time Out of Mind") with such ruthless sensitivity, when Bob Dylan's song is reprised in Spanish, the movie becomes a convicted pathos felon in two languages.

Briefly, because life (itself) beckons:

The valiant Oscar Isaac plays Will, a recently institutionalized writer who is seeing a therapist (Annette Bening, gravely outclassing her material). Olivia Wilde portrays Abby, the blessing of Will's existence, frequently the subject of adoring montages. Will and Abby are no

Why it's worthwhile to ask who's writing television shows

"The Neighborhood" is among the new comedies set to premiere this fall on CBS, centering on two families — one black, one white — coexisting in a longtime African-American community and ... comedy ensues. "Cedric the Entertainer is bringing authenticity to CBS's 'The Neighborhood,'" declared the headline of a recent LA Times profile of the show, which notes that Cedric is both a star and executive producer on the series who "oversees casting, set designs and consults with the writing staff to ensure the show convincingly reflects African-American culture."

Reading that, my first thought was: Great! So what is the makeup of the writing staff itself?

That info wasn't provided in the story.

As journalists, we may not be in the habit of asking the question. I would argue that's a mistake. We should be regularly talking about this with networks and showrunners. Why? Consider the most recent numbers — which can be found in a 2016 report titled "Renaissance in Reverse?" — from the Writers Guild of America, which represents TV and film writers.

Despite small gains along the way, the report revealed a "familiar story of male and white dominance." Overall: "Male writers accounted 73.7 percent of industry employment."

And for TV work specifically, the report found that 3,548 white writers were employed on shows, compared with 537 minority writers: "It appears as if minority television writers are at best treading water."

When the premise on a show like "The Neighborhood" (premiering Oct. 1) is fueled by the idea that people of different races often have different cultural touchstones and life experiences — that the world fundamentally treats them differently — yes, it's worthwhile to know who is on the writing staff.

You know who else feels that way? TV writers.

On Tuesday, the hashtag #ShowUsYourRoom was launched by Amanda Idoko (a writer on the animated series "Central Park" for Apple's forthcoming streaming service) encouraging showrunners to post group photos of their writing staff on social media. It's such an elegant and simple way to get the point across. Show. Us.

Jordan Peele, an Academy Award winner for "Get Out," is reviving "The Twilight Zone" for CBS.

'Twilight Zone' a new adventure for Peele

Jordan Peele is traveling through another dimension — a dimension not only of sight and sound, but of mind.

CBS announced Thursday that Peele will serve as host and narrator of "The Twilight Zone," the revival of the classic science fiction anthology that he is producing with CBS Television Studios and Simon Kinberg for CBS All Access. Peele steps into the on-camera role originated by "Twilight Zone" creator Rod Serling, who introduced and provided narration for episodes of the series during its 1959-64 run.

CBS announced last year that it would revive "The Twilight Zone" for streaming service CBS All Access with Peele's Monkeypaw Productions and Kinberg's Genre Films. Peele and Kinberg are set to serve as executive producers alongside Win Rosenfeld, Audrey Chon, Carol Serling, Rick Berg and Greg Yaitanes.

Earlier this year, Peele discussed his initial reluctance to take on a revival of "The Twilight Zone," a project that he eventually embraced.

"The realization, for me, was that it was an opportunity to attempt to continue with Serling's mission," Peele said at the time. "If we approach it without ego and sort of bow to Serling, that will hopefully suffice for our fellow 'Twilight Zone' fans but also bring back a show that I think is needed right now."

No premiere date has been set.

Wedding party question stalls plans

Dear Amy: My fiance and I have started planning our wedding. I have four brothers; my fiance has two. Both of his brothers are married. I am not necessarily close with their wives, but I was a bridesmaid in their weddings, although I was placed as the last individual on the line (farthest from bride and groom) in both cases.

Should I include these women as my bridesmaids, and ask my fiance to include my four brothers as his groomsmen? We originally planned to have no wedding party, but I don't want to hurt any family members' feelings (mine would have been hurt if I'd been left out).

I had also thought to just have my brothers stand with me, and his brothers stand with him. Or have my mother and cousin stand up with me.

My sisters-in-law love me and I love them. But if I exclude them, am I setting the stage for hurt for years to come? We are paying for this wedding ourselves and trying to keep costs down. I don't know what to do, and no one around me can offer sound advice without airing their personal feelings.

— Too Many Siblings

Dear Too Many: Your own reaction to the honor when you were twice asked to be a bridesmaid — to complain because you were placed "last" on the line — reveals how seriously some people take these wedding honors/duties.

You are overthinking this and seem torn between serving your own wants (no attendants), versus your perceptions of how tenderly people respond to being asked, or excluded, from the wedding party.

Because I don't think you are capable of handling the complications involved with making choices and managing this social burden confidently, I think you and your guy should go it alone, and ask your brothers and their spouses/partners to enjoy being honored guests.

Dear Amy: I am in an office of about 25 employees, and we each have our own cubicle with dividing partitions above the desk but not below.

I sit near a back corner of the office, with one coworker sitting between me and the restrooms. "Tom" has a few quirks that drive me crazy; in particular, he snickers loudly every time we hear anything in the restrooms, even going so far as to comment out loud ("Oh, man!") occasionally.

We all know what happens in a restroom, and it's hard enough to be in a small office where nothing is really private; does he need to draw attention to it? He also scoots away from his desk and sneezes into the void below his (and my) desk every time he sneezes.

I cringe, thinking about the things he's sneezing on that might make it home with me (my purse, my shoes, myself). As I am the only person sitting next to him, his comments and sneezes directly affect me, but others might not even notice. Is there a way to politely ask him to cover his mouth when he sneezes, and to stop commenting on the restroom sounds? I feel like I have to teach him how to be an adult, when he's in his 40s.

— Grossed-Out Co-worker

Dear Grossed-Out: Why does "Tom" get to behave as he pleases while you worry excessively about being polite?

Use your words: "Hey, Tom, it's tough enough for us to sit here right next to the restrooms all day. You commenting out loud about every noise makes things worse. Can you stop doing that?"

Frankly, Tom has a right to sneeze in the space beneath his desk. The fact that his space is connected with yours is not something he can control. Your shoes being sneezed upon does not seem to place you at risk. You might want to store your handbag in a file drawer, however.

Dear Amy: "A Concerned Mom" reported that her 10-year-old saw some other kids "vaping" in the locker room. Your answer missed the point: Depending on what state they live in, vaping for under 18-year-olds is illegal!

— Upset

Dear Upset: I believe you are mistaken. Sales of vaping products are banned in some states, but actual use of these products seems to have slipped through a legal loophole.

But that is immaterial. Children should not be vaping, and this boy's concerns should be dealt with by the adults in his life.

Reeling in the years — all 36 of them

Chicago's LGBTQ film festival first got its start in 1981

By Michael Phillips
Chicago Tribune

FREELANCERS ANONYMOUS

The LGBTQ film festival Reeling opens with "Freelancers Anonymous," with Cassandra Blair, Jamison Scala, Mouzam Makkar, Jennifer Bartels, Lisa Cordileone and Amy Shiels.

The idea, Chicago Filmmakers executive director Brenda Webb tells me, came from something she read in a film journal sometime in 1980, the year of Ronald Reagan's election and two years before a global health crisis acquired the name Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome.

This was in the time of the "pre-AIDS euphoria," she says, when America hosted a total of two official gay/lesbian film festivals. One took root in New York, and is no longer running. The other one, Frameline in San Francisco, was founded in 1977.

The article Webb read posed the question: Is there such a thing as a "gay sensibility" in film?

She set out to answer that one with a festival of her own. Now in its 36th year, the Chicago LGBTQ cinematic celebration known as Reeling opens Friday with a crisp, enjoyable diversion filmed here, director Sonia Sebastian's wry, crisply paced romantic comedy "Freelancers Anonymous" starring co-screenwriter Lisa Cordileone as a woman suddenly flung into the open job market on the cusp of her wedding. The savvy ensemble includes Mouzam Makkar, Megan Cavanaugh, Alexandra Billings and Jennifer Bartels.

That's one sort of movie, breezy and adroit. This year's Reeling covers many other sorts, in a formidable array of genres and styles. So the answer's no: There is no one gay sensibility, to state the obvious, just as there's no one straight aesthetic or personality. There are multitudes.

The first Reeling festival opened in April 1981. At the time, Webb says, "the only filmmakers dealing with queer themes were experimental filmmakers such as Barbara Hammer ("Superdyke," "The Great Goddess") and Kenneth Anger ("Scorpio Rising," and author of the notorious "Hollywood Babylon"). We'd show their work at Chicago Filmmakers but we didn't frame it as gay or lesbian." Then Webb wondered: Does the gay/lesbian community even know about these movies?

Her mission became to "connect these filmmakers to a broader audience, and a larger community."

Reeling's earliest incarnations, she says, "focused on the avant-garde and European cinema, with some American independent films, mostly documentaries." Webb recalls attending the massive Berlin Film Festival to scout titles for her own festival. "The queer-themed films would rarely be labeled as such. They'd hide the fact; the distributors had this fear that by labeling the film as gay, you'd be limiting its audience."

The AIDS epidemic coincided with the home video boom. In the mid-'80s Reeling received "a lot of AIDS documentaries as festival entries." But things were "sad enough and depressing enough," she recalls, and audiences largely steered clear of painful topical subjects.

Until "Buddies," that is. The 1985 drama, about a monogamous gay New Yorker who befriends an AIDS patient, was the first American feature to address the HIV/AIDS pandemic (the same year as the Chicago-set television project "An Early Frost," starring Aidan Quinn). A benefit screening that year at the Music Box sold out, Webb says, and audiences responded gratefully. "Buddies" returns to this year's Reeling lineup.

Richard Knight Jr. serves as Reeling's features programming director, with Webb as co-programmer. If there's a through-line in the 2018 programming, Webb says, it's a reflection on the 1970s and '80s, spanning the biopic "Mapplethorpe" (screening Friday); the docudrama "Riot" (Saturday), set in late 1970s Sydney, Australia, about gay rights activist Lance Gowland; and "1985" (Sept. 26), a coming-home and coming-out narrative about an HIV-infected Manhattanite hiding his condition over a Christmas visit to his conservative Texas family. The closing night presentation, "Studio 54" (Sept. 30), documents the origin and the coked-up heyday of New York's nightclub of choice.

There's much more, including a Sony Pictures Classics title reeking with class and pathos: "The Happy Prince" (Sept. 27), showcasing director Rupert Everett's own acclaimed portrayal of Oscar Wilde in his fraught, scandalous later years. Everett is scheduled to attend.

For the full schedule go to reelingfilmfestival.org.

Reeling screenings are presented primarily at the Landmark Century Centre Cinema, 2828 N. Clark St.; the opening night "Freelancers Anonymous" bash takes place at the Davis Theater, 4614 N. Lincoln Ave.; the closing night "Studio 54" celebration will be held at Chicago Filmmakers, 5720 N. Ridge Ave.

Let's talk about transparency, specifics

"Everyone's saying they're promoting diversity and inclusion, but every year the numbers are the same," Idoko told Variety. "People are saying they want diversity and inclusion but not actually fighting for it."

On Twitter, Idoko posted a photo with her colleagues and wrote: "Being in a diverse room means not carrying the exhausting weight of being the only. It means working in a space that looks the way the world does. I'm proud of the way my room looks. Are you? If so, let's see it."

Change has been slow, she told Variety, because "simply classifying lack of diversity as an industry-wide problem takes away personal accountability and personal incentive for people to actually stand up and fix the problem."

For showrunners who "find yourself in the position that you're in an all-white room," she added, "that should be a wake-up call for you. ... If you are scared to show a picture of your room, I think that's a problem."

Why keep it under wraps? Let's just talk about it and get everyone used to the idea that this is part of an ongoing conversation.

When I reached out to CBS about "The Neighborhood," I was told that in addition to the cast (which includes "New Girl" alum Max Greenfield), the sitcom is "inclusive behind the scenes as well: Of 10 writers, 7 are POC or female."

Sounds good. I asked for more specifics. No response.

Here's why specifics matter: Consider that CBS just ousted six board members and replaced them with six new people. Let's look at the breakdown. Three are white women; two are white men; one is a black man. As a group? Inclusive. But not all that diverse, with just a single person of color. (Is that tokenism — intentional or otherwise?) And not one woman of color. That tells us a lot about CBS' priorities as a company.

This is why I asked the publicist for "The Neighborhood" for more information. "POC or female" elides the fact that women are people of color and vice versa. "POC" can often be a useful shorthand that encompasses any number of races and ethnicities. But we do everyone a disservice if we frame the conversation only as a binary between white men getting opportunities and everyone else lumped together into a single category that basically amounts to not white men.

So why not be transparent? Let's put the information out there and see where progress is (or isn't) happening.

Another new show from CBS this fall is the reboot of "Magnum P.I." (premiering Monday) starring Mexican-American actor Jay Hernandez. At the annual Television Critics Association media tour this summer, freelance writer and critic Yolanda Machado — who attended on behalf of the U.S.-based Latino outlet Remezcla — asked the panel if there were any Latino writers on the show's staff.

"I said, 'OK, so you cast Jay Hernandez as Magnum P.I. — but what else are you doing?' " she told me. "The fact that they (showrunner Peter M. Lenkov and executive producer Eric Guggenheim) were both unprepared to answer the question and fumbled when they answered is even more indicative that it's a huge issue. They kept passing the question off to each other, like: 'Um, uh, no — well, do we?' "

A few hours after that panel, Lenkov tweeted an update: "I want to clarify a comment I made yesterday. I made a mistake. We do have a Latinx writer on the #MagnumPI staff, and she is an alumnus of the CBS Writers Mentoring Program."

"I think networks or showrunners do feel defensive and attacked when those questions are asked," Machado said. "And it's because they either haven't been aware that they need to address it — 'This is the way it's always been, so nothing's wrong here!' — or they know inclusion isn't happening all around and they don't want to talk about it until they figure out how to fix it. That's the optimistic point of view; I'm trying to believe that nobody's intentionally leaving people out."

Each network approaches it differently in terms of how — or even whether — information is disclosed. On the plus side, FX has been one of the more forthcoming.

Here's what network head John Landgraf said during his Television Critics Association session: Diversity is a priority — and then he talked about numbers behind the camera. In 2015, almost 90 percent of the shows on FX were directed by white men. This year, 51 percent are directed by white men; 22 percent by white women; another 22 percent by nonwhite men; and 5 percent by nonwhite women.

A 2015 deep dive from Mo Ryan during her tenure as TV critic at Variety ("Peak Inequality: Investigating the Lack of Diversity Among TV Directors") is one reason Landgraf has said he was motivated — shamed, even — to act. After that story ran, he sent a letter to FX showrunners pressing the issue.

Still: Progress at FX has been slower for executive producer and senior writer positions.

Here's Machado: "At least this is a network that recognizes there's an issue and he's addressing it and working on it."

Sometimes recognizing the problem isn't enough.

Consider this: DePaul University's daylong annual screenwriter conference coming up Sept. 29 features only one established writer who is a person of color: "Jane the Virgin's" Rafael Agustin.

I reached out to the film school just to confirm that was the case and was told that while they work to have a diverse group come and speak, they "failed to land any" women of color this year.

What kind of subtle message does that send to aspiring screenwriters — about who succeeds and who belongs — when the Hollywood screenwriters on hand are, with just one exception, all white?

We should be just as curious about the staffing at publications that cover TV and film, because the numbers aren't all that different.

Who reviewed the vast majority of movies last year? White men. That's according to researchers at the Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism at the University of Southern California. A full 82 percent of reviews were written by white critics. Nearly 78 percent were written by men.

Why does that matter? Because other critics might be more sensitive to nuances, or recognizing stereotypical portrayals for what they are — and calling them out. Or might be able to offer a deeper analysis of story elements that are specific to certain life experiences.

There should be room for a wide assortment of critics. Which is why the Toronto International Film Festival relaxed some of its gatekeeping policies this year and invited critics who have historically been left off the "right" lists. That's a good first step.

Machado, who is Peruvian-Mexican-American, was one of those critics. So was Valerie Complex, who told the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.: "I exist at a lot of various intersections. I'm a military veteran. I'm queer. I'm a black woman who's dark-skinned. ... I can see different perspectives, based on different narratives in different films that I watch."

But most of these writers are freelancers.

That means sometimes they're shut out from merely attending a media screening because the the studio marketing apparatus caters to the schedules of full-time writers. Who predominates in those full-time positions? White men.

"When you get a screening invite to a movie you really want to see but it's at 3 pm," tweeted TV and film critic ReBecca Theodore-Vachon. "I really need folks to understand a lot of critics have 9-5's to pay the rent."

It's also a difficult for freelancers to get their reviews published when a staff critic already has written about the film. Machado is still looking for an editor interested in commissioning a review of Alfonso Cuaron's "Roma," a female-centric story of class and ethnicity inspired by his childhood memories of growing up in Mexico in the '70s.

"I did talk to some white critics (at the Toronto film festival) who were like, 'I thought it was beautiful, but it's just another story about a maid,' and I was like, 'No, no, no, no! It's not!' " Machado said.

"We're often marketed one or two ideas about Mexicans: Either the rich white Mexicans who live in Mexico City, or poor Mexicans who are trying to come to the U.S. But this film captures a very specific experience" — of an indigenous domestic worker and the well-off woman who employs her — "and features all things Mexico. And it's about the internal lives of Mexican women."

After the Toronto festival, Machado tweeted: "I've been asked a number of times this week where my 'Roma' review will be placed, and so far, nowhere. Considering this is a story about Latinx women, you'd think placement would be easier ... but here we are. So, I'm available for 'Roma' pieces & reviews ... DM or email me!"

Let's talk about transparency.

Each year the American Society of News Editors publishes a diversity survey that looks at newsroom representation, as well as those at the executive level. It also compares those numbers with the population of the city the paper serves. The online version of ASNE's 2017 survey allows readers to type in the name of various newspapers — including the Chicago Tribune — and see the data. I encourage you to do so. It's enlightening and valuable information about where things stand at publications across the country.

KAREN NEAL/CBS

The producers of the CBS reboot of "Magnum P.I." hired Latino actor Jay Hernandez to star but initially fumbled a response when asked if there are Latino writers on staff.

Earlier this month ASNE announced that it's delaying the results of its 2018 survey until it collects more data because so few publications — only 234 out of nearly 1,700 newspapers and digital media outlets — actually filled it out. That's deeply concerning.

Because just as TV writers rooms should be out in the open about staffing, so should newspapers and digital publications, in part because diversity among writers and editors helps shape internal discussions about what stories to cover — and how.

That's a good thing.

And it's essential for any news organization that's curious about — and responsible to — the lives of the population it serves.

Sometimes talking about this in frank terms makes people uncomfortable.

"People of color deal with that all the time," Machado said. "We are made uncomfortable all the time and it's expected to be OK with us — but if you try to flip it around and ask uncomfortable questions to white people, they don't want to talk about it. But nothing's going to progress if we don't ask those questions."

The first lady of 'Saturday Night Live'

"If they call ya fat," Dibby once told her, "just make a joke about it and laugh." That became Radner's first valuable performance lesson; comedy, we hear Radner say in "Love, Gilda," means "hitting on the truth before the other guy thinks of it."

She sought reassurance and confidence, often by way of relationships. Toward the end of her years at the University of Michigan Radner followed Canadian sculptor Jeffrey Rubinoff back to Toronto. There she got cast in the Toronto company of "Godspell," which included Martin Short, Paul Shaffer and Victor Garber. This led to Toronto's Second City company and, in New York, "The National Lampoon Radio Hour." "Saturday Night Live" beckoned at exactly the right time.

Once the alpha males started leaving "SNL," the pressure to carry the show shifted to Radner, who never developed a viable film career. After a brief marriage to guitarist G.E. Smith (later musical director on "SNL"), Radner found a long-sought love match in Gene Wilder. Her cancer diagnosis takes "Love, Gilda" into what its subject left behind: a best-selling 1989 autobiography, published two weeks after her death, and the Cancer Support Community-affiliated Gilda's Clubs nationwide.

MAGNOLIA PICTURES

Gilda Radner brought an inspired manic energy to the "SNL" stage.

"Being funny got me famous," Radner once wrote. "And being famous is almost as bad for dating as being funny." She loved the attention and resented the intrusion. "Being an underdog and a voyeur," Radner once said, "makes comedy possible." Where does celebrity fit into that?

If "Love, Gilda" stays on the surface, the surface is nonetheless compelling, and sad. And not only sad. Its subject was lit from within, and too busy going for broke in hilarious ways, one creation and interaction at a time.

I had my own unlikely meeting with Radner at the height of her "SNL" fame, and it has stayed with me, just because she was so nice. Senior year of high school, March 1978, I took a trip to New York City with my dad. We traveled by train, just like people did in the movies I loved.

We got tickets to Neil Simon's "Chapter Two," Ira Levin's "Deathtrap" and the musical "On the Twentieth Century," starring Madeline Kahn. (Kahn, who I was hopelessly in the bag for as a teenage moviegoer, left the show a few nights later.)

The main attraction was "Saturday Night Live." On a recent business trip, my father sat next to Gilda Radner on his flight home. I don't think he knew much about her beforehand; I don't think he saw the show that made her famous more than once or twice. He mentioned we'd be coming out to New York soon to see some shows, and she invited us to a final dress rehearsal of "SNL."

The guest host that week (not very good, as it turned out) was Christopher Lee. Final dress/tech rehearsals can be screamingly dull but I was thrilled, milling around with a few dozen other folks in the studio where it all happened. I half-expected Radner, even if we did end up meeting her, to fake-recall meeting this man on a recent flight.

But then: "John! JOHN PHILLIPS! HEY!" Radner saw my dad from across the stage, hollered up to our seats, bounded over and stuck out her hand with a "Hi, I'm Gilda!" She knew what that would mean to a couple of guys from Racine.

The only other thing I remember from that "SNL" run-through involved Belushi, and just how often and how long he'd disappear. I remember the increasing irritability on Curtin's face. I remember the minutes and minutes of waiting, and searching, and waiting.

As "SNL" cast member Newman says in "Love, Gilda," regarding those early years: "The boys were late. The girls were on time."

'LIZZIE' ★★

Borden murders told differently, not better

By Michael O'Sullivan
The Washington Post

ELIZA MORSE/SABAN FILMS-ROADSIDE ATTRACTIONS

MPAA rating: R (for violence and grisly images, nudity, a scene of sexuality and some crude language)

Running time: 1:44

Opens: Friday

Shortly after the new live-in housemaid shows up in "Lizzie," her employer asks her if she is comfortable in her new digs: "It can get quite hot up there," he tells her.

Viewers of the new drama — which presents a quasi-feminist take on the infamous true story of Lizzie Borden, who may or may not have axed her father and stepmother to death in 1892 — will soon discover just how hot. In this intriguing but overheated indie thriller, director Craig William Macneill and writer Bryce Kass posit that Lizzie (Chloe Sevigny) and the maid Bridget (Kristen Stewart) were involved in a relationship that dismayed Lizzie's father, and that Mr. Borden (Jamey Sheridan) was interested in his employee in ways that are less solicitous than predatory.

It's not an implausible theory. Lizzie and her father were known to have a tense relationship, most often said to be the result of his miserliness. And the film does include speculation about whether he was also considering cutting Lizzie out of his will or, worse, institutionalizing her for the seizures she periodically suffered.

But the sexual backstory is a new twist, one the filmmakers handle with less finesse than is healthy for the argument that they ultimately make. Burdened with a score of ominous, discordant string music, foreboding thunderclaps and occasionally histrionic dialogue, "Lizzie" limps along, a curious Gothic mystery yoked to a heavy 21st century #MeToo agenda that feels ill-suited to its slight framework.

In the title role, Sevigny is something of a closed book, delivering a stolid performance that can be read as either strong-willed or stony-hearted. For her part, Stewart reverts to what has all too often been the actress' default mode: a look of perpetual distress that resembles the face one makes after swallowing something unpleasant.

The film opens on the day of the grisly double murder (still unsolved to this day, but for which Lizzie was the only person charged). It then quickly backtracks to six months earlier, working its way through furtive couplings, while speculating about all the possible perpetrators, including Lizzie's uncle, played by a scenery-chewing, vaguely creepy Denis O'Hare.

The Borden household, as presented here, is a veritable rat's nest of deception, spite and simmering resentment, with Fiona Shaw, as Lizzie's dour stepmother, turning in a nicely muted portrait of misery. Her long-suffering silence is in stark contrast to the behavior of her husband, who runs out to the barn one day and brutally slaughters Lizzie's pigeons after she does something to irritate him.

Eventually, the narrative of "Lizzie" catches up to the day of the crime again, before jumping ahead to the trial. The evidence includes some strange testimony, such as this head-scratcher from a Harvard scientist, who asserts that "all the blood and hair samples" taken from the murder weapon were "found to be animal in origin — specifically bird." (Huh? Since when do birds have hair?)

The story then flashes back, once again, to the actual murders, finally playing them out in all their lurid glory, compete with nudity, spurting blood and squishy sound effects that evoke a slasher flick. There's a perverse pleasure to be taken in the bloodbath, but Macneill and Kass weaken their message of female empowerment by pushing it past politics to pulp fiction.

QUANTRELL COLBERT/UNIVERSAL PICTURES

'THE HOUSE WITH A CLOCK IN ITS WALLS' ★★

Weak script slows down '50s tale

By Katie Walsh
Tribune News Service

MPAA rating: PG (for thematic elements including sorcery, some action, scary images, rude humor and language)

Opens: Friday

Witches are so 2017. Make way for warlocks, aka "boy witches," as defined by the intrepid young Lewis (Owen Vaccaro), the boy hero of "The House With a Clock in Its Walls." The adaptation of John Bellairs' 1973 young adult fantasy novel, directed by Eli Roth and written by Eric Kripke, makes a play to move in on the young warlock turf vacated by Harry Potter, but the film just can't quite keep time as a proper young adult fantasy adventure.

The story, which takes place in 1955, follows Lewis as he travels to New Zebedee, Mich., to live with his uncle, Jonathan Barnavelt (Jack Black), after the tragic death of his parents. The film has a vintage steampunk aesthetic, with Lewis outfitted in tweeds and a ubiquitous pair of goggles. He fits right in to his uncle's creaking, groaning, ticking house of wonders, where there are no rules, plentiful chocolate chip cookies and lots of mysterious goings-on, courtesy of Jonathan and his neighbor, Mrs. Florence Zimmerman (Cate Blanchett).

It's not so easy to fit in with the kids at school, though Lewis does make one friend in the cool-kid greaser Tarby (Sunny Suljic). But if Lewis is going to learn anything from his impressively bearded and kooky uncle, it's to embrace the weird — it's the only way to be a warlock. Lewis is soon receiving lessons in magic from his uncle and Mrs. Zimmerman, a combination of old-school vaudeville magician tricks and real, mystical conjuring of the ethereal fantastic.

Despite all the rich elements — the fantastic cast, the wonderfully detailed production and costume design, an oddball family story of black sheep finding each other — there's something missing from "The House With a Clock in Its Walls." It's weightless, hop-skipping over necessary story-building, glossing over Lewis' warlock training as well as the personal histories of his guardians.

It's all style, no heft, and there's little personal connection to the characters. Piles of exposition pour out of characters' mouths via speeches and monologues, rather than organically throughout the script. There's a layer of artifice that never quite evaporates, never allows us to fall headlong into this world.

The film can serve as a gateway for goth children, who may be drawn to spooky and macabre things, but without too much blood, guts or real scares. The climax, in which Lewis, Jonathan and Mrs. Zimmerman battle Isaac Izard (Kyle MacLachlan), a warlock risen from the dead, is breathless, hysterical and goopy, but never all that terrifying. He and his wife, Selena (Renee Elise Goldsberry), want to turn back the world clock housed in the walls of the house and essentially "Eternal Sunshine" all people off the planet.

The film, with its 1955 setting, gestures at the trauma of "the war" for the reasons why good warlocks turn bad, or strong witches become weak. "No people, no war," Isaac says. No character embodies that more than Mrs. Zimmerman, and every moment Blanchett is on-screen is a small saving grace. Her one-on-one scene with Lewis is far more gripping than anything else in the film, which unfortunately drags. Blanchett makes "The House With a Clock in Its Walls" tick, but the cogs never quite fit together as snugly as they should.

longer together. No spoilers here, but we'll note that three times a character steps into a Manhattan street and either avoids a fatal collision with an oncoming vehicle, or doesn't.

Other storylines include a romantic triangle in Andalusia, Spain, featuring Antonio Banderas as a wealthy olive farmer in love with the saintly wife (Laia Costa) of his salt-of-the-earth foreman (Sergio Peris-Mencheta). The child born into this chapter follows his destiny and, relocating to New York, meets his heart's desire, a young woman introduced in a separate chapter. Criss-cross! "Babel"! "Crash"! Why are these puzzle movies so infernally contrived?

MPAA rating: R (for language including sexual references, some violent images and brief drug use)

Opens: Friday

No need to detail the screenplay's ornately fancy architecture. Actor after actor takes on "Life Itself" and cannot win, including Mandy Patinkin (who feels all the feels so you don't have to) and Olivia Cooke as Will and Abby's brooding daughter, a walking, nattering Bob Dylan reference named, yes, Dylan. Fogelman's tone isn't all over the place; it's all over several places, throwing jocular asides regarding mental illness and child molestation up against gauzy, golden nonverbal vignettes depicting frolicking couples and soulful pre-teens staring at the camera. Too many stray touches here belong to a Fidelity Investments ad, or a pushy yet empathetic marketing campaign for a pain reliever. "Life Itself" delivers the pain and the pain relief.

More than once the voice-over narration — near the end it's revealed who, exactly, is speaking — sticks up for the "unabashedly populist" appeal of that recurring Dylan song and, by inference, the film itself. The intended appeal of "Life Itself" is not so far from "This is Us." The result is closer to "Honestly, It's Not."

An authentic Italian spot in Chicago specializes in dynamite deep-dish pizza and righteous rigatoni, with a little Hong Kong barbecue mojo thrown in as well.

"Wynonna Earp" (8 p.m., Syfy): A mysterious female — yes, another one — who seems to know far too much about the Earp clan's tangled history arrives without notice on the family homestead, announcing that she has a special mission for Wynonna and Waverly (Melanie Scrofano, Dominique Provost-Chalkley) in a new episode called 'The Other Woman."

"Killjoys" (9 p.m., Syfy): This consistently underrated space adventure wraps up Season 4 with a finale called "Sporemageddon," as Dutch (Hannah John-Kamen) tries to prepare herself for a final confrontation in greenspace to keep her deadly, shape-shifting nemesis, The Lady, from breaking through into the Quad and the universe at large. Meanwhile, buried in her scientific work, Zeph (Kelly McCormack) makes a horrifying discovery that poses a threat to Westerley. Aaron Ashmore and Luke Macfarlane also star.

Bird scientist Megan Ross is appointed Lincoln Park Zoo's first female director

By Steve Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Lincoln Park Zoo has named Megan Ross zoo director, the first woman in the zoo's 150-year history and the first person in more than two decades to hold that title.

Ross, 44, has climbed steadily through the ranks since joining the North Side zoo in 2000 as curator of birds, a position also previously held by Kevin Bell, the longtime CEO and president. In 2017 she was named executive vice president, meaning she was effectively the No. 2 there even before gaining the new title.

In an interview this summer about the zoo's sesquicentennial commemoration, Ross talked about the history of the place.

"You know, it's impossible to not say, 'Holy cow, this has been here for a very long time,' " she said. "You feel the weight of it as you walk around — or I do."

Before becoming executive vice president, Ross was general curator and then spent seven years as the zoo's vice president of animal care. In that role, she launched the ZooMonitor app, a tool the zoo says helps the more than 280 institutions using it worldwide understand and meet the needs of their animals.

"I think it was the right time to bring back the zoo director title as the person who really is overseeing the zoo's operations day-to-day," said Bell. "It's not like I'm going to be stepping back and not going to be involved, but it's her zoo to run. ... It's not unlike some other zoos around the country where they have a CEO and a zoo director."

He praised Ross's commitment to science, leadership skills, and intelligence and dedication in the range of roles she's filled at the zoo — "the same qualities that have led me to promote her three or four times."

Bell, 66, said he has no imminent retirement plans, but he said he hopes Ross' slightly changed role, which will include more fundraising responsibilities, will set her up to be a "very good candidate" for the top job when it comes time for the board to choose the next CEO.

Bell has been in charge at the zoo for 25 years and overseen a flurry of recent building, including new snow monkey, polar bear and penguin habitats. The zoo will open a new visitors center in the coming months, and it is raising money to revamp and modernize the Kovler Lion House, one of the oldest animal buildings on the grounds.

He was the last one to hold the zoo director title previously held by legendary mid-century leaders Marlin Perkins and Lester Fisher. The title went away when Bell became president and CEO as the institution separated from Chicago Park District management in 1995.

"As zoo director, there are large shoes to fill with Kevin Bell, Dr. Lester Fisher and Marlin Perkins in the role previously," Ross said in a statement. "I am most looking forward to continuing to keep science at the forefront of everything we do at Lincoln Park Zoo."

Ross earned a BS in biology and psychology from James Madison University, followed by masters and doctoral degrees in psychology from Georgia Institute of Technology. Her master's thesis studied mating success of Chilean flamingos in captivity, and she has published research on topics including the impact of ultraviolet light on captive birds

"Every day I come to work, and I think, I don't know how I got this lucky that I get to work here," Ross said in the summer interview. "But I sure feel lucky that I work with amazing, committed people who are just as excited about what we can do and want to be a part of getting us there."

'FAHRENHEIT 11/9' ★★ 1/2

Moore delivers uneven, emotional look at Trump

By Katie Walsh
Tribune News Service

Michael Moore wants to save us from ourselves. It's been his mission for a long time, a noble one, and it's obvious he is sincere. But as a filmmaker, Moore needs to save himself from his worst indulgences, which undercut his good work. His new film, "Fahrenheit 11/9," showcases both the best and the worst of his filmmaking instincts.

"Fahrenheit 9/11" was about former President George W. Bush, and "Fahrenheit 11/9" is about President Donald Trump and the way the mainstream media, Democrats and the GOP function (or don't function) around him. Moore makes clear the connection between media ratings, money and Trump's election, starting off with a banger of an argument: that Trump's news conference announcing his candidacy for office was merely a ploy to get a raise from NBC after learning Gwen Stefani made more money on "The Voice" than he did on "The Apprentice." When he was fired, the campaign became real. Thanks, NBC.

But while Moore indicts the media for pandering to Trump for ratings, making a pretty penny off the reality show host's stunts, he does the same thing in "11/9." He cannot resist indulging in his own petty desires, and you wish he had resisted giggle-inducing montages, such as Trump's election night party soundtracked to opera or laying Trump speeches over Leni Riefenstahl's "Triumph of the Will." It's cheap, indulgent filmmaking and not funny, not even in a dark way.

But as much as Moore loves making fun of Trump any chance he gets, in "11/9" he has the knives out for Obama and establishment Democrats. Moore argues Trump is the force of chaotic evil necessary to burn the whole rotten system down. He shreds Democrat organizations to pieces while focusing on the new guard of leftist candidates like Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez. These segments, as well as sections on the teen survivors and activists of the Parkland school shooting, are uplifting and inspiring to the point of tears. But Moore quickly plunges us back into the darkness of Trump, ominously predicting an inevitable march toward Nazi Germany, likening the Reichstag fire to Sept. 11, in terms of the political ramifications.

Moore is at his best when he's performing shoe-leather investigative documentary work. One of the sub-stories in "11/9" follows the water crisis in Flint, Mich., Moore's hometown. Flint is Moore's area of expertise, and he deftly explains how Gov. Rick Snyder's business-style criminal tactics led to the never-ending deadly water crisis. He interviews victims and whistleblowers, and he stages stunts like hosing down the governor's mansion with a Flint Water truck and attempting to make a citizen's arrest. It's biting, sharp and chilling, and it proves Moore could have made a truly powerful film about Flint.

However, Flint functions merely as a canary in the coal mine in "Fahrenheit 11/9," as a lynchpin of his argument that Trump is marching straight for autocracy.

"Fahrenheit 11/9" is an emotional and intellectual roller coaster. Moore swings for the fences, as he usually does. But the film, done in Moore's traditionalist maximalist style, is overblown and overstuffed with editorial indulgences. It's clear that stylistically and structurally, less should be more for Moore.

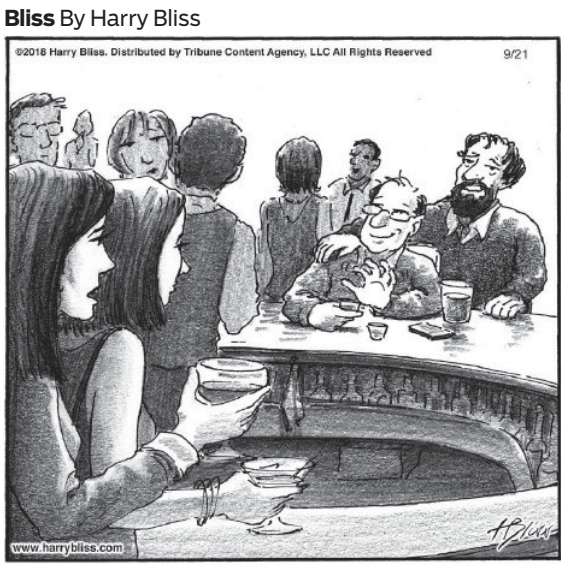
The Argyle Sweater By Scott Hilburn

Bliss By Harry Bliss



"They're just at the awkward age."

Bridge

Neither vulnerable, South deals

	North ♠ K 7 3 ♥ J 10 6 5 2 ♦ A ♣ 10 9 7 5
West ♠ 5 ♥ K Q 7 4 3 ♦ 9 5 ♣ A K 8 4 2		East ♠ Q 9 6 4 2 ♥ Void ♦ Q 10 8 7 4 3 ♣ Q 6
	South ♠ A J 10 8 ♥ A 9 8 ♦ K J 6 2 ♣ J 3

The nine of diamonds has been known as The Curse of Scotland for some 300 years. The reason why is lost to time, but West is studying the issue right now. North-South both overbid, but all would be well if South could make it.

West shifted to the nine of diamonds at trick two to knock the entry out of dummy. South led a spade to his jack at trick three and then the jack of clubs to East's queen, and East exited with a spade to South's 10. Declarer crossed to dummy with the king of spades and led the ten of clubs to West's king. West led a club to dummy's nine to set up his eight. Declarer discarded hearts on the last two clubs. This was the position:

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1NT	2♥*	3NT	All pass

Hearts and a minor

Opening lead: Ace of ♣ North ♠ Void ♥ J 10 6 5 2 ♦ Void ♣ Void

West ♠ Void ♥ K Q 7 ♦ 5 ♣ 8		East ♠ Q 9 ♥ Void ♦ Q 10 8 ♣ Void
	South ♠ A ♥ A ♦ K J 6 ♣ Void

South cashed his ace of hearts and East had to discard a spade to prevent South from setting up a long diamond. Declarer now cashed the ace of spades and exited with a low diamond. East won but had to lead another diamond. South put in his jack for a remarkable nine tricks! Had West held onto his nine of diamonds, he would have prevented this endplay. Yes, the defense wasn't perfect, but it gave us a good story to tell.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 21 NORMAL HIGH: 73° NORMAL LOW: 52° RECORD HIGH: 92° (1970) RECORD LOW: 39° (1991)

Temps to feel more fall-like as cool air hits area

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
75	51

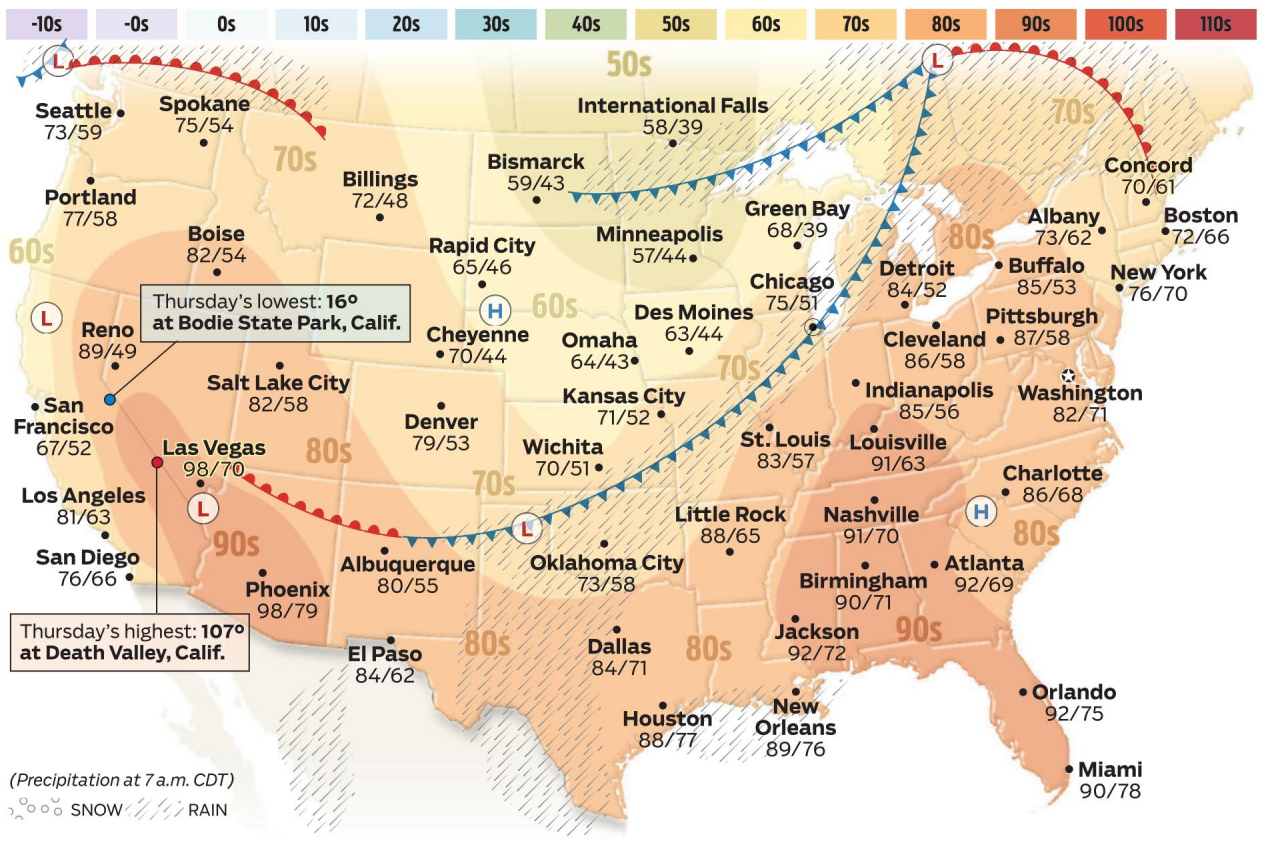
■ Turning much cooler as a cold front passes through the area from the northwest during the morning, followed by very cool and dry Canadian-source high pressure.

■ A slight chance of showers early, becoming partly sunny. Gusty winds out of the west and then northwest.

■ High temperatures occur early in the morning with falling readings during the day – hitting the mid 60s by late afternoon.

■ Partly cloudy and chilly at night – lows in the 40s away from the lake with northerly winds.

NATIONAL FORECAST



After record-setting highs in the 90s with heat indexes around 100 degrees Thursday, a strong cold front will bring a sharp fall-like feel to the air Friday. Gusty winds will shift from the southwest to the northwest Friday morning — highest temperatures most likely occurring early in the day with slowly falling readings thereafter, reaching the low to mid-60s by evening.

There will be a drastic drop in dew points as the cool, dry Canadian-source high pressure filters into northern Illinois — dropping from 70 degrees around sunrise to the mid-40s by nighttime. The dew points will be a good indicator of low temperatures away from the lake the following Saturday morning. Saturday looks to be the coolest day in five months with high temperatures failing to warm out of the 60s.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 22

HIGH	LOW
67	49

Fall-like, cool Canadian-source air coincides with the Autumnal Equinox. Partly cloudy with high temperatures in the 60s. Overnight lows in the 50s – 40s in areas away from the lake. East to northeast winds.

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

Can you find information on Typhoon June that affected Guam in 1975? I lived through it.

— Deborah Janice, Carpentersville

Dear Deborah,

Typhoon June roamed the western Pacific from Nov. 16-23, 1975, and was the world's most intense tropical cyclone with a central pressure of 876 mb (25.87 inches) until it was surpassed by current record holder Typhoon Tip with a central pressure of 870 mb (25.69 inches) in 1979. June's winds reached 185 mph, and it was the first tropical cyclone to exhibit a rare triple eyewall. It never made landfall, but passed 230 miles west of Guam, causing severe flooding. Several buildings were destroyed by the strong winds, and storm surge and crop damage was estimated at $300,000. There were no casualties, but portions of the island were literally washed away by the heavy seas.

Joey Purp trusts his path, stays grateful

By Jessi Roti
Chicago Tribune

Joey Purp's joy was infectious.

When the rapper (born Joseph Davis) came to the Tribune offices for a photo shoot and interview, he greeted strangers, held doors open for people and invited himself into a meeting to thank folks for the work they do before adding that "QUARTERTHING" — his latest project — was now out.

The album, his first since his 2016 breakout release "iiiDrops," brings him to Thalia Hall on Saturday night. The new music isn't a departure from the stuff his fans have come to know and love but is the next sequence in the filmlike way he sees his life. Studded with quips delivered with cocksure swagger, Purp's latest remains fluent in the ways of his world — tales of survival and celebration brought to vivid life against walls of beats combining elements of trap and R&B, verging into distorted techno and dance hall.

"QUARTERTHING" is a look at life that's lived — not always defined by doing the "right" things, but learning from all of the choices we can make. With Purp as narrator, it's a capsule of his 25 years of experiences thus far — as well as the experiences of those around him.

"I want my stuff to be like photos of my life and people's lives around me," he explains. "I wanted every single song to transport you to a moment, so to speak. It's not even about rap, it's about being able to say and talk about things that happen. The beat and the rhyme just happen to be there also."

It started with "iiiDrops" track "Cornerstore" — a collaboration with fellow rappers Saba and the Mind that discusses families separated by incarceration, white kids dealing with problems "that we never knew to bother" and "dime rocks and nickel blows" from those who aren't around anymore — all while just wanting to get Flamin' Hots from the corner store.

Purp says the effortlessness of that process, the way the verses came together with an organic flow, was his jumping-off point. From there he chose to focus on putting lyrics together that made him feel like he was providing commentary in real time — the way rappers are put on the spot to freestyle. If he had nothing to say, he wouldn't force himself to spend time working a song's composition — he'd play basketball, go clear his head, redirect his attention; take a crack at making and mixing his own beats, spend time with his daughter.

One phrase that ultimately started to stand out the most?

I'm still alive.

"It's just kind of been around forever," Purp says of the phrase — which he traces back to his and SaveMoney's (the collective he came up in, which also features the likes of Vic Mensa, Kami, Towkio and others) earliest days. "It's just always been tied to us. But as I grew older, I just thought about these words more. I'm super grateful for life in general, every day I'm thankful. I know even at my worst, I'm still thankful I live in America, have a roof over my head, shoes on my feet. I can see, I can breathe, you know what I mean? There are people that go without the basic things we take for granted. It's a mantra — regardless of anything, we're still alive. We're here to complain about it, or reflect on it, so we're not doin' that bad."

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

When: 8:30 p.m. Saturday

Where: Thalia Hall, 1807 S. Allport St.

Tickets: $18, 17 and older; www.thaliahallchicago.com

It's a declaration that rings true from the album's opener, "24k Gold/Sanctified," which features a vocal hook from rising R&B singer Ravyn Lenae and rolls through the rest of the record, amplified in both light ("Look At My Wrist," "QUARTERTHING") and darkness ("2012"), bombast and vulnerability, wrapping up with "In the Morning," a track that includes a spoken-word verse from Wu-Tang Clan's GZA.

Originally, the plan was to not have any features except for GZA and his fellow Wu-Tang MC, RZA — leaving Purp to shine on his own. But in true Chicago style, further collaboration was impossible to ignore. Purp calls it a "melting pot," a product of "being under 40 in the 21st century" and growing up in the internet age where there is ready access to people, sounds and ideas.

While taking his time on the music, Purp's perspectives on the ways of the world — the treatment of black women and what women in his own family have been through; rap as undervalued because it's minority-driven; the way hip-hop (from content to aesthetics) is defining the culture — continued to evolve, taking him to new places sonically and sparking a desire to bring new voices to represent on board, including 2018's breakout artist, Queen Key, instead of his male friends who rap.

"I didn't think, 'I'm gonna put Queen Key on the record to hold it down for the women,' but I did want to make it a point to have it be part of the narrative," he explains. "Queen Key is a black woman rapper, but she's a human being first. I have the same entitlement to her that I'd have to anybody. She's just talented, we share a place of origin, and it'd be negligent of me to not make the rawest music just because she's a girl. I thought, 'Who could I put on this?' and it was Queen Key, and maybe Z Money or Valee, but that's all I heard. She and Ravyn (Lenae) are both doing very well, but I did feel like if I was going to collaborate, I was going to do it with the most talented — who just happen to be women."

He says that now he does feel a level of responsibility to be an example of something, and being able to step out of being the center of attention is important to him; feeling like he can still move around to see the bigger picture without being trapped in the middle. Ultimately on "QUARTERTHING," he draws a line in the sand — between the people who look and the people who see. Though he's quick not to preach when asked what he wants the outcome to hold.

"Truth, I guess? But that's not my call," he replies. "Everyone has to look in order to see, looking is the first step. There was a time in the not-so-faraway past when people didn't even look. There were things happening to us and across the country, and people would just turn their head. Now that everyone is looking, for better or for worse, it makes room for communication."

Purp compares it to evolution, the idea that it will take millions of years for us to reach our final form. He doesn't see human interconnection as something that's abstract or impossible. If anything, staying true to himself and steadfast in his theories have only encouraged him to plant his feet more firmly — it's already connected him and Rolling Stones frontman Mick Jagger.

"That video was crazy!" Purp says with a laugh, recalling a video Jagger posted to Instagram of himself warming up to "iiiDrops" track "Girls" back in May. "'Flowers' is my go-to Stones album. That album is amazing. I'm a Rolling Stones fan, I'm a fan of culture. To see someone who's that impactful jamming out to my music was crazy. Who would've thought this dude would be dancing to my music? We come from two different places — literally and metaphorically. My mind was just racing. It brought forth so many ideas, so much possibility."

Still, the young artist just hopes to enjoy the ride, trusting that his path, no matter how different it looks from that of others, is the right fit for him.

"I just want to live my own life. I'm a firm believer that the signs are there, you just gotta read 'em. In every moment, there's something to be grateful for," he says. "Even in death, you finally get to answer that question that everybody's been asking since the beginning of time, 'What happens?' That's the greatest opportunity outside of every other opportunity you got when you were alive. The single greatest opportunity that you can be afforded is to have lived."

Chicago rapper Mister Wallace must be seen to be believed

By Britt Julious
Chicago Tribune

Erik Wallace, who performs as Mister Wallace, must be seen to be believed. His live shows are undoubtedly some of the best in all of the city, incorporating a mixture of dance, performance art and one-of-a-kind theatrics that can be attributed only to the artist.

It's funny to think then that creating music wasn't always part of his plan.

According to Wallace, he didn't begin making music until 2012. "Music came from poetry for me, and it was something I was doing for myself," Wallace said. "It was really my therapy. I could write my feelings into prose and rhymes." Wallace began writing poetry in high school, always for himself and never sharing it with anybody. According to him, it was all too personal.

But it is Wallace's innate ability to capture and describe the human condition as well as tap into the depths of his emotions that makes his music and performance style so compelling. "I always consciously try to put myself and my feelings in my music. But I wouldn't call myself a conscious rapper," Wallace said.

The term conscious rap is a loaded one, for sure, but how else to describe Wallace's work, which sounds imbued with a real sense of purpose unlike that of many of his mainstream contemporaries? Wallace perhaps escapes the uncomfortable or seemingly corny demeanor of the conscious rap label by staying true to the performance aesthetics and sonic beats he loves. "I'm learning how to make true music that speaks from the soul," Wallace began. "I feel wiser about the world and what I want, whereas before it was about what's most popular and re-creating those sounds and emotions. Now it's about creating what I think needs to exist."

Two ideas of great importance to Wallace include nurturing children and motherhood. "Being in a black male body, I always felt like that was something I didn't have access to, but it's something I've found to be very healing to me," Wallace said. "Like chosen families. I've chosen so many people as my daughters because they inspire me to write about the healing I have to go through." Just like Wallace's early days, music can be a source of healing and understanding, only this time it applies to a broader audience and not just to Wallace himself.

Wallace is currently hard at work on a new project, "Cool Mom," slated for release sometime this fall. In addition to nurturing and motherhood, other topics Wallace said he would tackle in the project include drug addiction, white supremacist beauty standards and capitalism. "Shoes On," an early single from the project, incorporates both rapping and singing and features witty lines like, "Everything is love, but everybody isn't lovely." It's a warning, but crafted in loving prose, the kind one would perhaps hear from a motherly figure.

"I'm pushing myself to do something that might be painful, that might make me cry when I perform it on stage," he said. "I think that's what's going to be most powerful. Healing for myself, but also for my community."

George Freeman still swinging hard — at 91

Howard Reich
On Music

Tony Bennett isn't the only nonagenarian tearing it up on stage.

On Friday evening, Chicago guitarist George Freeman will step into the spotlight at Winter's Jazz Club to remind listeners that there's life — and music — after 90.

"I'm only 91," says Freeman, who apparently considers himself notably younger than Bennett. "He's 92. I gotta' catch up with him.

"He's making so much money, he can't spend it all."

True, Freeman may not be precisely in the eminent singer's tax bracket. But the verve, joy and musicianship of the guitarist's work share a great deal with Bennett's. Both summon extraordinary energy and commitment in performance, and neither shows any signs of slowing down.

Bennett recently told me that part of his staying power owes to the basic scales and vocal patterns he rehearses daily.

"I warm up with that," Bennett said. "Once it's warmed up, then I could sing whatever comes my way."

Ditto Freeman.

"I practice every day," explains the guitarist, who will share the spotlight at Winter's with guitarist Mike Allemana, pianist Pete Benson and drummer Mike Schlick.

"I practice on (jazz) standards, so my fingering will be strong. I practice on chords and on melody. ... Just keep yourself going, keep your fingers up, because that's so important.

"I was thankful I was able to change (guitar) picks over the years. Way back, I was playing with a hard pick. No way I could use that now."

So Freeman, like Bennett, has made certain accommodations to address the vicissitudes of age. Yet the art that each produces somehow shows few concessions to the passing decades.

"He's doing really well," says guitarist Allemana, who has played a key role in bringing public attention back to Freeman during the past several years, including via their album "Live at the Green Mill."

"He's just sharp as ever, playing really well, practicing every day," adds Allemana. "He teaches me songs. He writes new stuff. He's amazing.

"He keeps telling me more and more stories."

That's critical for Allemana and for music history, because Allemana is in the midst of penning his doctoral dissertation on the Freeman jazz dynasty; that includes the late tenor saxophonist Von Freeman, George Freeman's brother, with whom Allemana performed for years.

"The centerpiece is really Von Freeman and then also George Freeman, and George and my relationship over the years — how it has developed," says Allemana.

"It will be about Von and George's life stories. Very personal on George. And everybody who knew Von, what they say about Von.

"It's kind of a collective memory, and a personal memory about George.

"It's also an activist project in terms of documenting neglected histories — people, places and music that haven't been touched on in history books," continues Allemana. "I'm doing oral histories of jazz clubs from the '40s, '50s and '60s, as well as people's experiences at the New Apartment Lounge with Von Freeman. ... Also the sense of Von Freeman's impact locally and outside of Chicago."

Surely this is one dissertation that could have subsequent life as a book, shedding light not only the Freeman family but on a Chicago jazz scene long admired around the world.

As for George Freeman, he's planning on releasing a new recording early next year, titling it "The Bomb," a reference not only to the name of a Freeman composition but also to his rather explosive effect in concert.

"Everybody is excited about it — it has very different instrumentation," says Freeman. "Harmonica, and somebody playing accordion.

"And only one standard out of the whole 11 tunes!"

The rest, presumably, will be originals and/or obscurities from a musician still clearly searching for new sounds.

Zenon and Spektral

Two years ago, saxophonist and MacArthur Fellow Miguel Zenon collaborated with Chicago's Spektral Quartet at the Hyde Park Jazz Festival for the world premiere of "Yo Soy La Tradicion," an ingeniously crafted, eight-movement suite that erased distinctions among classical, jazz and Puerto Rican folkloric music.

Or perhaps it's more accurate to say that the piece synthesized these musical languages into a compelling whole, Zenon's score conveying rhythmic propulsion without relying on a traditional jazz rhythm section.

To celebrate its release, Zenon and the Spektral Quartet will perform "Yo Soy La Tradicion" in a benefit concert for the Chicago Hurricane Aid for Puerto Rican Arts. *7 p.m. Friday at Segundo Ruiz Belvis Cultural Center, 4048 W. FALL 2018 ARTS GUIDE

CHRIS OLSEN

10 reasons to be excited

Syd Shaw

"I can't help but feel strongly about the adversities we face as minorities," local rapper Syd Shaw told Viceland earlier this year for a video performance about being true to yourself. "When poverty, mass incarceration, exacerbated mental health issues, and everything else is telling you that you can't, know that you can. Don't dim your light, abandon or water down your art in order to survive." Those same ideas seem to run consistently through Shaw's work which, continues to make an impact even if it is only released sporadically. What is ultimately clear is that Shaw exudes a sort of internal strength and confidence that often eludes many up-and-coming artists. Shaw knows herself and that knowledge translates to her music. Coupled with rich electronic beats, Shaw's music, such as the recently released single "Ain't Nothing Changed," is sure to reverberate with hip-hop fans looking for something a little more soulful.

Wyatt Waddell

Once described as Chicago's "Boy Wonder" for his melodies and vocal range, Wyatt Waddell has quickly emerged as an act to watch in the vibrant and ever-growing R&B and soul music scenes. A Woodlawn native, Waddell honed his skills in local music programs, including the Intonation Music Workshop, where his skills as a drummer, bassist, guitarist, and vocalist truly shined. Unlike other artists in his genre jumping from producer to producer to find the right beat for their sound, Waddell does it all himself. Maybe that is what makes his music so compelling. Although he has only released two tracks on his SoundCloud page, the songs are vibrant and unique enough to captivate audiences. 2 p.m. Sept. 22, Lo Rez Brewery, 2101 S. Carpenter St. Free; eventbrite.com

J Solaye

Although she regularly works with lush beats, Solaye's most compelling song might be "Scars." Released more than seven months ago on her SoundCloud page and described as a rough studio edit, the track is distinctively composed and perfectly minimalist in its appeal. Listeners only hear Solaye's voice and a guitar, but don't reduce this song to a folksy wonder. There is more heart and soul in Solaye's four-minute track than in most musician's discography. On her Facebook page this spring, Solaye asked her followers if they would like her to release an all-acoustic EP. Eighteen people agreed, a small number for sure, but perhaps they had never gotten a chance to listen to the power of "Scars." If so, they would surely change their minds.

Beach Bunny

First things first: Head to Bandcamp and listen to Beach Bunny's long-in-the-works "Prom Queen" EP. This five-track collection, described by songwriter Lili Trifillio as "a collection of feelings from my high school diary," includes one of the best songs released by a Chicago artist or band this year. It's hard to believe lead track (and EP moniker) "Prom Queen" is a new single. The track clocks in at only a few minutes and is at once catchy and nostalgia-laden as if pulled from the basements of every pop-punk show you attended in high school. Other tracks exude that same vibe. The melodies are crisp, the lyrics are sharp and the overall production sounds miles more sophisticated and compelling than nearly any other band in the city. The only thing holding back Beach Bunny from true breakthrough success is time. It's a question of when not if the band will reach audiences far beyond the borders of Chicago. 8 p.m. Oct. 17, Emporium Chicago, 1366 N. Milwaukee Ave. Free (21+); eventbrite.com

SNAPAHOLIX

Mielo crafts electronic compositions that feel equally at home with the synth power ballads of the '80s and the deep house hits of today.

JOHN TUANQUI

VANESSA VALADEZ

Sewingneedle rewards audiences that value challenging music.

BROKENHOUSEMEDIA

J Solaye embraces both lush beats and minimalism.

The Eradicator

What kind of musician bases their public persona on a weird character from the Canadian comedy troupe Kids in the Hall? Chicago guitarist Andy Slania for one. Dressed in a crisp polo shirt with a popped collar, ski mask, striped socks and a racket, the look is equal parts goofy and intimidating. But don't let Slania's appearance discourage you from listening to the music — his songwriting skills are no joke even on his lead single "I am a squash man," a three-minute slice of punk. "Football sucks. Tennis sucks. Baseball's cool. Curling rules," he screams on the chorus. And although the reference might be a little obscure for the average music fan, the energy and humor flowing through the track make it easy to enjoy from start to finish. Frankly, it's perfect. And it's enough to want to make one see the Eradicator live, where the character is even more embellished and fully fleshed out on stage. Come for the theatrics, stay for the fantastic music. 8 p.m. Oct. 2, Beat Kitchen, 2100 W. Belmont Ave. $11 (17+); ticketweb.com

Astrobrite

More than 25 years after Scott Cortez began the shoegaze project Astrobrite, the group continues to make music. After a four-year hiatus, the group returned in 2001 and has continued to make gorgeous, noisy music ever since. Most recently, Cortez released "DELUXER" in 2015, his first album as Astrobrite since 2012's "All the Stars Will Fail." If shoegaze is in your wheelhouse, you're likely a fan of Astrobrite. And if it is not, Cortez's deep discography, which includes numerous EPs and albums, is sure to give you a fresh, accessible introduction to the genre. 5 p.m. Sept. 29, Chop Shop, 2033 W. North Ave. $12-$15 (18+); ticketfly.com

Cave

This long-running group continues to delight and surprise. Next month, Cave drops its latest, "Always," a six-track collection of difficult-to-describe rock songs. Infused with everything from Krautrock to prog to electronic synths, Cave is never afraid to push the boundaries. "Cave has been off on a trip — a brief, blissed glimpse into the infinite, and they've brought a generous dose back to us," the group said about the latest album. "Loaded with space, groove, and rock." Lead single "San' Yago" nails the sentiment, with its danceable beat and sensuous guitar lines, sure to keep you moving well into the fall. 9 p.m. Oct. 20-21, The Hideout, 1354 W. Wabansia Ave. $10 (21+); ticketfly.com

Parlant Parlant

Not much is known about Parlant Parlant (producer/composers Leopoldo Bello, aka Bumbac Joe, and Tim McNulty) except for the duo's live shows, which are just as vibrant as Bello and McNulty's early singles. Keen listeners will find a little bit of everything, from Latin to electronic to Cumbia to funk in songs like "Barquito," a five-minute wonder that sounds unlike anything you've likely heard. On the band's SoundCloud page, the music is described as pulled straight from "the island of polygroovism/hoodoo/composition/selection for the future dance floor," and although we are not quite sure what that means, we can't help but agree. It's unclassifiable and weird and catchy and good, all terms we can't help but enjoy.

Mielo

It's no surprise producer Mielo has found success outside of Chicago. Just check the track "The Wayfarer." Released seven months ago and featuring vocalist Pauline Herr, it has amassed more than 147,000 spins on SoundCloud, a rare feat for an unsigned artist with only a handful of years releasing music. Earlier releases keep that same energy, proving the musician is no fluke. Not quite danceable and not quite downbeat, Mielo fits somewhere in the middle, crafting harmonious electronic compositions that feel equally at home with the epic synth power ballads of the '80s and the deep house hits of today. Overall, it's music that makes you feel something. In an era where most music is crafted to make listeners escape or numb the world, Mielo produces songs where the emotion is embedded in every second, from the production to the vocals to the lyrics. Thank goodness.

sewingneedle

When you think of the term "feel good music," you may not think of the post-hardcore sound of sewingneedle. And yet there is something about their sound, most recently exemplified on this year's album "user error," that might suggest otherwise. sewingneedle's track of the same name is surprisingly memorable, embedding itself in the ears like our more mainstream understanding of feel-good music. Off-kilter rhythms, personality-laden vocals and unsteady harmony make their latest collection worthy of a listen. Audiences interested in challenging music are sure to find the rumbling rock of sewingneedle a welcome palate cleanser from the lighter fare which seemed to define Chicago rock for the past decade.

WEEKEND DINING

JUST OPENED

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

A sculpture of Quan Yin, a deity of Buddhism, dominates the main dining room at Tao in River North.

Tao concept comes to Chicago

By Phil Vettel
Chicago Tribune

Tao, a glittering restaurant and nightclub concept with locations in Las Vegas, New York and Los Angeles, will debut Monday in Chicago.

Located in the 126-year-old building that was the onetime home of the Chicago Historical Society (and the Limelight and Excalibur nightclubs), Tao will feature a 275-seat dining room and a 7,000-square-foot nightclub. Dramatic interiors and oversize Asian artwork sourced from around the world (like a 16-foot statue of Quan Yin, the Buddhist goddess of mercy and compassion, which dominates the dining room) highlight Tao's visual appeal.

"I think this design is so striking and stunning, the first thing (guests will do) is drop their jaws," said co-founder Rich Wolf. "You're predisposed to know you're in a very special place."

The first Tao opened in Uptown New York City in 2000; Wolf said he's been looking for a Chicago location for about 15 years.

"My wife is from Chicago, born and raised," he said. "Chicago feels like home to me, only more manageable. It's always been a great restaurant town. I've felt for a long time we needed a presence here. It took 11 years to find the space and nearly four years to sign the deal."

Tao has been a spectacular success everywhere it has opened. According to Fortune.com's 2017 list of highest-grossing independent restaurants (based on 2016 sales), Tao's Las Vegas location is No. 1, with sales of more than $42 million. The downtown New York location is No. 3 (more than $33 million). By comparison, Gibsons Bar & Steakhouse ranks No. 10 on the list, with more than $27 million in sales.

Tao is mostly known for its celebrity-magnet nightclub scene, but Wolf stressed the restaurant's work.

"When Vegas opened, we had so much star power, so many celebrities, all the press was generated toward the nightclub. And years later, it has been, 'Oh, you have a restaurant.' We're still fighting that; we want people to know we're serious about our food."

Tao's menu, which will be overseen in Chicago by executive chef Michael Armstrong, will be a melange of dishes traditional to China, Japan, Thailand and other countries. But as Armstrong is quick to say, it's not fusion cuisine.

"We try not to get into fusion, or what I call con-fusion," he said. "When we're creating a Chinese dish, we stay true to Chinese techniques and ingredients. We definitely try to put a modern take on things, but we stay true to the origins of the dish."

Among the dishes are miso-glazed Chilean sea bass satay, lobster kimchi with fried rice, Peking duck and whole-fried snapper.

Chef and partner Ralph Scamardella, who oversees all the Tao Group restaurants, called the arrival to Chicago "pretty humbling."

"We checked out the Asian restaurant scene here," he said. "Great food city; we're excited to be here. Hopefully, we'll do it justice by putting out the best product we can."

Passerotto Cute as a button and loaded with charm, Passerotto serves up "fun Korean fare" with a smidgen of Italian from chef-owner Jennifer Kim. Well-composed small plates are consistently interesting, approachable with a touch of the unexpected. Prices are low enough to encourage multiple tastes. And the large plates are family-style platters that add a communal element to dining. Kim does nice work with raw fish, seasoning them sparingly and highlighting their pristine flavor. Star large plates include traditional kalbi, or, better still, the soondubu, a stew featuring clams, mussels and tofu in a kimchi broth, sort of a Korean bouillabaisse. Open: Dinner Tuesday-Saturday. Prices: Small plates $9-$16; shared entrees $32-$38. 5420 N. Clark St., 708-607-2102. — Phil Vettel

Portsmith The Dana Hotel in River North has been home to a few shrug-worthy restaurants over the years, but in Portsmith, a restaurant operated by the Fifty/50 group, the Dana has a restaurant worthy of attention. New England native Nate Henssler offers seafood dishes that are thoughtful and delicious, skirting the usual clichés; there's no lobster roll on the menu, for instance, but there's a crabmeat-stuffed bao with herbed mayo. Pastry chef Chris Teixeira follows the fishy theme with desserts inspired by coastal cities worldwide, and a bread program that offers nori ciabatta and bonito-flake sourdough. Breakfast, lunch, dinner daily. Entrees $29-$62. 660 N. State St., 312-202-6050. — Phil Vettel

Prime & Provisions This steakhouse ages and cuts its Black Angus steaks in-house and augments its excellent beef with impressive side dishes and appetizers (the thick-cut bacon and the crab-lobster cake in particular). The star dessert is the "tableside s'mores," Amy Arnold's smoking (literally) take on a campfire classic. Open: Dinner daily, lunch Monday-Friday. Prices: Entrees $29-$72. 222 N. LaSalle St., 312-726-7777. — Phil Vettel

Pacific Standard Time PST was one of the most eagerly anticipated openings of this year, largely because of its impressive pedigree: Chef Erling Wu-Bower delighted palates as chef at Nico Osteria, and Joshua Tilden, who was former director of strategic operations at One Off Hospitality. California cuisine inform Wu-Bower's vision; what helps him execute that vision are twin wood-burning hearth ovens, which produce one delight after another. The duck, above, is destined for stardom, an abundance of sliced breast meat with pickled vegetables. Adding to the fun are dipping sauces of seasoned yogurt and muhammara, a pepper and walnut spread, and wonderful pita. Open: Dinner daily, brunch Sunday. Prices: Entrees $20-$35. 141 W. Erie St., 312-736-1778. — Phil Vettel

Publican Anker This Wicker Park spot offers a little bit of everything. Find a wide selection of vegetable and fish dishes, which often come with exceptional bread made by Publican Quality Bread, or opt for the pub burger, which exudes umami like Ryan Gosling radiates charm. Beer and cocktails are worth a look, but the wine list offers more surprises. Open: Dinner daily, brunch Saturday-Sunday. Prices: Entrees $12-$29. 1576 N. Milwaukee Ave., 773-904-1121. — Nick Kindelsperger

Quiote This bilevel Logan Square Mexican restaurant wants to be your round-the-clock dining destination — your local morning cafe, casual lunch-hour taqueria, trendy neighborhood dinner spot and even late-night bar. It mostly succeeds, with considerably good tacos and some of the best tortas in the city. The basement mezcal bar is a great place to drink. Open: Breakfast, lunch, dinner and late-night Wednesday-Monday. Prices: Tacos $4; tortas and entrees $11-$24. 2456 N. California Ave., 312-878-8571. — Nick Kindelsperger

Ramen Shinchan Shinchan is a fine example of southern Japanese cuisine. It's there that I encountered Chicagoland's finest bowl of tonkotsu ramen — the bloodstream-haltingly rich and savory broth cooked from pork bones. The chef's treatment of tonkotsu is classic, no culinary twists or dialing down for Western palates. Open: Lunch and dinner Tuesday-Sunday. Prices: Entrees $8-$12. 1939 S. Plum Grove Road, Palatine, 847-496-4189. — Kevin Pang

Revival Food Hall Featuring 14 impressive food stalls and a cocktail bar, Revival is easily the best place to eat lunch in the Loop. Try hot chicken sandwiches at The Budlong, poke bowls at Aloha and more. Open: Lunch and early dinner Monday-Friday; bar until 9 p.m. Monday-Friday. Prices: Entrees $8-$15. 125 S. Clark St., 773-999-9411. — Nick Kindelsperger

River Roast Well-known chefs Tony Mantuano and John Hogan are behind this riverfront restaurant. The sized-for-two roasted entrees are the stars, including an insanely good chicken. Open: Dinner daily, lunch Monday-Friday, brunch Saturday-Sunday. Prices: Entrees $22-$25, entrees-for-two $39-$42. 315 N. LaSalle St., 312-822-0100. — Phil Vettel

Roister This boisterous, messy, decidedly un-Alinea restaurant from the Alinea group offers food from Andrew Brochu, nearly all of it cooked on a 6-foot-high open hearth. Dishes have no common denominator except Brochu's fearless use of acidic and fermented flavors. Fair warning: The dining room is loud. Reservations are made via online tickets, but some walk-in dining is possible. Open: Dinner Wednesday-Sunday. Prices: Entrees $31-$59. 951 W. Fulton Market. — Phil Vettel

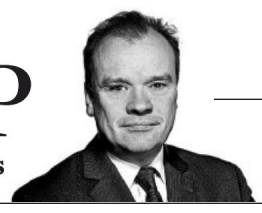
THE THEATER LOOP

By Chris Jones



City promotes theater scene

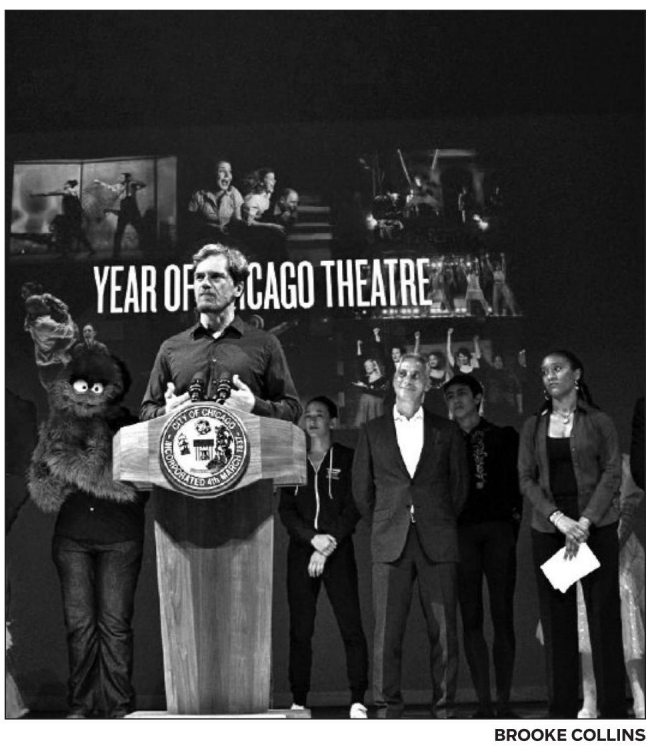
Thanks mostly to Chicago's culture czar, Mark Kelly, and the genuine enthusiasm of Mayor Rahm Emanuel, 2019 has been designated the Year of Chicago Theatre by the city of Chicago.

Before I get into any nitty-gritty, let us note this: It will only come once. Every other year thereafter will be the year of something else. This is not something to waste.

More importantly, the Year of Chicago Theatre represents an opportunity for the theater industry to refocus on a constituency that has been forgotten over the last year of internal navel-gazing: the audience.

Over in Britain, they have the City of Culture designation. The BBC reported earlier this year that Hull, the 2017 City of Culture designee, attracted some 5 million people to arts events, saw more than $250 million worth of economic development and made 800 new jobs. Just as significantly, the broadcaster also said there was evidence that the designation actually changed the attitude of the citizens of Hull toward the cultural riches of their city, riches many of them never knew existed.

Granted, the Year of Chicago Theatre (and, yes, theater with an "re") does not come with that level of national resources. But it still is excellent news for the theater industry. The $200,000 available in new grants won't change anyone's world, but the promotions planned at the Chicago airports, at the McCormick Place convention center, at Navy Pier and as part of Chicago's out-of-town tourism campaigns represent real, important, in-kind support.



BROOKE COLLINS

Actor Michael Shannon speaks at a news conference that designated 2019 as the Year of Chicago Theatre.

Nine out of 10 Chicago theaters have minimal marketing budgets; a hefty number do no paid marketing at all. They sure couldn't pay for an ad that hits you as you wait to pick up your luggage at O'Hare International Airport and wonder what you might find to do after your business meeting is over. So the provision of such ads by the city of Chicago is manna from heaven.

The Year of Chicago Theatre really is all about branding. And when it comes to branding, the Chicago theater is pathetic. It's similarly bad at making sense of itself for ticket buyers, who have to navigate the huge difference in quality and scale and worth all by themselves, mostly because the theater industry is reluctant to admit in public their own competitive positions.

In New York, much of the theater is branded around stars. In Chicago, we're lousy at making and supporting our own stars.

Many industry professionals assume that their fellow citizens are as in love with the local manifestation of the art as they are themselves. But the data show that while most Chicagoans have a vague awareness of the vaunted reputation of the city's theater industry, only a fraction of them regularly see shows. And the picture is no different when it comes to visitors. According to a survey on cultural tourism conducted about five years ago for the Choose Chicago agency, most visitors to the city also have a general sense of the city's theater scene. But that does not usually translate to the purchase of an actual ticket. That survey — which surprised Kelly — was part of his impetus toward creating the Year of Chicago Theater.

Part of the problem here, of course, is that people don't buy tickets to Chicago theater, they buy a ticket to a show they want to see on a given night. And in a year dominated by intermural debates on any number of issues, too many Chicago theaters have lost sight of the needs of their audience, the one they have now and the one they need to build. Pleasing your peers is one thing; attracting paying customers can be another. And that's something that will need to be addressed here: Will the city promote shows or the industry in general?

I've never been much of a fan of the generic Chicago theater ads that have shown up over the years, often featuring long-departed stars waxing lyrical about their youthful roots in some storefront or other. To make that concept work, you either have to feature a star still regularly working here (the inimitable Michael Shannon is one of the very few in that category), or you really have to get behind the local talent. You have to tell people about the shows — and you have to help them purchase a ticket they want to buy.

Hopefully, we'll start to see some of the faces of Chicago theater, the actual professionals who make a living at this tough game, as part of the campaign. Hopefully, we'll see as many artists as institutions.

Most of all may the Year of Chicago Theatre mean a year of doing theater for you.

CHRIS JONES RECOMMENDS

"A Shayna Maidel"
Barbara Lebow's 1980s play "A Shayna Maidel" is a much richer work than I ever realized, especially in director Vanessa Stalling's exquisitely acted production at TimeLine Theatre. On its face, this is a simple story of the reconciliation of a father and his two Jewish, Polish-born sisters, one of whom survived a concentration camp, the other who escaped the Holocaust and came to America. Stalling focuses intensely on the contrast between the sisters, the Americanized Rose (Bri Sudia) and the newly arrived Lusia (Emily Berman), whose arm carries a telling numerical tattoo. Through Nov. 4 at TimeLine Theatre, 615 W. Wellington Ave.; $40-$54 at timelinetheatre.com

"Avenue Q"
★★★½
"Avenue Q" is once again a long-running hit in Chicago. "Warning, puppet sex" once again appears on the Mercury Theater's marquee on Southport. Director L. Walter Stearns' production has been extended all the way through November; he's letting Princeton, Kate Monster, Gary Coleman, Christmas Eve and the rest of the gang in the show by Jeff Whitty, with music by Jeff Marx and Robert Lopez, run on and on and on. On a recent Wednesday, the main floor of the Mercury was packed and the show warmly received. Open run at the Mercury Theater Chicago, 3745 N. Southport Ave.; $35-$65 at www.mercurytheaterchicago.com

"BigMouth"
Right now at Chicago Shakespeare Theater, the Belgian artist Valentijn Dhaenens is performing a show that no American would have dared to create. "BigMouth," created by the Antwerp, Belgium-based SKaGeN and a massive hit at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland, is a stunner of a solo show. A maestro-magician of the mouth, Dhaenens appears behind a table set with an array of nine microphones, the ones we associate with grand political speeches through the ages. Such rhetoric is, in fact, the entire content of the show. Dhaenens creates a verbal collage from the words of the Grand Inquisitor, Socrates, Joseph Goebbels, Gen. George S. Patton, George H.W. Bush, Bill Clinton, Osama bin Laden, Ann Coulter. Dhaenens' point? There is no greater tool in the promotion of hate, disarray, racism and fascism than lofty rhetoric. Mercifully, there's a happy ending: love. As in, all you need is. Through Sept. 22 at Chicago Shakespeare Theater, Navy Pier; $32-$56 at 312-595-5600 or www.chicagoshakes.com

"Blue Man Group"
★★★½
"Blue Man Group" has been playing at Briar Street since 1997, a remarkable run of 20-plus years. Open run at the Briar Street Theatre, 3133 N. Halsted St.; $49-$69 at www.ticketmaster.com

"Dream Freaks Fall From Space" ★★★★
A sleep-deprived woman heads into a Brookstone. "What about a demo of this white noise machine?" asks the African-American salesman. "I don't have one black friend, I have two ...." That chance for everyone to laugh at race got a huge response at Second City, where the revue "Dream Freaks" (directed by Ryan Bernier) is a return to form for the storied Chicago company. Open run on the Second City Mainstage, 1616 N. Wells St., $29-$46 at www.secondcity.com

"Gaslight District"
The best work in the new Second City e.t.c. Stage revue "Gaslight District" engages at an equal level with the paying customers in the seats. For example, cast member Jasbir Singh Vazquez plays a guy who shows up at the offices of the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, requesting his own deportation. Open run on the Second City e.t.c. Stage, 1608 N. Wells St. in Piper's Alley; $21-$48 at 312-337-3992 and www.secondcity.com

"The Goat, or Who Is Sylvia?" ★★★
Tragedy is commonly equated with sadness. But it's really all about chaos. Edward Albee's tragedies probe those moments when life turns on a dime, smacks you in the gut, reminds you that nothing is promised. Such as when your husband tells you he had sex with a goat. "The Goat, or Who is Sylvia?" is now in a fascinating storefront Chicago production from the Interrobang Theatre Project. The wife is played by Elana Elyce, by far the hardest role in the play and Elyce's Stevie, you immediately intuit, has a lot of marital skin in the game. Through Oct. 6 by Interrobang at Rivendell Theatre, 5779 N. Ridge Ave.; $32 at 312-219-4140 or www.interrobangtheatre.org

"Hamilton"
This heartland "Hamilton" is performed by players mostly younger and less experienced than the original New York cast and is less flashy. But it is more in touch with the fundamental scrappiness of the early years of a rebel colony turned into a spectacular democratic experiment. Open run at CIBC Theatre, 18 W. Monroe St.; $65-$400 at 800-775-2000 or www.broadwayinchicago.com

"Radio Golf"
I often wish August Wilson would come back to life to help us all make sense of America. And the bard of Pittsburgh would so have admired and enjoyed director Ron OJ Parson's sparkling production of "Radio Golf." It has taken until now for the play to find the right director, and for American events to catch up with Wilson's prescience. In the play, the last of his Pittsburgh Cycle, a trio of ambitious black real-estate entrepreneurs, Harmond Wilks (Allen Gilmore), his wife Mame Wilks (Ann Joseph) and their partner Roosevelt Hicks (James Vincent Meredith), wrestle with the history of the Hill District. Through Sept. 30 at Court Theatre, 5535 S. Ellis Ave.; $50-$74; 773-753-4472 and www.courttheatre.org

"Southern Gothic"
A house has been built inside the Windy City Playhouse on Irving Park Road. Not the usual stage set. As you walk into the theater for the play "Southern Gothic" by Leslie Liautaud, you're asked to enter what looks like a real house, replete with a lime-green kitchen, created by set designer Scott Davis for director David Bell's production. You and your 27 fellow audience members join four couples, variously loving, scheming, cheating and feuding, whose political and personal travails make up a play set entirely during a dinner party in Ashford, Ga., in 1961. Thanks to this terrific, truthful cast, it all works spectacularly well. Through Dec. 9 at the Windy City Playhouse, 3014 W. Irving Park Road; $65-$85 at 773-891-8985 and www.windycityplayhouse.com

"Sweet Charity"
"You run your heart like it's a hotel," a fellow dancer tells Sweet Charity, pretty much stating the theme of this 1966 Broadway musical set in a dance hall. "You've always got people checking in and out." That's a funny line, of course. The late Neil Simon wrote the book that accompanies an excellent Cy Coleman and Dorothy Fields score. Director Alex Sanchez's new production of "Sweet Charity" at the Marriott Theatre lets us know this gutsy musical was not all about the patriarchal rules of its day. It believes in Charity, not in a man to save her. Through Oct. 28 at the Marriott Theatre, 10 Marriott Drive, Lincolnshire; $50-$60 at 847-634-0200 or www.marriotttheatre.com

"Vietgone"
Talented young playwright Qui Nguyen's "Vietgone" is a telling and irreverent family memoir that explores the meeting of Nguyen's parents in a Vietnamese refugee camp in Arkansas following the fall of Saigon in 1975. Nguyen's work is so personal that he actually wrote into its structure his own nervousness at daring to ask about how they met. Through Sept. 29 at Writers Theatre, 325 Tudor Court, Glencoe; $35-$80 at 847-242-6000 and www.writerstheatre.org

BRETT BEINER

Will Lidke and Kelly Felthous take on Seymour and Audrey in "Little Shop of Horrors."

HOT TICKET

"Little Shop of Horrors" ★★★½
"Little Shop of Horrors" is the spoof 1982 off-Broadway musical by Alan Menken and Howard Ashman, based on a B-movie shocker about a young florist named Seymour and the Faustian bargain he strikes with a carnivorous plant. It is a gem of its kind. And at the Drury Lane Theatre, the phenomenal actress Kelly Felthous is playing Audrey. I've heard a lot of people do "Somewhere That's Green" in my time, but I think Felthous sings it better than I've ever heard. It's just so in the moment — she mines every idea in the song and never condescends to Audrey. She lives her. When the song ended, I was ready for an instant reprise. Reason to brave the traffic right there. Through Oct. 28 at the Drury Lane Theatre, 100 Drury Lane, Oakbrook Terrace; $50-$65 at 630-530-0111 or www.drurylanetheatre.com

A musical memoir of hope, family and transcendence

"A SPELLBINDING STORYTELLER"

–The Los Angeles Times

WRITTEN AND PERFORMED BY DAVID CALE
LYRICS BY DAVID CALE
MUSIC BY DAVID CALE AND MATTHEW DEAN MARSH
DIRECTED BY ROBERT FALLS

Growing up, writer/performer David Cale escaped his parents' fraught marriage by singing and tending to birds in his backyard animal hospital–until a tragedy changed everything. Lush songs and an intimate portrait of his mother unite in Cale's vivid testament of connecting to life when adversity is suddenly everywhere.

'20 Mercedes GLE-Class carries luxury crossover torch with style

There's no shortage of luxury crossovers to choose from these days, and Mercedes-Benz offers several in all shapes and sizes, from plug-in hybrids to rip-roaring V8 super SUVs, but it's the brand we have to thank for the trend in the first place. The M-Class of the late 1990s — which is now known as GLE — was the first real luxury crossover, and kick-started a trend I don't think any of us assumed would grow to quite this level and beyond.

In its latest iteration, the GLE has fared extremely well in the market, moving nearly 350,000 units since its last redesign, and remaining one of the safest SUVs you can buy despite its age and more stringent tests.

For the 2020 model year, there's a new GLE in town, finally getting a full redesign for the first time since 2011. Wearing updated styling, it's a more aggressive design than we've ever seen on the GLE and features more tech than almost any other Benz that's come before it.

Viewed from the side, the GLE-Class retains many of its now recognizable styling cues, including the prominent, downward-sloping C-pillar. The nose tapers a bit more than before and the slimmer taillights give this 'ute a more svelte look, but the signature design cues are all still there, including the trademark Mercedes door handles. A bit of plastic body cladding helps to remind you that this is an SUV and not just a high-riding grocery getter, though the GLE is certainly less off-road inclined than the legendary G-Class.

From the front, the GLE has a more rugged-looking maw, not unlike the X-Class pickup truck now sold overseas, and the upside-down dual checkmark headlights are right in line with the vehicles Mercedes has released recently. Out back, the taillights are more angular, and the GLE has a wider stance with surprisingly fat tires, for a much sportier look overall than the upright outgoing model. Wearing wheels from 19 to 22 inches in size, the GLE splits the difference between rugged and sporty quite elegantly, something Mercedes' designers have excelled at recently.

Inside, the GLE takes a slightly different approach to recent Mercedes interiors, but one that it pulls off elegantly while incorporating a few of the now signature pieces. The dual-wide infotainment and gauge cluster screens remain but are less jarring thanks to a mounting piece that incorporates a vent on the driver's side and extends past the screens on the right. There's a big, pleasantly round steering wheel with silver accents and two prominent grab handles flanking the Comand infotainment controller.

There's now an option for a third-row seat, something competitors have come around to offering for more family-conscious buyers.

The base and likely to be most popular engine choice is a 2.0-liter turbocharged 4-cylinder found in the GLE350, which makes a respectable 255 horsepower and 273 lb.-ft. of torque mated to a 9-speed automatic transmission in all forms of the GLE. Rear or all-wheel drive is available, and for those who want a bit more grunt, the GLE450 will feature a 3.0-liter turbocharged inline 6-cylinder with a 48-volt mild hybrid system for its stop/start technology. Mercedes brought back its inline six engines just this year, and this version makes 362 horsepower and 369 lb.-ft. of torque.

The 2020 GLE will make its debut at the Paris Auto Show this fall and will go on sale in the spring of next year.

Bob Nieland gets a warm welcome from Mario Kotasha, the host for this episode of "Die Kuchenschlacht," a German television cooking show.

Das ist gut!

Local hobby cook competes, wins on German TV

The story of how Naperville resident and Chicago lawyer, Bob Nieland ended up on a German television cooking show began with a simple desire to brush up his German.

"Last year, my wife and I were planning a trip to Germany for the summer of 2018," begins Nieland. "I had lived in Germany for 18 months many years ago and can speak German but wanted to refresh my skills. A friend suggested that I watch "Die Küchenschlacht," a German cooking show that translates to 'Kitchen Battle.' " As a self-proclaimed, "hobby cook," Nieland, 64, began to watch the show broadcast in German and was able to refresh his skills.

In each set of five episodes, six amateur cooks battle to become the winner. Then six winners return later to compete to become the grand prize winner. Nieland was intrigued by one episode that featured a contestant from the United States.

"The person grew up in Germany but then moved to New York. The show made a big deal over having someone from America on the show. I ended up calling that person and asked how she got on the show. She encouraged me to apply," relates Nieland. He was accepted to be a contestant and since the taping would coincide with his planned trip to Germany, he decided to "go for it."

Show time

Taping for the show took place from July 5 through 7 in Hamburg, Germany. Two shows were taped each day except for the last day when there was just one taping.

"I had makeup every day," says Nieland of his movie star experience. "It was the same person each day. She mainly just gave me a little color," he adds with a sheepish grin. "I had never been filmed before and it was strange being in the kitchen looking out at the audience instead of being in the audience looking into the kitchen."

The contestants had 35 minutes to prepare the dish for each episode. "It was more like 30 minutes because the announcer came and chatted with each person, which took up several minutes. And, he was speaking German."

Each show had a theme beginning with "your favorite dish." The contestants knew the themes in advance so they could plan for them. Nieland cleverly did a little research and found out that the judge had lived in Morocco where spices are abundant.

"My son attended Tulane University in New Orleans and I loved the food there," he says.

Nieland thought about making a traditional jambalaya but realized it took too long. He decided to make a fusion of jambalaya and shrimp etoufee, a vegetable seafood stew and serve it with dirty rice — the term for rice mixed with onions and herbs. "I placed first," says Nieland with pride.

Bob Nieland's Salmon Poke placed second in the show's appetizer round.

One cook was eliminated and after a break, the remaining cooks taped show two, themed for appetizers. "I was going to make tuna poke but the producer told me that since tuna is over fished, I should try something else so I went with salmon poke instead," says Nieland.

His dish consisted of a layer of short grain sushi rice, then a layer of mixed mango and cucumbers topped with sushi grade salmon. A spicy Japanese style mayonnaise was

Downsizing in style | Surround yourself with the things you love

Imagine the fictional character Daisy Buchanan from F. Scott Fitzgerald's novel "The Great Gatsby" decided to downsize from her mansion. There's no doubt she'd downsize in style since she was known in the book for her extravagant lifestyle.

A North Shore property that is said to have been an inspiration for Fitzgerald's great American novel is now being redeveloped into a series of single-family homes that could suit empty nesters who are downsizing but want to do so in great style.

Westleigh Farm is the development being built on the former Lake Forest Estate of the King family, which was visited frequently by a teenage Fitzgerald. He was romantically involved with Ginevra King, who was supposedly the inspiration for the Daisy Buchanan character in the book.

A project of North Shore Builders, Westleigh Farm will have 34 homesites, according to Brenna Ryan, marketing director at the Ryan Building Group, parent company of North Shore Builders. Eight of the lots are earmarked for custom homes.

Fireplaces and televisions are two items people enjoy in their homes. They come together in style accented by built-ins to create a striking focal point in this great room in North Shore Builders' Westleigh Farm development in Lake Forest.

The other 24 lots are reserved for customizable homes with first-floor master suites. These homes have three floor plans. The smallest plan features 2,300 square feet of living space on the first floor. A lower level brings the total square footage to 3,500 square feet. The largest home features a total of 4,500 square feet.

Home prices start at $1,099,000.

Buyers downsizing to these homes are coming from very large homes, says Ryan. Prospective buyers include empty nesters who still want enough space to entertain and host their adult children and grandchildren.

Besides the Gatsby connection, downsizing in style at Westleigh Farm includes a nod to two notable Chicago-area architects. The property includes a servant's lodge designed by David Adler, which is being converted into a community clubhouse. A stable at the entrance of the property — designed by Howard Van Doren Shaw — is being renovated and repurposed as a maintenance building.

A model home at Westleigh Farm opens in mid-October. A design center is already open in Winnetka where buyers can see room vignettes and finish options.

A new lifestyle

Maggie Gregory downsized in style. She moved from a large Chicago apartment in April to The Admiral at the Lake, a continuing care retirement community on Chicago's North Side. The community offers independent living apartments as well as assisted living, memory care and nursing care. Residents enjoy two dining venues, a pool, a full fitness center, theater, meditation room and other amenities.

Entry fees at the community range from about $400,000 to $1 million. Residents also pay a monthly fee ranging from $3,000 to $6,000.

Downsizing in style means embracing a new lifestyle too. Activities at The Admiral at the Lake are resident-driven. A life-long learning program includes lectures by professors from the University of Chicago. Residents attend cultural events and volunteer at local nonprofit organizations. A group of residents received the volunteer of the year award at Sarah's Circle, a charity that helps at-risk women.

Ready to enjoy a new lifestyle, Gregory knew her new apartment at The Admiral at the Lake would not hold all of her things. As a collector, she had a number of collections including ones of evening gowns, African beads, and corkscrews. She asked her family what they wanted. But like a lot of young people, they didn't want much.

GEAR WISE

Fun with grandparents

September is the month when we celebrate grandparents. Why not try a new gadget to boost the intergenerational fun? Here are some suggestions that foster creativity, connectedness and learning together.

1. Mickey Mouse Waffle Maker
The love of Disney knows no age limit, so why not share the charm of Mickey with your grandchildren at breakfast? The Disney DCM12 Mickey Mouse Waffle Maker makes a 6-inch waffle in the shape of Mickey's smiling face. It features nonstick cooking plates, nonskid rubber feet, and a power light. Note: This is a basic waffle maker, with no indicator light for when the waffle is done. You have to time it yourself. Retails for $24 at Walmart.com.

2. Apple Pencil
The Apple Pencil is a digital stylus pen that turns your iPad into a place for drawing, illustrating, note-taking, and good old-fashioned writing. The grandkids will love to doodle or color with it, and you can take notes, annotate documents or retouch photos. There are lots of apps that allow you to use the device in different ways. The Apple Pencil only works on the iPad Pro and the new 9.7-inch iPad (6th generation). It retails for $99 at Apple stores and online at Apple.com.

3. Astronomy Binoculars
Astronomy can be a cool multigenerational activity that the whole family can enjoy. Did you know you can stargaze with a good pair of binoculars? A strong pair will allow you to see Jupiter and its moons, galaxies, and much more. The Celestron brand's SkyMaster line features astronomical binoculars ranging from about $100 to $400. They feature high-quality lenses and components, plus special features that make them great for nighttime viewing. Visit Celestron.com for details and specifications.

4. Long-Distance Friendship Lamps
Long-distance Friendship Lamps make it possible to "reach out and touch someone" using light. This is a unique gadget that most kids would love to use to connect with their grandparents and vice versa. Simply buy two lamps and give one to your grandchild. When you turn yours on, or they turn theirs on, its mate emits the same ambient glow. Use it as a silent message to let the other know you are thinking about them. The lamp cycles through a rainbow of colors. Each home must have Wi-Fi to use the lamps. They measure 4.75-inches square and 8-inches tall. They retail for $170/pair at Uncommongoods.com.

5. Echo Spot
The Echo Spot is essentially a mini "Alexa" (Amazon Echo) with a small, built-in video screen. It is a hands-free, voice-activated, internet connected device that does what it's told: play a song, tell a joke, give the weather forecast, set an alarm, report the news, read an audiobook, control things around the house like lights, TV and the thermostat, makes calls, and orders a pizza or an Uber. The video screen can show the weather report, a news briefing, your calendar, the time, your shopping and to-do lists, and more. You can video chat with it if the other person has another Echo Spot, an Echo Show (similar, but has a bigger screen) or the Alexa app on their phone. The Echo Spot is about 4-inches tall, so it fits nicely on a nightstand or desk. The Spot can be used as a standalone device, or connected to other Echo devices around your house. It sells for $130 on amazon.com. ■

Whack, thwack, whiz | Pickleball is one fast-growing sport

The loud whacking of a perforated ball sounds inside the gymnasium at the Westmont Park District three days a week as a couple dozen people regularly gather to play pickleball.

They are not alone. The game, which combines elements of badminton, tennis and ping pong, has skyrocketed in popularity. The U.S. Sports & Fitness Industry proclaimed it in 2018 as the fastest-growing sport in the U.S., with more than 2.8 million players and a 12 percent increase in participation over the prior year.

Seniors are more than represented in the ranks of the sport's enthusiasts. According to the Sports & Fitness Industry Association's 2016 Single Sport Participation Report on pickleball, the 55-and-older crowd represents 75 percent of the game's 930,000 core players, defined as individuals who play at least eight times a year.

Fun and exercise

Working up a sweat on the indoor court in Westmont, Carol Galvanoni of Forest Park has been playing for three years.

"I saw it on T.V. and I said, 'It looks like fun,' " says Galvanoni. "I like the movement of it. I like the exercise."

The game is played at health clubs, park districts, senior centers, golf and tennis clubs, and even by inmates at the Cook County Jail. It was scheduled in Westmont for two days a week and then grew to three days a week as participants clamored for more playing time.

Just a few of the places in the Chicago area where it is being played include park districts in Chicago, Palatine, Lemont, DesPlaines, Hinsdale, Oak Lawn, Burr Ridge, Schaumburg and Naperville.

Bored families

It all got started in 1965 when Joel Pritchard, a former U.S. congressman from Washington State, and Bill Bell, a businessman, created the game when their families were at a loss for something to do while staying on Bainbridge Island, Washington, according to the USPA (US Pickleball Association) website. As the story goes, they had a badminton court but couldn't find a full set of rackets. They resorted to making up their own game using ping pong paddles and a perforated ball. Not long after, the two made up the rules for the game that was dubbed pickleball after Pritchard's dog Pickles.

The first permanent pickleball court was constructed in the backyard of a neighbor of Pritchard's in 1967. The game is usually played on 20-foot-wide by 44-foot-long court adapted from a tennis court. It uses a plastic ball with holes in it and a racket that is about 8 inches wide and 16 inches long.

A corporation was established in 1972 to protect the sport. By 1990, it was being played in all 50 states, according to the USPA, which also reports there are pickleball associations in India, France, Spain and the United Kingdom.

Drop in and play

The game's growing popularity is evident at the Oak Lawn Racquet, Fitness & Gymnastics Center where it started with two courts in 2014 and has now grown to five courts. Drop-in games are played from 6 a.m. to noon Monday through Friday and on Monday nights.

"Our top days are Thursday mornings and Monday nights when we have about 25 players at each," says Deirdre White, facility manager at the center.

The park district created the pickleball courts on tennis courts.

"We wanted to try something new and those courts weren't being used," she says. "It's an up and coming trend for seniors to play, but we also have younger people and women's groups too."

One reason why the park district wanted to start pickleball is because it is relatively easy and inexpensive to try. All they needed to do was to mark the lines on a tennis or basketball court, or any open space, and set up a net.

"There aren't a lot of sports where you can just throw it out there and get the response we've gotten," White says.

The park district provides use of racquets and it costs just $5 per session to drop in and play.

Drop-in games appeal to Lois Malcak, a player from Indian Head Park, who also likes that the game is played by four people at a time, which means less chasing after the ball.

"You don't have to run so far and if you can't play you don't have to line up a sub," she says.

White says players in Oak Lawn help introduce newcomers to the sport and teach them the rules. That same helpful attitude can be found in Westmont.

"We don't play like we're out for blood," says Sue Reiker of Downers Grove who's been playing for five years.

Even so, learning to play and get better takes time.

"You've got to keep coming back," Reiker notes. "You're not going to get better unless you play the game."

Camaraderie and convenience make it easy to get involved in pickleball, but players agree it will also get your heart pumping.

"These players come off the court and they're sweating. It's a good workout," White says.

Al Gamauf of Darien, a former tennis player, plays regularly in Westmont with his wife, Mary. He's glad he traded his tennis racquet for a pickeball racquet.

"It's a great sport. I wish I'd taken it up years ago," he says. ■

Know these basic Medicare facts

Your Uncle Harvey might be able to recommend a top-notch mechanic and your next-door neighbor may recommend a great place to have dinner, but these aren't the people who should be helping you figure out how to sign up for Medicare when reaching the age of 65. For accurate and unbiased help, turn to one of the 1,100 trained Senior Health Insurance Program (SHIP) counselors throughout Illinois. The service is free and counselors have the answers, or know where to find the answers.

Sandy Leith is the SHIP director at the Illinois Department of Aging in Springfield and urges those approaching 65 to use this helpful service. "SHIP is celebrating its 30th year. We have people in park districts, senior centers, hospitals and other locations who are ready to explain your options," she says. Harold Herzog, of Naperville, is one of the many trained counselors and has been answering questions about Medicare for five years. They both offer a few interesting tips to help others get started on the process.

Not one size fits all: Choosing Medicare options is very personal. The choices that are best may depend upon health issues, medications taken, doctor preferences, location and other factors. "It is best to learn about the options and see which ones fit your situation best," notes Leith.

You don't sign up at Medicare: Signing up for Medicare is done through Social Security, so go there to sign up. Most people have Medicare Part B premiums taken out of their Social Security Retirement Benefit if they have started receiving it.

Check with your coverage as you approach age 65: "I am seeing an increasing number of people who are working beyond age 65 or have spouses who are employed and provide coverage," says Herzog. "If the coverage is credible, you do not have to sign up." It is best to check with a SHIP counselor to be sure your coverage meets the criteria for being credible.

There are two basic types of Medicare: Since the 1980s, there have been two main types of Medicare — Original Medicare and Medicare Advantage. There are pros and cons for each plan. "About two-thirds of the people enrolled in Medicare have Original Medicare and one-third have Medicare Advantage but the number of people choosing Medicare Advantage is growing."

Basically, with Original Medicare, Parts A and B are paid by the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services and Part D drug coverage is through private insurance carriers. With an Advantage Plan, all of your coverage for Part A, Part B and Part D is combined through a private insurer. The Advantage Plan has network rules and guidelines that must be followed.

There is more than Part A and Part B: Although Part A and Part B are important, the task is not complete once you check those two boxes. "You still must choose between Original Medicare and Medicare Advantage," notes Herzog. Other options, which also need to be considered include prescription coverage, Medicare Supplements or Medigap Plans.

Prescription coverage is a good idea: Even if you are a healthy soul who doesn't need to take medications, signing up for a prescription drug plan when you go onto Medicare is wise. Waiting to sign up later may incur a penalty, especially if health issues arise and you need prescription drugs. "Many individuals enroll in the lowest premium Part D plan if they aren't currently taking any prescription drugs," says Herzog.

Change is possible: "You can change your mind about your plan every year during open enrollment," says Leith. This year's open enrollment period is Oct. 15 through Dec. 7. The changes take effect on Jan. 1.

Things do change: It is a good idea to review your coverage every year, according to Leith. "Part D is a 12-month contract and coverage can change," notes Leith. Medications that are covered one year may be covered differently the following year. Other coverage changes can also occur, so an annual review can help keep your coverage adequate.

Be careful if you travel: Medicare coverage stops when you leave the country, so if you have travel plans, check to see if your supplement will cover you or consider purchasing limited insurance for travel. The same may apply to medication coverage, even within the United States. If you are a snowbird who heads to Florida or a cruiser who sails the seven seas, be sure your plan will provide you care away from home.

Help is free: If that "Medicare and You" booklet you receive every year seems overwhelming, there are over 1,000 people willing to give you free assistance. Illinois offers a senior help line at 800-252-8966 that can help with a variety of issues. To find a SHIP counselor, visit illinois.gov/aging/ship/Pages/default.aspx. ■

Information about prostate cancer

September is Prostate Cancer Awareness Month and it's a time to help men understand the basics. Found below the bladder and part of the male reproductive system, the prostate is a small walnut-sized gland that can cause major health problems — namely prostate cancer — if not properly checked in time.

What is it?

Dr. Donald Sweet, a hematologist and oncologist and medical director of the Amita Cancer Institute in Hinsdale, explains that prostate cancer is a carcinoma of the gland. The prostate's role is making seminal fluid that provides nutrition and is a vehicle to carry sperm.

Several risk factors can play significant roles. Sweet mentions having a family history of this disease, being African-American or working in certain occupations such as welding or handling cadmium, a silvery bluish-white metal.

Diet is another factor, including getting enough of the anti-oxidant lycopene found in tomato products into the diet. He adds that "men who don't eat much tomato sauce have an increased risk. Men who take in too much calcium have an increased risk." Most importantly, a high-fat diet that includes eating red meat and cooking animal fats at high heat can be a contributor.

"What happens here is that a high-fat diet like this is hormonally activated or creates an activation of testosterone," he says. "Too much testosterone seems to be one of the factors that may drive prostate cancer."

One's age is another factor. According to the American Cancer Society, it recommends "men at average risk of prostate cancer should have the discussion with their doctor starting at age 50. Men at higher than average risk should have the discussion starting at age 40 or 45."

"Ninety-nine percent of men with prostate cancer are older than 50 and then the risk of prostate cancer goes up with age," Sweet says. "It's important to point out that there are many men with prostate cancer who don't know it, are never treated for it and die from it."

Checking it out

Sweet recommends that men should take preventative action to head off possible prostate cancer.

"You want to find prostate cancer before the man is aware of it," he says. "If the prostate gland gets too big, the man can feel it and it's often described as if they are sitting on a golf ball. If the tumor has spread, the most common scenario is that it goes to bone and so the man might have bone pain. That would be the advanced stage of disease. You want to find the disease when it's asymptomatic and localized to the prostate."

Sweet says there are two specific screening methods: a PSA (prostate specific antigen) blood test and a digital rectal exam. The PSA test checks for elevated levels of the antigen. A normal reading would be less than four to five units.

The other examination involves the physician going through the rectum to feel the posterior of the prostate for any abnormalities such as asymmetry or hardness. This is different from having a benign prostate hypertrophy, a condition denoting a large prostate.

Screening, specifically through a PSA test, does not always give a clear, definable result. Sweet says that the ultimate way to know if there is cancer is through biopsy.

"Screening for prostate cancer by the PSA test has been controversial for years," Sweet says. "About 25 percent of men with prostate cancer will have a normal PSA. A PSA also goes up with benign prostatic hypertrophy. Between the digital exam and the PSA, a physician would have to decide whether this man's prostate should be biopsied or not. Another way to tell for this cancer is if a man's PSA is going up rapidly. If it doubles in six to 12 months, that's a sign that cancer may be present."

Depending on an individual's situation, treatment options can include surgical removal of the gland, radiation, hormonal therapy or chemotherapy.

"Prostate cancer is a potentially curable disease when found early and almost confined to the prostate gland," Sweet says. "I need to add that not all patients when we find prostate cancer are treated. There is a low-grade form of prostate cancer in which we would just observe, especially if the man is older."

Changing perceptions

Michelle Braccioforte, director of research and education at the nonprofit Prostate Cancer Foundation of Chicago in Westmont, explains that while the public is familiar with the disease there is discomfort when discussing the topic.

"Second to skin cancer, prostate cancer is the most common cancer in men," she says. "I think there's a little bit of a stigma because of the side effects revolve around urinary, bowel and sexual function. It's not a subject that men really like to talk about. I have been with this organization just over 17 years and I have seen a change in men as far as talking about this cancer and sharing experiences. I'm really encouraged to see that this is happening."

Educational efforts by the foundation include showing video blogs, presenting workshops and corporate wellness programs and offering free PSA and digital rectal exam screenings. Braccioforte mentions free monthly informational support group meetings where physicians and foundation staff answer questions and visitors can connect with one another for further support. There are also opportunities to do private personal communications with staff and patients.

One death is one too many for educators like Braccioforte. In her experience, she has encountered people who have a very casual attitude toward prevention and it's something she wants to stop.

"You'll hear things like, 'You'll probably die of something else.' Or, 'It's so slow growing that you shouldn't worry about prostate cancer,'" she explains. "When you work with these patients and see the deaths and struggles, I take prostate cancer very seriously."

A passionate life

For this senior, it's all about people

Larry Shapiro greets a member of the Maywood Seniors Club during its annual evening outdoor concert held last month.

You can't help but like Larry Shapiro. A native Chicagoan — his father once owned a restaurant in Wrigleyville — he's an affable, kind and outgoing man. After a few minutes chatting with him, you feel as if you've known him all your life, even if you happen to be meeting him for the first time.

But complementing his friendly demeanor is a burning desire to help better the lives of those around him. One way Shapiro, 73, does that is leading the Maywood Seniors Club. He launched the club in 2008 while working part-time as the Village of Maywood's communications director because he saw a need.

"Maywood had a large number of seniors and two housing developments," he says. "All of the surrounding communities had senior groups, so I felt one of the things I wanted to do for the village is have a place where seniors could have fun."

The Seniors Club meets every Friday from noon to 3 p.m. at the old Maywood Boys and Girls Club building on 200 S. Fifth Ave., and averages between 85 and 90 seniors.

"It's just a family atmosphere," Shapiro says. "For many of them, it's not only the highlight of their week, it's the one time they go out all week. (There are) two stereotypical feelings about seniors. Too many people think all seniors like to do is play bingo and (eat) food. They want to be involved and engaged."

Keeping in touch

Seniors Club members also meet outside of the weekly meetings for special events. In August, the club held its annual evening outdoor concert at Veterans Memorial Park in Maywood, which also was well-attended. The concert featured R&B/funk vocalist Yolanda "Uptown" Brown and her band.

Maywood Police Chief Valdimir "Val" Talley, whose office at the police department is a short walk from the park gazebo, stood a few feet behind the enthusiastic concertgoers. Shapiro was a teacher for 20 years at Chicago Public Schools — first at Crane High School and then at South Shore, where he taught creative writing and drama — and Talley was one of his former South Shore students. A self-described Facebook fanatic, Shapiro, estimates he's reconnected with between 1,500 to 2,000 of his former students through Facebook. He regularly attends their class reunions or has lunch with them.

Connie Riales, a Seniors Club member for three years, helped hand out snacks to those who attended the concert. She doesn't hold back her enthusiasm for the Seniors Club and Larry Shapiro.

"I don't like it," she says, referring to the Seniors Club. "I love it! The togetherness, the camaraderie. The seniors just rush to get here.

"Larry is unique. He loves people; he sees no wrong in anybody. He's very honest, free-hearted and giving. He gives it all."

Political passion

Shapiro's love of politics is right up there with his love of people. He encouraged and prodded Riales — who, like Shapiro, is a Bellwood resident — to run for the Bellwood Library Board. She did, and she won a seat on the board.

The list of individuals for whom Shapiro has worked, either as a volunteer or on staff, is a virtual who's who of Chicago and west Cook County politics: Gus Savage, Harold Washington, Carol Moseley Braun, current Cook County Recorder of Deeds Karen Yarbrough, her husband, Henderson Yarbrough (the former Maywood mayor who's now a Maywood trustee) and U.S. Rep. Danny Davis of the 7th Congressional District.

Davis has known and worked with Shapiro for about 30 years, around the time when Davis got his start in politics as a Chicago alderman.

"He has a keen mind," says Davis. "He is strategic in his thinking and he has a strong will to comply with what it takes to get things (done) that you want to happen. He works with zest and zeal."

Explaining his passion, Shapiro says, "I feel that politics is a way to improve government, and that improves life."

Music lover

Shapiro is a music lover, as well. A few years ago, he approached Joe and Theresa Wilson, owners of T&JJ's Supper Club on Fifth Avenue in Maywood, about having live jazz there. He discovered that Joe shared his enthusiasm for jazz, and Joe gave Shapiro the green light to proceed. T&JJ's has since been hosting three jazz shows per month either on Friday, Saturday or Sunday evenings for over 4 ½ years.

"We're booked through the end of the year," Shapiro notes. "We get the same people that the Jazz Showcase gets (in the South Loop). They (Joe and Theresa) keep T&JJ's beautiful, the buffet is exquisite and there's free parking. We're building up the crowd and we're doing well."

Whether it's organizing jazz shows at T&JJ's, leading the Maywood Seniors Club or political work, it's all about people for Larry Shapiro.

"Everything I do from the jazz to seniors to government to Facebook to former students fills me with great pleasure," he says. "And making lives better; making them more meaningful. That turns me on a lot more than beaches and (going on) cruises." ■

Yellowstone Country: Big adventure 'neath the big sky

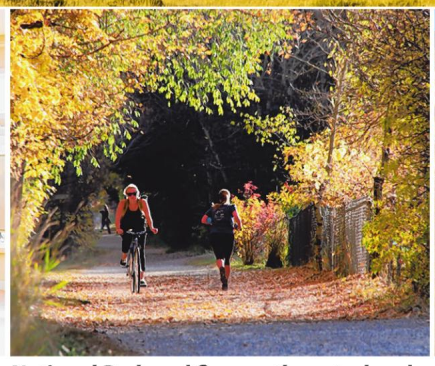
There comes a time in life when all of us simply must get away to wild places and wild things. For many, that means Yellowstone Country, where Yellowstone National Park and five south-central and southwest Montana counties converge. It's a place where blue-sky vacation dreams are realized in a spectacular corner of the Big Sky State.

Start your stay with a check-in at The Lark, on downtown Bozeman's Main Street. Built into a classic post-war motel, The Lark offers an inviting lobby, cozy outside fireplace, comfortable guest rooms and a staff of locals happy to provide must-see suggestions.

Right outside your door awaits Bozeman, a swiftly-growing city luring so many newly transplanted Californians some call it Boz Angeles. The city claims 40,000 permanent residents but feels larger, given 16,000 students who annually attend the city's Montana State University, and countless part-timers who maintain seasonal second homes.

Main Street is a fascinating throwback to the West of yesteryear, retaining both its historic structures built not long after the city's 1860s founding, and relics of the neon roadside architecture that beckoned to road-weary 1950s motorists. From here it's an exhilarating hike to Montana's most visited museum, the Museum of the Rockies, showcasing one of the world's largest dinosaur collections. Or you might check out the Old Cannery District on the Northeast Side, a once-rundown industrial area now filled with eateries, breweries, high-end boutiques, art galleries, B&Bs and pottery shops.

When it's time for dinner, visit Emerson Grill, nestled within a vintage grade school reborn as the Emerson Center for the Arts & Culture. The charming old-fashioned restaurant features butcher block tables and booths and a menu comprised of local, sustainable Montana specialties, like tenderloin, pork chops and boar's belly.



Yellowstone Country is where Yellowstone National Park and five south central and southwest Montana counties converge. Vistors can check out an art gallery in downtown Bozeman or hit any number of hiking trails, including to the shores of the Missouri River or Mystic Lake.

Hiking trails

Start day two at Jam! On Main, a breakfast spot with an air of contemporary, industrial chic. On weekends, lines can extend out the door, as breakfasters queue up for the diner's omelets, crepes and Benedicts, all made from scratch with fresh ingredients.

Once nourished, it's time to segue from hiking Bozeman to trekking its countless trails leading out of the city. Simply search the internet for "Bozeman Trails," and you'll find a hike for any fitness level. A good starting hike is Gallagator Linear Trail, which begins behind the Bozeman Public Library on Main Street.

The first half mile takes you along a sculpture garden created by local artists and later along Sourdough Creek through residential Bozeman. Soon you're in the foothills of the Hyalite and Sourdough Trail System, which can take you 10 miles or more into the mountains and eventually to the shores of Mystic Lake. Breathe in the scent of fresh mountain air and lilacs along the way as you pass a riot of red, pink and purple wild roses, along with mountain ash, choke cherries and cottonwoods, and hear the calls of magpie, mountain chickadee and collar doves, among countless bird species.

For hiking and spectacular scenery, motor 25 miles west to majestic Headwaters State Park, so named because it's where the Missouri River begins. An inner tube ride from here to the Gulf of Mexico would take two and a half months, the first 2,341 miles on the Missouri River. At nearby Madison Buffalo Jump State Park, learn about Native Americans' practice of killing buffalo by herding them over cliffs, to harvest every last part of the animal for food and clothing.

Ecosystem cast members

Next day, it's off to the glorious park that gives Yellowstone Country its name. Along the way to Gardiner, northern doorway of Yellowstone National Park, pause for music, sightseeing and tasty cuisine in Livingston. The town is right out of a Western movie, which makes sense. After all, Old West characters like Calamity Jane lived here. Locals say you never know who you might see; the late Anthony Bourdain stopped by twice for Travel Channel shows and household name musicians pop in to play impromptu sets.

Once in Gardiner, check into the Wonderland Cafe & Lodge, a couple blocks north of the park, and grab dinner at Yellowstone Pizza Company. You'll need sustenance; your guided tour of the nation's first and greatest national park starts at 5 a.m. the next day.

Picked up at the lodge by Emil McCain of Yellowstone Wild Custom Wildlife Tours, you're off in his SUV before dawn, motoring along winding, mist-shrouded park roads. McCain is part of a community of wildlife photographers and guides working collaboratively to share the park's beauty with visitors, ensuring they go home with indelible memories.

McCain's experienced eyes scan right and left for wildlife. Most visitors want to see wolves, moose and black and grizzly bears. But a visit can also spotlight badgers, river otters, bighorn sheep, elk, mountain goats, bald eagles, golden eagles, and peregrine falcons, along with ever-present bison. The goal should be to not just spot an animal but to learn, he says, "some of the intricacies of the natural world, and the beauty of the interrelatedness, the cast members of the ecosystem. There are comical parts, there are tragic parts, touching parts, and parts that ring true to the human experience."

By the end of your eight-hour tour, aided by McCain's Swarovski spotting scopes, you may have glimpsed foraging black bears, a leaping mule deer, sure-footed mountain goats stepping out along impossibly narrow mountain ridges or a wolf pack ravenously ripping apart a freshly-felled elk.

It's all part of the surprise and delight of Yellowstone Country, a place as breathtaking as it is unforgettable. ■ spread on the plate with sriracha droplets swirled in it. "It was so good," he recalls. "But I placed second."

Second day

On Friday, the second day of taping, the first show theme was French cooking. "I made a French version of beef wellington — a beef tenderloin wrapped in puff pastry with duck liver pate. I got second again," recalls Nieland.

The second show taping of the day was more intense. "We had to make a main course and dessert in those 35 minutes. I figured scallops were quick so I decided to make seared scallops with black squid ink risotto. For dessert, I made snickerdoodles since they have a German background."

The cookies were challenging since German basic ingredients are not the same as American. For example, baking powder in America is double acting while it is only single acting in Germany. "But I figured it out and nailed it. I got first place and the host came up to me and asked if he could include the cookie recipe in a cookbook he was writing."

At this point, Nieland was tied with Marie Monchaux, a young woman who grew up in France but currently lived in Germany. "She was very good and I really thought she would win. She got two first places and two seconds… the same as me."

The task for the final show was to cook recipes supplied by the host. "It was to be a cod with potato scales, plus a mustard sauce, a tomato garnish and a side dish of bacon, pears and green beans, in 35 minutes."

Nieland had practiced the recipe at home and found that the secret to making the sliced potato "scales" stick to the fish was to have the fish very cold. After coating the fish with egg whites, he carefully arranged the potato slice scales and returned it to the refrigerator while he worked on the other recipes. At the end, he fried the cold fish very gently until the potatoes were browned and then carefully flipped it in the pan. "Marie did not get the fish cold and her scales came off," says Nieland. "The judge also said my sauce was terrible but that hers was worse. In the end, I was just the least bad — not the best. Marie just made more mistakes than I did."

Since Nieland won the first round of shows, he will return to Germany to film the champion round in early November. "I had a great time. Everyone I met was so interesting and welcoming. Marie is even going to help me figure out recipes for the champion week." Once again, Nieland says he is going "to go for it."

The first series of shows can be viewed online at zdf.de/show/die-kuechenschlacht. The championship series can be viewed in mid-November.

"The championship winner gets 25,000 Euro but the competition is going to be much harder for these shows," says Nieland. "I really don't care if I win. I am doing it because it is an incredible experience. The most fun was meeting the other contestants who all became my friends." ■

Snickerdoodles by Bob Nieland

Snickerdoodle cookies have been around a long time in America. According to "The Joy of Cooking" cookbook Snickerdoodles have a German origin, and the name is a corruption of the German word Schneckennudeln — translation: snail dumpling. This is the version of the recipe using American ingredients.

Ingredients:

- ½ cup butter, softened
- ½ cup granulated sugar
- ½ cup packed brown sugar
- 1 egg
- ½ tablespoon vanilla extract
- ¼ teaspoon salt
- ¾ teaspoon double-acting baking powder
- ½ teaspoon baking soda
- 1 ½ cups flour
- 1-1 ¼ cups rolled oats
- 1 tablespoon unsweetened cocoa powder

Coating mixture:

- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- ½ teaspoon chili powder

Directions:

Preheat oven to 350 degrees using a convection oven, if available. Mix butter, sugar, and brown sugar in a stand mixer. Add egg and vanilla and continue mixing until smooth. Process the rolled oats and cocoa powder in a food processor until it turns to powder. In a separate bowl, mix salt, baking powder, baking soda, flour and oatmeal-cocoa mixture. Add this oatmeal and flour mixture and combine with the mixer on low speed. In a separate bowl, combine coating mixture ingredients.

Place parchment paper on a cookie sheet. Make golfball-sized balls of dough, and roll each ball in the sugar-cinnamon-chili powder coating. Place each ball of cookie dough on the parchment paper about two inches apart. Bake for 10 to 12 minutes until you just begin to see very light brown spots. If using a regular oven, the baking time may be longer. Remove from oven and allow cookies to cool on cookie sheet for about 10 minutes. Transfer the cookies to a cooling rack to finish cooling. Makes about 18 cookies.

DOWNSIZING IN STYLE

Luckily, The Admiral at the Lake was able to help. Gregory attended a downsizing event hosted by the community. A panel of speakers included a Realtor, an auctioneer and a professional organizer. She connected with a dealer who was able to sell her unwanted furniture.

The Admiral at the Lake also sent a move-in coordinator to Gregory's apartment to measure her furniture and figure out how everything would fit into the new floor plan. "They did a great job," says Gregory.

Asked how to downsize in style, Gregory advises others to let go. "I don't miss my stuff. It's a relief that it's gone. The weight has been lifted," she says. "I learned that less is more."

Downsizing tips

Downsizing in style doesn't mean giving up the best. It's a matter of keeping the best. Here are some downsizing tips from professionals:

- Ask family members what they want and ask them to help. Downsizing can become a lovely trip down memory lane.
- Tackle one room at a time.
- Create three piles: things to keep, things to throw away, and things to donate.
- Consider purchasing a closet organizing system to save space in the new place.
- Fill your closets at the new place with your best things. Then see if there's room for any extras.
- Measure your furniture and the rooms in the new place. Have a plan.
- Ask yourself how often you use something. Be honest.
- Store most photos on digital devices to save room. ■

Smart move | Plan ahead for senior housing living

Many seniors are reluctant to leave the family home. Others are eager for a change hoping to spend more of their golden years doing activities they enjoy. No matter which category anyone fits into, those in the retirement home industry say that it pays to plan ahead.

Cindy Power made it a goal for herself and her husband to move from their two-story home in Wheaton when she turned 75. They made the move a little earlier than planned after her husband, who is older, had knee replacement surgery.

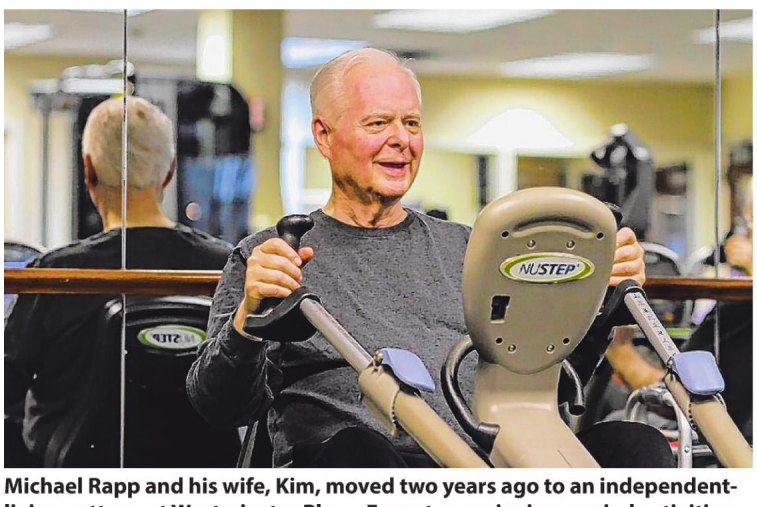
Power couldn't be more pleased with their independent-living villa at Villa St. Benedict in Lisle where they moved two and half years ago. An active resident and enthusiastic volunteer at the retirement community, Power says she chose Villa St. Benedict for its Christian emphasis and focus on the Benedictine value of hospitality.

"You need to be clear why you are moving," she says. "That will help you check out places."

Michael and Kim Rapp are equally happy about their move two years ago to an independent-living cottage at Westminster Place in Evanston — one of four continuing care communities run by Presbyterian Homes in the north and northwest suburbs. Michael, 74, has Parkinson's disease and although he was doing well at the time of their move, Kim says they knew the disease would progress. Since their move, Michael spent five weeks at a rehab facility at Westminster after being hospitalized.

Kim was able to visit her husband without leaving the retirement community. They enjoy a variety of activities that the community offers, including the fitness center and an improv class, while remaining near their grandchildren in Evanston.

"It was the perfect choice for us and the perfect time," Kim says.



Michael Rapp and his wife, Kim, moved two years ago to an independent-living cottage at Westminster Place, Evanston, enjoying myriad activities.

Look ahead

Many seniors move too late to enjoy the full benefits of retirement housing, says Phyllis Kramer, director of sales and marketing at Villa St. Benedict. "They come in when an incident happens," she says.

Bob Werdan, vice president of marketing and public relations at Presbyterian Homes, agrees. Many residents enter Presbyterian's retirement communities between the ages of 75-85 because they don't want to be a burden to their families as they grow older and want to choose where to move if they can no longer be in their own home, he says.

"They're thinking of the what ifs," he says. "Once you have health issues, your options start to diminish."

Cost of care

As a continuing care community, Presbyterian Homes offers independent-living villas, townhomes, cottages and apartments, as well as assisted-living apartments, memory care, skilled nursing care and rehab services. Those who move into independent-living pay an entrance fee that can range from $150,000 to $800,000, depending on type of housing chosen, as well as choosing opting for a life contract that guarantees continued care if they run out of funds. Up to 90 percent of the entrance fee can be refundable.

Cindy Power, right, enjoys the workout center at Villa St. Benedict in Lisle, where she and her husband moved to an independent-living villa two and half years ago. "I think it's the best decision we've ever made," she says.

In addition to the entrance fee, residents pay a monthly service fee that ranges from $3,000 to $5,000 a month. The fees at Villa St. Benedict — which offers independent-living villas and apartments, assistant living and memory care — are somewhat lower, but similar in structure.

Monthly service fees for independent-living typically include flexible meal plans, weekly housekeeping, fitness center, and a host of activities.

Retirement community fees are often all-inclusive, although some charge on a more a la carte basis. Many retirement communities also allow would-be residents trial stays to get a better feel for whether they want to move there.

Active living

Younger retirees in good health may also opt to move to 55-plus communities that offer the conveniences of retirement living, but not health care. La Grange Pointe has 30 apartments for older adults in the heart of La Grange's downtown. Residents can keep their own cars, but also walk to destinations that include the public library and movie theater, and use the community's scheduled transportation.

"So many people give up driving and don't want to deal with having a car anymore," says Lee Ann Stawczyk, executive director of LaGrange Pointe.

Rents at LaGrange Pointe range from $1,800 to $4,700 a month, and include perks such as housekeeping and activities. If residents require more help as they grow older, the community can provide them with information to hire their own personal care services, Stawczyk says.

Getting direction

While there is no one right answer for when to move, A Place for Mom, a national senior care referral service, offers guidelines and assistance to seniors and adult children looking for housing for elderly parents. After gathering information on the senior's needs, desired geographic location and financial resources, A Place for Mom provides a list of retirement communities to check out and will set up tours. The service is free to potential residents and their families.

David Grossman, A Place for Mom's senior living advisor in Illinois, says the most common reasons to move are that home maintenance has become a burden, and the senior is eating poorly, socially isolated, and has mobility challenges making it difficult to get out. Another reason is memory loss.

The options may be better than people anticipate, Grossman says. Many assisted living residences now offer not only personal care such as help with bathing and dressing, but can accept residents with diabetes and lower levels of dementia, allowing them a better quality of life than in a higher-cost nursing home, he says.

Grossman acknowledges that the options are limited for seniors who lack financial resources, but says A Place for Mom helps them explore resources they may have not considered. For instance, the Illinois Supportive Living Program will pay for some services for low-income seniors that could help keep them out of a nursing home.

"You don't have to move now. You have to do the research now before crisis hits," Grossman says. "We really help people shop around. There's no buyer's remorse." ■
