Kavanaugh: 'I'm not going anywhere'

President Trump leads aggressive GOP drive to save nominee

BY ALAN FRAM AND LISA MASCARO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Republicans mounted a combative, coordinated drive Monday to salvage Brett Kavanaugh's Supreme Court nomination as they fought to keep a second woman's allegation of sexual misconduct from derailing his confirmation.

President Donald Trump leapt to Kavanaugh's defense; the Senate's top Republican accused Democrats of a "smear campaign," and an emotional Kavanaugh declared, "I'm not going anywhere."

In the run-up to an appearance by Kavanaugh and his main accuser at a Senate hearing, the Republicans embraced their newly aggressive stance with his nomination dangling precariously. The similar tones and wording they used suggested a concerted effort to undermine the women's claims, portray an image of unity among GOP senators and press ahead to a confirmation vote.

Trump called the accusations "totally political" and among "the single most unfair, unjust things to happen to a candidate for anything." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., angrily accused Democrats of slinging "all the mud they could manufacture."

Senate Democratic Leader Chuck Schumer, responded, "If you really believe they are a smear job, why don't you call for FBI investigation?" Schumer accused Defense witness pathologist Dr. Shaku Teas demonstrates how a bullet traveled as she testifies Monday during Jason Van Dyke's murder trial in the shooting death of Laquan McDonald.

Witness: McDonald died in 'minutes'

Defense pathologist says as many as 15 of 16 shots by Van Dyke hit teen while standing

BY MEGAN CREPEAU, STACY ST. CLAIR AND JASON MEISNER
Chicago Tribune

The infamous police dashboard camera video shows Laquan McDonald spin wildly at the first shots from Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke before collapsing to Pulaski Road a second and a half later.

Prosecutors have told jurors that Van Dyke continued firing for 12 seconds after the teen fell, emptying his gun while McDonald lay prone on the street — a barrage of gunfire so intense that it could not be determined which was the fatal shot.

But on Monday a forensic pathologist hired by Van Dyke's legal team contradicted those assertions, testifying that as many as 15 of the 16 bullets that struck McDonald did so while he was still standing and that a single shot to the chest likely caused McDonald's death "within minutes."

As the first defense witness, Dr. Shaku Teas represented a chance for Van Dyke's team to

It's wait & see for Rosenstein

Job up in the air as meeting with Trump set for Thursday

BY ZEKE MILLER AND ERIC TUCKER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The White House delayed until at least Thursday a decision on the fate of Rod Rosenstein, the Justice Department official overseeing the Trump-Russia investigation, following chaotic hours of sometimes conflicting reports anticipating his imminent departure.

His future hanging in the balance over revelations that he had discussed possibly secretly recording the president, Rosenstein expected to be fired as he headed for the White House on Monday for what was later described as a prescheduled meeting.

Instead, the White House said Rosenstein and Trump would meet Thursday after the president's return to Washington, suggesting the deputy attorney general may be in his job for at least several more days. The meeting is set for the same day as the Senate committee hearing that is to feature Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh and a woman who has accused him of sexually assaulting her when they were in high school.

Pain specialist endures headache

BY JOHN KEILMAN
Chicago Tribune

The cryptic messages arrived in a rush at the suburban office of Dr. Jay Joshi — a blitz of phone calls, texts and emails that carried an air of inscrutable menace.

You're on their radar ... They're after you ... They got you.

Joshi, a pain management specialist who practices in Chicago's northwest suburbs, had no idea what it was about until an acquaintance contacted him with the bizarre news: A grand jury had just indicted a doctor in northwest Indiana on federal drug charges, accusing him of indiscriminately doling out opioid prescriptions.

The doctor's name? Jay Joshi.

Thus began a nightmare of mistaken identity for the Illinois physician. He said referrals to his practice plummeted as fellow doctors confused him with the other Jay Joshi, who in July pleaded guilty to distribution of a controlled substance.

Lawyers, process servers and even old friends made the same

DREW ANGERER/GETTY

'Lunatic' columnist's fan mail shows that his 'idiocy knows no bounds'

Rex W. Huppke

It had been a while since I last descended the moldy spiral staircase to my Reader Fan Mail Dungeon.

As you might imagine, things had piled up.

So I put a clothespin on my nose to protect from the lingering troll stench and waded into the loving words of my adoring readers.

When I was done, breathless and covered in an unidentifiable green slime, I carried a few choice missives back up so I could respond to them and share with you all a taste of the milk of human kindness. (Certain loving profanities have been removed so that milk doesn't taste too sour.)

One recent email came in under the subject line: "What an (expletive) crack article about Kavanaugh."

The reader was referring to a column on Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh, and the note began: "Look, i'm not going to deep into this because the editorial you wrote has been written 10,000 times already by other lunatic due process hating progressives like yourself."

Thank you, Mr. (Expletive) Crack. I appreciate you not going too (or "to," if you prefer) deep into my (expletive) crack article. Heaven knows what you might have found. Also, you should capitalize "Lunatic Due Process Hating Progressives." It's a formal club.

Another note responding to the same Kavanaugh column read: "How are you even a writer/commentator/journalist? You're obviously biased - trying to drill into our heads your stance. Please choose another profession as you suck at this one. By the way, the accuser sounds like a little (expletive) - much like yourself. Man up!!!"

I apologize for being a biased opinion writer who tries to drill his stance into peoples' heads. That was wrong of me and I promise to knock it off. I agree that I do suck at this profession, but I've tried finding another one and it just never works out. There's not much of a market for clown school dropouts like myself. Perhaps if I man up, the offers will start coming.

"Your idiocy knows no bounds!"

Indeed! It's like the universe — ever-expanding.

"Your blogging is worse every day..If guys like you did not have Trump and his business to talk about,your all nobodies..What happened to the Chicago Tribune being a reliable newspaper..It is so sad."

Thank you for reading my blog that I don't have, and for participating in the Experimental Punctuation Movement!

"kiss my American white a$$."

Is the "American white a$$" an albino donkey that wears a lot of bling?

"Now I just got another reason to cancel my 45 year subscription to the (expletive) tribune which is sinking and now completely sunk by (expletive) brainwashed leftist morons like you. You and your ilk are complete lunatics devoid of a brain."

I admit, my ilk are complete lunatics. But we aren't devoid of a brain. We all share one, which we keep in the break room refrigerator.

"You are a obviously a complete idiot. Your bias is unbelievable and insulting to the average American. I'll buy your one way ticket to Venezuela where (expletive) like you will fit right in!!!"

Sweet! Free vacation!

"You continue to be one of the most idiotic people I've ever read who you blewfor your job is obvious. Please jump off a high cliff yesterday."

I appreciate the thoughts, but I will tell you, good sir, I have never "blewfor" anyone. And jumping off a high cliff yesterday would require a time machine, which, after reading your email, I very much wish I had.

Another recent note came in under the subject line: "Fool idiot disgrace to journalism wipe that Smersh off your silly face."

I'll respond just to that part: Yes, I do have Smersh on my silly face. It's something I was born with — both the Smersh and the silly face — and it's my cross to bear. Living with Smersh is not easy, and I will not be cowed by Smershists like yourself. #SmershStrong

"You are a complete idiot! Write about a subject that actually makes a difference ! Like I said before ,your writing skills or better yet, your lack of imagination and creativity is lacking! Your smarmy personality and decisive columns reveal who you really are."

If my "lack" of imagination and creativity is "lacking," then that means I have ample imagination and creativity! And thank you for calling my columns decisive. Too kind.

Where does the Trib find dip(expletive)s like you?

That's a great question. As you might imagine, a newspaper of the Chicago Tribune's stature doesn't settle for any run-of-the-mill dip(expletive). They put dip(expletive)s through a rigorous interview process that weeds out lesser dip(expletive)s and guarantees that only masters of dip(expletive)ery are granted opinion columns that allow them to engage respectfully with thoughtful readers.

This last one was my favorite, probably because it was written in all-caps. People who write in all-caps are always considerate thinkers.

It came in under the subject line: "(EXPLETIVE) YOU DUMB SACK OF (EXPLETIVE)."

"(EXPLETIVE) YOU (EXPLETIVE) YOUR (EXPLETIVE) MOTHER. (EXPLETIVE) YOUR FAMILY. (EXPLETIVE) EVERYONE WHO THINKS LIKE YOU."

It's always nice when people take the time to write.

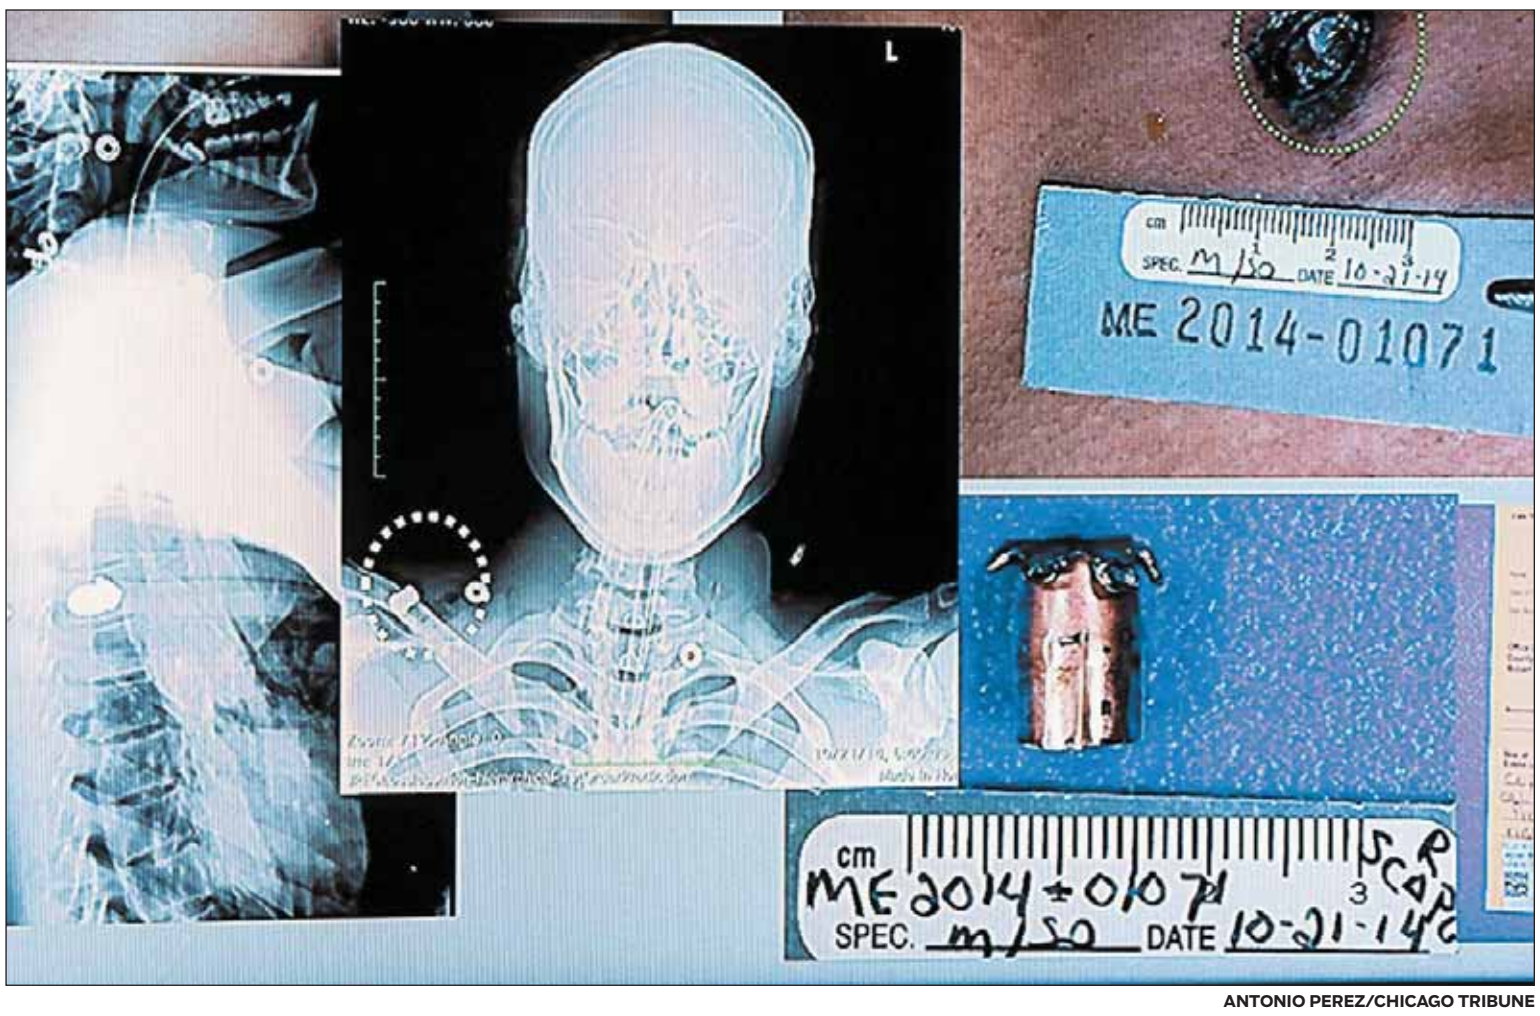
STUFF THAT MATTERS

Laquan McDonald's life didn't matter to most people. Neither does his death.

DAHLEEN GLANTON



ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

X-rays of Laquan McDonald's body and a bullet casing are shown to the jury during Officer Jason Van Dyke's murder trial Monday.

The pathologist hired to testify in Officer Jason Van Dyke's defense on Monday compelled us to ponder the question, "What is death?"

She was not speaking in philosophical terms, of course. Her job was to provide an alternate medical opinion regarding which of the 16 bullets that struck Laquan McDonald actually killed him.

Nevertheless, it is a question that seems particularly poignant when a teenager dies, regardless of whether it happens at the hands of the police or someone else.

"Death is a process," the pathologist told the court. The fact that McDonald had a pulse, she said, "meant nothing."

Indeed, McDonald's slow march toward death began long before he encountered Van Dyke on that Southwest Side street in October 2014.

Scarred and disillusioned by life, he was among Chicago's many "walking dead" — young African-American males moving aimlessly through the streets of this city while waiting to die.

Some would argue that death laid claim to McDonald as soon as he was born to a teenage mother and a father who was never around.

They would say that each misstep he made during his brief life led to the moment he lay on the pavement, shaking and moaning as his blood spilled onto the street.

They would tell us that McDonald, like so many African-American males, was destined to die because he did not care about living.

And while they don't rejoice, they also shed no tears.

That is because for most people, McDonald's life meant nothing. Neither does his death.

From the beginning, this case never was simply about the loss of a human life. It was always bigger than that. McDonald has been reduced to a marginalized figure in a larger story of police misconduct and political malfeasance.

We would like to take the pathologist at her word that McDonald died within one to five minutes. But then again, what would it matter?

If we were to be honest, we would acknowledge that Van Dyke's trial is not as much about justice for McDonald as it is justice for us.

It is hard to worry about justice for someone whose life never mattered.

That is a harsh reality of life and death on the streets of Chicago. And for that, we should all be ashamed.

Van Dyke's attorneys began his self-defense case on Monday with testimony meant to counter the prosecution's contention that McDonald was alive for each and every shot.

The defense pathologist spent hours on the stand trying to convince the jury that McDonald died after just two or three shots. If jurors believe that, then they must assume that the remaining shots did not matter.

It is a technical argument designed to challenge the 16 counts of aggravated battery Van Dyke faces in addition to first-degree murder. But it also diminishes McDonald's pain and suffering.

It makes sense that Van Dyke and other police officers who were there that night would want us to think that McDonald died within minutes of the first shot being fired.

That way, it would perhaps seem less heartless that nine other officers on the scene did nothing to try and help the 17-year-old as he lay on the ground.

Only a Cook County sheriff's official who happened upon the scene shortly after the shooting tried to comfort McDonald. He told him to hold on, that help was on the way.

The others just stood there looking at the teenager and watching him die. For some of the officers, it was more important to figure out the lies they would tell to turn McDonald into a villain instead of a victim.

It would be nice to believe that McDonald died after one of the first two or three shots were fired, as the defense pathologist said. That way, no one would have to think about how he suffered.

We would like to take the pathologist at her word that McDonald died within one to five minutes. But then again, what would it matter?

Whether the first shot had killed him or the 16th, autopsy report would have read the same:

McDonald died of multiple gunshot wounds, and the cause of death was homicide.

Archdiocese plan: Merge 6 parishes in suburbs

Reorganization includes closing 1 school, 1 church

By Matthew Walberg
Chicago Tribune

A west suburban Catholic school and a southwest suburban church will close and six parishes will merge into three new parishes as part of an ongoing reorganization plan within the Archdiocese of Chicago, officials announced over the weekend.

Divine Infant Jesus Parish and Divine Providence Parish and School — both in Westchester — will merge into one new parish by the end of June 2019, while Divine Infant Jesus School will close due to financial pressures created by flagging enrollment, according to a news release sent out Saturday.

In La Grange Park, St. Louise de Marillac Parish and School will merge with St. Barbara Parish in Brookfield, and Our Lady of Loretto Parish in Hometown will merge with St. Germaine Parish and School in Oak Lawn, all by June 30 of next year, according to the release. Within the next several years, Our Lady of Loretto Church will close as parishioners are transitioned to worship at St. Germaine.

The closures and consolidations are part of the archdiocese's effort to address financial pressures and an expected shortage of priests. Indeed, each newly combined parish will be led by one pastor, though other priests will likely be assigned to the parishes to assist each pastor, archdiocese spokeswoman Anne Maselli said Monday.

Maselli said it was not yet clear how many positions would be eliminated by the consolidations.

Archdiocese officials have met with the 15 faculty and staff members at Divine Infant Jesus School, which currently has just 140 K-eighth grade students enrolled. Maselli said officials are working to place the school's staff members at other Catholic schools, and said officials hope the students will transfer to Divine Providence Parish school.

Officials examined parishes and schools in the Old Town and Lincoln Park areas but decided not to make structural changes. Officials hope the parishes will "seek new ways to work together and pool resources, where appropriate." The group includes St. Josaphat Parish and School, St. Michael Parish, St. Teresa of Avila Parish, and St. Vincent de Paul Parish, and Immaculate Conception St. Joseph School.

Also, in the southwest suburbs, St. Catherine of Alexandria Parish and School in Oak Lawn will remain structurally the same, as will St. Terrence Church in Alsip, officials said.

The reorganization plan, known as Renew My Church, seeks "to achieve the goal of having vibrant, life-giving faith communities accessible to all Catholics," according to the news release.

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cook County State's Attorney Kim Foxx speaks Monday about the move to vacate and dismiss drug charges against 18 men at the Leighton Criminal Court Building in Chicago. The men were among several targeted by former police Sgt. Ronald Watts.

18 more convictions tied to corrupt former cop vacated

Foxx apologizes as convictions voided so far up to 42

By Elyssa Cherney
Chicago Tribune

Feelings of vindication mixed with fear for Vondell Wilbourn, one of 18 men whose drug convictions were tossed in a historic hearing Monday because the charges were linked to corrupt former Chicago police Sgt. Ronald Watts.

Wilbourn, 42, who said he was framed and arrested twice by Watts in 2004 and 2005, worried the attention would put another target on his back.

"At the time this was happening, we were telling everyone, but no one listened," Wilbourn said. "Even though it's in the past, there will never be closure."

The hearing marked the second time that a group of men targeted by Watts and his tactical team at an affordable housing complex on the South Side had their convictions overturned in a mass hearing.

So far, 42 people have had convictions dismissed as part of a review by the Cook County state's attorney's office and lawyers for the victims. The men have accused Watts of making up the cases when they refused to pay him protection money, sell drugs for him or let him steal weapons.

Yet those numbers may represent just a fraction of the people victimized by Watts, according to attorney Joshua Tepfer of the Exoneration Project at the University of Chicago.

Tepfer, who represented 12 of the men Monday, said he has determined from public records requests that more than 1,000 people were arrested by Watts or his team members from 2004 to 2012. Based on that data, Tepfer estimates as many as 500 of those cases resulted in convictions.

"These were officers of a tactical team that were so poorly supervised, they were just making enormous amounts of arrests," Tepfer said. "We are committed to vetting every single one of those convictions."

While the reversals on Monday represent an emotional milestone for the victims, there is still more work to be done, Tepfer said. The men will also seek certificates of innocence from the state, which would allow them to receive compensation for a wrongful conviction. They will also need the arrests to be expunged from their criminal record so the information does not appear to prospective employers.

There's also more work left for the state's attorney's Conviction Integrity Unit. Lawyers are reviewing 30 to 40 additional cases tied to Watts, according to a spokeswoman. The unit investigates only the cases that are referred to its attorneys and does not actively seek them out.

Following the hearing Monday, Foxx stood in front of a gaggle of news cameras to offer an apology to the 18 men, whom she shook hands with in court. She vowed to help correct errors in the justice system that have caused some Chicagoans to lose faith in authorities.

"We could not stand behind the integrity of these cases because of the behavior of Mr. Watts," Foxx said.

Watts had been able to operate for years despite mounting allegations and a lengthy investigation by the police internal affairs division, as well as investigations by the state's attorney's office and the FBI, according to court records.

When Watts was finally caught, in 2012, it was on relatively minor federal charges of shaking down a drug courier who turned out to be an FBI agent . Watts and Officer Kallatt Mohammed both pleaded guilty, and Watts received 22 months in prison. He was released in 2015 and has since moved to Las Vegas, records show.

Since the Watts allegations were realized, Foxx's administration has banned 10 officers who worked closely with Watts from testifying for prosecutors in future criminal cases because of concerns with their credibility.

The fallout is still unfolding at the Police Department as well. For the last year, 15 officers associated with Watts' crew have been placed on desk duty pending an internal Police Department investigation. Some of those officers were under investigation by the FBI but were never charged.

A police spokesman on Monday said the internal investigation was still pending. A spokesman from the Civilian Office of Police Accountability, which investigates allegations of officer misconduct, did not respond to a request for comment Monday.

Rauner says he's a centrist while GOP, Dems dominated by extremes

Gov. cites primary challenges as he struggles to unite party

By Rick Pearson
Chicago Tribune

Even as he struggles to unite his Republican Party, Gov. Bruce Rauner says the state's political parties are becoming dominated by its "extreme elements," and he offered as proof the primary challenges he has faced, including one motivated by an angry GOP base constituency of social conservatives.

In a largely overlooked speech to the Illinois Chamber of Commerce last week before the first televised debate of the fall gubernatorial campaign, Rauner dubbed himself a centrist seeking "moderation" as he blamed the partisan drawing of political boundaries for helping fuel political divisions in the state and country with a "devastating" result.

"I believe one of the reasons we have such vicious partisan disagreements and vitriol in America today is that the gerrymandering process has been carried out in most states in America to such a degree that each political party is more and more dominated by its most extreme elements," Rauner said Thursday, hours before his first debate with Democratic rival J.B. Pritzker and two third-party candidates.

"And boy, it's happening in Illinois. I've lived it through my two primaries I've had in my time in public service and I've seen it in both political parties in the state of Illinois. And for America to function effectively as a democracy, we can't go to the most extreme elements of each of our political parties. It won't work. It will not work well," he said.

Rauner faced an unusually strong challenge in the March Republican primary from state Rep. Jeanne Ives of Wheaton, winning by 3 percentage points. Ives capitalized on the discomfort of social conservatives over his signing into law legislation expanding abortion, immigration and transgender rights.

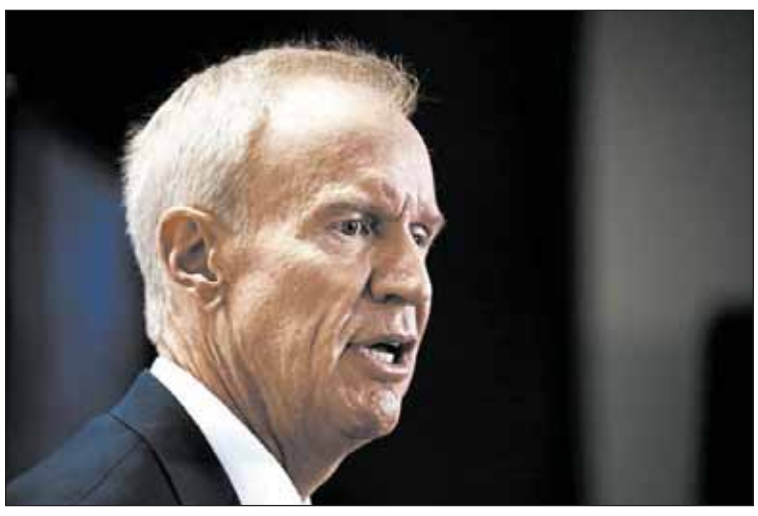
Republican state Rep. Sam McCann of Plainview is attempting to capture the discontent of social conservatives in his Conservative Party candidacy for governor. Rauner has called his candidacy "phony."

Since the primary, Rauner has worked to rally the GOP around his general election campaign. He has focused a great deal of time campaigning in less-populated rural Downstate areas dominated by socially conservative Republicans, including a visit Monday to the southeastern Illinois community of Hartford, with a population of under 1,500 people near the mouth of the Missouri River.

But as he criticized the intra-party challenges he has faced as representing "extreme elements" in the GOP, Rauner also told the business group of the difficulty he has had in being a centrist.

"And boy, I've got to tell you, holding the center, holding the center has been incredibly hard here as governor. Done my darnedest. Held it as firmly as I can. But holding the center in today's American politics and in Illinois' politics — tremendously difficult. But we'll stay the course," Rauner told the state chamber, which has backed his re-election.

"We'll stay strong, stick to what I firmly believe is right and that's fiscal discipline, pro-free enterprise, pro-growth, pro-taxpayer, pro-job creator and moderation in other regards, finding the center," he said. "Moderation is the right answer and I will stay there. I believe that's the way Illinois can be saved and we can create a better future."



ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

"Holding the center in today's American politics and in Illinois' politics — tremendously difficult. But we'll stay the course."

—Gov. Bruce Rauner

While criticizing political divides, Rauner has used his time Downstate wielding the rhetoric of regional politics by attacking Chicago and its "corrupt" Democratic political machine.

Yet, he told the group, "I firmly believe we're coming together as a state. I feel it every day as I travel the state."

The first-term governor also twice asked the state's business leaders to invite him to come to their facilities to help his re-election.

"We can't let anybody stay home. And my offer to you is I will come to any city, any municipality, any county, anytime, any company in the state of Illinois, if you'd like to do (an) employee town hall, like to do a meeting with any of your executives, a meeting with your factory floor workers," he said. "Anywhere, anytime."

Mosquitoes getting in final bites of season

'It's bad,' one expert says of surge into fall by pests

By Morgan Greene
Chicago Tribune

Chicago mosquitoes are having their last stand.

If the pesky bloodsuckers have seemed more prominent than usual in the last week, that's because there's been an uptick in the Chicago-area population.

David Zazra, spokesman for the North Shore Mosquito Abatement District, said there's been an end-of-summer surge in nuisance mosquitoes.

Experts attribute the spike to heavy rains at the beginning of the month and a recent increase in temperatures, which offered the perfect environment for the mosquitoes to hatch in the last 10 days. Starting last week it seemed the buggers appeared "just about everywhere in the Chicago area," Zazra said.

"It's bad," he said. "We had a really nice string of really great days, and people are outside enjoying the weather. These are very opportunistic mosquitoes. They will bite at any time of day."

Nuisance mosquito populations are above average for this time of year, according to the North Shore district's latest weekly report. The district saw about 45 mosquitoes in each of the area's traps.

Zazra said the number of calls complaining about the bugs spiked between Tuesday and Thursday of last week, especially in areas close to the forest preserves.

Mike Slamecka, a biologist with the South Cook County Mosquito Abatement District, which serves most of the south suburbs, said the district has also seen an increase in complaints in the last week.

"They know that the end is coming so they're kind of aggressive right now," he said about mosquitoes.

But even though the bugs are still buzzing and biting, the recent numbers don't compare with the nuisance mosquito outbreak earlier in summer, Zazra said.

And the good news is that, although annoying and aggressive, nuisance mosquitoes are not carriers of the West Nile virus.

"We were very nervous there for a little while," Zazra said about increased West Nile activity earlier in the season. "Our goal is to not have people getting sick."

The population of Culex mosquitoes, which can carry West Nile virus, decreased to nine mosquitoes per trap, a below-average amount, according to the North Shore district's weekly report. And the West Nile virus infection rate dropped below 4 percent from the previous week, in which there were 12 percent infected mosquitoes per 1,000 tested.

The risk of human West Nile virus infection is declining, according to the Cook County Department of Public Health.

From Sept. 9-15, there were 33 cases of West Nile virus reported in suburban Cook County; 24 of those cases were neuroinvasive, meaning they harmed the nervous system.

As temperatures continue to drop, so will the mosquito population. By Tuesday night, temperatures will chill to the low 50s, according to the National Weather Service.

Even as the threat of itchy bites and illness subsides, there are basic steps people can take to protect themselves, experts say.

Dr. Rachel Rubin, a senior medical officer with the Cook County Department of Public Health, recommended removing the environment mosquitoes enjoy, using EPA-approved repellents and repairing screens and windows to keep the pests out.

Some factors may be out of your control. Anything from the amount of carbon dioxide you exhale to the bacteria on your skin could play a part in attracting mosquitoes, Rubin said.

If you do get bit, home remedies like calamine lotion and topical antihistamines can help. "But generally speaking, nuisance mosquitoes are exactly that, a nuisance," Rubin said.

Zazra said of the mosquito season: "It's all going to be over soon. And then we'll all be complaining about cold weather and frost and snow and all that fun stuff."

City rebuffs dog euthanasia claim

Animal control agency states rumors of increase 'patently false'

By Elvia Malagon
Chicago Tribune

Chicago Animal Care and Control is pushing back against claims that gathered steam over the weekend that there had been an uptick in dogs euthanized at the city's animal shelter in recent weeks.

Volunteers who work with the dogs expressed concerns the animals were being put down more frequently because of space constraints, according to a person with knowledge of the shelter's operations, as well as social media posts and emails shared among animal advocates. Some attributed a supposed increase in euthanasia to the abrupt change of leadership at the city's animal control department this summer, when Kelley Gandurski took over as the head of the agency.

But on Monday, the city rebuffed claims that more dogs have been euthanized under Gandurski's direction.

"The assertion that animal euthanasia has increased since Kelley Gandurski assumed the role of Acting Executive Director of Chicago Animal Care and Control on June 30 is patently false," according to a statement released by the city.

How to properly manage the dog population in the city shelter has been a source of growing controversy in the past year.

Gandurski has been the acting director since July and last week was appointed by Mayor Rahm Emanuel to fill the role permanently. Emanuel fired the previous director, Susan Russell, in June over what he said were problems at the shelter stemming from the dogs housed there.

Adam Collins, a spokesman for Emanuel, previously told the Tribune there were concerns that the dogs posed a health and safety risk to the staff, volunteers and families looking to adopt a pet. The mayor's administration also previously said the shelter had been above capacity for dogs for months leading up to Russell's ousting.

After Russell was fired — which prompted protests — she penned an opinion column published in the Chicago Tribune arguing the city needs to more clearly define which homeless pets it considers worth saving.

"If Chicago's goal is to save its healthy and treatable homeless animals and to euthanize only those that are irremediably suffering or demonstrating uninterruptible, unpredictable aggression (some would argue that this is the definition of a 'no-kill Chicago'), we must figure out what that means," Russell wrote. "We also need to determine what resources Chicago is willing to put behind it. And we must be transparent about the challenges of trying to do so."

The number of euthanized dogs went down from 3,668 in 2014 to 1,295 in 2017, according to data maintained by Chicago Animal Care and Control. Those figures include dogs euthanized by request and for other reasons such as behavioral issues.

So far this year, 888 dogs were euthanized as of Aug. 31, according to the agency's records. By Sept. 30, 2017, the agency had euthanized 1,023 dogs, according to animal control's records.

Ald. Raymond Lopez, 15th, said the statistics he has received indicate the number of pets being euthanized under the leadership of Gandurski in recent weeks has continued to decline.

Lopez said "misinformation" spreading through social media is leading people to believe there has been a change in which animals are euthanized and when. He said the workers at animal control are more urgently trying to find homes for pets that end up at the shelter.

Lopez said that under the leadership of Russell, there were animals that languished in the shelter for far too long. He said that is why there is now a greater push to activate the network of rescue groups to find homes for the animals.

"I think many volunteers and organizations were not used to knowing how critical the situation was," Lopez said. "Now that they are being informed, they feel like a policy has been shifted. They are just becoming more aware of what's going on inside Animal Care and Control."

Doctor suffering through legal headache

mistake, he said.

"To have everything taken away from you by someone else overnight, to be the butt of everyone's jokes overnight, to be looked at as a laughingstock because of what someone else did — it's horrible," Joshi said in an interview at his Vernon Hills office.

Joshi has sued his Indiana nemesis, saying he intentionally passed himself off as his better-known peer. That alleged deception prompted "people everywhere ... into incorrectly believing that the Real Dr. Joshi is the person in all the news stories about the doctor that was arrested," the lawsuit claims.

But legal and business experts said Joshi will face difficulties in clearing his name. Even if he triumphs in court, correcting a public record that spills into social media and search engine results could be a daunting task.

"It's really a difficult one," said Elliot Schreiber, a reputation management expert who teaches at Florida Atlantic University. "It's one of those things where he's guilty by association but has no association."

Putting the two Dr. Jay Joshis side by side, it's hard to confuse them:

- The Illinois one is 42, and has been practicing since 2006. The Indiana one is 34, and has had his license only since 2014.
- The Illinois doctor is a board certified anesthesiologist and pain specialist. Dr. Kevin Zacharoff of the PAINWeek Journal called him "very well-known" for that expertise. The Indiana one is a general practitioner who, according to an archived version of his Munster clinic's defunct website, has side gigs in medical technology and investing.
- The Illinois Joshi has a clean disciplinary record, according to state regulators. The Indiana Joshi had his license suspended in January.

They don't look alike either. Illinois' Dr. Jay Joshi is nearly 6 feet tall with a curly head of hair. His Indiana counterpart is only 5-foot-4, according to court records, and recent photos show he sports a closely shaved scalp.

Joshi said their paths crossed at a professional event years ago, but otherwise he doesn't know his identically named antagonist. The Indiana Joshi did not respond to multiple requests for comment.

JOHN KONSTANTARAS/FOR THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Dr. Jay Joshi works in his Vernon Hills office at National Pain Centers. He is suing the other Jay Yoshi, below, to clear his name.

Another physician, also named Jay Joshi, pleaded guilty in federal court in Indiana to distribution of a controlled substance related to painkillers he prescribed. He is awaiting sentencing.

According to testimony at a July court hearing, the Indiana Joshi drew suspicion when police noticed people who were known to have drug addictions visiting his clinic. The state's prescription-monitoring service showed Joshi had written more controlled substance prescriptions than any doctor in Lake County, Ind., and was among the top 10 in the entire state.

An undercover DEA agent visited the clinic, claiming to be a truck driver who suffered from chronic pain but did not have medical records. After checking the state database to see whether the man was getting pain pills from other doctors, Joshi gave him a prescription (court documents say it was 60 hydrocodone tablets).

The agent received the same prescription three more times with only cursory exams, Assistant U.S. Attorney Thomas Mahoney said.

"I understand the government's position that things could have been done better," defense attorney Michael Gurland said.

The Indiana Joshi pleaded guilty to distribution of a controlled substance, a crime that carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison. He is due to be sentenced Nov. 15.

After the case hit the news in January, the physician who calls himself "the Real Dr. Joshi" said his practice shrank and his reputation was left in tatters.

Gracie Gean Bagosy-Young, an advocate for chronic pain sufferers who has seen Joshi for three years, said other patients and doctors have called her asking why Joshi had been indicted.

Bagosy-Young, who suffers from complex regional pain syndrome, said she tried to straighten out the callers, but fears many others still mistakenly believe the worst about Joshi.

"I always wonder about the people who don't ask," she said. "I think people are in general pretty quick to assume without asking."

Joshi said while the misunderstanding has devastated his practice, it has also wreaked havoc on his family life.

"We have friends who don't call us anymore, even though we've gone out of our way to explain that there are two separate people," he said. "Once you have that element of doubt in someone, they would rather just not get involved. I don't know if they're afraid or there's too much drama or what, but it has devastated our social relationships."

The lawsuit claims that the doctor it referred to as "the Imitator Joshi" represented himself as a pain specialist online and in interviews with confused journalists, though that's not clear from his former website and some stories in the local media.

Mikhael Bortz, attorney for the doctor who filed the lawsuit, wouldn't give specific examples of the alleged deception but said they would come out in court.

Bortz said while the peculiar facts in Joshi v. Joshi might be unprecedented, other cases have laid a clear foundation for what's allowable when two professionals or companies have the same name.

"Your name is Bob Gucci, you can't just decide to start selling shoes and handbags," she said.

But Mark McKenna, an intellectual property expert at the University of Notre Dame Law School, said the case will likely rest on the Illinois Dr. Joshi proving that his rival intentionally tried to deceive the public about his true identify. Otherwise, he could turn out to be the victim of an unfortunate coincidence.

"If there's a doctor who has the same name and offers similar services, and that doctor turns out to be a bad actor, there's not a lot trademark law can do about that because you get to use your name," he said.

Schreiber said rehabilitating a name often involves hiring a company that manipulates search engine results, pushing negative references to later pages. But that work would likely be complicated when two people share the same name and profession, he said.

The lawsuit seeks unspecified monetary damages, along with "corrective advertising" intended to restore the Illinois doctor's good name — along with that of many other Joshis.

"Joshi is one of the most honorable last names in the Indian language," the doctor said. "It means 'teacher.' Traditionally, to have the name Joshi, you had to be the most honorable and educated. The priests and the teachers were the Joshis. It's something that many Joshis, to this day, have kept as part of their duty. Besides hurting me, he's hurt that legacy all over the world."

Officers watch protesters on the sidewalk outside the Leighton Criminal Court Building on Monday as the defense begins to present its case in Officer Jason Van Dyke's murder trial.

Police readying for trial's end

Department to expand hours, cancel days off

By Jeremy Gorner
Chicago Tribune

Chicago police officials on Monday said they are prepared to expand shifts and cancel days off for the entire 12,000-strong department if widespread protests occur after a verdict in Officer Jason Van Dyke's murder trial for shooting Laquan McDonald.

Department officials said officers are prepared to have their usual 8 1/2-hour shifts extended to 12 hours a day, while days off would be canceled for other officers.

During an interview with the Chicago Tribune on Monday at police headquarters, Superintendent Eddie Johnson would not specify whether the department would wait until a verdict before instituting the measures.

"We'll monitor the court events, and as we get closer to the end of it, we'll make that decision," Johnson said.

The superintendent said the department has been doing "outreach" with community leaders and business owners throughout the South and West sides as well as downtown.

"This isn't the first time that as a city we've faced some challenging issues," said Johnson, flanked by several members of his command staff. "All the entities that I've spoken to, I'm not expecting any unrest at all. ... We are prepared to escalate up if the need arises."

In the past, Johnson has noted that other major cities with controversial citizen deaths at the hands of police usually saw more unrest right after those incidents than following trials for officers criminally charged in those incidents.

The department has extended shifts and canceled days off many other times over the years for long summer holiday weekends to guard against violence on the South and West sides and for other large-scale festivals and protests downtown.

"We have an ability to ramp up our deployments or take them back down as the need requires," Johnson said. "But honestly speaking, you know, from what we're getting from people out on the street is that everyone understands this is our city. And we all have a responsibility to ensure that our city is safe.

"CPD, we have a responsibility to protect people's First Amendment right to protest in the event that comes to fruition," he continued. "But we also have a responsibility to keep the city safe, so we're prepared for any issues that might arise."

Johnson said officers will wear their regular uniforms and won't be equipped with riot gear such as helmets, ballistic shields and masks unless necessary.

Additional officers would likely be out patrolling on horses and bicycles.

Deputy Chief Dwayne Betts said officers from some of the department's 22 patrol districts have been in touch with residents, community leaders and businesses in the neighborhoods about the trial. Betts said one of the West Side districts this week will be holding a meeting with the community about how to react no matter the verdict.

"We realize, too, that this is a very sensitive time for everyone," said Betts, who oversees the department's community policing program. "... I think the commanders all have identified locations that they think might be a potential concern, so we can make sure we've got the resources there as well as talking to the leadership of those communities and let them know, too, that we need to all rally around safety."

Johnson acknowledged that police could be challenged by the speed of social media such as Facebook and Twitter, but he expressed confidence that his officers can adjust.

"Social media can be a good thing, but then conversely, it can push out false narratives of information," he said.

Testimony by defense pathologist contradicts video control the narrative surrounding an October 2014 shooting that has roiled the city since the release of the graphic video a year later.

But Teas' testimony offered no insight into the central question of whether Van Dyke was justified in shooting the teen as he walked away from police holding a knife in his hand while ignoring commands to stop.

Instead, her three hours on the witness stand often bogged down on issues such as whether McDonald had a pulse at the scene, why more photos weren't taken at the original autopsy and even pseudo-philosophical questions about the definition of death.

Van Dyke's attorneys ultimately are expected to argue that because the first shots fired by the officer caused irreversibly fatal wounds, the other dozen or so shots have no significance to the case.

Legal experts at the Leighton Criminal Court Building have questioned the strategy, calling it a nuanced legal argument that could backfire if the jury finds it distasteful. The argument would also contradict indicted former Officer Joseph Walsh, Van Dyke's partner that night who testified last week that Van Dyke needed to keep shooting McDonald because he still held the knife while lying on the pavement.

On Monday afternoon, Van Dyke's attorneys launched another risky strategy — attempting to prove that McDonald was a violent, out-of-control youth. Three witnesses who had encountered him long before his death testified about separate incidents in which he was belligerent, aggressive or verbally abusive, although all three acknowledged that Van Dyke had no knowledge of the incidents at the time he shot McDonald.

Van Dyke, 40, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder, 16 counts of aggravated battery and one count of official misconduct in McDonald's death, the first time in decades a Chicago police officer has faced murder charges for an on-duty fatality.

Van Dyke's attorneys have called the shooting a clear-cut case of self-defense.

Using a PowerPoint presentation, Teas took jurors through a shot-by-shot analysis of the autopsy on McDonald's body conducted by a Cook County pathologist a day after his death. Teas, who once worked for the medical examiner's office, was sharply critical of her ex-colleagues' methods and findings, including what she said was a failure to fully document the wounds and bullet trajectories as well as mislabeling entry wounds as exit wounds and vice versa.

Unlike last week, McDonald's mother, Tina Hunter, watched in the courtroom Monday as the photos of her son's bullet wounds were displayed. She bowed her head as the first photo of a bright red graze wound on McDonald's scalp was shown on a screen. McDonald, her firstborn and only son, would have turned 21 Tuesday.

Across the aisle, Jason Van Dyke's wife, Tiffany, sat next to a priest and a nun from the couple's Southwest Side parish.

Teas testified that a bullet that entered McDonald's chest and severed his pulmonary artery was most likely the one that killed him. His death, she said, would have occurred within one to five minutes.

The forensic pathologist said a second wound to the teen's neck appeared to have been sustained in the initial volley of shots while McDonald was turned and facing the officer.

Last week, Chief Medical Examiner Ponni Arunkumar testified that McDonald was alive for "each and every gunshot wound."

On direct examination Monday, however, Teas said it depended on the definition of "alive."

"If I'm going to say death is a process, I say yes, he was in the process of dying," she said.

Teas also held that McDonald sustained relatively little blood loss from many of the gunshot injuries, likely since the chest wound caused him to lose so much blood.

She also discounted testimony that McDonald had a weak pulse when treated by paramedics at the scene, saying that the heart could still have been beating even though he was near death.

A forensic pathologist hired by Van Dyke's legal team contradicted those assertions, testifying that as many as 15 of the 16 bullets that struck McDonald did so while he was still standing and that a single shot to the chest likely caused McDonald's death "within minutes."

"Are you saying that he died before those other wounds even had a chance to bleed?" asked Tammy Wendt, one of Van Dyke's attorneys.

"Probably," Teas said. "I should say he didn't have effective circulation."

Teas also said that the dashcam video of the shooting aided her in determining that most of the gunshots sustained by McDonald came while he was still standing or in the process of spinning and falling to the street.

While being questioned by the defense, Teas repeatedly rose in the witness stand to demonstrate with a short stick how particular bullets would have struck the teen depending on the position of his body as he twisted.

Teas testified that only one of the wounds — a shot to the right hand — definitively appeared to hit McDonald after he had fallen to the street. She said she was unable to determine the teen's body position for a graze wound to the top of his head. But the other wounds, she said, were sustained while he was standing, spinning or falling.

She also told the jury that it was likely that the concentration of PCP in McDonald's blood was even higher than tests indicated, since he'd received a transfusion at the hospital and the sample that was tested was likely "diluted."

According to prosecution evidence last week, the shooting video shows McDonald falling to the pavement less than two seconds after Van Dyke opened fire. It then took Van Dyke another 12 seconds to finish shooting, all while McDonald laid on the pavement.

Walsh, Van Dyke's partner that night who faces a separate trial on charges he exaggerated McDonald's threat in police reports, testified under immunity last week that Van Dyke continued to fire when McDonald was lying prone because the teen still posed a threat.

A use-of-force expert hired by the prosecution, however, testified last week that the shooting video showed that McDonald was "clearly incapacitated" after he fell wounded to the street.

During a sometimes combative cross-examination, prosecutor Jody Gleason noted that Teas' written report on the autopsy differed from her live testimony, particularly in the position of McDonald's body when several of shots struck him.

The prosecutor and Teas also sparred on how significant it was that McDonald had a pulse when paramedics arrived, with Gleason taking Teas to task for suggesting the other wounds did not matter.

"It certainly mattered to Laquan McDonald," Gleason said.

When Teas testified that death is a "process," even saying that the heart can beat for a while after death, Gleason responded, "I understand death is a process. I mean, we're all dying, right?"

"Not imminently," said Teas, drawing a rare chuckle from the courtroom gallery that prompted a sheriff's deputy to shout, "Quiet!"

The constant sparring between prosecutors and defense attorneys over the last week about the precise moment when McDonald died appeared to be wearing on a jury that saw the same autopsy photos and heard wound-by-wound testimony last week from the chief medical examiner. By the end of Teas' testimony, none of the jurors appeared to be taking notes, and many looked listless as they swiveled in their chairs and glanced around the courtroom.

In afternoon testimony, Van Dyke's attorneys called three witnesses to testify about incidents in McDonald's past.

Miguel DeJesus, an intake officer at the Cook County Juvenile Temporary Detention Center, told the jury that McDonald had become upset in January 2014 about being locked up and wanted to make a phone call and be given a pair of tennis shoes. The teen admitted that he was on pills and "the leaf" — PCP — and his eyes looked glassy, DeJesus said.

"He got up. He swung at me. I was able to grab him and pick him up," said DeJesus, noting he was able to "pin" the teen until help arrived.

In an August 2013 incident, McDonald lashed out at a sheriff's deputy in the lockup at juvenile court and tried to throw a punch, another officer testified. And a former juvenile detention center officer said that in April 2014 he had to put McDonald in a chokehold during an attempt to remove him from a common area.

Under Illinois law, defendants claiming self-defense in some circumstances can introduce evidence of the victim's violent character and history — even if the defendant could not have known about that history at the time of the incident.

In an effort to show that Van Dyke had no knowledge of the encounters between McDonald and Monday's witnesses, prosecutors pressed all three about whether they had told Van Dyke about the incidents. All said no.

Much like the issue of which specific shot killed McDonald, the defense strategy of painting McDonald as a less-sympathetic victim is a fine line — one that could easily look like a smear and backfire in front of jurors, legal experts have told the Tribune.

In U.N. return, Trump's tone shifts

Rhetoric on Kim goes from fire and fury to warm and fuzzy

By Jonathan Lemire and Zeke Miller
Associated Press

SPENCER PLATT/GETTY

President Donald Trump, with top aides including Ambassador Nikki Haley, right, attends a U.N. meeting

President Donald Trump raised hopes at the United Nations on Monday that a second meeting with North Korea's Kim Jong Un could occur "quite soon," striking a conciliatory tone one year after he used his debut at the U.N. to deride the autocrat as "Little Rocket Man" and threaten to "totally destroy North Korea" if the U.S. were forced to defend itself or allies.

Trump praised Kim as "very open" and "terrific," despite the glacial pace of progress toward denuclearization on the Korean Peninsula.

U.S. officials defended Trump's strategy of engagement with the erstwhile pariah state as the president embarked on a week of meetings with world leaders. The softer tone toward North Korea — once threatened with "fire and fury" — has been replaced by rosy optimism, with Trump reserving tough rhetoric for another potential nuclear aspirant and strategic foe: Iran.

"It was a different world," Trump said Monday of his one-time moniker for the North Korean leader. "That was a dangerous time. This is one year later, a much different time."

Trump began his second visit to the U.N. with a brief meeting on the global drug trade before sitting down with South Korean President Moon Jae-in, who delivered a personal message to Trump from Kim after their inter-Korean talks last week in Pyongyang.

"You are the only person who can solve this problem," Moon said to Trump, relaying Kim's words.

Trump, for his part, said: "We are in no rush. We are in no hurry" to bring about a nuclear agreement. U.S. officials are insisting that economic sanctions remain in place against the North until it eliminates its nuclear program.

Trump said Secretary of State Mike Pompeo has been tasked with bringing about the second summit, despite an assessment by U.S. officials that the North has not followed through on its commitments to take steps toward denuclearization. Pompeo defended Trump's decision to seek another meeting despite the slow progress.

"We've been at this the other way an awfully long time and failed," he said, adding: "We tried to do details. We tried to do step for step. We tried to do trade for trade. Each of those failed.

"We're bringing the two senior leaders, the individuals who can actually make the decisions that will move this process forward," in hopes they can make a breakthrough, he said.

Trump said the location for the second summit is still to be determined, but officials have said the U.S. leader is holding out hope it could take place on American soil.

Such a move would itself present a complex political and logistical challenge for the North Korean leader.

Trump has often fondly invoked the Singapore summit, a made-for-TV event that attracted the world's media attention and largely received positive marks from cable pundits — reviews that were not repeated for his summit with Russia's Vladimir Putin in Helsinki the following month.

Trump and Moon on Monday were signing a new version of the U.S.-South Korean trade agreement, marking one of Trump's first successes in his effort to renegotiate economic deals on more favorable terms for the U.S. Even so, some U.S. officials worry that South Korea's eagerness to restore relations with the North — known as its "sunshine policy" — could reduce sanctions pressure on Kim's government, hampering efforts to negotiate a nuclear accord.

The nuclear threat also was on the agenda at Trump's first meeting in New York, a dinner with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Sunday night. Abe stands first among world leaders in cultivating a close relationship with the president through displays of flattery that he has used to advance his efforts to influence the unpredictable American leader.

Trump is set to address the U.N. General Assembly on Tuesday morning and will chair a meeting of the Security Council Wednesday on counter-proliferation. In both venues, U.S. officials say, he is expected to offer a contrast between the path of negotiation chosen by North Korea and that of Iran.

Trump removed the U.S. from the 2015 Iran nuclear deal, citing Iran's malign influence in the region and support for terrorist groups like Hezbollah. The next round of tough sanctions on Iran is set to go into effect in November.

Iranian President Hassan Rouhani is in New York to attend U.N. meetings. U.S. officials said Trump is not seeking a meeting with the Iranian leader, but is not opposed to talking if Iran requests a session.

Rouhani, appearing on NBC on Monday, cited the threat of more U.S. sanctions in stating, "There is no such program for a meeting."

Cosby prosecutor asks for 5 to 10 years in prison

By Maryclaire Dale and Michael R. Sisak

Bill Cosby leaves court after a sentencing hearing Monday in Norristown, Pa.

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — Prosecutors on Monday asked a judge to sentence Bill Cosby to five to 10 years in prison for drugging and sexually assaulting a woman, while his lawyer argued that the 81-year-old comedian is too old and frail to serve time behind bars.

"What does an 81-year-old man do in prison?" defense attorney Joseph Green asked on Day 1 of the sentencing hearing for the comic, who is legally blind and dependent on others. "How does he fight off the people who are trying to extort him, or walk to the mess hall?"

Green suggested that Cosby instead be placed in a detention or rehabilitation facility or be put under something akin to house arrest.

Montgomery County District Attorney Kevin Steele said that Cosby, even at his advanced age, is still capable of slipping women drugs and assaulting them. And he said the sentence should send a message to others.

"Despite bullying tactics, despite PR teams and other folks trying to change the optics, as one lawyer for the defense put it, the bottom line is that nobody's above the law. Nobody," he said.

Judge Steven O'Neill is expected to sentence Cosby on Tuesday. The TV star once known was America's Dad for his starring role in "The Cosby Show" could become the first celebrity of the #MeToo era to be sent to prison.

Constand

Cosby was convicted in April of violating former Temple University women's basketball administrator Andrea Constand at his suburban Philadelphia mansion in 2004.

After testifying for several hours at two trials, the first of which ended in a hung jury, Constand spoke in court Monday for just two minutes.

"The jury heard me. Mr. Cosby heard me. Now, all I am asking for, is justice as the court sees fit," said Constand, who submitted a much longer victim-impact statement that wasn't read in court.

The charges carry up to 30 years in prison, though state sentencing guidelines call for about one to four years behind bars.

The judge is also expected to decide whether to declare Cosby a "sexually violent predator" — a scarlet letter that would make him subject to mandatory lifetime counseling and community notification of his whereabouts.

On Monday, Kristen Dudley, a psychologist for the state of Pennsylvania, testified that Cosby has an uncontrollable urge to violate young women and would probably commit another offense if given the chance.

Cosby often befriended women, then sedated them with drugs or alcohol and violated them for the "sole purpose of his sexual gratification," Dudley testified.

A psychologist for the defense is set to testify Tuesday.

Cosby's lawyers argued that the state law on classifying sexual predators is unconstitutional. They contended also that Cosby is unlikely to commit another crime because of his advanced age and health and because there have been no complaints that he molested anyone in the 14 years since his encounter with Constand.

"The victims cannot be unraped. Unfortunately, all we can do is hold the perpetrator accountable."

Cosby spokesman Andrew Wyatt told reporters in the afternoon that the entertainer was in "great, great" spirits.

"We tell him to stay strong and stay focused, and he's focused on Mrs. Cosby, and that's what matters in his family," Wyatt said. "He's a great guy. He's still America's Dad, and they won't ever take that away. You can't take away the legacy."

In the years since Constand first went to police in 2005, more than 60 women have accused Cosby of sexual misconduct, though none of those claims have led to criminal charges. At least two of those women, Lise-Lotte Lublin and Janice Dickinson, were among those in court Monday.

Prosecutors had hoped to have some of the other accusers address the court at sentencing. But the district attorney's office told The Associated Press that that would not happen.

A few hours before the hearing, Constand tweeted Ephesians 4:26, a Bible verse about letting go of anger: "Be wrathful, but do not sin; do not let the sun set while you are still angry; do not give the Devil an opportunity."

Cosby, who grew up in public housing in Philadelphia, became the first black actor to star in a prime-time TV show, "I Spy," in 1965. He remained a Hollywood A-lister for much of the next half-century, hitting his peak in the 1980s with the top-rated "Cosby Show" as the warm, wisecracking dad, Dr. Cliff Huxtable.

Electrical implant propels paralysis patients

By Lauran Neergaard

Jered Chinnock, injured in a snowmobile accident, stands with the assistance of his therapy team in Rochester, Minn.

WASHINGTON — Three people whose legs were paralyzed for years can stand and take steps again thanks to an electrical implant that zaps the injured spinal cord — along with months of intense rehab, researchers reported Monday.

The milestone, reported by two teams of scientists working separately, is not a cure. The patients walk only with assistance — holding onto a rolling walker or with other help to keep their balance. Switch off the spinal stimulator and they no longer can voluntarily move their legs.

But during one physical therapy session at the Mayo Clinic, 29-year-old Jered Chinnock moved back and forth enough to cover about the length of a football field.

"The walking side of it isn't something where I just leave my wheelchair behind and away I go," said Chinnock, of Tomah, Wis. But, "there is the hopeful side of, maybe I'll gain that — where I can leave the wheelchair behind, even if it is to walk to the refrigerator."

The work is part of a quest to help people with spinal cord injuries regain function, and specialists say while it only has been attempted in a few people, it is a promising approach that needs more study.

With the new approach, the three patients are taking steps under their own power — intentionally moving, according to the reports published Monday by Nature Medicine and the New England Journal of Medicine.

"Recovery can happen if you have the right circumstances," said University of Louisville professor Susan Harkema, who co-authored the New England Journal study. The spinal cord "relearns to do things, not as well as it did before, but it can function."

Chinnock's success surprised doctors. He underwent 43 weeks of intense physical therapy and stimulator adjustments.

Trump leads charge to save court nominee

Capitol Hill police move the crowd back as protesters rally against Judge Brett Kavanaugh outside the office of Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, on Monday.

the Republicans of "a rush job to avoid the truth."

Trump has made clear he won't order an FBI investigation of the allegations. And McConnell said that Thursday's Judiciary Committee hearing would proceed and that full Senate consideration would follow "in the near future," though he mentioned no date.

In a letter to the committee planning the hearing featuring Kavanaugh and his first accuser, Christine Blasey Ford, the nominee accused his opponents of launching "smears, pure and simple."

In an unusual strategy for a Supreme Court nominee, Kavanaugh, 53, now a judge on the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals, also sat for an interview along with his wife late Monday on the conservative-friendly Fox News Channel.

Careful not to assail Ford but firm in his denial, he said, "I am not questioning and have not questioned that perhaps Dr. Ford at some point in her life was sexually assaulted by someone at some place, but what I know is I've never sexually assaulted anyone."

"I'm not going to let false accusations drive us out of this process, and we're looking for a fair process where I can be heard and defend my integrity, my lifelong record," he said in an excerpt released by Fox before the telecast. "My lifelong record of promoting dignity and equality for women starting with the women who knew me when I was 14 years old. I'm not going anywhere."

On Sunday, The New Yorker magazine reported that Deborah Ramirez described a 1980s, alcohol-heavy Yale dormitory party at which she said Kavanaugh exposed himself, placed his penis in her face and caused her to touch it without her consent.

Despite the forceful rhetoric by Kavanaugh and his GOP supporters, it remained unclear how three moderate Republicans — Sens. Susan Collins of Maine, Arizona's Jeff Flake and Alaska's Lisa Murkowski — would react to the latest accusation. With the GOP's Senate control hanging on a razor-thin 51-49 margin, defections by any two Republican senators would seal his fate if all Democrats vote "no."

Proceeding with Kavanaugh seems to give Republicans their best shot at filling the Supreme Court vacancy — and giving the court an increasingly conservative tilt — before November's elections, when GOP Senate control is in play.

Even if Republicans lose their Senate majority, they could still have time to confirm a nominee in a post-election lame duck session, but the GOP has not indicated that is under consideration. Delaying Kavanaugh's confirmation could give time for doubts about him to take root or for any fresh accusations to emerge.

A week ago, Ford told the Washington Post that at a high school house party in the early 1980s, a drunk Kavanaugh forced her into a bedroom where he pinned her on a bed, tried removing her clothes and muffled her mouth to prevent screams before she escaped.

Republicans have attacked the credibility of both women's accounts. They note that neither the accusers nor news organizations have found people willing to provide corroboration, even though Ford and Ramirez have both named people who they said were present at the alleged incidents.

Rosenstein's job up in the air as meeting with Trump looms would have immediate implications for special counsel Robert Mueller's investigation of possible collaboration between Russia and the Trump campaign before the 2016 election. Rosenstein appointed Mueller and oversees his investigation.

ALEX WONG/GETTY

Rosenstein and Trump, who is in New York for a U.N. meeting, had an extended conversation to discuss recent news stories about negative comments Rosenstein is reported to have made last year about the president, said White House spokeswoman Sarah Huckabee Sanders.

The deputy attorney general was reported as having discussed possibly secretly recording the president and invoking the Constitution to have the Cabinet remove him from office. The Justice Department issued two statements from Rosenstein denying the remarks and released a separate statement from someone who said he recalled the recording comment but insisted that it was meant sarcastically.

As Trump mulled Rosenstein's fate and consulted on how to respond, Rosenstein was summoned to the West Wing on Friday evening by White House chief of staff John Kelly.

He also spoke with White House counsel Don McGahn over the weekend to say he was considering resigning, according to a person familiar with the conversation. McGahn told Rosenstein they should discuss the issue Monday, said the person who spoke on condition of anonymity to discuss the private conversation.

"At the request of Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, he and President Trump had an extended conversation to discuss the recent news stories," Sanders said in a statement. "Because the President is at the United Nations General Assembly and has a full schedule with leaders from around the world, they will meet on Thursday when the President returns to Washington, D.C."

It's unclear what will happen Thursday.

Despite his "You're Fired!" tagline from his "The Apprentice" reality show days, the president has shown himself reluctant to directly fire aides himself.

While his White House has been marked with unprecedented staff turnover, Trump has often left the task to deputies, including Kelly. He dispatched his former bodyguard to fire former FBI Director James Comey — though Comey was out of town. In other cases, Trump has publicly and privately shamed a staffer, pushing them to resign of their own volition.

Congressional Republicans, Democrats and some Trump aides have warned for months that the president shouldn't fire Rosenstein, saying such a move could lead to impeachment proceedings if the Democrats retake the House in the upcoming midterms.

Though Trump has mostly spared Rosenstein from some of the harsher and more personal attacks he has directed at Attorney General Jeff Sessions, he has occasionally lashed out with angry tirades at the Justice Department's No. 2 official, including after FBI raids in April targeting the president's former personal lawyer, Michael Cohen.

Rosenstein appointed Mueller in May of last year after Sessions, who ordinarily would have overseen the investigation, recused himself because of his close involvement in the Trump campaign.

Those developments came one week after Rosenstein laid the groundwork for the firing of Comey by writing a memo that criticized Comey's handling of the FBI investigation into Hillary Clinton's email server. The White House initially held up that memo as justification for Comey's firing, though Trump himself has said he was thinking about "this Russia thing" when he made his move.

If Rosenstein is forced out, Solicitor General Noel Francisco, the highest-ranking Senate-confirmed official below Rosenstein in the Justice Department, would take control of the Mueller investigation.

Former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, whose private memos document comments made by Rosenstein, said Monday he was concerned that a Rosenstein departure would put the investigation at risk.

"There is nothing more important to the integrity of law enforcement and the rule of law than protecting the investigation of special counsel Mueller," McCabe said in a statement.

Trump: Statehood on hold for Puerto Rico because of feud

Aaron and Diana Umpirerre recently marked the one-year anniversary of Hurricane Maria's devastation of Puerto Rico with a rally in Hollywood, Fla.

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump on Monday declared himself an "absolute no" on statehood for Puerto Rico as long as critics such as San Juan's mayor remain in office, the latest broadside in his feud with members of the U.S. territory's leadership.

Trump lobbed fresh broadsides at San Juan Mayor Carmen Yulin Cruz, a critic of his administration's response to hurricanes on the island last year, during a radio interview with Fox News' Geraldo Rivera that aired Monday.

"With the mayor of San Juan as bad as she is and as incompetent as she is, Puerto Rico shouldn't be talking about statehood until they get some people that really know what they're doing," Trump said in an interview with Rivera's show on Cleveland's WTAM radio.

Trump said when "you have good leadership," statehood for Puerto Rico could be "something they talk about. With people like that involved in Puerto Rico, I would be an absolute no."

Gov. Ricardo Rossello, an advocate of statehood for the island, said Trump's remarks had trivialized the statehood process because of political differences.

"The president said he is not in favor of statehood for the people of Puerto Rico based on a personal feud with a local mayor. This is an insensitive, disrespectful comment to over 3 million Americans who live in the U.S. territory of Puerto Rico," Rossello said.

He also questioned how the president could be at the U.N. General Assembly promoting democracy around the world while "in his own home there is the oldest and most populated colonial system in the world."

Cruz responded on Twitter: "Trump is again accusing me of telling the truth. Now he says there will be no statehood because of me."

Jenniffer Gonzalez, Puerto Rico's non-voting representative in Congress, tweeted: "Equality 4 Puerto Ricans shouldn't be held up by one bad mayor who's leaving office in 2020 & do not represent the people who voted twice for statehood."

Trump's position on statehood for the island puts him at odds with the Republican Party's 2016 platform during its national convention, in which it declared support for statehood.

The president's remarks followed his claims earlier this month that the official death toll from last year's devastating storm in Puerto Rico was inflated. Public health experts have estimated that nearly 3,000 people died in 2017 because of Hurricane Maria.

But Trump falsely accused Democrats of inflating the death toll to make him "look as bad as possible."

Trump's pronouncements have roiled politics in Florida, which has crucial races for governor and U.S. Senate. The state already was home to more than 1 million Puerto Ricans before Hurricane Maria slammed into the island a year ago.

Tens of thousands of residents fled Puerto Rico in the aftermath, with many of them relocating to Florida.

The issue of statehood for Puerto Rico — or some form of semi-autonomous relationship — has divided island residents in recent years.

The debate about the island's "status" is the central feature of its politics and divides its major political parties.

Russia to give Syria new S-300 missiles; U.S. denounces move

NEW YORK — The Trump administration is warning Russia that supplying Syria with an advanced missile defense system would be a "major mistake" and should be reconsidered. It also says U.S. forces will not leave Syria until Iran leaves.

National security adviser John Bolton said Monday that delivery of the Russian S-300 would be a "significant escalation" in already high tensions in the region and Secretary of State Mike Pompeo said he would raise the matter this week with his Russian counterpart at the U.N. General Assembly.

Russia announced Monday that it would give Syria's government S-300 missile defense systems after last week's downing of a Russian plane by Syria in a friendly fire incident. The plane was shot down by a Syrian government missile responding to an Israeli airstrike.

Judge leans toward dismissing Stormy Daniels' libel lawsuit

LOS ANGELES — A federal judge in Los Angeles indicated Monday that he's inclined to dismiss a defamation lawsuit by adult move star Stephanie Clifford, better known as Stormy Daniels, against President Donald Trump.

The suit against Trump stems from her lawyer's release in April of a composite sketch of an unknown man who Clifford claims threatened her in a Las Vegas parking lot in 2011 for agreeing to cooperate with a magazine article about a tryst she says she had with Trump in 2006.

In an April tweet Trump called the man "nonexistent" and characterized the sketch as "a total con job."

U.S. District Judge James Otero at Monday's hearing said that considering such statements as libel would hamper political discourse.

Wails, vows of revenge at Iran funeral after parade attack

AHVAZ, Iran — Amid wails and vows of revenge, thousands of Iranians on Monday attended a mass funeral service for victims of a weekend attack targeting a military parade that killed 25 people.

Officials blamed Saturday's attack in the southwestern city of Ahvaz on Arab separatists they say are linked to the U.S., Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates. The assault killed members of Iran's Revolutionary Guard and wounded over 60 others.

Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei said the attack showed Iran has "a lot of enemies," according to remarks posted on his website.

State TV reported late Monday that authorities have detained 22 suspects linked to the group behind the attack and confiscated ammunition and communications equipment.

Dallas Police Dept. fires officer accused in neighbor's death

DALLAS — A white police officer accused of fatally shooting her black neighbor inside his own apartment was fired Monday for "adverse conduct," the Dallas Police Department said in a statement.

Police Chief U. Renee Hall dismissed Officer Amber Guyger during a hearing Monday, according to the statement.

Guyger has been charged with manslaughter in the Sept. 6 shooting that left 26-year-old Botham Jean dead. Court records show Guyger said she thought she had encountered a burglar inside her own home. She turned herself in three days later, and is currently out on bond.

There are conflicting narratives over what led to the shooting.

Guyger told investigators that she had just ended a shift when she returned in uniform to the South Side Flats apartment complex where she lived.

She said when she put her key in the apartment door, which was unlocked and slightly ajar, it opened, according to the affidavit. Inside, the lights were off, and she saw a figure in the darkness that cast a large silhouette, according to the officer's account.

Guyger said she concluded her apartment was being burglarized and gave verbal commands to the person, who ignored them. The affidavit said she then drew her weapon and fired twice.

She called 911. When asked where she was, she returned to the front door to see she was in the wrong unit, according to the affidavit. The 911 tapes have not been released.

But, according to an affidavit for a search warrant, Jean and Guyger encountered each other at the door to his apartment.

Brexit backers advocate alternative economic plan

LONDON — Brexit advocates unveiled a new economic plan Monday for Britain's departure from the European Union as official figures emerged showing the country's deteriorating trade relationship with the bloc.

The Institute of Economics Affairs, a free-market think tank that has supported Brexit, said in a report that the government to seek a "basic" free trade agreement for goods and pursue "regulatory freedom and trade independence."

The report was backed by many prominent Brexit politicians, and is being presented as an alternative to Prime Minister Theresa May's plan.

May's plan, which was dismissed as unworkable by the EU last week at a stormy summit, would involve Britain remaining in the EU's single market for goods in return for abiding by a "common rulebook."

Nation-state rivals to return as CIA's focus, director says

LOUISVILLE — The Central Intelligence Agency is rededicating itself to the kinds of missions that defined the agency for most of its seven-decade existence, focusing on foreign nations that challenge or threaten the United States, its director said here on Monday.

In her first public remarks since being confirmed in May, Gina Haspel laid out her plan to return the agency to what was its core espionage mission before the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, which transformed the CIA into a paramilitary organization that conducted lethal operations against terrorists around the world.

Haspel's remarks amounted to public affirmation of a transformation that has been underway for the past few years as the CIA attempts to shift from a consuming focus on terrorism.

Pipeline plans: The developer of the Keystone XL oil pipeline plans to start construction next year, after a U.S. State Department review ordered by a federal judge concluded that major environmental damage from a leak is unlikely and could quickly be mitigated, a company spokesman said Monday.

Foxx atones for police abuses

Our image of a prosecutor is a relentless enemy of lawlessness, someone who works with police to investigate criminals, convict them and send them off to serve their time. That's what every prosecutor wants to do.

What don't prosecutors want to do? Make apologies for the criminal justice system. Absolve convicted criminals of guilt. Publicize wrongdoing by police officers.

But that's exactly what Cook County State's Attorney Kim Foxx found herself doing Monday. She appeared in court seeking to overturn the convictions of a crowd of wrongly accused people who were punished because of grievous misconduct by cops.

A judge granted the request to dismiss 18 cases connected to Ronald Watts, a Chicago police sergeant whose tactical squad made a practice of abusing, extorting and framing people, mostly on drug charges. He did 22 months in federal prison for his role in one of the worst scandals the department has ever produced.

Two dozen other victims of Watts' treachery had already had their convictions vacated. And all these cases are just one facet of the total damage.

Foxx said in April that her office will no longer ask 10 cops with ties to Watts to testify in criminal trials "due to concerns about their credibility and alleged involvement in the misconduct." In July, 15 men whose convictions were overturned last year filed federal lawsuits contending that Watts and his crew arrested them on false charges. The financial cost for the city is likely to be painful.

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cook County State's Attorney Kim Foxx went to court Monday, and a judge granted her request to overturn 18 convictions linked to a former police sergeant.

The fault lies not just with them but with plenty of others who turned a blind eye. Joshua Tepfer, a lawyer for the Exoneration Project at the University of Chicago Law School, who represented some of those cleared on Monday, said his clients "told police investigators, they told judges, defense attorneys and prosecutors. Their complaints were dismissed and ignored."

The mass dismissals came just days after Chicagoans learned of the death of retired police Cmdr. Jon Burge, who gained infamy for overseeing and engaging in the torture of hundreds of suspects to extract confessions. He wasn't prosecuted for that conduct because the statute of limitations prevented it. But he spent more than four years in federal prison after being convicted of perjury.

He cost the city more than $100 million in settlements and other legal costs, plus $5.5 million set aside for "reparations."

Not everyone has learned the obvious lessons of such abuses. Dean Angelo, former head of Chicago's Fraternal Order of Police, insisted last week that Burge had "an honorable career" and didn't get "a fair shake." But good cops are tainted by the villainy of bad ones, and they shouldn't make excuses for them.

Foxx, to her credit, has been forthright in exposing Watts and other rogue officers and taking action to mitigate the injustices they caused. Those are important steps in restoring the broken trust between police and the citizenry. She also hopes it will encourage police and prosecutors to speak up when they see official wrongdoing.

The abuses that led to the mass dismissals have been harmful to law enforcement. Taking responsibility for them will help to repair the damage.

After the sex abuse scandal: Scrubbing CPS to make children safer

How many more sexual predators still are free to roam the halls of Chicago Public Schools?

That was the sickening — and urgent — question that many Chicago parents and students asked in June after the Tribune's "Betrayed" series found that at least 72 CPS teachers, coaches, lunchroom aides, counselors, security officers and deans had been accused of sexually abusing students over the past decade. Several of those accused had criminal backgrounds that should have disqualified them from working with students — one had felony drug convictions, another was convicted of a sexual crime involving a child after he was hired.

No wonder Chicagoans demanded to know: How many more cases had CPS officials overlooked or ignored or bungled? How many more children were at risk of attack in schools?

In response to the series, CPS launched a series of reforms, including a massive effort to recheck the criminal and child-welfare histories of its nearly 44,000 employees. That is nearly finished.

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2017

After a Tribune series, CPS began an effort to complete background checks for all workers.

Credit CPS for moving quickly to complete the background checks. It has been an impressive and expensive — up to $3 million budgeted — effort. But Chicagoans should breathe easier now.

The results so far:

The district reports that more than 350 of its employees currently are barred from working in schools. Background results on some of those employees are pending. In addition, CPS says it will seek to fire three teachers, two aides, one central-office worker and seven custodial vendors who apparently failed the background check.

The district also still is scrutinizing the background results of more than 1,800 vendors, including custodians and nurses who work as contractors. So far, about 88 percent of CPS vendors have been cleared, the district reports.

The percentage of CPS employees who have failed or haven't completed these checks is reassuringly small. But remember, the actual number of those who won't be back in the schools may still be in the dozens. Those are people who never should have been allowed in CPS buildings. A single predator can devastate not just one schoolchild, but many others over the years.

Completing these background checks is a major step to keeping Chicago's 371,000 schoolchildren safe. The district also has moved forcefully to create new offices and overhaul protocols to protect children. There will be more training for those who come in contact with students. CPS also wisely has committed to rechecking background information about all employees on a periodic basis.

Still on CPS' to-do list: Develop a reliable system so law enforcement agencies can flag meaningful information about CPS employees. The "Betrayed" series found that some district employees had been arrested for sex crimes after being hired, when they were already serving in schools. The district needs to know about its employees' relevant legal problems in near real time, not months or years later.

CPS has a vital duty to protect its children. That responsibility is shared by every adult who comes in contact with a child. Every day.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

It once seemed certain that Pope Francis, grounded in the spirit of Vatican II and possessing an ample trove of common sense, was equipped to lead the Catholic Church in its recovery from this disaster. Two things have dimmed that prospect.

The first is Francis himself. ... He still puts his trust in gestures of good will and in bromides of shame, as he did last month, on his trip to Ireland, instead of launching the massive institutional reform that the crisis demands. He seems to think that a meeting of bishops is a solution when, as a class, they are themselves the problem. And, apparently, he regards next February as a timely response to a bankruptcy that has already been declared.

The second factor is the recent accumulation of new evidence showing that the depth of Church corruption wildly surpasses any previous estimate. Every week brings a new bolt of accusation. ... This cascade of accusation, revelation and indictment will keep flowing. That Pope Francis responds with a business-as-usual meeting of bishops next winter shows how far he is from grasping the stakes of this crisis.

James Carroll, The New Yorker

Thus far, the president's trade decisions toward China betray almost no policy substance, but they do suggest a showman's instincts and a pugilist's impulse to hit back when hit. You could see China's initial $50 billion retaliation as a test to see how Trump would react. Once the Chinese proved their willingness to go tit-for-tat, would Trump retaliate or rethink his strategy? Now the Chinese government has its answer: Another $200 billion in tariffs and by all accounts a near-total breakdown in diplomacy.

TED SCHURTER/THE STATE JOURNAL-REGISTER

Illinois House Speaker Michael Madigan, right, listens as lawyer Heather Wier Vaught discusses a list of sexual harassment complaints in Springfield in February.

The new 'woke' Speaker Madigan

KRISTEN MCQUEARY

In an op-ed published last week in the Chicago Tribune, Illinois House Speaker Michael Madigan apologizes for not doing enough to combat harassment and intimidation within his state and political offices. The op-ed caps several months of repentant commentary from the speaker's office on women's issues. Someone get the guy a pink hat.

Wrote Madigan: "What became clear is that I didn't do enough, and that we, collectively, have failed in the Capitol to ensure everyone can reliably, confidentially and safely report harassment. I thought the pathways were there, but they weren't."

The piece follows months of unusual statements from Madigan commenting on everything from one of Judge Brett Kavanaugh's sexual harassment accusers, to the 25th anniversary of the swearing-in of U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, to praising Women's Equality Day. This, from a politician who typically issues a press release maybe once every three months and first addressed sexual harassment claims within his office with a cut-it-out finger wag.

One of the first accusers to publicly allege sexual harassment in Madigan's shop, Alaina Hampton, filed a federal lawsuit in March against a Madigan political committee and the Democratic Party of Illinois, which the speaker oversees. Meanwhile, Madigan's outside counsel, Maggie Hickey, a former federal prosecutor, is reviewing House operations to determine the protocol for reducing harassment claims; Madigan vowed in his op-ed to act accordingly when she completes her report. Does he have reason to think her report will be unflattering?

Let's be clear on what Madigan and his Democratic Party enablers have tolerated. Six people in his shop have been removed, including his chief of staff, Tim Mapes, and only under the force of public pressure. Those dismissals were collateral damage. Anyone involved in Madigan's inner circle knows intimidation is not limited to stand-alone incidents or a handful of party bosses. It is intrinsic to his operation. It is his double helix. Politics and power.

While Madigan and his spokesman, Steve Brown, have insisted the speaker wasn't aware of the pervasiveness of harassment and intimidation by his associates — and remember, these are primarily women coming forward — it's difficult to believe he didn't know.

Mapes, perhaps his closest confidant and internal disciplinarian, was known for his braggadocio. He may have insulated Madigan from direct involvement in the day-to-day fire-extinguishing of running a massive political operation. But he was Madigan's gatekeeper, his workhorse, his conduit.

Personally, Mapes was and is acerbic — much of it good-natured — but also cutthroat. Rep. Kelly Cassidy, D-Chicago, felt compelled to leave a part-time job with Cook County Sheriff Tom Dart after Mapes called Dart's office and inquired about her employment status. The call from Mapes came around the same time Cassidy was openly criticizing Madigan for downplaying allegations of misconduct among his staff. We're supposed to believe the timing of Mapes' call was simply coincidental? Sure. OK.

Hampton alleged she was pushed out of her job and the Democratic Party organization for speaking up about Kevin Quinn, a then-top Madigan aide who worked on campaigns. She produced text messages from Quinn calling her "smoking hot" and pressuring her to date him. The seriousness of her allegations were brushed aside for months until she was about to go public.

Other women came forward, including Sherri Garrett, who worked alongside Mapes in the House. She described a culture of intimidation and cover-up within the speaker's office. Complaints of sexual harassment were largely ignored, she said, and in one case twisted against her when she tried to defend a colleague against a lawmaker. "Are you reporting the situation because you are upset the representative isn't paying attention to you?" Mapes allegedly asked Garrett.

He also commented on her "pink bra," she said, and warned other "girls" working in the dome who "leave little to the imagination" to wear more modest clothing during public events.

Bullying on the campaign trail was routine. A Madigan opponent in 2012 who had no political experience said her car door got smashed and her tires slashed during the campaign. She produced car repair receipts that totaled more than $300. The response from Madigan's spokesman? She probably slashed her own tires to get attention. No investigation into the tactics. No inspector general to intervene. Only ridicule. Silly girl.

Lawmakers privately have complained about Madigan and his crew for years. Shaw Decremer, now a lobbyist with a business built around his work for the speaker, got dismissed from Madigan's ranks earlier this year after Rep. Deb Conroy, D-Villa Park, raised a serious allegation of inappropriate conduct involving him.

Even now, Democratic House candidates accepting help from Madigan and his political operation — its voter databases, staff, advice and money — have to give up control of their campaigns. His staffers can follow candidates through a phone app to make sure they're going door-to-door. One House Democratic candidate told me Madigan's aides wanted to observe her through a live feed while she was door-knocking, just to make sure she was on message. They also are not supposed to talk to the press or engage with the public, aside from porch steps.

See? When those of us who write about campaigns obsessively report the amount of money Madigan gives candidates, we miss the full picture. They want to say they're independent of him, but they wind up subservient to his control. No wonder he's a shoo-in for speaker every term.

There certainly are stories about the Illinois Republican Party also being accused of aggressive control-freakery. But I haven't heard nearly as many complaints from that side as I have during my 20 years of covering Madigan's office.

So spare me the mea culpa, the "woke" moment, the grasping press releases. Democratic women running under Madigan's political umbrella have become adept at looking the other way. Any other elected official and party leader would be long gone. Instead, Madigan continues to be re-elected as party chair and House speaker.

Actually valuing women, their policy contributions and their diversity, is not really the goal of the Madigan program. Putting up female candidates in the suburbs because they poll well and have increased Madigan's voting majority — that is the Madigan program.

A study found that many liberal arts colleges, like Wellesley, have overwhelmingly Democratic faculties.

The problem with all those liberal professors

By Cass R. Sunstein

Suppose that you start college with a keen interest in physics, and you quickly discover that almost all members of the physics department are Democrats. Would you think that something is wrong? Would your answer be different if your favorite subject is music, chemistry, computer science, anthropology or sociology?

In recent years, concern has grown over what many people see as a left-of-center political bias at colleges and universities. A few months ago, Mitchell Langbert, an associate professor of business at Brooklyn College, published a study of the political affiliations of faculty members at 51 of the 66 liberal arts colleges ranked highest by U.S. News in 2017. The findings are eye-popping (even if they do not come as a great surprise to many people in academia).

Democrats dominate most fields. In religion, Langbert's survey found that the ratio of Democrats to Republicans is 70 to 1. In music, it is 33 to 1. In biology, it is 21 to 1. In philosophy, history and psychology, it is 17 to 1. In political science, it is 8 to 1. The gap is narrower in science and engineering. In physics, economics and mathematics, the ratio is about 6 to 1. In chemistry, it is 5 to 1, and in engineering, it is just 1.6 to 1. Still, Lambert found no field in which Republicans are more numerous than Democrats.

True, these figures do not include the many professors who do not have a political affiliation, either because they are not registered at all or because they have not declared themselves as Democrats or Republicans. And, true, the ratios vary dramatically across colleges.

The faculties of Wellesley, Williams and Swarthmore are overwhelmingly Democratic, with ratios at or above 120 to 1. At Harvey Mudd and Lafayette, the ratios are 6 to 1. At the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, it is 2.3 to 1; it is just 1.3 to 1 at West Point.

But despite the variability, none of the 51 colleges had more Republicans than Democrats. According to the survey, over a third of them had no Republicans at all.

For two reasons, these numbers, and others like them, are genuinely disturbing.

The first involves potential discrimination on the part of educational institutions. Some departments might be disinclined to hire potential faculty members based on their political convictions.

Such discrimination might take the form of unconscious devaluation of people whose views do not fit with the dominant perspective. For example, young historians who cast Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal in a terrible light might not get a lot of job offers. And talented people might not pursue academic careers at all, because they expect that their potential professors will not appreciate their work.

The second reason is that students are less likely to get a good education, and faculty members are likely to learn less from one another, if there is a prevailing political orthodoxy. Students and faculty might end up in a kind of information cocoon. If a political science department consists of 24 Democrats and two Republicans, we have reason to doubt that students will be exposed to an adequate range of views.

It is true that in some fields, political affiliations do not matter. In chemistry, math, physics and engineering, students should not care about the party affiliations of their professors. Sure, it's conceivable that Democratic chemistry professors want to hire fellow Democrats. But that would be surprising. In all likelihood, they are looking for good chemistry professors.

In fields of this kind, there is no reason to worry that political homogeneity will disserve students or undermine the exchange of ideas. If students are learning about special relativity or the physics of nuclei, partisan affiliations ought not to be relevant.

The real problems arise in subjects like history, political science, philosophy and psychology, where the professor's political perspective might well make a difference. (The same is true of law.) If academic hiring is skewed along ideological lines, the march toward uniformity might be self-reinforcing. Prospective professors will have an incentive to adopt the prevailing orthodoxy (or to speak and write as if they do).

It is far too simple, of course, to say that professors of history, political science, philosophy and the like should "look like America" in political terms. What matters is that they are experts in their fields, able to convey what they know. In faculty hiring, affirmative action for those with conservative political positions is not likely to serve anyone well.

Nonetheless, the current numbers make two points unmistakably clear.

First, those who teach in departments lacking ideological diversity have an obligation to offer competing views and to present them fairly and with respect. A political philosopher who leans left should be willing and able to ask students to think about the force of the argument for free markets, even if they produce a lot of inequality.

Second, those who run departments lacking ideological diversity have an obligation to find people who will represent competing views — visiting speakers, visiting professors and new hires. Faculties need not be expected to mirror their societies, but students and teachers ought not live in information cocoons.

The 19th century British philosopher John Stuart Mill put it well: "It is hardly possible to overrate the value ... of placing human beings in contact with persons dissimilar to themselves, and with modes of thought and action unlike those with which they are familiar. Such communication has always been, and is peculiarly in the present age, one of the primary sources of progress."

Reporters used to bury secrets. Why it's different now.

By Jon Healey

In September 1999, as the race to succeed President Bill Clinton was heating up and rumors were swirling about Republican candidate George W. Bush's past indulgences, the Los Angeles Times ran an op-ed that probably seemed quaint even in its day. The piece by a pair of Northwestern University law school academics, Steven Lubet and Steven A. Drizin, recounted how the Democratic Party nominee for president in 1952, Adlai Stevenson, defused a potentially explosive secret buried in his past by leveling with the reporter who dug it up.

The journalist, Time magazine's William Glasgow, discovered that a 12-year-old Stevenson had shot and killed a friend at a Christmas party — an event that had gone unreported since it had happened 40 years previously. An inquest had determined that the shooting was accidental; nevertheless, Glasgow confronted Stevenson about it as he was preparing a cover story on the candidate for the magazine.

Here's what happened, according to Lubet and Drizin: "There was never a doubt as to how the candidate would respond. His father and grandfather both had been elected to high office, and he would follow their examples of honesty and probity. 'You know,' he said to the reporter, 'you are the first person who has ever asked me about that. And this is the first time I have ever spoken of it to anyone.' Then he proceeded to explain all of the details in a quiet, matter-of-fact way."

This kind of candor is, shall we say, uncommon on the campaign trail these days, given the current crop of carefully coached, always-on-message pols. But what happened next seems even more impossible by today's standards.

Glasgow didn't write about the shooting.

This might strike you as horrifying. Even if you think the shooting reveals nothing about Stevenson, you may recoil from the idea of a journalist keeping secrets instead of revealing them and letting readers judge their worth. (Conservatives might also argue that it was just another example of the liberal media covering for a Democratic candidate. If so, it didn't help Stevenson — he lost overwhelmingly to Dwight Eisenhower in 1952, then lost to him again in 1956.)

In those days, there were fewer news outlets and there was less competition for scoops. So reporters could exercise more discretion not just about which stories to do first, but which ones to write at all. Glasgow considered the tragedy in Stevenson's childhood and evidently decided it was more sensational than illuminating. So he didn't cover it.

If Stevenson were a candidate today, a contemporary Glasgow would almost certainly feel compelled to report the incident. That's a function in part of the proliferation of news outlets and the competition they bring. As my editorial board colleague Carla Hall put it, "A reporter has to report something that dramatic almost defensively. If you don't print it, someone else will probably find it and print it." And if that happened, just imagine what Glasgow's editor would have said upon finding out that Glasgow had uncovered the skeleton in Stevenson's closet too, but had unilaterally decided not to run with it.

The pressure to report, and to report quickly, comes from readers as well as competitors. We at the Los Angeles Times took a heaping helping of grief for publishing — five days before a 2003 special election — six women's accusations that Republican gubernatorial candidate Arnold Schwarzenegger had groped them. The story came out so late in the campaign because it had spent a long time marinating in the editing process. But to many readers, it seemed like we'd sat on the story in order to spring it on Schwarzenegger at the end of the campaign and sink his candidacy. (He admitted to misbehaving on set, and won regardless.)

As a result, the incentives are lined up for journalists in favor of reporting whatever they find, biasing the system in favor of overdisclosing. Maybe that's a good thing in some respects, but to me it leads to too much unverified and irrelevant material being tossed into the public eye. Non-issues get elevated into issues; items of dubious veracity are presented with a disclaimer — hey, we can't tell you if this is true! — for the public to judge for itself. The best example of that would be the Steele dossier that BuzzFeed made public, something a number of more celebrated news organizations refused to do.

I kicked the Glasgow anecdote back and forth Monday with Carla, who was one of the reporters who broke the Gropinator story. The editorial board was grappling Monday with a laundry list of issues raised by Christine Blasey Ford's newly public accusation against President Trump's latest Supreme Court nominee, Brett Kavanaugh. Neither of us thinks for a moment that any reporter would have or should have treated Ford's allegations the way Glasgow handled Stevenson's childhood mishap.

But still, you have to wonder — both incidents raised questions about how to evaluate decades-old incidents and how much weight to put on the way a nominee defends himself. In 1952, a reporter might have felt he or she had enough authority and trust from readers to decide not to report allegations like Ford's without some concrete proof. He or she might have simply taken Kavanaugh at his word. Today? No way.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Rush to judgment

Your Sunday editorial ends with, "We live in a #MeToo world now. All of us are more accountable than before for how we treat one another. Good."

Allow me to add the words, "Not so fast." I agree with the general point of the editorial, but wish you had also mentioned the danger of jumping to conclusions too quickly, of failing to make distinctions, of giving in to hysteria. There are differences between misbehavior "years ago in high school or yesterday in the stairwell"; between people who have repeatedly harassed/assaulted and those who have committed (or may have committed) one stupid and ugly act; and indeed between harassment and assault.

Because so much can ride on how these cases are decided, I applaud the U.S. Department of Education's recent proposal to require a higher standard of proof than existed before in allegations of sexual abuse in colleges. I think it behooves us all to be as similarly careful and objective in judging all allegations of sexual abuse. In a recent Wall Street Journal column, Holman Jenkins urges us to ask the Duke lacrosse players about the dangers of a rush to judgment.

A higher standard

A shortstop is credibly accused of domestic violence and put on leave by Major League Baseball, pending a resolution of the matter.

A Supreme Court nominee is credibly accused of attempted rape and the Republicans in the Senate plan to plow ahead and confirm him, irrespective of whether there is a resolution of the matter.

The standards of the MLB are, it seems, higher than those employed by the "world's greatest deliberative body."

— Michael Gorman, Chicago

Cherry-picking

The Tribune's recent editorial "Who wins the Trump-Obama debate on jobs? Almost everyone." presents a set of data points without important context.

First, you conveniently choose just the latest quarterly GDP growth report to compare economic growth under President Donald Trump and Barack Obama. If you want to compare just the best quarters of each presidency then you should also mention that GDP growth also passed 4 percent on several occasions under Obama.

Second, and perhaps more important, you make no mention of the record levels of federal debt and consumer credit. Both pose a serious threat to long-term financial stability and must be included in any assessment of the economy.

While an editorial page is expected to provide a opinion on policy, as a news organization you should do a better job putting facts in perspective without cherry-picking data to bias the outcome.

Students and debt

I take issue with J.B. Pritzker's debate position that college-bound students from Illinois are heading for higher education out of state because higher education in Illinois is underfunded.

For starters, in the latest US News & World Report college rankings, the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign ranks 13th among public universities, trailing only Michigan among Big Ten schools. Underfunded?

Truth to tell, it is more likely that many college-bound students are leaving Illinois because of a sense, no doubt reflecting the views of their parents, that the prospect of better future opportunities lies elsewhere, and not in Illinois with its ever-growing debt ball and chain. As they say, you don't have to be a weatherman to know which way the wind blows.

— Neil Gaffney, Chicago

Dress code

In attempting to give the school dress code a makeover, Alameda, Calif., Portland, Ore., and Evanston public schools have liberalized acceptable attire to include midriff-baring shirts, tank tops with spaghetti straps, micro-mini skirts and short shorts, ripped jeans and hoodies. According to your Sept. 23 article, students in the above schools have freedom to wear anything as long as it includes a bottom, top, shoes and covers private parts. Why didn't they include bathing suits? They meet all of the above criteria!

To buy time, Sears urged to sell off assets

CEO's hedge fund says retailer must act fast to restructure debt, avoid harsh fates like liquidation

By Lauren Zumbach
Chicago Tribune

The hedge fund run by Sears CEO Edward Lampert issued its strongest warning to date that the retailer must "immediately" take steps to right itself, calling on the company to restructure debt and sell off assets.

Lampert's ESL Investments wants Hoffman Estates-based Sears Holdings Corp. to restructure more than $1 billion in debt and sell about $1.5 billion in real estate and about $1.75 billion in other assets, including the company's popular Kenmore appliance brand, according to a proposal made public Monday in a regulatory filing.

ESL offered to buy Kenmore and certain other divisions of the retailer's business in April. But the latest proposal is broader and pushes the company to act more quickly in the face of "significant near-term liquidity constraints," including a $134 million debt payment due next month.

In the proposal, ESL said it thinks its approach will be better for the company's stakeholders than "alternative options to address (Sears') liquidity challenges."

The hedge fund didn't specify what those alternatives entail. But Sears has additional debts coming due in 2019 and 2020 — in part because of earlier efforts to cover losses by pushing debts down the line. If the retailer can't address those payments, a bankruptcy filing would be one possible alternative, said Christina Boni, a vice president at Moody's Investors Service.

Lampert has said he thinks Sears' stakeholders will be better off if the company can pull off a turnaround while continuing to operate. Retailers that enter bankruptcy court intending to restructure and remain in operation — as Carson's parent Bon-Ton Stores did when it filed for Chapter 11 protection in February — can end up liquidating if they fail to find an investor or buyer to keep the business going.

Sears said Monday that it had received ESL's proposal and directed the company's management and advisers to work with the hedge fund. A board committee already negotiating with ESL on the proposal to buy Kenmore will review the proposed real estate deal, Sears said.

One of the most dominant retailers of the 20th century, Sears has lost more than $11 billion since 2011 and has struggled to win back shoppers. The company closed hundreds of Sears and Kmart stores and sold pieces of its business, including the Craftsman tools brand. The retailer closed its last Sears store in Chicago in July and has announced plans to close another 46 stores by November, including a Kmart in Steger and a Sears in Bloomington.

Sears also sold more than 200 stores in 2015 to real estate investment trust Seritage Growth Properties, in which Lampert holds a stake and serves as chairman of the board.

Avant hiring, forming new firm

By Ally Marotti
Chicago Tribune

Chicago-based online lender Avant is launching a new company to oversee the services it provides to banks and aiming to hire 50 tech employees in the next year to help grow the software offering.

Amount, as the company will be called, provides technology to banks, powering their lending activity, running online fraud prevention and helping with compliance, among other services.

"It's the bank's brand; it's the bank's credit policy; it's the bank's balance sheet. We help them with the technological know-how," said Avant CEO Al Goldstein. "Banks really recognize that they need to digitize their offering."

The company launched a partnership with its first bank about two years ago and is now live with four financial institutions, including Puerto Rico-based Banco Popular and Alabama-based Regions Bank. Goldstein said it will announce several new bank partnerships in the coming months.

Avant and Amount will be separate businesses under the Avant holding company, Goldstein said. The two businesses will share Avant's Loop headquarters. The company employs about 550 people, all but 100 of whom are in Chicago. It plans to bring on about 50 additional software engineers in the next year.

The 6-year-old company is one of a handful of Chicago companies that have achieved unicorn status, an industry term for a startup valued at $1 billion or more. Earlier this year, it launched a credit card to about 10,000 middle-class customers and is on track to grow that to 100,000 by year's end, Goldstein said.

A growing number of financial technology companies are working to sell their technology to banks, said Sarit Markovich, a clinical associate professor in the strategy department at Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management.

"It is the smaller banks that can benefit from this type of partnership," she said. Many larger banks have the resources to develop similar capabilities in-house.

No sign of accord in China trade war

Kimpton workers ratify deal, leaving strikes at 17 hotels

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz
Chicago Tribune

Employees of the Hotel Palomar and Hotel Allegro are off the picket lines and back at work after ratifying a contract over the weekend, leaving 17 downtown hotels where workers were still on strike.

The strike, now in its third week, at its peak involved 26 hotels where thousands of housekeepers, doormen, cooks and other hotel employees stopped working to demand year-round health insurance and other improvements to working conditions.

UNITE HERE Local 1, the union representing the striking workers, tweeted Saturday that employees of the Palomar and Allegro, both Kimpton brand hotels, had ratified a contract. It offered no details about the contract terms.

"We're pleased that we were able to reach an agreement with the union at both Hotel Allegro and Hotel Palomar," Kimpton Hotels and Restaurants said in a statement. "Our employees and guests remain our first priority and we will continue to provide the heartfelt service and care Kimpton is known for."

The strike started to move toward a resolution Thursday when Marriott International reached an agreement with workers at its six affected properties, raising hopes that other hotels would follow suit. There were no details offered about Marriott's contract terms. Workers at the boutique Hotel Blake also ratified a contract and ended their strike that day.

A list of hotels were the strike continues is at chicagohotelstrike.org.

Hyatt Hotels, whose affected hotels include the Hyatt Regency Chicago and the Hyatt Regency McCormick, is among the large hotel groups where contract agreements have yet to be reached. It completed a negotiation session with the union Friday and has another scheduled for Tuesday.

"We remain disappointed that UNITE HERE has chosen to strike while Hyatt remains at the negotiation table and negotiating in good faith," said Michael D'Angelo, Hyatt's vice president of labor relations for the Americas.

"Hyatt has not rejected any health care proposals from the union," he added. "On the contrary, we have discussed terms consistent with those agreed by others to extend employer-funded health care coverage for a scenario where a full-time colleague is involuntarily unscheduled to work during slower winter periods, while maintaining today's leading jointly administered health care plans."

UNITE HERE Local 1 called the strike Sept. 7, a week after the expiration of contracts covering 6,000 employees at 30 hotels, as new contract negotiations were underway with the employers. Each hotel group bargains with the union separately.

The union said it was fighting to ensure all employees receive year-round health insurance,

Move over, GMOs: Crop engineering is evolving

By Greg Trotter
Chicago Tribune

A new gene-editing technology known as CRISPR could soon be used to alter the crops producing the food we eat — making tomatoes sweeter, for example, or vegetables more resistant to disease.

It remains to be seen how consumers will feel about the technology given the backlash over genetically modified organisms, or GMOs, which are produced using a different kind of genetic engineering.

Larry Gilbertson, a longtime scientist with Monsanto, believes some of the controversy surrounding GMOs stemmed from the giant agriculture company's lack of direct engagement with the public. Monsanto — now known as Bayer Crop Science after Bayer bought Monsanto for $63 billion this year — plans to do better with products made with CRISPR technology, which are being developed and still "years away," he said.

"The coolest science in the world doesn't matter if the world isn't ready for it," said Gilbertson, applied genome modification lead for Bayer Crop Science.

GREG TROTTER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Larry Gilbertson says that the gene-editing technology known as CRISPR is "essentially another form of breeding."

Gilbertson was in Chicago last week to talk CRISPR — which stands for clustered regularly interspaced short palindromic repeats, a description of DNA sequences — at Datassential's Foodscape conference on emerging food trends. The following interview has been edited for length and clarity.

Q: What is CRISPR?

A: What CRISPR allows you to do is to choose any place, any position, any gene and make a very precise change in that gene. And changes in genes change attributes, characteristics, traits — in humans, in plants and so on.

In human health, all of the excitement is about trying to cure genetic diseases by pinpointing the genetic change and then using these tools to go in and actually correct them. And in plants, you can think of it as the same thing. Again, finding a specific gene that you'd like to change that will make a tomato sweeter, an ear of corn bigger, make a lettuce plant resistant to disease, anything like that. And then go in and make that specific change.

Q: How might Bayer utilize this technology?

A: I think of it as essentially another form of breeding. The types of changes that we're making in the genes are very much like the types of changes that already exist in crops that grow in fields. What this allows us to do is do it more directly. And rather than the breeding process, which takes time and a lot of effort, we want to use it for many of the same things that we've been breeding for all along – improving productivity of plants, improving plant health and ultimately working on consumer benefits as well.

Q. How is gene editing different from altering plants through breeding and biotechnology?

A. So in breeding, you're basically taking two plants that have different attributes, different traits, crossing them together and then looking among the progeny of that cross, the offspring of that cross. You're combining all of the genes of one parent, all of the genes of another parent — tens of thousands of genes — into progeny and sifting through that, finding the ones that have the traits you want and eliminating the ones you don't.

In GMOs, also called biotechnology, what we're doing is we're transferring one specific gene into the plant. You transfer one or a few specific genes into a plant and those genes are selected because they'll add a useful trait, like make the plant resistant to insects, make it be able to tolerate drought better.

No sign of accord in U.S.-China trade war

Forecasters say conflict could have effect through 2020

By Joe McDonald

AP

China raised tariffs Monday on U.S. goods, accusing the U.S. of bullying Beijing and damaging the global economy.

BEIJING — China and the United States imposed new tariff hikes on each other's goods Monday and Beijing accused Washington of bullying, giving no sign of compromise in an intensifying battle over technology that is weighing on global economic growth.

U.S. regulators went ahead with a planned 10 percent tax on a $200 billion list of 5,745 Chinese imports including bicycles and furniture. China's customs agency said it responded at noon by beginning to collect taxes of 5 or 10 percent on a $60 billion list of 5,207 American goods, from honey to industrial chemicals.

The conflict stems from President Donald Trump's complaints that Beijing steals or pressures foreign companies to hand over technology.

American officials say Chinese plans for state-led development of global competitors in robotics and other technologies violate its market-opening obligations and might erode U.S. industrial leadership.

China's leaders offered to narrow their politically sensitive, multibillion-dollar trade surplus with the United States by purchasing more natural gas and other American exports. But they have rejected pressure to change industry plans the communist leadership sees as a path to prosperity and global influence.

Monday's tariff hike follows a report by The Wall Street Journal that Chinese officials pulled out of a meeting to discuss possible talks proposed by Washington. The Chinese government had given no public indication whether it would accept the invitation.

Envoys last met Aug. 22 in Washington but reported no progress.

With no settlement in sight, forecasters say the conflict between the two biggest economies could trim global growth through 2020.

On Monday, the ratings agency Fitch cut its forecasts for next year's Chinese and global economic growth by 0.1 percentage point to 6.1 percent and 3.1 percent, respectively.

"The trade war is now a reality," said Fitch's chief economist, Brian Coulton, in a report. "The downside risks to our global growth forecasts have also increased."

Earlier, the two sides imposed 25 percent penalties on $34 billion of each other's goods in July and an additional $16 billion in August. Business groups say American companies also report Chinese regulators are starting to disrupt their operations through slower customs clearance and more environmental and other inspections.

The first American tariffs targeted goods Washington said benefit from improper Chinese industrial policies. American regulators tried to limit the public impact by focusing on industrial machinery and components, but the latest $200 billion list includes bicycles, wooden furniture and other consumer goods.

Chinese regulators have tried to cushion the blow on their own economy by targeting American goods such as soybeans, natural gas, fruit, whiskey and automobiles that are available from Europe, Latin America and other Asian countries.

Trump threatened last week to add $267 billion in Chinese imports to the target list if Beijing retaliated for the latest U.S. taxes. That would cover nearly everything China sells to the United States.

On Monday, the Chinese government accused the Trump administration in a report of "trade bullyism" and of preaching "economic hegemony." The toughly worded report said Beijing wants a "reasonable solution" but gave no indication of concessions.

It affirmed China's stance that it is a developing country, a claim that rankles Washington, Europe and other trading partners.

They point to China's status as a major manufacturer and a growing competitor in smartphones and other technology. They say Beijing is no longer entitled to concessions it was granted when it joined the World Trade Organization in 2001, such as the right to limit access to its finance, energy and other markets.

Take a peek, iPhone customers

Decent gadgets exist even if you can't afford latest

By Anick Jesdanun

MARCIO JOSE SANCHEZ/AP PHOTOS

The iPhone 8 Plus is a good option for customers who don't want to spend more than $1,000 for the iPhone XS (below).

NEW YORK — The $1,100 price tag on Apple's latest iPhone turned heads when the company announced it last week. But for less than half as much, you still can get a good camera, a decent-sized screen and other popular features.

Just buy a 2-year-old iPhone 7.

That phone was Apple's first to come with water resistance and its first to lose the standard headphone jack. Its 4.7-inch screen is adequate and on par with other smartphones, even though its resolution falls short of high definition. And the phone still has a fingerprint sensor and a home button, both of which have vanished in the latest iPhones.

Or, if you want to pay more for wireless charging, there is the iPhone 8. An edge-to-edge screen? You'll need the upcoming budget iPhone XR or one of its more expensive siblings. And if you want a supersized display, that is where the $1,100 iPhone XS Max comes in.

If you're shopping for a new phone, it pays to think about what you really want and what you're willing to pay. Improvements over the previous generation tend to be incremental but can add up over time — and so do the sums you will pay for them.

Here is what to consider if you're thinking of bargain-hunting in the iPhone history bin.

iPhone 7 ($449): The big jump in iPhone cameras came a generation earlier with the iPhone 6S, when Apple went from 8 megapixels to 12 megapixels in resolution. With the iPhone 7, the front camera goes from 5 megapixels to 7 megapixels, so selfies don't feel as inferior. Headphones go into its Lightning port, which is used for charging and data transfer. It's a pain when you want to listen to music while recharging the phone. For that, you need $159 wireless earphones called AirPods. Apple no longer includes an adapter for standard headphones; one will set you back $9 if you need it.

iPhone 7 Plus ($569): This larger version of the iPhone 7 has a second camera lens in the back, allowing for twice the magnification without any degradation in image quality. It also lets the camera gauge depth and blur backgrounds in portrait shots, something once limited to full-featured SLR cameras. The dual-lens camera alone is a good reason to go for a Plus, though the larger size isn't a good fit for those with small hands or small pockets.

iPhone 8 ($599): New color filters in the camera produce truer and richer colors, while a new flash technique tries to light the foreground and background more evenly. Differences are subtle, though. The year-old model, similar in size to the iPhone 7, restores a glass back found in the earliest iPhones. That is done so you can charge it on a wireless-charging mat, which also solves the problem of listening to music while charging. But with more glass, it's even more important to get a case and perhaps a service plan.

iPhone 8 Plus ($699): Again, the Plus version has a larger screen and a second lens. For those shots with blurred backgrounds, a new feature lets you add filters to mimic studio and other lighting conditions.

iPhone XS ($999): As with the iPhone X it replaces, the new XS has a display that largely runs from edge to edge, getting rid of the surrounding bezel along with the home button. Many tasks now require swipes rather than presses. The fingerprint ID sensor is replaced with facial recognition to unlock the phone. The display has about the same surface area as the iPhone 7 Plus and 8 Plus, while the phone itself is only slightly larger than the regular iPhone 7 and 8. Improved display technology means vivid colors and better contrasts, including black that is black rather than simply dark. You also get a dual-lens camera and software improvements for regular shots.

iPhone XS Max ($1,099): This is essentially the "Plus" version of the iPhone XS. The phone itself is about the size of the Plus but with more room for the display. This phone won't feel big for existing Plus users but think twice if you have small hands or small pockets.

Coming soon

Consider waiting a month for the iPhone XR. Its display lacks the vivid colors, contrast quality and resolution of the XS, but the price tag is nicer at $749. As with the XS models, you will get an edge-to-edge screen to minimize wasted space. There is more display than the regular XS, but the phone itself is also larger — just not as large as the Max. The XR won't have the dual-lens camera.

In short supply

Apple quietly discontinued the iPhone SE, which is essentially a 3-year-old iPhone 6S, packed in a body that is smaller but thicker than the iPhone 7 and 8. Though the trend in phones has been to go bigger, some people preferred the smaller size — and the $350 price tag. Apple no longer sells it, though you can get it from some wireless carriers and other retailers.

All in the memory

If you get an SE, 7 or 7 Plus, consider spending another $100 to quadruple the storage. Those phones come with a paltry 32 gigabytes.

SiriusXM presses play on deal with Pandora

SiriusXM plans to expand its subscription service beyond cars with a $3.5 billion deal to buy Pandora.

NEW YORK — Subscription radio company SiriusXM says it is buying music streaming service Pandora Media Inc. in a deal valued at about $3.5 billion that will allow it to expand its service beyond cars and into mobile devices and homes.

Pandora has faced intense pressure from competitors such as Spotify and Apple. Its last quarterly profit was in December 2014.

But a buyout by SiriusXM, which made a $480 million investment in Pandora in June 2017, may be the boost the business needs.

The ability to provide a subscription service that gives Pandora customers access to streaming music and satellite radio could help set it apart from its rivals and likely would draw new customers. And SiriusXM's relationships with automobile companies will open the door for Pandora to have better distribution in that market.

Meanwhile, the deal will help SiriusXM tap into Pandora's mobile strength while giving it the chance to improve in areas such as making personalized listening recommendations.

New York-based SiriusXM Holdings Inc. has more than 36 million subscribers in North America, while Pandora has more than 70 million monthly active users.

Maria Ripps of Canaccord Genuity noted that data from the Recording Industry Association of America indicate consumers are increasingly moving away from physical music purchases such as CDs, as well as from digital downloads, in favor of streaming. Streaming subscriptions are the fastest-growing segment of the music market, with paid subscription revenue up 37 percent in the year's first half, Ripps said in a research note.

Shares of Pandora rose nearly 3 percent Monday. SiriusXM's stock tumbled 7.5 percent.

Strikes remain at 17 downtown hotels

even during the slow months, usually in the winter, when some employees get temporarily laid off. Other issues at stake are workloads and wages for tipped employees.

The work stoppage — as well as the picketers' loud chanting and pot-clanging in front of some of the city's largest hotels — comes at a busy time for Chicago tourism. The city had a record 55.2 million visitors last year, according to the mayor's office, and hotel room revenue in the central business district was up 11 percent through August of this year compared with the same period last year, according to hotel data specialist STR.

Mayor Rahm Emanuel said in a statement after the Marriott agreement was reached last week that it was "a significant step forward for the union, the hotels and the city, and I am confident it can light a path forward to ending the labor action at other hotels in the city." He added: "The fact that workers and their families will now receive health care year-round will make an enormous difference in their lives."

The union has said the downtown hotel strike is the broadest the city has seen, though Chicago experienced a 10-day work stoppage at 25 hotels across the city in June 1903, according to news reports at the time.

Crowds of tourists are clogging the entrances into the old town of Dubrovnik in Croatia.

Mass tourism threatens 'Game of Thrones' town

By Dusan Stojanovic
Associated Press

DUBROVNIK, Croatia — Marc van Bloemen has lived in the old town of Dubrovnik, a Croatian citadel widely praised as the jewel of the Adriatic, for decades, since he was a child. He says it used to be a privilege.

Now it's a nightmare.

Crowds of tourists clog the entrances to the ancient walled city, a UNESCO World Heritage Site, as huge cruise ships unload thousands more daily. People bump into each other on the famous limestone-paved Stradun, the pedestrian street lined with medieval churches and palaces, as fans of the popular TV series "Game of Thrones" search for the locations where it was filmed.

Dubrovnik is a prime example of the effects of mass tourism, a global phenomenon in which the increase in people traveling means standout sites — particularly small ones — get overwhelmed by crowds.

As the numbers of visitors keeps rising, local authorities are looking for ways to keep the throngs from killing off the town's charm.

"It's beyond belief, it's like living in the middle of Disneyland," says van Bloemen from his house overlooking the bustling Old Harbor in the shadows of the stone city walls.

On a typical day there are about eight cruise ships visiting this town of 2,500 people, each dumping some 2,000 tourists into the streets. He recalls one day when 13 ships anchored here.

"We feel sorry for ourselves, but also for them (the tourists) because they can't feel the town anymore because they are knocking into other tourists," he said. "It's chaos, the whole thing is chaos."

The problem is hurting Dubrovnik's reputation. UNESCO warned last year that the city's world heritage title was at risk because of the surge in tourist numbers.

The popular Discoverer travel blog recently wrote that a visit to the historic town "is a highlight of any Croatian vacation, but the crowds that pack its narrow streets and passageways don't make for a quality visitor experience."

It said that the extra attention the city gets from being a filming location for "Game of Thrones" combines with the cruise ship arrivals to create "a problem of epic proportions."

It advises travelers to visit other quaint old towns nearby: "Instead of trying to be one of the lucky ones who gets a ticket to Dubrovnik's sites, try the delightful town of Ohrid in nearby Macedonia."

"We are aware of the crowds," said Romana Vlasic, the head of the town's tourist board.

Vlasic said that over 800,000 tourists visited Dubrovnik since the start of the year, a 6 percent increase from the same period last year.

The cruise ships pay the city harbor docking fees, but the local businesses get very little money from the visitors, who have all-inclusive packages on board the ship and spend very little on local restaurants or shops.

Sears CEO's hedge fund says it must act quickly

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The Sears store at the Six Corners intersection in Chicago was the last store within Chicago city limits to be closed.

Lampert, in a blog post on Sears' website this month after another disappointing quarterly earnings report, acknowledged the company's turnaround "has taken far longer than we expected."

Sears' credit rating is "about as low as you can have absent some sort of transaction involving restructuring," whether in bankruptcy court or an out-of-court deal, said Bob Schulz, managing director at S&P Global.

While Sears has made some progress on improving its retail business, it needs to make a lot more than it has, he said.

ESL said its proposal would reduce the company's debt due between now and 2020 by about $4.3 billion, if all proceeds from selling real estate and other assets were used to pay down debt. That would leave the company with $1.2 billion in outstanding debt, freeing up cash to invest in the retail business.

Lampert's stake in Sears' turnaround goes beyond his role as chairman, CEO and largest shareholder. In addition to his real estate interests through Seritage, he and affiliates of his hedge fund have lent the company more than $1.6 billion in the past 2½ years.

In August, ESL proposed buying Kenmore and a piece of Sears' home services division, valuing the businesses at $400 million and $70 million to $80 million, respectively. In Monday's proposal, the fund said it could work with other real estate lenders to ensure the company can sell off real estate assets. If those sales don't generate enough cash to pay off real estate debts, ESL and other lenders would form a consortium to buy the remaining properties and extinguish those debts.

Lampert's willingness to invest in the retailer makes it tougher to say just how much runway the company has left, Moody's Boni said.

"In a more traditional situation, liquidity would be even tighter, but there has been considerable external support," she said. "It's a unique situation."

Sears said any transaction would need the approval of its board and a subcommittee overseeing transactions with related parties.

Crop engineering is evolving

And in gene editing, we're not mixing thousands of genes, we're not adding one or two specific genes, we're making changes in the plant's existing DNA. And the changes tend to be small.

Q: Consumers who don't like GMOs might not like gene editing either. How is Bayer planning to address their concerns?

A: First, we want to be part of the conversation. Because we have gone through the experience with GMOs and there have been some lessons learned there. We're very proud of our GMO technology and we continue to support that. But we are engaging more with the public. We realize it's not just about the science. As a scientist, I wish I could just explain how it works and everyone would just be OK with it. But we know it's more than just understanding. Food is emotional and I understand that.

Q: It seems like a powerful technology with staggering potential. Is there any line that shouldn't be crossed when it comes to changing certain crops?

A: That's a question for the public at large. When we edit a tomato plant, it's still a tomato. When we edit a corn plant, it's still corn. I think most of us think that's what we'll be doing with editing — improving crops as they are, as opposed to creating something completely different.

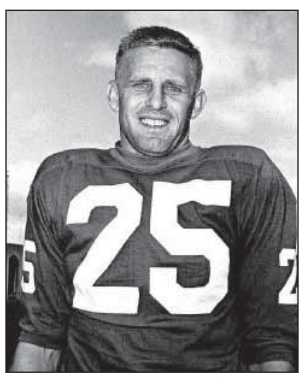
OBITUARIES

TOMMY MCDONALD 1934-2018

Speedy Hall of Fame receiver for the Eagles

Associated Press



PAUL VATHIS/AP 1962

Tommy McDonald was a Hall of Famer for the Philadelphia Eagles.

PHILADELPHIA — Tommy McDonald, the small, speedy and sure-handed receiver who teamed with quarterback Norm Van Brocklin to help the Philadelphia Eagles win the 1960 NFL championship, has died. He was 84.

His death was announced Monday by the Pro Football Hall of Fame. Details were not disclosed.

McDonald was a two-time All-American from Oklahoma who played 12 NFL seasons for five teams and was a six-time Pro Bowl selection. When he retired in 1968, he ranked second in league history in touchdown catches, fourth in yards receiving and sixth in receptions.

But the 5-foot-7, 175-pound McDonald had to wait 30 years before becoming the smallest player inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

"Oh, baby!" McDonald shouted in Canton, Ohio on Aug. 1, 1998. "Do I look excited, like I just won the lottery or the jackpot? Yes! I'm in the Hall of Fame!"

His induction speech was equal parts hysterics and histrionics. McDonald told jokes and tossed his 25-pound bronze bust in the air. He pulled out a radio and danced to disco music — all on the steps of the hallowed hall.

"Tommy McDonald lived life like he played the game of football. He was charismatic, passionate and had fun," Hall of Fame President and CEO David Baker said. "He was such a character. Heaven is a happier place today."

In seven seasons with Philadelphia, the durable McDonald had 287 receptions for 5,499 yards, with a per-catch average of 19.2 yards. He had 66 touchdowns in 88 games, and No. 25 went to the Pro Bowl five straight seasons (1959-63).

"Tommy McDonald played the game with a passion and energy that was second to none," said Eagles owner Jeffrey Lurie. "He will be remembered as one of the most exciting players ever to play his position, but what really separated him and made him so unique was the infectious personality and charisma that he brought to his everyday life. He had a genuine love for this team, for the Philadelphia community, for the fans, and, of course, his family. He was a man of character, both on and off the field, who exemplified all the qualities that we hope to represent as an organization.

"He was a champion, a Pro Football Hall of Famer, and one of the most genuine individuals I have ever met. On behalf of the Philadelphia Eagles, I would like to express our deepest condolences to the entire McDonald family."

He was traded to Dallas in 1964 and dealt the next season to the Los Angeles Rams. Determined to show he could still be a force in the league, McDonald had a solid season with a career-best 67 receptions for 1,036 yards and nine TDs and earned another trip to the Pro Bowl.

A running back at Oklahoma under Bud Wilkinson, McDonald was an All-American in 1955 and 1956. He never experienced a loss with the Sooners, winning 31 straight games, part of Oklahoma's 47-game run.

In 1956, McDonald finished third in the Heisman Trophy voting behind Paul Hornung of Notre Dame and Johnny Majors of Tennessee.

Amid rumblings he was too small to play in the NFL, the Eagles drafted McDonald in the third round in 1957.

He was used primarily on punts and kick returns early his rookie season, before being inserted as a flanker against the Washington Redskins midway through the year. McDonald scored two touchdowns, including a 61-yarder that late NFL commissioner Bert Bell reportedly called "one of the greatest catches I have ever seen in pro football."

McDonald and Van Brocklin proved a formidable pair for the Eagles. They combined for one of the most memorable touchdowns in franchise history, a 35-yard reception on a frigid afternoon that helped the Eagles to a 17-13 win over Vince Lombardi's Green Bay Packers in the 1960 NFL title game at Franklin Field. It was the team's third championship and the only championship game a Lombardi-coached team lost.

"You can't go any higher," McDonald said in 2005 as the Eagles prepped for a Super Bowl appearance. "We were at the top of the hill looking down yelling, Hello! Nobody expected us to be here.'"

The next season, McDonald set a franchise record with seven catches for 237 yards receiving in a game against the Giants and went on to finish with 64 receptions for a league-leading 1,144 yards and 13 touchdowns.

Born in New Mexico, McDonald's family moved from the small town of Roy to Albuquerque before his sophomore year in high school. He developed into a three-sport athlete in football, basketball and track

Cadigan, William Joseph '"Bill"'

William Joseph "Bill" Cadigan, aged 91, formerly of Arlington Heights, died September 22 at his home at the Resurrection Retirement Center surrounded by his family. A man rooted in his Roman Catholic faith, he is remembered for his good humor, big-heartedness, and devotion to family. Born on the South Side of Chicago to Irish immigrant parents, Bill grew up in St. Rita's Parish. He had to miss his high school graduation and the valedictory address he would have given when he joined the Navy in the closing months of World War II, serving as an aviation radio technician. With the encouragement of his Navy friends and the support of the GI bill, he received his degree in civil engineering from Illinois Institute of Technology. As a civil engineer at Consoer Townsend, and Associates, he designed and oversaw the construction of infrastructure projects in the Middle East, the planned city of Columbia, MD, levees on the Mississippi and numerous suburban communities around the Chicago area. A beloved and respected boss, he was named the Chicago Civil Engineer of the Year in 1990 and was president of the Illinois chapter of the American Society of Civil Engineers. Deeply proud of his Irish heritage, he served as the Cadigan family historian, maintaining the family tree and building connections between relatives on both sides of the Atlantic. He founded the Irish American Engineering Society which still provides scholarships to students in the Chicago area each year. He was preceded in death in 2014 by his wife, Mary, whom he adored. He was a steadfast and loving caregiver to her for years as she battled Alzheimer's. A loving father, he is survived by his six children, Mary Clare, Catharine, Anne, Sheila, Bill, and Eileen. As a father, he served as a role model for hard work and always approached difficulty with a sense of humor. He raised his family in Arlington Heights, a city he helped to design in the 1950's and 60's and was an active member of St. James parish. Known for his booming laugh and joyful zest for life, his happiest role was as a grandfather to his nine grandchildren (Michaela, Dante, Liam, Isla, Terra, Joe, Cecilia, Nadia, Billy), by whom he is beloved and remembered as a purveyor of fun, a great story teller, and a role model. He frequently traveled to visit them, getting to know the smallest details of each of their lives, and sent each grandchild a meticulously handmade personal valentine every year. In addition to his six children, sons-in-law Mike and Pat, daughter-in-law Beth, nine grandchildren, and many nieces, nephews and cousins, he is survived by his sister Rita Koutnik. A video commemorating his life can be found here: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Rx_k8LSpztA. Visitation will be held from 3:00 to 9:00 pm Tuesday, September 25, 2018, at Glueckert Funeral Home, Ltd., 1520 N. Arlington Heights Rd., Arlington Heights. The funeral will begin at the funeral home on Wednesday with prayers at 8:45 am proceeding to Our Lady of the Wayside Church, 440 S. Mitchell St., Arlington Heights, IL 60005 for Funeral Mass at 9:30 AM. Committal service 12:15 pm, graveside at Holy Sepulchre Cemetery, 6001 W. 111th St, Alsip, Ill. Meyer, Raymond Joseph Raymond Joseph Meyer, Sr. was born on March 19, 1925 in Kankakee, IL to parents Raymond and Anne Meyer. After earning a Bachelor of Science degree from Loyola University, Ray married Joan Blakeslee on April 11, 1953. Over the next several years, Joan taught art in 5 different parochial schools to help put Ray through Dental School. He served as a dentist in the United States Air Force before establishing a dental office in South Bend, IN where he practiced for 43 years. In retirement, Ray and Joan moved to Naperville, IL to be near family.

Ray Meyer was a kind, generous, and grateful man, whose curiosity spurred him to talk to everyone he met. He talked and read about history, politics, people of other cultures, and anything else his companions were interested in. Ray's early experiences of working on the family farm shaped his lifelong love of gardening and the weather. For 93 1/2 years, this warm, happy man entertained family, friends, and patients with stories enlivened by the vibrance of a joyous life.

Ray departed this world on September 20, 2018 surrounded by his family. He is survived by his loving wife of 65 years, Joan; sons Michael, Mark, Joe, and John; daughters-in-law Lori, Jill, Sonja, and Sandy; and grandchildren Katrina, Dylan, Sara, Annalise, Annie, and Katie. The Meyer family would like to thank friend and caregiver, Sanaa, for her love and devotion to Ray over the past 5 years; and Dr. Aaron Lazar for his incredible care and concern for Ray over the past 20 years. In lieu of flowers, the family suggests donations to the Interfaith Committee for Detained Immigrants or The Morton Arboretum.

Hoiberg at a crossroads?

Critical season for coach opens amid a united front with management

K.C. Johnson
On the Bulls

The criteria for how Bulls management judges coach Fred Hoiberg have changed as much as the rosters it has given him.

Hoiberg replaced Tom Thibodeau in 2015-16, tabbed as the player-friendly and offensively creative missing piece to keep the Bulls in championship contention despite inheriting a roster set to implode with chemistry issues.

A last gasp at relevancy in 2016-17 saddled Hoiberg's preferred pace-and-space system with Dwyane Wade and Rajon Rondo, albeit on short-term deals.

Last season brought a full rebuild after the Jimmy Butler trade, and management judged Hoiberg on player development and the team's competitive spirit rather than wins and losses.

Now what? Hoiberg is entering the fourth season of a five-year deal. And no team wants a coach in a lame-duck situation.

So this season will be critical for Hoiberg to prove he's worthy of an extension. How will he be judged?

"You're not going to hear (general manager) Gar (Forman) and I talk about wins or anything like that," executive vice president John Paxson said. "But the expectations for us are to see this team come together."

Whether or not this matters at crunch time next summer, Paxson spoke these words sitting at a

Nagy mindful of total group concept as gritty defense trumps offense

By Rich Campbell
Chicago Tribune

Hip-hop music filled the Bears locker room Sunday while their flashing disco ball brought the victory dance party to life. Players whooped it up and bounced together, reveling in their 16-14 comeback victory over the Cardinals.

In the middle of the group were Tarik Cohen, Cody Whitehair and, yes, Mitch Trubisky. They bobbed, smiled and savored the outcome with their teammates.

It turns out offensive players were allowed to celebrate too.

So what if they had more turnovers than touchdowns? So what if their red-zone struggles meant the defense needed four second-half takeaways for the Bears to beat one of the NFL's worst teams by only two points?

The final score was paramount for Matt Nagy. As the first-year coach reiterates his calls for patience in evaluating Trubisky's growth, one thing he's not concerned about is the dynamic between a fledgling offense and a

Larkin has to give up on football

RB 'feels blessed' despite perilous neck condition

By Teddy Greenstein
Chicago Tribune

During a team meeting Monday, tailback Jeremy Larkin dropped a bombshell on his Northwestern teammates: He has to retire from football immediately because of cervical stenosis, a narrowing of the spinal canal in the neck area.

This leaves Northwestern without its top skill-position player but leaves the world with a healthy Larkin — and that's all that matters to the Wildcats.

Linebacker Paddy Fisher is tight with Larkin and knew the redshirt sophomore had experienced numbness and tingling into his arms.

"We were watching football over the weekend," Fisher said, "and he was asking us, 'Should I play?' I was like: 'No. C'mon, Lark. You don't even have doctors clearing you. I know you want to play, but I want to be able to spend time and have memories with you down the road. It's just not worth it.' "

Sounds familiar

Facing a division rival in playoffs can be a blessing or curse

Paul Sullivan
On the Cubs

While the Cubs were playing the Pirates on Monday night at Wrigley Field, the Brewers and Cardinals faced off in St. Louis in what looks like a precursor to the Oct. 2 National League wild-card game.

A lot can change in the final days of the season, but unless the Rockies make a late run, chances are good the Cubs will open the playoffs at home against one of the two current wild-card teams, both of which they know well.

Would that familiarity make things easier for the Cubs or could it increase the degree of difficulty come October?

"That's the thing about the unbalanced schedule, you see each other so often during the regular season," manager Joe Maddon said before Monday's 5-1 loss to the Pirates. "Back with the Rays (in 2008), we had to beat the Red Sox the 26th time we saw them that year to advance to the World Series. Twenty-six times!"

Actually it was 25 times, but who's counting? Maddon's point was there nothing they didn't know about each other by Game 7 of the American League Championship Series.

His '08 Rays went 10-8 against the Red Sox in the regular season before beating them in seven games in the ALCS. Familiarity breeds contempt, as the saying goes, and there was

Sox in '19 will be a tough sell

Heading into their final three home games against the Indians, the White Sox ranked 24th in the majors with an average attendance of 20,103 per game.

Thanks to a pair of weekend sellouts against the Cubs, their first two of the season, they'll finish in the same vicinity as 2017, when the Sox ranked 27th at 20,626 per game.

That's only about 500 fewer fans per game, which is amazing when you think about it.

The Sox were coming off a 95-loss season in '17 and didn't spend any money in the offseason, with the exception of a two-year, $15 million deal for free-agent catcher Welington Castillo.

General manager Rick Hahn avoided the usual spring training narrative that anything could happen in 2018, admitting Year 2 of the rebuild would be "very challenging" and the Sox were unlikely to contend.

The focus was on the prospects, particularly Michael Kopech, Eloy Jimenez, Luis Robert and Dylan Cease, all of whom were on full display in camp and during Cactus League games in March. Kopech and Jimenez, in fact, got as much attention as any of the players slated to make the team, though neither had a shot at making the opening-day roster.

NBC Sports Chicago, which is partly owned by Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf, added more minor-league games to its schedule to showcase the future stars, and Hahn relayed a humorous story of downloading the MiLB app onto Reinsdorf's computer so he could see the progress for himself.

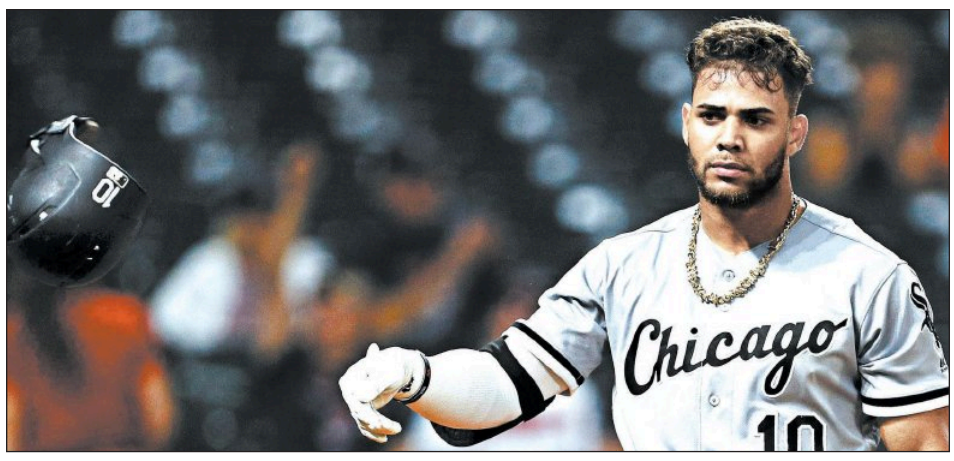
The message was clear: The future was at Triple-A Charlotte, Double-A Birmingham and Class A Winston-Salem and Kannapolis.

Knowledgeable Sox fans knew there wouldn't be much to see at Guaranteed Rate Field, yet the same ones came out anyway. This hard-core base will likely be there again next summer, no matter what happens this winter.

Otherwise, selling 2019 isn't going to be easy.

Before his final broadcast Sunday, Ken "Hawk" Harrelson said he told his replacement, Jason Benetti, that in two years the Sox are going to be a "monster." But they clearly aren't at monster stage yet.

The challenge for the Sox is to grow that base, knowing 2019 figures to be another difficult season, especially now that Kopech is out after Tommy John elbow surgery and that Yoan Moncada has struggled through his first full season.



DAVID MAXWELL/GETTY

Second baseman Yoan Moncada leads the majors with 210 strikeouts entering Monday.

Jimenez and Cease should be up at some point, but Robert had mixed results in an injury-plagued start at two Class A stops, with no home runs and a .256 average in 45 games at Kannapolis and Winston-Salem. He's obviously a ways from joining the Sox.

Assuming they can't market the 100th anniversary of the Black Sox scandal in 2019, how do they grow their base next year?

I asked Sox postgame analyst Bill Melton for the bright side of the 2018 season, and he gave a typically blunt response.

"I'm not going to talk about numbers, but the growth, starting from the beginning of the season, in (Reynaldo) Lopez and (Lucas) Giolito was very important," Melton said. "We've got some young guys like Dylan Cease, a great find, who was a player of the year.

"I think the four (returning starting pitchers) are really good, but I'd like to see them work on that bullpen in the offseason. Go ahead and use a few of the guys we brought up. It would nice to add a veteran fifth starter if (James) Shields leaves, a guy 28 or 29, and solidify that starting staff, and then the rest of the stuff will kind of fall into place."

Melton wasn't going to pretend "next year" will be the one the Sox start to contend, saying we won't know anything until we see if they make any offseason moves.

He compared the Sox to the Braves, who lost 95, 93 and 90 games in the first three years of their rebuild before winning the National League East this season.

"I'm not saying we have the same type of players, but it took them a few years to get to a certain point, and then you can go out on the free-agent market and start picking guys up," he said. "I think by 2020 they'll be very competitive."

Kopech will have missed a valuable year of development by the time he returns in 2020, but Cease hopefully will have established himself by then, and Lopez could turn into an elite starter.

Still, if the Sox rebuild is going to be a success, Moncada has to turn a corner next year. He was hitting .232 with a major-league-high 210 strikeouts going into the final week. That can't be repeated.

Melton pointed to Mike Trout's difficult start in the majors, though Moncada is far from where Trout was in his first full season.

"I run into a lot of fans, and they're pretty honest," Melton said. "They say: 'The Sox suck. But you know what? We're kind of liking what's going on.'

"They're starting to buy in. I think they're behind every player out there, knowing there are going to be some moves, and they've accepted (the losing)."

Patience persists among the hard-core Sox fans, but it will take winning to add more fans to that base.

It's a long way to 2020.

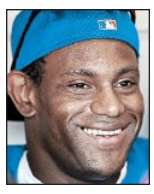
Sosa documentary to debut Monday



NBC Sports Chicago revisits the Mark McGwire-Sammy Sosa home-run chase of 20 years ago with a documentary, "1998: Summer of Sammy," set to debut at 7 p.m. Monday on the cable channel and its digital platforms.

Revelations about the use of performance-enhancing drugs in baseball have cast a shadow on the race between the Cardinals' McGwire and Cubs' Sosa to surpass Roger Maris' single-season mark of 61 home runs. But excitement over the power surge helped bring back fans alienated by baseball's labor standoff a few years earlier.

"Mark and I came in and put a show together, and a lot more people started coming to the ballpark," Sosa told David Kaplan in an interview from earlier this year that's excerpted in the program.

"There's no doubt about it, baseball needed a shot in the arm after the '94 strike ... '98 absolutely breathed life back into the game," said Steve Stone, who was a Cubs TV analyst at the time. "That chase rejuvenated baseball. It brought back life to the game. In that respect, it was the best thing that happened to baseball to that point. Baseball is still reaping the benefits to a certain extent because of '98."

Others interviewed in "Summer of Sammy" include former MLB Commissioner Bud Selig ("This is a very sensitive subject") and veteran baseball writer Peter Gammons ("Sammy should be celebrated, not just shamed"), as well as McGwire, former Cubs announcer Chip Caray and Sosa teammate Kerry Wood.

Sosa and McGwire "saved baseball," Wood said. "They single-handedly brought the fans back to the game."

The introduction of "Summer of Sammy" is scheduled just 2½ weeks after NBCSCH first presented "Hawk," a loving celebration of White Sox announcer Ken "Hawk" Harrelson.

"Sammy Sosa's historic quest to rewrite the home-run record book captivated an entire nation in 1998," Kevin Cross, NBC Sports Chicago's vice president of content, said in a statement.

PIRATES 5, CUBS 1

no love lost between the AL East rivals.

The 2015 Cubs had the same daunting task, facing the Pirates in the NL wild-card game after going 11-8 against them in the regular season. The Cubs won the wild-card game at PNC Park behind a dominant Jake Arrieta, and things got chippy when Arrieta was hit by a pitch in the seventh, inciting a brawl in which Cubs catcher David Ross admitted he "accidentally" choked Sean Rodriguez.

The NL Division Series featured a Cubs-Cardinals rematch, and after losing 11 of 19 meetings during the season, the Cubs upset the division champs 3-1 to advance to the NLCS.

But now the Cubs are the big dogs, closing in on their third straight division title, and either the Brewers or Cardinals could be the scrappy underdog trying to put them in a chokehold in the NLDS. Both still have a shot at winning the division, though time is running out.

"We haven't been in the playoffs in a little while," Brewers manager Craig Counsell said. "We want to get in, and the division (title) is still the No. 1 goal. Ultimately because the Cubs have done so well the last three years and been such a good team, you feel like you're going to have to beat them. I think that's how it feels to everybody.

"We're trying to beat them in the regular season. But if you don't, you're going to try to beat them in the playoffs."

Counsell doesn't worry about what happened in the regular season if the two teams meet, knowing anything can happen in the postseason.

"Any playoff series against a division opponent, it's a little different because there is so much familiarity, down to just the individual hitter-pitcher matchups, and defensively what the other team is going to do, and stuff like that," he said. "So there probably are fewer surprises and I would expect more of what we've seen in the season series."

There's no shying away from the fact Counsell knows all of Maddon's moves, and Maddon knows what Counsell is going to do.

"Yeah, when you're doing it 18 or 20 times a year..." Counsell said. "I know Joe, not well, just from competing against each other. Joe is very good at what he does. And he's got really good players."

It's different for Maddon and Cardinals manager Mike Shildt because Shildt took over the day before the All-Star break. But Maddon knows the Cardinals personnel, and vice-versa.

The Cubs and Cardinals meet in the final three games of the regular season this weekend at Wrigley, meaning the Cubs could have a big say in whether the Cardinals even get in. Considering the rivalry between these franchises, you would think the Cardinals are the last team the Cubs want to see, and eliminating them at Wrigley certainly would please most Cubs fans.

On the other hand, Maddon may want to rest some key players for October's madness, so he may not play the A-team if they've clinched by then.

No matter which team the Cubs wind up playing, Maddon said he would be in favor of returning to the balanced schedule in which you play every team in your league the same number of games rather than seeing your division rivals 18-20 times a year.

"I've always been a fan of that concept," he said. "You do see each other too often. Who has the advantage (in the postseason)? I don't know. Whoever pitches better that night has the advantage.

"It's hard to do something different or new because both sides know each other pretty well. I totally agree with that. I've worried about that in the past, but I've learned not to because if you trust your players and put everyone out there and you're in good health, you have as good a shot as they do.

"It's tough, but it's just a mental exercise you have to get beyond and understand it's the same for both sides."

Empty feeling

Taillon shuts down Cubs except for a homer by Hamels

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

No celebrations are planned in the likely event the Cubs clinch a National League playoff berth, according to manager Joe Maddon.

"We always celebrate achievement, but I have not been part of a planning committee," Maddon said Monday night.

Besides, more urgent matters are at hand as the Cubs try to win their third consecutive NL Central title and avoid the stress of playing a winner-take-all wild-card game game for the right to advance to the NL Division Series.

The Cubs' mercurial offense was bested by Jameson Taillon in a 5-1 loss to the Pirates. The Cubs missed a chance to reduce their magic number to clinch the NL Central division title from five, and the Brewers beat the Cardinals 6-4 in a rain-delayed game in St. Louis to cut the Cubs' lead to 1½ games.

It marked Taillon's 21st consecutive start allowing three or fewer earned runs, the longest such streak by a Pirates pitcher since Bob Friend's 23 in a row in 1963.

"Sometimes you run into the wrong guy," said Maddon, aware that the Pirates have Chris Archer, Ivan Nova and Trevor Williams lined up for the final three games of the series.

"They got a nice rotation that has given us a hard time. We have to somehow overcome that. They are good, but we got to do better."

Even the return of Kris Bryant didn't help as the Cubs search for ways to generate more offense. Their lone run came on a home run by starting pitcher Cole Hamels in the third.

"It goes better when you win," said Hamels, whose other major-league home run came for the Phillies on July 21, 2012, against Matt Cain of the Giants. "You really have to give it to Taillon. He came after us and threw well."

Bryant went 1-for-3 with a walk and single after missing Sunday's game to rest his tired left shoulder.

The Cubs boast an NL-best .259 team batting average but rank 11th with 163 home runs.

That low total, compared with the 223 they hit in 2017, has been due in part to Bryant's shoulder injury that caused him to miss two months of the season in two stints on the disabled list.

The lack of power has caused Maddon to call more hit-and-run plays than he has in his three previous seasons combined.

The Cubs left the bases loaded in the fifth, and that haunted them when a throwing error by Bryant at third base set up a two-out RBI double by Jose Osuna that increased the Pirates' lead to 3-1. A promising rally in the sixth dissolved after Kyle Schwarber grounded into a double play and Jason Heyward took a called third strike.

Hamels accepted his share of the blame for his recent penchant for surrendering home runs. Francisco Cervelli smacked a two-run home run inside the left-field foul pole and onto Waveland Avenue in the first.

The home run was the sixth allowed by Hamels in his last four starts. He had not surrendered a homer in his first seven starts with the Cubs after he was acquired in a July 27 trade with the Rangers.

"Giving up home runs sucks," said Hamels, who has allowed a career-high 29 homers this season with the Rangers and Cubs. "I can't shy away from it. I do give them up in my career. I try to minimize the damage to solos.

"But when you give them up in the first inning at home, it doesn't set the momentum and creates that sort of extra game you have to play because now you're trying to come from behind."

CUBS NOTES

Hendricks coming on strong again

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

The conventional wisdom is that veteran left-handers Jon Lester and Cole Hamels would start the first two games of the playoffs if the Cubs clinch the National League Central title.

But Kyle Hendricks is making a strong case to be considered, based on his last two starts and his trend of getting stronger as the season has advanced.

Hendricks has pitched 16⅓ innings in his last two starts and has logged a career-high 191 innings. In his first 16 starts of the season he had a 4.21 ERA; in his last 16 starts it was 2.82.

"You're concerned about wearing somebody out, but the look with him now is that he's not," manager Joe Maddon said Monday. "He's peaking. Maybe the early struggles are helping him later."

Hendricks has defeated Clayton Kershaw and Stephen Strasburg in playoff games, showing that he is not fazed by big-game assignments.

Reliever Brandon Kintzler knows the effort that goes into pitching 200 innings, as he watched former Nationals teammate Max Scherzer reach that mark last season.

"It's tough these days to go against the analytics to get people to believe they should stay out there," Kintzler said. "Those guys are doing something really good throughout the whole season to have that trust."

Hendricks' endurance has caught Kintzler's attention.

"Especially in September when you have so many bullpen arms," Kintzler said. "We faced him the playoffs, and it seemed like he was hot going in. Maybe that's this thing. He gets in a groove toward the end where most guys are getting tired. He's really smart at what he's doing, and he believes what he's doing."

Healthy and hitting: Ben Zobrist's healthy left wrist has allowed him to become of the top hitters in the National League.

At the same time, Zobrist's reflexes have prevented opposing pitchers to pound him with inside fastballs. The switch-hitting 37-year-old entered Monday's game with a .314 batting average, third in the National League.

"The bat is still quick," Maddon said before the game. "He doesn't have to cheat to get to a fastball. That's kind of nice.

"A lot of times when a guy gets to be that age, he has to cheat to get to velocity, but he does not. That's why you're seeing those results."

In other health news, reliever Pedro Strop remains a longshot to pitch before the end of the regular season.

Strop suffered a left hamstring strain on Sept. 13 and has yet to throw off a mound.

"I don't want to discount anything," Maddon said. "The biggest thing is he's been able to throw almost at 100 percent."

Covey's scoreless streak hits 12 innings

By Phil Thompson
Chicago Tribune

White Sox manager Rick Renteria says Dylan Covey can't do anything to cement a role in the 2019 starting rotation, but Monday night's effort in a 4-0 loss to the AL Central champion Indians certainly doesn't hurt his cause.

Covey shut out the Indians for six innings and the Indians scored all their runs off the bullpen.

Covey gave up six hits and a walk but struck out seven and got some help from his defense. It was his second straight strong start and extended his scoreless streak to 12 innings.

Covey called it a big confidence booster.

"I had a pretty good start last time against them," he said. "I don't think my stuff was the same today, but I was just able to mix it up. Adding a cutter in there kind of gets them off my fastball a little bit. Had to battle it out there in the sixth inning but felt pretty good."

The right-hander looked comfortable and effectively mixed in his cutter and other pitches as the game wore on. And he didn't panic when he allowed two singles to lead off the fourth, striking out Yan Gomes and getting Brandon Guyer to ground into an inning-ending double play. Nor did he waver in the sixth when the Indians fought off a few potential third strikes, including during Edwin Encarnacion's 10-pitch at bat.

Covey's turn as a Sox starter was thought to be over after a July-August stretch when he lost five straight starts while posting an 8.37 ERA. He was sent to the bullpen, where he had a 2.25 ERA in six appearances.

Michael Kopech's elbow injury opened the door for Covey's return to the rotation. He allowed five earned runs in a loss to the Royals on Sept. 11, but rebounded with six shutout innings against the Indians last Wednesday before repeating himself Monday night.

If Covey starts the season finale against the Twins as planned on Sunday, he'll have made four starts to close out the schedule.

"He certainly put himself into a position to be considered for (the 2019 rotation)," Renteria said. "His last few outings show he's got good enough stuff to do that."

Covey knows the stakes.

"Obviously these last couple starts felt really good. I feel good," he said. "Got one more start to try to finish off the year strong and we'll see what happens."

Top pick visits: Nick Madrigal believes the most important takeaway from his first exposure to professional baseball has been about learning a routine.

"Not only on the field but off-the-field routines, the way you get into the mental side of the game," the Sox prospect said Monday afternoon at Guaranteed Rate Field when he met some of his future teammates.

His summer, though, has been anything but routine.

This June's fourth overall draft pick learned he was headed to the Sox about five minutes before they selected him. About three weeks later, his Oregon State Beavers won the College World Series.

Since then he has bounced between the Arizona Rookie League, Low-A Kannapolis and High-A Winston Salem. He hit .303 with a .701 OPS in 155 at-bats across the three levels.

Rays' loss the clincher for Athletics

Associated Press

SEATTLE — The Athletics clinched their first playoff berth in four years Monday night, earning at least an American League wild card when the Rays lost to the Yankees 4-1.

Following three straight last-place finishes in the AL West, the A's found out just a couple of minutes after the first pitch of their game against the Mariners that they are in the postseason for the first time since 2014.

The Rays' loss eliminated them from playoff contention. The A's still have an outside shot at overtaking the Astros for the division title, but it is more likely they are headed toward a wild-card matchup with the Yankees.

Few people imagined the A's could make the playoffs this season as a young team with few proven stars that finished 75-87 a year ago. They won only 68 games in 2015 and 69 in 2016.

The A's have the third-lowest payroll among the 30 major-league clubs at $78 million for their 40-man roster, ahead of only the White Sox and Rays.

They were 34-36 and 11 games behind the Mariners in the wild-card race on June 15. The A's went 60-26 after that.

"We've had some younger players mature and become, for me, stars," manager Bob Melvin said Monday. "I think the two guys on the corners (third baseman Matt Chapman and first baseman Matt Olson) should win Gold Gloves.

"Our defense is night-and-day to what it was and it's gotten better as the year's gone along. We've gone from being one of the worst defenses in the league to now one of the best. We don't just rely on one facet. We seem to be able to win in different ways."

The Athletics are making their fourth playoff appearance in the last seven seasons and their 27th all-time.

AROUND THE HORN

■ Giants: Bobby Evans was fired as general manager and will be reassigned, with responsibilities to be determined. The Giants began the final week of the season 72-84, their second straight losing record. Evans was hired by the Giants in 1994, became vice president of baseball operations in 2009 under general manager Brian Sabean and was promoted to GM in April 2015 when Sabean became executive vice president of baseball operations.

■ Red Sox: The Red Sox broke a 106-year-old franchise record with their 106th victory, clinching home-field advantage through the postseason by beating the Orioles 6-2. Nathan Eovaldi struck out 10 Orioles to assure the Red Sox of the best record in baseball this season. The 1912 Red Sox won 105 games in their first season at Fenway Park. The Orioles (45-111) became the sixth AL team and the first since the 2003 Tigers to lose 111 games, falling 60½ games behind the Red Sox in the division.

■ Astros: Brian McCann and Josh Reddick hit back-to-back home runs, and the Astros beat the Blue Jays 5-3 to move one step closer to their second straight AL West title. The defending World Series champions began the day with a magic number of three over the Athletics to clinch the division.

■ Indians: Corey Kluber struck out 11 in seven scoreless innings and won his 20th game as the Indians shut out the White Sox 4-0. Kluber (20-7), the reigning AL Cy Young winner, reached 20 victories for the first time after recording 19 wins last season and 18 victories the two previous seasons and in 2004.

■ Yankees: Aaron Hicks injured his left hamstring running up the first-base line in a 4-1 win over the Rays, another concern heading into next week's AL wild-card game. Hicks appeared to get hurt in the third inning while running to first base on a grounder to shortstop, successfully beating a relay throw and avoiding a double play.

BULLS

BRIAN CASSELLA /CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Veteran guard Zach LaVine said he doesn't feel any added pressure to perform after getting a four-year, $78 million contract from the Bulls.

Priority No. 1: Wins

LaVine focused on game, not on living up to his contract

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

To some, there are 78 million reasons Zach LaVine needs to prove he can be a go-to player on a winning team.

That's how much money LaVine stands to make from the Bulls over the next four seasons after they matched his offer sheet from the Kings, who aggressively targeted the restricted free agent in July.

But LaVine, 23 and fully recovered from his ACL tear, doesn't see it that way.

"I don't have to validate anything," the ultraconfident guard said. "I feel I've earned everything I've gotten. ... Added pressure? Man, I'm the hardest critic out of everybody on my own side. I'm just excited because I know I've had a really good summer. I know how good we can be."

In the summer of 2017, LaVine spent more time rehabilitating his left knee than working on his game. For someone who prides himself on adding at least one wrinkle to his offensive arsenal each offseason, that summer proved trying.

This summer, LaVine routinely posted videos of his workouts on social media. He talks confidently about his role on a team with myriad offensive options, including Lauri Markkanen, Jabari Parker and Kris Dunn.

"Be a leader of the team, lead by example, show the hard work and be one of the go-to guys," LaVine said of his goals. "Last year, I was about 60 to 70 percent. Now I think I'm back to 100. ... I feel a lot lighter, athletic, still strong."

LaVine, who said he's about 200 pounds after playing last season near 212, isn't delusional. As confident as he is, as much as he exudes enthusiasm, he's realistic about what he has accomplished in his first four seasons and expectations for the league's second-youngest team behind the Trail Blazers.

"None of us have proven anything as a group," he said. "It all comes with winning."

But the fact he tackled head-on questions about his defense could be a good sign for someone who badly wants to become a complete player.

"It's just knowing the position and not relaxing," LaVine said. "I've always been really good on the ball, and when that ball swings, I relax. That's where you can get caught off guard.

"I've watched a lot of film. I was watching with coach (Fred Hoiberg) on how you can stay engaged and always have your teammates' back in rotation. It's getting there, and I think we're going to have a good run at it in camp."

Last season, LaVine didn't have a training camp. He's ready now. And big contract or not, he's ready to prove any doubters wrong.

"We hear the outside expectations, but I think we use that as fuel," LaVine said of modest victory prognostications. "We're going to get off to a hot start with training camp coming. We've all been here and it's going to be fun. That's why I think we're all able to get a jump on the season because we're all healthy now."

He meant his body, not his checkbook.

BULLS NOTES

Bulls take high road on drama with Butler

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Even 76ers big man Joel Embiid, the champion of Twitter trolling, acknowledged Lauri Markkanen's tweet last week in which the Bulls forward posted a picture of himself on draft night with the Timberwolves logo in the background and a #tbt hashtag for "Throwback Thursday".

BRUH, Embiid tweeted, quoting Markkanen's post.

Asked about it Monday, Markkanen smiled.

"I thought Bulls fans would love it," he said. "And it was just harmless fun. No shots taken."

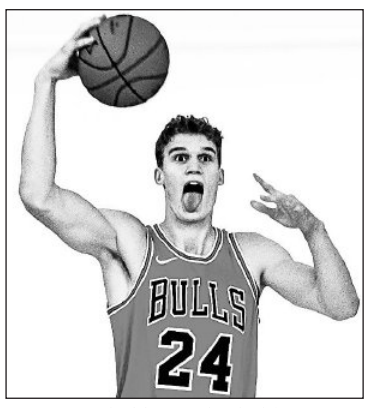
But Markkanen, like Zach LaVine, did admit to following the Timberwolves drama after Jimmy Butler requested a trade and tension between ownership and coach Tom Thibodeau played out.

"It's tough," LaVine said. "I appreciate my time in Minnesota. They drafted me. I grew up there. I wish them nothing but the best. Everybody goes through some adversity, good or bad decisions. Either way, I think they'll be OK."

Bulls management, which was widely panned for trading Butler and the rights to Justin Patton for LaVine, Kris Dunn and the rights to Markkanen, steered toward the high road as well.

"We obviously respect Jimmy as a player," executive vice president John Paxson said. "He did a lot of really good things for the organization. But that's not our concern. We moved on. We have too much to worry about internally to become a better team.

"It's never about vindication. We did exactly what we thought was the right thing for the organization last year. We were comfortable then, and we're comfortable now."



BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bulls forward Lauri Markkanen admits he has followed the drama unfolding with the Timberwolves.

Role reduction: Neil Funk, the soundtrack to all six Bulls championships and a fixture on the franchise's radio and TV broadcasts for close to three decades, will take a step toward retirement this season.

Funk, 71, will reduce his TV duties by 20 road games. A rotating crew of announcers who have yet to be finalized will work alongside analyst Stacey King, the Bulls said.

"We appreciate everything Neil does," President and COO Michael Reinsdorf said in a statement. "He's a pro's pro who brings a wealth of basketball knowledge to every game."

Funk, who also called the glory days of Julius Erving and the 76ers, is entering his 47th year of broadcasting overall and requested the reduction.

"I want to thank both Jerry and Michael Reinsdorf for their understanding and for allowing me to take a small step back in my broadcasting schedule after all these years," Funk said in the statement.

Layups: Calling Bobby Portis "part of our core," general manager Gar Forman said extension talks continue with Portis' representatives. The Bulls have until opening night to reach agreement. Otherwise, Portis becomes a restricted free agent next offseason. ... The Bulls signed forwards JaKarr Sampson and Kaiser Gates to bring the training camp roster to its maximum of 20 players. ... The Warriors hired former Bull Mike Dunleavy Jr. as a pro scout.

'Mr. Nice Guy' Hoiberg ready for 4th season dais next to Forman and Hoiberg. A united front, indeed.

And while every team is undefeated on the eve of training camp and good moods are as bountiful as cliches, Paxson heaped praise upon Hoiberg and his staff that certainly went above the norm.

Paxson doesn't do disingenuous.

"Last year in a lot of ways was difficult from the get-go," Paxson said. "And I thought Fred and his staff handled last year incredibly well.

"You start training camp with the incident that happened between Bobby (Portis) and Niko (Mirotic). We got it rolling a little bit. And then we had the injuries. We made the decision organizationally to play our young guys. Fred kept a very positive, upbeat attitude with our guys. That's a huge thing for us."

Again, none of this might matter next offseason. Hoiberg needs to continue to build on the improvements he made last season in terms of player development and holding players accountable.

And while management acknowledges the work that remains in identifying long-term fits for the roster, there's an internal belief that it has provided Hoiberg with myriad offensive weapons. If too many of them are of the shoot-first mentality, well, there's a reason Hoiberg is making $5 million annually.

"I think more than anything we're all on the same page," Paxson said. "We had a lot of discussions this summer about our roster and how we want to play. I think this roster could potentially be more conducive to how Fred wants to play. We kept using the word 'versatility,' but we have some versatile guys, so we can play smaller at times if we choose to. And that's where Fred has had success in the past.

"I think more than anything we're all on the same page."
— Executive VP John Paxson on management's relationship with coach Fred Hoiberg

"We're very comfortable with where we're at in terms of Fred and his relationship with us and his relationship with the players and how we want to play. And I thought he did a lot of really good things last year."

For his part, Hoiberg credited management for adding versatile players. And he's judging himself on the buy-in from players to be "the hardest-playing team every night."

Hoiberg carries a Mr. Nice Guy reputation because he's genuine and treats people kindly. "We love him as a person," Zach LaVine said.

But never mistake Hoiberg's congeniality for lack of competitiveness. He loves his job and knows what's at stake regarding his future.

"I want to see growth," he said. "I think last year guys made significant progress in their careers. But it's our job to take that to the next level. That's an important part of the process when you have a young group. You have to continue to make individual progress and then in turn have everybody come together and be about one common goal.

"We're going to have to have a lot of sacrifice with this team because of the talent and the many weapons that we're going to have. It may be a different guy every night. And that will have to be accepted."

BLACKHAWKS

BLACKHAWKS NOTES

Only 18, Boqvist may land on roster

By Jimmy Greenfield
Chicago Tribune

Only a few players each season make it to the NHL at age 18. The Blackhawks haven't had an 18-year-old on their roster in 11 years. Adam Boqvist is bidding to become the next one.

This wasn't in the Hawks' plans when they drafted the Swedish defenseman with the No. 8 pick in June. It wasn't in their plans even when training camp opened a week and a half ago. But an injury to Connor Murphy created an opening, and Boqvist's solid play has forced the issue.

"He's made it tough on us," coach Joel Quenneville said following Monday's practice. "We like his poise, we like his patience. And all of a sudden it's a different discussion than what we probably thought at the beginning of camp."

If Boqvist is on the roster on opening night, he'll join Patrick Kane as the only current Hawk to make his NHL debut at 18. Jonathan Toews came close but missed by 5½ months.

"If you're ready, you're ready," Kane said. "Who cares about the age? He has done a great job of coming in here with maybe not such high expectations but maybe you hear he's 2-3 years away, and then all of a sudden he's sticking out at the beginning. You can see the skill level, you can see that he's a pretty impressive player. I wouldn't be surprised if he makes it."

Kane was the top overall pick in 2007, and while it was expected he would start the 2007-08 season with the Hawks it wasn't a certainty he'd finish it with them. NHL teams are allowed to have a player with junior eligibility on their roster for up to nine games without burning a year of their contract. That thought process could apply to Boqvist, who would play for the Ontario Hockey League's London Knights if he's returned to juniors.

"The difference with me and him is I didn't have that great of a preseason," Kane recalled. "I kind of struggled in the preseason. I was a high draft pick and the team wasn't very good before so they were going to give me the nine games and see what happened after that. That was pretty much the plan from the beginning. I played well once the regular season started, but in the preseason I wasn't very good.

"The thing about him is he's been one of the most noticeable guys on the ice every time he's out there. Very high skill level, fun to watch. It seems like he can play at this level. He has had a pretty impressive camp."

Duncan Keith was drafted 54th overall in 2002 and spent two seasons at the Hawks' AHL affiliate in Norfolk, Va., before making his NHL debut to start the 2005-06 season at age 22.

"Everybody's different, everybody matures at different stages," Keith said. "It doesn't seem like it's as big of a deal if a younger guy stays. Look around the league, there's guys stepping in every year from different teams. It wouldn't be a surprise. He's played great, he's made a lot of nice plays with the puck and showed poise."

Hawks defenseman Brandon Manning played four games with the Flyers when he was 21 but didn't stick in the NHL until four years later.

"Thinking back to when I was 18 and just graduated high school and the next year to step into the NHL is pretty crazy," Manning said. "I think Adam has done a great job, he has been great in camp, he's easy to play with. He seems to get better every day and I think there's a good chance of him sticking around for sure."

Crawford update: Quenneville said sidelined goalie Corey Crawford could return to practicing with the rest of the team Saturday or early next week. But being available for the Oct. 4 season opener in Ottawa isn't likely.

"That might be stretching it at this point," Quenneville said.

Forsling sighting: Defenseman Gustav Forsling, who had surgery on his right wrist in July, was on the ice before Monday's practice skating and working on his stickhandling.

Quenneville said Forsling's timetable for returning in mid-November has not changed.

IN BRIEF

COLLEGE FOOTBALL: Clemson announced that freshman Trevor Lawrence will take over as the team's starting quarterback Saturday against unbeaten Syracuse. Senior Kelly Bryant had been the starter after leading the Tigers to the College Football Playoffs last season. Lawrence, ESPN's No. 2 overall recruit this year, has come off the bench in No. 3 Clemson's first four games. When Jeremy Larkin (28) asked if he should keep playing after a diagnosis of cervical stenosis, teammates told him it's "not worth it."

Larkin first mentioned symptoms to the NU medical staff before the Wildcats' last game Sept. 15 against Akron. Preliminary tests were inconclusive, and Larkin rushed for 82 yards and caught eight passes for 52 yards in Northwestern's 39-34 loss.

After further testing and consultation with three specialists, the next step became clear: Larkin would have to retire from football or risk paralysis.

"Our medical team and Jeremy worked hand in hand," NU coach Pat Fitzgerald said, "and hopefully avoided anything down the road that, quite frankly, could have been catastrophic.

"It's a challenging day for Jeremy Larkin the football player but a blessing for Jeremy Larkin the young man. He will continue on as a student assistant coach and continue to be a part of our special brotherhood. His attitude is inspiring."

Fitzgerald symbolically gave Larkin a whistle during Monday's team meeting.

Larkin was not made available for comment Monday. His teammates' sentiments regarding him were in concert.

"He didn't want us to feel bad for him," quarterback Clayton Thorson said. "He told me he feels really blessed that the doctors caught this, really thankful."

Fitzgerald said of the meeting: "It wasn't a funeral. It was more of a celebration of his career. He gave one of the most inspirational speeches I've heard from a young man. He is not looking for a pity party. He is looking to make a difference — with the team and the program."

His teammates will need his support.

Larkin, a Cincinnati native and distant relative of Baseball Hall of Famer Barry Larkin, took over for Justin Jackson this season and has accumulated 346 of the Wildcats' 351 net rushing yards. He also has five of their seven rushing touchdowns and 19 of their 91 receptions — second to wide receiver Flynn Nagel's 20.

Northwestern is 1-2 after a week off following the home loss to Akron. Its underachieving offense is averaging 24 points per game and 4.9 yards per play, third from the bottom in the Big Ten in both categories.

Larkin averaged 4.8 yards per carry this season; No. 2 tailback John Moten IV is at 1.8.

Moten, a 6-foot, 209-pound junior from St. Louis, figures to get the first crack at replacing Larkin, but true freshmen Isaiah Bowser and Drake Anderson could eventually take over. Eventually could even be Saturday, when Northwestern faces Michigan's ferocious front seven.

Bowser was named 2017 Ohio Player of the Year by the Touchdown Club of Columbus after he totaled 2,695 rushing yards, 320 receiving yards and 32 touchdowns as a senior. The 6-1, 216-pound Bowser has one carry this season for no yards.

Anderson, the son of NU great Damien Anderson, is a 5-11, 181-pounder from Chandler, Ariz., who has great speed.

"We have recruited well at that position," Fitzgerald said. "Younger players, at times, try to press and do too much. Like the question I got before the season: How do you replace a Justin Jackson? You don't. The next guys step up and it's their turn to play.

"No one wants to get their opportunity like this, with Lark being unable to play. But it's their time. I expect them to be themselves and have a lot of fun doing it. Go play your butt off."

The Bears being in first and the success of other young NFL QBs has raised expectations for Mitch Trubisky.

Growing pains

Success of young quarterbacks adds to pressure on Trubisky

Brad Biggs
On the Bears

A friend texted before halftime when the Bears were down 14-3 and remarked how the Cardinals were in a ripe position to cough up a lead at home — like they did back in 2006, the year the stadium opened, when the Bears erased a 20-point deficit to win.

The Bears had Rex Grossman in 2006, and before you react to that in anger, remember that he was named NFC offensive player of the month that September, a couple of weeks before the Bears made their trek to Arizona for a game in which Grossman threw four picks. That night was the 13th start of Grossman's career. This was Trubisky's 15th start, and he didn't look particularly good. There were a couple of nice throws. There should be. There were too many missed throws. There was a pick on a ball Chandler Jones deflected at the line of scrimmage and a lost fumble.

The perception issue Trubisky and the Bears are dealing with is that so many other young quarterbacks are excelling or showing promise. Of the highly drafted quarterbacks from the last two or three years, whom would you take Trubisky over right now? Josh Rosen hasn't really played for the Cardinals. Josh Allen looked solid for the Bills in a huge upset victory Sunday in Minnesota. Baker Mayfield engineered a dramatic comeback for the Browns on Thursday night that busted open the Bud Light coolers in Cleveland. The Chiefs' Patrick Mahomes is an early MVP candidate. The Texans' Deshaun Watson is 0-3 this season, but he did throw for 385 yards and two touchdowns in a 27-22 road loss to the Giants on Sunday.

The conversation is amplified because the Bears have a playoff-caliber defense that is bound to get better between now and the end of December, provided it stays healthy. That creates natural conversations about how good this team can be and where it could possibly go. The window opened and the clock for competing for something special started when the team traded for outside linebacker Khalil Mack.

This isn't to cause alarm, and this is with the understanding that while the defense will make strides in the coming months, the offense should make even larger strides. But on a wild Sunday around the NFL, with some nutty outcomes, the Bears won't win many games away from Soldier Field with this kind of effort, not after spotting the other team a 14-point lead.

"With Mitch, for us, there are plays where he played really well," Nagy said. "He made some great plays and great throws. Loved the throw down the sideline to Allen (Robinson). For him, it's us understanding where he's at. Today, we come out and we don't score. We had a nice drive, but we don't score there at the end. They brought some heat and we took a sack. I think that's a learning period for him. We can improve, but I'm happy where he's at. There's going to be some growing pains as we do this, and it's not going to happen overnight."

If you remember back through the Mack Mania, Nagy was plainly speaking a couple of times per week in late August, reminding folks that it wasn't going to be fireworks right out of the gate for Trubisky and the offense. He was doing his best to temper expectations, and, sure, much of that is easy to forget, especially now that the defense looks like one of the best in the league.

But that's the spot the Bears find themselves in. They're in first place in the division and they've got a defense that ought to be a rough ride for just about every offense remaining on the schedule. It has been a long time since fans have dreamed big about the Bears, and the defense leads you to do that now, while the play of other young quarterbacks around the league inspires you to wonder how this thing will come together.

"It feels close," Trubisky said. "We are right there, and the great thing about it is we find ways to get W's as a team. We know we are not even close to where we want to be on offense. I am really tough on myself and I know I can play a lot better. Coach Nagy keeps telling me to trust the process. We are growing together, him as a play-caller and head coach, and me in my second year and first in this offense.

"You want immediate results, but he said it is so hard just to get W's in this league. If we could just keep stacking them and continue to keep getting better, he said that the offense will have a breakthrough point. I believe in Coach all the way. Whatever he says, I am going to do and just continue to work my tail off. Whatever I have to do for him and this offense to get that breakthrough point and really see this offense go to a whole new level and really take off from there. Keep getting better, enjoy this and take pressure off myself."

Expectations are shaped by a lot of things, and the play of other young quarterbacks and the success the defense is enjoying, even after a bad start against Sam Bradford, is ratcheting up expectations for Trubisky.

"Everyone is new to this offense," wide receiver Taylor Gabriel said. "I feel like eventually we will start clicking. It's Week 3, so you can only say so many things with the offense."

NFL NOTES

Steelers withstand rally, get 1st victory

News services

Ben Roethlisberger threw for 353 yards and three touchdowns to lead the Steelers to a 30-27 victory over the Buccaneers on Monday night in Tampa, Fla.

The Steelers (1-1-1) built a 20-point lead before holding on for their first win.

Vance McDonald scored on a 75-yard pass play and finished with four catches for 112 yards. Brown and Ryan Switzer also had first-half TD receptions for the Steelers, who led 30-10 at halftime.

The Steelers defense forced four turnovers, including three first-half picks of Ryan Fitzpatrick, who led his team to 17 fourth-quarter points to make it close.

Fitzpatrick became the first QB in league history to throw for 400 yards in three straight games.

The Bucs fell to 2-1.

Garoppolo done: The 49ers announced Monday that quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo tore the ACL in his left knee while making a cut late in Sunday's loss to the Chiefs, sidelining him for the rest of the season.

An MRI confirmed the injury.

The injury deals a serious blow to the 49ers (1-2), who had planned their rebuild around Garoppolo and now must turn again to C.J. Beathard at quarterback.

The 49rs struggled with Beathard and Brian Hoyer last year before the midseason addition of Garoppolo.

Griffen on leave: Vikings defensive end Everson Griffen has been sidelined indefinitely by an undisclosed situation that has caused concern within the organization about his well-being.

Griffen was ruled out on the pregame injury report against the Bills on Sunday because of knee trouble. When asked afterward why Griffen wasn't on the sideline, coach Mike Zimmer said the ninth-year player and three-time Pro Bowler was dealing with a "personal matter."

A Minneapolis TV station reported Monday night that Griffen was involved in a disturbance at a downtown hotel Saturday afternoon.

He wasn't arrested.

General manager Rick Spielman said the team was "certainly concerned" by the incident and currently focused on Griffen's well-being.

Extra points: The Browns will start No. 1 overall draft pick Baker Mayfield at quarterback against the Raiders on Sunday. ... The Cardinals will start No. 10 overall pick Josh Rosen at quarterback against the Seahawks on Sunday. ... Dolphins DE William Hayes will miss the rest of the season with a torn ACL in his right knee. ... Rams Pro Bowl CB Aqib Talib will be out at least one month with a high-ankle sprain. ... Packers DE Muhammad Wilkerson will miss the rest of the season with a significant ankle injury. ... 49ers CB Richard Sherman may miss two games with a calf strain. ... Tommy McDonald, the small, speedy and sure-handed wide receiver who teamed with QB Norm Van Brocklin to help the Eagles win the 1960 NFL championship, died. He was 84. McDonald, a Hall of Famer, played 12 seasons for five teams and was a six-time Pro Bowl selection. He retired in 1968.

Trubisky and the Bears' vertical passing game just aren't getting it done

By Brad Biggs | Chicago Tribune

The vertical element in the Bears' passing game remains mostly off the mark, but that hasn't stopped the offense from taking shots.

That's the first key to broadening the horizons of the passing game and opening up more options. As much as coach Matt Nagy has talked about it — he referenced a "touchdown to checkdown mentality" during training camp — he has had quarterback Mitch Trubisky keep firing.

One issue for the offense through three games remains Trubisky's accuracy downfield. In Sunday's 16-14 victory over the Cardinals at State Farm Stadium, he was 4-for-11 on passes that traveled 10 yards in the air beyond the line of scrimmage. Two of those completions went for exactly 10 yards on hook routes to wide receiver Taylor Gabriel and tight end Trey Burton.

The other two completions were the best throws of the game for Trubisky, who finished 24 of 35 for 220 yards. He connected with Burton for 25 yards on a flood route when Burton came from the back side of the formation. The pass was threaded between linebacker Gerald Hodges and safety Tre Boston, the kind of touch throw into a small window that can excite you. Trubisky also connected with Allen Robinson for a 39-yard gain on a double move. Robinson ran an out-and-up to shake cornerback Jamar Taylor, but even on that play Trubisky was a little late getting to him, allowing Boston to close and prevent it from being an even bigger gain.

Then there were the misses. Off play action, Gabriel had a step on Taylor, who was beaten badly the week before by the Rams, but an end zone shot wasn't close. Robinson was open on a post route to the end zone, but the throw was behind him, allowing Taylor to make a play on it. The Bears benefited from a roughing-the-passer call. A deep sideline shot to Robinson, who had a stride on cornerback Bene Benwikere and needs a chance to win one-on-one balls versus smaller defenders, was late and underthrown. A deep shot over the middle to Gabriel was way off the mark, but the Bears picked up a penalty when Boston roughed the wide receiver.

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears wide receiver Allen Robinson and Cardinals defensive back Bene Benwikere collide on a deep pass from Mitch Trubisky that was late and underthrown.

The willingness to stretch a defense down the field is a big part of the equation. Let them know you're going to challenge them over the top from time to time and that, in itself, should loosen things up underneath. But the Bears need to be more proficient throwing the ball downfield, and the failure to do so explains why Trubisky's yards-per-attempt average is 5.4 yards. The only quarterbacks with a worse average with a minimum of 50 attempts are Dak Prescott, Nick Foles, Tyrod Taylor, Andrew Luck and Sam Bradford.

The timing is off because Trubisky is a split-second getting to some of his reads. His footwork needs to improve, too, as he still seems more interested in leaving the pocket than stepping up into it and delivering a ball downfield.

Ground and pound: There were a couple of elements from the ground game that were really successful against the Cardinals, plays that are core RPOs — run-pass options — for the Bears. The 17-yard gain by Jordan Howard on the first offensive play was straight out of the Chiefs playbook. There was a bubble screen to Tarik Cohen at the top and a tight end out route on the other side. Trubisky read six defenders in the box as a defender walked out on Burton, so Trubisky handed off to Howard, who profited from mauling blocks by center Cody Whitehair and right guard Kyle Long.

Two plays later, there was another RPO. Trubisky handed off to Cohen on a buck sweep with Long and right tackle Bobby Massie pulling. He chose the handoff over a bubble screen set up for Anthony Miller at the top of the formation and it was a 21-yard gain.

Another interesting run from the Chiefs playbook, something Kansas City drew up for wide receiver Tyreek Hill, was a 17-yard Cohen run on a sprint draw that set up the Bears' only touchdown of the game. Cohen started right to get two Cardinals linebackers to move and then darted back left through the hole. The counter motion gave Whitehair a nice angle to block Hodges and spring Cohen for a big gain.

So while the Bears didn't get great production from the ground game — Howard and Cohen combined for 29 carries and 114 yards — there were some really nice plays, and you see a foundation for growth. Credit Nagy for sticking with it.

Two-minute drill: Whitehair, as mentioned earlier, had a really strong game. He showed up on a lot of plays, including a nice block to shield off safety Budda Baker, on a 13-yard screen to Howard on third-and-4 in the third quarter.

■ Trubisky has to make better decisions at the goal line than he did on a missed fade route to Robinson. The Bears had four receivers at the top of the formation and the Cardinals countered with only three defenders, but Trubisky chose to throw to the other side of the field. Worse, the throw didn't allow Robinson a chance to make a play on the ball.

A narrow 1-yard gain on a fourth-and-1 shovel pass to Robinson was made possible by a nice block from left guard Eric Kush. That's tough sledding right there.

■ Rookie cornerback Kevin Toliver, subbing for Prince Amukamara, was targeted five times by Bradford and rookie Josh Rosen, allowing a 32-yard gain to Christian Kirk when he was fooled by an out-and-up double move, and the Cardinals completed four passes going at him. Toliver was steady on the other three completions.

■ Not much more needs to be said about outside linebacker Khalil Mack. His first sack knocked the Cardinals out of field-goal range on third down and his second produced a takeaway with the Cardinals on the edge of the red zone. That's the difference in a two-point win.

Miller has dislocated left shoulder

Miller was originally injured when he attempted to shield himself from Cardinals cornerback Bene Benwikere on a short crossing route. Miller stuck out his left arm to stave off the defender and went down in pain.

He returned to the game before leaving for good late in the third quarter after quarterback Mitch Trubisky essentially threw away a pass as Miller was well-covered by strong safety Budda Baker on an out-and-up shot to the end zone. In that instance, Miller attempted to push off with his left arm to gain separation and pulled up in pain.

"We leave that up to the docs and (head athletic trainer) Andre (Tucker)," Nagy said when asked how the team judges whether Miller can play through the injury. "And obviously talking to Anthony just to see and make sure that he's explaining everything that has happened and they can make their best evaluation possible. We'll have to see where that goes. But, yeah, you obviously want to be smart with those, as you know that we will do."

Miller missed the entire 2014 season at Memphis with a shoulder injury. According to a college scout for another NFL team who has access to his team's pre-draft reports, Miller had a torn labrum in his right shoulder that required surgery. The scout added that Miller played through a minor left shoulder injury last season that did not require surgery. The report he was viewing called it a "small labrum tear."

The second-round draft pick did not miss a game in 2017, when he made 96 receptions for 1,462 yards with 18 touchdowns. That productive season capped a three-year run in which Miller played in 38 games. He redshirted as a walk-on in 2013, when he was on the scout team. He was on pace to be a starter the next year before tearing the labrum in his right shoulder in the preseason.

Nagy declared Miller day to day. He has eight receptions for 60 yards and a touchdown and has been on the field for 53.3 percent of the offensive snaps. With Miller sidelined, the Bears turned to Josh Bellamy and former first-round draft pick Kevin White in Arizona. White has played 26 snaps (12.4 percent) and Bellamy 22 (10.5 percent).

The Bears traded a fourth-round pick in 2018 and their 2019 second-round pick to the Patriots to select Miller at No. 51.

Nagy mindful of team concept as 'D' trumps 'O' defense that has disproportionately contributed to a 2-1 record that has the Bears in first place in the NFC North.

"I'm not worried about it at all because of the people that we have," Nagy said. "Our message has been a team thing this whole time.

"And as dominant as our defense has been, there's going to be a time this year — I can't tell you when — but there's going to be a time this year when they need the offense."

For now, at least, the topic can be compartmentalized as a convenient, perhaps cynical, talking point in the broader conversation contextualizing the Bears' start and looking ahead to where it might lead. It's also a familiar storyline that accumulated painful connotations in Chicago during coach Lovie Smith's tenure from 2004 to 2012.

But even Nagy wasn't so dismissive Monday. Three games into his tenure, he realizes such situations require managing.

"You've got to make sure, I do as a head coach, that ... the defense understands that it's not for lack of trying (by the offense)," Nagy said. "This is a 'we' thing. This is who we are right now, and we need to make sure that everyone understands that."

The imbalance is reflected in the NFL total yardage rankings at this early juncture. The Bears defense entered Monday ranked fifth, while the offense was 26th.

But the season ebbs and flows, Nagy said. And that fits with his promise that Trubisky will eventually eliminate some of the breakdowns involving recognition and throwing mechanics that soured his performance against the Cardinals.

At least there's no mistaking Trubisky's desire and urgency to elevate his play. He left his celebratory smile inside the locker room Sunday, replacing it with a resolute demeanor during a media session in which he was asked to explain his part in two turnovers, three sacks and a third straight game without an offensive output greater than 17 points.

The only time he perked up, really, was when he was asked about watching the defense.

"It's a lot of fun," he said. "That gives us a lot of confidence on offense, but we also want to continue to get better so we can take some pressure off them because they're playing outstanding. We're trying to duplicate that on offense. Once we get that, I think we could be pretty good."

On the other side of the ball, Bears defenders expressed pride in playing well enough to help cover for the offense. Plus, it's not as though their play has been beyond reproach.

They gave up three plays of at least 39 yards in losing a 20-point lead to the Packers in Week 1, and they busted coverage on two touchdown passes in the first quarter against the Cardinals.

"We know the offense is going to give us a spark at any time," linebacker Danny Trevathan said. "We just know on defense what our responsibility is and why they gathered us here."

As Nagy sees it, every player must take ownership and accountability for his role in the Bears success. That's the essence of the team concept.

And the foundation for a few more dance parties.

"When the defense is getting these turnovers and they're getting interceptions (and) fumbles, they're flipping the field and you have great opportunities and you're not converting touchdowns, that's where I think the offense will feel like they're letting the defense down," he said. "But they use that as motivation.

"Everybody in this team ... knows where we're at and knows where we can go. The fact that we're 2-1 right now winning football games, we've got a ways to go. But the only thing that matters in the end is to get that W."

Stan Van Gundy was let go as Pistons coach and president of basketball operations in May after four seasons. The Pistons managed just one winning season during that tenure.

Van Gundy finds himself at career, life crossroads

By Vince Ellis
Detroit Free Press

Stan Van Gundy is enjoying life.

In the spring, he took his wife, Kim, on a European vacation, their first as a couple.

Last month, Kim gifted him with birthday tickets to the Fox Theater where they grooved to the sounds of Gladys Knight and the O'Jays.

The next day, he played fetch with family dogs, Opie and Eastwood, in the backyard of his lakefront home in Clarkston, Mich. Later, he was a picture of comfort inside as the dogs slumbered, worn out from playing on the warm August day.

It's clear the former Pistons coach doesn't have to work another day the rest of his life. A comfortable retirement where he works at his leisure awaits - if he wants it.

But with his May firing still fresh, he's not sure he wants comfort.

He thinks he might want to coach again.

With NBA training camps opening this week, he knows there's nothing out there to replace hiscompetitive itch.

His wife sees a profession that brings misery, and it's clear she is ready for him to retire from coaching, a career that started as an assistant at Vermont in 1981.

The situation leaves Van Gundy, 59, at a crossroads. He can see a path forward, he just doesn't know which path to take.

"I don't care who you are, what job you are in, when you've worked at something for a long time and tried to become good at it and everything else, it's not easy to walk away — particularly when it's not on your own terms," Stan Van Gundy said last month. "Kim's major thing is that I'm not happy (during seasons). You don't need to do it so why are you going to do something that doesn't make you happy.

"If I'm not happy, it's hard for the people around me to be happy."

'When we were healthy, we were good'

When Van Gundy took over the Pistons in May 2014, he and general manager Jeff Bower inherited one of the league's worst rosters — one littered with players out of the NBA four years later.

They went to work to upgrade the talent level, culminating in the franchise landing power forward Blake Griffin in a blockbuster trade with the Clippers in January.

Van Gundy enjoyed a good working relationship with owner Tom Gores, who thought giving personnel control to the head coach was a solid organizational model. Gores admittedly pushed the front office to seek Griffin-type talent.

There wasn't enough winning under Van Gundy with the only postseason appearance coming in 2016, which ended with a four-game sweep against the Cavaliers.

Injuries to point guard Reggie Jackson in consecutive seasons wrecked other potential playoff runs.

But with good health and LeBron James leaving the Cavs for the Lakers, the Pistons could make a jump to the playoffs this season.

And Van Gundy could have led the charge. Instead, he was replaced by Dwane Casey.

Van Gundy points to last season's 19-14 record before Jackson went down with a severe right ankle sprain as a reason he could have succeeded. The team finished strong when Jackson returned.

"We showed last year — early and late — when we were healthy, we were good," Van Gundy said. "I understand injuries are a part of it and we didn't overcome injuries as well as other teams and I get all of that.

"When we started, the roster wasn't very good and didn't have a lot of assets and we were able to get to where our top people were pretty good and when healthy, we were good, but we didn't have the depth to overcome key injuries."

Expensive contracts to free-agent role players like Jon Leuer and Langston Galloway led to a bloated salary structure. According to hoopshype.com, the Pistons have the ninth-highest payroll in the NBA entering this season.

Griffin's contract, which could pay him nearly $142 million over the four next seasons, played a role in the expansive payroll. And yet, of the top 10 payrolls in the NBA, only the Pistons and Grizzlies (ranked 10th) missed the playoffs last season.

'I'm not bitter'

Even with good health from Jackson, Gores may have decided to go in another direction.

Gores weighed those factors, taking nearly a month before deciding to part ways with Van Gundy with one season remaining on his five-year, $35 million contract.

"It was tough — one of the tougher ones I've made in a lot of years," Gores told the Free Press in June. "It was emotional because Stan's a good man.

"We didn't win enough, but he got a commitment to winning. As much as we didn't win, that was me, too. It's not just on Stan. I respect him greatly. I respect his family."

Van Gundy harbors no ill will.

The firing was more palatable than his final days with the Magic in 2012.

All a coach can ask is to be treated fairly.

"This ended better," Van Gundy

"I wish we would have been given another year, but I'm not bitter. Tom has to do what he thinks is right for the organization and he treated me well."

Would Van Gundy change anything?

He admits he learned lessons that could help him the future.

But he stops there.

"It's hard to talk about things you've learned and what you would do differently without saying something that comes across as negative about someone else and I don't want to do that," Van Gundy said. "I don't want to be that guy.

"I don't think there's any doubt I'd be better if I did it again and that's one of the pulls. You want to see if you can do it better."

'It just can't be replicated'

On this day in August, Stan Van Gundy is gregarious; hiscustomary wit is present.

But he turns into a different person during the season.

Kim Van Gundy has seen it for 30-plus years.

He might feel fulfilled as a coach, but she knows it doesn't always make him happy. He prowls the sidelines, quick to anger over player mistakes.

That anger carries over to postgame media sessions, which are good for internet headlines, but not so good for Stan Van Gundy.

Kim sees the emotional toll and wonders why he keepsat it.

"I kind of understand him wanting to rewrite the end of the story and not have it end his way, but I don't know if it's worth another five or whatever years of misery for him," she said. "And it could very well end miserably again."

Kim admits to a little selfish thinking, although she is entitled to it.

"My whole life has been basically doing everything at home and supporting his coaching," Kim said. "I gave up my career for his coaching. I stayed home with the kids, so they'd have a parent raising them.

"We've never traveled because it's always been basketball, basketball, basketball. I kind of feel like when is it going to be our time?"

Stan Van Gundy's father, Bill, was a college coach.

His younger brother, Jeff, coached the Knicks and Rockets and has seen his fame grow as an analyst for ESPN/ABC for the last decade.

CARLOS OSORIO/AP

Van Gundy's Pistons teams may not have enjoyed much success. But his Heat and Magic teams made the playoffs in seven of his eight seasons.

Basketball always has been at the forefront of Stan Van Gundy's life.

That's part of why it's so tough to walk away.

"If we were another two years down the road and things had gone well, I think I could have walked away," Van Gundy said. "Coming off the last two years, we didn't make the playoffs and not being given the chance to go on, you get fired. You want to write a different story. That's the pull, but I'm not sitting here today wishing I was in the office today or I was on the court today, but it's just coaching in general. There's still a tug, but we'll see what happens."

Jeff Van Gundy understands.

Although he has found purpose analyzing basketball, he still feels the tug. He wasable to scratch that itch by coaching USA basketball at the FIBA AmeriCup in 2017 and then currently at FIBA World Cup qualifying.

But can his brother find something outside basketball?

It's tough because Stan Van Gundy — if he never returns to coaching — will likely find nothing to top the feeling he hadwhen he led the Magic to an upset of James and the Cavs in the 2009 Eastern Conference finals.

Or that feeling when the Pistons clinched a playoff berth in 2016 — Gores' only berth — and he walked down the bench to congratulate every player and assistant coach.

Nothing can replace it.

"You see the agony part of losing and the very small slivers of joy that the winning brings," Jeff Van Gundy explained over the phone Friday afternoon. "It's hard to understand why people coach — unless you coach.

"Those 5 minutes after a great road win, those can't be duplicated at any part of your life. There is going to be no high like that. There is no comradery that you feel like you felt when you were on a coaching staff of a team that you respected and liked. It just can't be replicated."

'Transition is hard as a coach'

Stan Van Gundy probably was guilty of poor word choice when he said, "I'm really lost right now," during a guest appearance on a basketball podcast in August.

It created the impression that he was wallowing around the house in a state of depression.

That's far from the case.

He admits it sounded sad, but it's more accurate to say he is torn.

He is clear on one thing — he has no interest in having personnel control. If he returns, it strictly would be to coach.

The last year weighed on him, as nearly the entire front office and coaching staff faced expiring contracts.

Some front-office members were retained by the new front office under the direction of senior adviser Ed Stefanski, but others weren't. Casey hired an entirely new coaching staff.

"The hard part for me is because it didn't end well for me, it ended poorly for some other people that had minimal — if any — fault whatsoever, and I felt that," Van Gundy said. "I don't really want to have that level of responsibility for that number of people again.

"I think it's a good model, but I wouldn't want to do it again. I would just want to coach."

There were four coaching hires after Van Gundy was let go, but he said he didn't pursue any jobs. A year off to reflect is probably a good thing. He plans to spend that time to contemplate his next step.

"That would have been a mistake to just jump back in that quickly," Van Gundy said. "As much as I have that pull, jumping right back in would not have been good for me."

What's next?

The couple decided to remain in Michigan for the summer. They've grown to like the area, although they plan to move back to Florida, where they maintain a home in the Orlando area, before the temperatures start to drop.

Stan Van Gundy has committed to a weekly appearance on Dan Le Batard's ESPN Radio show.

He will do volunteer work with the coaching staff at Stetson University, where Kim sits on the Board of Trustees and daughters Alison and Kelley are students.

He has spoken with two colleges in the Orlando area about possibly teaching sports management courses.

Van Gundy knows the trend is younger coaches, though Casey, 61, is two years older than Van Gundy.

Before the Pistons, Van Gundy-coached teams reached the playoffs seven out of seven seasons with the Magic and Heat.

And while he admits the coaching pull may go away after a year, he wants to find something that gives him joy.

Jeff Van Gundy has simple advice for his brother: Change is OK.

"See if there's something that fulfills you," Jeff Van Gundy said. "He wouldn't be working now for monetary gain or to be able to take care of his family. He's been very successful that way so you now you have to figure out what you want to do.

"Just like for players, transition is hard as a coach. I still go through it.

"That part will be challenging, and it always will remain challenging, but that doesn't mean you can't be happy."

INSTA-WORTHY ART & SCIENCE

We tried out the new selfie-friendly wndr museum, now open in the West Loop

By Steve Johnson | Chicago Tribune

At the new, pop-up wndr museum, capital letters are optional. So are vowels. But you had darned well better bring your camera.

The museum is the newest Chicago iteration of a burgeoning nationwide genre, the ephemeral destination designed primarily to provide compelling backdrops for photographs that people will post on social media, proving to their jealous and/or supportive friends that they've been to that new place with the compelling photographic backdrops — and looked amazing doing so.

And this one — which opened Friday in the West Loop after a construction problem forced a monthlong postponement, and after a break between the two men once listed as its "co-creators" — has a multitude of settings for such modern-day trophies.

Ostensibly, the theme is science and art in its series of artist-decorated rooms riffing on notions of microscopic vision and cosmic wonder. But, really, the theme is self-memorialization via the multiply lensed little computer that most of us tote around. Wndr museum, carved into the open first floor of a commercial building at 1130 W. Monroe St., meets that apparent demand in a manner that strikes me as well thought-out and compelling, if posing for pictures is your thing.

Among the 19 "experiences," each one crafted by a different contributing artist, there are swing seats that appear to be held aloft by balloons (the seats are invisibly wall-mounted). There's a clever, warped perspective room that, from a viewing window, makes two people appear to be dramatically different sizes. There's a playful "zero gravity ball pit," which puts visitors amid big bouncy orbs that appear to be floating (there are upward-blowing fans). Even the bathrooms boast emergency disco buttons, which, pressed, spin a mirror ball in the room as the speakers pump out vintage dance tunes.

And at the end of the attraction's pathway, there's the star attraction, an

Many chapters, many songs

Jazz singer Libby York has seen the world, but to her, Chicago is home

Rick Kogan
Sidewalks

Libby York, who will be appearing this week at the Jazz Showcase, is Chicago born and bred and has carried this town with her across the globe and through the years. "Why would I ever want to shake my roots?" she says. "When I sing, I bring all of my life experiences to a song and that includes Chicago, which is always home."

Her first album, for instance, was produced by Chicago's extraordinary Southport Records and its title, "Blue Gardenia," was a floral bow to her maternal grandfather, a man named Otto Amling who more than a century ago founded the local firm Amling's Flowerland, still in operation in Elmhurst and Chicago.

York's mother and father were both musically inclined, played piano and sang, and, York says, "taught me that musicians were to be respected."

The family home in Rogers Park was filled with the recorded voices of Frank Sinatra, Rosemary Clooney, June Christy, Perry Como and other translators of the sophisticated lyrics and arresting melodies of what is known as the great American songbook, a genre York calls "our country's gift to the world." For a time her father wrote a nightlife column for the Purple Parrot, a Northwestern University student humor magazine of the time.

KRISTEN NORMAN/FOR THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Jazz singer Libby York performs with pianist Jeremy Kahn and trombonist Russ Phillips at Winter's Jazz Club in June.

Still, and though she liked to sing as a youngster and was deeply under the influence of the first album released by the great local singer/guitarist Frank D'Rone, she did not consider a musical career after graduating from Sullivan High School. She majored in political science at American University in Washington, D.C., then worked on a few campaigns and taught school. She married and she and her husband, also a teacher, spent summers waiting tables. They met a chef named Victor Pisapia and the three of them opened a restaurant called the Back Porch Cafe in the resort town of Rehoboth Beach in Delaware.

"I suppose the inspiration for me was the bygone Fanny's restaurant in Evanston," says York, mentioning the notable and legendary restaurant —

Accountability in the age of anonymous accusations

How much power should crowdsourced internet documents wield in the #MeToo era?

By Savannah Eadens
Chicago Tribune

At 4 a.m. on Aug. 24, Riley Kmet created a public Google document filled with anonymous accusations of sexual misconduct against some members of the popular Chicago-area band the Orwells.

Five days later, the Orwells announced their breakup.

For four years, Kmet, a 20-year-old musician from Cleveland, had personally witnessed inappropriate behavior and also heard rumors about allegations of sexual misconduct from some members of the band that got its start as teens in Elmhurst and quickly rose to stardom in 2014.

So when Metro Chicago announced Aug. 24 it was hosting an Orwells concert slated for November (the band's first public show in Chicago since September 2017) — Kmet said she couldn't sleep. She felt a responsibility to do something with information she'd accumulated, to create a platform that brought attention to the various allegations of sexual misconduct and abuse made against some Anthony Bourdain, host of "Parts Unknown" on CNN, committed suicide June 8 in France.

'Parts Unknown' screening emotional

The last voice-over Anthony Bourdain did for "Parts Unknown" was a fitting one.

As a packed, emotional house discovered at the Tribeca screening of the show's upcoming Kenya episode — the 12th and final season premiere featuring "United Shades of America" host W. Kamau Bell — Bourdain wanted to emphasize a point that has sometimes gotten lost in his work.

"I do my best," he said in the voice-over about his travels around the world. "I look, I listen. But in the end, I know it's my story. Not Kamau's, not Kenya's. Those stories have yet to be heard."

Everyone on the panel — which included Bell, showrunner Sandy Zweig, and Bourdain's longtime producing partners Chris Collins and Lydia Tenaglia — agreed that Bourdain's priority on "Parts Unknown" and beyond was to step back and let the country and the people he was visiting take the spotlight.

Bourdain, 61, committed suicide June 8 in a hotel room in France.

Collins, who admitted that watching the new episodes is now "difficult," described how Bourdain's approach to making travel shows changed over the years.

"For him, it began as a ruse. Over time, it turned into a job. Then, it turned into a profession. Then, it turned into a life's work."

Theroux on Aniston split: Justin Theroux spoke out for the first time on his split from Jennifer Aniston. Theroux, 47, may have called it quits with Aniston, but the actor was quick to explain that their breakup was far from bitter. "The good news is that it was kind of the most gentle separation, in that there was no animosity," he told The New York Times. Aniston, 49, and Theroux announced their separation in February.

'White Album' 50th anniversary: As the 50th anniversary approaches of the release of the Beatles' iconic self-titled ninth studio album, known as "The White Album," the group announced on Monday that on Nov. 9 it will release "a suite of lavishly presented packages." The album's 30 tracks are newly mixed by producer Giles Martin, son of original album producer George Martin, joined by 27 early acoustic demos and 50 session takes.

Relative blamed for murder charge

Dear Amy: My 21-year-old grandson, who lives in another state, has let it be known to everyone that I'm responsible for his mother facing a murder charge. When the police phoned to inform me that my daughter was missing and was being sought in a murder case, I answered all of their questions truthfully, fearing that she might have also been shot.

I was in shock and volunteered some information that I should not have, such as that my daughter had previously made threats against the victim.

I had no idea my comments on the phone were being recorded. Now they are part of the pretrial transcripts, and my words will be used against my daughter in court. My grandson, who is almost like a son to me, always looked up to me.

That he would now denigrate my reputation among family members is extremely hurtful. I'm already devastated that my daughter would commit such a horrible act. Should I try to make him understand that I thought I was doing the right thing at the time, trying to give the police enough information to help locate his mother before the unfolding tragedy was compounded?

Or should I not try to explain myself and hope time will heal this rift?

— Heartbroken

Dear Heartbroken: You are not responsible for your daughter facing a murder charge — she is.

I hope you won't apologize for telling the truth to law enforcement. Please think of the victim. That person's family deserves the truth and for their family member's accused murderer to face justice. To a large extent, you are all victims, because (if she is guilty) your daughter's actions have destroyed two families.

Understand this: Your grandson is acting out. Tell him you understand he is hurting because you are hurting, too. Remind him that you love him — you always have and always will — and that you cannot understand or defend his mother's actions. Tell him you know that he loves and is loyal to his mother and that his love and loyalty will help her. Reiterate that you told the truth to law enforcement because it was the right thing to do and that you don't regret being honest.

Face this with as much courage as you can muster. You are all going to need it.

Dear Amy: My partner and I have created an unplanned but wonderful child who will soon be a year old. My partner's family has invited the three of us over several times, and each time I have to say no. Their home reeks of smoke, is crammed with junk from wall to wall and is filthy. To make matters worse, the neglect of their many animals borders (if not crosses) the lines of abuse. The "man of the house" is a drunk who tells perverted jokes and is always angry.

I cannot and will not subject my baby to these conditions, and while my partner understands, it does hurt him. His mother is unwilling to visit us for more than a few minutes before darting out the door. She also shoots down every invitation to meet for coffee or at the park.

Should I approach this bluntly, or should I continue trying to skirt around the true problem out of fear of offending and ruining the minimal relationship we do have? How do I let them know that my child comes first?

— Mama Bear

Dear Mama: Your partner's folks might be dealing with more than the man's drinking. His mother might be agoraphobic, or struggling with another illness that makes her anxious to leave her own home for long.

Tell her, "The pets and cigarette smoke are too much for the baby to handle, but I'd love to meet you anywhere, any time — and of course you are always welcome here."

You or your partner should try to intervene concerning the animal hoarding in their home; these animals don't have the option you have to stay away. Deal with your partner lovingly and without harsh judgment.

Dear Amy: "Curious" wanted to know if it is OK to take sample-size toiletries from the hotel. The answer is yes, as you noted. I donate my extras to our local homeless shelter.

— Well-Traveled

Dear Well-Traveled: Many readers made this excellent suggestion. I will do the same with my extras.

named one of the "top 40 Chicago restaurants ever" by Chicago magazine in 2010 — operated by a female chef named Fanny Lazar from the 1940s to the 1980s. "I remembered going there and thinking this is such an exciting place, more like attending a show than a restaurant," says York. "At a time when the Rehoboth dining scene was all burgers and fries on the boardwalk, we started the sort of farm-to-table operation that Alice Waters was pioneering at her Chez Panisse, in Berkeley," Calif.

That was in 1974 and the Back Porch is still in operation. But in the early 1980s, York left the business and her marriage and went to New York City to sing. "It was as if music chose me more than I chose it. Song lyrics were always in my head," she says. "I lived in a summer sublet in Greenwich Village and there was nothing in there except a piano and a bed."

She proved a natural and began to get work — "I had gigs before I really knew what was going on," she says — but she also began to formally study voice (with, among others, the great Abbey Lincoln), and piano, and supplemented her singing income with various "straight" jobs, among them serving as a production assistant for "Saturday Night Live."

"But most of my training has been on the bandstand in front of an audience," she says. "It's really a trial by fire but you learn very quickly what works and what doesn't."

She began to spend some winter months in Key West, Fla., where she found a lively jazz scene and some memorable moments, among them singing for the writer Tennessee Williams at the Rose Tattoo, a place named for one of his plays. "I put a rose on his plate," says York.

KRISTEN NORMAN/FOR THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Libby York, here at Winter's Jazz Club in June, didn't consider music as a career until later in life.

There was also the dinner party at which Leonard Bernstein asked her to sing "some blues" with him and they sat together at a piano for a rendition of Billie Holiday's "Fine and Mellow." She split her time between New York and Key West and, for a few years in the mid-1990s, here, where there were also special moments. "Given the huge influence that Frank (D'Rone) had on me when I was young, it was a dream for me to have later become friends with him and his wife Joan and tell him what his music meant to me. I got to singing duets with him."

She has sung in all the country's top venues and internationally, especially in Paris. She has released CDs; in addition to "Blue Gardenia," there is "Sunday in New York," "Here With You" and "Memoir" (libbyyork.com). There has been a pile of praise: "A jazz singer of cool composure and artful subtlety" (New York Times) and "Stylish and cosmopolitan with a broad streak of lush life urbanity" (DownBeat). It's been a rich and rewarding career.

But in 2014, her longtime partner (in life and on stages), the drummer Greg Sergo, died. She then decided to again make Chicago her permanent home. Appearing at Winter's Jazz Club earlier this year, she was filled with her typical enthusiasm and charm and told me, "I find such joy on stage, more than ever. I suppose because I didn't start this career until I was 35 it took me a while to really believe this is who I am, this is what I was meant to do."

A few weeks ago, she elaborated, "I am digging it more than ever. I have never considered myself a star but rather part of a band, only as good as those playing with me, and there are so many great players here.

"My approach to jazz has never focused on nostalgia, even though I have sometimes been called one of the 'keepers of the flame.' I appreciate how Rosemary Clooney once described herself, 'A singer of fine songs who works with jazz musicians.' Jazz is of the moment and I never want to sing a song the same way twice."

Vocalist Libby York Birthday Bash is 8 and 10 p.m. Wednesday at the Jazz Showcase, 806 S. Plymouth Court, www.jazzshowcase.com.

A playground for that perfect selfie imported art installation that was a hit during its most recent mounting in New York, "Let's Survive Forever," an "infinity mirror room" by octogenarian Japanese artist Yayoi Kusama. You have to remove your shoes to enter this standard-sized room stuffed carefully with scores of mirror balls and lined with mirror walls that will make for some eye-popping shots — and pose a great challenge in trying to keep your camera out of the image.

I am not, you've probably gathered, the target audience for this place. I've only been to one of its predecessors, which have names like the Museum of Ice Cream, Dream Machine and, most recently in Chicago, Happy Place. I did not, alas, see the 2015-16 legitimate museum exhibition "Wonder" at the Renwick Gallery in Washington, D.C., that "shattered attendance records" there, according to the Washington Post, and that some credit with cementing this whole trend.

And while I do have an Instagram account, it is so dormant that it would be sound medical judgment to just pull the sheet up over its face already. I looked it up for this review and discovered that I have posted exactly one picture there, a 2013 shot of a passing freight train taken from the Green Line "L" platform. It has a paltry 15 likes.

So, correct, I cannot imagine rounding up a group of my middle-aged pals and paying $32 apiece to spend an hour or so practicing our selfie and other iPhone camera skills as we wander — the name "wndr" is intended to evoke both "wander" and "wonder" — from chamber to chamber.

But I toured the Happy Place this summer while it was still open (i.e., before it popped back down), and I watched the squads of young adults there having a seeming great time striking poses and concocting images. These people are native speakers of the language of reflexive self-celebration, and a place like this seems to make perfect sense to them.

And I toured wndr museum shortly before it opened Friday and was impressed by the fullness of it. Happy Museum had some great sets, including a room where the visitor appeared to be growing amid a field of flowers, for instance, and another doing the old furniture-on-the-ceiling trick. But the raw warehouse surroundings and the pathways between the rooms were threadbare. It felt pop-up.

Wndr museum, which organizers say has an open-ended run and may evolve over time, is much more polished all the way through, with connective tissue between the rooms and little science facts sprinkled throughout. Did you know that the Earth is not a perfect sphere? Now you do. And have you ever seen the influential Chicago short film "Powers of Ten," by the designers Charles and Ray Eames? It plays on an array of video screens as you enter wndr museum, setting a tone for a journey from the infinitesimal to the infinite.

The place was not so well put together when it was about to open Aug. 17, the time of an apparent dispute between the two men originally announced as the museum's progenitors, the Chicago tech millionaire Brad Keywell and Toronto food scientist Irwin Adam Eydelnant.

Keywell dismissed Eydelnant from the project, said a spokeswoman who said she was not allowed to be quoted by name, because of his disappointment over the state of the museum at that point.

"While (Eydelnant) was hired to help create the museum, it didn't work out," she said.

She said, too, that Eydelnant was "just a contractor" and that Keywell "has always been the creative director."

This seems a stretch. I haven't seen the contracts detailing the business relationships, but a July news release for the museum from the spokeswoman's own firm, Chicago's Skoog Productions, lists the two as "co-creators." And Eydelnant was the public face of the project when he toured me and a Tribune photographer through it in the days before the original opening date.

For his comment on the separation, Eydelnant responded with a statement of his own, via email: "My commitment to bring wndr museum to life pre launch was completed in August, and I have since moved on to other projects that I'll be happy to share when appropriate. I am excited to have co-created the foundation of this project and for the experiences visitors will have at wndr museum. My studio and I wish the best to the wndr team for a successful exhibition," he wrote.

This all came to an apparent head the night of the VIP preopening party, Aug. 15. The museum stopped selling tickets and then, the next day, announced it would now be opening a month later, Sept. 21, refunding or reissuing the more than 10,000 tickets it said had already been sold.

The reason for the postponement, spokespeople said, was that trying to hang a heavy kinetic sculpture from the roof revealed a leak that needed repair. That sculpture is no longer part of the museum, nor is Eydelnant's signature food science, puffs of vapor that he can make into any flavor.

Whatever was happening backstage, "the leak was a blessing in disguise," the spokeswoman said, one that allowed organizers to "fix the leak, then really fix the experience."

It seems to be working. Already, after opening weekend, Instagram is being populated with some vivid shots featuring the hashtag #wndrmuseum. Tickets, which are released a month at a time, are sold out on the weekends during its first run of ticket availability, ending Oct. 22. (Future ticket releases will be announced on the museum's social media accounts.)

And for its intended audience, wndr museum seems poised to deliver a vivid experience that is more museum-lite than museum, but is also, arguably, more focused on delivering pure sensory pleasure. Just be sure to clear out enough storage before you go.

Wndr museum is in an open run at 1130 W. Monroe St.; tickets: $32 at wndrmuseum.com

WATCH THIS: TUESDAY

Ryan Eggold

"New Amsterdam" (9:01 p.m., NBC): Just because an actor is "killed off" a show doesn't mean he can't resurface in another, as "The Blacklist" alum Ryan Eggold proves by assuming the lead in this new drama. He plays the medical director of the title hospital and as he assumes the job, he challenges conventional thinking about delivering the best-possible patient care despite gaps in staffing and funding.

"NCIS" (7 p.m., CBS): Season 16 of this venerable procedural premieres with "Destiny's Child," which picks up the action a month after the kidnapping of NCIS Director Leon Vance (Rocky Carroll). With his boss's whereabouts and fate unknown, Gibbs (Mark Harmon) is tapped to fill the role of acting director, while McGee, Bishop, Torres (Sean Murray, Emily Wickersham, Wilmer Valderrama) and the rest of his team conduct a frantic worldwide search. Pej Vahdal guest stars.

"The Gifted" (7 p.m., FOX): Reva Payge (Grace Byers) purges the inner Circle of all her opponents in the Season 2 premiere, "eMergence." Six months later, the Mutant Underground has relocated to Washington.D.C., where Sentinel Services has stepped up its search for mutants.. Over the objections of their colleagues, Eclipse and Caitlin (Sean Teale, Amy Acker) meet with a criminal hacker, seeking useful intel on the Inner Circle.

"FBI" (8 p.m., CBS): CBS certainly knows how to do crime procedurals, as does "Law & Order" mentor Dick Wolf, so this new teaming seems like a match made in series heaven. "L&O" veteran Jeremy Sisto and "Rookie Blue" alum Missy Peregrym return to ... well, law and order as New York-based federal agents trying to protect a city and country facing modern threats from every angle.

"Lethal Weapon" (8 p.m., FOX): Murtaugh (Damon Wayans) gets a new partner in former CIA operative Wesley Cole (new series regular Seann William Scott) as this hit police drama returns for Season 3. The erstwhile agent returns from abroad to start his new duties with the Los Angeles Police Department, but in his own way, Cole is just as much a fish out of water as Murtaugh's previous partner.

"Mr Inbetween" (10:26 p.m., 1 a.m., FX): This new Australian import, which premieres tonight with two back-to-back half-hour episodes, revolves mainly around ex-convict Ray Shoesmith (Scott Ryan), who plays many roles in his life, most pertinently as a criminal for hire. In the series premiere, "The Pee Pee Guy," Ray takes the fall for a buddy, and later a meeting in the park produces a new apprentice.

JEOPARDY PRODUCTIONS

Vincent Valenzuela, of Wheaton, returns Tuesday on "Jeopardy."

Wheaton man gets another shot at 'Jeopardy'

By Tracy Swartz
Chicago Tribune

Wheaton resident Vincent Valenzuela, who lost "Jeopardy" because of a typo in the text of a "Final Jeopardy" clue, gets a chance at redemption on Tuesday's episode.

Valenzuela was in the lead heading into "Final Jeopardy" on the July 13 episode. The final clue was "This slang term for an environmentalist is literally true of groups that used passive resistance vs. deforestation, as in India in 1973."

"Jeopardy" host Alex Trebek correctly read the clue, but Valenzuela said the clue text posted on the screen for the contestants read: "His slang term..."

Valenzuela initially wrote down "tree hugger" — the correct answer — but after re-reading the clue, scratched that out and guessed "Carl Sagan." The other two contestants wrote down "tree hugger." Valenzuela wagered enough that if he had stuck with "tree hugger," he would have won the episode. Instead he finished in third place.

Valenzuela, an internal customer service manager who works in Rolling Meadows, was invited back to "Jeopardy" in July to tape the episode that is scheduled to air at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday on WLS-Ch. 7.

"I've been watching 'Jeopardy' since I was 10, and it's my favorite quiz show ever," Valenzuela told the Tribune in July.

How the Orwells were brought down band members over the years. More and more women began privately messaging Kmet on social media, confiding in her and she said giving permission for their anonymous accusations to be added to the document.

Soon, the Google document grew to 20 pages. Then 30. Then almost 40 pages alleging at least 15 different episodes of misconduct, all involving some members of the Orwells.

As the allegations spread on social media of some band members' alleged aggressive, inappropriate behavior at concerts as well as the use of homophobic and transphobic language, the Orwells' Metro show was canceled. The band released a statement "emphatically denying" all of the allegations that surfaced on social media. Three band members, Mario Cuomo (vocals), Grant Brinner (bass) and Henry Brinner (drums), were specifically named in these allegations. None have been charged with a crime. Guitarists Matt O'Keefe and Dominic Corso were not named. Former members of the Orwells, their representatives and family members have not responded to requests for comment as of press time.

Kmet, who was a fan of the Orwells as a teen, was not prepared for the traction the Google document would gain, or the power it would have on the band's reputation and career.

Anonymous, informal, crowdsourced documents created as a platform to warn women about alleged abusers in their industry are a relatively recent phenomenon. In October 2017, journalist Moira Donegan created a Google spreadsheet called "S----- Media Men" that collected a range of rumors and allegations of sexual misconduct. After facing backlash, Donegan revealed her identity in a column for New York Magazine's The Cut, writing that her decision to create the spreadsheet was an attempt to "solve what has seemed like an intractable problem: how women can protect ourselves from sexual harassment and assault."

Donegan was growing weary of the ongoing "whisper network" shared by women in every industry, she wrote, and at its inception, she wrongly believed "the focus would be on the behavior described in the document, rather than on the document itself." Critics called it irresponsible, as the reputations of more than 70 men in the industry were at stake when anonymous accusations were made without any accountability. Donegan apologized in The Cut editorial, and recognized the flaws of the effort. But her actions may have inspired more anonymous lists to be shared in other cities, industries and scenes.

A similar spreadsheet circulated on social media in late 2017, this time naming men in academia and alleged sexual harassment. The document was created in November by Karen Kelsky, a former anthropology professor at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Linked to her blog, the list contains more than 2,000 anonymous anecdotes that describe a wide range of alleged harassment at universities.

Kmet said she was not aware of these previous lists, but instead found inspiration in anonymous Tumblr posts. Madeline Heuer, a 20-year-old student at a Chicago university and friend of Kmet who helped edit the Orwells document, was familiar with the whisper network among Chicago's DIY (musicians who handle all aspects of their band themselves, without management or labels) performance scene.

From graffiti in the bathroom at Cole's dive bar to posts by anonymous Tumblr users — the Orwells had a less-than-stellar reputation in Chicago, Heuer says. Between 2014 and 2017, the young band gained success — performing at Lollapalooza, Riot Fest and on the "Late Show With David Letterman." But members of the Orwells acknowledged their reputation, naming the band's 2017 album "Terrible Human Beings."

"I thought the band was fading out of popularity, and I think that had to do with the undercurrent of people in Chicago knowing about their behavior," Heuer says. "But there was no public forum to submit stories, and the DIY scene relies on secrecy, of course. There is secrecy for wanting to protect the people who run spaces and respect the punk scene."

Heuer and Kmet admit the Google platform is not ideal.

"I think it could be really dangerous, and I don't think an anonymous Google doc should be the standard," Kmet told the Tribune. "Someone could use it as a personal vendetta, but it's sad that people would abuse that."

Loretta Stalans, professor of criminal justice and criminology/psychology at Loyola University Chicago, has cautioned against anonymous crowdsourced documents. With her research in gender studies, social justice and sexual violence in the courts, Stalans says the platform gives power to the structural nature of technology, which allows the documents to spread inexplicably fast.

"From an ethical point of view, it is unfair to the individuals being accused," Stalans says. "We need to be concerned more about changing the culture of these industries and workplace norms, and the assumptions that allow people to take advantage of individuals without repercussions in the first place."

Creators of a Google document could also potentially face legal action, such as a defamation lawsuit, explains Daliah Saper, an attorney and founder of Saper Law in Chicago.

"Everyone is using the internet as a sword," Saper says. "If (the allegations) are true, then great — these women are doing a public service. If some of them are not true, they have effectively ruined the reputation of (some) men with a keystroke. Once you have been accused of sexual assault it is hard to come back from that."

Stalans says that in the #MeToo era, anonymous documents do not necessarily address the societal problem around the privilege of men and mistreatment of women.

Kmet and Heuer say their intention was for the document to be a safe space for women to come forward, and they hoped the allegations would ensure that the Orwells never played music again. On Aug. 29 when the band announced it was disbanding, Heuer said it felt "amazing" to see the news in headlines.

"Girls have been saying to me personally, 'Thank you so much what you've done,' " Kmet added. "A lot of girls feel so much better even knowing (these allegations) took years to come forward."

"I just wanted to make sure the public knew this information and that the Orwells could never have careers where they are in a position of power around young girls," she says. "I am a drummer in a rock band, and I don't want people to think that is what punk is about. Punk is about being open and giving a safe place to women."

Many of the anonymous contributors to the Google document said they felt afraid to come forward publicly for fear of retaliation from band members.

"I think there is a challenge to come forward, but the anonymity aspect protects from potential counterclaims, potential blame and self-blame," Stallans says. "Anonymity allows one to not have any consequences for what they say or do. It protects the person, but doesn't change societal norms. Indeed at the end of the day, (it) might hinder that process."

A lack of education and information about other resources, such as support groups for survivors of sexual abuse, might account for the rise in anonymous documents says Stallans. Proper resources can provide survivors with confidence publicly to come forward, and possibly seek legal action.

Kmet and Heuer say even after the band's breakup women are still messaging them on social media, sharing their stories. It's been overwhelming for them as they've transitioned into supportive roles.

Alex Manley, a 19-year-old student at Columbia College Chicago and a member of the DIY music scene, got involved with sharing the Google document. Manley has since started a support group for victims of sexual assault within the DIY scene, which will meet monthly in her Logan Square apartment.

"(The allegations against the Orwells and other bands have) all reached a breaking point, similar to the #MeToo movement," Manley says. "It goes on for so many years, once women start to talk to each other and realize they are all victims of similar situations, a lot of the time, it has taken victims to initiate the change."

Today's deal is from a recent match between a team from the USA and a team from Monaco. Both tables arrived in four hearts, after different auctions, but East bid clubs at both tables — one player opening the bidding and the other overcalling.

At the table where East had opened one club, the Monaco declarer thought it safe to put in dummy's jack of clubs at trick one. He ruffed East's queen, crossed to dummy with the king of hearts, and discarded two diamonds on the ace-king of clubs. Declarer now led a spade, but the defense was in control. They could shift to diamonds from either side or continue clubs from East. They forced South to ruff two more times and West's fourth trump became the setting trick.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♣	Pass	1♥	Pass
1NT	2♣	4♥	All pass

Opening lead: Three of ♣

At this table, where East had shown long clubs, the USA's John Hurd was South. He rose with dummy's ace of clubs at trick one and continued with the king of clubs, shedding two diamonds from his hand. He now led a spade from dummy. East rose with his king and shifted to the king of diamonds, but Hurd was in control. He won with his ace and led another spade. The 3-3 spade split made it easy, but he could have ruffed a spade with dummy's king of hearts if he needed to. Different roads to different destinations.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 25 NORMAL HIGH: 71° NORMAL LOW: 50° RECORD HIGH: 90° (1933) RECORD LOW: 30° (1942)

Approaching cold front to bring storm threat

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
80	52

■ Influx of warm, humid air raises severe weather potential as cold front nears.

■ Clouds dominate area skies early. Scattered showers and a few t-storms possible through the morning commute.

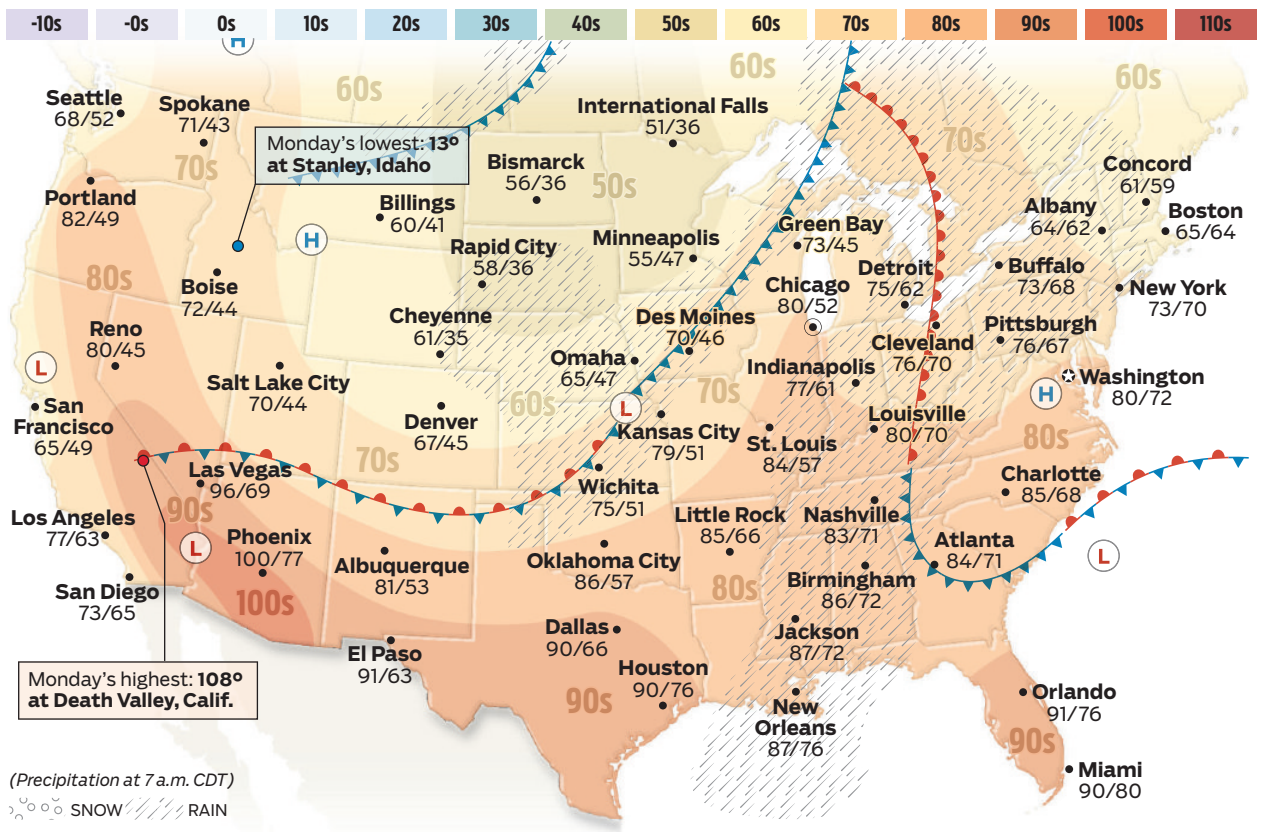
■ SW winds increase to 15 to 25 mph sweeping tropical air into the region.

■ Turing partly sunny midday. Temps rise to around 80 degrees, making the air unstable.

■ Scattered storms in the afternoon, becoming more numerous in the evening.

■ Partial clearing, cooler, less humid air as a cold front passes overnight.

NATIONAL FORECAST



Satellite imagery Monday evening showed a large mass of cloudiness from east Texas to the Great Lakes. Though most of the rain from these clouds is expected to fall well to our south and east, some spotty showers, and possibly an isolated thunderstorm, may occur across the metro area early Tuesday morning.

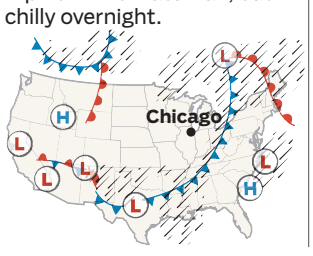
Clouds are forecast to break heading into the afternoon, allowing periods of sunshine and boosting temperatures to around 80 degrees. Humidity levels will also be on the rise.

Building instability will likely fuel more thunderstorms in the late afternoon and evening. The Storm Prediction Center has placed northeast Illinois, and portions of adjacent states, in a slight risk area for severe thunderstorms, but the risk category may be upgraded. Damaging winds and large hail appear to be the primary threats.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26

HIGH	LOW
66	49

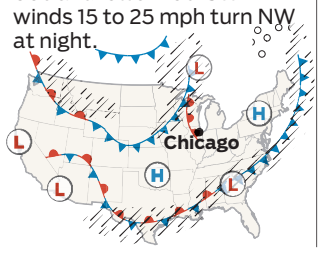
Partly sunny, noticeably cooler and less humid. Temps slowly climb to afternoon highs in the mid 60s. NW-W winds 15-25 mph diminish late. Fair, but chilly overnight.



THURSDAY, SEPT. 27

HIGH	LOW
71	51

Early sunshine fades as clouds increase during the afternoon. Breezy, with seasonable temps. Readings peak in the upper 60s and lower 70s. SW winds 15 to 25 mph turn NW at night.



FRIDAY, SEPT. 28

HIGH	LOW

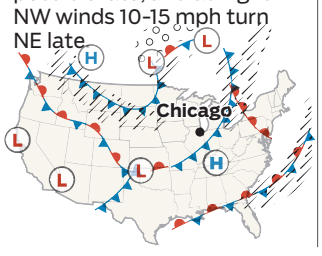
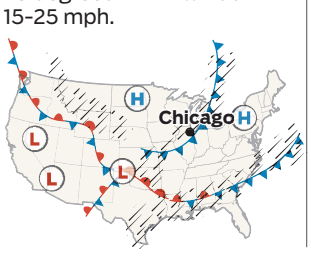
Fresh push of cool air arrives in the wake of our latest cold front. Peeks of sun emerge from otherwise gray skies. Light showers possible late, and at night. NW winds 10-15 mph turn NE late.



SATURDAY, SEPT. 29

HIGH	LOW
69	52

Considerable cloudiness with a chance of rain early, then peeks of sun emerge. Brisk, and seasonably cool. Afternoon temps hover near 70 degrees. N-NE winds 15-25 mph.



SUNDAY, SEPT. 30

HIGH	LOW
71	58

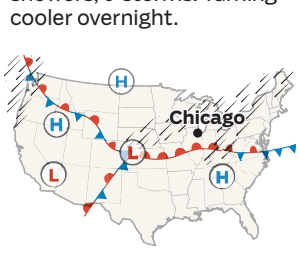
MONDAY, OCT. 1

HIGH	LOW
78	57

Breezy and warmer. Temps rise to near 80 degrees as SW winds increase to 15-25 mph. Mostly cloudy skies bring a good chance of showers, t-storms. Turning cooler overnight.



ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

As a matter of curiosity, what is the record for consecutive days of steadily rising high temperatures in Chicago? I'm guessing it's about seven days.

— Mark Sheven, Chicago

Dear Mark,

Your guess is low! In official temperature records from Nov. 1, 1870 (the start of Chicago's temperature database), through the present date, the longest string of rising high temperatures is 11 days. And it happened a long time ago. Beginning on April 22 and continuing through May 2 of 1901, daily high temperatures rose from 40 degrees on April 22 to 87 degrees on May 2. The highs, beginning on April 22, were 40, 50, 53, 55, 61, 67, 73, 76, 83, 85 and 87. You required that temperatures "rise" each day over the previous day's high. If the criterion is changed to "steady" or "rising," the string would extend to 14 days. Highs from April 19 through 21 were 38, 38, 40.
