Trump: 2nd accuser 'has nothing'

President calls Democratic push to block Kavanaugh a 'con job'

BY ALAN FRAM AND LISA MASCARO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump denounced Democratic efforts to block Brett Kavanaugh's Supreme Court confirmation as a cynical "con job" Tuesday and launched a dismissive attack on a second woman accusing the nominee of sexual misconduct in the 1980s, asserting she "has nothing."

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell predicted that Kavanaugh would win approval, despite the new allegations and uncertainty about how pivotal Republicans would vote in a roll call now expected next week. Like much of America, lawmakers awaited a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing Thursday in which Kavanaugh and chief accuser Christine Blasey Ford are to testify.

"I will be glued to the television," said Sen. Susan Collins, a moderate Republican from Maine who has yet to declare her position on confirmation.

Hoping for no new surprises, the committee scheduled its own vote on Kavanaugh for Friday, and Republican leaders laid plans that could keep the full Senate in session over the weekend and produce a final showdown roll call soon after — close to the Oct. 1 start of the high court's new term.

Sen. Chuck Grassley of Iowa, Republican chairman of the committee whose 11 GOP members are all male, said his panel was hiring a female attorney who would ask Ford his party's questions on Thursday. He declined to name her.

"We're doing it strictly to depoliticize the whole operation, to offer Dr. Ford the professional environment she asked for," Grassley said of Ford, now a 51-year-old psychology professor in Northern California.

Democrats weren't buying that.

"My gut is they're trying to avoid a panel of all white guys asking tone-deaf questions," said Sen. Chris Coons of Delaware.

Judge benched following complaint

Cook County jurist allegedly insulted female prosecutor

BY TODD LIGHTY
Chicago Tribune

A veteran Cook County criminal judge has been reassigned to administrative duties following a complaint from the state's attorney's office that he referred to a female prosecutor as "a bitch" and then suggested he may have had sex with her, records show.

Judge Mauricio Araujo allegedly became upset when the female prosecutor, a law school classmate some 25 years ago, did not acknowledge him when she entered his courtroom earlier this month. That's according to a complaint that State's Attorney Kim Foxx sent a week later to Araujo's boss, LeRoy K. Martin Jr., the presiding judge for the court's criminal division.

On Thursday, Martin issued a one-sentence order removing Araujo from courtroom duty. The order did not state a reason for the reassignment, and Martin did not respond to requests for comment this week.

Araujo, 53, told the Tribune on Monday night that he "did not call her bitch. I do not believe I did."

In the letter to Martin, Foxx said she had concerns about Araujo's behavior, as Defense video shows teen near cop, omits shots

At the murder trial's start, Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke's attorney promised an animated video of the Laquan McDonald shooting from the patrolman's perspective while confidently predicting that the computer-generated model would help justify the events of that deadly night.

The four-minute animation was finally played Tuesday for a Cook County jury, but what it doesn't include could end up being just as important as the new vantage point it displays.

The defense video does not show McDonald raising a knife to his shoulder and menacing officers with the weapon, as Van Dyke's partner testified last week. Nor does it show McDonald, 17, lifting the knife across his chest and pointing it at the officers, as Van Dyke told investigators following the shooting.

It also omits most of the 16 bullets that struck McDonald, including all shots fired by the officer after the teen had fallen to

Cosby gets 3 to 10 years in '04 assault

Pa. judge sends disgraced comic straight to prison

BY MARYCLAIRE DALE AND MICHAEL R. SISAK
Associated Press

NORRISTOWN, Pa. — His Hollywood career and good-guy image in ruins, Bill Cosby was led away to prison in handcuffs Tuesday at age 81 for perhaps the rest of his days, sentenced to three to 10 years behind bars for drugging and sexually assaulting a woman at his gated estate.

The punishment made him the first celebrity of the #MeToo era to be sent to prison and completed the dizzying, late-in-life fall from grace for the comedian, TV star and breaker of racial barriers.

"It is time for justice. Mr. Cosby, this has all circled back to you. The time has come," Montgomery County Judge Steven O'Neill said.

He quoted from victim Andrea Constand's statement to the court, in which she said Cosby took her "beautiful, young spirit and crushed it."

Cosby declined to speak before the sentence came down, and afterward sat laughing and chatting with his defense team. His wife of 54 years, Camille, was not in court.

Constand smiled upon hearing the punishment and was hugged by others in the courtroom.

In a blistering statement, Cosby spokesman Andrew Wyatt said the comic legend was subjected to "most racist and sexist trial in the history of the United States."

Among other things, Wyatt said all three of the

The illness deep within the bones of the republic

It is tempting to watch the political spectacle of Democrats destroying Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh as if it were only some shameful partisan circus.

Something brutally Roman with a howling mob, blood on the sand; or something medieval, like trial by ordeal, with a mace and an axe and the might of brutes as the elements of God's will.

Or, better yet, a drama as Spanish as the Inquisition itself.

Because what we're seeing in the Kavanaugh circus isn't American, where until very recently — like a few months ago — the accused was given the presumption of innocence.

All that has changed. Now the accused is forced to prove his innocence before accusers who must be believed, accusers who aren't expected to bring witnesses, accusers who must not under any circumstance be subject to rigorous cross-examination, before judges who have already made up their minds.

What we're witnessing is the symptom of an illness now deep within the very bones of our republic.

It threatens Republicans now, and Democrats tomorrow. It will threaten even those who don't give two figs for politics and see all such talk as lies told by knaves to fools.

What we are seeing are founding American principles being swept — among them the presumption of innocence and the rights of the accused — to feed the appetites of power politics

That's what Kavanaugh is dealing with, having to testify and defend himself against uncorroborated allegations of sexual predation 36 years ago, when he was in high school and in his freshman year of college.

The short-term politics of all this is quite clear, a movement led by cynics and assisted by their handmaidens in the Democratic Media Complex.

It is designed to convince suburban women voters that Republicans are hateful creatures, help Democrats pick up congressional seats in the November midterm elections and do away with President Donald Trump.

But look deeper and you'll see something else.

The sweeping away of traditions that have been carefully nurtured from the founding of this nation, to protect individual liberty and shield us from the passions of the mob.

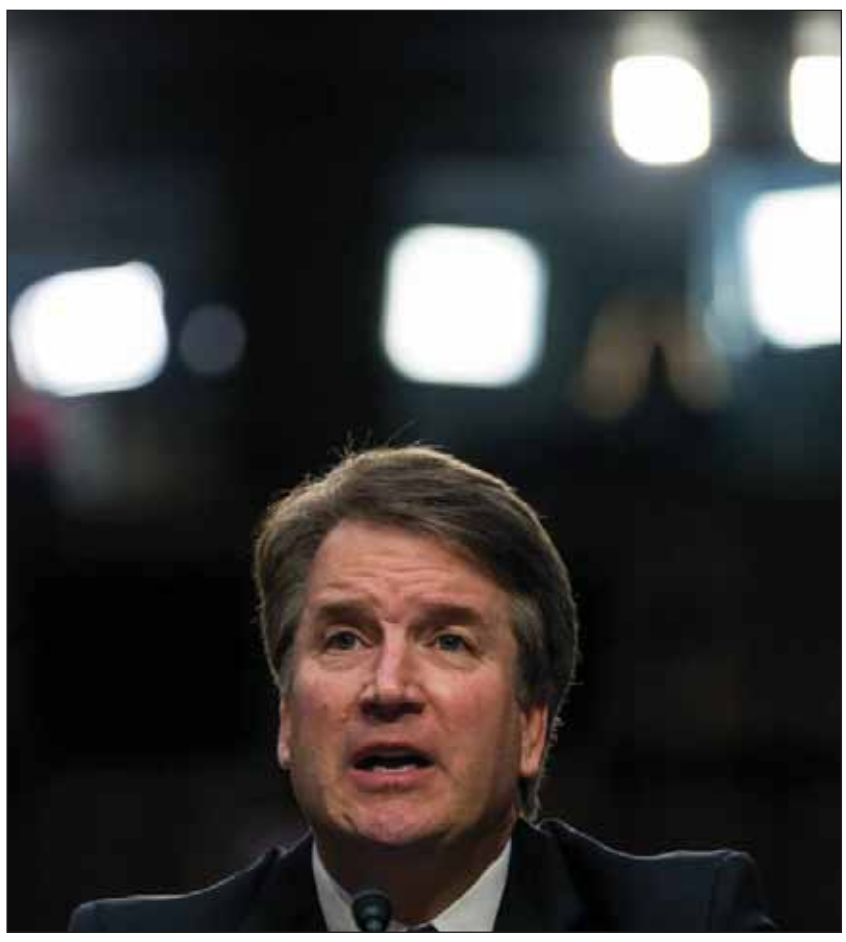
Without these principles, we are no longer a republic.

To prove the point, Hawaii Democratic Sen. Mazie Hirono insisted the other day that Kavanaugh's accusers not only "need to be heard, they need to be believed."

But asked by CNN's Jake Tapper if Kavanaugh should have the same presumption of innocence as other Americans, here is what Sen. Hirono, a lawyer, said: "I put his denial in the context of everything that I know about him in terms of how he approaches his cases."

In other words, Kavanaugh's legal decisions on unrelated matters make him guilty of sexual predation, and therefore, he is disqualified.

That is the reasoning of magistrates in the trials of Salem, that is the logic of Torquemada's Spain, not the principles of the United States of America.



ANDREW HARNIK/AP

President Donald Trump's Supreme Court nominee, Brett Kavanaugh, speaks before the Senate Judiciary Committee earlier this month.

Sen. Hirono says she supports women. But I wonder about American women who are the mothers of boys, women who are the wives of husbands, women who have brothers. Doesn't what's happening to Kavanaugh concern them?

A few days ago, there was that story in The New Yorker, that while a freshman at Yale, Kavanaugh exposed himself at a party to a female student, Deborah Ramirez, who couldn't remember seeing him do it.

The story offered no corroborating eyewitnesses, only hearsay. And still it was published, providing cover for political operatives to peel Kavanaugh's skin.

Even the New York Times, the great gray liberal battleship in America's cultural/political wars, wouldn't touch it. The newspaper explained:

"The New York Times had interviewed several dozen people over the past week to corroborate Ms. Ramirez's story, and could find no one with firsthand knowledge. Ms. Ramirez herself contacted former Yale classmates asking if they recalled the episode and told some of them that she could not be certain Mr. Kavanaugh was the one who exposed himself."

No firsthand knowledge? And even the alleged victim was unsure it was Kavanaugh? Then why run it?

But it was published in The New Yorker. And it was defended by the same journalistic class that wonders, publicly, why Americans hold journalism in such low esteem.

This is what happens when tradition and principle is swept away and are subjugated to politics.

As if to mitigate its sin for avoiding the Yale story, The New York Times offers an account of Kavanaugh's high school yearbook, and the lusty commentary from high school boys who drink beer.

Those of us who were once high school boys may dimly recall that lust was on our minds, oh, every 30 seconds or so, in those rare moments when physics or baseball didn't intrude upon the urgent requirements of biology.

Now, I don't know what happened 36 years ago between Kavanaugh and his accuser, Christine Blasey Ford. And I don't know what happened at Yale in that drunken dorm room party. I refuse to condemn the women making the accusations.

Witnesses might help us understand, but as I write this, they don't exist.

And as Sen. Hirono and her Democratic colleagues insist, witnesses are irrelevant.

And this is damning.

Somewhere in America, there must be Democrats who read John F. Kennedy's "Profiles in Courage" when they were children, Democrats who must be sickened by what is happening and would speak out.

But they must be afraid, lest they, too, are denounced and devoured.

Theirs is a silence breaking the bones of America.

We reap what we sow.

A 9-year-old girl asks for writing tips. Here are 10.

MARY SCHMICH

A while back I received a pressing letter from a 9-year-old girl.

Dear Aunt Mary,

When I heard that you were a writer I was soooooooo exited! Because when I grow up I want to be a writer. So I want to ask if you could send me some tips on writing?

I want to write children's books. Thank you very much!

Love,

Adelaide

Could I send her some tips on writing? Doesn't she know there's nothing a writer would rather do than tell other people how to do it?

When Adelaide grows up to be a writer she'll understand that offering advice is soooooooo much less stressful than writing a novel or, oh, a newspaper column on a day so packed with news it's hard to know where to start.

So, yes, yes, yes, I would send her some writing tips.

But my eagerness to advise doesn't mean that answering Adelaide's letter was easy. I solicited tips from my Facebook friends. I mused on the topic, which is a writerly way to say I procrastinated.

Finally, I cobbled together a few thoughts aimed at a 9-year-old. On the chance that my reply might apply to other age groups too, I'm sharing it today:

Dear Adelaide,

I loved your letter asking for advice on how to be a writer. I'm sorry it's taken me so long to respond. I've been trying to write the perfect answer, which I finally realized leads me to my first writing tip:

Stop thinking about writing. Just write. Forget perfection. Just write.

Here are a few more tips:

Read, read, read.

Notice what you like about what you're reading. The characters? The language? The plot?

Write, write, write.

Write a story. Write a letter. Keep a journal. Anything. Just write.

Ask yourself: What am I thinking about? Talking about? Write about that.

What are you talking about with your mom? Your dad? Your siblings? Your friends?

What are you thinking about that you never talk about with anyone? WRITE ABOUT THAT!

Observe the people you know. Listen to the way they talk. Write about them.

The people in your life will make good characters.

If you were going to write a fictional story about your mom, what would you name her?

MARY SCHMICH/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Adelaide Schmich, 9, recently wrote Tribune columnist Mary Schmich asking for writing tips.

For better or worse, what you write will eventually be forgotten, and probably soon. Let that thought liberate you to just do it.

Try that with your dad, one of your siblings, a friend, a teacher.

The first story I remember writing — when I was 10 — was about how my brothers stole the fuses from the fuse box. I called it "Fuse Confusion."

Give yourself a deadline.

After you've set a deadline, tell someone else what it is, or make a note of it somewhere public, so it becomes real. A lot of writers will tell you that without a deadline, they'd never get anything done.

Don't be afraid of criticism.

If someone suggests how you might improve your writing, listen. That person may be wrong. But listen.

Hope that helps! Send me something you've written some day, OK?

Love,

Aunt Mary

I kept my letter to Adelaide short, figuring that a 9-year-old could absorb only so much theory, but if I were going to make it longer, I would have added: Shorter is generally better.

And I would have added this: For better or worse, what you write will eventually be forgotten, and probably soon. Let that thought liberate you to just do it.

I have yet to receive any of Adelaide's writing, but her mother tells me she's working on a story called "The Girl With the Rolling Pin," about a girl who becomes a Revolutionary War hero by defending her family with a rolling pin.

That news inspires another tip: Never underestimate the power of a good title.

"The Girl With the Rolling Pin" is a great title, and in a world that needs stories of strong girls and women, Adelaide's opens the possibility to a series of books in which the Girl With the Rolling Pin battles all the world's ills and evils, from environmental degradation and political corruption to sexism, racism and bad fast food.

Then one day when that intrepid girl grows up to be a writer, she'll use her words as her rolling pin.

Obama Foundation spent nearly $12M on programming

Paid about $5M to architects to design center's campus

BY LOLLY BOWEAN
Chicago Tribune

The Obama Foundation spent nearly $12 million on programming last year, including its star-studded international summit that brought leaders, elected officials and world-renowned activists to a two-day conference in the South Loop, newly released records show.

The foundation also spent about $5 million paying its architects Tod Williams and Billie Tsien to design the Obama Presidential Center campus, according to tax documents that were filed Tuesday morning.

In August, the foundation released its first annual report, which offered a peek into how the organization is run and how it prioritizes its goals through spending. But the newly filed tax documents reveal more detailed information about how much the organization is paying its top brass, and how much it spends on programs and contracts.

In 2017, the foundation raised about $232 million in contributions from private donors. It spent the bulk of its income — about $21.3 million — on operations, salaries and programs, the tax documents show.

According to the records, in his first year overseeing the foundation, CEO David Simas earned $590,651. His salary is nearly twice what the CEO of the George W. Bush Foundation earned in 2016, the last year available.

The executive director of the foundation, Robbin Cohen, earned $827,834 last year, the documents show. Cohen has worked for the foundation since it was founded and worked for free the first year.

The Obama Foundation is responsible, among other things, for overseeing the development and construction of the Obama Presidential Center — a sprawling campus made up of three buildings on the South Side. The project has drawn national attention because it could transform struggling, lower-income communities by creating jobs, attracting tourists and possibly sparking more investment.

But the project has stirred emotions and revealed deep divisions in the community among racial and class lines.

A small group of environmentalists has filed a lawsuit hoping to kill the project and keep it from being constructed in Jackson Park. A collective of activists is also pressuring the foundation to sign a legal contract guaranteeing a rental assistance fund, property tax freezes for homeowners and a majority number of jobs for residents who currently live near the proposed site.

From the time it was announced, officials with the foundation said the Obama Presidential Center would be unlike any other. And in 2017, the group began rolling out programming to demonstrate how it would tackle its mission to "inspire, empower and connect people to change their world."

The foundation has created a fellowship program and a scholarship for graduate students at the University of Chicago and Columbia University in New York. It has hosted public meetings and leadership training events across the country.

But in its first year, the foundation's largest event was a summit that drew more than 500 thought leaders and innovators from Houston; Jakarta, Indonesia; London; and even Kenya and Mexico to the South Side. The conference had sessions both by former President Barack Obama and former first lady Michelle Obama.

At the event, during his opening remarks, Barack Obama told the gathering that he wanted to bring all of the attendants to the South Side, where he started his work as an organizer.

The foundation was created in 2014, but Obama did not actively raise funds while he was in office and capped donations at $1 million. Last year was the first year that the foundation began aggressively fundraising.

Obama's center is expected to cost $500 million and is expected to be completed by 2021. The George W. Bush Presidential Library and Museum cost $250 million to build and was constructed in 30 months, records show. The William J. Clinton Presidential Library and Museum cost $165 million to build and was constructed in 36 months.

Ex-cop tied to abuse aided McCarthy's run

Fired police officer is latest with a past to orbit candidate

By Bill Ruthhart
Chicago Tribune

ZBIGNIEW BZDAK/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mike Kozenko, left, an ex-officer with a history of physical abuse, helps prepare for the arrival of mayoral candidate Garry McCarthy earlier this month.

A volunteer staffer who worked on Garry McCarthy's mayoral campaign is a former Chicago police officer who was fired from the force after violating a protective order filed by a woman who he had previously physically abused, records show.

For about three months, the fired officer, Michael Kozenko, assisted the campaign of McCarthy, Chicago's former police superintendent. Kozenko appeared at public events with the candidate and assisted with the campaign's efforts to collect petition signatures to get McCarthy's name on the ballot.

At an event earlier this month, McCarthy told the Chicago Tribune that Kozenko was working on his campaign as a volunteer. Kozenko was removed from the campaign the following day after the Tribune began asking about his involvement, a McCarthy spokesman said.

The Chicago Police Board voted unanimously in September 2008 to discharge Kozenko from the department after it found he had violated three department rules, according to police disciplinary records archived by The Chicago Justice Project, an independent nonprofit research group. In making its decision, the Police Board, a civilian panel appointed by the mayor to make final rulings in police disciplinary cases, noted Kozenko previously had been suspended for 30 days after he was arrested for domestic battery and later pleaded guilty to simple battery, records show.

His firing predates McCarthy's tenure as police superintendent, which ran from 2011 to 2015.

Kozenko's involvement in the campaign represents the latest in a series of individuals with previous ethical lapses and criminal convictions involved with McCarthy's campaign, undercutting the candidate's platform that he's best positioned to run a professional, business-like City Hall free of scandal.

"We were unaware, as many campaigns are, of the complete background of people who show up to volunteer. Mike Kozenko was no exception," McCarthy spokesman John Davis said.

"He was a volunteer. No money exchanged hands, and when we found out about his checkered past, he was immediately removed as a volunteer from our campaign."

In an interview, Kozenko confirmed he had been helping out with the campaign since June, but he declined to say whether McCarthy's campaign had paid him for his work.

The McCarthy campaign's Facebook page previously included posts with photos of Kozenko, including one of him with other political workers participating in a training session to pass petitions for the former top cop's mayoral bid. The post has since been deleted.

Davis declined to say why.

Kozenko assisted with McCarthy's crime plan announcement in July outside the Police Department's Bronzeville headquarters. He also was one of four campaign workers who attended a McCarthy news conference earlier this month where the candidate announced his education plan in front of a shuttered school in Back of the Yards.

Before the news conference, Kozenko helped tape a "Garry McCarthy for Mayor" sign on a podium.

Wearing a tie and dark suit with a bright blue "McCarthy for Mayor" button fastened to it, Kozenko engaged with passersby who stopped during the news conference to inquire why McCarthy was standing in front of a bunch of cameras on a sidewalk in front of a boarded up school.

Davis said the campaign's political director immediately researched Kozenko after the Tribune asked about him and dismissed him from the campaign the next day.

Kozenko is the latest individual with a checkered past to be associated with McCarthy's campaign.

In March, the Tribune reported that McCarthy's top campaign donor was a personal injury attorney who has had his law license suspended three times, including for paying a funeral director and morgue worker for steering him business about grieving families. In June, the Tribune detailed how McCarthy had taken campaign contributions from a donor who pleaded guilty to bribery charges, a second who faced state fraud allegations for inflating a McCormick Place contract and a third who ran a clouted venture capital firm during former Mayor Richard M. Daley's administration and failed to pay back $21 million in borrowed taxpayer money.

In August, WBEZ first reported that McCarthy also had taken a $12,000 contribution from convicted felon Stuart West, a former attorney who pleaded guilty to mail and tax fraud after stealing nearly $1 million from a client who suffered from multiple sclerosis.

Davis, the McCarthy spokesman, did not respond to a question about a pattern of McCarthy receiving support from individuals and donors with troubled pasts.

A Tribune review of records shows Kozenko was an officer with a history of physical abuse.

The Police Department's Office of Professional Standards recommended Kozenko be suspended from the force for 30 days following a July 2005 altercation in which he was arrested for domestic battery against a female officer, according to a record from the department's internal affairs.

In suspending Kozenko, the department noted he "did disrespect and maltreat a female acquaintance, who also is a sworn department member, by physically abusing her, in that he grabbed her by the collar, shoved her against a wall, and spat at her," the suspension notification against Kozenko reads. "Officer Kozenko did engage in an unjustified verbal altercation with the same female individual by calling her derogatory terms and directing profanities at her."

In issuing the suspension, the Police Department noted Kozenko pleaded guilty to a charge of simple battery connected to a July 2005 altercation. The order of protection was issued July 12, 2005, records show, and Kozenko violated that order on Aug. 11, 2005, when he approached the female officer in Garfield Ridge on the Southwest Side and "made unwanted physical contact" with her by "wrapping his arms around her," according to Police Board records.

In an interview, Kozenko said the incident he was accused of involving the female officer, with whom he was related, occurred at a White Sox game. He stressed he was not arrested until days later and considered challenging the charges.

"I had an attorney, and he convinced me to plead guilty in order to keep my job, which clearly did not end up being the case," said Kozenko, who said he also pleaded guilty to violating the protective order. Both matters were expunged from his record in 2014, he said.

"All of this made me find God," he said. "I've been living a much better, cleaner life since then."

Attorney general candidates spar over personal beliefs

Harold: Raoul made race into referendum on marriage, abortion

By Rick Pearson
Chicago Tribune

MARK HUME/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Candidates for Illinois attorney general, Libertarian Bubba Harsy, left, Republican Erika Harold and Democratic state Sen. Kwame Raoul speak at the Chicago Tribune on Tuesday.

Republican attorney general candidate Erika Harold acknowledged Tuesday that Democratic rival Kwame Raoul's attack ads have turned the contest into a "referendum" over her views on same-sex marriage and abortion.

Speaking before the Chicago Tribune's editorial board, the two also sparred over the role of the attorney general's office to investigate corruption and whether that would lead to prosecuting political opponents.

It was the second face-to-face between the two contenders — and Libertarian candidate Bubba Harsy of DuQuoin — but the hour-long endorsement session lacked some of the high-wattage negativity of the advertising playing out between Raoul and Harold on TV screens across the state.

Nevertheless, a central theme emerged over the differing role the candidates perceive their personal beliefs play in handling the state's top legal office that is being vacated by Democrat Lisa Madigan after 16 years.

Harold has been attacked by Raoul on TV over her past opposition to same-sex marriage and her continued opposition to abortion rights.

Harold has labeled Raoul's ads as "disingenuous" and said as an opponent of abortion she supports the right of same-sex couples to adopt and that she considers both abortion rights and same-sex marriage as "settled law."

"The fact that this has become a referendum on views like that tells you why we're not focusing on the issues where the attorney general can have some sort of discretion and some sort of impact," said Harold, an Urbana attorney who used her winnings as the 2003 Miss America to pay her way through Harvard Law School.

"My views would absolutely not undermine my obligation, commitment to upholding the rule of law," she said, contending that Raoul was attempting to stir "fearmongering among voters about trying to undermine their belief in my capacity and commitment to doing so."

But Raoul, a supporter of abortion and gay rights, said laws can change, making the personal views of an attorney general "relevant."

"One of the things that an attorney general and any prosecutor has is prosecutorial discretion," said Raoul, a state senator from the Hyde Park neighborhood.

In addition, he said previous Illinois attorneys general "have been involved on a week-in, week-out basis advocating for and advocating against certain policy recommendations in the legislature. And that's OK. That's perfectly OK. And their personal views weigh in to how they would lend that advocacy."

Harold countered that throughout her life she has "always advocated on behalf of the marginalized," citing her pageant platform against bullying and current positions on Illinois Supreme Court commissions on equality and professionalism.

On corruption, Harold termed it a top priority and vowed to take a more "robust" role in combating it, specifically citing public concerns over patronage hiring in government.

"The attorney general needs to play a watchdog role where you're holding both parties accountable," she said.

Raoul said he would give it "a high priority whenever there is evidence of political corruption.

"I'm not going to go fishing for it. But something is brought to my attention? Absolutely," he said.

Questioned about Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner's comments that he was helping fund and back Harold's campaign so that she could "prosecute" his chief political nemesis, House Speaker Michael Madigan, Harold sought to distance herself from the governor.

"I certainly never had any discussions with him about that. It would be totally improper to go into office choosing to prosecute someone, especially if nobody had presented evidence," she said, adding that the office "is not to be used as a weaponized way of targeting political opponents."

"The governor speaks for himself. I speak for myself," she said.

But Raoul said Rauner's comments were "a very dangerous thing to say in the course of the campaign."

"If it were me, I would have had a conversation with the governor about it and I would have told the governor that's inappropriate and I would have said so very publicly after the governor had made that indication," Raoul said.

Harsy, the Libertarian, cited the state's massive public employee pension debt and said retiree benefits were unconstitutional.

"If we want real pension reform, real property tax reform, there's a way to do it. It's not very nice, but there is a way to do it," he said, citing a state constitutional prohibition against a granting of "special privileges."

"Are they legitimate pensions or are they special privileges?" he asked. "That's a special privilege to me. That's not a pension. It's unconstitutional. It can be nullified."

Star of 'a great police officer' is retired in CPD ceremony

Cmdr. Paul Bauer was slain while chasing fleeing suspect

By Jeremy Gorner
Chicago Tribune

E. JASON WAMBSGANS/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The star bearing Cmdr. Paul Bauer's No. 29 was placed with those of other slain cops.

Chicago police brass, clad in their dress blues and crowned caps, crowded the lobby of department headquarters on Tuesday to immortalize the star of a fellow commander who was shot and killed earlier this year.

The No. 29 star of Cmdr. Paul Bauer, which he received when he attained the rank of captain, was placed by his wife, Erin, and teenage daughter, Grace, in a glass cabinet alongside those of some 500 other Chicago police officers who died while serving the city.

Bauer

Bauer was the highest-ranking Chicago cop to be killed in the line of duty in decades when he was fatally shot outside the Thompson Center in the Loop on the day before Valentine's Day. The gold star Bauer was given when he became commander of the Near North patrol district was presented to his family.

"Cmdr. Bauer was a friend. And more than that, he was a great police officer," Chicago police Superintendent Eddie Johnson said during the ceremony. "Paul was a very courageous man who dedicated his life to public service. As we all know, he backed up the quality of his work with his life."

In addition to a couple of hundred Chicago police officers of all ranks, a contingent of Illinois State Police troopers and several elected officials attended the ceremony. Speakers also included Gov. Bruce Rauner, who renewed his call to state legislators to reinstate the death penalty for anyone convicted of murdering a police officer.

" That is what is just. Our police officers put themselves at risk to protect us. And we must protect you," Rauner told the crowd.

Bauer was downtown on Feb. 13 for a meeting with aldermen when he heard the radio call of a fleeing suspect. Moments later, Bauer saw 44-year-old Shomari Legghette running nearby and gave chase on foot, according to official accounts.

Bauer chased Legghette to the top of a stairwell outside the Thompson Center and attempted to detain him. The two struggled. Legghette then stumbled down the stairs, and Bauer either fell or followed him down the stairs to a landing below.

The struggle continued on the landing before Legghette drew a handgun and fired seven shots, fatally wounding Bauer, authorities said.

Legghette, a four-time felon, was arrested and charged with murder and other crimes. He is awaiting trial.

Bauer's postings during his 31-year Chicago police career included time in the department's Mounted Unit, where he was a "highly-skilled" rider of police horses, First Deputy Superintendent Anthony Riccio said in his remarks at the ceremony. Bauer led the unit as a lieutenant and was eventually promoted to commander of the Near North District, overseeing much of Chicago's downtown area.

Riccio, who was in the police academy with Bauer, choked up with emotion when he spoke to the crowd about his colleague.

"During his tenure, he displayed unwavering leadership and a passion for all the citizens in the city," said Riccio, pausing at times. "Cmdr. Bauer never stopped being the police. He never asked his officers to do a task or an assignment that he would not do himself."

Bauer's childhood friend, former interim police Superintendent John Escalante, spoke on behalf of the commander's family after the ceremony. He briefly reminisced about how the two went to elementary school, high school and college together before they "chased each other around" for three decades with the Police Department.

"It's been difficult since February for them," Escalante said of Bauer's family. "But I think what's helped, each and every day is they feel this tremendous amount of support from, not just the Chicago Police Department, but absolute total strangers in the city who continue to support them."

Storm clouds gather

Severe thunderstorms hit northern Illinois on Tuesday, leaving downed trees and power lines in their wake, and triggering warnings for much of the Chicago area. Forecasts show the weather turning around Wednesday, with the next chance for rain falling at the end of the week, said Matt Friedlein, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service. Weather page on back of A+E

Man fatally shot after chasing down car that hit bicyclist

By Anna Spoerre, William Lee and Mary Wisniewski
Chicago Tribune

Alberto Bocanegra had been following the bicyclists in his white Yukon for a few miles when he struck up a chance conversation with a straggler early Tuesday. As always, it didn't take him long to get to the heart of his life story.

"I'm a 2 percenter," Bocanegra yelled out the passenger-side window as he recorded live on Facebook. "Two percent of the people survive the cancer I have."

Bocanegra

When the man on the bike suggested joining the group next year when he was better, Bocanegra replied, "Next year I'm going to go to prison. You know why? Because the life I lived ... I had to use my handgun to protect my family."

What happened next was also typical of Bocanegra, friends say. A car hit a woman on one of the bicycles and sped away around 1:30 a.m. Bocanegra chased after it, catching up in the 600 block of East 76th Street. As he argued with the driver, police say, a blue SUV approached and someone inside fired, hitting him twice in the neck.

Bocanegra, 39, was taken to University of Chicago Medical Center and pronounced dead. It was the third homicide in the Gresham police district over nine hours.

"That was in his DNA. That was the good part of him but also the bad part of him," said Terrell Barnes, 42, friends with Bocanegra for 10 years. "He would want to rush into the breach. ... At his core, he wanted to help. ... It triggered him into action."

Bocanegra had been following a hundred or so members of the Monday Night Ride group, cyclists who ride through different parts of the city each week. Jeffrey Penro, 29, said he was riding toward the front of the group and didn't see the woman get hit or hear the gunshots a few blocks away.

The group meets late on Monday nights and rides about 15 miles through the city, picking a new route every week. Last week the riders were in the O'Hare-Belmont area. This week's route was through the South Side.

Penro said the streets usually are quiet by the time the ride starts around 11 p.m. and lasts for about six hours. This past Monday night, the streets were a little busier than usual, he said. Penro remembered a man driving up to the group and tagging along, and he assumed it was Bocanegra.

In one Facebook Live posting, Bocanegra shows the cyclists ahead of him as he plays music. In a second one he speaks with a cyclist riding alongside. The conversation lasts less than three minutes, but Bocanegra reveals a lot about his life.

"Where are you guys headed to?" he asks. "Where did you guys start from? Do you think I could handle it? I don't think so, brother." He says he lost more than 450 pounds while being treated for leukemia.

He doesn't explain why he thinks he's going to prison next year. But court records show he was charged last November with felony aggravated discharge of a firearm in what Chicago police called a road rage incident. His next court date was Nov. 13, just over a year after he was arrested.

At the time, Bocanegra was running for alderman in the 15th Ward and worried that publicity over the incident would hurt his chances. He went on Facebook Live to defend himself, saying he pulled and fired a gun after another motorist came at him and his family.

"I was going to the hospital to get blood," he says. "He was about to pull something out of his pants. I wasn't going to wait to find out. ... I protected my family, I did what was right, I've always done what was right."

Barnes said his friend was "pro-Second Amendment" and was very active in politics.

"He spoke out for the little guy, the little guys against the big guys when it came to politics," Barnes said. "He ran for alderman a couple times. He led the Green Party for a short time in Cook County. He was notable in the No Games movement in the Olympics in 2009 and 2010."

He said Bocanegra ran for alderman twice, in the 12th Ward in 2007 and in the 15th last year. "He didn't get a lot of votes. He wanted to fight for the little guy. He highlighted his issues. He was that sort of candidate."

It wouldn't be unual for him to strike up a conversation with the cyclist, Barnes said.

"Alberto was a personality. He's an open book. ... He'd talk to people in a way that would really connect with them. He would always try to connect. His mother was an activist for kids as well. She died some years ago."

Just last Sunday, Bocanegra and his father had dinner at the home of attorney Frank Avila. Bocanegra brought homemade chicken tinga and spoke of dieting and therapy, hoping he would keep getting healthier. He had been in remission for two months.

"He had hope, and that's why it was so tragic," Avila said. "He was fearless, he was brave, he was like Batman."

Judge is reassigned following complaint

well as whether steps were in place to address "such conduct involving members of the judiciary."

"As workplaces across the country contend with issues of sexual harassment and misconduct, it is critical to have clear protocols in place for reporting, investigating, and accountability for such allegations," Foxx wrote.

After the Tribune story on Araujo was published online Tuesday, Chief Judge Timothy Evans announced that the court system's nearly 400 judges and 2,400 administrative employees would undergo sexual harassment training in October, Evans spokesman Pat Milhizer said.

The accusations against Araujo come as the #MeToo movement continues to roil nearly every corner of government, sports, the arts, business and the courts. U.S. Supreme Court nominee Judge Brett Kavanaugh is facing allegations of sexual impropriety from more than 30 years ago that have cast doubt over his confirmation by the Senate.

In contacting Araujo's boss, Foxx included a two-page memo from her office that outlined interviews by Steven A. Block, special prosecutions bureau chief, with four assistant state's attorneys who were in Araujo's courtroom that day. The female prosecutor's name and those of the witnesses were redacted in the documents obtained by the Tribune from Foxx's office under a public records request.

For the past five years, Araujo has been assigned to the Leighton Criminal Court Building at 26th Street and California Avenue. The female prosecutor was in Araujo's courtroom Sept. 11 for a pending motion to suppress evidence in a murder case that was recently transferred to the judge's courtroom, according to Block's memo.

The prosecutor said she had not spoken to Araujo since law school and told Block that "Araujo made unwanted sexual advances" toward her on several occasions back then. Araujo is a 1993 graduate of Loyola University Chicago School of Law.

The female prosecutor stepped out of the courtroom, and another female prosecutor overheard Araujo speaking in Spanish to his court clerk and the judge "seemed upset and became increasingly agitated as he spoke," according to the memo.

"She walked in and didn't even give me any congrats or acknowledge me. She acted like she didn't know who I was," the judge said to his clerk, the memo states.

Later, a male prosecutor was in Araujo's chambers along with a Chicago police officer to discuss an unrelated matter. The judge seemed upset, the prosecutor said, and mentioned his law school classmate, the memo states.

"You think you went to (expletive) law school with someone you would think she would say hi to you," Araujo said, according to the memo. The judge then allegedly referred to the female prosecutor as a "bitch."

The male prosecutor joked to the judge that "maybe she didn't recognize you in your robe," the memo states.

Araujo replied that his law school class had only about 50 people. "Well, maybe it's because I didn't have sex with her or maybe it's because I did have sex with her," the judge said, according to the memo.

The comments were relayed to Block, who conducted the investigation.

Araujo told the Tribune that he "doubts" he made any sexual advances toward the female prosecutor while they were in law school, adding that they had studied together and he knew her former boyfriend. The judge also said he does not believe "I said those words" about having sex or not having sex with her.

Araujo said he was not upset when the female prosecutor failed to acknowledge him.

"I just thought it was weird," he said. "I don't know why she treats me like a stranger. I've been in this building five years and she always ignores me."

Evans spokesman Milhizer said Tuesday that the court's Executive Committee, which the chief judge chairs, would discuss the matter Oct. 3.

Milhizer also said the matter has been referred to the Judicial Inquiry Board, a state board that investigates and prosecutes allegations of misconduct or incapacity against judges. The board files formal complaints with the Courts Commission, which is made up of five judges and two members of the public. The commission can reprimand, censure, suspend with or without pay, remove from office or retire a judge.

Araujo said he, too, reported the issue to the inquiry board and added that he signed up for sexual harassment classes with the state.

Araujo, who was in-house counsel for an insurance company before being elected judge in 2008, also said he was taking two weeks of vacation and planned to return to work next month. The $202,433-a-year judge said Evans and Martin did not tell him what administrative duties he would be performing once he returns.

Suburbs see surge in voter registration

By Elvia Malagon
Chicago Tribune

ABEL URIBE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Suburban Cook County is seeing a surge in voter registration as the mid-term elections approach, something that one Chicago politician — a Democrat — says could signal a rebuke of President Donald Trump at the polls.

Cook County Clerk David Orr announced at a news conference Tuesday that a record 1.5 million suburban Cook County residents are registered to vote in the Nov. 6 election. That's about 120,000 more voters than the roughly 1.4 million on the rolls in 2016, according to data provided by the clerk's office. Similar data for Chicago wasn't available Tuesday.

Latino and Asian community organizers stood with Orr and talked about signing up millennials and eligible immigrant voters as part of Tuesday's National Voter Registration Day.

In fact, they handed Orr a stack of more than 1,000 new voter registration applications collected in a week, including one from Sirilo Morado who became a naturalized citizen in May. He told the crowd gathered in the Loop that he became a citizen so he could vote in upcoming elections.

"And I will be voting for mayor next year and for president the year after that," Morado said in Spanish. "And I'm voting because I care about issues that affect me and my family like health care and immigration."

"I'm voting because I care about issues that affect me and my family like health care and immigration."

— Sirilo Morado, who became a naturalized citizen in May

November's mid-term election includes congressional contests as well as a hotly contested gubernatorial race in Illinois.

Merced Alday, 50, of Albany Park, is part of an organization that has been working to mobilize voters in the Albany Park and Belmont Cragin neighborhoods. She said a strong voter turnout was necessary to push back against Trump's immigration policies that treat people like "criminals" and "animals."

"We are here to let this administration know that we are ready to educate our community especially the voters," Alday said in Spanish. "And to send a clear message that we don't want more children separated from their families. It is unfair that this is happening to our families."

Nationwide, the drive is on to register voters with Democrats pushing hard to get out the vote, in hopes of upsetting the balance of power in the mid-terms and trying to set the stage for a presidential win in 2020.

Illinois lawmakers last year approved an automated voter registration law that calls for adding people to the voting rolls when they get or renew a driver's license unless they specifically choose to opt out. In recent days, the secretary of state's office, which runs driver's license operations, was criticized for the operation's slow rollout, a notion the office has denied.

And there are smaller efforts: On Tuesday, cast members of Chicago's "Hamilton" even got in on the act, signing up voters just outside their Loop theater.

Orr said he thinks the uptick in voter registration could be because of a change in law that allows people to register online, which could be making it easier for younger people to go through the process. He said the political climate of the country and social movements like Black Lives Matter and #MeToo are also factors in voter registration.

"The intangibles might be that people are fed up and they are going to vote or they could be fed up and not," Orr said. "But most of the time, it's people that believe they have to be heard at the polls and that's what I'm seeing."

In 2014, about 40 percent of eligible voters turned out for the mid-term elections compared to 60 percent of eligible voters who cast a ballot in the 2016 presidential race, according to the Pew Charitable Trusts. A survey conducted by Pew months before the 2016 presidential election found that eligible voters didn't register for a variety of reasons, ranging from not wanting to vote to simply not getting around to sign up. Still others said they didn't feel inspired by a candidate or an issue to vote.

The reminders to register come as early voting statewide gets underway Thursday.

Those unsure about whether they are registered in Illinois can go online to check their status. To be eligible, a person must be a U.S. citizen and at least 18 years old by Election Day, and the person must have lived for at least 30 days where he or she is registering to vote.

In Illinois, residents can register online to be eligible to vote in the November election until Oct. 21, according to Orr's office.

MacArthur Foundation president to step down

Julia Stasch to leave philanthropic group next year

By Steve Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Julia Stasch, president of Chicago's John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation since 2014, will step down from her post next year, the philanthropy announced Tuesday.

Stasch, 71, helped steer the foundation toward a philosophy of "big bets," aiming larger sums of money at smaller numbers of issues in hopes of having greater impact. Emblematic of that shift was the new 100&Change grant competition that last year awarded $100 million to its first winner, Sesame Workshop and the International Rescue Committee for a project to educate displaced Middle Eastern children.

Stasch

"During this exceptional time, when hope and optimism persist, even as the challenges facing our city, our nation, and the world can seem so daunting and the divisions so deep, it is an honor to lead an institution committed to making the world a better and more just place for all," said Stasch in a statement.

She maintained the foundation's popular MacArthur Fellows program, known as the "genius grants," which award sums of money to high achievers in myriad fields throughout the nation. This year's winners will be announced Oct. 4.

"Julia has provided exemplary leadership, bringing rigor, urgency, boldness and a willingness to take risks to MacArthur's programs and operations," Dan Huttenlocher, MacArthur board chairman, said in the statement.

Before taking the reins at MacArthur, Stasch served as a vice president there for 13 years and before that worked in politics, including roles in the Clinton administration and as chief of staff to Mayor Richard M. Daley.

The foundation plans to immediately begin searching for a successor, Huttenlocher said. Stasch's departure date will depend on when the new leader can be found, a spokesman said.

Early voting starts Thursday. What you need to know.

By Mike Riopell
Chicago Tribune

Illinois voters can start casting their ballots Thursday as candidates for governor, attorney general and Congress still have more than five weeks of nonstop campaigning before the November election.

The early voting that starts Thursday is limited. Both Cook County and the city only will have one location open at the start, both downtown. Those options expand significantly starting Oct. 22, and early voters tend to pick up the pace closer to Election Day.

But there are early signs of heavy interest in the Nov. 6 election, officials say. Mail ballots start going out Thursday, too, and Chicago Board of Election Commissioners spokesman James Allen said about 50,000 voters already have requested them. That's compared to 18,000 at this point for the presidential election two years ago. "We're seeing numbers that are off the charts when it comes to vote by mail requests," Allen said. "Voter interest is extremely strong."

Here's what else you need to know ahead of early voting starting Thursday.

No takebacks: Once you vote, that's it. Early voting lets you avoid long lines on Election Day and cast your ballot on your own terms. But if you learn something distasteful about your favored candidate after you cast your ballot, you don't get to change your pick on Nov. 6.

Limited spots: Each election authority — usually counties — only has to have one early voting location open until Oct. 22. For Cook County, it's at 69 W. Washington St. For city residents, it's at 175 W. Washington St. Collar county voters can check the websites of their clerks or election officials to find polling places.

Registration options: You have to register before you can vote. Options for doing so include Secretary of State offices, election offices, and elsewhere. Residents also can register online. The standard deadline to register in person is Oct. 9, and the deadline online is Oct. 21. After that, there's a grace period when people can register and vote simultaneously at early polling places.

Procrastinators: Most early voters wait until closer to Election Day to cast their ballots. An example: In suburban Cook County, 718 votes were cast in the March primary before the number of early polling places expanded. In the end, nearly 108,000 people voted early.

What's up: You might be hearing a lot about the Chicago mayoral race right now, but none of those candidates are on the November ballot. The main event in Illinois this fall is Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner's re-election bid against Democratic challenger J.B. Pritzker. Congressional races are up, too, including a couple of hotly contested battles in the suburbs. Statewide seats like the battle between Democratic state Sen. Kwame Raoul and Republican Erika Harold for attorney general are on the ballot, as are contests for state legislature. Judges and county officials are up, too. The Illinois State Board of Elections also can be a resource.

Laquan McDonald birthday marked; defense is decried

By Madeline Buckley
Chicago Tribune

Activists and clergy members criticized an animated video shown Tuesday by the defense in the Jason Van Dyke trial, calling it "almost cartoonish" during a gathering outside the Leighton Criminal Court Building to mark what would have been Laquan McDonald's 21st birthday.

About two dozen people crowded together in the rain Tuesday evening to remember McDonald, who was 17 when he was shot and killed by Officer Van Dyke in October 2014.

Hours earlier, Van Dyke's defense attorneys showed jurors an animated video they argued showed the shooting from the officer's perspective.

"I sat by his Aunt Lisa and watched her as she grimaced as the animated drawing was shown," said the Rev. Ira Acree, pastor of Greater St. John Bible Church.

Several clergy members spoke out, calling for police reform in Chicago and decrying the defense tactics in the trial. The Rev. Marshall Hatch, pastor of New Mount Pilgrim Missionary Baptist Church, noted that the animated video stopped at five shots, far short of the 16 bullets that hit McDonald.

"We were in the court today and did see (Prosecutor Marilyn Hite Ross) in a cross-examination that absolutely nullified the nonsense of us watching an animated, almost cartoonish video," Hatch said. "It ... literally spewed lies on a dead child."

The pastors were joined by protesters affiliated with the Revolutionary Communist Party and others who held signs that said "Convict Van Dyke" and "16 shots and a cover-up."

Robert Dingle, a 21-year-old aldermanic candidate in the 7th Ward, said it was important to honor the teen on his birthday.

"I'm maybe 28 days younger than Laquan," said Dingle, a South Shore resident. "It could have been me."

The group marched up the courthouse steps, singing "This Little Light of Mine," and pressed their hands against the entrance door.

the street.

As promised, the animation does show McDonald closing in on Van Dyke, who had stopped several feet ahead of him on Pulaski Road and took a step toward the teen as he approached. Though McDonald draws nearly even with the officer, he appears to be moving away from him to the southwest when the first bullet strikes.

"Our analysis demonstrates that Mr. McDonald was getting closer to Mr. Van Dyke up until the time of the shooting," testified Jason Fries, the video forensics expert who created the animation for the defense.

Created with laser-based technology, the video begins with McDonald — depicted as a black stick figure with a red line trailing behind to indicate movement — walking toward Pulaski Road. The animation does not show Chicago police Officer Joseph McElligott, who testified that he followed behind him on foot for several blocks while waiting for a police car with a Taser.

Fries

As he begins loping down Pulaski Road, McDonald becomes a three-dimensional character wearing all-black clothing. Prosecutors pointed out to the jury that McDonald, in reality, was wearing blue jeans with large, white back pockets and a dark hoodie.

Though Fries said he typically uses crash test dummy-like figures in his animations, he testified he put "skin" on McDonald for the courtroom demonstration. In the animated video, as in real life, McDonald is black and Van Dyke is white.

The video shows McDonald flicking open a knife in his right hand before Van Dyke and his partner, Joseph Walsh, get out of their squad car. The view then shifts to an overhead perspective above the street, showing McDonald — in somewhat crude, herky-jerky movements — walking to a point that was almost parallel to the officer, who has his gun drawn.

The animation switches to an angle from behind Van Dyke's shoulder, showing McDonald closing from 39 feet to 13 feet in a few seconds. McDonald turns his head toward Van Dyke, and the officer opens fire just as the teen was about to pass south of the officer.

As in the police dashboard camera video, the animation shows McDonald spin and fall to the street moments after Van Dyke opened fire. The first shot shown in the animated video was the one that a pathologist testifying for the defense has said was the fatal wound — a gunshot to McDonald's chest that severed his pulmonary artery.

The animation shows five bullets striking McDonald while he was still standing, then ends right after the teen hits the street without showing the remaining shots fired. The animation contradicted the defense team's own pathology expert who testified that at least 14 of the shots occurred before he collapsed.

Fries, who consulted with Dr. Shaku Teas, the defense pathologist, to determine the bullets' trajectory, said more bullets could have hit an upright McDonald, but he called the five shots shown in the animation a "conservative" estimate.

Earlier, Cook County Chief Medical Examiner Ponni Arunkumar, testifying for the prosecution, told the jury it was impossible to ascertain the order of most shots or whether McDonald was standing when they hit him.

Through other testimony, prosecutors have estimated that McDonald fell to the pavement less than two seconds after he was first shot but that Van Dyke continued firing for about 12 more seconds, emptying his 16-shot semi-automatic gun.

Van Dyke, 40, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder, 16 counts of aggravated battery, and one count of official misconduct in McDonald's death, the first time in decades a Chicago police officer has faced murder charges for an on-duty fatality.

His attorneys have called the shooting a clear-cut case of self-defense, a position echoed by Walsh, Van Dyke's partner, during his testimony last week.

In a dramatic demonstration in front of the jury, Walsh testified that McDonald swung a knife behind his back and then up to about shoulder height. The teen, he said, then turned his head toward the officers, looking at them with "a stare and a focus beyond us."

Walsh also testified that Van Dyke continued to fire when McDonald was lying prone because the teen still posed a threat.

Though the animation shows McDonald look toward Van Dyke as he nears the officers, he does not bring the knife behind his back or bring it to shoulder height.

Walsh, who testified under immunity from state and federal prosecutors, was indicted on charges he exaggerated McDonald's threat in the shooting's aftermath. He and two other officers are slated to go on trial in November.

Van Dyke gave an account similar to Walsh's when he spoke to investigators after the shooting, according to police reports. It's unclear, however, if the jury will be told about those statements.

"When McDonald got to within 10 to 15 feet of Officer Van Dyke, McDonald looked toward Van Dyke," according to a detective's account of Van Dyke's statement. "McDonald raised the knife across his chest and over his shoulder, pointing the knife at Van Dyke. Van Dyke believed McDonald was attacking Van Dyke with the knife, and attempting to kill Van Dyke."

Fries said he relied on a number of factors in creating the animation, including police radio traffic, surveillance cameras and footage of the area that his company shot using a drone. But the most useful tool in re-creating a shooting with many moving parts was the police dashcam video, he said.

"The video really made our job easier," Fries said.

Judge Vincent Gaughan allowed the video to be shown as "demonstrative evidence," meaning witnesses can use it to help explain their testimony. He has not yet decided if it will be among the evidence the jury can view again during its deliberations.

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke listens to attorney Tammy Wendt during his murder trial on Tuesday.

Prosecutor Marilyn Hite Ross tried to undermine the video during her hour-long questioning of Fries, repeatedly reminding the jury that the animation was not real, unlike the actual dashcam video.

"An animation is a drawing, isn't it, sir?" the prosecutor said. "Whether you do it by hand or on a computer?"

"I respectfully disagree with you," Fries responded. "I've never described it — in the 20 years I've been doing this — as a drawing."

He instead characterized his video as a computer model — and later a painting.

Hite Ross, however, did not challenge how the animation showed McDonald closing in on Van Dyke — even though the officer had positioned himself ahead of the approaching McDonald and stepped forward toward him as he opened fire.

The trial recessed early Tuesday afternoon, in part because Gaughan blocked at least two scheduled defense witnesses from testifying.

The first was a CTA employee who would bolster the defense's assertion that McDonald was using a disabled veteran's public transit card on the night of his death. Gaughan ruled there was no proof McDonald used the card — he does not appear on any CTA security videos. But it wouldn't matter if he had, the judge said.

"Being on the CTA and taking multiple rides in one day doesn't prove anything," Gaughan said.

Daniel Herbert, Van Dyke's lead lawyer, had made a brief reference to the CTA card in his opening statement last week while saying McDonald had gone "on a wild rampage" in the 24 hours before his shooting.

The judge also refused to let a Chicago police officer testify about an incident involving McDonald hours before the shooting. Prosecutors successfully argued the patrol officer did not fill out a contact card during the incident and could not testify under oath that it was definitely McDonald.

The defense, though, is expected to call the woman whose 911 call sparked the police contact.

Yvette Patterson told the Tribune she called 911 before 3 a.m. on Oct. 20, 2014 — the day of the shooting — after encountering McDonald as she tried to park her car behind her home in the Lawndale neighborhood on the city's West Side. She lives next door to McDonald's aunt.

The teen told Patterson he was locked out of his aunt's home and asked if he could borrow her car, she said.

Pattterson told the Tribune that McDonald was not aggressive, but she called 911 anyway because it was dark and she had never met him before.

Two officers questioned McDonald, but Patterson declined to sign a complaint, she said. No arrest was made.

McDonald was killed about 19 hours later.

The jury returns Wednesday on the third day of the defense's case, which is expected to wrap up early next week. So far, jurors have heard from 24 witnesses for the prosecution and six from the defense.

'Money went flying all over the place'

6 in custody after car hits tree after heist, cops say

By Matthew Walberg
Chicago Tribune

Six people were arrested Monday night after an armed robbery at an ATM in Riverside set off a police chase during which shots were fired from the fleeing suspects' vehicle before it crashed into a tree, police said.

Police believe most of the cash taken in the heist — perhaps as much as $8,000 — has been recovered, but not before some of it was spread throughout the neighborhood.

"When the car crashed, it rolled and the money went flying all over the place. But we recovered money at least one city block east of the crash scene," Riverside police Chief Tom Weitzel said Tuesday morning. "We were recovering cash in the grass and parkways a block away. They probably rolled down the windows, but we're not sure if they threw it out or if the pressure from the open windows sucked the cash out of the car."

The six people taken into custody were hospitalized with injuries that were not life-threatening. No officers were injured.

Weitzel said a contract employee was servicing the ATM about 9:35 p.m. just outside of the Bank of America at 3300 Harlem Ave. when armed individuals approached. The employee reported that the robbers took $6,000 to $8,000. Weitzel said officers had recovered more than $7,700 by Tuesday morning.

"We were recovering cash in the grass and parkways a block away."

— Riverside police Chief Tom Weitzel

After the robbery, officers were alerted of a description of the vehicle and offenders. About a block from the bank, police spotted the vehicle and began to pursue it.

Weitzel said police believe that during the chase, one or more robbers fired their guns out of the vehicle, but it's not clear if they were shooting at someone or if they were simply firing into the air. No squad cars were struck by the bullets, he said. According to the news release, police officers did not fire their weapons during this incident.

After going about another half-mile, the fleeing car crashed into a tree in the 100 block of East Burlington Street and rolled, ejecting some of the occupants.

Four suspects were later released but remained in police custody and two remained hospitalized, Weitzel said.

Weitzel said he did not expect charges would be filed Tuesday.

The suspects were not being cooperative in providing their true identities or giving statements about what occurred. Police expected to take fingerprints from the four who are in police custody in hopes of identifying them.

Weitzel said the female suspect appears to match the description of a 17-year-old girl who was reported missing in California earlier this year. "The name she gave us is reported as a missing juvenile out of the state of California," Weitzel said. "But she's 18, and the person that's missing is 17. Her parents reported her missing in April or May, and she might have had a birthday in like July."

Riverside's police department called in additional detectives from the Major Case Assistance Team, which pools detectives from other municipalities to assist with major criminal investigations. Weitzel said investigators were canvassing the area looking for video footage that may have captured the incident.

Panel: Political parties must push anti-harassment policies

By Mike Riopell
Chicago Tribune

Political parties should withhold funding from campaigns that don't adopt anti-harassment policies, and party leaders should work harder to elect more women to overcome an "old boys club culture" in state politics, according to a report by a panel of Democrats set up in the wake of sexual harassment accusations this year.

The report is set to be released Wednesday as the #MeToo movement continues to rock state politics, with officials in both state parties accused of harassment.

The panel of Democratic women was formed in February following harassment allegations in the political organization of Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan, who wrote that the group should "take the lead on facilitating a statewide discussion about the role of women in the Democratic Party of Illinois." Panel members Comptroller Susana Mendoza, state Sen. Melinda Bush of Grayslake and state Rep. Carol Ammons of Urbana said they operated independently of the speaker and paid for the effort with private fundraising.

"The women we heard from on our statewide listening tour confirmed the old boys' club culture, a product of decades of institutionalized sexism, racism is alive and well in Illinois politics," the report reads.

Ammons said the group hopes its recommendations are put in place before the 2019 municipal elections.

"This report is a starting point, a baseline of changes that need to be implemented immediately if party leadership is truly committed to ending sexual harassment in the workplace and embracing diversity to improve workplace culture," it reads. "These policy recommendations can apply to any state or local campaign, to any party, in any state, and at any level of politics."

The group recommends that state parties adopt clear anti-harassment policies and provide regular training for campaign workers and volunteers, then require "campaigns to adopt them by tying party funding and resources to their implementation."

It also suggests setting up a process for victims to report harassment, as campaign operations often are small organizations without human resources departments or other clear outlets to complain about bad behavior from staff, donors or candidates.

State parties also should commit to electing at least 50 percent women to government offices, hire diversity directors and spend money on women's campaigns, the panel recommends. It also suggests a policy similar to the NFL's Rooney Rule that requires teams to interview minority candidates for coaching jobs. Parties should consider appointees from diverse pools of candidates, the report says.

"We want to increase the number of diverse people — particularly women — at every level of politics," the report reads.

The panel's report is aimed at practices parties should adopt, not changes in state law. It focuses on parties, Mendoza said, because they're the "umbrella organizations" that have power over campaigns that can be smaller, fleeting efforts.

The report doesn't surface any new, specific harassment accusations but highlights concerns women raised in meetings the group held around the state.

"I didn't report for so many reasons," it paraphrases a woman saying. "It happens too frequently to report. I want a career. I want to be invited into the room where things get decided, and you don't get there by being a bad sport. I also didn't think people would believe me, and even if they did, what's the purpose of reporting something? Is anyone other than me going to feel the impact?"

The report's release comes a week after Madigan wrote in an op-ed that he "didn't do enough" to ensure people could report sexual harassment at the Illinois Capitol.

Complaints of sexual harassment have rocked the speaker's political and government organizations, putting him on the defensive after years of setting the agenda. Madigan has called for independent reviews, and he has ousted top aides and operatives, including top deputy Tim Mapes.

Last October, victim rights advocate Denise Rotheimer accused state Sen. Ira Silverstein of using her advocacy for a crime victim rights bill as an opening to pursue a personal relationship. A newly appointed legislative inspector general concluded Silverstein had acted in a way that was unbecoming of a lawmaker, and he lost his re-election bid.

In February, the Chicago Tribune disclosed sexual harassment allegations from Alaina Hampton, who was working on Democratic House campaigns and had received aggressive and inappropriate text messages from Kevin Quinn, a top aide in Madigan's political organization. Madigan then ousted Quinn, the brother of Ald. Marty Quinn, the point man in the speaker's 13th Ward. Shortly after Hampton came forward, a lawmaker and several staffers approached Madigan with complaints about abusive behavior from longtime political operative and lobbyist Shaw Decremer. Madigan then parted ways with Decremer.

In May, top Madigan deputy Rep. Lou Lang of Skokie resigned his leadership posts after a former medical marijuana advocate accused him of retaliation, verbal abuse and "inappropriate behavior," though Illinois legislature's top watchdog wrote that "evidence does not support" abuse complaints against him.

On the Republican side, state Rep. Nick Sauer resigned nearly two months ago following a report of accusations that he sent nude photos of an ex-girlfriend to other men online. And House Republican leader Jim Durkin this month pulled support from a Downstate lawmaker, citing "allegations" about his behavior and claiming a "zero tolerance policy on harassment of any kind," but declined to provide further details.

Good News! Stem Cell Therapy for Pain now offers solutions for you!

Stem Cell Therapy for Pain devotes much of its time treating chronically ill patients – especially those in pain. With 3 years experience, serving Northern Illinois with multiple practices, it continues to utilize cutting-edge technology to help restore patients' health. The institute recently announced its latest state-of-the-art healing procedure: regenerative stem cell therapy.

Stem Cell Therapy for Pain recently announced its latest state-of-the-art healing procedure; regenerative stem cell therapy. Stem Cell Therapy for Pain is now offering painless stem cell injections for pain and advanced procedures for arthritic and/ or degenerative conditions, especially those found in the knees, hips, should, neck and lower back.

These remarkable treatments can repair tissue in the body that has been damaged from age, disease or degeneration. They do this by pinpointing the impaired areas, removing the swelling with powerful anti-inflammatory properties and healing them by regenerating new cells and tissue.

This innovative therapy is particularly effective in treating such conditions as degenerative arthritis, degenerative cartilage and ligaments, bone spurs, degenerative joint disease, bursitis, tendinitis, and especially Osteoarthritis of the Knee.

According to the Stem Cell Therapy for Pain chief medical officer, patients can experience a significant decrease in pain and an improvement in range of motion within weeks of treatment.

"We are so excited about the results we are seeing with our patients. More Importantly, our patients are excited about living their lives enjoying the activities they enjoy. We invite you to attend one of our upcoming seminars near your home, to learn more about this incredible healing technology and how it might be able to help you or someone you love finally live a pain free life."

Preckwinkle's criminal justice reform record ripped by rival

Shrugs off attack by fellow mayoral candidate Wilson

By Gregory Pratt
Chicago Tribune

JOSE M. OSORIO/TRIBUNE

/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mayoral candidate Willie Wilson said Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle couldn't take credit for reforms.

Businessman Willie Wilson and Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle's spokesman exchanged barbs Tuesday as Wilson challenged Preckwinkle's leadership on criminal justice reform issues.

Standing outside Preckwinkle's county office, Wilson said it's "ironic" that she would take credit "for anything as it relates to prison reform," saying that he has personally bailed people out of jail who couldn't afford the payment themselves and touting his support for a bond reform law Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner signed last summer.

Preckwinkle announced a run for mayor last week, highlighting her own efforts to reduce the county jail population and reform the criminal justice system, prompting Wilson's attack this week.

Approached by reporters after Wilson spoke, Preckwinkle spokesman Frank Shuftan said she has been "working on criminal justice reform for eight years" and helped reduce the Cook County Jail population by more than 30 percent. Preckwinkle supported her chief of staff, Kim Foxx, in her successful campaign to unseat Cook County State's Attorney Anita Alvarez, who often was criticized for her stance on criminal justice issues, including her treatment of wrongful conviction cases.

Shuftan later called Wilson's charges on Preckwinkle's criminal justice work "ill-informed."

Mayor Rahm Emanuel announced earlier this month he would not run for re-election. Since then, Preckwinkle, former U.S. Commerce Secretary Bill Daley and attorney Gery Chico, who sought the office in 2011, have joined the crowded field vying to succeed Emanuel.

Other candidates seeking to become Chicago's 45th mayor include former Chicago Police Board President Lori Lightfoot, former Chicago Public Schools CEO Paul Vallas, former Chicago police Superintendent Garry McCarthy, Cook County Circuit Court Clerk Dorothy Brown and Wilson, among others.

Preckwinkle already is facing criticism from the right and left for her criminal justice efforts. McCarthy attacked her criminal justice policies for being too lenient last week, while Wilson is attacking from the other end, saying she does not deserve credit for reforms.

Lawmakers and Rauner hailed Wilson last year as being instrumental in advocating for SB 2034, known as the Bail Reform Act, which created new rights for people in custody at Illinois jails and aimed to move away from requiring people charged with relatively minor crimes to post cash bail as a condition of their release.

It's his support of that bill Wilson pointed to this week as he touted his own role in advocating for criminal justice reform.

By the time that bill was signed, though, the daily Cook County Jail population already had declined by more than 2,500, to around 7,500, under reforms backed by Preckwinkle that included greater use of electronic home monitoring and other alternatives to incarceration.

Still, flamboyant former alderman and state Sen. Rickey Hendon, who is advising Wilson and goes by the nickname "Hollywood," criticized Preckwinkle for not supporting the bill. He said Preckwinkle's office "just hee'd and haw'd" when asked for their support.

Preckwinkle did not take a stance on the bill "because it did not impact Cook County," Shuftan said. The county, he added, was "already putting in place re-hearings for people who weren't able to post bond in a more expansive way than SB 2034 called for."

Break Free from Neuropathy with a New Supportive Care Cream

A patented relief cream stands to help millions of Americans crippled from the side effects of neuropathy by increasing sensation and blood flow wherever it's applied

A recent breakthrough stands to help millions of Americans plagued by burning, tingling and numb legs and feet.

But this time it comes in the form of a cream, not a pill, suggesting the medical community may have been going about the problem all wrong.

The breakthrough, called Diabasens, is a new relief cream developed for managing the relentless discomfort caused by neuropathy.

When applied directly to the legs and feet, it causes arteries and blood vessels to expand, increasing the flow of warm, nutrient rich blood to damaged tissue.

However, what's most remarkable about the cream...and what makes it so brilliant...is that it contains one of the only natural substances known to activate a special sensory pathway right below the surface of the skin.

This pathway is called TRAP1 and it controls the sensitivity of nerves. In laymen terms, it determines whether you feel pins and needles or soothing relief.

Studies show that symptoms of neuropathy arise when the nerves in your legs deteriorate and blood flow is lost to the areas which surround them.

As the nerves begins to die, sensation is lost. This lack of sensation is what causes the feelings of burning, tingling and numbness.

This is why the makers of Diabasens say their cream has performed so well in a recent clinical use survey trial. It increases sensation and blood flow where ever its applied.

No Pills, No Prescriptions, No Agony

Until now, many doctors have failed to consider a topical cream as an effective way to manage neuropathy. Diabasens is proving it may be the only way going forward.

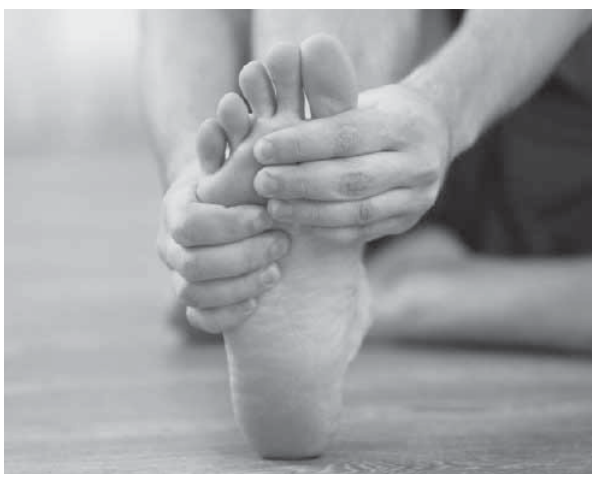
"Most of today's treatment methods have focused on minimizing discomfort instead of attacking its underlining cause. That's why millions of adults are still in excruciating pain every single day, and are constantly dealing with side effects" explains Dr. Esber, the creator of Diabasens.

"Diabasens is different. Since the most commonly reported symptoms – burning, tingling and numb legs and feet – are caused by lack of sensation of the nerves, we've designed the formula increase their sensitivity.

And since these nerves are located right below the skin, we've chosen to formulate it as a cream. This allows for the ingredients to get to them faster and without any drug like side effects" he adds.

Study Finds Restoring Sensation the Key To Effective, Long Lasting Relief

With the conclusion of their latest human clinical use survey trial, Dr. Esber and his team are now offering Diabasens nationwide. And regardless of the market, its sales are exploding.



Topical Creams Offer Sufferers a Safer, More Effective Avenue of Relief: Diabasens increases sensation and blood flow wherever its applied. It's now being used to relieve painful legs and feet.

Men and women from all over the country are eager to get their hands on the new cream and, according to the results initial users reported, they should be.

In the trial above, as compared to baseline, participants taking Diabasens saw a staggering 51% increase sensitivity in just one week. This resulted in significant relief from burning, tingling and nubmness throughout their legs.

Many participants taking Diabasens described feeling much more balanced and comfortable throughout the day. They also noticed that after applying, there was a pleasant warming sensation that was remarkably soothing.

Diabasens Users Demand More

Many of Diabasens users say their legs have never felt better. For the first time in years, they are able to walk free from the symptoms which have made life hard.

"I have been using the cream now for about ten days. It has given me such relief.

I've had very bad foot pain from injuries and overuse of my feet for years which have contributed to severe itching/tingling and pain for some time. (My father also suffered from this pain and itching. I wish I would have had this for him.)

The first time I used the cream, I felt an almost immediate relief from this.

I now use it at least twice a day: once in the morning before work and once at night before I sleep.

I am so delighted with this. It has helped my walking, also. It has helped generate feeling again in my feet," raves Marsha A. from Texas

Diabasens* is shown to provide relief from:

- Burning
- Swelling
- Tingling
- Heaviness
- Numbness
- Cold extremities

Diabasens is a topical cream that is to be applied to your legs and feet twice a day for the first two weeks then once a day after. It does not require a prescription.

The active ingredient is a compound known as cinnamaldehyde.

Studies show that neuropathy and nerve pain is caused when the peripheral nerves breakdown and blood is unable to circulate into your legs and feet.

As these nerves deteriorate, sensation is lost. This is why you may not feel hot or cold and your legs and feet may burn, tingle and go numb.

Additionally, without proper blood flow, tissues and cells in these areas begin to die, causing unbearable pain.

The cinnamaldehyde in Diabasens is one of the only compounds in existence that can activate TRPA1, a special sensory pathway that runs through your entire body.

According to research, activating this pathway (which can only be done with a cream) increases the sensitivity of nerves, relieving feelings of tingling and numbness in your legs and feet.

Supporting ingredients boost blood flow, supplying the nerves with the nutrients they need for increased sensation.

Amazing Relief Exactly Where You Need It

With daily use, Diabasens users report remarkable improvements in their quality of life without of the negative side effects or interactions associated with prescription drugs.

Readers can now enjoy an entirely new level of comfort that's both safe and affordable. It is also extremely effective, especially if nothing else has worked.

Discounted Supply of Diabasens for Local Readers

This is the official release of Diabasens. As such, the company is offering a special discounted supply to any reader who calls within the next 48 hours.

A special hotline number and discounted pricing has been created for all Illinois residents. Discounts will be available starting today at 6:00AM and will automatically be applied to all callers.

Your Toll-Free Hotline number is 1-800-516-9547 and will only be open for the next 48 hours. Only a limited discounted supply of Diabasens is currently available in your region.

Trump draws laughs after boasting at U.N.

Blasts Iran, touts accomplishments to skeptical group

By Eli Stokols and Tracy Wilkinson

UNITED NATIONS — President Donald Trump had barely begun his address to the U.N. General Assembly on Tuesday when he claimed his tenure had "accomplished more than almost any administration in the history of our country," the kind of over-the-top boast he usually reserves for his campaign rallies.

Around the cavernous hall, diplomats and world leaders broke into what even the official White House transcript described as laughter.

"Didn't expect that reaction, but that's OK," Trump said, momentarily startled. That prompted more guffaws and applause.

Later, as he was leaving the U.N., he told reporters that he had meant to be funny. "Oh it was great, well, that was meant to get some laughter, so it was great," he said.

A year after Trump delivered a fiery speech here that left diplomats slack-jawed, many appeared to view him Tuesday as more theater than threat. They sat silent as he cited what he claimed as major achievements, including the U.S. pullout from the Iran nuclear accord, his refusal to sign the Global Compact on migration, the withdrawal from the U.N. Human Rights Council and his decision to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem.

As expected, Trump aimed his sharpest ire at Iran, blaming the Islamic Republic for sowing "havoc and slaughter" in Syria and Yemen, and spreading "mayhem across the Middle East" and beyond.

"Iran's leaders sow chaos, death and destruction," Trump said. "They do not respect their neighbors, their borders or the sovereign rights of nations."

He urged other countries to join an economic pressure campaign against Iran, a challenge to other members of the Security Council that remain committed to the Iran nuclear deal that Trump abandoned.

"We ask all nations to isolate Iran's regime as long as its aggression continues," Trump said.

But Trump devoted much of a somber, and often isolationist, 35-minute address to promoting his "America First" agenda, and its emphasis on sovereignty in trade, security and international affairs. "We reject the ideology of globalism, and we embrace the doctrine of patriotism," he said.

He also outlined the argument for his disruptive approach to foreign affairs, from the Middle East to North Korea, where he has upended traditional diplomacy by discarding former U.S. policies.

"America's policy of principled realism means we will not be held hostage to old dogmas, discredited ideologies, and so-called experts who have been proven wrong over the years, time and time again," he said.

Citing the dangers of illegal immigration and "uncontrolled migration," Trump argued that each country should set its own policies in accordance with its national interest. The U.N. estimated about 65 million people, mostly from impoverished nations, have been dislocated due to war, persecution, environmental disasters and economic needs.

"Migration should not be governed by an international body unaccountable to our own citizens," Trump said. "Ultimately, the only long-term solution to the migration crisis is to help people build more hopeful futures in their home countries. Make their countries great again."

Trump bore down on his persistent pledge to curb and re-prioritize America's foreign aid budget, complaining that helping poverty-stricken countries offered little benefit to U.S. interests. "The United States is the world's largest giver in the world, by far, of foreign aid. But few give anything to us," he said.

Trump said Secretary of State Mike Pompeo would take a "hard look" at the State Department budget and ensure that countries receiving aid or military protection "also have our interests at heart."

His suggestion to make foreign aid more transactional challenges, at least in part, the traditional U.S. role of trying to use so-called soft power to promote human rights and democracy. The countries that receive the most U.S. economic aid are Iraq, Afghanistan, Israel and Egypt.

Despite his emphasis on sovereignty, Trump did not mention Russia. The U.N. has criticized Moscow for its invasion of Ukraine, and its seizure of Crimea, as well as its actions in Georgia and the Balkans, and the U.S. intelligence community has documented the Kremlin's interference in the 2016 presidential campaign.

Trump attacked the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries for what he described as "ripping off the rest of the world," but then praised Saudi Arabia's leadership for what he called bold reforms. Saudi Arabia is one of the main powers in OPEC and is partly responsible for higher oil prices as U.S. sanctions bite into Iran's oil production.

Trump praised his decision last December to move the U.S. Embassy in Israel to Jerusalem, a hotly disputed action favored by few in the audience, calling it "very historic change." Trump's critics believe he has openly sided with Israel and jeopardized any chance to revive the long-stalled Mideast peace process.

"The tone of this speech won't be effective outside Trump's base at home — boastful, bitter and resentful of countries that 'take advantage of us,' " Nicholas Burns, a former senior diplomat in Republican and Democratic administrations, said via Twitter. "He is not leading the world, but campaigning against it."

In a departure from his usual style, Trump offered "special thanks" to the leaders of South Korea, Japan and China for their role in bringing North Korea to nuclear talks; commended Jordan for taking in refugees; and celebrated India and Poland, among others.

Trump's worldview did not go unchallenged. French President Emmanuel Macron delivered an implicit rebuke minutes later on subjects such as immigration and women's rights.

"It's not acceptable any more that an individual would have less opportunity simply due to where they were born, or their gender," he told the world body in a lengthy address that was greeted with loud, sustained applause.

On what may be his signature issue — climate change — Macron said that the Paris agreement had "stayed intact" despite Trump's decision to pull the United States out of the landmark accord.

"This is power," he said. "Should someone be against, we will nonetheless press ahead."

Meeting at DOJ could put new pressure on tech giants

By Tony Romm and Brian Fung
The Washington Post

DAMIEN MEYER/GETTY-AFP

WASHINGTON — A meeting of the country's top federal and state law enforcement officials Tuesday could prompt a series of sweeping, new investigations of Apple, Amazon, Facebook, Google and their tech industry peers, stemming from lingering frustrations that these companies are too big, fail to safeguard users' private data, and don't cooperate with legal demands.

The gathering at the Justice Department had been designed to focus on social media platforms and the ways they moderate online content.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions opened the meeting by raising questions of possible ideological bias among the tech companies, and sought to bring the conversation back to that topic at least twice more, according to Karl Racine, attorney general for the District of Columbia.

But the discussion proved far more wide-ranging, as attorneys general from nine states — and officials from five others — steered the conversation toward the privacy practices of Silicon Valley. Those in the meeting did not zero in on specific business tactics but did cover issues ranging from how companies collect user data to what they do with it once the information is in their hands.

"We were unanimous. Our focus is going to be on antitrust and privacy. That's where our laws are," said Jim Hood, Mississippi's attorney general.

Most in the meeting agreed that the Justice Department would likely play a role in any legal action against the tech industry. Still, much of the group's momentum now appears to be driven by an emerging multistate inquiry — not the Justice Department — with Nebraska Attorney General Doug Peterson expected to coordinate the attorneys general conversation.

"(The) AGs are really focused on understanding more as to what consumers are truly consenting to and what they may not know is going on with their data," Racine said.

For months, tech giants such as Facebook, Google and Twitter have weathered brutal criticism in the nation's capital for their business practices — from the ways they safeguard their data to their preparedness to combat misinformation online ahead of the 2018 midterm elections. As these companies have faced pressure to actively monitor the content on their platforms, however, they've opened themselves to new political attacks from Republicans who believe Silicon Valley's policies result in the silencing of conservatives. The criticisms have even come from the White House, where President Donald Trump most recently accused Google of producing "rigged" search results — and his administration has floated regulating the industry in response.

Attorneys general from both parties seemed reluctant to use antitrust law to address allegations of online bias. Hood said there are issues with the way tech companies moderate their platforms, adding, "We AGs don't want to wade off into that battle."

Another attorney general — Democrat Brian Frosh of Maryland — said there was little basis for using antitrust law to prosecute allegations of ideological bias.

Whether state and federal officials have the legal tools under antitrust law to regulate the tech industry's data practices was a major question for the group.

Citing previous cases in which the government intervened against anticompetitive behavior, the officials considered the dominance of Standard Oil, the Justice Department's breakup of AT&T's telephone monopoly and the quest to take apart Microsoft.

Few in the meeting seemed ready to seriously discuss breaking up Silicon Valley's most dominant players. But those cases represented "pivot points" in the nation's history that could prove instructive to policymakers, California Attorney General Xavier Becerra said.

"All of those cases and situations inform you when it comes to a conversation about this new sector," he told reporters Tuesday.

Florence 2nd rainiest storm in U.S. since 1949, NOAA expert says

By Seth Borenstein
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hurricane Florence was the nation's second rainiest storm in 70 years, a top rainfall meteorologist calculated.

Only last year's Hurricane Harvey rained more over a 14,000 square mile area during a four-day time period, said Ken Kunkel, a meteorologist at the National Oceanic Atmospheric Administration and North Carolina State University.

Scientists said climate change likely boosted rainfall totals for both storms.

Kunkel's preliminary analysis found more than 17.5 inches fell on average over five weather stations in the 14,000 square miles of the eastern Carolinas stretching from Fayetteville, N.C., to Florence, S.C. The amount is second to Harvey's 25.6 inches.

"That's a lot of water," Kunkel said. The analysis has not been published or peer reviewed yet, but will be, Kunkel said.

The third rainiest storm was in March 2016 in northern Louisiana and the seventh was in southern Louisiana in August 2016. The three rainiest and four of the top seven have all occurred in the last three years.

Kunkel, who specializes in analyzing rain data from thousands of weather stations, based his work on rainfall since 1949 when recording became more widespread across the continental United States.

Kunkel examined rainfall over a compact area — 14,000 square miles, a figure based on latitude and longitude squares — and larger areas such as 20,000, 30,000 and 80,000 square miles. Florence's unusual amount was most noticeable on the smallest scale.

When the scientist looked at 20,000 square miles, Florence fell to seventh place, behind Harvey, 1998's Hurricane Georges, the two Louisiana rainstorms, a 1962 northern California downpour and a 1994 Texas drenching.

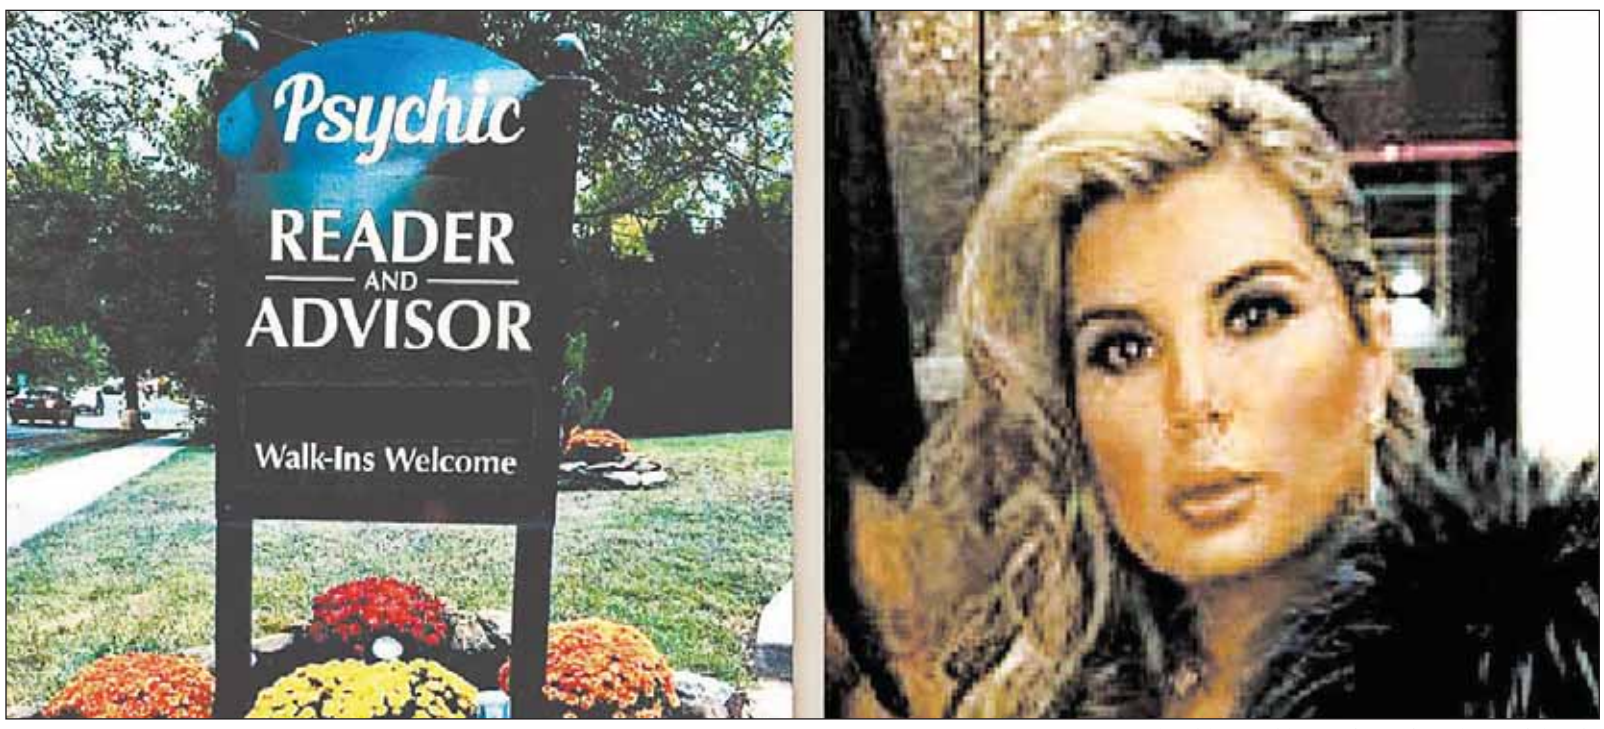
Floodwaters swamped Dillon, S.C., last week. Scientists say climate change likely boosted Florence's rainfall total.

Crystal ball sees jail time for 'psychic'

Maryland woman scammed victims out of thousands

By Dan Morse
The Washington Post



MONTGOMERY COUNTY STATE'S ATTORNEY'S OFFICE

Gina Marks, who claimed to be a psychic, was sentenced to six years in prison after scamming five people in Maryland.

After dating for nine years, her boyfriend suddenly broke things off and moved on to someone else. The approaching holiday season only made her feel worse about the breakup.

"I felt very alone and very afraid," the 26-year-old later would tell police, explaining what drove her to try a psychic. "I was desperately searching for answers."

She went to "Readings by Natalie," operating from a home in Bethesda, Md. "I poured out my heart to her," the woman said.

For $100, Natalie performed a tarot card reading followed by a plan to bring the boyfriend back into her new client's life. "I was on cloud nine," the client remembered.

Delivering jolts of confidence, backed by what seemed to be a genuine concern for people going through heartache and stress, was the keystone of a $341,000 scam case involving five victims in Montgomery County, Md.

The purported psychic — real name, Gina Marie Marks, 45, who has pleaded guilty to five theft schemes — had spoken to her victims about generational curses, black magic and love spells. She coaxed them into bizarre rituals involving candles, clear dyes that turned red when applied to the entire body, rose petals, magnets and laying atop a massage table with necklaces hung over them to gauge energy levels.

The fraud used a classic ruse in fortune teller scams: getting clients to believe that cash was crucial to fixing their problems.

Victims were persuaded to withdraw large amounts and place them inside black pillowcases or under mattresses. The "energy" in their bodies then would migrate to the bills, they were told, according to court records. Marks' next step: convincing her clients to give her the cash so she could place it before an altar at her church to help her break off evil curses before the money was returned. The more cash they lent, she would say as the weeks went by, the more commitment the clients were displaying to what Marks called her "spirit guides."

Marks also employed up-to-date techniques. Phone "spoofing" enabled her to make calls that appeared to be coming from a different phone number than the one she was using. Using that ruse, prosecutors said, Marks was able to tell a client her ex-boyfriend would call at a precise time — and warning the client she was not to answer it — and the client would indeed see the ex's phone number pop up on her phone screen at the exact, predicted time.

"This is an awful case," Circuit Judge John Maloney told Marks at the conclusion of the case last week, when he sentenced her to six years in prison.

Maloney told her the victims not only lost life savings but were robbed of self-esteem and the respect of relatives from whom they had borrowed money. To make it worse, the judge said, she'd been prosecuted for similar activity eight years earlier in Florida.

"It just seems like that's the worst of the worst, when you prey on people when they were down, taking advantage of people when they're hurting," Maloney said. "That is just outrageous."

The victim embarrassment at realizing they had been duped was reflected in how prosecutors presented their case at the sentencing hearing. Doug Wink, Montgomery County assistant state's attorney, referred to the victims only by initials. Several victims watched the hearing, but none wanted to come forward and speak.

The once brokenhearted 26-year-old, who was not in court, earlier had written a statement that said "while I readily admit that I was gullible at a vulnerable time in my life, being gullible is not a crime." By contrast, what Marks did to her was a crime, she said.

By 2015, Marks had moved to Bethesda from Florida and into a home in which she posted a neatly scripted sign out front above a flower bed: Psychic Reader and Advisor ... Walk-Ins Welcome.

In her first meeting with Marks, the 26-year-old was told she and her ex-boyfriend were "twin flames." The next day, according to court records, Marks told her new client she would need $1,500 for the work required to reunite the two. She persuaded the woman to light candles, cover her body with dye, bathe in oils and recite prayers.

A short time later, Marks called to ask her to up her financial commitment.

"Her 'spirit guides' needed to be convinced that I was serious about reuniting with my ex," the young woman told police.

She was asked to withdraw cash from her bank and store it in her mattress next to her ritual items. The money in the mattress eventually totaled $14,800.

The woman said she would ask questions and express doubts about Marks' techniques. But then a phone call would arrive, on cue, as promised. Or Marks would turn aggressive — telling her that her doubts were angering the spirit guides.

After the victim drained her bank accounts, Marks convinced her to buy designer handbags on credit and bring them to Marks so she could place them at the altar. All of the cash under the mattress eventually came over to Marks as well, the case showed. None came back. When it was all done, according to the victim and prosecutors, Marks had stolen $22,792.

Other victims fared worse.

A 28-year-old woman, also upset about a lost relationship, surrendered $83,014 to Marks. She was told she and Marks needed to work with the number nine, which meant bringing in currency in sets of nine, starting with nine $100 bills and nine $50 bills and trailing to nine nickels, according to the victim. The money was placed on Marks' altar and never seen again, Wink said.

Two others lost $78,758 and $153,400. The smallest loss, $2,655, was by a 26-year-old man who had sought answers for why he felt so depressed. He described to police Marks' reaction when he questioned the fees.

"She would begin berating me," the man said. "She would say I was not taking her work seriously and demanding more and more money. I would feel bad and cave to give her more money."

Marks' attorney Peter Fayne had said she was prepared to pay nearly $129,500 of the more than $340,000 due in restitution. He asked Maloney, the judge, to spare his client prison time so she could earn more money to pay more restitution.

Marks told Maloney she never had intended to hurt anyone and still cared about the victims. She said her actions could be traced to her childhood.

"When you're brought up to be a spiritualist, when you're brought up in these kinds of situations where you go to a candle instead of just letting logic help itself, you get carried away with it," she said. "And I guess that's what happened."

The judge wasn't so sure.

"I feel like I'm being scammed," Maloney told her.

German bishop apologizes for thousands of sex abuse cases

By Kirsten Grieshaber
Associated Press

BERLIN — A top German bishop has apologized for thousands of sexual abuse cases that took place inside the Catholic Church in Germany, according to a report released Tuesday that concludes at least 3,677 people were abused by clergy between 1946 and 2014.

"Sexual abuse is a crime," Cardinal Reinhard Marx, who is also the head of the German Bishops Conference, told reporters. "I'm ashamed for so many (of us) looking away, not wanting to recognize what happened and not helping the victims. That goes for me as well."

The apology came on the same day that Pope Francis said in Estonia that the sex abuse scandal rocking the Catholic Church was driving people away. He said the church must change its ways if it wants to keep future generations. Francis' visit to Estonia marked the last stop in a four-day pilgrimage that also took him to Lithuania and Latvia.

The report on sex abuse inside the German Catholic Church found that more than half of the victims were 13 or younger and most were boys. Every sixth case involved rape and at least 1,670 clergy were involved. Some 969 abuse victims were altar boys.

On average, the abuses happened multiple times over a period of at least 15 months.

The German Bishops Conference released its report Tuesday, but it was already leaked earlier this month and was heavily criticized for the lack of transparency and the church's refusal to let the researchers access the original documents.

Instead of looking at the original church files, they sent questionnaires to the dioceses, which then provided the information.

The report was commissioned by the German Bishops Conference and researched by experts from the Universities of Giessen, Heidelberg and Mannheim.

The researchers wrote that there was evidence that some files were manipulated or destroyed, and many cases were not brought to justice. Sometimes abuse suspects — primarily priests — were simply moved to other dioceses without the congregations being informed about their past.

"The figures are only the tip of the iceberg," said Harald Dressing, a psychiatrist from Mannheim University who presented the report together with Marx and others in the central German city of Fulda during a convention of the German Bishops Conference.

"Generally, the risk of sexual abuse of children inside the Catholic Church continues to exist," Dressing warned. He said celibacy, the clergy's power and homosexuality inside the church were all issues that promote abuse.

German Justice Minister Katarina Barley said "the dioceses and religious orders must finally take on responsibility for decades of suppression and denial; the church must press criminal charges in every case."

The Catholic Church has been struggling with sex abuse by its clergy for a long time.

In 2010, the German church was roiled by a sex abuse scandal triggered by the head of a Jesuit school in Berlin who went public about decades-long sexual abuse of high school students by clergy. Following that, a whole wave of victims who were sexually abused by clergy spoke out across Germany.

The church's failures in confronting sex abuse scandals have also roared back to the headlines recently with revelations of abuses and cover-ups in the United States and Chile.

Lighthizer: U.S. won't wait for Canada in new NAFTA pact

By Jeanna Smialek and Jenny Leonard
Bloomberg News

RICCARDO SAVI/GETTY

The U.S. is moving forward on its bilateral trade deal with Mexico by month's end even if Canada is left out, because negotiators can't resolve their sharp differences over dairy and a dispute resolution system, U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer said.

The Trump administration soon plans to present to Congress a text of the U.S.-Mexico trade agreement that was announced last month to revise portions of the North American Free Trade Agreement, Lighthizer said at an event in New York on Tuesday.

Under a U.S. legal process known as Trade Promotion Authority that was invoked to revamp NAFTA, American lawmakers need to review the text of the agreement 60 days before President Donald Trump can sign it.

Lighthizer said the timetable for the new deal was set up so Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto can sign it before he leaves office Nov. 30 — an arrangement that's acceptable to President-elect Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador.

"If we push it beyond that date, then we have a new negotiation with Lopez Obrador and we don't know where that would go at all," Lighthizer said. "It would be unfair to all the people that have been involved — certainly the U.S. workers, farmers and ranchers — to start a new negotiation with a new president of Mexico."

The U.S. and Canada are at odds over anti-dumping dispute panels contained under Chapter 19 of the current deal, which the U.S. wants to remove and Canada wants to keep. Another sticking point is Canada's protected dairy industry, which isn't in the current deal but where the U.S. wants concessions.

"I think Canada would like to be in the agreement, I think the U.S. would like them in the agreement," Lighthizer said. "Hopefully, we'll end up with something with Canada. If not, we'll have to do it in a separate deal as soon afterwards as we can."

Trump has previously floated the idea of striking two separate bilateral trade deals with the NAFTA partners.

Whether Congress will pass a deal that doesn't include Canada remains unclear. While some lawmakers have ratcheted up pressure on Canada to sign, others such as Nancy Pelosi have said the Trump administration should reach a trilateral deal. Some have warned that U.S. trade law won't allow a Nov. 30 vote on a U.S.-Mexico deal, because the Trump administration began the process seeking a trilateral one.

Sen. Tim Scott, R-S.C., said Tuesday he'd prefer Canada be included, and wouldn't say if he'd vote for a bilateral U.S.-Mexico deal. "I think it's important to keep North America together, even if it takes more time" he said. "The timing has to do with politics, and not ours."

At a separate event in New York, Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau addressed trade tensions alongside his foreign minister, Chrystia Freeland, who is leading NAFTA talks. Trudeau said the deal between the U.S. and Mexico raises the "possibility" of Canada signing on, but that he's standing up for Canadian interests in negotiations.

Freeland declined to comment specifically on Chapter 19, saying only that "rule of law is an extremely important part of how we do things, including trade."

Negotiations for possible exemptions for Mexico and Canada from U.S. steel and aluminum tariffs imposed earlier this year will take place after the new NAFTA deal is agreed on, Lighthizer said.

Trump is serious about renaming NAFTA, possibly to the U.S.-Mexico-Canada pact, or USMC, Lighthizer added.

Trump: Efforts to block nominee a 'con job'

WIN MCNAMEE/GETTY

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said he believes Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh will win Senate confirmation despite the allegations.

Republican senators have selected Arizona prosecutor Rachel Mitchell to question Judge Brett Kavanaugh and the woman who has accused the Supreme Court nominee of sexually assaulting her when they were teenagers, a top senator announced Tuesday.

Mitchell, the sex crimes bureau chief for the Maricopa County Attorney's Office in Phoenix, will query the two at Thursday's highly anticipated Senate Judiciary Committee hearing. A registered Republican, Mitchell has worked for the Maricopa County Attorney's Office for 26 years.

Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, said in a statement, "I'm very appreciative that Rachel Mitchell has stepped forward to serve in this important and serious role."

Hanging in the balance in the confirmation fight is Trump's chance to swing the high court more to the right for a generation. Despite McConnell's forecast, Kavanaugh's fate remains uncertain in a chamber where Republicans have a 51-49 majority.

While a few Republicans have also challenged the credibility of Kavanaugh's accusers, Trump's words have been more biting.

Last week, he lampooned Ford's allegation that an inebriated Kavanaugh trapped her beneath him on a bed at a high school house party and tried to take her clothes off before she escaped. Surely she would have reported it to police if the encounter was "as bad as she says," the president said.

"It's a con game they're playing," he said Tuesday. "They're really con artists. They don't believe it themselves, OK?"

Trump's latest broadside against a Kavanaugh accuser was aimed at Deborah Ramirez, who told The New Yorker magazine that Kavanaugh caused her to touch his penis at a party when both were Yale freshmen. Ramirez conceded she'd been drinking, too, and was uncertain of some details of the alleged incident.

Collins

Murkowski

"The second accuser has nothing," Trump told reporters at the United Nations. "The second accuser doesn't even know — thinks maybe it was him, maybe not. She admits she was drunk. She admits time lapses."

Predictably, that played badly with Democrats.

"How many women have heard that before? How many women have kept their experiences quiet because they knew they would hear that?" Sen. Patty Murray of Washington state said of Trump's characterization.

She said Trump's remarks were "disgusting, it's disgraceful and, by the way, women are paying attention."

Republicans also are concerned that, win or lose, the battle is further animating women already inclined to vote against Trump's party in November's elections in which control of the next Congress is at stake.

Treatment of Ford will be watched closely.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski of Alaska, a key Republican vote, said GOP senators need to come into the hearing with open minds. "It's very important to take allegations of those who come forward seriously, and I think we need to go into this hearing with the view that we will listen," she said.

On Tuesday, the Republicans were assessing what Kavanaugh's television interview on the Fox News Channel on Monday — an unusual appearance for a Supreme Court nominee — augured about how he would do in Thursday's hearing.

Some in the White House expressed relief that Kavanaugh presented a positive image to counter the allegations. Yet he appeared shaky at times. And there remained concern among aides and Trump himself about how Kavanaugh would hold up facing far fiercer questioning from Senate Democrats, according to a White House official not authorized to speak publicly.

The No. 2 Senate Republican, John Cornyn of Texas, said he thought Kavanaugh "did well and did what he needed to do" in the interview.

Grassley is planning to use his committee's modest-sized hearing room instead of a larger chamber that's often home to high-profile hearings. He said in a recent letter that the smaller room would help avoid a "circus atmosphere," and Ford has sought to limit the number of TV cameras and journalists covering the event.

Congressional testimony is often magnified by TV close-ups, and a single moment, good or bad, can have a major impact.

Ramirez's attorney, John Clune, said his client stood by The New Yorker story and said he and Grassley's committee were trying to decide how to provide more information to the panel. He said an FBI investigation — which Democrats have also sought for Ford, and Trump and Republicans have blocked — "is the only way to get the truth."

Also, three Yale Law School classmates who endorsed Kavanaugh called for an investigation into the allegations.

Kent Sinclair, Douglas Rutzen and Mark Osler were among roughly two dozen of Kavanaugh's law school classmates who lauded Kavanaugh's qualifications in an Aug. 27 letter to leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Their support for an investigation came as Yale Law professor Akhil Amar, who taught Kavanaugh and testified on his behalf before the committee this month, also called for a probe into what he described as "serious accusations."

Cosby gets 3 to 10 years in 2004 assault

Authorities help comedian Bill Cosby, 81, as he leaves his sentencing hearing in handcuffs Tuesday in Norristown Pa.

psychologists who testified against Cosby were "white women who make money off of accusing black men of being sexual predators," and he accused prosecutors of using a doctored recording of a telephone conversation between Constand's mother and Cosby.

Cosby's lawyers asked that he be allowed to remain free on bail while he appeals his conviction, but the judge appeared incredulous over the request and ordered him locked up immediately, saying that "he could quite possibly be a danger to the community."

The comedian must serve the minimum of three years before becoming eligible for parole.

"For decades, the defendant has been able to hide his true self and hide his crimes using his fame and fortune. He's hidden behind a character created, Dr. Cliff Huxtable," Montgomery County District Attorney Kevin Steele said at a news conference, referring to Cosby's best-known role. But "now, finally, Bill Cosby has been unmasked, and we have seen the real man as he is headed off to prison," Steele said.

Constand stood at Steele's side but shook her head to say she had no comment.

Former model Janice Dickinson, who was among the 60 or so women who have come forward to accuse Cosby of drugging and violating them over the past five decades, looked at him in the courtroom and said: "Here's the last laugh, pal."

The punishment, which also included a $25,000 fine, came at the end of a two-day hearing at which the judge declared Cosby a "sexually violent predator" — a modern-day scarlet letter that subjects him to monthly counseling and requires that neighbors and schools be notified of his whereabouts.

The comic, once known as America's Dad for his role on the top-rated "Cosby Show" in the 1980s, was convicted in April of violating Constand, Temple University women's basketball administrator, at his suburban Philadelphia mansion in 2004.

Constand testified that Cosby gave her what she thought were herbal pills to ease stress, then penetrated her with his fingers as she lay immobilized on a couch. Cosby claimed the encounter was consensual, and his lawyers branded her a "con artist" who framed the comedian to get a big payday — a $3.4 million settlement she received over a decade ago.

Five other accusers took the stand at the trial as part of an effort by prosecutors to portray him as a predator.

Cosby faced anywhere from probation to 10 years in prison. His lawyers asked for house arrest, saying Cosby is too old and vulnerable to do time in prison. Prosecutors asked for five to 10 years behind bars.

Sonia Ossorio, president of the National Organization for Women of New York, credited Cosby's accusers with helping pave the way for the #MeToo movement.

"Bill Cosby seeing the inside of a prison cell sends a strong message that predators — no matter who they are, from Hollywood to Wall Street to the Supreme Court — can no longer be protected at the expense of victims," she said.

Cosby will spend his first night behind bars at a new state prison in suburban Philadelphia.

Cosby spent a few hours at the county jail Tuesday before heading to SCI Phoenix, a 3,830-bed lockup that opened two months ago.

Corrections officials at Phoenix will assess Cosby's needs to determine where he'll serve the bulk of his state prison sentence.

Constand went to police a year after waking up in a fog at Cosby's estate, her clothes askew, only to have the district attorney pass on the case.

Another DA reopened the file a decade later and charged the TV star after stand-up comic Hannibal Buress' riff about Cosby being a rapist prompted other women to come forward and after a federal judge, acting on a request from The Associated Press, unsealed some of Cosby's startling, decade-old testimony in Constand's related civil suit.

Accusers Andrea Constand, left, and Janice Dickinson hug after Cosby's sentencing in the 2004 assault case.

In his testimony, Cosby described sexual encounters with a string of actresses, models and other young women and talked about obtaining quaaludes to give to those he wanted to sleep with.

Cosby's first trial in 2017 ended with a hung jury.

Mattis: 'The jury is out' on women making it in combat jobs

By Lolita C. Baldor
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The jury is still out on whether women can be successful in infantry jobs, Defense Secretary Jim Mattis said Tuesday, while offering students at the Virginia Military Institute a dim view of female troops serving on the front line.

Mattis, a retired Marine, said there are too few women in the infantry ranks to provide enough data to determine how they're doing. And he said he has asked Army and Marine leaders for information to determine if having women in a "close-quarters fight" is a strength or a weakness.

Mattis

"There are a few stalwart young ladies who are charging into this, but they are too few," Mattis said during a visit to VMI in Lexington, Va. "Clearly the jury is out on it, but what we're trying to do is give it every opportunity to succeed if it can."

He said he hopes to get data from the Army and Marine Corps soon.

In early 2013, then-Defense Secretary Leon Panetta opened the door to women serving in combat jobs. The military services studied the issue, and in their final recommendations only the Marine Corp leaders argued for an exception so they could keep certain infantry and ground combat jobs open only to men. In December 2015, then-Defense Secretary Ash Carter ordered all combat posts be opened to women.

Responding to a question from a male student, who described some of his female classmates as fierce, Mattis said the issue must be resolved by military officers who are objective and understand that the natural inclination is to have service open to all. But, he added, "we cannot do something that militarily doesn't make sense."

Mattis likened the issue to having someone break into your house and having to decide "who grabs the baseball bat" to protect the children and "who reaches for the phone to call 911." He didn't offer suggestions on what the answer would be.

The Army and Marine Corps have acknowledged that the number of women seeking infantry jobs will probably be small.

As of late August, there were 26 female enlisted Marines in the infantry and one female officer, according to the Marine Corps. The number of women in Marine combat units has grown steadily, from 254 last year to 382 this year — a 50 percent increase.

The Army has also seen an increase in women in combat units. There are 51 female infantry officers and 253 women in the enlisted ranks of the infantry, the Army said. Another 51 women are serving in the officer and enlisted ranks in the Army Reserve. In addition, 17 women have passed the Army's Ranger course.

Former Trump hotel in Panama is rebranded as JW Marriott

PANAMA CITY — A luxury hotel and condominium tower in Panama City that used to bear the Trump name was formally rebranded Tuesday as the JW Marriott after a bitter dispute over control that ended with the U.S. president's family company evicted.

The 70-story, seaside, sail-shaped building is now operated under the brand of U.S. hotelier Marriott International, which took over management.

The struggle over the hotel began late last year when investor Orestes Fintiklis, who had acquired a majority of condominiums and was supported by residents, sought to fire Trump's company, citing damage to the brand and mismanagement. The Trump Organization fought the termination and refused to hand over the property.

After a fierce legal fight, Fintiklis was able to oust Trump managers.

Wis. workplace shooter passed company background check

MADISON, Wis. — A gunman who wounded four co-workers at a Wisconsin software company last week passed the firm's background check.

WTS Paradigm CEO Nate Herbst said Tuesday that 43-year-old Anthony Tong passed a background check when he was hired. The Wisconsin State Journal reports that Herbst said the company wasn't aware of Tong's mental health history and he didn't know Tong personally.

Tong, a WTS Paradigm employee, opened fire in the company's Middleton headquarters on Sept. 19. Police killed Tong in a shootout.

Court records indicate a South Dakota judge stripped Tong of his concealed carry permit in 2004 after Sioux Falls officers took him to a hospital's mental health unit on a 24-hour hold.

WHO warns of 'perfect storm' for Ebola in eastern Congo

GENEVA — Insecurity, public defiance about vaccinations and political jockeying could create a "perfect storm" leading Congo's latest Ebola outbreak to spread, the emergencies chief for the World Health Organization said Tuesday.

Dr. Peter Salama said the response to the deadly hemorrhagic fever is at a "critical juncture" in eastern North Kivu province, where the outbreak was declared nearly two months ago. Health officials have reported 119 confirmed cases, including 69 deaths.

WHO's operations in Beni, where work to control the outbreak is centered, are "in effect suspended" following a weekend attack by suspected Allied Democratic Forces rebels that killed at least 18 people, Salama said.

It was the seventh attack during the outbreak.

Pope admits deal with China on bishops will cause suffering

ABOARD THE PAPAL PLANE — Pope Francis acknowledged Tuesday that his landmark deal with China over bishop nominations will cause suffering among the underground faithful. But he said that he takes full responsibility and that he — and not Beijing — will have the ultimate say over naming new bishops.

Francis provided the first details of the weekend agreement signed during an in-flight news conference coming home from the Baltics. The deal aims to end decades of tensions over bishop nominations that had contributed to dividing the Chinese church.

China's estimated 12 million Catholics are split between those belonging to the government-backed Chinese Catholic Patriotic Association, which is outside the pope's authority, and an underground church loyal to the pope. Underground priests and parishioners are frequently detained and harassed.

Francis acknowledged that both sides lost something in the talks, and said members of the underground Chinese church "will suffer" as a result of the deal, the text of which has not been released. "There is always suffering in an agreement," he said.

But he said he had already received messages attesting to the "martyr-like faith" of Chinese Catholics and their willingness to accept the decision. He urged prayers "for the suffering for those who don't understand, or who have so many years behind them of living clandestinely."

It was a reference to the underground faithful who endured decades of persecution for refusing to join the Patriotic Association and staying loyal to the Holy See.

5 EU countries reach deal on fate of migrants

MADRID — Five European Union countries struck a deal Tuesday to distribute between them 58 migrants rescued in the Mediterranean Sea and left stranded by continuing disagreements in the bloc over how to cope with the influx of people trying to enter illegally from North Africa.

A Spanish official who wasn't authorized to be named in media reports said Spain, France, Portugal, Germany and Malta agreed to take the migrants, who were rescued by charities off Libya last week but then stuck on a private rescue ship because it couldn't find a country which would let it dock.

The breakthrough came after days of uncertainty, with EU countries either reluctant to act or determined to halt the migrant flow. Boats loaded with rescued migrants are increasingly shunted between governments under pressure to stem newcomers.

CBS picks industry veteran as interim CEO

NEW YORK — CBS says it has named media industry veteran Richard Parsons as interim chairman of the board as the company moves to reshape itself following the ouster of longtime chief Les Moonves.

Parsons is the former chairman of Time Warner and Citicorp. He was added to the board of CBS earlier this month along with five others as the company pursues an independent investigation into Moonves.

Moonves resigned just after six women joined others who had previously accused the longtime television executive with sexual misconduct.

CBS also said Tuesday that two other board members were stepping down. Bruce Gordon and William Cohen had been on the company's board since it became a standalone public company in 2006.

In Texas: Cody Wilson, the owner of a company that sells blueprints for making untraceable 3D-printed guns, has resigned from the firm he founded after being arrested on charges of having sex with an underage girl. Paloma Heindorff said she would be taking over Wilson's duties as director of Defense Distributed.

In Yemen: The United Nations and individual donors are rushing food to a desperate corner of northern Yemen where starving villagers were found to be living off leaves. Aid officials have raised alarm that the country's hunger crisis is worsening beyond the relief effort's already strained capabilities.

The urgent Sterigenics question in DuPage: How much cancer risk?

"Cancer Alley." That's what Lousianans call a stretch of the Mississippi River Valley between Baton Rouge and New Orleans where chemical plants have been spewing pollution for years. Near one of those plants, the risk for developing cancer from toxic air pollution is the highest in the country, according to the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Does the western Chicago suburb of Willowbrook have its own cancer peril? Residents in that DuPage County community and in neighboring suburbs want to know. They deserve to know, as quickly as possible.

The focus of residents' concern is Sterigenics International, a global company that sterilizes medical instruments, pharmaceutical drugs and food, the Tribune's Michael Hawthorne has reported. Willowbrook is one of 16 cities in which Sterigenics operates. The work the company does involves use of ethylene oxide, a chemical that has been on the federal government's list of carcinogens since 1985.

The U.S. EPA regularly assesses cancer risks from air pollution. It maintains a National Air Toxics Assessment, which red-flags areas in the country where more investigation into the impact of air toxins is warranted. Most of the census tracts flagged in the assessment are in Louisiana's "Cancer Alley." Seven of them are in DuPage County, near the Sterigenics plant.

That understandably worries people in southeast DuPage County and nearby areas. More than 19,200 people live within a mile radius of the plant. Four schools and a day care center also are within that radius. Some people have organized protests outside the plant and demanded that it move if it continues to release ethylene oxide into the air. "Even if they stop tomorrow, there are going to be repercussions for our community for years, if not decades," T.J. Kelleher, who lives within a mile of the plant, told Hawthorne. His wife died of pancreatic cancer in February.

Officials at Sterigenics say that in July they installed state-of-the-art emissions control equipment that will reduce ethylene oxide emissions by 90 percent. And on its website, the company says the body naturally produces ethylene oxide: "There is far more (ethylene oxide) internally produced within our own bodies than the risk level stated in the EPA's ... risk assessment."

What's at issue, however, are amounts of ethylene oxide in the air that could prove harmful — not trace amounts generated within the human body. In May, U.S. EPA officials collected air samples in southeast DuPage County communities. Based on that data, federal health officials concluded that the cancer risk from breathing in ethylene oxide in the area could be "up to 6,400 per million, or more than 6 cases of cancer for every 1,000 people," Hawthorne wrote.

Peter Orris, an occupational and environmental medicine researcher at the University of Illinois at Chicago, called that statistic "just staggering."

Federal health officials, the Illinois attorney general's office and U.S. Sens. Dick Durbin and Tammy Duckworth say there's a clear need for much more robust testing around the plant: a long-term air monitoring effort in residential areas by the U.S. EPA and Sterigenics. That's a reasonable request, and one that should be acted on as urgently as possible. Here's why:

The first must-take step here is to understand the scope and intensity of the risk over time. Yet the testing done in May gave only a snapshot of the problem. Long-term air monitoring would provide a much more accurate picture, and it would tell residents of surrounding communities whether the new equipment Sterigenics installed in July has actually made a difference. That information would help regulators and other public officials decide whether to take other actions. DuPage County Board Chairman Dan Cronin and state Sen. John Curran have called for revoking the company's current state permit to operate.

The Sterigenics plant isn't isolated in some vast industrial tract. It's next to homes, parks and schools — places where children learn, play and live, communities that people have been rooted in for years. Kelleher, of Darien, told Hawthorne, "To think the very place my wife loved, the place where we raised our children, might have killed her is devastating."

Kelleher and other residents need a clearer picture of what they're dealing with. That's not a big ask. Given the potential risks, it's mandatory.

The risks of Trump's 'America First'

Last year at the United Nations, President Donald Trump stirred fears of a nuclear conflict by taunting North Korean leader Kim Jong Un as "Rocket Man ... on a suicide mission."

This year, no such verbal pyrotechnics. On Tuesday at the same venue, Trump did, though, light into plenty of other targets, including Iran's murderous regime, OPEC's price gougers, the International Criminal Court, Venezuela's failed socialists, allies who don't pull their weight, China's role in the unfair world trade system and nations that expect a foreign aid handout from the U.S. while despising American values.

That is, Trump thumped for his "America First" agenda, telling the General Assembly: "We reject the ideology of globalism and embrace the doctrine of patriotism."

On this, he has plenty of company among his fellow Americans. And if you frame every issue as America First lest it be America The Victim — of unfair trade, unfair world defense expectations — then it's no surprise that Americans will embrace a less than robust U.S. role in global affairs.

But the country with the world's most powerful military and the world's biggest economy can't safely ignore ... the rest of the world.

We're not advocating intervening, militarily or otherwise, in all manner of conflicts across the globe; those should be judged case by case.

That said, when America retreats from the world, it forfeits much leverage to export freedom, democracy, human rights and free markets. A blinkered America leaves a dangerous void to be filled by thugs like Russian President Vladimir Putin, who poisons former spies and angles to disrupt American elections, and Iran's supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, who bankrolls terror across the globe.

SCOTT STANTIS

Yes, it's smart to sort friends from enemies — and reward or punish them accordingly. The U.S. should focus resources to protect American security and interests. Example: Trump rightly boasts that the U.S., with help from allies, essentially drove Islamic State terrorists from Iraq and Syria. But battling terrorism is a global joint venture that ultimately requires those regional allies, more than the U.S., to prevail.

Similarly, we've backed Trump's call for NATO allies to contribute more to their own, and Europe's, defense. But we don't share Trump's doubts about why NATO should exist in the first place. Just look to Russia, greedily eyeing its former Soviet satellites, and you know why.

American leverage, judiciously applied, can produce results. For instance: Trump's taunt of Kim last year was a useful disruption of the long-standing status quo. Challenging Kim yielded a summit and some tentative progress on ridding the peninsula of nukes. The world is not now safe from North Korean aggression, as Trump has boasted. For that to happen, Trump will need major help from China, South Korea and Japan. But the disruption did focus the world on Pyongyang's growing nuclear heft.

Another example: Iran. In May, Trump abandoned the U.S.-led 2015 nuclear pact with Iran, provoking hand-wringing among Europeans who feared an imminent conflict with the Islamic Republic (and a massive loss of business opportunities). So far, however, the result is impressive. Most of the world's major businesses have chosen a side — the largest, most reliable economy in the world, the U.S. — over the pipsqueak Iran. Iran's economy is crumbling as its oil exports dive. Unemployment in Iran is staggeringly high. Citizens protest in the streets, a potentially lethal activity in the oppressive regime.

Will Trump's tough stance on Iran yield a new deal — or a growing nuclear threat in the Middle East? Stay tuned: Some of the strongest economic sanctions against Iran kick in on Nov. 5. They could further devastate Iran's economy and put public pressure on its regime.

If only Trump would recognize these tentative successes in dealing with North Korea and Iran as reasons why America shouldn't only look inward. America First works better as a populist slogan than as an effective foreign policy. To achieve the latter, the U.S. has to engage. Selectively, yes. But to advance security, human rights and democracy, often.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

In tribal warfare, there are no degrees of tribal loyalty. It is Manichaean, and it is binary. ...We live then in a paradox. Our society has less crime and less danger than ever, and yet we see threats everywhere. It has become more racially and culturally diverse than any society in the history of humankind, but it is plagued by "white supremacists" or "hordes of illegals." And you cannot question these feelings because subjectivity is more important than objectivity, and sensitivity trumps reality.

Gay, lesbian, and transgender people live in a world unimaginable to the overwhelming majority of humankind, and to our predecessors of only five years ago, and yet we are told by our leaders that we are "under siege." As women kick ass in our economy and culture, as they achieve success that previous generations would have thought extraordinary, what is the response? Rage, of course! Furious rage! ...

These tribal instincts are as emotionally satisfying as they are toxic. I am not immune to them either. None of us is.

They are the reason why we have this tribal president, who has, in turn, intensified the tribalism of his supporters and his opponents. They are the reason our universities are purged of non-leftists in the humanities, why Fox News fires its dissident conservatives, why the editors of our newspapers and magazines are slowly being intimidated into excluding any diversity of opinion.

Andrew Sullivan, New York Magazine

As soon as I set foot in the restaurant, I hear it. The sound is unmistakable. It's a television. Let me state for the record how I feel about TVs in restaurants. I hate them. TVs in restaurants are a scourge and an epidemic. Restaurants were conceived as places you go to eat. Someone would buy, prepare and serve food to you. This business model has held up well since the first modern restaurant opened, reportedly in Paris in 1765. ...

I hereby implore the restaurant industry to give us a break. (Sports bars are exempt.) Let's face it, our attempts to interact with each other face-to-face these days already encounter enough distractions. We spend ever more hours of our lives staring at our screens. TVs follow us wherever we go, from airports to our doctor's waiting room. Let's preserve the places that are left where we can hang out together uninterrupted.

Special prosecutor Joseph McMahon, center, addresses Judge Vincent Gaughan outside the jury's presence this month during Officer Jason Van Dyke's murder trial.

The ugly reason Laquan McDonald is now on trial

ERIC ZORN

The trial of Laquan McDonald has kicked into gear this week with a parade of witnesses called to the stand to establish that McDonald had a history of violent outbursts and criminally aggressive behavior.

But wait, you're saying. McDonald isn't on trial. He's dead, shot down like a dog nearly four years ago on South Pulaski Road. The person on trial is the man who killed him, Chicago police Officer Jason Van Dyke.

Technically, yes.

But this week, Van Dyke's defense team has been granted significant leeway to put the deceased on trial, to call witnesses to testify to his erratic and troubled past in an effort to bolster the claim that Van Dyke was acting in self-defense by implying that McDonald was the aggressor in the fatal encounter.

As I wrote in May, mud smeared on the deceased in such cases is called "Lynch material," after a ruling in People v. Lynch, a 1984 Illinois Supreme Court decision. In that ruling, the majority held that a defendant who is claiming self-defense in a murder trial is entitled to introduce evidence of "the victim's aggressive and violent character" even if the defendant was unaware of those qualities when the killing took place.

And here, when Van Dyke got out of his police vehicle and, within six seconds, began firing, he clearly did not know anything about McDonald's 26 arrests, his combative behavior with authorities, his numerous fights with peers, his hospitalizations for psychiatric issues and his drug use. All he knew was that an alleged vandal with a knife was loping along, ignoring commands to drop his weapon and surrender.

Van Dyke and several fellow officers reported after the fact that McDonald had been swinging his knife in an aggressive manner, advancing and finally lunging at police. Van Dyke, they said, shot in order to save his own life.

Civilian eyewitnesses told a different story, one in which McDonald was angling away from police when Van Dyke opened fire.

"Lynch material" is aimed at helping jurors or judges sort out such conflicting accounts.

"Evidence of the victim's propensity for violence tends to support the defendant's version of the facts (when) there are conflicting accounts of what happened," wrote the majority in Lynch. "Whether the defendant knew of this evidence at the time of the event is irrelevant. If the jurors could see for themselves exactly what the defendant saw at the time, such circumstantial evidence would be unnecessary."

But wait, you are saying again. Here we have the famous dashcam video. It confirms the civilian witness accounts and exposes the police versions of events as brazen lies concocted to justify the shooting. Even the computer-generated video re-creation of the incident placed into evidence by Van Dyke's defense team Tuesday — a simulation that purports to show exactly what the defendant saw at the time — underscores how utterly and tellingly false the initial police reports were.

Now that we have these videos, why do we need "Lynch material"? Of what possible relevance is it that McDonald allegedly took a swing at a juvenile intake officer in 2014, allegedly tried to throw a punch at a sheriff's deputy in 2013 and so on, as jurors have heard?

Well, legally speaking, we still have conflicting accounts of what happened because Van Dyke's partner testified last week that the video doesn't show what actually happened. And jurors have the right to disregard or ignore the video evidence in their deliberations.

Practically speaking, though, the best explanation of why the defense wants to put McDonald on trial is not to persuade jurors to disbelieve the plain images on the videos. It's to plant in their minds the idea that Van Dyke should be hailed, not convicted, for ridding our city of a pest. It's to cause jurors to think that he may not have been a danger to police or bystanders that night but someday he was going to be, so what's the harm in a little preemptive vigilantism.

But wait, you're saying yet again. That's a vile idea that offends the ideals of our criminal justice system.

But it's long been out there, bubbling poisonously along in social media and in my inbox. Now it's in the courtroom.

Even in our diverse tribes, we're still Americans

CLARENCE PAGE

As the heated debate over Brett Kavanaugh's nomination to the Supreme Court boils down to a simple question of which tribe will win, it's an excellent time to revisit Abraham Lincoln's reaction to signs that his nation was coming apart.

It would not be "some trans-Atlantic military giant" that threatens our political institutions, he said in a speech to the Young Men's Lyceum of Springfield in 1838, 22 years before his presidency and the Civil War. Rather, he said, the greatest danger would come from our own battles with each other.

"If it ever reach us it must spring up amongst us," he said. "It cannot come from abroad. If destruction be our lot we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of freemen we must live through all time or die by suicide."

Lincoln's Lyceum address has special meaning to me, for it came in the wake of the murder two months earlier by a pro-slavery mob of Elijah P. Lovejoy, an anti-slavery newspaper editor and Presbyterian minister in Alton, Ill., whom I call the patron saint of editorial writers.

I hear echoes of those angry times when President Donald Trump fires up a rally crowd with a harangue against mainstream media as "fake news" and "enemies of the American people." I'm not surprised to hear that media bashing still offers a great applause line in a way that transcends party lines.

But how much, I wonder, does that crowd really love democracy, especially when it offers a soapbox to views that disagree with their own?

A poll last year by the Pew Research Center found that only 49 percent of Republicans viewed press criticism as very important for maintaining a strong democracy, compared with 76 percent of Democrats who said so.

Another poll last year by the liberal-leaning Public Policy Polling found that only 53 percent of those surveyed said they "trust judges more than President Trump to make the right decisions for the United States." Among self-identified Trump supporters, about half (51 percent) agreed that Trump should be able to overturn court decisions. Only 33 percent disagreed.

With the revival of racial and ethnically based nationalism here and abroad, particularly in European politics, it is not hard to see comparisons with the tragedy Lincoln saw boiling up in the pre-Civil War times as race and patriotism clashed along racially charged battle lines of racial and political tribes.

BILL CLARK/CQ-ROLL CALL

American flags at the base of the Washington Monument frame the Capitol dome this spring in Washington.

"Americans on both the left and the right now view their political opponents not as fellow Americans with differing views, but as enemies to be vanquished," write Yale law professors Amy Chua and Jed Rubenfeld in the special October issue of The Atlantic on the subject of whether democracy is dying. "And they have come to view the Constitution not as an aspirational statement of shared principles and a bulwark against tribalism, but as a cudgel with which to attack those enemies."

Chua, famous for bringing "tiger moms" into our national conversation on child-rearing, has a new book, "Political Tribes: Group Instinct and the Fate of Nations." The Constitution has had unique success as a model for uniting a nation that, even then, was much more ethnically and gender-diverse than the white men who wrote it — not along racial, ethnic or religious lines but around a platform of ideas.

Sure, it was self-contradictory to declare a land of freedom and equality where only white, land-owning men could vote. But as Justice Thurgood Marshall, the Supreme Court's first African-American justice, observed, we should celebrate the document for including the legislative mechanisms for its own improvement, even if it took a Civil War and a civil rights revolution to bring that improvement.

In that sense the coming midterm elections, called the most important midterms ever by people in both parties, really are more important than most. The divisions that have brought political gridlock in Washington call upon us to examine not only opposing platforms of issues but the fundamental obligation that all citizens have to take our politics more seriously than "Which side are you on?"

The rise of resentment as an organizing principle is hardly new, but dueling resentments left unresolved through reasoned debate and cooperation only take us back down the path against which Lincoln warned, yet which would soon consume the nation and take his life in civil war.

We Americans came here on different ships, goes an old saying in the civil rights movement, but we're all in the same boat now. We may have rough sailing ahead, but we must never lose course as Americans.

E-cigarette makers taking Big Tobacco trail

By Sarah Milov

GABBY JONES/BLOOMBERG

The Food and Drug Administration recently described teenage e-cigarette use as an "epidemic," echoing the first-hand observations of teachers, social media watchers and the public health community.

Juul Labs, the leading e-cigarette manufacturer, responded with the industry's well-worn, lawyer-approved denial. "We are committed to preventing underage use of our product," said Kevin Burns, Juul's chief executive.

But just like their traditional counterpart, e-cigarettes have always been marketed to kids. And as a result, millions of American teens have become addicted to nicotine before they reach the age of consent, while their brains are still developing.

In the late 19th century, at the dawn of the cigarette age, cigarette firms began placing stiff cardboard inside packaging to prevent cigarettes from getting crushed. Soon, the baseball card was born as a gimmick to entice boys into collecting the rosters of their favorite teams.

A few decades later, the marketing gurus at R.J. Reynolds saw the back-to-school season as an opportunity to expand their reach. "School days are here. And that means BIG TOBACCO BUSINESS for somebody. Let's get it," read one 1927 memo sent to division managers in advance of preparatory school openings in the fall.

In more recent decades, the industry refined these techniques, for the simple reason that it knows that the vast majority of smokers become addicted before they are 18.

Hooking teens

Internal industry documents, now public through litigation, reveal a far-reaching strategy to hook underage teens, even after the dangers of smoking had become well-known. As one 1978 memo from a Lorillard official put it: "The base of our business is the high school student." As another report elaborated, the company's goal was to design packaging "to attract the youthful eye" rather than "the ever-watchful eye of the Federal Government."

Joe Camel was the most infamous testament to the industry's savvy in recruiting young smokers. By the early 1990s, after three years of an advertising blitz centered on the "smooth character," Camel's slice of the under-18 market surged from 0.5 percent to 33 percent.

Much has changed in the intervening decades. Joe Camel has been retired for more than 20 years. Today's Juulers were born after the 1998 Master Settlement Agreement prohibited cigarette manufacturers from even indirectly targeting kids.

Juul Labs is not owned by any legacy cigarette company, and Juuls themselves don't look like a tobacco product at all. Instead, they resemble an extra-long USB drive, and they can charge in a laptop port. The devices are so sleek that kids get away with using them in class.

In fact, many users see no connection between cigarettes and e-cigarettes. You don't "smoke" or even "vape" a Juul. You simply "Juul."

At least on the surface then, Juul is no throwback to the age of Big Tobacco. But from its product design to marketing strategies to corporate disavowals, Juul is following a well-trodden path.

In the 1970s, Brown and Williamson, the makers of Kool, flirted with the idea of a youth cigarette. "It is a well known fact that teenagers like sweet products," read one marketing report under the heading "Youth Cigarette-New Concepts." Cola, apple and "sweet flavor" cigarettes were considered.

Juul takes this insight into the youthful palette to new extremes. Creme, mango, cucumber and fruit medley are a few of the most popular flavors of Juul pods.

In fact, the Juul pods with the highest nicotine content are the sweetest and most attractive to younger users. Tobacco- and mint-flavored pods have lower nicotine levels, perhaps to attract smokers seeking a less-harmful nicotine fix.

2 faces of Juul

And therein lies the fundamental contradiction of Juul Labs' public face. On the one hand, Juul presents itself as offering a potentially lifesaving device, enabling smokers to switch to a less deadly product. "No minor or non-nicotine user should ever use Juul," a representative recently told The Washington Post.

But the company has seen incredible growth not as a harm-reduction or a cessation tool, but as a form of recreation that creates addiction in minors. And far from being an effective tool for quitting, evidence is emerging that young people who Juul may actually be more likely to smoke conventional cigarettes. Juul's sales are up more than 700 percent from a year ago.

Juul has implemented some admirable age-verification strategies on its website. But like a giant cigarette vending machine, researchers have found, the Juul website is easy to circumvent.

But internet verification does little to address the 74 percent of underage Juul users who obtained them from physical retail locations like gas stations and convenience stores. Just 6 percent reported purchasing Juuls on the internet.

In response, the FDA recently issued 1,300 warning letters and fines to retailers that sold Juuls to kids. However, given the magnitude of demand, this sporadic enforcement is unlikely to drastically reduce sales at the tens of thousands of convenience stores where kids buy Juuls along with legal vices like Slurpees and Snickers.

The FDA has been late to regulate e-cigarettes, even as the agency admits that the nation faces an "epidemic" of nicotine-addicted youths. FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb has given makers of e-cigs 60 days to devise a strategy to keep their products out of the hands of minors. History suggests that voluntary action by tobacco manufacturers is unlikely to substantially reduce youth-smoking rates and may even give Juul Labs a defense when addicted Americans bring suit against Juul and other retailers — as they have already begun to do.

Fortunately, the history of tobacco also contains many lessons for public health and e-cigarettes.

Local initiative is a crucial and underappreciated resource for public health. The anti-tobacco movement of the 1970s and 1980s helped create a right to smoke-free air by passing local ordinances that restricted where cigarettes could be smoked. Cigarettes became more difficult to smoke, and fewer people smoked them.

The stakes for curtailing teen use of Juuls are high: If trends continue, a generation of young people will enter adulthood addicted to nicotine. While e-cigarettes may be less carcinogenic than cigarettes, researchers do not know the long-term consequences of Juuling on the heart and lungs.

But we do not need to wait for perfect scientific knowledge. We've been here before. We know enough to act.

Why many women wait to report sexual assault

By Michael J. Stern

The first time a woman told me why she waited so long to report the man who sexually assaulted her, I was skeptical.

As a young prosecutor, I'd handled all sorts of criminal cases before I was assigned my first sexual assault case. Someone robbed at gunpoint would never wait two years before reporting it. So I could not understand why a woman who had been violated in such a personal way would not make a beeline to the police station.

My basic prosecutor's training taught me that victims of sexual assault often do not make reports because they are embarrassed, fear they will not be believed and do not want to relive their trauma by recounting it to a jury of 12 strangers. Intellectually, I understood all the reasons. But it was not until I sat face to face with one woman after another who had been sexually assaulted that I believed this in my heart as well as my head.

Hill

What most affected me was not what the women told me as I worked to prepare them for their court appearances. What made me believe was what I saw. I didn't need her to say the words "I'm ashamed" to know that's what she felt. I knew this when her eyes looked at mine for only a second before looking down, and when she needed both hands to steady a cup of water, and when I could see her struggling to hold back the tears, for fear that once she started she would not stop.

As a prosecutor, it was my job to speak for victims of sexual assault. Even though the women knew I was working on their behalf, telling me what happened was not easy. I knew that discomfort was magnified when their introduction to the criminal justice system required them to recount their greatest trauma to a bunch of men in blue uniforms whose job required them to question every claim before bringing criminal charges.

It's fair for people to ask why a woman waited so long to report a sexual assault, why a woman later interacted with her assailant at work and why a woman said nothing for years before telling her closest friend.

I can understand why many decent men, who support women's rights, are confused about how some women react to sexual assault. While the questions are fair, it is not honest to apply the same demands of logic to a sexual assault victim that we do to victims of robbery or credit card fraud. It isn't that logic fails to apply, it's that other factors change the equation and so the answer is different.

Victims of other crimes do not have to use the words penis, vagina and intercourse to describe what happened to them. And if you were uncomfortable reading those words in the privacy of your home, imagine the anguish of using the same words to describe your rape to a stranger.

Last week, in response to Christine Blasey Ford's allegation that Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh sexually assaulted her when she was 15 years old, President Donald Trump tweeted: "I have no doubt that, if the attack on Dr. Ford was as bad as she says, charges would have been immediately filed with local Law Enforcement Authorities by either her or her loving parents. I ask that she bring those filings forward so that we can learn date, time, and place!" Translation: If an assault really happened, you would have gone to the police immediately. You didn't, so you're lying.

It is bad enough that victims of sexual assault routinely hear the drum of disbelief from their attacker's camp. For the president of the United States to publicly press his finger on the scales of justice, in favor of a man who is alleged to have sexually assaulted a 15-year-old girl, is unforgivable.

President Trump has reduced the complexities of why women hesitate reporting sexual assaults to a truism that late reporting means the assault did not occur. And in so doing, he has increased the likelihood that women will continue to fear that reporting sexual assault will bring disbelief and personal attacks.

Taking their cue from the president, other Republican leaders have fallen in line, branding Ford a liar and foretelling the outcome of her disclosure, all without a word of testimony spoken.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said that Ford is "mixed up." Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell said he is going to "plow through" the confirmation hearing and that Kavanaugh "will be" appointed to the Supreme Court.

And Sen. Bob Corker, R-Tenn., reserved all his empathy for Kavanaugh, the accused sexual assailant, with this: "I mean, I can't imagine the horror of being accused of something like this."

Little has changed in the 27 years since Republican damage control morphed Anita Hill from victim to villain during the Supreme Court confirmation hearing for Clarence Thomas.

If anyone truly did not understand why women wait so long to report their sexual assault, they should understand now.

Michael J. Stern was a state prosecutor, near Detroit, and a federal prosecutor, for 25 years, in Detroit and Los Angeles.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Academic integrity

Cass Sunstein makes some broad — and quite misleading — assumptions in his Tuesday screed railing against liberal bias in universities. He bases his entire argument around which professors identify as Republican or Democrat, and fails to tell us what percentage actually even declare a party.

Furthermore, he continues his faulty reasoning by assuming that even among those with a party affiliation, that they all think the same way. He is appalled that the ratio of declared Democrats to Republican in the field of music is 33:1, yet I fail to see what the impact of this ratio is. Will music students only be exposed to left-leaning composers? He is cheered that the ratio in engineering is 1.6:1, yet still cannot give any reasoning as to why this is important.

Sunstein's piece is a perfect example of how people can make any argument using data while not giving a full picture of what the data actually say. Perhaps he should have paid more attention in his logic course. But then again, it must have been taught by a Democrat.

Criticism or hate?

In a Monday op-ed, Hussein Ibish writes that "there can't be an exception to free speech for strong criticism and even boycotts of Israel." We too believe that even the harshest criticism of Israel should be permitted. As Jews, we recognize that the protection of free expression is sacrosanct and has allowed us and other minorities to flourish in America.

Yet denying that some acts of anti-Semitism have been cloaked as criticism of the Jewish state is simply incorrect. Only months ago, a resident assistant at Stanford University vowed to "physically fight Zionists on campus next year." Only days ago, a professor at the University of Michigan rescinded an offer to write a letter of recommendation for a student when he realized that the student planned to study in Israel.

Perhaps a debate can exist whether these are acts of anti-Semitism or political speech. But saying that the mention of the word "Israel" or "Zionist" somehow cleanses any act of animus toward the Jewish people flies in the face of reality.

Anti-Semitism has been around for a long time and has taken a variety of forms. The mere fact that its definition might be subject to misuse is not a reason to ignore an important part of that definition. One would be hard pressed to find another form of prejudice held to that same standard.

Wide-open space

For decades the communities surrounding the North Branch portion of the Chicago River have shared their backyard with an unlikely neighbor — a planned manufacturing district that includes businesses like scrap metal recycler General Iron Industries. The relationship has never really worked.

Now these dirty manufacturers are leaving the North Branch — but the city seems swayed by lobbyists pressing for skyscrapers and stadiums instead of residents clamoring to enjoy the Chicago River and some real public open space on the crowded North Side.

A public park is the answer for everyone. It complements new development, but also guarantees all Chicago residents will be able to enjoy their Chicago River.

If the General Iron land isn't acquired right now, it surely will become even more private skyscrapers.

The Lincoln Yards development alone will bring in 50,000 new residents, workers and shoppers to the congested community. Instead of a scrap yard, the General Iron property can and should become the backbone of the North Branch Park and Nature Preserve.

There is pressure to let developers build the equivalent of three Willis Towers along the Chicago River. Tell that to the kids turned away every summer from playing Little League at Oz Park because there's no other park to serve them. Tell that to the thousands upon thousands of motorists idling in traffic year-round on the major arteries of North Avenue, Halsted Street and Clybourn Avenue, as well as side streets, fighting to reach their homes, shop, see a play, get to the lakefront or exit the city.

No one is against developing the area — but there is a better balance that will make this part of Chicago more livable for generations to come. That's what Friends of the North Branch Park and Nature Preserve is fighting for. Without a large, contiguous public park to serve as a release value, the area is destined to become less attractive to long-term stakeholders.

Now is the time to take steps to create the North Branch Park and Nature Preserve.

PERSPECTIVE

Trump's U.N. speech almost adds up to a doctrine

By Eli Lake

President Donald Trump's foreign policy is often caricatured as a mass of contradictions. He rails against the dumb wars of his predecessors but has yet to withdraw U.S. troops from Afghanistan, Iraq or Syria. He taunted and threatened North Korea's tyrannical leader, only to later meet him in Singapore for a lavish summit. Trump kisses up to Russia's autocratic president, but his government sells weapons to Russia's enemies and sanctions its senior officials.

There is some truth to these criticisms, but they miss a larger point. While it's hard to say there is a Trump doctrine, there has emerged a theme to his statecraft: American sovereignty.

This was the message of Trump's Tuesday address to the United Nations General Assembly. "We will never surrender America's sovereignty to an unelected, unaccountable global bureaucracy," he said, referring to the U.N.'s International Criminal Court. In return, he promised to "honor the right of every nation in this room to pursue its own customs, beliefs and traditions. The United States will not tell you how to live or work or worship." He urged the assembled leaders to "make their countries great again."

This rhetoric may sound familiar, but it's actually a break from the past. Previous U.S. presidents have, to varying degrees, embraced the U.N. and other international bodies as means for America to shape the world. Trump, by contrast, sees the international system as a way for the world to constrain America.

So in his speech, Trump emphasized how his administration has rejected what he calls "the ideology of globalism." The most obvious example is the U.S. withdrawal from the 2015 Iran nuclear deal. The Senate never ratified that agreement as a treaty; before any member of Congress voted on it, President Barack Obama got a U.N. Security Council resolution in support of it.

There are other examples. Trump announced the U.S. will not participate in the U.N. Global Compact for Migration. He boasted that the U.S. had withdrawn from the U.N. Human Rights Council, after other member states rejected his administration's proposed reforms.

Trump was particularly pointed about the International Criminal Court. U.S. wariness of the court is not new. Neither George W. Bush nor Barack Obama tried to ratify the Treaty of Rome that created this tribunal. Earlier this month, Trump's national security adviser, John Bolton, went further, promising to sanction the court and prosecute its officials if it launched investigations into the U.S. or its allies.

Trump's emphasis on American sovereignty also has implications for trade. In his speech, he singled out the World Trade Organization for allowing members "to rig the system in their favor" by engaging in product dumping and intellectual property theft.

For many foreign policy experts, Trump's talk about sovereignty is balderdash. The international institutions that the U.S. helped create after World War II were designed not only to prevent conflict, advance trade and promote freedom, but they also rigged the system in America's favor. The U.S. has one of five vetoes at the U.N. Security Council. It controls the largest share of votes at the International Monetary Fund. The U.S. military provides the logistics and supply chain for U.N. peacekeeping. A skilled president should try to use the system to its benefit instead of rejecting it out of hand.

Maybe so. But a lot has happened, in the world and in Turtle Bay, since the U.N. charter was signed 73 years ago. It's not just that the U.N. has failed to prevent conflicts between or within nations. It's that the U.N. itself has allowed its worst members to corrupt it. That's why so many were shamed after the U.N. was forced to open its books on Iraq's oil-for-food program, and why U.N. peacekeeping missions have faced scandal after scandal.

Trump is half right: The U.S. would be foolish to allow a U.N. court to sit in judgment of its soldiers. U.S. military action should not be subject to a veto from China, France, Russia or the United Kingdom. But the U.N.'s structural flaw is not just the threat it poses to the sovereignty of its members. Also, it's the deference it pays to the sovereignty of rogues.

Michael Kors to buy Versace for $2 billion

Added glamour expected to fire up sales for designer

By Anne D'Innocenzio and Michelle Chapman
Associated Press

ROBYN BECK/GETTY-AFP
Michael Kors plans to open 100 more Versace stores once the acquisition of the fashion brand is complete.

NEW YORK — Michael Kors is buying the Italian fashion house Versace in a deal worth more than $2 billion, continuing its hard charge into the world of high-end fashion.

The deal Tuesday comes 14 months after the New York handbag maker spent $1.35 billion adding to its portfolio Jimmy Choo, the shoemaker that rocketed to fame on the high heels of "Sex and the City."

Like others in the fashion industry, Michael Kors Holdings Ltd. is trying to fire up sales by cranking up the glamour.

Tapestry, once known as Coach, acquired Kate Spade last year. Like Coach, Michael Kors is changing its name as it seeks to reframe how people in perceive it.

Michael Kors remains the chief creative director at Kors, but the expanding company will be renamed Capri Holdings Ltd., with $8 billion in projected annual sales. Versace will be a key engine of growth, executives said in a conference call Tuesday.

Bringing in Versace adds a layer of glitter to the company, which sells handbags for less than $500. Versace bags can fetch five times that figure.

Versace's fall styles include midi-dresses with baroque print for $2,950, and vinyl skinny jeans for $1,250.

It becomes the latest major Italian fashion house to be folded into the portfolio of a foreign entity, a trend that has raised concern about the future of the made-in-Italy marquee.

French conglomerates have been the biggest buyers, with Kering buying Gucci, Bottega Veneta and Pomelato, and LVMH taking on Bulgari and Loro Piana.

The Qatari royal family owns Valentino.

Gianni Versace founded his brand in 1978, becoming a major force bringing to prominence ready-to-wear and serving as a daring, sexy counterpoint to Giorgio Armani's more subdued elegance.

Gianni Versace's flashy, rock 'n' roll designs and Medusa logo became emblematic of a generation led by Princess Diana and Madonna. He also helped create supermodels such as Naomi Campbell, Cindy Crawford and Claudia Schiffer,and was the first to bring celebrities to the front row.

The family-run business was thrown into chaos with Versace's murder 21 years ago. His sister, Donatella Versace, took over creative direction, while his brother Santo continued on the business side. It had been eyeing a public listing for several years.

The Versace family still controls 80 percent of the company. The investment firm Blackstone owns the remaining 20 percent.

Donatella Versace presented her latest collection for next spring and summer last Friday during Milan Fashion Week.

"This is a very exciting moment for Versace," she said. "It has been more than 20 years since I took over the company along with my brother Santo and daughter Allegra."

Donatella, who holds a 20 percent stake in the business, will stay on board as creative director, and the family will become shareholders in the larger business. Santo now holds a 30 percent stake and Allegra, 50 percent.

"With the full resources of our group, we believe that Versace will grow to over $2 billion in revenues," said John Idol, chairman and CEO of Michael Kors. "We believe that the strength of the Michael Kors and Jimmy Choo brands, and the acquisition of Versace, position us to deliver multiple years of revenue and earnings growth."

Kors said Tuesday that it plans to open 100 new Versace stores (there are 200 in operation) at the same time that it amplifies online sales of the brand. It also plans to increase Versace's men's and women's accessories and its footwear business.

The deal is expected to close in the fourth quarter. Shares of Kors rose more than 1 percent.

Oil prices haven't hurt economy

U.S. production helps lessen impact of OPEC members

By David Koenig
Associated Press

GERRY BROOME/AP
America's rediscovered prowess in oil production is shaking up old notions about the impact on the economy.

DALLAS — America's rediscovered prowess in oil production is shaking up old notions about the impact of higher crude prices on the U.S. economy.

It long has been conventional wisdom that rising oil prices hurt the economy by forcing consumers to spend more on gasoline and heating their homes, leaving less for other things.

Presumably that kind of run-up would slow the U.S. economy. Instead, the economy grew at its fastest rate in nearly four years during the April-June quarter.

President Donald Trump appears plainly worried about rising oil prices just a few weeks before midterm elections that will decide which party controls the House and Senate.

"We protect the countries of the Middle East, they would not be safe for very long without us, and yet they continue to push for higher and higher oil prices!" Trump tweeted Thursday. "We will remember. The OPEC monopoly must get prices down now!"

Members of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, who account for about one-third of global oil supplies, met last weekend with nonmembers including Russia.

The gathering was not expected to yield any big decisions — those typically come at major OPEC meetings such as the one set for December. Oil markets, however, were roiled Friday by a report that attendees were considering a significant increase in production to offset declining output from Iran, where exports have fallen ahead of Trump's reimposition of sanctions.

OPEC and Russia have capped production since January 2017 to bolster prices. Output fell even below those targets this year, and in June the same countries agreed to boost the oil supply, although they didn't give numbers.

> "Because the U.S. now is producing so much more than it used to, (the rise in oil prices) is not as big an impact as it would have been 20 years ago or 10 years ago."
> — Michael Maher, energy researcher at Rice University

Oil prices are up roughly 40 percent in the last year. On Friday, benchmark U.S. crude was trading around $71 a barrel, and the international standard, Brent, was closing in on $80.

The national average price for gasoline stood at $2.85 per gallon, up 10 percent from a year ago, according to AAA. That increase likely would be greater were it not for a slump in gasoline demand that is typical for this time of year, when summer vacations are over.

The United States imports about 6 million barrels of oil a day on average, but that is down from more than 10 million a decade ago. In the same period, U.S. production has doubled to more than 10 million barrels a day, according to government figures.

"Because the U.S. now is producing so much more than it used to, (the rise in oil prices) is not as big an impact as it would have been 20 years ago or 10 years ago," said Michael Maher, an energy researcher at Rice University and a former Exxon Mobil economist.

The weakening link between oil and the overall economy was seen — in reverse — three years ago. Then, plunging oil prices were expected to boost the economy by leaving more money in consumers' pockets, yet GDP growth slowed at the same time that lower oil prices took hold during 2015.

Other economists caution against minimizing the disruption caused by energy prices.

"Higher oil prices are unambiguously bad for the U.S. economy," said Philip Verleger, an economist who has studied energy markets. "They force consumers to divert their income from spending on other items to spending on fuels."

Because energy amounts to only about 3 percent of consumer spending, a cutback in that other 97 percent "causes losses for those who sell autos, restaurants, airlines, resorts and all parts of the economy," Verleger said.

The federal Energy Information Administration said this month the U.S. likely reclaimed the title of world's biggest oil producer earlier this year by surpassing the output of Saudi Arabia in February and Russia during the summer. If the agency's estimates are correct, it would mark the first time since 1973 that the U.S. has led the oil-pumping pack.

And that has made the impact of oil prices on the economy a more complicated calculation.

When oil prices tumbled starting in mid-2014, U.S. energy producers cut back on drilling. They cut thousands of jobs and they spent less on rigs, steel pipes and rail cars to ship crude to refineries. That softened the bounce that economists expected to see from cheaper oil.

Now, with oil prices rising, energy companies are boosting production, creating an economic stimulus that offsets some of the blow from higher prices on consumers. Oil- and gas-related investment accounted for about 40 percent of the growth in business investment in the April-June quarter this year. The number of active oil-drilling rigs is near a three-year high, although not back to levels seen before the 2014 oil-price crash.

Moody's Analytics estimates that every penny increase at the pump reduces consumer spending by $1 billion over a year, and gasoline has jumped 24 cents in the last year, according to AAA. That is "a clear-cut negative" but not deeply damaging, said Ryan Sweet, director of real-time economics at Moody's.

"Usually with gasoline prices, speed kills — a gradual increase (like the current one), consumers can absorb that," Sweet said. Consumers have other factors in their favor, he added, including a tight job market, wage growth, better household balance sheets and the recent tax cut.

Sweet said the boon that higher prices represent to the growing energy sector, which can invest in more wells, equipment and hiring, means that the run-up in crude probably has been "a small but net positive" for the economy.

Dunkin' Donuts will shorten its name to Dunkin'. At least one expert thinks the name change could be a mistake.

Hole new world: It's just Dunkin' in January

By Dee-Ann Durbin
Associated Press

Dunkin' is dropping the donuts — from its name, anyway.

Doughnuts are still on the menu, but the company is renaming itself "Dunkin' " to reflect its increasing emphasis on coffee and other drinks.

The 68-year-old chain has toyed with the idea for a while. In 2006, it released a new motto — "America runs on Dunkin' — that didn't mention doughnuts.

Last fall, it tested the "Dunkin' " logo on a new store in Pasadena, Calif.; it has put the name on a few other stores since then.

"By simplifying and modernizing our name, while still paying homage to our heritage, we have an opportunity to create an incredible new energy for Dunkin'," said Tony Weisman, the company's chief marketing officer.

Coffee and breakfast sandwiches have become increasingly important to the Canton, Mass.-based chain, which has more than 12,500 restaurants globally.

The name change will officially take place in January, when it will start appearing on napkins, boxes and signs at U.S. stores. The change will eventually be adopted by international stores.

The new logo will still have Dunkin' Donuts' familiar rounded font and orange-and-pink color scheme, which the company has used since 1973.

Dunkin' says it's also simplifying its menu and adding dedicated mobile ordering lanes.

But the name change could be a mistake, says Laura Ries, an Atlanta-based marketing consultant.

Ries said other brands — like KFC and DQ, which used to be Kentucky Fried Chicken and Dairy Queen — have made similar mistakes. They wanted to take the emphasis off fried food and ice cream, she said, but younger customers don't know what the letters stand for.

Drug prices continue to climb

AP analysis: Trump unable to slow hikes

By Linda A. Johnson and Nicky Forster

MARY ALTAFFER/AP

Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar conceded that it will be a while before drug prices fall.

NEW YORK — President Donald Trump made reducing drug prices a key promise during his election campaign, repeatedly accusing drugmakers of "getting away with murder." At the end of May, he promised drug companies would announce "massive" voluntary drug price cuts within two weeks.

That hasn't happened, and an Associated Press analysis of brand-name prescription drug prices shows it has been business as usual for drugmakers, with far more price hikes than cuts. The number of increases slowed somewhat and were not quite as steep as in past years, the AP found.

During the first seven months of the year, there were 96 price hikes for every price cut, the AP found. Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar, the administration's point person for efforts to lower drug prices, conceded in a recent AP interview that it will be a while before drug prices fall.

He noted the complexity of the medicine market and its incentives for drugmakers to boost prices so they and middlemen make bigger profits.

"I am not counting on the altruism of pharma companies lowering their prices," said Azar, who was a senior executive in Eli Lilly & Co.'s U.S. business for a decade when it dramatically raised prices for its insulin products.

The AP analyzed 26,176 U.S. list price changes for brand-name prescription drugs from Jan. 1 through July 31 in the years 2015 through 2018, using data supplied by health information analytics firm Elsevier. The AP focused its analysis on the first seven months of each year because of the seasonality of price changes and to make meaningful year-to-year comparisons.

The data included more than 97 percent of price changes during those periods and, for many drugs, several dosages and drug forms, such as pills, liquids and injectables. (In the 3 percent of cases not analyzed, the AP couldn't determine how the new price compared with the previous one or whether it was for a product new on the market.)

Among the AP's findings:

- There were fewer price increases this year from January through July than in comparable prior-year periods, but companies still hiked prices far more often than they cut them. This year through the end of July, there were 4,412 brand-name drug price increases and 46 price cuts, a ratio of 96-to-1.
- In June and July, right after Trump's price cut prediction, there were 395 price increases and 24 decreases. The two dozen cuts were up from the 15 decreases in those same two months last year, but increases still outpaced decreases by a ratio of 16.5-to-1.
- The median price increase, meaning half were higher and half lower, was 5.2 percent in June and July of 2018, down from 8 percent in that period in 2017.
- The median price cut this June and July was 11 percent, much smaller than in comparable periods in prior years.

The AP also asked 24 large drug companies this summer if they planned to cut drug prices. None said they did, though some didn't answer.

Drugmakers typically say they need to keep raising prices of existing drugs to pay for costly, lengthy research to develop new medicines, though industry critics dispute that.

Dr. Peter Bach, who heads the Center for Health Policy and Outcomes at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center in New York, said the AP's analysis shows there has been no big move to decrease prices.

"We have a broken pricing system," he said.

In the U.S., drug pricing is far from transparent. Manufacturers typically set high list prices but then negotiate rebates and discounts with middlemen, such as prescription benefit managers, to get preferential insurance coverage for their products.

Many consumers never see the list price, though rising drug prices generally put pressure on insurers to raise rates. Patients with high-deductible or no insurance often get stuck being charged the full list price.

Elsevier drug pricing expert Kay Morgan said the data indicate companies are being more cautious about price increases, but Trump's criticisms are just one factor.

"It's everyone saying, 'This has got to stop' " Morgan said.

She cited frequent media coverage, patients and their advocacy groups pressuring members of Congress to fight high drug prices, and Congress holding hearings on huge price increases. Those include hikes for EpiPen emergency allergy shots and the actions of disgraced former pharma executive Martin Shkreli, who hiked the price of an old infection treatment from $13.50 to $750 per pill overnight.

"The rate of increases has slowed down, but prices haven't decreased," said Stephen Schondelmeyer, a University of Minnesota professor of pharmaceutical economics who runs its research program on drug prices and public policy. He noted such temporary pricing restraint occurs periodically, around elections and other times when the issue is hot, but then companies go back to raising drug prices.

Edward Jones drug analyst Ashtyn Evans said "companies are self-policing more." She noted many firms are taking one price hike near 10 percent once a year, instead of two or three smaller hikes each year.

"That started before Trump was even elected," she said.

Pfizer, the biggest U.S. drugmaker, angered Trump by raising prices July 1 for 40 medicines and vaccines, totaling more than 100 products, with some increases hitting 9 percent. Pfizer already had hiked list prices in January for all but two of those medicines, most by 9 percent to 9.5 percent, according to Elsevier's data.

"Pfizer & others should be ashamed that they have raised drug prices for no reason. We will respond!" Trump tweeted. After a call with Trump, Pfizer executives reversed those price hikes until January at the latest.

Seven other major drugmakers, perhaps hoping to avoid their own Twitter spanking by Trump, have since said they wouldn't increase prices for the rest of the year. All of them already had taken price hikes on many of their products in January.

Meanwhile, 77 percent of Americans consider U.S. prescription drug costs "unreasonable."

Current rules block E15 sale from June 1 to Sept. 15 in areas where smog is a problem.

Summer limits on E15 gasoline may be lifted

By Jennifer A. Dlouhy, Mario Parker and Jennifer Jacobs
Bloomberg News

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration is set to announce a policy change allowing year-round sales of gasoline with higher ethanol blends, a move that could bolster Midwest Republicans in tough election contests and appease corn farmers battered by agricultural tariffs, according to people briefed on the planned announcement.

President Donald Trump is slated to unveil the new policy in coming weeks, possibly in Iowa, where farmers, biofuel producers and politicians have been clamoring for the move that's likely to expand the U.S. market for corn-based ethanol.

Although the timing of the announcement is in flux, administration officials have confirmed the policy change is coming, said the people, who asked not to be named since the policy hasn't been made public.

At issue are summertime restrictions on so-called E15 gasoline, which contains 15 percent ethanol. Current rules block its sale from June 1 to Sept. 15 in areas where smog is a problem. Most gasoline that is sold nationwide — the common 10 percent ethanol blend known as E10 — is waived from federal vapor-pressure requirements, allowing it to be sold year-round. The same exemption has not been granted to E15 thus far.

About 1,430 filling stations sell E15 in the U.S. now, according to industry data. By comparison, there are more than 122,000 stations in the country.

Ethanol advocates say the hassle and cost of changing gas pumps and labels seasonally has dissuaded some filling stations from offering the fuel. They argue that lifting summertime restrictions on the sale of E15 will spur more offerings, expanding the U.S. market for the biofuel.

Ethanol currently comprises about 10 percent of America's 143 billion gallon gasoline market.

The policy shift will likely come at the expense of most oil refiners who have for years battled year-round E15 sales. Anything that boosts the amount of ethanol in the nation's fuel supply would cut into petroleum's market share.

The oil industry also argues the policy shift would increase the risk that the higher-ethanol gasoline will end up in cars not authorized to use it, threatening engine damage.

The federal government has approved the use of E15 for all 2001 and newer light-duty passenger vehicles, but some automakers explicitly warn that car warranties will be voided if motorists use the fuel.

Some environmental groups also have argued against year-round E15 sales, saying they would encourage more corn production to manufacture ethanol.

It could take months to formally make the change, with the EPA first issuing a written proposal and going through a public comment process before it can lift the fueling restrictions.

City proposes financing for $53M renovation of Mark Twain Hotel

If approved by the City Council, work would begin in Jan.

By Robert Channick
Chicago Tribune

The city of Chicago is proposing to help finance the $53 million renovation of the historic but rundown Mark Twain Hotel on the Near North Side as part of a broader effort to preserve single room occupancy buildings — the city's original affordable housing.

Presented to the City Council last week, the proposal would back developer NHP Foundation's ambitious project to spruce up the nearly 90-year-old art deco building with a $30 million bond issue, a $5 million loan for multifamily housing development and $1.3 million in low-income housing tax credits.

If approved by the council, the renovation of the five-story Mark Twain would begin in January, temporarily displacing its 100 remaining tenants for most of next year, but offering them a much improved home when they return. The building's 152 units would be reduced to 148 as part of the renovation.

"They'll have a guaranteed place with beautifully renovated units waiting for them," said Mecky Adnani, vice president of acquisitions for the NHP Foundation.

Planned improvements include the addition of private kitchenettes, new plumbing and electrical work, a roof deck and restoration of the vintage facade and lobby.

Located near a CTA Red Line station at the southwest corner of Clark and Division streets, the Mark Twain is increasingly a neighborhood anomaly, its luster dimmed by years of neglect and the shadow of tonier neighbors such as the Sinclair, a 35-story luxury apartment tower that opened across the street last year.

The NHP Foundation, a New York-based nonprofit, paid $21 million for the hotel in May 2016 with plans to renovate and maintain it as affordable housing under the city's single room occupancy preservation ordinance.

Approved in 2014, the ordinance was designed to slow redevelopment of a dwindling number of SRO buildings by requiring owners looking to sell to spend at least six months trying to find a buyer who would maintain the properties as affordable housing. SRO owners can bypass the requirement by paying a preservation fee of $20,000 per unit.

Since the ordinance went into effect, the city has received notices of intent to sell 22 SRO buildings, with 11 preserved to date, Chicago Planning Department spokesman Peter Strazzabosco said.

In addition to the Mark Twain, NHP bought the Hotel Covent in the Lincoln Park area for $7 million in 2016, with plans to renovate that under the SRO ordinance as well.

Designed by architect Harry Glube, the 58,000-square-foot Mark Twain was completed in 1930 and features ornate white terracotta decoration over beige brick. The building was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in May 2017 as an "excellent and well preserved" example of an early 20th-century Chicago residential rooming hotel.

"The building exemplifies the rooming hotels that were purpose-built primarily to house the army of skilled but low-paid white- and blue-collar workers flooding into the city in the early decades of the twentieth century," the national register listing said.

The Mark Twain offered furnished rooms with private baths for $7 a week when it opened, with the majority of residents — artists, dancers, waitresses, nurses, teachers and other modestly paid professionals — living there for at least five years by 1940, according to the national register.

Beyond the residential renovation, NHP is planning to upgrade the building's first-floor retail presence, with seven tenants signed up for the 9,000-square-foot space, Adnani said. The only holdovers will be a currency exchange and gyro restaurant.

"The retail right now really doesn't fit within this up-and-coming neighborhood," Adnani said. "Part of what we've done is bring in really great retailers that can change the image and the feel of the ground level."

Additional funding for the Mark Twain renovation includes a $908,000 private loan, a $148,000 Commonwealth Edison energy grant and $4.8 million in federal historic preservation tax credits.

NHP has approval from the Chicago Housing Authority to receive project-based vouchers for all of the Mark Twain's units, which would limit the rent to 30 percent of household income for qualified low- and middle-income tenants, Adnani said. The developer plans to set aside seven units for tenants who earn too much to qualify for vouchers.

Preserving affordable housing and a historic building is a win for tenants and neighbors alike, Adnani said.

"It's a landmark," she said. "Now it's going to be a great neighbor. It's going to be a building that actually belongs there after the renovation."

Grubhub to buy on-campus food ordering service Tapingo

By Ally Marotti
Chicago Tribune

Chicago-based Grubhub is set to acquire on-campus food ordering platform Tapingo for $150 million.

The deal, expected to close in the fourth quarter, would extend Grubhub's reach to Tapingo's more than 150 campus partners. In Illinois, the service is available at schools including the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, University of Illinois at Chicago, and DePaul, Northwestern and Northern Illinois universities.

Tapingo's technology enables users to order ahead at on-campus cafes, restaurants and other stores. It can be integrated with college meal plans.

Tapingo has about 90 employees and is co-headquartered in Tel Aviv, Israel, and San Francisco. The company could not be reached Tuesday for comment.

Once the deal closes, the company will have clearer plans on whether any Tapingo employees will come to Chicago, Grubhub spokeswoman Katie Norris said. Having a presence in Israel will open Grubhub up to the tech talent in the region.

Grubhub has been working this year to expand into towns across America that have been long overlooked by the on-demand economy. A partnership with Yum Brands, the Louisville, Ky.-based parent of Taco Bell, KFC and Pizza Hut, announced earlier this year is expected to help achieve that goal.

Grubhub CEO Matt Maloney said in July that acceleration in new and existing markets is driving growth. Grubhub's revenues were $239.7 million in the second quarter, a 51 percent increase from the same period last year. Daily orders were up 35 percent from the second quarter of 2017.

As of February, Grubhub employed 2,125 people, roughly half of whom are in Chicago. That was up from 1,518 employees a year earlier, a nearly 40 percent increase. The company has continued hiring this year.

Instagram founders leaving Facebook amid app tension

By Sarah Frier

JUSTIN SULLIVAN/AP 2013

The two founders of Instagram, Kevin Systrom, above, and Mike Krieger, are leaving their positions at Facebook.

The founders of Instagram are leaving Facebook after growing tensions with CEO Mark Zuckerberg over the direction of the photo-sharing app, people familiar with the matter said.

Kevin Systrom and Mike Krieger, who have been at the company since Instagram's acquisition by Facebook in 2012, had been able to keep the brand and product independent while relying on Facebook's infrastructure and resources to grow. Lately, they were frustrated with an uptick in day-to-day involvement by Zuckerberg, who has become more reliant on Instagram in planning for Facebook's future, said the people, who asked not to be identified sharing internal details.

Without the founders around, Instagram is likely to become more tightly integrated with Facebook, making it more of a product division within the larger company than an independent operation, the people said.

Facebook shares fell .30 percent to close at $164.91 in New York. Meanwhile, Snap Inc. rose 1.12 percent, amid speculation that the company can take advantage of Facebook's woes.

For years, Systrom and Krieger were able to amicably resist certain Facebook product initiatives that they felt went against their vision, while leaning on Facebook for resources, infrastructure and engineering talent.

A new leader may not be able to keep the same balance, or may be more willing to make changes that help the overall company at the expense of some of Instagram's unique qualities.

The New York Times earlier reported Systrom and Krieger's departure. The founders confirmed their decision in a blog post.

"Kevin and Mike are extraordinary product leaders and Instagram reflects their combined creative talents," Zuckerberg said in a statement. "I've learned a lot working with them for the past six years and have really enjoyed it."

Krieger and Systrom built Instagram and sold it to Facebook for $715 million six years ago. When the deal was announced, the company had only 13 employees and 30 million registered users. Now more than 1 billion people use the app monthly, and it is the main source of advertising revenue for Facebook outside the social network's main news feed. A Bloomberg Intelligence analysis in June said Instagram is worth more than $100 billion.

"We're planning on taking some time off to explore our curiosity and creativity again," Systrom said in a statement on the Instagram blog. "Building new things requires that we step back, understand what inspires us and match that with what the world needs; that's what we plan to do."

While Facebook has weathered scandals on privacy, fake news and election interference, Instagram's brand has remained mostly untarnished, and continued to quickly add users. With more than 2.2 billion users, Facebook is running out of people in the world to sign up for its social network, and can only push so many advertisements into its news feed. That means it has become increasingly dependent on the standalone photo-sharing app for its future.

Instagram attracts younger users who are critical to Facebook's growth. Facebook users also have been flocking to Instagram as an escape, tired of the political bickering and privacy scandals that plague the parent company.

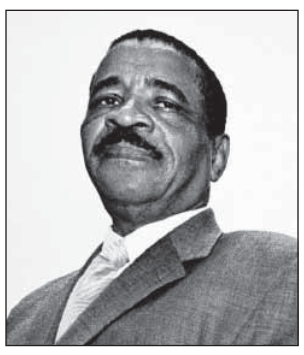
OBITUARIES

C. PAYNE LUCAS 1933-2018

Longtime leader of African aid organization

By Emily Langer
The Washington Post



DUDLEY M. BROOKS/ THE WASHINGTON POST

C. Payne Lucas, who died Sept. 15, led Africare for more than three decades.

C. Payne Lucas, who was credited with improving lives across Africa as a founder and longtime president of Africare, a Washington, D.C.-based relief organization that has constructed roads and wells, established schools and literacy programs, and improved health care in some of the neediest countries in the world, died Sept. 15 at a hospital in Silver Spring, Maryland. He was 85.

The cause was advanced dementia, said his wife, Freddie Hill Lucas.

Lucas one of 14 children born to a lumber mill worker, and his wife was once described by The Washington Post as an "accidental idealist." He grew up in poverty, achieved an education through scholarships and rose through the ranks of the fledgling Peace Corps before helping to found Africare in 1971.

Initially housed in the embassy of Niger, the aid organization grew, according to The Washington Post, into "the largest African American nonprofit specializing in aid to African countries." By the time Lucas stepped down as president in 2002, the program had directed $400 million to 27 countries for drought and famine relief, agricultural initiatives, environmental work, and HIV/AIDS prevention, among other efforts.

"C. Payne was really a pioneer in all the work with Africa," Dorothy Height, longtime president of the National Council of Negro Women, said in a tribute when Lucas retired. "He had the vision and really set the pace. He was one of the first to call for people to pay attention to Africa - and gave them a channel to do it."

Lucas sought in particular to involve black Americans in his organization's efforts. "Most African Americans are realizing that they don't expect to be free in America until Africans are free," he once said. "It's one and the same cause. It's self-respect."

He recalled with pride the donations that Africare received not only from the U.S. government and corporations but also from private individuals who opened their change purses. One of the first crises Africare worked to alleviate was the drought that ravaged the Sahel, the region south of the Sahara, in the 1970s.

"We took that drought and started to talk about it and got some good media time," Lucas told the New York Times. "Suddenly all these people started coming in with contributions, most of them from the inner city. We had welfare mothers coming in with bags of change and we counted money all day."

The organization's annual gala was a marquee event, drawing leaders from the political and diplomatic communities where Lucas had become an influential force. At times Lucas found himself appearing on television or testifying before Congress to force attention on humanitarian crises overlooked by the international community.

"You're seeing a whole nation destroyed," he said on CNN during the famine in Somalia in the early 1990s. "You have people eating human flesh in Somalia. How can you permit that to go on? How can we claim to be civilized and permit that? We should be in the street."

He called for a program in Africa similar to the Marshall Plan to rebuild Europe after World War II, and he called on private citizens — especially the wealthiest among them — to support such an effort.

"Every black athlete in the NBA who is not concerned about the AIDS epidemic in Africa, he'd better get his head examined," Lucas told The Post in 2001, "because these are our people."

Cleotha Payne Lucas was born in Spring Hope, North Carolina, on Sept.14, 1933. In his youth he made money by picking cotton and shining shoes, according to a biography on the HistoryMakers website, an online collection of oral histories from prominent African Americans.

He received a bachelor's degree in history, pausing his studies to serve in the Air Force, from the University of Maryland Eastern Shore in 1959 and a master's degree in government from American University in 1961.

After graduating, he interned for the Democratic National Committee before receiving a job with the Peace Corps under founding director Sargent Shriver. Lucas became a field representative for Togo, in West Africa — an experience Lucas found deeply inspiring, he told The Post, because it was the first place he had ever seen "where blacks were in charge."

Lucas later served in positions including regional director for Africa and director of the office of returned volunteers before helping found Africare. He was a longtime Washington, D.C., resident before moving to Louisburg, North Carolina, when he retired and to Silver Spring, Maryland, last year.

Survivors include his wife of 54 years, the former Freddie Hill, and their daughter Hillary Lucas, both of Silver Spring, Maryland; two sisters; and two grandchildren. His son, C. Payne Lucas Jr., died in 2013, and his daughter Therese Lucas died in 2017.

For all the successes of Africare, Lucas emphasized that much work remained, particularly the prevention and treatment of HIV across Africa, where 26 million people live with the disease, according to the most recent figures from the World Health Organization.

"All the work to get Africa to this point will be lost," Lucas said when he retired, asking others to continue the organization's mission. "We can dig all the wells we want, but there won't be anyone to drink the water unless we get on top of this disease."

Bradley, Marci H.
Marci H. Bradley, nee Bidinger, age 38, of Chicago, beloved wife of Mathew, loving mother of Blair, step-mother of Samantha, dear sister of Kate and Bradley (Natalie) Bidinger, cherished daughter of Nora (Dave) Houser, David Bidinger, and daughter-in-law of Jo Ann Bradley. Marci embraced all that life had to offer with an energetic spirit and love of family, friends, and travel. Graduating in the top 10 from Copley High School (OH) in 1998, Marci participated on the speech and debate team, played varsity volleyball, and was voted most likely to succeed by her classmates. She was granted the prestigious honor of Leadership Award. Along with her school studies and activities, for all 4 years, Marci found time to participate in the youth group workcamp at Bath United Church of Christ. College took Marci to the University of Miami where she graduated magna cum laude with a BS in business finance. She went on to earn her MBA at the University of Chicago. During her college years she worked for the Rape Crisis Center. Her athleticism and extra energy enabled her to run the Chicago Marathon! Marci's business career began in Chicago, first at Baxter, then GE, and finally at Pampered Chef in finance. While working she mentored college students and volunteered at various charities. Her love of travel inspired her to work and live in Ireland and France. She visited Dubai, Africa, and Vietnam as well. Marci met the love of her life, Mathew Bradley, and completed her joy with the birth of their daughter Blair. She always said, "I have the perfect life." Marci wanted to raise awareness of colorectal cancer. Celebration of Life services will be held Saturday, September 29, 2019 beginning with visitation at 9:00 a.m. and continuing with a formal service at 1:00 p.m. at Gibbons Funeral Home, 134 South York Road (half-a-mile north of Saint Charles Road), Elmhurst. McCrary, Don

Don McCrary, 72, of Evanston, died on September 22, 2018. He was the beloved husband of Blase Masini and loving, devoted father to Isaac McCrary and Jared McCrary, dear brother of Larry (Suzun) McCrary and Jane (Woodie) Mauldin, and loving uncle to Matt Mauldin, Drew (Tabatha) Maudlin, and a wonderful great-uncle to Taylor, Andrew, and Avery. Don was a kind and generous man to many aunts, uncles, cousins, and friends. Born in Mobile, AL in 1946, Don's family moved to the Chicago area in 1952 where his father was a pilot for United Airlines. Don would return to Mobile throughout his childhood and spend summers with his Auntie and Grandma. One by one, his immediate family members returned to the south while Don remained "up north." But Don's heart would always belong to Mobile! His southern hospitality never left him; he greeted everyone and always had time to stop and talk. Don earned a bachelor's degree from Augustana College in Rock Island, Illinois, in 1968. In 1977, he received his Masters in Divinity from Christ Seminary-Seminex, and his Masters in Social Work from St. Louis University in St. Louis, Missouri. Pastor McCrary was ordained on June 6, 1982. With great humility Don spent over 40 years bringing together his social work and divinity backgrounds. He served as a worker-priest (assigned to full-time chaplaincy at Parkside Lodge of Mundelein) from 1982 to 1985 at Grace Lutheran Church in Evanston, Illinois; and from 1985 to 1988, he served at Chapel of the Cross Lutheran Church in North Chicago, Illinois. He served as chaplain and manager at Parkside Human Services Corporation programs from 1981 to 1992. From 1995 to 1998, he served at Ascension Lutheran Church in Chicago (Roscoe Village); and from 1994 to 1999, he served Maine Township Center for Addiction in Park Ridge, Illinois, as pastoral counselor. From 1999 until his retirement in 2016, Don served as chaplain at Hazelden Betty Ford Foundation Chicago. Don touched many, many lives throughout his long career. Blase and Don met in 1991. In 1994, they made a lifetime commitment to each other. In a meeting with the pastor before the 1994 commitment ceremony the pastor jokingly said, "I guess we don't have to talk about children." But in the end, Don agreed to be open to the idea of adopting children and Blase agreed to be open to the idea of adopting dogs! In 2013 they were legally married. In their 27 years together they were blessed with two sons and two dogs! Celebration of Don's life will include a visitation on Sunday, September 30, from 4 to 7 p.m., at the Doubletree Hotel at 9599 Skokie Blvd in Skokie, IL. A funeral service will be held on Monday, October 1st at 10:30 at Ebenezer Lutheran Church, 1650 W Foster, Chicago, followed by lunch. In lieu of flowers, the family would appreciate donations to Ebenezer Ebenezer Lutheran Church made in memory of Don McCrary.

Patricia May Spagat, age 89, of Oak Park, beloved wife of the late David Spagat; loving mother of Susan (David) Moore, Michael (Karen) and Robert (Toni); dedicated grandmother of Daniel, Grant, Isabella, Lucas, Henry, Oskar and Anton; sister of John Picchiotti. There are also many nieces, nephews and their families, her loyal friends, and her much doted-upon pets (particularly her rescue dog, Paula) who feel this loss. From her front porch, Pat loved watching and waving to the dogs and people who passed by on the sidewalk or played in the park across the street. A former teacher, Pat tirelessly supported many causes. It would be difficult to find a more vigorous and relentless advocate for animals, LGBTQ rights, and many other environmental, political and humanitarian causes. She has helped many people and animals, and will continue to do so by donating her body to Science Care for medical research. In lieu of flowers, the family requests that donations be made to the charity of your choice. Some of Pat's favorites were Tree House Humane Society (treehouseanimals.org), Oak Park Conservatory (https://www.pdop.org/parks-facilities/oak-park-conservatory/), 20-20-20 (20x20x20.org) to restore eyesight), A Memorial Open House will be held at Pat's Oak Park home on Saturday, September 29 between 3 and 8 p. m. Information 708-386-8637.

Thorsen, Eleanor M '(JOHNSON)'

August 7, 1925 ~ September, 1, 2018

Raised in Vermont, Ellie graduated Simmons College in Boston, then directed capital fundraising for MIT. Accent Corp. in Chicago hired her to lead Marketing. Ellie met Sig at church; they married and had four children (Holley, Carol, Jeff & Mike), and invested 7 decades in Schaumburg. Ellie completed her MEd at Northern while serving on the District 54 School Board (its first female president). Hired into District 54, she served as Asst. Supt. of Curriculum until her retirement.

An overactive member of Roselle United Methodist Church, two Bridge clubs, and many golf foursomes, Ellie's laugh will be missed by her four children and two children-in-law (Mike and Heather), her sisters Dotty, Mimi, and Evvie, brother-in-law Jack, and sister-in-law Pearl, cherished nieces and nephews, cousins, step-kids Randy and Karen Braden, surrogate son Ollie, and countless friends all over the globe…until we meet again at the throne of grace.

We will celebrate her life at 2 p.m. on Saturday, September 29 at Roselle United Methodist Church (roselleumc.org). Your prayers and presence, flowers, donations to Salvation Army, Habitat for Humanity, or Roselle UMC are each/all welcome in Ellie's honor.

EVERYBODY'S TALKIN' ABOUT TRUBISKY

Mitch Trubisky misses what appears to be an open Allen Robinson on Sunday. The play resulted in a roughing-the-passer penalty, but the drive ended with a field goal.

REAL TALK

"The unsettling moments seem to be occurring three or four times more often than the special plays. Just off the top of our heads, we could probably rattle off a dozen Trubisky blunders from Sunday's win that accentuate his struggles."

The Bucs placed safety Chris Conte on injured reserve, and I'm thinking, Mitch Trubisky's breakout game was downgraded to doubtful.

BEARS WIDE RECEIVERS JOIN IN

'We're all in this together'

By Colleen Kane | Chicago Tribune

Bears wide receiver Allen Robinson shied away from the word patience.

Bears coach Matt Nagy may have preached it to the media about quarterback Mitch Trubisky's development. Fans may have found it tested as they watched Trubisky's uneven performances over the first three games, resulting in an offense that ranks 26th in the NFL at 293.7 yards per game.

But to Robinson the word indicated the rest of the offense is waiting for Trubisky to catch up, and he wasn't about to place the unit's development squarely on his quarterback Tuesday at Halas Hall.

Cubs' NL Central lead shrinks to a fraction as Brewers win again

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

Jason Heyward tried to downplay the significance of the Pirates' recent pitching dominance after a reporter smirked that the Cubs had scored one run in each of their previous five games against them.

"I feel like you guys look too much into stuff sometimes," Heyward said. "It's baseball. It's a part of it."

But the numbers are too glaring to ignore, especially with what's at stake. After Chris Archer and relievers Dovydas Neverauskas and Steven Brault combined on a 6-0 shutout, the Cubs' lead in the National League Central has shrunk to half a game over the surging Brewers.

And the Cubs (91-66) will need to rely on a quality start from

In playoff push, not every Cubs question has answer

Paul Sullivan
On the Cubs

Here are 10 questions to ponder as the Cubs inch closer to the postseason:

Can the Cubs offense be fixed in time for the postseason?
In one of the season's most perplexing issues, the Cubs are second in the majors with a .259 average, yet the offense is capable of being shut down on a dime, like it was in Tuesday night's 6-0 loss to the Pirates. They'll face better pitchers in the postseason, and hit a combined .156 with eight runs in five games in their 4-1 loss to the Dodgers in last year's National League Championship Series. Clutch hitting must improve for the Cubs to go far. They're only .246 with runners in scoring position, ranked 22nd in the majors. The worst offenders with runners in scoring position are Kyle Schwarber (.204), Willson Contreras (.215) and Tommy La Stella (.220).

Unlike Trubisky, 'D' is super

I'm still a Bears playoff honk. I wrote it before the season and I'm writing it now. I want to start the "Matt Nagy Rock Star Tour" if only Nagy could coach up the supposed franchise quarterback well enough to complete forward passes without making his head explode. Or ours.

I mean, on third-and-goal against the Cardinals on Sunday, Trubisky overthrew Allen Robinson on a fade to the left when he had four receivers against three defenders to the right. Can Trubisky count to four?

But still, I have wristbands ready to hand out for the "Matt Nagy Rock Star Tour" that should roll into January because the Bears already have the most important element to make it: a great defense.

The Bears defense is not just playoff-ready, it's Super Bowl-ready. It became dominant with the acquisition of Khalil Mack. Seal Team 52 can turn games until the Bears' largely inept offense manages enough points to make it worthwhile. The defense did just that on Sunday. After allowing two touchdowns on the first three possessions, Seal Team 52 forced the next eight Cardinals possessions to go punt, punt, punt, interception, interception, fumble, interception, sack to end the game.

The Cardinals gained 101 yards on those first three possessions. The Bears defense held them to only 120 on their last eight, smothering them for an average of 3.0 yards per play.

We're talking 14 sacks and eight takeaways through three games. That's as good as it gets. The Bears defense leads the NFL in sacks, forced fumbles and defensive touchdowns. It is tied for second in interceptions. Defense travels, and the Bears' unit is ready to travel in January and is the biggest reason the Bears can entertain such thoughts.

It might seem silly to talk playoffs in September with a team that has finished in last place the last four seasons and still has a rookie quarterback and rookie head coach confessing mistake after mistake on a weekly basis. But remember, the NFL always produces a worst-to-first team.

All along, Nagy has refused to say he expected his team to make the playoffs. Perhaps he knew how much Trubisky would struggle with the new offense, one that should play to Trubisky's strengths, but then, one of his strengths was supposed to be accuracy, and too often it has looked like he's being coached by Tyler Chatwood.

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mitch Trubisky regroups on the bench after fumbling in Sunday's win over the Cardinals.

Trubisky's erratic, inadequate play, a product of youth and bad habits, is holding the offense hostage while the defense makes the Bears a contender, and already the coach is guarding against a locker room split because of it.

"You have to make sure, I do as a head coach, that ... the defense understands that it's not for lack of trying (by the offense)," Nagy said Monday. "This is a 'we' thing. This is who we are right now, and we need to make sure that everyone understands that."

The Mack acquisition sped up the clock of expectations, which might not be fair, but tough. There are worse problems an NFL team could have, and believe me, the Bears have hired some of them as head coaches.

Nagy, who was hired to grow Trubisky into a franchise quarterback, admitted Monday he's getting close to capacity when it comes to filling Trubisky's head with plays and checks and options and game-planning. The overmatched quarterback looks like he's thinking instead of reacting, and like that, you miss open targets.

But Nagy insists the breakthrough will happen. That it will all come together. That the Bears will develop a big-boy offense.

It seems, then, the Bears' season comes down to this question:

Which explodes first — the offense or Trubisky's head?

NFL set to roll out 1st all-woman booth

Amazon Prime begins streaming "Thursday Night Football" games this week with the Vikings-Rams game, making a bit of broadcasting history in the process.

For the first time, an NFL telecast will have an all-woman broadcasting booth, with Hannah Storm and Andrea Kremer calling the action for Amazon on Thursday and for the 10 Thursday night games to follow.

"Teaming up with Hannah ... for this is truly special," Kremer said in a statement, per Pro Football Talk. "Hannah is a brilliant journalist and she has been a friend for many years. With decades of experience as storytellers, we will be bringing a different voice and viewpoint to covering the game of football."

Said Storm: "I can't imagine embarking upon this new role with anyone better than Andrea. A lifelong friend with Pro Football Hall of Fame credentials, she is the perfect partner. REAL TALK

How do QB's growing pains fit big picture?

By Dan Wiederer and Rich Campbell
Chicago Tribune

Behind an MVP candidate and a suddenly special defense, the Bears head into the final week of September with a winning record and sole possession of first place in the NFC North.

With another take-care-of-business performance Sunday against the Bucs at Soldier Field, the franchise would celebrate its first three-game winning streak in more than five years.

For the first time in forever, the Bears have shown legitimate signs of piecing together enough talent and depth to start making a realistic charge at a playoff berth. And yet here in Week 4, an increasing amount of anxiety has been pulsing through Chicago with many Bears fans upset over Mitch Trubisky's inconsistent play.

The Bears have found relief for their offensive woes with consecutive victories and a new surge of confidence. But just how long can the defense carry such a heavy load? What are the biggest issues Trubisky is having? And how should the quarterback's pronounced struggles be contextualized through a big-picture lens? Bears beat writers Dan Wiederer and Rich Campbell sound it out in this week's edition of "Real Talk."

Dan Wiederer: I said it to you in the fourth quarter in Arizona, Rich. Sunday's game with the Cardinals exposed the 2018 season for what it really is. At long last, thanks to Khalil Mack and his terrific supporting cast, we have proof that the defense has made its jump from good to great. And yet with so many question marks on offense, the idea of the Bears reaching the postseason this winter still seems a bit far-fetched.

So where does that leave us? In many ways, it leaves us with 13 more weeks to learn everything about who Trubisky is as a quarterback. Can he show the necessary growth to prove he is worthy of the unwavering belief his coaching staff and front office have shown in him? Buckle up.

What we've gleaned so far, from a small sample size, is that Trubisky is a long, long way from turning a corner in his development. The elite accuracy the Bears once touted has been nowhere to be found. Trubisky's pocket poise has been shaky. And his inability to deliver at least a handful of special moments each week has elicited a new feeling of terror in a fan base scarred by so many previous quarterback disappointments.

Rich Campbell: It's ironic how Mack's arrival and subsequent elevation of the defense has siphoned patience from a vocal segment of the fan base that now sees Trubisky's struggles as the main obstacle to playoff contention.

It's also understandable, given how the Bears are tied for second in the NFL with eight takeaways. After all, the Bears needed four takeaways after halftime Sunday to beat the winless Cardinals by only two points.

Trubisky's struggles in the game were so glaring because he didn't produce winning moments to obscure or offset them like he did against the Packers on that opening touchdown drive or the Seahawks with that fourth-quarter touchdown pass rolling to his left.

Instead, there were familiar mistakes involving play recognition, inaccurate throws and more inconsistency against zone coverage.

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears quarterback Mitch Trubisky walks on the field during the first half against the Cardinals in Glendale, Ariz.

Wiederer: And that's the problem. The unsettling moments seem to be occurring three or four times more often than the special plays. Just off the top of our heads, we could probably rattle off a dozen Trubisky blunders from Sunday's win that accentuate his struggles.

- He took a 15-yard sack on the opening drive, turning a potential 31-yard field-goal attempt into a 46-yarder Cody Parkey missed.
- Trubisky's deep ball to Taylor Gabriel in the end zone in the second quarter sailed way long.
- On a throw to Allen Robinson on the skinny post later in that drive, Trubisky became unsettled under pressure, didn't set his feet and missed what should have been a routine touchdown pass.
- The pass to Robinson later on that drive — from the 2-yard line — was a first-read jump ball that Trubisky threw so high Robinson didn't even get a finger on it. And, oh, by the way, also on that play, the young quarterback had an easy touchdown pass waiting for him on the other side of the field with only three Cardinals defending four Bears receivers.

Care to add your own?

Campbell: You mentioned most of the ones that stood out, but here's another.

The Bears had first-and-10 at the Cardinals 18 in the third quarter trailing 14-3. On a bootleg, he threw dangerously late back toward the middle of the field — where Robinson wasn't open.

Only because safety Tre Boston collided with Robinson was the throw not intercepted. Two plays later, Jordan Howard bullied into the end zone from 1 yard. That crucial touchdown nearly vaporized with Trubisky's forced throw.

That throw got me wondering whether Trubisky's mind is overloaded right now. I mean, he had only two receivers as options on the front side of the play. Neither was open, but he still forced it. Situational awareness escaped him, and it appeared he was pressing.

Ask: Why is that? Then take inventory of everything Matt Nagy and Trubisky are talking to us about during the week: his footwork, his progressions, how he's challenged to mentally move on from negative plays, recognizing hot reads, etc.

When a quarterback lacks calmness like Trubisky has at times and makes uncharacteristic mistakes, I just wonder if he's mentally jumbled. So I asked Nagy on Monday if Trubisky's mind is full.

"It's probably getting close," Nagy said. "When you feel like it's getting close to that breaking point or too much, you've got to pull back."

An interesting, candid response.

Wiederer: Nagy made a similar — and now semiregular — plea for patience Sunday evening in Arizona, acknowledging his young quarterback's issues but again promising improvement. "It takes time," Nagy said. "We will get this."

I have zero issue with the coach's take on the offensive inconsistency. This is still a green 24-year-old quarterback learning a new system with new parts all around him. And yes, producing at a high level will take time.

But I also have zero issue with those in the outside world who remain hesitant to pledge their blind loyalty to Nagy and Trubisky without more hard evidence to show that the Bears' grand visions have merit.

Campbell: I'm most comfortable in a see-it-to-believe-it mode. There's a difference between believing based on evidence and having faith without any. Right now, Nagy is asking for faith, and I don't blame skeptics who are reluctant to make that leap.

Proving it falls on Trubisky's shoulders. It's his burden as the guy around whom this organization was retooled in the offseason. His focus will be tested in the absence of consistent results. Based on how he has played through three games, that's a week-to-week challenge at this point.

Wiederer: Trubisky has 13 more games this season to change the direction of this plotline. At that point, he should have 28 starts for us to assess — certainly a big enough body of work to start drawing a few big-picture conclusions. So let's see where this goes.

Maybe this weekend's test against a struggling Buccaneers defense is a perfect get-well game. Maybe it will take only one game in which the offense scores 25 points or more to enhance Trubisky's comfort and confidence. Maybe.

Still, as of right now, we can safely say that all those spring comparisons to Carson Wentz and Jared Goff have disappeared. Now it's up to Trubisky to play well enough to make sure there isn't a new set of names — David Carr, Matt Leinart, Blaine Gabbert, Christian Ponder — entering the conversation.

Campbell: Let me throw out another name, one that's especially relevant this week: Jameis Winston.

The No. 1 draft pick in 2015 returns from suspension Sunday against the Bears but is not expected to reclaim his starting job just yet. He's 18-27 as a starter in three seasons, all in Dirk Koetter's offense. Still no playoff appearances. A 3-10 record in Year 3. But his passer rating and completion percentage have improved each season, jumping to 92.2 and 63.8, respectively, in 2017.

Poke your head into the Buccaneers' world this week and you'll find Winston still surrounded by the same type of is-he-or-isn't-he questions after 45 starts.

Every quarterback's situation is different, and folks must keep that at the front of their minds. But Winston's is a reminder that Trubisky is still early in his process. And he still will be after Sunday's game gives him 16 starts — a full season's worth — for his career.

Power rankings

By Brad Biggs | Chicago Tribune

Last week's ranking in parentheses

1. Rams 3-0 (1): Cornerbacks Aqib Talib and Marcus Peters went down in their win over the Chargers. That creates some short-term concern.

2. Chiefs 3-0 (3): Patrick Mahomes has been lights out, so much so that nine players have a touchdown reception.

3. Saints 2-1 (12): Michael Thomas is the first player in NFL history to record at least 10 catches in each of the first three games of a season.

4. Eagles 2-1 (6): Rookie tight end Dallas Goedert got going against the Colts, so they have a new weapon to pair with TE Zach Ertz.

5. Dolphins 3-0 (14): They are 2-15 in their last 17 trips to New England, but the Dolphins have a chance to make a major statement Sunday.

6. Jaguars 2-1 (2): The best teams learn to handle prosperity too. The Jaguars couldn't, following a victory over the Patriots with a loss.

7. Steelers 1-1-1 (15): They might be kicking themselves over the Chris Boswell contract. He has missed three field goals and two extra points.

8. Buccaneers 2-1 (10): Jason Pierre-Paul has three sacks, which is more than any Bucs defensive end totaled all of last season.

9. Falcons 1-2 (7): Dan Quinn has to juggle injuries with a defense that has lost three starters to injured reserve while trying to jump-start a pass rush.

10. Panthers 2-1 (11): The open date comes early, but with some injuries, particularly to the offensive line, a little rest could be a springboard.

11. Vikings 1-1-1 (4): In a wild Week 3, the Vikings getting shellacked at home by the 17-point underdog Bills was the biggest stunner.

12. Patriots 1-2 (5): Is this the beginning of the end? They have lost back-to-back games by 10 or more points for the first time since 2002.

13. Titans 2-1 (20): Kevin Byard after beating the Jaguars: "We might be an underdog mentality to the media, but we have a big-dog mentality here."

14. Ravens 2-1 (18): Four of their next five games are on the road, starting with Sunday night in Pittsburgh.

15. Bears 2-1 (17): For all the hand-wringing being done over Mitch Trubisky, the defense is legit and they're alone atop the NFC North.

16. Packers 1-1-1 (8): The loss of defensive lineman Muhammad Wilkerson to a season-ending ankle injury is problematic.

17. Bengals 2-1 (9): While 2017 first-round pick John Ross is quickly turning into a bust, Tyler Boyd is emerging as a dynamic wide receiver.

18. Chargers 1-2 (13): Nice to see Mike Williams, the first-round pick last year, emerging as a threat for Philip Rivers.

19. Broncos 2-1 (16): They led the NFL in pass defense in 2015 and 2016 and ranked fourth last year. It's a different story in 2018.

20. Redskins 2-1 (26): Adrian Peterson turned back the clock with 120 yards and two touchdowns, but he's dealing with a sprained ankle.

21. Browns 1-1-1 (24): The hype train for Baker Mayfield is just getting started in Cleveland, but the defense has been impressive.

22. Lions 1-2 (29): Rookie running back Kerryon Johnson is earning the trust of coaches to add a long-missing element to the offense.

23. Cowboys 1-2 (21): Big plays remain scarce for the offense, and struggles on the line are likely a major part of that shortcoming.

24. Giants 1-2 (28): Eli Manning turned in a vintage performance in leading Big Blue to its first victory for coach Pat Shurmur in Houston.

25. Bills 1-2 (32): Coach Sean McDermott's defense needs more big performances, like Sunday's in Minnesota, to help a fledgling offense.

26. Jets 1-2 (19): They have had extra time to stew over their letdown in Cleveland and need to protect Sam Darnold against the Jaguars.

27. Colts 1-2 (23): Defensive end Margus Hunt is playing the best of his career. He leads the NFL with eight tackles for a loss and has three sacks.

28. Seahawks 1-2 (25): Pete Carroll says "everything is possible" with Earl Thomas, and this figures to loom over the team until he gets paid or traded.

29. 49ers 1-2 (22): Kyle Shanahan's rebuilding project has been slowed with Jimmy Garoppolo out for the season with a torn ACL.

30. Texans 0-3 (27): Bill O'Brien keeps blaming himself, but the Texans have a host of veteran players who are underperforming in a dreadful start.

31. Cardinals 0-3 (30): Josh Rosen's opportunity has arrived.

32. Raiders 0-3 (31): Jon Gruden's team has developed a bad habit of coughing away leads in the second half.

Robinson, Gabriel agree: 'It takes time'

"I wouldn't say patience, because we're all in this together," Robinson said. "We want it to work. We understand as an offense we're not perfect. Nobody is. At the same time, we have to make sure we're on our P's and Q's to help him out and make his job easier. We're all in this together."

Robinson and Taylor Gabriel signed big free-agent contracts in the offseason to be Trubisky's No. 1 and 2 targets, but in Sunday's 16-14 victory over the Cardinals in Arizona he missed them nearly as often as he connected.

Watching the replays it's easy to see where frustration could seep in over Trubisky's inaccuracy — a few overthrown deep shots to Gabriel, a few red-zone misses to Robinson. Gabriel finished with six catches for 34 yards on 10 targets. Robinson had three catches for 50 yards on seven targets, including a 39-yard catch that was one of the offense's prettiest plays of the game.

Trubisky was critical of himself when speaking with reporters after the game, but his wide receivers said the important thing was he still led the Bears' comeback from a 14-3 halftime deficit for a win.

"I think his confidence is there because you see what went on throughout the game," Gabriel said. "He could have been frustrated and not finished the game like he did. I feel like his confidence is there, so as long as we stay confident and consistent in our routes and be where we need to be, I feel like we'll be OK."

Robinson and Gabriel have previous experience playing with young quarterbacks going through ups and downs. Robinson began his career in Jacksonville at the same time as quarterback Blake Bortles, and Gabriel broke into the league with the Browns as Johnny Manziel made his eight total career starts.

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears receiver Allen Robinson collides with Cardinals defensive back Bene Benwikere on a Mitch Trubisky pass in the fourth quarter Sunday.

That's not to compare Trubisky with either of the two. Bortles still has outside doubters in his fifth season despite having helped the Jaguars to the AFC championship game last season. And Manziel's off-field troubles led to his NFL demise.

But the Bears receivers are familiar playing with a quarterback who is trying to find his way. And both gave the same answer about what they learned from those experiences: It takes time.

"When you get together fresh like that, it takes time," Gabriel said. "OTAs, training camp, we had a lot of time to prepare but not a lot of in-game reps, so it's different. I feel like we're close to clicking, and once it clicks, it's going to be hard to stop us."

Robinson said the key to helping Trubisky is working through extra practice reps and communicating to sort out mistakes that were made in games. Gabriel said it's all about developing the right timing in game action.

Nagy said Monday he sensed Trubisky's mind was "probably getting close" to full with all of the details of the offense he has to absorb and said the coaches will monitor whether they need to pull back on the information load. Robinson said it still comes down to executing whatever game plan they have.

"As a player and as an offense you want a lot on your plate because that gives us the big advantage going against different teams," Robinson said. "At the end of the day, that's Coach's discretion."

Perhaps Sunday's matchup with the Buccaneers will allow the offense to make strides. The Bucs defense has allowed a league-worst 362.7 passing yards per game. In the lead-up to the weekend, the Bears offense at least will draw positives from knowing they've been good enough to get them to 2-1.

"We got stuff when we needed to get it," Robinson said. "That's the most important thing. We didn't get too frustrated to where we got down on ourselves and people started going in the tank. We were able to get stuff accomplished when we needed to."

Early takeaways prove defense is real thing

By Dan Wiederer and Colleen Kane
Chicago Tribune

With a loose football skidding across the grass at State Farm Stadium on Sunday afternoon, Bears linebacker Danny Trevathan went after it. So, too, did Akiem Hicks. Or more precisely, Hicks jumped into the scrum to peel Cardinals offensive lineman John Wetzel away and did so by tossing all 332 pounds of himself into the pile.

Still, as the Bears came up with that big fourth-quarter takeaway, Hicks wondered why Trevathan seemed distraught.

"Danny was screaming at the bottom of the pile, 'Get off! Get off the pile!' " Hicks said.

Added Trevathan: "Akiem said, 'You OK?' I said, 'Yeah. I can't breathe! Get off me!'

"Those are the little things that make it fun. You remember that down the road."

The Bears led the NFL in fumble recoveries last season with 14 and are off to a solid start again. Their third came Sunday in Arizona with Trevathan making that breathless recovery on Khalil Mack's strip-sack of Sam Bradford. The turnover helped the Bears rally for a 16-14 victory over the Cardinals and was the latest example of an opportunistic defense being ready to take hold of a game.

Trevathan is no stranger to being on the bottom of such piles. He has three regular-season fumble recoveries in his career and recovered two for the Broncos in Super Bowl 50. Asked Tuesday whether he has a secret for recovering fumbles, the veteran linebacker smiled.

"I can't give you that recipe yet," he said. "That's the secret sauce. It's all about getting on the ball and then just holding onto that ball.

"There's a lot of ways you can approach it. But I'm going to wait until I retire to give away that recipe. Like the Peanut Punch, I'll wait until I retire for that."

The Bears defense has been special in September, recording 14 sacks and forcing eight turnovers.

Hicks acknowledged Tuesday that the defense is playing with more confidence in big moments and has used the first three weeks as a validation of the potential the unit saw in itself.

"We knew going into OTAs that we had a great nucleus of guys who had been here and done it already and done it well," Hicks said.

"Top-10 defense (last season). Going forward, we want to prove to ourselves that we can be even better. And I think we've shown that thus far."

No plays off: Cornerback Kevin Toliver got an introduction to the NFL learning curve Sunday against the Cardinals.

The undrafted rookie out of LSU played on defense for the first time this season in the second half after starting cornerback Prince Amukamara went down with a hamstring injury. With backup Marcus Cooper inactive because of a hamstring injury, the Bears called on Toliver to help fill in.

He played 22 snaps on defense, during which he said he learned to "always be on your A-game every snap." He had contributed on one special teams play a week earlier.

"Can't take a play off, can't take a down off," Toliver said. "You've just got to be 100 percent every play."

It was unclear as of Tuesday afternoon whether Amukamara or Cooper will be back this week or if the Bears will rely on Toliver again.

His most glaring issue Sunday came early in the fourth quarter, when wide receiver Christian Kirk beat him on a double move and caught Sam Bradford's pass for a 32-yard gain. Cardinals rookie quarterback Josh Rosen targeted Toliver late in the fourth and completed passes for 8 and 10 yards.

Postseason knee scope on agenda for Garcia

By Phil Thompson
Chicago Tribune

White Sox right fielder Avisail Garcia said he put off having an operation on his right knee for most of the season, but on Tuesday he announced plans to have arthroscopic surgery Oct. 2, two days after the regular season ends.

Sox officials said they will provide an update once doctors perform the surgery and discover the exact nature of the problem. Typically, "scopes" remove loose cartilage or bone fragments or repair minor ligament damage.

Garcia called it "nothing major. They will figure it out. ... The knee is so complicated. A small thing is going to bother you."

He said he expects "100 percent" to be ready for spring training.

Garcia went on the disabled list twice for hamstring strains but said he believes pain in his knee exacerbated problems with his hamstring.

Garcia was an All-Star in 2017, so his injury setbacks this season made for a difficult year, as he put it. He slashed at .238/.278/.440 over 88 games entering Tuesday's play.

Garcia chalked up his troubles staying healthy this season to being a part of baseball.

"You can have 10 good years and one bad year," he said. "Like (what) happened to me: really good last year and this year I've been injured a lot. It is what it is. I know the talent is there. I know what I can do when I'm healthy so let's see what happens next year."

Garcia, who was in the lineup despite knee pain, hit a two-run home run off Indians starter Trevor Bauer in the first inning. It was Garcia's 19th of the season, a career high.

Shields up? James Shields claimed his own milestone Tuesday night in the 5-4 walk-off victory over the Indians at Guaranteed Rate Field. The Sox won on Daniel Palka's two-run single with one out in the ninth.

Shields was just 1 2/3 of an inning shy of his 10th 200-inning season entering the game and got it by striking out Melky Cabrera in the second.

It was Shields' 10th such season, second to Justin Verlander (11) since 2007.

If this was to be Shields' last start in a Sox uniform it had all the hallmarks of one of his outings this season.

He gutted out six innings — his 26th time lasting at least that long — struck out six and gave up a home run to Yan Gomes. He has allowed 34 homers this season, two in each of his previous three starts. It was also the ninth game in which he gave up three or more runs in an inning.

Injury update: Left fielder Nick Delmonico made a diving catch of Francisco Lindor's liner in the fourth but left the game in the fifth with right shoulder soreness and has been listed as day to day.

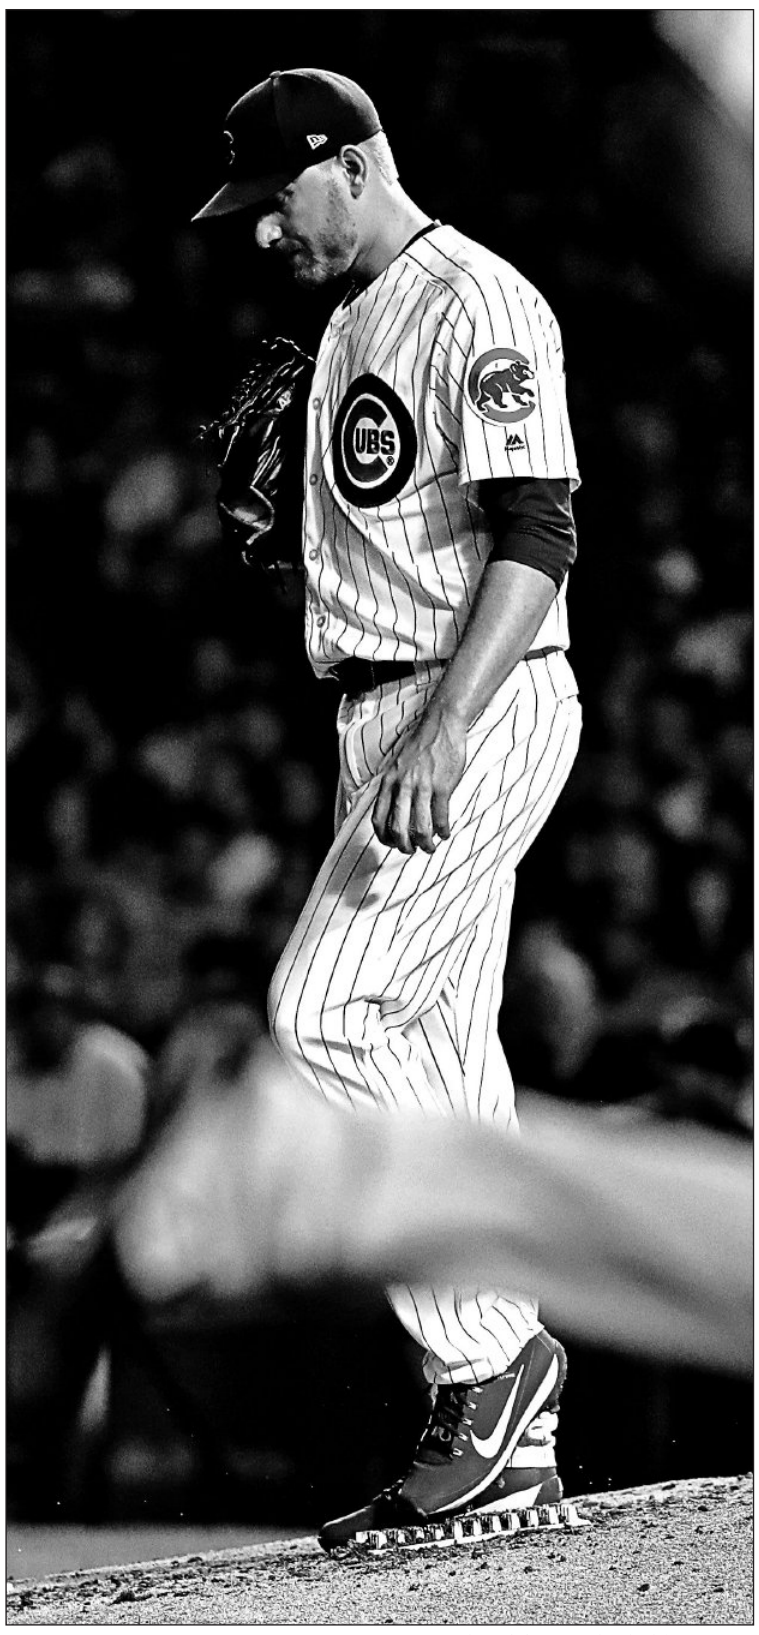
CUBS



CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cubs starter Mike Montgomery gathers himself on the mound after allowing a three-run homer to the Pirates' Pablo Reyes in the second.

Cubs' lead cut to a half-game

left-hander Jose Quintana in Game 3 of the series Wednesday night. Quintana was tagged for five runs in five innings Friday in a loss to the White Sox.

They also might not have the services of Kris Bryant, whose injury-plagued season suffered another blow when an Archer pitch hit him on the left wrist in the fourth. Bryant left in the top of the sixth, and his injury was announced as a bruise.

Since returning from a left shoulder injury on Sept. 1, Bryant has failed to regain his power stroke. But that pales in comparison to the overall struggles of the offense that was blanked for the 11th time this season.

More ominous is that the Cubs have scored only five runs in their last 56 innings (covering six games) against the Pirates with two games left, including Thursday night's series finale against 14-game winner Trevor Williams.

That's a serious concern for a team that possessed a five-game game lead on the morning of Sept. 3.

Pablo Reyes' three-run homer off left-hander Mike Montgomery in the second inning heightened the tension as a majority of a crowd of 33,443 at Wrigley Field watched helplessly as the Pirates gradually pulled away.

The Cubs' ability to rally, which was one of their staples during the first five months of the season, has faded because of an inconsistent offense that has baffled manager Joe Maddon and other Cubs followers this season.

The latest example occurred in the first when third base umpire Alfonso Marquez ruled that Kyle Schwarber did not check his swing for a third strike with runners at first and third to end the inning.

As for Bryant, Maddon has been trying to play him as much as possible to get him on track without taxing his shoulder, which required rest Sunday.

"We're looking to get him as many at-bats as possible to get the ball on the fat part of the bat more consistently," Maddon said before the game. "You know what he's capable of. Just put it that way. We haven't seen that on a consistent basis."

Maddon said he speaks with hitting coach Chili Davis often during games but doesn't interfere in in hitters' meetings before each series.

He maintains trust in Davis, assistant hitting coach Andy Haines and advance scouting coordinators Nate Halm and Tommy Hottovy.

"If I have something to say, normally it's individually oriented," Maddon said. "When it comes to a series, I stay out of their preparation."

Meanwhile, the Cubs' offensive struggles against the Pirates, combined with the September surge of the second-place Brewers, bolster Heyward's claims about the quality of the National League Central.

"We have the best record in the National League (91-65), and we haven't clinched yet," Heyward said. "That shows you how good our division is. That shows you how good this league is. It's time to pay respect to how well these teams are playing baseball."

CUBS NOTES

Tie could be bad for Cubs, Brewers

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

Unless the Cubs can mount a winning streak in the final days of the season, they could be facing a scary scenario even if they tie the Brewers for the National League's best record.

If the Cubs and Brewers finish tied for first in the NL Central, they would play one game Monday at Wrigley Field to determine the division winner.

The loser would host the NL wild-card game the following day and would be forced to use their top two starters before opening the NL Division Series on Oct. 4 — if they win the wild-card game.

"I hope we avoid that," said manager Joe Maddon, whose Cubs held a five-game lead with 26 games left on Sept. 3 that was down to 1½ games entering play Tuesday. "We're trying not to be put in that position. But if that's the rule, you have to abide by it. It makes it more difficult."

Maddon recalled the 2013 season, in which his Rays traveled to Texas to beat the Rangers for the second American League wild-card berth and then went to Cleveland to top the Indians in the wild-card game before losing to the Red Sox in the AL Division Series.

"If that's the way it plays out, that's what you have to do."

Russell update: Maddon still hasn't spoken with Addison Russell, he told WSCR-AM 670 Tuesday during his weekly radio appearance.

Maddon also told The Score he doesn't intend to read Melisa Reidy-Russell's blog post alleging physical and emotional abuse by the Cubs shortstop until the Major League Baseball investigation is completed. The blog by Russell's ex-wife led MLB to place Russell on administrative leave under the league's domestic-abuse policy. Maddon said "I really don't believe I need to" read the blog.

"Addison hasn't written anything either," he said. "I'm going to wait until the process runs its course. I'll get all the information needed at that point. There's nothing I can do to help the situation at all."

Russell has been away from the Cubs since Friday after we was placed on leave the day after his ex-wife alleged he emotionally and physically abused her during their marriage.

The Athletic reported Tuesday night that MLB interviewed Reidy-Russell and "numerous" additional witnesses, and has "additional credible information" on Russell.

Russell denied the allegations.

Chicago Tribune's Paul Sullivan contributed.

Not every Cubs playoff question has an answer

Who will be the postseason closer?
Manager Joe Maddon won't name a closer and hasn't really needed one since Pedro Strop went down with his hamstring injury on Sept. 13 in Washington. Steve Cishek seems to be his best bet though Jesse Chavez has been his most dependable reliever since arriving from the Rangers. Rest assured we won't have to see John Lackey pitching in the ninth, as we did in Game 2 of last year's NLCS, when Lackey served up the game-winning, walk-off home run to Justin Turner.

Will Addison Russell be available for the postseason roster?
Russell can return Friday from administrative leave, but there is no indication the Cubs are going to allow that to happen. Some speculate his return would be a distraction the Cubs wouldn't welcome in October. "I don't think it would be a distraction, but I have no idea if that is going to happen or not," Maddon said. "I don't know. I know nothing about it."

Will Kris Bryant go back to being Kris Bryant in the postseason?
Bryant on Tuesday had a .403 slugging percentage and one home run in 21 games in September since returning from his sore left shoulder. Bryant said the shoulder feels fine, but then was hit in the left wrist Tuesday night and eventually left the game with a wrist contusion. He isn't the only Cubs lacking power. Anthony Rizzo has two homers and a .389 slugging percentage in September, and Ben Zobrist has none and a .373 slugging percentage in the month. It's not just Bryant who needs to start driving the ball.

How important is securing home-field advantage throughout the NL playoffs?
"That would be super-nice," Jason Heyward said. "But there are so many teams that find a way to get it done without having that. Wild-card teams have gone on to win championships. So you can't get hung up on one thing." The Cubs have a 47-28 record at Wrigley Field and get home-field advantage through the NLCS if they finish with the best record. "We have the best record in the National League, but we haven't clinched yet," he said. "That shows you how good our division is. That shows you how good this league is."

Does Terrance Gore deserve a postseason roster spot?
The greatest pinch-runner in history was Herb Washington, the world-class sprinter the A's signed in the 1970's who stole 31 bases in 105 games without a plate appearance. Gore has one hit in 16 at-bats in parts of five seasons, but also has 26 steals in 30 attempts. He would be a valuable piece on the bench, as he was for the Royals during their postseasons. But he's no Dave Roberts, who memorably stole a key base for the Red Sox in Game 4 the 2004 ALCS, igniting the epic comeback over the Yankees. Roberts hit .438 for the Padres in the 2006 NLDS.

Who will start Game 1?
Kyle Hendricks has a 1.08 WHIP in the second half, by far the best of the Cubs starters. His second-half WAR is 2.4, ninth among major-league starters. He gives the Cubs the best chance to win every time out and deserves to start the opener.

Should you wait for the NLCS to try to buy Cubs playoff tickets?
Unless you're lucky enough to be related to the Rickettses, you probably can't afford to go to more than one playoff game. If you want to be sure you see at least one game, better get one to the NLDS, or the wild card if the Cubs falter this week. The NL teams are so bunched up there will be no overwhelming favorite. But if you have the money and faith in this team, you can wait for a Cubs-Yankees or Cubs-Red Sox World Series, which might be worth the outrageous cost.

Can we blame Joe Maddon if the Cubs don't win it all?
Why stop now? Maddon has a .598 winning percentage in four years in Chicago, not to mention a championship and two NLCS appearances. But his detractors get louder every postseason whenever one of his moves backfires. (see Lackey). Maddon is the only manager in our lifetime to take the Cubs to a championship, but seldom gets credit because of his controversial Game 7 maneuvering. Maybe this is the year?

Would winning it all be greater than in 2016?
Considering all the obstacles, from Yu Darvish's struggles to the hitting woes to injuries to closers Brandon Morrow and Pedro Strop, a 2018 championship would be much more impressive than their '16 title, when the Cubs clearly had the best team. The party wouldn't be as big, but does that really matter?

300 game: Milestone K for Scherzer

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With a bottle of bubbly at his feet and a baseball with the inscription "300 Ks" in a case in his locker, Max Scherzer allowed himself a moment to consider what he'd just accomplished.

"It was something I dreamed of, reaching this mark," Scherzer said, "because I know how hard it is to consistently go out there and strike guys out."

Scherzer became the 17th pitcher since 1900 to strike out 300 batters in a season, reaching that milestone by fanning 10 in seven innings Tuesday night during the Nationals' otherwise meaningless 9-4 victory over the Marlins.

"A big number," Nationals catcher Matt Wieters said, "when you're talking about strikeouts."

Scherzer (18-7) lowered his ERA to 2.53 by allowing one run in seven innings as he bids for a third consecutive NL Cy Young Award; he also won the 2013 honor in the AL for Detroit. He threw 70 of his 100 pitches for strikes, gave up five hits and didn't walk a batter.

The righty reached 300 by getting Austin Dean to whiff on an 85-mph slider at the end of a 10-pitch at-bat for the second out of the seventh. Scherzer pumped his fist while much of the announced crowd of 26,483 joined players in the home dugout and home bullpen by saluting the ace with a standing ovation.

Scherzer entered Tuesday ranked No. 1 in the NL in strikeouts, strikeouts-to-walks ratio (5.69), opponents' batting average (.188) and innings pitched (213⅔). He was tied for No. 1 in wins (18) and quality starts (27).

"There's more to pitching than just striking guys out," Scherzer said, "but also, it is a big reason why you can have success."

ON THIS DATE

1908: Ed Reulbach of the Chicago Cubs became the only pitcher to throw two shutouts in a doubleheader, beating the Dodgers 5-0 and 3-0.

1926: The St. Louis Browns beat the New York Yankees 6-1 and 6-2 in two hours, seven minutes. The first game took 55 minutes.

1952: The New York Yankees clinched their fourth straight American League pennant with a 5-1, 11-inning win over the Philadelphia A's.

1981: Nolan Ryan of the Houston Astros became the first player to pitch five no-hitters, hurling a 5-0 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers at the Astrodome.

1983: Bob Forsch of the St. Louis Cardinals pitched the second no-hitter of his career by defeating the Montreal Expos 3-0.

1993: Randy Johnson of the Seattle Mariners became the eighth pitcher to strike out 300 batters in a season after recording 13 strikeouts in 10 innings of a 3-2, 12-inning loss to the Oakland A's.

1998: Curt Schilling became the fifth pitcher to strike out 300 batters in consecutive seasons when he fanned Kevin Orie in the seventh inning of the Philadelphia Phillies' 4-3 loss to the Florida Marlins in the first game of a doubleheader.

2000: The Atlanta Braves beat the New York Mets 7-1 to clinch the National League East and win their record ninth straight division title.

2007: The New York Yankees clinched their 13th straight postseason appearance, beating Tampa Bay 12-4.

2008: The Tampa Bay Rays won their first AL East championship when the Boston Red Sox lost to the New York Yankees. The Rays became the first team other than Boston and New York to win the division since Baltimore did it in 1997. The Rays also became the first AL team in the divisional era to finish with the worst record in its league and then win its division the following year.

2008: Seattle Mariners outfielder Ichiro Suzuki matched Lou Gehrig's record with his eighth season of at least 200 hits and 100 runs.

AROUND THE HORN

■ Astros: Canadian prosecutors dropped a domestic assault charge against Astros closer Roberto Osuna, who agreed to stay away from the alleged victim for one year and continue counseling. Osuna, formerly with the Blue Jays, was charged with assault in May. He was suspended without pay for 75 games, and the Blue Jays dealt him to the Astros on July 30. ... The Astros reached 100 wins for the second straight season and closed in on the AL West title with a 4-1 victory over the Blue Jays behind Alex Bregman's two-run homer. Osuna needed just six pitches in the ninth for his 20th save.

■ Angels: Two-way rookie Shohei Ohtani will have Tommy John surgery next week. The Angels confirmed Ohtani's long-expected decision to have Dr. Neal ElAttrache perform the surgery in Los Angeles. Ohtani won't be able to pitch in 2019, but he likely could hit by early next season. Ohtani went 4-2 with a 3.31 ERA in 10 mostly outstanding starts for the Angels, but he has pitched just once since early June. He has continued as a DH, batting .280 with 56 RBIs after hitting his 21st homer Monday.

■ Brewers: Christian Yelich homered and drove in six runs, and the surging Brewers hurt the Cardinals' playoff chances with a 12-4 victory. Ryan Braun went deep twice as the Brewers won for the fifth time in six games to move four games ahead of the Cardinals for the top wild card. The Cardinals also fell a half-game behind the Rockies for the second NL wild card.

■ Rockies: David Dahl homered for a second straight night, blasting a three-run shot in the third, in a 10-3 victory over the Phillies. Charlie Blackmon extended his hitting streak to 17 games with two hits, and pinch hitter Carlos Gonzalez added a two-run single.

■ Yankees: Struggling Gary Sanchez drove in four runs for the first time since early April, and Luis Severino won his 19th game in a 9-2 victory over the Rays. Sanchez had been 10-for-66 (.152) since returning Sept. 1 from a groin strain and 1 for his last 28.

baseball-reference through Monday

■ Extra innings: The Orioles-Red Sox game scheduled for Tuesday night was postponed because of rain. The teams were rescheduled for a day-night doubleheader Wednesday. ... The makeup game the Marlins were supposed to play at Pittsburgh on the day after the regular season ends has been canceled. The cancellation was announced after both teams were eliminated from playoff contention. This will be the second time in three seasons the Marlins will not complete a full 162-game schedule. They played 161 games in 2016.

Griffen to stay away from Vikes

News services

Last week, the Vikings were concerned enough about Everson Griffen's state of mind that they barred the three-time Pro Bowl defensive end from practice until he had a mental health evaluation.

After a troubling series of incidents Saturday, Griffen remained away from the team Tuesday and out of action indefinitely. Coach Mike Zimmer said Griffen would not travel with the team to play the Rams on Thursday.

"The only thing we really are concerned about for Everson isn't anything to do with football. It's about him getting better," Zimmer said.

According to police in Minnetrista, the Minneapolis suburb where he lives, Griffen was making comments about people trying to kill him. He was eventually transported by ambulance to an area hospital for his well-being, despite jumping out of the vehicle at one point during a brief stop for crossing deer. He was never arrested or suspected of committing any crimes.

"I just hope for the best for him," Zimmer said. "In the long run he's a really good kid."

After Griffen agreed to the hospital visit, officers summoned by paramedics after the stop for the deer found him walking on the side of a county road. Griffen told them he was afraid "someone was going to shoot him." The officers convinced him to return to the ambulance and lie down on a stretcher inside. Stephen Weatherly has taken the 30-year-old Griffen's place in the starting lineup.

Talib surgery: Rams cornerback Aqib Talib will undergo surgery Thursday to repair an ankle injury.

Rams coach Sean McVay said a timetable for Talib's return will not be known until after the procedure is completed and the full extent of the injury he sustained in the second half of the 35-23 win over the Chargers on Sunday is determined.

Talib has six tackles, two passes defended and one forced fumble in three games this season, helping the Rams limit opponents to 199 yards passing per game and only two touchdown passes.

Extra points: Jameis Winston is back, though the Buccaneers still aren't saying if it's as the starting QB. Winston's three-game suspension for violating the NFL's personal conduct policy ended Tuesday, the first day the fourth-year pro was permitted to return to the team's training facility and have contact with coaches and teammates. Coach Dirk Koetter declined to say whether Winston or Ryan Fitzpatrick — who has the Bucs off to a 2-1 start while throwing for more than 400 yards in a league-record three consecutive games — will start Sunday against the Bears. ... With Marcus Mariota dealing with an injured elbow and backup Blaine Gabbert in the concussion protocol, the Titans agreed to terms with veteran QB Austin Davis. They placed OL Kevin Pamphile on injured reserve to create a roster spot. ... The Falcons placed FS Ricardo Allen on injured reserve with a torn Achilles tendon. He was carted off the field Sunday in an overtime loss to the Saints.

IN BRIEF

COLLEGE FOOTBALL: North Carolina is nearly back at full strength its game at No. 16 Miami after with the return of several players who were suspended for selling team-issued shoes. Michigan State starting RB LJ Scott, who missed last week's game because of an ankle injury, is day-to-day heading into the No. 21 Spartans' game Saturday against Central Michigan.

TENNIS: Andy Murray advanced to the second round of the Shenzhen Open when wild-card entry Zhang Zhizhen had to retire in the third set. Zhang took advantage of Murray's inconsistent serve to win the second set but started limping in the third and retired when trailing 6-3, 6-7 (3), 4-2. ... Second-ranked Caroline Wozniacki reached the third round of a tournament for the first time since June, defeating Rebecca Peterson 6-4, 6-1 at the Wuhan Open. No. 1 seed Simona Halep lost 6-0, 7-5 to Dominika Cibulkova.

NHL: Coyotes F Alex Galchenyuk is not expected to play opening night and is week-to-week with a lower-body injury.

SOCCER: Broadcaster JP Dellacamera was selected to receive this year's Colin Jose Media Award from the U.S. National Soccer Hall of Fame. Dellacamera, 66, will be presented with the honor on Oct. 20 when the new Hall of Fame building opens in Frisco, Texas. ... Former Italy F Giuseppe Rossi's injury-plagued career has another negative turn with a positive doping test. Italy's anti-doping agency Nado Italia announced that Rossi will stand trial next week after testing positive for an eye drug that can be used as a masking agent. The anti-doping prosecutor is seeking a one-year ban. ... Derby knocked Manchester United out of the League Cup with a 8-7 shootout victory after a 2-2 draw. ... Harvey Elliott became the youngest-ever player to feature for Fulham at just 15 years and 174 days.

BLACKHAWKS

HAWKS NOTES

Top line 'a dream' for Kahun

Free agent gets chance with Toews, DeBrincat

By Jimmy Greenfield
Chicago Tribune

Sitting at his locker after another training camp practice, Dominik Kahun is just a few feet away from Jonathan Toews and Alex DeBrincat.

And he still can't believe it.

"It's more than a dream," said Kahun, who the Blackhawks signed as a free agent out of Germany's top league this summer. "I watched those guys on YouTube highlights and now I'm playing with them. It's unbelievable."

Not only is Kahun, 23, on the same team with Toews and DeBrincat but during Tuesday night's preseason home opener against the Red Wings he played on the same line with them for the first time.

Kahun began camp fighting for a roster spot but coach Joel Quenneville decided to put him on the top line after scoring a goal and adding an assist Saturday at Ottawa.

"He's a worker around the puck area," Quenneville said. "He has some quickness and sees a lot of plays. He can play in all situations as well. (We'll) see how he does with Johnny. First time he played at center last game I think that might have helped him as well. It was what we're looking for. Playing (as a wing) with Johnny certainly it's a great opportunity for him."

Kahun has a clause in his contract that allows him to return to Germany if he doesn't make the Hawks, which won't hurt his chances. But he's not taking anything for granted.

"I start from zero every day," Kahun said. "Even if I feel good for sure it gives me confidence. But I wake up the next morning knowing I have to be even better today to make the team. Today is another chance for me to show what I can do and I'm going to give everything."

8 defensemen left, 1 to go: Defensemen Joni Tuulola and Carl Dahlstrom were sent to Rockford Tuesday, leaving the Blackhawks with eight healthy blue liners in camp and one very big decision to make.

Of the eight remaining, Duncan Keith, Brent Seabrook, Jan Rutta and Brandon Manning are locks, and Erik Gustafsson and Henri Jokiharu are also likely to be on the ice when the Hawks open the season Oct. 4 at Ottawa.

That leaves veteran Brandon Davidson, who is in camp on a professional tryout contract, and 18-year-old Adam Boqvist, who the Hawks took No. 8 in the draft last June.

The conventional wisdom had been Boqvist would start the season with the Ontario Hockey League's London Knights but that's no longer the case. Quenneville has sung his praises repeatedly.

If the Hawks decide to stick with Boqvist that could mean losing Davidson, who is not under contract beyond the end of camp. Davidson may be the target of another NHL team if the Hawks place him on waivers.

One option could be to sign Davidson, keep Boqvist and have Gustafsson start the season in Rockford. Boqvist can play up to nine games with the Hawks without burning a year on his entry-level contract. The Hawks play their ninth game on Oct. 23.

Whatever they decide to do now, future decisions loom when defensemen Connor Murphy (back) and Gustav Forsling (wrist surgery) return from injured reserve. Forsling has been skating and is expected back in mid-November while Murphy could be out until December.

Gritty response: Manning, who spent six seasons with the Flyers, began exchanging texts with former teammates after the team unveiled Gritty, an orange-bearded mascot with googly eyes that has many people freaked out.

"With the eyes and the face I don't know if that's going to scare kids away or attract more of the fans there," Manning said. "If it's going to work anywhere I think it's going to work in Philly. For some reason the fans are crazy enough there and passionate enough that after it calms down they might actually embrace it."

MEDIA

JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

ESPN reporter Jen Lada prepares for a segment before the Bears-Seahawks Monday night game Sept. 17.

Work ethic: Lada living it, loving it

Teddy Greenstein
On media

You see Jen Lada on ESPN's highest-profile shows and think: She has it made.

There she is, co-hosting "Get Up" with Mike Greenberg, doing a feature on Bears tight end Zach Miller for "Monday Night Countdown" and profiling Heisman Trophy candidate Will Grier for "College GameDay." She will be at college football's epicenter this weekend, hosting "College Football Live" on the eve of Ohio State-Penn State.

Perhaps you're one of her nearly 20,000 followers on Instagram who sees those images of her gorgeous family and thinks: What a perfect life.

Here's the thing, though: What you haven't seen and heard is what makes her Jen Lada. The grit. The hustle. The hard times. All the real-life stuff.

"She is persistent," said ESPN Vice President Lee Fitting, who oversees "GameDay." "She's a fighter."

She's also brutally honest.

She waited tables to supplement a $23,000-a-year job in Rockford. As a single mom, she fell behind on daycare bills. She had two miscarriages, saying: "You grieve and recover."

Her first broadcasting job interview out of Marquette ended with the sports director pressuring her to swim naked in the pool at his house. She shared that story on Twitter a year before the #MeToo movement took shape.

Professionally, she viewed herself as a failure in her early days at ESPN. She arrived in 2015 after two years at NBC Sports Chicago, then called CSN Chicago. A partnership with Colin Cowherd ended before it began when he bolted for Fox Sports. A radio show with co-host Jorge Sedano quickly fizzled.

"I was devastated," Lada said on Michelle Smallmon's "Small Talk" podcast. "The network said basically: Don't call us, we'll call you. ... It still feels like a Scarlet Letter."

Lada, 37, dodged ESPN layoffs and rebuilt her career by attending every ESPN self-improvement seminar and knocking on the door of practically every content producer. A feature on Kyle Schwarber raised her stock.

"I love to work," Lada says. "I feel fulfilled when I'm able to contribute. I like moving. My husband always says I don't know how to shut it down. I get shut down. I just crash."

When her eyes are open, she balances work and home life. Quite literally, in some cases. She conducted this phone interview with 7-month-old Layla on her lap.

Lada was five months pregnant with Layla last fall when she married Dario Melendez, a Fox Sports reporter in Milwaukee.

"If Layla stayed hidden," Lada says," I promised I'd buy her a convertible when he she turns 16."

"In a business where a lot of people — not just women, men too — are afraid to give an opinion because they don't want to ruffle the feathers of a coach, player or organization, she was more than willing."

— David Kaplan on Jen Lada

Lada's Jack Russell Terrier is named Wrigley. "Sweet home Chicago" is in her Twitter bio. And son Chase does a victory dance after favorable Cubs outcomes. Melendez is assigned to the Bucks and Brewers, but ...

"We are quick to remind him that he is not a Brewers fan; he was born and raised in Florida," he says. "And he certainly enjoyed those (Cubs) World Series tickets I got for him."

Cheeky. Clever.

Those are two of the qualities that made her successful on CSN's "Kap & Haugh" show before she left for ESPN.

"She's a bulldog," David Kaplan said. "In a business where a lot of people — not just women, men too — are afraid to give an opinion because they don't want to ruffle the feathers of a coach, player or organization, she was more than willing. She is capable, hard-working and tough. Intense."

Lada grew up in the blue-collar town of Spring Grove, Ill., near the Wisconsin border, the daughter of Connie ("a huge baseball fan") and Bill, a junior-high track coach and athletic director.

"My dad would have me keep score at the volleyball and basketball games," she says. "Dad was responsible for getting the gym ready for games. He got the gate ready, pushed the broom. There was a pride he took in that role."

Lada ran distance track events at Marian Central Catholic, where she is in the school's hall of fame, and captained the cheerleading squad at Marquette.

She scraped by in Rockford and worked seven years in Milwaukee, never making $50,000 while providing for Chase after her divorce.

She met Melendez at Lambeau Field when the two were TV reporters covering the Packers.

"He was the new sportscaster in town, I had recently separated and had no interest in dating," she says. "He sent me a typo-filled email. I thought: Who is this schmuck who can't spell?"

He worked his way into her good graces.

Lada has done the same at ESPN, recently signing a multiyear extension.

When she's not burping Layla, she's researching, traveling, interviewing, hosting shows, sideline reporting and knocking out features.

Fitting, the ESPN executive who oversees college sports, tells her: "Take a minute to appreciate. There are not many who are doing it all."

That smell-the-roses stuff is as welcome as a Cubs loss.

"Many in our business take what's given to them," Fitting said. "Jen always wants to do more."

BULLS

Portis at peace with role

Forward's focus strictly on future, not fighting

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Late last season, Bobby Portis told The Athletic he planned to pen an essay for The Players' Tribune detailing his side of the altercation that broke bones in Nikola Mirotic's face and rocked Bulls training camp a year ago.

"I decided to not do it," Portis said Tuesday after the Bulls' first practice of this camp. "Just focus on the future and focus on myself — me and my family. ... I really wasn't worried about anybody else but myself and bettering myself. Locked in on having a good year, not only for myself but for the organization."

The future, however, features Mirotic, who arrives in town for Sunday's preseason opener against the Pelicans.

How well Portis and Mirotic played together once Mirotic recovered from his facial fractures has been well-documented and remains one of the NBA's more remarkable storylines from last season. But the Bulls traded Mirotic to the Pelicans in January. And Sunday marks his first game back.

Instead of his essay, Portis fielded a question about what Sunday will be like.

"Me and Niko always compete at a high level against each other," Portis said. "We're two competitors, two guys who love basketball. He had a good playoffs, good year at the end of the year. I was happy for him and what he did. It will be fun to compete against him Sunday. At the same time, we're trying to build our chemistry and get ready for the 18th."

That's the date of the Bulls' season opener against the 76ers. By then, it will be known whether Portis and the Bulls have reached agreement on a long-term extension off his rookie contract. If not, Portis will become a restricted free agent after the season.

That Portis brushed off contract talk with one sentence and never mentioned it again over the course of a seven-minute interview properly frames the strong frame of mind the forward appears to be in as he begins his fourth season.

No longer worried about fighting for a starting role or playing time, Portis is at peace aiming to be Sixth Man of the Year. After averaging career highs of 13.2 points and 6.8 rebounds last season, he has embraced the role.

"I get to come off the bench and score a lot. Who doesn't like to score? That's a fun gig," Portis said. "Coach has trust in me to shoot the shots I want to shoot."

Along those lines, Portis said he worked most on reading double-teams out of the midpost and improving his 3-point shot this offseason in workouts split among Chicago, Los Angeles and his home state of Arkansas. Portis shot a respectable 35.9 percent from 3-point range last season, also a career best.

Bigs who can knock down 3-pointers with consistency make coach Fred Hoiberg's offense all the more potent.

"I look at other guys around the league — Eric Gordon, Lou Wil (Lou Williams). They come in and change the game. I feel I can do that for this club," Portis said. "It's fun doing that. Sitting there knowing I'm going to come in about the 5- or 6-minute mark in the first quarter, that's a good thing."

If this selflessness sounds a little like Taj Gibson, well, Portis learned from the low-maintenance veteran, now with the Timberwolves.

"We were experimenting with different lineups and it was after the third game he said, 'Coach, can you put me off the bench again?' You don't hear that very often at this level," Hoiberg said. "It's great to have a guy who appreciates that role. It's great to have that spark and that energy and competitiveness coming off your bench."

For what it's worth, Gibson opted for long-term security over a possibly bigger payday just minutes before his deadline in 2012. Gibson even changed his mind from pre- to postgame as his agent and Bulls management negotiated throughout.

That agent is Mark Bartelstein, who also represents Portis. Would anybody be surprised if Portis follows Gibson's lead again?

'We're Only Alive for a Short Amount of Time' ★★★ ½

A survival story, deeply moving in its courage

By Chris Jones
Chicago Tribune

In 1988, a young humble, quirky, British-American monologuist named David Cale appeared in the studio theater in the old Goodman Theatre. His show, he said at the time, was dedicated to the proposition that "reality was something you rise above."

It has taken 30 years — and many intervening visits to premiere work at the Goodman — for the New York-based, still-not-famous Cale to finally stand on a stage in Chicago and explain what he meant.

By fully laying bare his own shockingly violent reality.

For that is what he is doing now, in a deeply personal, indisputably courageous, frequently shocking and deeply moving autobiographical show called "We're Only Alive for a Short Amount of Time," a new collaboration with director Robert Falls.

It's not the best title; it all depends on how you are defining short. And there are some narrative gaps in a piece that, let us stipulate in all that complexity, could not possibly be performed by anyone else. It is structured so that its legitimacy as an artwork is wholly dependent on the long nightmare described therein being the actual truth of the man standing before you on a stage.

Emma Thompson stars as a fastidious family court judge whose life turns messy in "The Children Act."

BRAINPOWER, INTERRUPTED

Emma Thompson and a faulty neural pathway during a strenuous West End run

By Nina Metz | Chicago Tribune

In "The Children Act," Emma Thompson plays a family court judge in England who retreats into her work rather than deal with a marriage (to a husband played by Stanley Tucci) that has seen better days.

Even so, her work is demanding and the cases she presides over are high stakes.

"When I started to put this character together, I thought, oh my goodness, the family courts are, in a sense, like an emotional war zone," Thompson said. "There's a lot of adrenaline in those courtrooms. And a lot of pain. And a lot of suffering. And an awful lot of drama. And you can understand why, in those moments and in that place, she might not only feel that huge sense of responsibility towards the actual work and the people she's making decisions about, but also that ordinary life might certainly have less magnetism.

"So not only does she have to balance her empathy and her sense of compassion with the black-and-white demands of the law, she's also dealing with a sense of injustice within herself because her husband's just thrown this emotional hand grenade-y thing into the room to get her attention. So she's off balance, which is a very difficult position to be in if you're representing the scales of justice."

"The Children Act" is a drama. Up next for Thompson are a couple of comedies, including "Late Night" (in which she plays a late-night talk show host) and the "Men in Black" spinoff.

That kind of variety keeps her engaged, she said. "And it also keeps me afloat financially because actually something like 'Men in Black' will pay for a movie like 'The Meyerowitz Stories,' which cost me money to make — I came to New York, and I actually had to spend my own money. Every film pays differently, and whilst it's lovely talk about the art and everything, I have to earn a living. I still have to earn a living, I'm not someone who's somehow, you know, exempt from that — in spite of whatever it might appear."

Before Thompson established herself as a film actor, "I did all sorts of things, I did stand-up, and I did sketch comedy for a long time." She also worked in the theater. When asked to share a worst moment from her career, it was her experience performing in a musical that came to mind.

My worst moment ...

"My story's sort of a weird brain-neural pathway story from the theater when I was doing 'Me and My Girl' when I was 24. I was in it with Robert Lindsay, who then brought it to America. So this was in 1985, and it was in the West End (in London).

"It was eight shows a week, for a year. You didn't get any time off. It was brutal, actually.

"There were lots of dance sequences in it, and there was a jazz dance sequence in it, and I was wearing little ballet pumps (shoes), and one night one of my pumps came off during the sequence! I had to stop in the middle of the dance, and I thought: 'Well, what am I going to do?' I made light of it — we laughed, I took the other pump off and threw it into the wings, finished the dance sequence, and it was fine. We got through it.

"So, the following night we started the dance sequence, and at exactly the same moment the pump had come off the night before — it didn't come off, but I just absolutely went blank. And just stood there on the stage unable to move. And finally, Bob helped me — he came up to me and sort of swept me off. And I went off stage totally and utterly traumatized and sweating and frightened.

"The next day I went to the theater early

Northwestern alumna Heather Headley on "Chicago Med."

Headley, Heche land 'Chicago' boss roles

By Tracy Swartz
Chicago Tribune

Two actresses who studied in the Chicago area play the new bosses on NBC's "Chicago Med" and "Chicago P.D."

Anne Heche, who attended Francis W. Parker School in Lincoln Park, makes her debut as Deputy Superintendent Katherine Brennan on Wednesday's Season 6 premiere of "P.D." On "Med," Northwestern University alumna Heather Headley plays hospital chief operating officer Gwen Garrett in a recurring role.

"Chicago is home," Headley told reporters earlier this month at an event celebrating Dick Wolf's "Chicago" trilogy. "Now between, of course, October and March, she is a bitter, little girl, but I think in the spring, there's no place better. And so to be back, actually in Chicago, and to do this show ... it's just a great pleasure, so I'm excited, and there's nothing bad about being near the old alma mater."

The Trinidad-born singer/actress attended Northwestern until the end of her junior year in 1996, when she left to join a production of "Ragtime." She won a Tony Award in 2000 for her leading role in "Aida" and a Grammy Award in 2010 for her gospel album "Audience of One."

Her "Med" character was introduced on the May Season 3 finale. The COO spars with hospital administrator Sharon Goodwin (played by S. Epatha Merkerson) on the Season 4 premiere, which is scheduled to air at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

Headley, 43, said she spoke to a female COO of a large hospital outside Chicago to prepare for the role but admitted earlier this month that she wasn't quite caught up on previous seasons of "Med," which premiered in 2015.

Zoe Kravitz will executive produce in a "High Fidelity" series that tells the story from a female perspective.

Zoe Kravitz to star in 'High Fidelity' series

Zoe Kravitz has been cast in the lead role in the series adaptation of "High Fidelity" on Disney's upcoming streaming service, Variety has learned.

The series, which has received a 10-episode order, is inspired by Nick Hornby's novel and the Touchstone film of the same name. It reimagines the story from the female perspective. Kravitz, who will executive produce in addition to starring, will play the ultimate music fan — a record store owner who's obsessed with pop culture and Top Five lists.

Interestingly, Kravitz's mother, Lisa Bonet, starred in the film version opposite John Cusack as musician Marie De Salle. Kravitz most recently starred in the critically acclaimed HBO series "Big Little Lies" and will appear in its upcoming second season.

The "High Fidelity" series is being created for streaming by writers Veronica West and Sarah Kucserka. West and Kucserka are executive producing alongside Midnight Radio's Josh Appelbaum, Andre Nemec, Jeff Pinkner and Scott Rosenberg.

The Disney direct-to-consumer streaming service is scheduled to launch in late 2019 and will feature a wide array of branded original and library content from Walt Disney Studios, Disney-ABC Television Group, Pixar Animation, Marvel Entertainment, Marvel Studios and Lucasfilm.

ASK AMY

By Amy Dickinson

Aunt wonders how often to see kids

Dear Amy: My husband and I are in our 20s. We have been married for two years. My husband has three siblings. Each sibling has one child under the age of 2.

I caught wind from my mother-in-law that one of my sisters-in-law isn't too happy with us because we don't see the kids often enough and don't reach out often enough. My husband's family all live relatively close by, but they aren't in daily contact.

I am an only child and have never had nieces and nephews before. My husband and I are expecting our first child soon and we own a business, so we are very busy during the week, and our weekends are consumed with remodeling the house to get ready for the baby. I just don't think they realize that I'm not a stay-at-home mom and we can't take days off.

How often should we reach out to my sisters-in-law to check in or to make plans to see our nieces/nephews? How do we make them understand that we're not being mean, but we're just busy?

— Confused Only Child

Dear Confused: I'd like to offer a shout-out regarding the special experience of being an aunt (or uncle). This relationship offers so many opportunities for ancillary parenting: for enjoying, mentoring and loving children who are tangentially your own.

When you are a parent, you will likely want other family members to develop a close relationship with your child. You should show these other parents and children the level of attention that you might like your child to receive. And because you have no experience as a sibling, parent or aunt, you should fake it till you make it.

If your mother-in-law passes along a critique, you should listen respectfully, glean whatever lesson you can from it and consider making some changes if you are able. What you should not do is get defensive or offer up excuses about how busy you are.

There is no "correct" way to quantify contact with nearby family, although you should try to attend special occasions: birthdays, religious or school milestones and holidays (Halloween is a great time to pop by and see the littles in their costumes). Also connect with these parents on social media. Even if you don't see these family members very often, when you are with them you should lavish attention upon the child, show interest in the parents and follow up with a text or a call letting them know that their toddler is adorable/interesting/sweet — and/or loved.

Dear Amy: I've been in a relationship with my husband for 18 years. We've been married for eight. We have both been unfaithful.

My husband has said he's not happy and doesn't want to be married anymore. How do I show him things are different now, and save my marriage?

— Desperate

Dear Desperate: You know the saying "Change starts with you"? If you're lucky and work hard, change stays with you. Most often, however, we humans make little inroads toward change — but then revert to our messy selves.

In 18 years together, you and your husband have dealt with your humanity by distracting yourselves with affairs. You two could turn things around with therapeutic work and with a mutual guarantee that you will dive into, versus step out on, your problems.

But he's done. You should acknowledge and apologize — in person and in writing — for the ways you've hurt him (don't focus on how he has hurt you). You should guarantee that things will be different now, because you are different now, and ask him to consider staying with you.

The beauty of you changing is that you get to be a better version of you, regardless of what your husband chooses to do.

Dear Amy: Your response to "WTF" was SPOT ON! As a psychotherapist, I am always on the lookout for the health and needs of the children, and your focus on the 14-year-old in this situation was exactly right and made me cheer!

I hope this mom can gather her strength in the midst of her grief and show up for her son.

— Katherine, MFT (Marriage and Family Therapist)

Dear Katherine: "WTF" was aggrieved when his wife mourned the death of her ex-husband.

He was clued into his needs while ignoring his stepson's. Thank you for your support.

Sinfonietta honors immigrants

'Images of Diversity' concert, multimedia work 'Ellis Island: The Dream of America' open orchestra's 31st season

Howard Reich
On Music

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2015

Chicago Sinfonietta music director Mei-Ann Chen led the season opener Monday in Orchestra Hall.

Immigrants built this country, and if you don't believe it, you weren't at the opening of the Chicago Sinfonietta's 31st season Monday night in Orchestra Hall.

This intrepid organization, which continuously redefines what a symphonic concert can be, on this evening explored "ID: Images of Diversity." Meaning that every work on the program represented a distinct cultural tradition, all of which — like the ethnicities they represented — found a home in America.

The concert, as Sinfonietta chief executive officer Jim Hirsch told the crowd, was "about the gifts that people from other countries have brought here" — and how those cultural treasures enrich a nation.

No work on the program expressed that point more explicitly than Peter Boyar's sprawling, multimedia opus, "Ellis Island: The Dream of America." For as Sinfonietta music director Mei-Ann Chen led the orchestra, historic black-and-white images flickered on a large screen and actors from the Steep Theatre Company read poignant testimonies from those who once passed through Ellis Island.

Boyar's score proved pretty much as straightforward and inspirational as one might have anticipated, the music built on soaring crescendos, heroic melodies and various pictorial details. In effect, it amounted to movie music, though in the best sense of the term: sounds designed to make instant emotional and dramatic impact.

What lifted this opus from the mundane, of course, were those images of immigrants — some emaciated, most poor, all with hope in their eyes — and their words, as read by the Steep performers:

"I wish one day I'll be in America."

"I did not have a normal childhood. We had to fight for a piece of bread."

"Twenty-two days on the ocean."

"As soon as we hit the harbor in New York, it was jubilation."

"The doors were open. I am free. I'm just like a bird."

"This is the only country where you are not a stranger, because we are all strangers. It's only a matter of time, who got here first."

At the end, the actors delivered the Emma Lazarus poem inscribed at the base of the Statue of Liberty, including the immortal line: "Give me your tired, your poor..."

With the orchestra stirring in the background and an image of the statue on the screen, you had to be fairly hard-hearted not to be moved.

But that wasn't the evening's only homage to cultural diversity.

How often, after all, does a symphonic concert present orchestral work by the great jazz/stride pianist James P. Johnson? Not often enough, a situation addressed when Chen led the orchestra in Johnson's "Drums – A Symphonic Poem." The piece paired Roaring '20s rhythms with European symphonic instrumentation, its exultant finale ranking among the composer's most compelling work.

Elsewhere in the evening, Chen and the Sinfonietta captured the Cuban undertone of Mexican-born composer Arturo Marquez's Danzon No. 2 and sweetly dispatched Aaron Copland's "Variations on a Shaker Melody," two more facets of American multiculturalism.

Remarkably, all of this unfolded "at a time of religious bans, deportations, of family's being separated," conductor Chen told the audience.

Logan Center Blues

The University of Chicago's Logan Center for the Arts has deepened its commitment to the blues with a newly announced series: Logan Center Second Monday Blues, hosted by Chicago blues harmonica master Billy Branch.

The free series — which will run the second Monday of every month from November to April, 2019 (except December) — will open at 7 p.m. Nov. 12, featuring Branch with guitarist Jimmy Johnson. Each installment of the series will feature a conversation with Branch, its curator and host, followed by a concert.

The lineup will continue with Mary Lane, Jan. 14; Lurrie Bell, Feb. 11; Jamiah Rogers, March 11; Jimmy Burns, April 8.

All events will take place at the Logan Center Café, 915 E. 60th St.

This is in addition to the already scheduled second Logan Center Bluesfest, running Oct. 19-21 and featuring a marathon of performances, presentations, workshops and more, with both free and ticketed events. A reception for the photo exhibition "Ernest C. Withers: Documenting Memphis Music," will run from 5 to 7 p.m. Oct. 19. And a pre-fest event, "Rear View Mirror Session: Blues Edition," will spotlight Muddy Waters, 6 to 9 p.m. Oct. 6.

For details, visit www.loganbluesfest.org.

Beyond the Aria

Michael Fabiano, Danielle de Niese and Tamara Wilson will perform in the next season of Beyond the Aria, which features Lyric Opera soloists alongside members of the Ryan Opera Center in a cabaret setting at the Pritzker Pavilion stage (listeners are seated on the stage, looking out at Millennium Park).

Series artistic director and pianist Craig Terry will accompany the vocalists; the series is presented by the Harris Theater in association with Lyric Opera.

Here's the schedule, with all performances starting at 7:30 p.m. at the Pritzker Pavilion, near Randolph Street and Michigan Avenue:

- Oct. 16: Soprano Erin Wall, tenor David Portillo, bass-baritone Alan Higgs.
- Nov. 28: Soprano Tamara Wilson, mezzo-soprano Jamie Barton, tenor Josh Lovell.
- Jan. 14, 2019: Soprano Danielle de Niese, tenor Michael Fabiano, contralto Lauren Decker.
- March 12, 2019: Soprano Heidi Stober, bass-baritone Kyle Ketelsen, soprano Whitney Morrison.
- May 29, 2019: Sopranos Patricia Racette and Ann Toomey, tenor Mario Rojas.

For details, phone 312-334-7777 or visit www.harristheaterchicago.org.

MusicNOW lineup

Missy Mazzoli, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra's Mead Composer-in-Residence, launches her two-season tenure this year by curating the long-running MusicNOW series at the Harris Theater for Music and Dance, 205 E. Randolph St. The programs will feature U.S. and world premieres, commissions and other discoveries.

Following is the lineup, each concert starting at 7 p.m. and featuring musicians from the CSO plus these artists:

- Oct. 22: Conductor Cliff Colnot and violinist Stephanie Jeong.
- Nov. 19: Conductor Alan Pierson, violist Wiejing Wang and cellist Katinka Klein.
- April 8, 2019: Conductor Edwin Outwater, marimbist Cynthia Yeh and bassist Alexander Hanna.
- May 29: Pianist Mazzoli.

IN PERFORMANCE
'Legally Blonde' ★★★

Pink, silly, poignant and fun

By Kerry Reid

LIZ LAUREN PHOTO

Casey Shuler's performance as Elle Woods in Paramount Theatre's "Legally Blonde" proves ebullient and sharp — not to mention her terrific vocals.

Omigod you guys! Sisterhood is awesome!

If you want a show that celebrates female friendship with flying colors (mostly on the pink end of the spectrum), then have no fear — Elle Woods is here. And while a rich white girl from Malibu may not be most people's idea of an underdog, Paramount Theatre's sparkling and big-hearted production of "Legally Blonde" makes the case for this film-to-stage musical as more than another cynical, money-grabbing vehicle based on a popular movie.

As in the 2001 Reese Witherspoon film, the 2007 musical shows us that there's more to the pretty woman of Delta Nu than her fashion sense. She also has a warmhearted sensibility that grows stronger under the heat of romantic disappointment and academic pressure. Spoiled? For sure. Malicious? No way. Ultimately, it's Elle's faith in other people that helps her find faith in herself.

And with Casey Shuler's sharp performance at the Paramount, Elle is in good (and perfectly manicured) hands. Shuler is terrific vocally, but her ability to raise the roof doesn't disguise the blend of ebullience and vulnerability at Elle's center. Director/co-choreographer Trent Stork knows how to balance the ridiculous and the near-sublime throughout most of the show.

Yes, the story of a girl following her ex to Harvard Law School doesn't start from a place of empowering feminism. (For that matter, neither did the 1990s Keri Russell vehicle, "Felicity," where the title character moved from California to New York because of a high school crush. At least Elle had a real relationship with the callow Warner Huntington III.)

When: Through Oct. 21

Where: Paramount Theatre, 23 E. Galena Blvd., Aurora

Running time: 2 hours, 30 minutes

Tickets: $36-$69 at 630-896-6666 or www.paramountaurora.com

But stick with it and the show grows on you, without getting too bubble-gum sticky. Stork and his cast know that this is a silly show about some serious stuff — including sexual harassment from a law professor (James Rank) who favors interns with a certain look. (Fiction, right?) It makes its feminist points with sparkle and flash.

In fact, one could argue that Elle is the spiritual descendant of Billie Dawn in "Born Yesterday" — another woman prized mostly for her pulchritude who learns (admittedly with the tutoring of another man who is attracted to her) to prize her brain and challenge corruption and injustice.

But what makes "Legally Blonde" really sing (other than the efficient, if not wholly memorable, pop-rock score by Laurence O'Keefe and Nell Benjamin) is its focus on the feminine relationships. Heather Hach's book mostly follows the original, but there are some key changes that enhance the message of trusting other women to lift you up.

Yes, the polished female professor played by Holland Taylor in the film is gone. But Vivienne Kensington (Jacquelyne Jones) evolves from being the Mean Prep Girl who takes Elle's place in Warner's future plans when he decides he needs a Jackie, not a Marilyn. She believes Elle at a crucial moment — something that sends a particularly strong message today. And the musical treats Tyler Lain's Warner a bit more kindly than the film does. He's clueless — but probably as much out of his element as Elle is at Harvard.

There's also the "Greek chorus" — a trio of Elle's sorority sisters who pop into her head to deliver atta-girls when she needs them. As embodied by Lucy Godinez, Sara Reinecke and Kyrie Courter, they're a cheering section with dance chops and the perfect antidote to self-doubt.

Above all, there's lovelorn beauty salon operator Paulette, played by Sophie Grimm with goofy but poignant affection and a fantasy about finding an Irish step-dancing Adonis. (Spoiler alert: he shows up in the form of James Doherty's Kyle B. O'Boyle, aka "the UPS guy," who also gets a chance to flirt shamelessly with women in the front row.)

The easy joyous relationship between Shuler's Elle and Grimm's Paulette — two women who both need to pick themselves up from heartbreak — makes us wish we could see them spun off into their own buddy film. Accompanied, of course, by their adorable dogs, Bruiser and Rufus (played here with maximum scene-stealing effect by Frankie and Romeo, respectively.)

But Hach also fleshes out the connection between Elle and sympathetic Harvard alum and teaching assistant Emmett Forrest (Gerald Caesar). In the film, he's mostly mayonnaise. Here, he's a working-class kid who had to fight for the things Elle takes for granted. In "Chip on My Shoulder," he sings about anger as an empowering force — surely something a lot of people (especially women) are connecting with in the current social and political climate.

Stork and Megan E. Farley's choreography fills the large Paramount stage with impressive athleticism, particularly from Jenna Coker-Jones' Brooke Wyndham, the fitness entrepreneur whose trial provides Elle the chance to prove her chops. The 2001 setting gets an update thanks to Mike Tutaj's smartphone projections on Jeffrey D. Kmiec's eye-catching set — itself a fine backdrop for Theresa Ham's eye-candy costumes.

"Legally Blonde" isn't a seminal feminist classic. Nor is it trying to be. This is a smart-but-silly show that knows its strengths and doesn't apologize for its limitations. Like Elle, it finds a way to empower without losing its sense of fun.

NBC will air new episodes of 'Chicago' trilogy back to back

By Tracy Swartz
Chicago Tribune

"Chicago Med" star Nick Gehlfuss has your Wednesday nights figured out.

"You have your cocktails and appetizers with 'Med,' you have your main course with 'Fire,' and you have your dessert with 'P.D.'," Gehlfuss told reporters earlier this month at a "One Chicago" press event held at the Lagunitas Brewing Company on the West Side.

"We've really done a great thing for Wednesday nights. You can start looking forward to Wednesday nights instead of it being the dreaded middle of the week."

NBC is set to air new episodes of Dick Wolf's three "Chicago" shows back-to-back on Wednesday nights starting this week. "Chicago Fire," "Chicago Med" and "Chicago P.D." fans — also known as "ChiHards" — have lauded stacking the shows on one night. The scheduling change allows for more crossovers (there's already one planned for next week), but it may be difficult for some viewers to block out three consecutive hours to watch the shows live.

"I did inform people, jokingly, 'Hey, Wednesdays (are when) my shows are coming on. I'm not going to be able to talk to you all,' " said Gerald Thomas, of the Auburn Gresham neighborhood on the South Side.

"I will say this though, I do believe that some of that time is going to have to be TiVo'd because sitting in front of the TV three straight hours, I don't know about that."

Earlier this year, "Chicago Med" aired on Tuesdays, "P.D." on Wednesdays and "Fire" on Thursdays. This Wednesday, "Med" is scheduled to air at 7 p.m., followed by "Fire" and "P.D.," though this lineup is subject to change in the future if there's a crossover between shows.

Next week's three-way crossover starts with "Fire," moves to "Med" and finishes with "P.D." A fire consumes a residential high-rise. The victims overwhelm the emergency room on "Med" while the "P.D." team races to find the arsonist.

"This will be easier. I'll just plan everything directly around the shows," said Rogers Park's AnnMarie Walsh, who tweets about the "Chicago" episodes as they air.

NBC is celebrating its inaugural "One Chicago" night with a premiere watch party Wednesday at Bucktown's Lottie's Pub, the inspiration for Molly's bar in the "Chicago" world.

And for fans unsure if they can stay glued to the TV for three consecutive hours, consider Wolf, who said he watches his shows in "longer blocks than that."

"Look, it sounds terrible. I watch my own shows a lot," Wolf told reporters at the "One Chicago" press event. "I'm obsessed with TV so I'm either watching news or 'SVU' or 'L&O' or 'Criminal Intent.' But it's basically wallpaper, and I know how they come out."

Two new bosses in 'Chicago'

"I feel like to some extent I want to know about the show, and I know the histories of certain people," Headley said. "But I don't want to know everything because I want to have that new experience of just going like, 'Well, who are you and why are you here? And I'm still going to fire you.' "

Heche, 49, also plays a formidable character on "P.D." The "Donnie Brasco" actress, who spent her teenage years in Chicago after moving around a lot as a child, makes her mark early on Wednesday's premiere, which is scheduled to air at 9 p.m.

Anne Heche

"We brought her in to sort of put a face to the political stuff we're exploring. Her boss, the superintendent of the police department, is running for mayor, and so she is very invested in that person winning the election. If he wins, she'll be appointed superintendent," "P.D." showrunner Rick Eid said.

"There will be times when (Sgt. Hank) Voight's doing something that might not be in the best interest of the Chicago P.D., or her boss, or the optics of the Chicago P.D., so it will be an interesting added layer for Voight to have to navigate."

Off-screen, actor Jason Beghe (who plays Voight) has only nice things to say about Heche, who landed this role after NBC canceled her freshman military series "The Brave" in the spring. Beghe and Heche worked together on the aughts drama "Everwood."

"We get to do a lot of takes and try a lot of different things, and that's a lot of fun with a terrific actor, and she's happy and willing. With her resume, she could be jaded as hell and she just isn't. She's out there really doing her best, so it's fun and inspiring. We're lucky to have her," Beghe said.

NICK WALL/A24 & DIRECTV

Emma Thompson puts work over her rocky marriage to Stanley Tucci in the upcoming drama "The Children Act."

Thompson grapples with limits of the brain and went through the sequence again and again; this is fine, this is fine. And that night, at exactly the same time in the dance sequence, I froze.

"It was the first time in my life that I realized the power of the brain. That neural sequence — the run that I had been on for eight shows a week for however many months — it had been interrupted. And the trauma of it was such that my brain repeated it again, three times over actually. It was fascinating.

"But it was also really frightening! No one would describe this as a trauma except someone who was a dancer or an actor — it's a theatrical little "t" trauma. But you can't do anything about it. You can't! Because it's not rational. Your brain simply switches off. My brain stopped working, really. It was just a lot of swearing and 'Oh my God, it's happening again.'

"So the way I got through it was, I had a dancer in the wings whisper to me, 'Step ball change.' So I slowly built — the pattern that I'd learned, I had to build it up again. It was like a computer, it just completely wiped the circuit and I had to rebuild the circuit. Isn't that interesting?

"That's the sort of thing that happens to actors all the time, and it can throw you off completely actually, that form of repetitive stage fright."

Did she figure out a trick to prevent that from happening again?

"Yeah, I decided to stop doing theater! That really helped. (Laughs)

"I don't think I was on stage again until I was 30 and Ken (Branagh) and I did 'King Lear' and 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' on tour.

The takeaway ...

"I suppose I thought to myself, there's no point in panicking. Just be calm. Try and be calm.

"The next time I got that sort of stage moment was when I was doing 'Sweeney Todd' in New York (in 2015) playing Mrs. Lovett, and one night — it's a very complicated score and we were on stage with the New York Philharmonic, with Bryn Terfel as Sweeney. So this was not small stuff. Huge potatoes. Massive deal.

"And some of the songs are so difficult and I just got confused in one of the songs, which is called 'By the Sea,' and there's a lot of repetition in it — and of course, the same kind of thing was occurring in my mind: 'Oh my God, I've made a mistake. And I'm going to make the same mistake the following night.'

"I didn't actually, and maybe because it was singing rather than dancing."

But as I headed away from the Goodman Monday, suddenly knowing far more about the youth of an artist I've watched for years, I was struck by how those of us with realities we need to escape often make the superior artists, especially when we're finally old enough to realize that there is no escape, absolutely no "rising above." That is the naivety of youth. Cale ran all the way to America, but his parents might as well have been in his suitcase. Happiness, or catharsis, or survival, or whatever is the right word for that inner peace we all hope to obtain before we shuffle off this mortal coil, requires confrontation with your angels and demons, especially if they gave you birth.

You could say Cale has been working his whole life toward this one show, and you could do so without fear of contradiction. I suppose anyone who writes or performs in any way eventually gets to their parents (they mess you up, your mum and dad), if they've not been there all along, which they were in the case of Cale, but always hidden.

No more.

Who were these deceased stars of this show? Seemingly ordinary English citizens perched on the edge of working and lower-middle class, residing in a dull, provincial town, children of gloomy post-war austerity, but very much the products of their own dysfunctional parentage, giving rise to one of the central questions of the show, which is the very timely matter of culpability. We're all products of flawed people but we're unfairly expected to be responsible for ourselves, whatever we saw as kids, whatever was done to us. It is a difficult conversation, one we never really seem to have.

In the show, Cale brings back his parents by interweaving his sense of their points of view with his own perspective on his childhood, the times he hung out on the back lawn with his pet tortoise and chicken, just so he could stay away from the screams inside. So you get Cale talking and singing (the songs are by Cale and his musical collaborator, Matthew Dean Marsh, who can be seen in the shadows with a quintet of musicians), then you get Cale talking and singing as his dad, his mum, his grandfather and, not yet near enough, as his younger brother.

When: Through Oct. 21

Where: Goodman Theatre, 170 N. Dearborn St.

Running time: 1 hour, 35 minutes

Tickets: $25-$70 at 312-443-3800 or www.goodmantheatre.org

I won't say exactly what happens to wreck this little family from within, although Cale has talked about it to me and others before. So Google away if you are curious and don't want to see the show.

If you do want to see the show, please know that, despite such chilling parental lines as, "I gave him his fear," there is much of the leavening lightness of just being young. Cale, Falls and Marsh (a find, I think) all clearly have worked hard for "We're Only Alive" not just to be a story of survival but of striving to transcend. And that is accomplished work.

Cale recounts a moment when his romantic, showbiz-loving mother told him how he, one day, would be able to fulfill her potential; we all know that is a perilous path for a parent to walk down, but, in this case, the very telling of that woman's story on a big stage makes it come true. It's a very beautiful moment. If you've lost a parent, you'll feel some envy that you could not do the same for them.

The music — very much a suite of longing — achieves more such vistas. You can hear echoes of this family's love of Miles Davis and Joni Mitchell, a few notes that feel like the mournfulness of Chet Baker, a flavor of "My Funny Valentine," not that anyone did much laughing here in Luton, England. Cale is not a great singer in the usual sense of that term, but his interpretations have not a single false note, not in the way that matters the most. Everything here feels real, which is reason in itself to attend.

One disclaimer here. I'm not so far from Cale's age. I grew up in a grim English town similar to Luton. I had loving parents and no violence in my home, but I share his cultural referents and feel the pulse of his work with a specific intensity. You will have to judge whether that makes me a poor judge of this work's universality.

But, dear reader, I make that claim.

WATCH THIS: WEDNESDAY

James Roday

"A Million Little Things" (9 p.m., ABC): It's easy to describe this new drama as a "Big Chill" for today — and also reasonably accurate. Boston friends are drawn back together by the death of a mutual peer (Ron Livingston, seen in frequent flashbacks), prompting the survivors to take stock of their current lives and decide whether changes are necessary. The ensemble cast also includes James Roday ("Psych"), Christina Ochoa (of last season's "Valor"), David Giuntoli ("Grimm"), Romany Malco and Stephanie Szostak ("Satisfaction").

"Chicago Med" (7 p.m., NBC): Molly Bernard and Colby Lewis join the cast in recurring roles, playing newly arrived medical students, as this hit medical drama returns for Season 4, launching a programming block that finds executive producer Dick Wolf's three Chicago-based dramas airing back-to-back. Series regulars Nick Gehlfuss, Torrey DeVitto, Colin Donnell, Oliver Platt, Rachel DiPillo and S. Epatha Merkerson also return to their familiar roles. .

"Empire" (7 p.m., FOX): Although it's been two bitter years since they lost control of their Empire to Eddie Barker (guest star Forest Whitaker), Cookie and Lucious (Taraji P. Henson, Terrence Howard) still haven't finished picking up the pieces as this musical drama opens its fifth season with "Steal From the Thief." A promising new singer and rapper named Treasure (guest star Kaitlyn Simone) may hold the key to reversing the Lyons family fortunes, however. .

"Star" (8 p.m., FOX): Season 3 of this music drama opens three months after the end of Season 2, as Star (Jude Demorest) returns from tour and the ultimate fates of Alex and Simone (Ryan Destiny, Brittany O'Grady) are resolved. Elsewhere, Carlotta and Cassie (Queen Latifah, Brandy Norwood) continue grappling with the fallout from the latter's huge mistake in the season premiere "Secrets & Lies."

"Big Brother" (8:30 p.m., CBS): Technology has been a recurring theme in this reality competition, but as in previous editions, ultimate success usually depends on a combination of charm, ruthlessness, sex appeal and the ability to lie like a rug without blinking. In tonight's season finale, we find out which Houseguest has been able to exploit those tools to become the last one standing.

"It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia" (9 p.m. FXX): After several female customers file complaints about how they were treated, Paddy's finds itself on a list of watering holes that are sexually hostile to women in a new episode called "Time's Up for the Gang." Charlie Day and Rob McEilhenney star.

TALK SHOWS

"Conan" (10 p.m. 11:30 p.m., TBS): Actor Jeffrey Dean Morgan; actor Jamie Neumann; comic Chad Daniels.*

BROADWAY REVIEW

'Bernhardt/Hamlet' needs more Dane, diva

Lively, weaponized Broadway play loses focus in Act 2

By Chris Jones

JOAN MARCUS PHOTO

Janet McTeer, right, as Sarah Bernhardt and Jason Butler Harner as Edmond Rostand in "Bernhardt/Hamlet" on Broadway by Roundabout Theatre Company and directed by Theresa Rebeck at the American Airlines Theatre.

NEW YORK — One of the most thrilling developments in the American theater is a broader acceptance of women playing the great male roles of dramatic literature. Instead of the same old wizened dudes doing, say, King Lear, Broadway now gets to look forward instead to the incomparable Glenda Jackson, howling through the storms of mortality. To misquote Hamlet, 'tis a repeatable consummation devoutly to be wished.

But Sarah Bernhardt — a whopping international celebrity actress in her day — was already doing the depressed Dane in 1899.

Bernhardt's audacious act on both stage and film — then a work of creative sedition that caused critics and patriarchs to splutter with righteous indignation — is the topic of playwright Theresa Rebeck's lively, weaponized, often confusing and richly caustic new Broadway play, "Bernhardt/Hamlet," now by the Roundabout Theatre Company with the remarkable classical actress Janet McTeer in the leading role.

When the play sticks to the words that reside on the marquee — that would be "Bernhardt-slash-Hamlet" — the work is a fascinating reminder that before any social change becomes mainstream, someone has to be a pioneer, and that someone often twists painfully in a storm until there's enough supportive wind beneath her wings. So it went with the French-born Bernhardt, who leveraged her own singular stardom to make her Hamlet possible, reminding us that the previously empowered often are in the best spot to do seditious stuff. But only if, like Bernhardt, they have enough guts.

One of the play's most interesting theses is that a woman is the only workable solution to one of the central problems faced by anyone playing Hamlet: the apparent contradictions therein, especially the inconsistency of his age. "A young actor, of what, 20, cannot understand the philosophy of Hamlet," Bernhardt argues in the play. "An older actor no longer looks the boy, nor has he the ready heart of the woman who can combine the light carriage of youth with the mature thought of the man."

And thus she makes the excellent argument that only an actress can play all the many sides of the inky Prince of Denmark. It's a super-cool speech.

To make that point, director Moritz von Stuelpnagel's generally uneven production includes a gorgeous rehearsal scene between Bernhardt and her fellow actor, Constant Coquelin (Dylan Baker), here playing Hamlet's ghostly father. It's a clever bit of self-aware theater, pressing home the point that gender was as fluid in the mind of William Shakespeare as mortality and morality, or anything else that he wrote, and that this is the perfect moment to explore all that much further. After all, the boys got to originate all the female parts back in Elizabethan London. You might say it's only fair now to switch the leads.

Rebeck is anxious to paint her heroine not as a saint but a transgressive tigress of a diva as fascinating offstage as Lady Gaga or Beyonce: Bernhardt is a role model to the other cowed women in her orbit (such as Brittany Bradford's Lysette), but she also has an offstage appetite for men, especially of the married variety, and much of the play deals with her affair with playwright Edmond Rostand (Jason Butler Harner), who finds himself drawn to Bernhardt's dressing room even though he has — or maybe because he has — a colic baby at home. He is a mumbling sycophant around the object of his desire, especially when he gets to undress a man and, as he says, "find a woman inside."

McTeer, as you might expect, mostly makes mincemeat of her pliant co-stars, such as the very game Matthew Saldivar's Alphonse Mucha, which is mostly as it should be, given the tenor of the play.

The problem there is that everyone seems so cowed by Bernhardt/McTeer that this works against the main theme of the play, which is the force and rigidity of the establishment that Bernhardt must work against. We get a predictable scene with a snippy regressive critic (Tony Carlin), but he's a paper tiger, not a real equal for Bernhardt to fight against. Pity.

The script also has a way of getting trapped in circles of its own creation: Rebeck, who clearly relishes the chance to fight some current cultural battles at metaphoric remove, seems to be railing against the establishment's anti-feminist conservatism (she has evidence on her side there) and also against the fickle nature of the audience. In other words, Bernhardt is as unhappy with a critical hit as a popular hit, always craving the one she cannot have. Which raises the question for both character and writer: What other kind of success does the theater afford?

In Act 2, we wander off into "Cyrano de Bergerac" (which is not on the marquee), and the initially juicy and rigorous show loses a lot of its initial focus, especially on the matter of how one of the greatest actresses of all time found her way into "Hamlet," albeit initially in French translation, which also causes confusion here. This is a show that cannot quite decide how closely it wanted to stick to history; the production, designed by Beowulf Boritt, never feels visually secure.

That core, surely, lay in letting us see much more of McTeer doing Bernhardt doing Hamlet, and wrestling with all those demands, especially given McTeer's singular facility to meet such a layered challenge. Perhaps everyone was worried that would have limited the play's appeal, rendering it nerdy and overly Shakespearean. Come on, it's only the greatest play, ever. I say it would only have deepened its truths, and it would have freed McTeer in the process.

Bernhardt/Hamlet" is at the American Airlines Theatre, 227 W. 42nd St., New York; www.roundabouttheatre.org

The bidding seemed easy enough, but the final contract was rocky. Two hearts and a diamond or two to lose, not to mention the big hole in the trump suit.

South ducked the opening king of hearts lead and won the queen of hearts continuation, noting the fall of the 10 from East. A spade to the king and a spade to the jack went well, and the ace of spades drew the last trump.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♦	Pass	1♠	Pass
3♠	Pass	4♠	All pass

Opening lead: King of ♥

A heart to the eight and jack was followed by a heart to dummy's nine, leaving this position:

A club finesse, if successful, will make the contract. Can you see anything else? The winning line is to lead the jack of diamonds from the dummy to East's queen and win the club shift with the ace. When another diamond fetches the 10 from West, win the ace of diamonds and take the ruffing finesse against East's king!

What's that you say? You didn't even consider leading the jack of diamonds in this position? Neither did we.

CHICAGO WEATHER CENTER

chicagoweathercenter.com | By Tom Skilling and WGN9

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 26 NORMAL HIGH: 71° NORMAL LOW: 50° RECORD HIGH: 92° (2017) RECORD LOW: 35° (1928)

Temps to cool down Wednesday after storms

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
64	49

■ Canadian-source high pressure drops south into the central plains, setting-up a cool dry northwesterly flow over the Midwest and Chicago area.

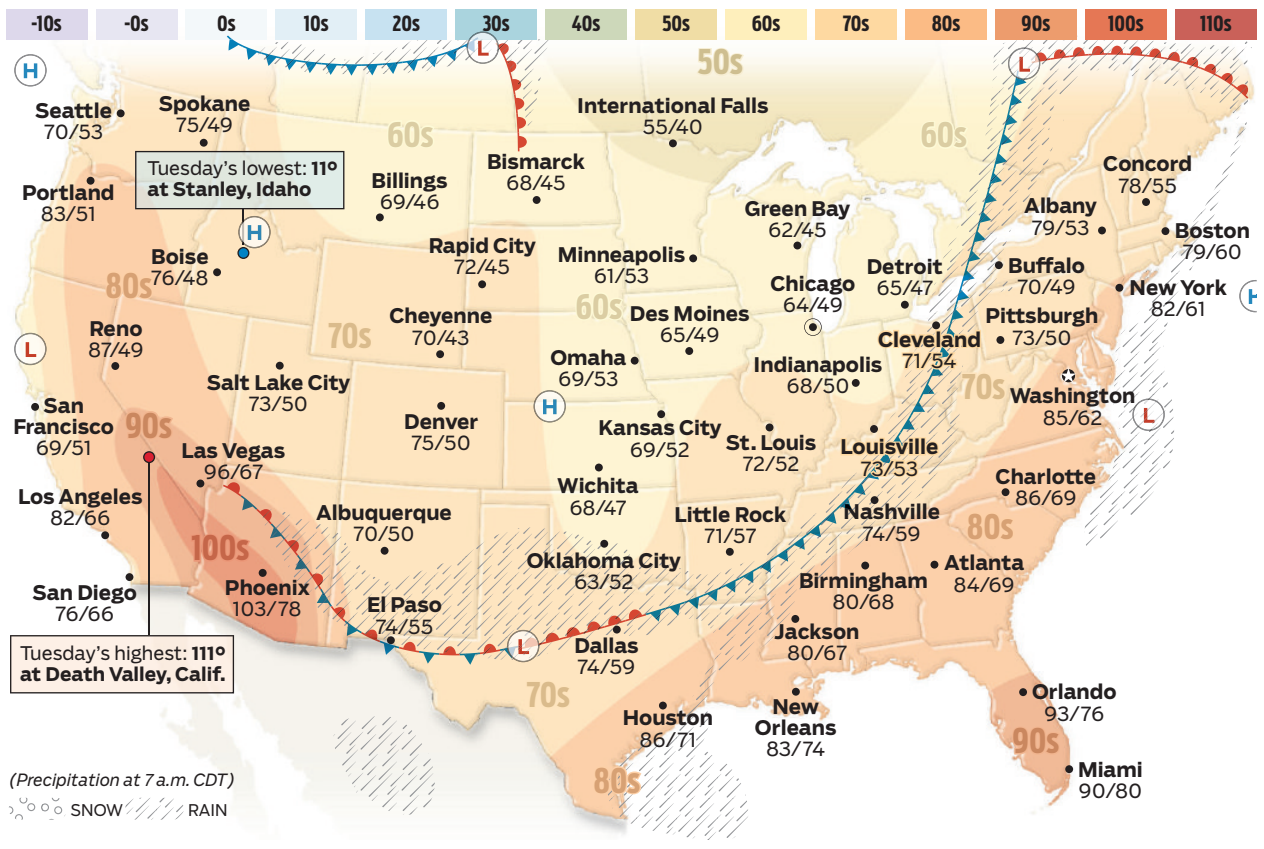
■ Mostly sunny, noticeably cooler and less humid. Temps slowly climb to afternoon highs in the mid 60s, nearly 20-degrees cooler than high temperatures Tuesday afternoon.

■ Northwest winds die off somewhat overnight under clear skies, becoming more west to southwest toward morning.

NATIONAL FORECAST



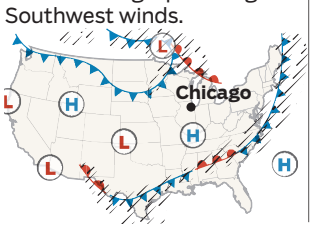
The sun broke out and, combined with southerly winds, temperatures warmed into the 80s much of the area Tuesday afternoon. But as the heating combined with a fast-approaching cold front, towering cumulus clouds quickly built into thunderheads. A severe thunderstorm watch was issued for much of the Chicago area, and severe storms whipped through, producing many reports of winds gusting to 60-70 mph — trees and power lines were downed in a few areas along with brief torrential downpours.

What a difference Wednesday — with drying northwest winds pushing much cooler high pressure into the area. Afternoon highs should top out some 20 degrees cooler than Tuesday. Another cold front Friday will likely pull a cold shot of air that may see readings fail to reach 60 degrees Saturday.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 27

HIGH	LOW
70	50

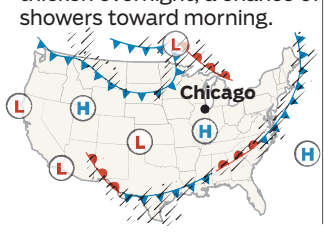
Early sunshine, than an increase in high clouds during the afternoon. Breezy, with seasonable temps. Readings peak in the upper 60s and lower 70s. Clouding-up overnight. Southwest winds.



FRIDAY, SEPT. 28

HIGH	LOW
64	44

Fresh push of cool air arrives. Clouds and a chance of showers early as winds shift NW. Partly sunny in the afternoon with highs in the low to middle 60s. Clouds thicken overnight; a chance of showers toward morning.



SATURDAY, SEPT. 29

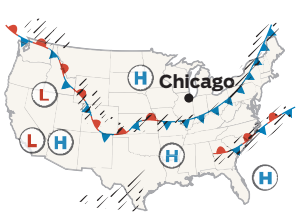
HIGH	LOW
58	46

Considerable cloudiness with a chance of rain early, then peeks of sun emerge. Brisk, and cool with afternoon highs struggling to reach the 60-degree mark. Clouds and a chance of showers at night.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 30

HIGH	LOW
66	54

Mostly cloudy with a chance of showers mainly southern portions. Not quite as cool with highs in the middle 60s. Thickening clouds with rain likely overnight. Easterly winds.



MONDAY, OCT. 1

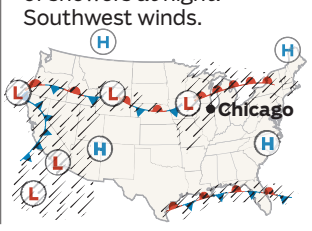
HIGH	LOW
74	59

Cloudy and mild with occasional showers and thunderstorms. Afternoon highs in the low to middle 70s. Clouds and showers overnight. Southwest winds.

TUESDAY, OCT. 2

HIGH	LOW
73	57

Clouds and a a good chance of showers early, becoming partly sunny in the afternoon. High temperatures 70 to 75. Clouding-up again with a slight chance of showers at night. Southwest winds.



ASK TOM

Dear Tom,
What is the highest cloud top ever recorded?
— Brian Gibson, Arden, N.C.

Dear Brian,

It's not precisely known, but in general the higher the cloud top (in the middle latitudes), the more severe the weather associated with the cloud will be. The reference, of course, is to cumulonimbus clouds, the clouds that produce thunderstorms.

In the Chicago area, typical summer thunderstorms develop to heights of 35,000 to 45,000 feet, but the tops of severe thunderstorms that produce large hail, damaging winds and even tornadoes can reach to 60,000 feet or more. The devastating Plainfield tornado of Aug. 28, 1990, developed from a thunderstorm that towered to 65,000 feet. Earth's tallest thunderstorms form in the tropics, where tops have been measured to about 75,000 feet — more than 14 miles into the atmosphere.

Scaling back 'war' on cancer

Less can be more with some new forms of treatment

By Laurie McGinley
The Washington Post

Tom Maguire always figured that if he ever developed cancer, he would pursue the toughest treatment available. "You destroy yourself, and then you can come back," he said.

His view was tested earlier this year when he was diagnosed with bladder cancer that had invaded the muscle wall of the organ. The standard of care, he learned, usually involves removing the bladder. He would have the choice of permanently wearing a bag to collect his urine or having a difficult surgery to fashion a new bladder from his intestines. Both prospects filled the 63-year-old avid hiker and scuba diver with dread.

Then doctors at Philadelphia's Fox Chase Cancer Center told him about a new clinical trial designed to allow people with certain types of tumors to keep their bladders while being closely monitored.

Since getting into the trial a few months ago, "I have been walking on air," he said. "I guess you don't always have to take an all-in, nuclear approach."

For decades, "Big C" diagnoses sent patients and doctors scrambling for the most aggressive weapons to take into battle. The severity of the threat, as well as the limited knowledge of the disease and the pervasive use of military language to describe cancer, justified the blunt-force approach.

"Our focus historically on the 'war on cancer' implied that more is better and decimation is desired," said Justin Bekelman, a radiation oncologist at the University of Pennsylvania.

But today, the "fighting cancer patient" metaphor is falling out of favor, not only because it subtly blames patients who "lose the fight" but also because it doesn't capture a world of new biological insights, improved treatments and molecular tests that are transforming how cancer is treated.

At the root of the change is the recognition that not all cancers are the same: Some need to be bludgeoned, but others can be treated with more tailored therapies or simply watched. Equipped with new tools and evidence, oncologists are "de-escalating" — cutting back on toxic and costly approaches likely to do more harm than good. "Knowing when not to treat is great medicine," Bekelman said.

Yet for many patients, and even some doctors, doing less in the face of danger is emotionally and psychologically difficult. Reshma Jagsi, a radiation oncologist at the University of Michigan, said she sees women every day who look for the most aggressive treatment for breast cancer, even if it isn't needed. "They say, 'I need to be there for my kids, my students, my fill-in-the-blank,' " she said.

Increasingly, however, strong evidence for deescalation is spurring cultural and medical practice shifts. A landmark clinical trial published in June found that more than two-thirds of women with early stage breast cancer can safely avoid chemotherapy. Men with early stage, low-risk prostate cancer are rapidly embracing "active surveillance" over surgery — and avoiding possible complications such as incontinence and sexual dysfunction. And throat cancer caused by human papillomavirus, doctors now know, is different from other types of the disease, allowing a cutback in a brutal treatment regimen and reducing the risk of potentially devastating disfigurement.

In lung cancer, immunotherapy, which is usually less toxic than chemotherapy, has emerged as a first-line treatment for many patients. And people with advanced kidney cancer can skip surgery to have their kidneys removed and instead go right to drug treatment, a recent study showed.

The de-escalation trend hasn't spread to all diagnoses. The most common form of thyroid cancer, which poses little risk, is often still treated with unnecessary surgery, experts say. And some malignancies, such as pancreatic cancer, are so lethal that doctors are racing to find ways to ramp up treatment. A recent study found that certain patients who got a cocktail of four drugs lived longer than those on a single medication.

Selecting the right patients for less-intensive therapies is critical. A prostate cancer patient with a mutation of the BRCA gene — an indication that the cancer will probably grow and spread more quickly — needs treatment, not monitoring, experts say. Finding more biological indications, or "biomarkers," that predict a tumor's course or how it is likely to respond to specific treatments is crucial for guiding targeted treatments.

"It's a precision oncology story,"said Norman "Ned" Sharpless, the director of the National Cancer Institute. "Some people will benefit from chemotherapy, and some won't." As more molecular tests come online, he said, they will be increasingly helpful in sorting cancers and patients into the right groups.

But even proponents of de-escalation acknowledge it can be a challenging change for physicians who have been trained that more intense treatment is preferable. "Better safe than sorry is a paradigm," said Elizabeth Plimack, a Fox Chase oncologist who is involved in the bladder-cancer trial that Maguire is enrolled in.

That's why biomarkers are so important to help guide therapy decisions and build acceptance for them. In 2015, Plimack and her colleagues discovered that certain genetic mutations in bladder-cancer tumors predict that chemotherapy will wipe out the cancer and make it unlikely to recur. These biomarkers, which occur in only a minority of patients, suggest that treatment can be based partly on patients' individual risks of recurrence, said Daniel Geynisman, the Fox Chase oncologist leading the bladder-cancer trial. "One approach doesn't fit everybody," he said. The way medicine is currently practiced, "we are clearly overtreating a lot of patients, and we are probably undertreating some patients."

About 81,000 people in the U.S. are expected to be diagnosed with bladder cancer this year, and more than 17,000 will die. Many of the cases are cancers in the lining of the bladder that have not invaded the muscle wall; the tumors are removed, repeatedly if necessary. But cancer that has grown into the muscle wall of the bladder is considered invasive, with the potential to spread to other organs, making the disease much harder to treat.

In most of those cases, the current standard of care involves extensive surgery to remove the bladder and prostate in men, and the bladder and uterus in women. The Fox Chase oncologists decided to test an alternative approach that would allow certain patients to keep their bladders. To be eligible, patients must have no sign of cancer after receiving chemotherapy, and their tumors must have at least one out of four biomarkers suggesting the cancer is unlikely to return. Those patients skip bladder-removal surgery and instead have frequent tests and scans to monitor for a recurrence. If the cancer comes back, the patients can have their bladders removed.

Geynisman said the trial results won't be available for two or three more years. "The real question is: Does this work?" he said. "It's not helpful if in six or 12 months, the patients have recurrent cancer in the bladder" or worse — cancer that has spread to other parts of the body.

Other trials using biomarkers to try to preserve bladders are getting underway at other medical centers, Geynisman noted. If the new techniques work, and are confirmed in larger trials, it will change the traditional standard of care, he said. "And that," he added, "will be a major de-escalation."

Real progress for transgender children

Pediatricians push for understanding, unconditional love

Heidi Stevens
Balancing Act

Overshadowed by the cloud of lousy news last week was a ray of hope for transgender kids and the people who love them.

On Monday, the American Academy of Pediatrics announced its first-ever policy statement for parents and clinicians caring for transgender and gender-diverse children and adolescents. The statement, which is now available online, will be published in the October issue of Pediatrics.

"In its dedication to the health of all children, the American Academy of Pediatrics strives to improve health care access and eliminate disparities for children and teenagers who identify as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender or questioning (LGBTQ) of their sexual or gender identity," the statement reads. "Despite some advances in public awareness and legal protections, youth who identify as LGBTQ continue to face disparities that stem from multiple sources, including inequitable laws and policies, societal discrimination, and a lack of access to quality health care, including mental health care. Such challenges are often more intense for youth who do not conform to social expectations and norms regarding gender."

The American Academy of Pediatrics announced its first policy statement for parents and clinicians caring for transgender and gender-diverse children and adolescents.

The AAP recommends a "gender-affirming" approach that calls for the following:

- Access to family-based therapy and support for parents, caregivers and siblings of youths who identify as transgender.
- Electronic health records, billing systems and other notifications that respect the asserted gender identity of each patient.
- Insurance plans that offer coverage specific to the needs of youths who identify as transgender, including coverage for medical, psychological and, when appropriate, surgical interventions.
- Advocacy by pediatricians for policies that promote acceptance of all children without fear of harassment, exclusion or bullying because of gender expression.

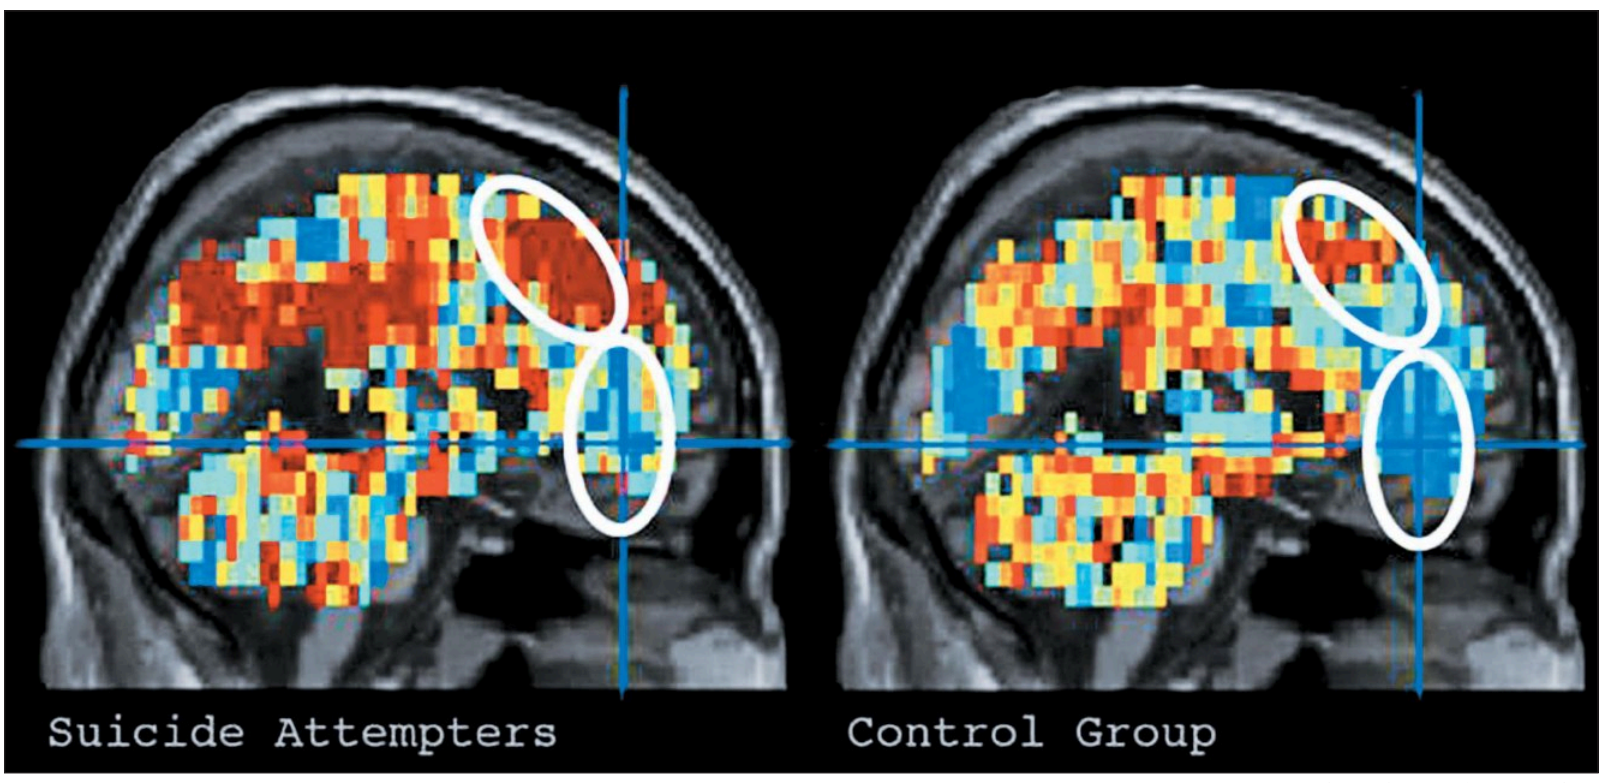
Can brain scans predict suicide risk?

Researchers hope fMRI can be added tool in prevention

By Aneri Pattani
The Philadelphia Inquirer



CARNEGIE MELLON UNIVERSITY

The brain scan related to the word "death" in participants who had made a suicide attempt shows greater activation in areas associated with thoughts of self than the scan for control participants, suggesting they associate death with themselves more than the typical person would, researchers say.

PHILADELPHIA — Therapists working with people at risk for suicide rely on the patient's words to determine how serious they might be. They can't look inside the patient's mind to know for sure. Researchers in Pittsburgh are hoping to change that.

With the help of a $3.8 million grant from the National Institute of Mental Health, they will analyze the differences in brain scans of suicidal and non-suicidal young adults to detect those most at risk and develop personalized therapies. The ultimate goal is to use brain imaging to predict who will attempt suicide, researchers said.

"We've shown retroactively we can tell who has made an attempt," said Marcel Just, a professor of psychology at Carnegie Mellon University, who is conducting the research with David Brent, endowed chair in suicide studies at the University of Pittsburgh. "But it would be enormously valuable if we can tell who's going to make an attempt. That could actually save lives."

Suicide rates have been rising across the country, and it is the second leading cause of death among college students. By identifying levels of risk, "you may be able to give people at higher risk more intensive treatment," Brent said.

The government grant will be used to advance Just and Brent's previous research, published in Nature Human Behavior in 2017.

In that study, two groups of young adults — one with suicidal tendencies and one without — were asked to think about a series of words while they underwent fMRI (functional MRI) scans. Participants were given words associated with death, as well as some that represented positive concepts, such as "carefree," or negative concepts like "trouble."

> "Just as you'd videotape a golf swing and see what's wrong with it, you would look at the brain scan and see what's wrong with the thought."
> — Marcel Just, professor of psychology at Carnegie Mellon University

The differences in the brain activity were distinct enough that a computer could determine with more than 90 percent accuracy whether a participant had suicidal tendencies or not based on the scans alone. It could also distinguish between a participant who had made a suicide attempt and one who had only thought about it.

The findings suggest that a disorder changes the way concepts are represented in the brain, Just said. And those changes are meaningful.

For example, when thinking about death, people with suicidal thoughts showed greater brain activity in areas associated with thoughts and emotions about oneself. That suggests they associate death with themselves more than the average person would, Just said.

The study also found that people with suicidal thoughts experience different emotions when they think about certain concepts. For instance, when asked to think about death, people with suicidal tendencies showed more brain activity associated with shame than others.

Researchers hope this information could eventually lead to personalized treatment strategies for suicidal patients. "Just as you'd videotape a golf swing and see what's wrong with it, you would look at the brain scan and see what's wrong with the thought," Just said. Based on that, therapy might focus on changing the association between death and shame.

This idea will be put to the test in the new study, set to begin in September. It will involve 450 participants, split into three groups: those with suicidal tendencies, those with a psychiatric disorder but who are not thinking of suicide and a healthy control group. Each participant will have their brain scanned at the beginning of the study and after a three-month window during which therapy will be given. Researchers will analyze differences between the two to see whether therapy changes patients' neural representations of the concepts.

They will also follow up with patients over time. If any attempt suicide, researchers will analyze their scans to see whether they were predictive.

"It could give us a window into the suicidal mind that we don't have now," Brent said.

Currently, patients are evaluated for suicidal risk through a psychiatric interview, said Maria Oquendo, chairman of the department of psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania's Perelman School of Medicine. It takes into account the patient's present and past thoughts of suicide, as well as family history of mental illness.

But oftentimes, people won't reveal they're having suicidal thoughts because they've already decided to act, she said. In those cases, having a medical test would be helpful.

"But I don't imagine that after five years, we're really going to be able to do it," said Oquendo, who is not associated with the study.

Developing a precise test involves time and repeated studies. Even if it works in a population, a test has to be very sensitive to provide useful information on any one individual, Oquendo said.

Beyond that, there are issues of practicality, as fMRI machines are costly and not everyone has access to them.

Just and Brent acknowledge this study is only the first step, but they hope to continue building on it. Just plans to see whether the same information as a brain scan can be identified through an EEG — a test that detects electrical activity in the brain using small, metal discs attached to the scalp. It costs a fraction of the price and is more widely available than an fMRI.

It's an important goal to strive toward, Oquendo said. "We need to do something to stem the loss of life."

struggle to understand and may not see eye to eye, your most important role is to offer understanding, respect and unconditional love for your child," Jason Rafferty, lead author of the policy statement, told me. "This builds trust and puts you in a better position to help them through difficult times. Research has shown that if a transgender teen has even just one supportive person in their life they can go to, it greatly reduces their risk of suicide."

Population-based surveys estimate that 0.7 percent of teens ages 13 to 17 identify as transgender, according to the AAP. Studies indicate roughly 50 percent of teens who identify as transgender have attempted suicide.

I talked to Rafferty, a Rhode Island-based pediatrician and child psychologist, about the policy statement, which strikes me as much-needed guidance for parents, and a sign of real progress toward a more inclusive world for all of our children to inherit.

"There is increasing recognition that gender and sexual development is a normal process for all children starting at an early age, and that some children will exhibit variations, similar to all areas of human health and behavior," Rafferty said. "Having a vocabulary around gender and sexual diversity facilitates conversations with parents, families and providers, allowing children to label some of their complicated feelings that otherwise may have been suppressed or hidden."

I asked if he expects pushback from pediatricians about the policy statement.

"No," he replied. "The messages of this policy statement are very much in line with the core principles of pediatrics, including the importance of using a nonjudgmental, family-based, developmentally appropriate approach. It emphasizes that transgender and gender-diverse children — like all children — need support, love and care from family, school and society. When supported and loved as they grow and develop, kids mature into happy and healthy adults."

Some parents will have an easier time accepting gender differences than others, of course.

"Some transgender youth expect immediate acceptance, but often family members proceed through a process of becoming more comfortable and understanding of the youth's gender," Rafferty said. "The process often resembles the stages of grieving as it may require letting go of strongly held expectations for their child."

Pediatricians can help, Rafferty said, by promoting open dialogue and perspective-taking between young people and their parents.

"Gender-affirmative care," he said, "is based on the belief that all children benefit from love and support — a principle that is almost always a place where providers can meet parents to start a discussion."

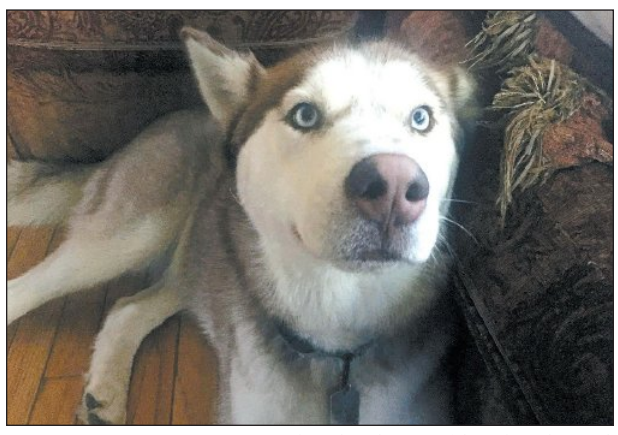
My blue-eyed muse has a husky voice, heart of gold

Chris Erskine
The Middle Ages



CHRIS ERSKINE/LOS ANGELES TIMES

My muse most days is an 80-pound dog that might be a wolf that might be an angel. She follows me from room to room because once a day I walk her to the park, and to her mind, that is the most exquisite gesture a man can ever make.

To her mind, we are going steady.

I call her White Fang — not quite a wolf, not fully a dog, as in the Jack London book. As I said, she follows me from room to room, from chair to chair, from moment to moment. When I write — reluctantly and with great effort — she curls at my feet, as if willing me on.

She doesn't inspire me. It's better than that. I think she loves me, though it's hard to tell with dogs. Their default emotion is to worship you a little. But is that true love or mere adulation? I don't need a groupie; I need a dog that leaves me alone once in a while.

For the first time in memory, there are mosquitoes in California. Not sure what to make of that. It used to be too expensive for mosquitoes to live here, and while I don't detect any drop in the cost of liquor or housing, they have moved in anyway. There's one playing in my left ear right now.

What do bugs see in the human ear? A cave? A drive-through? A cool place to take a nap? In my case, all three.

Our daughter Rapunzel brought home a jigsaw puzzle the other day, another oddball move in this strangest of summers. It's a little early for a giant jigsaw; our younger daughter usually goes into puzzle mode around the holidays, then it becomes a form of winter hibernation for her — a comfort and a late-night obsession, like Kimmel is for me.

She lives with us again, you know, this daughter with the chestnut mane that clogs the sinks and ultimately entangles the sewerage system of our little village near the mountains.

We can't get rid of Rapunzel, no matter the little pranks we play, my fondness for old Bucky Pizzarelli albums and the way her brother and I insist on throwing the football in the house.

We can't get rid of her, no matter the weird stuff I nosh, my goofy interpretation of current events and the fact that, since her older brother died in March, there are now four of us sharing a single bathroom because nobody wants to use "the other bathroom," which was mostly her late brother's.

Here's the holdup: His whiskers are still in the sink from his last shave, and no one really has the nerve to rinse them — and him — away for good.

See? Warned you it was a very weird summer.

But we will move on soon. White Fang has promised to help me clean out his bath and bedroom — I talked to her the other morning.

I said, "Baby, we've got to clean out his room; we need that stupid sink."

White Fang agreed, of course, as she agrees to everything I suggest. With cornflower blue eyes, she sees things my way most of the time, more so than Posh, more so than my beloved buddy Bittner, even more so than my high-end attorney Billable Bob.

And I don't even have to pay her.

The young husky sees things my way, but she is still so confused. For six months, when not at my feet, she has waited out in the front yard for my older son — her former master — to come home.

She has waited right at the curb, in perfect position to spot his little gray Civic come 'round the bend and into the driveway, the way it always did in the past. Because she knows Christopher would never leave her, not ever.

She's confused yet hopeful, as she waits for him patiently by the curb. And for us, a lasting and loving embodiment of our dear son.

A new option for needle-averse kids — a nasal spray flu vaccine — has pros and cons.

5 things to know about your children's flu vaccine

By Vikki Ortiz
Chicago Tribune

As flu season approaches, with varying vaccine recommendations for children, what's a parent to do?

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention gave the green light to the nasal spray version of the flu vaccine, a departure from the last two years, when it cautioned against it. But while that might be a relief to parents of needle-averse kids, the American Academy of Pediatrics this month recommended the injection as the primary vaccine choice.

1. Who should get it?

Everyone 6 months and older should get a flu vaccine annually for the prevention and treatment of influenza in children, according to the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The overall vaccine effectiveness of the 2017-18 flu vaccine against both influenza A and B viruses was estimated to be 40 percent, meaning it reduced a person's overall risk of having to see a doctor for flu-related symptoms by 40 percent, according to the CDC.

2. Which vaccine is best?

In recent years, the nasal spray had not appeared to work as well against H1N1, a strain of the flu, according to the CDC. But it's expected to be more effective this year. Still, the American Academy of Pediatrics reasons that it's better to use the flu shot, which is inactivated influenza vaccine, because the effectiveness of the mist — live attenuated influenza vaccine — "is unknown for this upcoming season." In a policy statement this month, the AAP did acknowledge that although the injection is the best choice, the nasal spray is an option for children who refuse shots.

3. The case for spray

Beyond the less intimidating delivery of the mist, some Chicago-area pediatricians like the nonshot option for children 2 and older because of the immunity it creates almost instantly in the nasal passage. The live attenuated influenza in the mist causes the body to create a localized inflammatory response in your nose, according to Dr. Erik Johnson, a pediatrician and vice president of medical affairs for the Pediatric Service Line at Amita Health.

4. The case for injection

Despite this benefit, many pediatricians' offices will likely carry only flu shots this year, for several reasons: The injection is less expensive, and many large health care organizations completed contracts to purchase flu vaccine before the CDC recommendations.

With children, the flu mist can also be a gamble. "Sometimes, we would get it up one nostril but not the other because the child wouldn't let us," Johnson said.

5. What if my child is allergic to eggs?

All children with egg allergies of any severity can receive an influenza vaccine without any additional precautions beyond those recommended for all vaccines.

Patients with compromised immune systems may not be good candidates for the flu vaccine, so check with your doctor if your child has underlying chronic medical conditions. Children who have a minor cold, in which the nasal passage is not completely blocked with mucous, may still get the flu mist or the shot.

Quercetin supplements may ease nasal allergies

By Joe Graedon and Teresa Graedon
King Features Syndicate

ALICIA FABBRE/NAPERVILLE SUN

Quercetin is a flavonoid compound that is found in many plants and foods, including onions.

Q: You've written about NasalCrom for allergies, and I ordered it with high hopes. I have glaucoma and wanted to get off Nasacort, although it is working beautifully for my nose. I also take Xyzal or Zyrtec daily. Sad to say, despite using it two or three times a day for three months, NasalCrom did not seem to do anything for my allergies.

I did stumble across a supplement that seems to help — quercetin. I would be verging on breakthrough sneezing and found the symptoms settle down within 20 minutes of taking quercetin. Imagine my surprise when I checked the reviews and read that it helped others quite a bit with allergies also.

A: Thank you so much for alerting us to this approach to managing allergy symptoms. Quercetin is a flavonoid compound that is found in many different plants. Onions, kale and apples are particularly good sources of quercetin in the diet. Capers, berries, Brassica vegetables like broccoli or cabbage, grapes and tomatoes are other foods that contain quercetin (Nutrients, March 15, 2016). Even tea has a small amount.

When we checked the medical literature, we were quite surprised to find research showing that quercetin is more effective than cromolyn in blocking the inflammatory compounds released by mast cells (PLOS One, March 28, 2017). These studies were conducted in tissue cultures, and quercetin might not be as effective when it is taken as a dietary supplement. However, research in rats suggests that it may ease allergic rhinitis, aka hay fever (European Archives of Oto-Rhino-Laryngology, August 2017). We'd love to see a clinical trial in humans, but they are expensive and therefore unlikely.

Q: I read your article about preventing leg cramps with a bar of soap under your bottom sheet. I am a cyclist and often suffer from leg cramps in bed.

I would like to know the specifics of the possible soap solution. Do you just slide a new bar of soap under your bottom sheet? Does it matter what type of soap?

A: What we hear from readers is that a wide range of soaps will work for this remedy. To try it, unwrap a bar of soap. We think some sort of scent in the soap is essential for this remedy to work. Place the bar under your bottom sheet near where your legs will rest. When it stops working, either replace it or score the surface to help it continue to release scent.

Limonene is a common component of some of the oils that are used to provide fragrance in soap. Studies show that it has "spasmolytic" activity — inhibiting muscle spasms — though this has been demonstrated mostly in smooth muscle like the airways and blood vessels of experimental animals (Natural Product Communications, November 2015). We suspect that people vary somewhat in their response, as many readers report benefit, but some say soap does not help them.

Q: Recently I learned that I have hypothyroidism. I am looking forward to taking Synthroid, hoping it will relieve my constant fatigue, dry skin, hair loss and constipation. The doctor is starting me on a very low dose of levothyroxine. What can you tell me about how and when to take it?

A: The most important guideline for taking levothyroxine (Levothroid, Levoxyl, Synthroid) is to take it the same way every day. Some people take it before bed, having eaten at least two hours earlier. But even taking the pill in the morning a half-hour before breakfast can work if you do that consistently.

Study links Trump votes to 'deaths of despair' rates

Fatalities may mark dissatisfaction that aided GOP in 2016

By Dennis Thompson
HealthDay

U.S. voters' despair over poor health and premature deaths might have tipped the 2016 presidential election in Donald Trump's favor, a new analysis argues.

Counties that voted Republican more heavily had a 15 percent higher age-adjusted death rate than counties that voted heavily Democratic, researchers found.

In particular, counties that shifted toward Trump had much larger increases in "deaths of despair," said lead researcher Dr. Lee Goldman, dean of health sciences and medicine at Columbia University and chief executive of Columbia University Medical Center in New York City.

People in counties with Republican gains were 2.5 times more likely to die from alcohol, drugs or suicide than counties with Democratic gains.

"Death rates may be an important marker of the dissatisfaction, discouragement, hopelessness and fear of cultural displacement that contributed to President Trump's appeal, especially to the nonurban white working class," Goldman said.

He and his colleagues analyzed changes in presidential voting from 2008 to 2016, using election data from 3,112 U.S. counties. They then compared voting patterns to changes in the death rate for each county.

Swing voters and voter turnout drove election results in 2016, the researchers said.

Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton received 65.9 million votes compared with 63 million votes for Trump. (Trump won the Electoral College with 304 votes versus 227 for Clinton.)

But Clinton received 3.6 million fewer votes than President Barack Obama got in the 2008 election. By comparison, Trump outperformed 2008 Republican candidate John McCain by 3 million votes, even though he gained only 0.3 percent more of the popular vote overall due to more voters casting ballots for third-party candidates.

The new analysis revealed that "higher age-adjusted death rates correlated with a county shifting its votes between 2008 and 2016 from the Democratic Party to the Republican Party," Goldman said.

While the researchers only found an association, they argued that the death rate effect is strong enough that it could have swung the 2016 election to Trump by influencing the vote in several key states.

The three key swing states with the smallest victory margins for Trump were Michigan (0.22 percent), Pennsylvania (0.72 percent) and Wisconsin (0.76 percent). In those states, death rate differences associated with a net Republican vote increase of 1 percent were smaller than average.

"If you do the arithmetic, it suggests that relatively modest improvements in longevity could have had an effect on the three key states," Goldman said.

SARA D. DAVIS/GETTY

Researchers say the counties that boosted Donald Trump in 2016 had higher death rates from drugs, alcohol and suicide.

"People in the counties that shifted to President Trump died from pretty much everything more often."

— Dr. Lee Goldman, lead researcher

Deaths related to alcohol, drugs and suicide only account for 5 percent of deaths in counties where Republicans made voting gains, he noted.

"People in the counties that shifted to President Trump died from pretty much everything more often," Goldman said.

However, he suspects that these "deaths of despair" could promote more anguish and have a more lasting effect within a community.

For example, someone dying at age 35 from a drug overdose "probably has a bigger impact in terms of how bad people think things are" than someone dying at 75 instead of 77 from heart disease, Goldman said.

This jibes with another recent study that found counties with higher rates of prescription painkiller use voted heavily in favor of Trump.

On average, Trump got about 60 percent of the vote in counties with the greatest use of prescription opioids like Vicodin and OxyContin, researchers reported in JAMA Network Open in June.

Counties where Trump increased the Republican percentage of the presidential vote tended to be on average older, whiter, poorer and less educated than those in which Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton increased the Democratic percentage of the vote, Goldman and his colleagues found.

Dr. Ira Nash is senior vice president and executive director of Northwell Health in New Hyde Park, N.Y. He said it is "quite ironic that, assuming the findings of this paper are valid, the population most in need of improved access to social services and health care voted more heavily for the party committed to curtailing both." Nash was not involved with the study.

Goldman said he's not sure what is driving the higher death rates in Republican-leaning counties.

"We can't tell whether they are living less healthy lives or whether they have less access to some aspects of modern health care," Goldman said. "If you're living in a rural area, you're also further from hospitals. You may not get angioplasty for your heart attack."

Steven Peterson, a professor emeritus of politics at Penn State Harrisburg, said Trump's status as a political renegade likely offered these voters an alternative to a crushing status quo.

"If you collectively look at that population, I think they felt double-crossed by both Republicans and Democrats," Peterson said. "Here was someone who was speaking pretty clearly at them."

The new study was published online in September in the Journal of General Internal Medicine.

In our family, coffee and sweet treats go together like chocolate and peanut butter. Of course, we all enjoy coffee without sweets, but rarely the other way around. We criticize fancy restaurants that bring dessert but don't offer coffee until afterward.

Hot coffee proves the perfect beverage to counter sweet flavors and lubricate cakey textures and flaky-crusted pies. It soothes the chill of frosty ice cream concoctions and cuts the sweetness of candy bars.

Coffee goes into the rub for these lamb chops in the form of espresso powder mixed into ground chile, sesame seeds, dried onion and spices. Try a cooling cucumber dish on the side.

My mom baked a homemade sweet nearly every day when the five children lived at home. She served the dessert right after dinner with percolator-hot coffee with a splash of cold milk. Family vacations always entailed midafternoon Konditorei (pastry shop) breaks — complete with indulgent pastries and specialty coffees. Today, the "Konditorei" almost always sits next to the electric coffee maker in my parents' kitchen.

REVIEW: Dutch and Doc's ★★

Tasty snacks and creative entrees — game day or not

By Phil Vettel
Chicago Tribune

When I heard that the Boka Group was joining the list of Chicago restaurateurs opening in Wrigleyville's Hotel Zachary — home to a half-dozen restaurants — I assumed that Dutch and Doc's, with chef Chris Pandel in charge, would be a carbon copy of sister restaurant Swift & Sons, a steakhouse also headed by Pandel.

I was wrong. Probably a good thing too.

A pure steakhouse might have been a tough sell in this nachos-and-sliders neighborhood. Instead, Dutch and Doc's opened in late May as a neighborhood bar and grill, albeit one with a considerable number of refinements.

For people drawn to this neighborhood in the first place, Dutch and Doc's offers incomparable views. The street-level and upstairs dining rooms directly overlook Wrigley Field's iconic marquee, a postcard-worthy vista. With a visual like that, the interior doesn't need to beat the sports-theme drum very hard, and it doesn't.

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The pork chop at Dutch and Doc's has changed recently. Currently it's being served with grilled peaches, peach vinaigrette and polenta.

The main dining room, spacious and attractive, groups marble table tops (regular and bar-height) and thickly cushioned seats around a central bar. Picture windows open completely to let in warm breezes and crowd noise. Light-blue tiles (not the deep Cubs blue, which would have been obnoxious) and cream and green woodwork make it cozy; exposed mechanicals and industrial lights add an urban-chic feel.

Framed photos of old-time baseball players line the hall leading to the restrooms. Look closely, and you'll notice that two of the photos are of Boka principals Kevin Boehm and Rob Katz, in throwback (I mean, way back) uniforms.

Though there are plenty of TV screens, it would be wrong to characterize Dutch and Doc's as a sports bar. For example, though the Bears-Seahawks game dominated the screens one visit, the play-by-play was silenced in favor of pop music playing over the speakers. For another, when the Cubs-Diamondbacks game started 90 minutes later, not a single screen switched over. No true sports bar would make that mistake.

(I imagine the muted play-by-play policy will be adjusted for the — knock wood — Cubs playoff games.)

Pandel's menu offers light bites, sandwiches and shareable snacks, bolstered by chef-y entrees and, of course, steaks. One could divide the menu into pregame and postgame food. In fact, I shall.

Pregame dining: I can't believe I'm saying this, but don't miss the chicken wings. Pandel isn't doing some reimagined treatment here. These are straight-up Buffalo-style wings, served with the requisite celery stalks and an excellent blue-cheese dip. The flavors are note-perfect. Standard on the lunch menu, the wings aren't on the dinner menu but lurk on the separate bar menu. Wherever Sticky pork ribs are made with a pho-inspired rub of pepper, cardamom, chilies, star anise and cilantro, as well as a thick soy-based glaze.

you're seated, you have but to ask.

More messy eating comes by way of the "sticky pork ribs," given a pho-inspired rub (pepper, cardamom, chilies, star anise, cilantro), a thick soy-based glaze and stacked like firewood on a small plate. Deviled eggs are interesting, because the standard, piped-in yolk filling is augmented with bacon fat and apple-cider vinaigrette, topped with crispy potato bits and crumbled bacon.

For absent-minded munching, the corn fritters are seasoned with housemade, Tajin-style spice blend (chile, lime, salt) and served with a complementary chile-lime crema, while nuggets of crispy rock shrimp are doused in a chile glaze with a little cilantro. These are the sort of pop-in-your-mouth munchies that are gone before you know it.

Of course there's a burger, a double patty with American cheese and Thousand Island-ish dressing. (An Impossible burger is available.) You might want to try, instead, the steak sandwich, made with rib-eye, Gruyere and horseradish aioli on an Aya Bakery demi-baguette.

Postgame (and, by extension, nongame) dining: Dutch and Doc's has a nice range of adult eating, including a quartet of pasta dishes — the pappardelle with beef-pork sugo, pecorino and torn basil with a porcini-inflected pomodoro sauce is a keeper.

There are steaks, of course, sourced from the same supplier used by Swift & Sons, Pandel says. But except for the 22-ounce rib-eye (a $60 indulgence), the other cuts are smaller (12-ounce strip, 10-ounce skirt steak, 8-ounce filet) and less expensive. A closely trimmed, full-flavored New York strip at $39 ain't half bad. Steaks include salad or fries, which is thoughtful. (The fries are terrific.)

As good as the steaks are, I'd point you to the pork chop, served sliced over wilted greens. My version was pink and juicy, topped with a bright-red agrodolce, a mix of pickled onions and cherries that worked very well. This prep has since been changed — now it's grilled peaches and peach vinaigrette on top, Spence Farm polenta beneath. I suspect I'd like that just as well.

Mussels are fine, served in a white-wine broth with Dijon cream and a hint of chile. Fried chicken — two pounded boneless breasts with pimento cheese and peppery poppy seed slaw — was a bit of a snore but has been replaced by a roasted chicken with mashed potatoes.

Lauren Terrill oversees the desserts, as she does at Swift & Sons. I very much liked her warm peach crisp, served nice and hot under a blanket of oat crumble. Time is running out on this summer's peach crop, but I suspect this dessert will become an apple crisp, to reflect the season change. There's also a perfectly textured, wedge-shaped tres leches cake; and vanilla or orange-vanilla soft serve.

On nongame days (or evenings after day games), Dutch and Doc's offers valet parking at the Hotel Zachary entrance. On game days, that stretch of Clark Street is closed at least two hours before game time, and you'll hunt for parking like everyone else.

Papa Doble extends summer

By Lisa Futterman
Chicago Tribune

C|LOUISE PUBLIC RELATIONS

Last summer, I declared my "summer of daiquiris" — I ordered them everywhere I went. Their quality ranged widely, from sweet rum lemonades, to tart limey slushes, and everything in between. Few gave me pause — most were just delightfully refreshing and quaffable.

Recently, I stopped into Ina Mae's Tavern in Wicker Park and ordered the Papa Doble. My expectations were already completely out of whack, as the Pioneer Tavern Group's latest joint replaces my favorite local, the Beachwood Tavern, which closed in 2015. I've been drumming my fingers ever since, waiting for a new corner bar serving strong cocktails nearby.

The pale green drink, served up, boasts ghostly chips of ice floating on top. Refreshing with grapefruit and lime, there's an additional splash of maraschino liqueur that you can't quite taste but that adds just the right amount of sweetness to balance the drink. Beverage director Joe Guinta "split bases" the rums, using part Cruzan white rum and part rhum agricole for its grassy funk. I felt like Hemingway in Cuba. Guinta's goal? To "dust off vintage drinks" that may have been forgotten. Seems noble, so order another and declare it the season of Papa.

Superb avocado toast for $8.50

By Louisa Chu
Chicago Tribune

LOUISA CHU/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

By the time you see this, just about everything will have changed. The season will have shifted. Apocryphal warnings about the millennial avocado toast crisis may have come to pass. The public may finally be free of the scourge of avocado hand.

Whatever the details, the green garlic and avocado open-faced sandwich by Bobby Schaffer at Lost Larson, the bakery and cafe he opened this summer in Andersonville, will remain a destination dish.

And it's only $8.50.

Schaffer mills rye flour to bake house-made sourdough limpa bread. "Limpa is a traditional Swedish bread that has some orange peel, fennel seed and anise seed," he said.

The bread is sliced to order, spread with cultured Wisconsin butter then toasted in a pan.

He adds green garlic preserves to the avocado with herbs, creating a spread.

"We go to the Andersonville farmers market once or twice a week," said Schaffer. "We pickle cucumbers. The beets are shaved raw, but then they're also roasted. We do a heavy char on some of the carrots, then shave some of them raw as well.

"There's Chinese broccoli, nasturtium, borage flowers, sunflower shoots, pea shoots, radish and tatsoi too."

The result is an experience that so captured summer in all its lush and wild abundance, I was confronted with nothing less than the fleeting essence of time itself.

Lost Larson is open Wednesdays to Sundays, and the sandwiches are only available after 11 a.m. 5318 N. Clark St., 773-944-0587, www.lostlarson.com

To learn about wine, know back story

Michael Austin
The Pour Man

ARNO IMAGES

To paraphrase a saying in the wine world, particularly in the segment focused on teaching and learning, "the best way to learn about wine is to drink it." Recently, at a back porch dinner involving a hot grill and two arms full of wine, a friend who is well-versed in the ways of wine reiterated this saying, as if it were new information. "You know, I think the best way to learn about wine is to drink as much as you can."

"Yes, and Canada shares a border with the United States," I teased.

My friend's concept of drinking to learn is about as basic as it gets — it is the same advice I have offered to countless people. But the more I reflected on his statement, the more I realized that the "best way" to learn about wine also requires context.

Drinking wine is surely the "best way" if it is the only way available — if you're on a deserted island and a really nice wine delivery gets lowered to you from a helicopter once a week. You're going to figure out which wines you like better than others and which of them taste best with the food available to you on that island. You'll also know which of them make you want to dance as if no one's watching (even if no one possibly could be) and which of them you'll drink only if you're sitting next to the island's freshwater stream, so you can chase every sip with a cupped hand of water.

Similarly, "the best way to know more about movies is to watch as many movies as you can." Set a film novice down in front of a few Fellini and Bergman movies. The images and sounds of the movies will speak for themselves, and that novice might appreciate or enjoy parts or even all of the movies. But with a little context explaining what the directors were attempting to do in those movies, the novice's understanding will certainly increase. And with an increased understanding usually comes greater enjoyment.

Drinking is not the only way to learn about wine. We have other sources of information at our service, pretty much around the clock, to help put what we have drunk into context, and all of it contributes to the joy of the lifelong wine journey. Anyone can smell, taste and feel what a wine has to offer, but until that person has a good grip on some of the back story of wine, she will not be able to fully enjoy it, no matter how much she drinks. In my experience, knowledge and enjoyment have risen in direct proportion to one another.

Drinking is not the only way to learn about wine.

The back story of wine includes how the wine itself is made, how grape-growing affects the final wine, and how climate and other natural conditions affect grape-growing. We all have our limits on how much we want to know — about anything, let alone wine — and our preferences on how we want to receive the information.

You could spend your whole life never cracking the binding of a wine book and know all you need to know. On the other end of the spectrum, you could devote huge eras of your life memorizing minutiae, either for a professional goal or just because you are the kind of person who wants to retain facts. But you can never truly know wine just by reading about it. If you relied on Cliffs Notes in college, you might opt for wine movies or TV shows instead of books for your nontasting learning. You might prefer to ask questions of the people filling your glasses in restaurants or educators walking you through the regions of the world in a classroom setting, complete with samples.

The point is, no one does it alone or in any one way. Mere facts do not result in the joy of learning and eureka moments — sometimes it's fun to just have a conversation with a like-minded person about a topic you are both interested in, and isn't it convenient that said topic happens to be a most efficient social lubricant?

Even in those moments when you don't consider that you could be learning something about wine, you probably are. And then one day, when you call on that knowledge, it's there. As if it had somehow sneaked in, undetected, in the middle of the night. Getting to that point is where all the fun is — whether it's reading about vine-training systems, sitting through classes on the wines of the Rhone Valley or sitting on a porch with friends and just ... drinking wine.

CRAVING: COFFEE

At 38 and counting, Chicago businesses help one another

By Nick Kindelsperger
Chicago Tribune

CHRIS WALKER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Xavier Alexander, part owner of Metric Coffee on the West Side, pours a batch of green, organic Peruvian beans into the company's first roaster.

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Diarmuid Horan, left, and Vova Kagan stamp coffee bags and fill them with roasted beans last week at Sputnik Coffee Co. in the Back of the Yards neighborhood. A cup of coffee is only $1 at the shop.

You can't grow coffee beans in Chicago (we are far too north of the equator), but that doesn't mean you can't roast the beans here, as an increasing number of local roasters prove.

Earlier this month, I decided to try to figure out exactly how many there were in Chicago. I imagined it would take me a few hours of searching and I'd wrap up the study with a tidy group of a dozen or so. After all, while there are a lot of coffee shops, there can't be that many places actually roasting the beans, right? A few weeks later, my list had more than tripled, and I keep finding places hiding in plain sight. (There's a lot of great suburban coffee out there, but that's for another time.)

This led me to one question: Are there too many local coffee roasters?

"I think it's a good thing," says Aaron Campos, the director of coffee and roasting operations at Dark Matter Coffee. "There is plenty of room in Chicago." Campos says that local roasters love to lend advice to new companies. In fact, when Dark Matter was getting started, Mike Pilkington from Bridgeport Coffee helped teach Dark Matter some of the basics.

Xavier Alexander, co-owner and director of coffee at Metric Coffee, agrees: "We are all on the same team. Another great coffee roaster only strengthens our message, because there's enough for everyone. Bad coffee is the true enemy."

Bad coffee, according to many in Chicago's coffee scene, is coffee that is stale and bitter. It's usually pre-ground and roasted far away. It's what used to line the shelves of Chicago-area grocery stores.

Of course, there have always been exceptions. Stewart's Coffee has been roasting beans in the city since 1913. The Coffee & Tea Exchange has been in business since 1975. Greg Stivers of Stivers Coffee has been roasting coffee since 1985 in a facility near Chinatown.

But the one company that probably did more to kick-start Chicago's new coffee scene was Intelligentsia Coffee and Tea, which was founded in 1995. In 2003, the company pioneered the direct trade model of sourcing coffee, which many other roasters in Chicago have adopted.

"Usually, you're going to purchase coffee beans through an importer," says Campos of Dark Matter. "But for us, we really wanted to travel and understand coffee sourcing. We did that off our own dime, and it helped us work directly with farmers." That kind of relationship allows Dark Matter to work with the farmers to come up with different techniques of processing raw coffee beans.

Working directly with farmers definitely costs more, but there are serious benefits, according to Alexander at Metric. "We pay higher premiums to the producers," says Alexander, "but we think it will create a sustainable business." In fact, he shows me a message that he received earlier that morning from a farmer in South America. "We are always messaging back and forth."

Tim Taylor, a founding partner at Ipsento Coffee, believes that paying coffee farmers is crucial right now. "The commodity price of coffee is the lowest it's ever been," says Taylor. He worries that coffee farmers will have to abandon their farms because they aren't making enough money. "But if we can pay producers directly a fair price, we get great coffee and ensure they stay in the business," says Taylor.

For Branden Marty, coffee can also help create opportunities for people in need here at home. He's a partner at Veteran Roasters, which employs homeless and at-risk veterans. "This can provide them with an opportunity to fill their resume and have a chance to continue in the coffee industry," says Marty. "I want to help them stabilize their life." Veteran Roasters partnered with Passion House Coffee Roasters for the project. "We use their roasters, and they help us source the beans," says Marty. "But the veterans do the actual roasting for our blend."

While researching, I encountered a number of large roasting facilities on the West Side. But another increasingly popular option in Chicago is the very small coffee roaster. These are often nothing more than a cafe with a coffee roaster hanging out in the back.

That's the setup at Sputnik Roasters (2057 W. 51st St.), which opened over the summer in the Back of the Yards neighborhood. Co-founder Vova Kagan says he got into making coffee while working at a health care startup, mostly because the coffee offered to employees was so bad. "I was drinking tea, because all they had were those Keurig K-Cups," says Kagan. "So we bought some really great coffee. Unfortunately, everyone (in the office) would drink the coffee but not pay. So I had to figure out how to get great coffee for cheaper."

After experimenting with roasting at home and selling bags to friends, he eventually launched Sputnik with his brother Greesha Kagan, along with Michael Roytman and Diarmuid Horan. Kagan is still focused on keeping the price reasonable. "I think Chicago has a need for a more affordable coffee," says Kagan. The shop keeps costs down by only making one blend and by staying away from single-origin coffee. "There are a lot of awesome coffee roasters in Chicago," says Kagan. "Hopefully, our coffee gives people the flexibility to drink great coffee all week."

Indeed, these days it's easier than ever to drink great coffee all the time in Chicago. Here are 38 local coffee roasters to help get you started.

Abacus Coffee Roasters: Founder Brian Frain is a veteran of the scene, having worked at Intelligentsia and Bow Truss. Coffee from his latest venture can be purchased online or at The Dill Pickle Food Co-op. abacuscoffee.com

Allegro Coffee Roasters: Whole Foods' house brand has a roasting facility inside its massive Lakeview location. allegrocoffee.com

Asado Coffee: Asado roasts in its tiny Lakeview shop. When it opened in 2009, it was one of the first cafes to dedicate serious resources to pour-over coffee. asadocoffee.com

Back of the Yards Coffee Co.: After selling cold brew at various farmers markets, Mayra Hernandez and Jesse Iniguez launched this coffee shop and roaster in the Back of the Yards this year. $1 of each bag of coffee sold goes to a scholarship fund for local kids. backoftheyardscoffee.com

Beverly Bakery & Cafe: You can purchase freshly roasted coffee at the South Side cafe or order it online. beverlycoffeeroasters.com

Big Shoulders Coffee: Tim Coonan once worked as the chef de cuisine at Spiaggia, but now he runs this local roaster that has five locations. bigshoulderscoffee.com

Bow Truss Coffee Roasters: At its peak, this troubled roaster and coffee shop chain had 11 locations, but now it's down to just one in the Loop at 190 S. LaSalle St. bowtruss.com

Bridgeport Coffee: Founded in 2004 by Mike Pilkington, Bridgeport Coffee now has four cafes, and its beans are available at a number of Whole Foods locations. bridgeportcoffee.net

Dark Matter Coffee: This respected coffee roaster has five cafe locations, including one inside the United Center. darkmattercoffee.com

Dollop Coffee Co.: Dollop has been serving coffee for years but only recently started roasting its own beans. It now has 11 Chicago cafe locations, plus one in Evanston. dollopcoffee.com

Four Letter Word Coffee: Four Letter Word has two cafes, one that recently opened in Logan Square and another in Istanbul, Turkey. No joke! 4lwcoffee.com

Gaslight Coffee Roasters: Gaslight opened in Logan Square in 2012. All of its coffee is roasted on-site in the back of the shop. gaslightcoffeeroasters.com

Groundswell Coffee Roasters: After launching in Ravenswood in 2015, Groundswell now has three locations and a separate roasting facility. groundswellcoffeeroasters.com

Halfwit Coffee Roasters: Halfwit was created by some folks from Wormhole Coffee, the bustling shop in Wicker Park. The company stresses the seasonality of its coffees. halfwitcoffee.com

Hero Coffee Roasters: Hero currently has six cafe locations, including a gorgeous outlet in an alleyway of the Loop. hero-coffee.com

Ipsento Coffee: Launched in 2006 with a small cafe on Western Avenue in Bucktown, Ipsento now has two locations, including one near The 606 elevated trail. ipsento.com

Jimmy Beans Coffee: Jimmy Petrozzini purchased a coffee roaster from nearby Ipsento and then displayed it prominently in the back of his cafe in Logan Square in 2016. This allows you to watch the coffee being roasted, while enjoying a cup in the cozy shop. jimmybeanscoffee.com

Kusanya Cafe & Roastery: This nonprofit operation offers the Englewood neighborhood a space to meet and some great house-roasted coffee beans. kusanyacafe.org

La Colombe Coffee Roasters: The Philadelphia-based company expanded to Chicago in 2011. It has five local cafes, plus a roasting facility in Logan Square. lacolombe.com

Limitless Coffee & Tea: Limitless opened promising "the cleanest, most pure coffee," a claim that many in the industry dispute. limitlesscoffee.com

Little Foot Coffee Roasters: Created by a collection of Michigan expats, Little Foot roasts out of Metric's facility. The team hopes to eventually move all roasting to Detroit. littlefootcoffee.com

Metric Coffee Co.: According to co-owner Xavier Alexander, the company uses science and technology to make better coffee. It has one cafe location attached to its roasting facility along West Fulton Street. metriccoffee.com

Metropolis Coffee: One of Chicago's biggest local coffee roasters only has one cafe, but provides beans to a number of coffee shops around the city. metropoliscoffee.com

Mojo Coffee Roasters: Mojo Coffee is based in New Zealand, but all of the coffee for the Chicago location is roasted locally. us.mojo.coffee

Passion House Coffee Roasters: Passion House roasts its beans in a facility on West Fulton Street. It also has one cafe in Logan Square. passionhousecoffee.com

Printer's Row Coffee Co.: This Lincoln Park shop, which roasts all of its beans on-site, focuses on single-origin coffees. printersrowcoffeeco.com

Red Beard Coffee Traders: Named for Steve Sims' impressive facial hair, Red Beard roasts in its Bucktown coffee shop. shopthebeard.com

Sparrow Coffee: Sparrow coffee can be found at a number of well-known restaurants, including Chicago Cut and Salero. The company, which roasts on West Fulton Street in Chicago, just opened its first cafe in Naperville. sparrowcoffee.com

Sputnik Coffee Co.: This Back of the Yards roaster is focused on keeping its coffee affordably priced. At the shop, you can pick up a cup of coffee for $1. sputnikcoffeecompany.com

Stewarts Coffee: Chicago's oldest coffee roaster has been in business since 1913. It's probably best known for selling its coffee in distinctive metal cans. You can purchase Stewarts at select local grocery stores and on the company's website. stewarts.com

Stivers Coffee: Greg Stivers has been roasting coffee beans since 1985 in a facility near Chinatown. He roasts for a number of local outlets, but you can also purchase some of his own brand on his company's website. stiverscoffee.biz

Taste of Colombia: The Portage Park shop offers a selection of single-origin coffees, not all of which are from Colombia. toccoffeeroaster.com

CRAVING: COFFEE

Pull up a chair here — and travel beyond Illinois

By Steve Zimmerman
Chicago Tribune

Drinking coffee from Chicago is a prideful practice.

And why not? The demand for coffee is big here, some of the country's up-and-coming brewers are based here, and there's a seemingly endless surge in new roasters popping up across the city and suburbs.

Plus, this is Chicago. If it's made here, locals will want it, buy it, defend it and swear allegiance to it.

But sometimes you want to stray off the local track and try something different. Sometimes, you want to try something from an area code you're unfamiliar with.

Enter guest-coffee programs, which have surfaced in recent years at area stores and cafes.

It's not a fourth wave of coffee, by any means, but for coffee drinkers already familiar with local standard bearers like Intelligentsia and Metropolis, it's a chance to explore what's beyond the Illinois border.

"It's how the coffee culture has evolved," said Ken Tsang, director of technology and marketing at Standard Market in the western suburbs. "It's akin to wine and beer. People are willing to learn about a product, and we want to give people options. It fits our matrix."

Standard Market sells more than three dozen varieties from 12 out-of-town roasters as part of its guest-coffee program and has shelves lined with bags from award-winning roasters like Onyx (Springdale, Ark.), Heart (Portland, Ore.,) and Methodical (Greenville, S.C.), as well as regional standouts Madcap (Grand Rapids, Mich.) and Ruby (Nelsonville, Wis.). Counter Culture (Durham, N.C.) is the primary coffee offered at the in-store cafe, with Chicago-based Intelligentsia, Metropolis and Dark Matter also available.

"We're sort of remote ambassadors of these brands," said Tsang, a coffee enthusiast who grew up in Portland, Ore.

Building a guest-coffee program

Standard Market, an artisan grocer with two locations in the western suburbs, made having a robust guest-coffee program a signature element in its stores.

When Standard Market's Westmont location opened seven years ago, it dedicated an aisle to high-end local and nationally recognized coffees. Within a few months, a kiosk was built to showcase the program. When a second store opened in Naperville a few years later, a full-scale cafe was a must.

"It was a hard sell when we didn't have a coffee bar," Tsang said. "We had to appeal to a broader audience."

Both locations brew three out-of-town roasts daily using two methods — two by pour-over, one by AeroPress. A standard drip is also offered. Rotations last about a week and are culled to provide contrasting flavors, regions and intensities.

Because it's a small retailer, buyers can move quickly to satisfy supply and demand and acquire coffees within days of roasting. Freshness is key. Unlike mass-produced commodity coffees, the shelf life to maintain the integrity of specialty roasts is a month or less.

"A lot of people come in for our coffee. I find that very flattering," said Troy Hoertman, a 23-year-old barista at Standard Market. "I have a lot of specific customers that come in for specific pour-overs."

Hoertman was drawn to the retailer because of the guest program and the opportunity to work with roasting experts at Counter Culture's training lab on Chicago's Near West Side.

"I was very, very excited about the program," he said. "I think we've had a lot of people discover coffee they're not accustomed to and found new favorites."

Fairgrounds Coffee & Tea offers a flight of three 8-ounce servings of the coffees it brews to order for $13.

New ways to experience coffee

While there are local shops that feature guest roasts on a rotating basis, some go to great lengths to expose customers to new coffees.

Fairgrounds Coffee and Tea, which has opened two locations in Chicago since 2016, features a guest-coffee concept as part of its core business model. Stumptown (Portland, Ore.), Frothing Monkey (Nashville, Tenn.), Verve (Santa Cruz, Calif.) and Colectivo (Milwaukee) dominate the menu and are all brewed to order. A "Taste One Taste All" motto is boldly painted on the walls of the Bucktown cafe.

Fairgrounds even offers flights of three 8-ounce servings with the coffees chosen by the customer.

"We like to feature roasters who are doing innovative things in the industry," said Fairgrounds' Director of Operations Chris Zelis. "Our guests love the variety."

Wormhole Coffee has Halfwit coffee as its signature partner but has included a rotating guest coffee program for five years.

"We get a lot of samples from all over the states, and many of us who work here have connections with other roasters," said Emma Steiber, manager at Wormhole. "Our guest coffee varies based on the season."

At Purple Llama in Wicker Park, the guest coffee experience is fused with music. Half record store, half coffee shop, it offers a monthly subscription service by mail that pairs albums with bags of whole beans. Past subscription roasters include Sump (St. Louis), Sey (Brooklyn, N.Y.), Color (Eagle, Colo.), April Coffee (Copenhagen, Denmark) and The Barn (Berlin), and they are still sold in the store. Most are available as a pour-over.

"It really only takes that one good shot of a fruity, balanced coffee for a person to really have that 'holy (expletive)' moment with specialty coffee," said owner Joel Petrick.

Where to try them

Chicago-area shops featuring a guest-coffee program:

Fairgrounds Coffee & Tea: 1620 N. Milwaukee Ave., 12 S. Michigan Ave. Guest coffees: Colectivo (Milwaukee, Wis.), Frothy Monkey (Nashville, Tenn.), Stumptown (Portland, Ore.), Verve (Santa Cruz, Calif.); brewed to order, whole beans available.

Purple Llama: 2140 W. Division St. Guest coffees: April Coffee (Copenhagen, Denmark), The Barn (Berlin), Color Roasters (Eagle, Colo.), Counter Culture (Durham, N.C.), Sey (Brooklyn), Sump (St. Louis); brewed to order, whole beans available.

Standard Market Coffee Bar: 333 E. Ogden Ave., Westmont; 1508 Aurora Ave., Naperville. Guest coffees: Counter Culture, Dogwood (Minneapolis), Heart Coffee (Portland, Ore.), Kickapoo (Viroqua, Wis.), Madcap (Grand Rapids, Mich.), Methodical (Greensville, S.C.), Onyx (Springdale, Ark.), Ruby (Nelsonville, Wis.), Stumptown; three varieties brewed to order and rotated weekly; whole beans available.

Wormhole Coffee: 1462 N. Milwaukee Ave. Guest coffee: Ozo Coffee (Boulder, Colo.); rotated, whole beans available.

Common Cup: 1501 W. Morse Ave., Counter Culture.

Damn Fine Coffee Bar: 3317 W. Armitage Ave., Equator (San Rafael, Calif.).

DropShot Coffee Bar: 312 W. Chestnut St., Toby's Estate (Brooklyn, N.Y.).

Ellipsis Coffeehouse: 1259 W. Devon, Ave., Counter Culture.

Sip & Savor: 5301 S. Hyde Park Blvd., Colectivo.

The Spoke & Bird: 205 E. 18th St., 1248 W 18th St., Counter Culture.

Werewolf Coffee Bar: 1765 N. Elston Ave., Stumptown.

3 stops for tasty biscuits, eggs, more

Ina Pinkney
Breakfast With Ina

Don't you get tired of eating breakfast out? It's a question I get all the time.

The answer is always the same: No! I never get tired of really good food, prepared by people who care about what they are cooking. There is something heartwarming about that kind of experience.

Here is a second helping of a favorite restaurant and two newcomers that I'm pretty sure will be around for a long time.

Square Biscuits

There are hopes and dreams in this little storefront, open since April, that match perfectly with the delicious and thoughtful food and service.

First, let me assure you that the biscuits are square and really good. It's fitting the place is named for them. They're served as part of a sandwich, with egg dishes or with the traditional gravy — which was perfectly seasoned and not too rich.

Compound butters, such as green matcha and bourbon walnut, as well as Kevin's Bacon, named for chef Kevin Coulter (or the actor?), will dazzle you. Maple-black-pepper and Sriracha honey are just two varieties of bacon on the list.

Since the restaurant serves breakfast and lunch all day, don't overlook the monte croque sandwich, which is made with French toast, ham, melted Gruyere and a sunny-side-up egg.

I went for the soul-satisfying pork-belly hash with Japanese sweet potatoes, shallots, chile sauce and eggs. I really liked the pickled radish on the side.

On Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the restaurant offers three wonderful eggs Benedict preparations. Make-your-own omelets feature fresh and interesting options like baby kale and roasted mushrooms.

It's a delightful new addition to the breakfast scene.

Of note: Patio out back, full service, BYOB, metered street parking, online delivery.

Find it: 4160 N. Lincoln Ave., 773-880-1100.

Hours: 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday to Friday; 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Square Biscuits, a restaurant in Chicago's North Center area, serves dishes such as pork-belly hash.

Ovo Frito Cafe

When I walked into this bright and welcoming cafe — decorated with egg-themed art and light fixtures — I felt right at home. Tables ring the room, with some in the middle, making the space open and quiet. The servers are smiling and attentive.

The menu features Latin-inspired dishes along with traditional American breakfast items. Since I was with my friend Margaret McSweeney, who has a video blog called "Kitchen Chat," I knew we would order a cross-cultural selection.

We began with the Matamoros Omelette with spinach, goat cheese and marinated portobello mushrooms. The potato hash that accompanied it was delicious.

I feel odd admitting this, but the first time I ate corn flake-crusted French toast was in 1977 at Cafe des Artistes owner George Lang's apartment in New York City, and it was made by (cough, cough) James Beard. I loved it then, and I love it still.

The cornflake-crusted French toast here is brioche toast layered with warm blueberry-peach compote, served with creme anglais sauce, powdered sugar and whipped cream. Ah, such sweet memories.

Some smoked chicken patties rounded out our meal, which were worth a return trip.

Of note: Street parking, full service, catering, available after hours for private events, online delivery.

Find it: 1936 Maple Ave., Evanston, 847-859-6966, www.ovofritocafe.com.

Hours: 7 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. daily.

The biscuits at Square Biscuits are served as part of a sandwich, with egg dishes or with the traditional gravy.

Second helping: Mortar and Pestle

What does it take for a chef to alter a menu? Well, if he or she is paying attention to customers' changing tastes and new and different ingredients, it is not courageous; it's just good business.

Mortar and Pestle, still generating excitement since I wrote about it in January 2016, has made changes. First, to the tables and chairs, making the room easier to navigate, but best of all, to the menu: New items are up-to-the minute. Chef Stephen Ross has a balanced palate, which means anything you order will become your new favorite.

The dishes I loved are still here, such as the foie gras and eggs, the biscuits and the decadent grilled cheese, but my new favorite is the breakfast fried rice. Think diced bacon and ham, scallions, arugula and a soy sesame dressing with a fried egg on top. Between you and me, it was just as good the next morning.

Also notable: the mole chilaquiles. I had never had charro beans, but there they were with queso fresco and Chihuahua cheese as well as zingy escabeche (pickled) vegetables. Topped with tomato, cilantro and two fried eggs, this dish sent me on vacation.

Start with a mimosa made with apple cider, and end with a latte; it's the perfect start to the day.

Find it: 3108 N. Broadway, 773-857-2087, mortarandpestlechicago.com.

Hours: 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily. Closed Tuesday.

a banana. On the weekends, I crave that combination in a decadent muffin format. Think of all the specialty flavors of the local coffeehouse crammed into one handheld sweet — chocolate, toasted pecans, cinnamon, vanilla, cream — with a coffee backdrop thanks to espresso powder.

Espresso powder deserves a place in the pantry. I add a little to nearly every chocolate dessert I make — not necessarily to add coffee flavor, but to enrich the chocolatey-ness. Iced coffee and banana smoothies likewise benefit from the coffee boost. It's useful in savory applications too. For example, a spoonful in a pot of chili somehow deepens the chile pepper flavor. Mole sauces like the dark bitterness, as does a pot of rich beef stew.

Serviceable Italian brands of espresso powder can be found in most large supermarkets. My favorite espresso powder can be ordered online from thespicehouse.com. It has a rich, velvety, deeply coffee flavor. You can use instant coffee powders instead, but choose a dark roast. .

To ease my conscience a tad, I use whole grain flour when making breakfast muffins. But no fear, these muffins won't taste like health food if you choose white whole wheat flour. Made from a variety of wheat that has a milder, less nutty flavor than regular whole wheat flour, white whole wheat flour has all the goodness without the heaviness. It is my preference when baking sweets. It and is available from Gold Medal and King Arthur Flour in the supermarket aisle or online. I keep it in the freezer to prolong its shelf life.

If you like cinnamon in your coffee, boost the muffins with the addition of cinnamon chips. Otherwise omit them and add more chocolate or peanut butter chips. White chocolate chips or small chunks taste great here too.

My sister makes a quadruple batch of buttery shortbread logs, dunked in dark chocolate and pecans, for the holidays. To my mind, adding some coffee flavor notes makes them the perfect everyday cookie to enjoy with a cup of joe.

When you love coffee, it often makes sense to put some of those dark flavors into the main course. Espresso with chili powder combines two dark, bitter flavors into a sum that tastes better than the parts. I love a chile-forward version with plenty of sugar on pork ribs and brisket. For lamb chops or duck breast, I use a less sweet version enhanced with ancho chile and a bit of ginger and sesame. To cool the effect, a side dish of creamy cucumbers does the trick. (For the recipe, go online to chicagotribune.com/food.)

Prep: 20 minutes Cook: 25 minutes Makes: 12 muffins

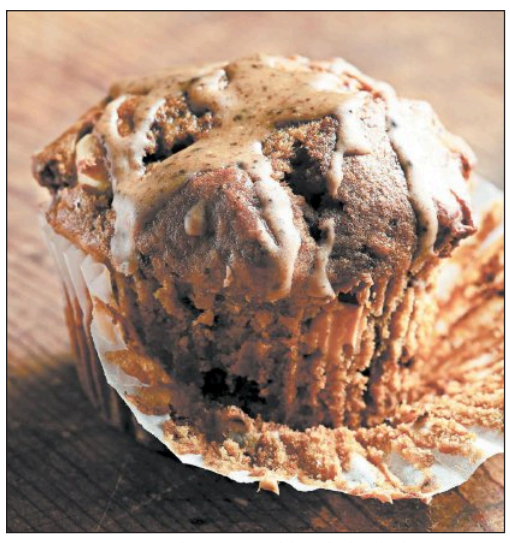
These are delicious served warm. Or when cool, wrap them in foil and place in a sealed plastic bag for up to 2 days. They freeze well too.

- 2 cups stone-ground, white whole wheat flour
- 3 tablespoons espresso powder
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- ¾ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon each: baking soda, cinnamon (optional)
- 2 large ripe bananas, peeled
- 2 large eggs
- ⅔ cup packed light brown sugar
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 6 tablespoons safflower or sunflower oil
- ½ cup chopped toasted pecans
- ½ cup semisweet or dark chocolate chips
- ½ cup cinnamon chips, peanut butter chips, white chocolate chips or more chocolate chips
- Espresso glaze, recipe follows



E. JASON WAMBSGANS/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

1 Heat oven to 350 degrees. Line 12 regular muffin tins with paper liners. Alternatively, line the tins with foil liners and spray the liners with nonstick spray.

2 Mix flour, espresso powder, baking powder, salt, baking soda and cinnamon in a medium bowl.

3 Put bananas in a separate bowl. Mash smooth with a potato masher or fork. Stir in eggs until smooth. Stir in sugar and vanilla. Stir in oil. Add flour mixture, and fold gently to moisten all the flour. Gently mix in pecans, chocolate chips and cinnamon chips, if using. (Do not overmix or muffins will be tough.)

4 Use a spoon to divide the mixture among the muffin tins filling them to the top. Tap the pan on the work surface to release any air pockets. Bake, turning pan once for even browning, until a wooden pick inserted comes out clean, 22 to 24 minutes. Cool in the pans. Glaze when barely warm. Best served the day baked.

Espresso cinnamon glaze: Mix ½ cup powdered sugar, 2 teaspoons espresso powder, ½ teaspoon cinnamon and 1 tablespoon half-and-half (or milk or cream) in a small bowl. Mix until smooth, adding a few drops of half-and-half if needed to make a pourable glaze.

Nutrition information per muffin (with the glaze): 323 calories, 15 g fat, 3 g saturated fat, 31 mg cholesterol, 46 g carbohydrates, 27 g sugar, 6 g protein, 312 mg sodium, 4 g fiber

Prep: 30 minutes Chill: 1 hour Bake: 13 minutes
Makes: 28 cookies

To gild the lily, drizzle these with a little melted white chocolate after the dark chocolate is set.

Dough:
- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- ½ cup (1 stick) unsalted butter, at room temperature
- ¼ cup sifted powdered sugar
- 2 to 3 tablespoons espresso powder, to taste
- ½ teaspoon vanilla
- Pinch salt

Glaze:
- 1 cup semisweet chocolate chips
- 1 teaspoon espresso powder

1 Put all dough ingredients into the large bowl of an electric mixer. Mix on low speed until a smooth dough forms. Gather into a ball; wrap in plastic. Refrigerate until firm, at least 1 hour or overnight.

2 Heat oven to 350 degrees. Line 2 baking sheets with parchment paper.

3 Pinch off a small nugget of the dough and roll in your hands to make a 2-inch log about ½-inch in diameter. Place on a prepared baking sheet. Repeat to form all the cookies, placing them on the sheets about 2 inches apart.

4 Bake until the bottoms are barely golden, 10 to 13 minutes. Cool completely on wire racks.

5 For the glaze, put chocolate in a small microwave-safe bowl. Microwave on medium (50 percent power) just until barely melted, 1 to 1 ½ minutes. Stir in espresso powder until smooth.

6 Dunk one end of each shortbread log into the melted chocolate. Set dunked cookies on a wire rack over a piece of paper toweling, and let the chocolate firm. (They can be refrigerated if the kitchen is warm.) Store in a cookie tin for up to a week.

Nutrition information per cookie: 62 calories, 4 g fat, 2 g saturated fat, 7 mg cholesterol, 7 g carbohydrates, 3 g sugar, 1 g protein, 6 mg sodium, 0 g fiber

Prep: 5 minutes Stand: 30 minutes Cook: 8 minutes
Makes: 3 servings

- 6 loin lamb chops, each about 1 to 1 ¼ inches thick, total 1 ¾ pounds
- 3 tablespoons ancho espresso rub, see recipe
- Creamy cucumbers and chives

1 Pat lamb chops dry and place on a broiler pan or a shallow baking sheet with sides. Press some of the rub into all sides of the chops. Let stand, 30 minutes. Or refrigerate up to 1 day.

2 Position the rack 6 inches from the heat source; heat the broiler. Broil the lamb chops, 4 minutes. Flip the chops; continue broiling until meat feels nearly firm when pressed (medium-rare), 2 to 4 minutes more. Serve. Transfer chops to a serving platter. Serve with a side of the cucumbers.

Nutrition information per serving: 444 calories, 29 g fat, 12 g saturated fat, 147 mg cholesterol, 4 g carbohydrates, 1 g sugar, 40 g protein, 887 mg sodium, 1 g fiber

Ancho espresso rub

If ancho chile powder is unavailable, you can substitute chili powder, but omit the cumin.

In a bowl, mix together ¼ cup pure ancho chile powder; 2 tablespoons sesame seeds;
1 tablespoon each espresso powder and dried minced onion; 2 teaspoons each salt and sugar; ¼ teaspoon each ground ginger and garlic powder; and ⅛ teaspoon ground cumin. Store in a jar with a tight-fitting lid. Makes: about ½ cup

CRAVING: COFFEE

Where to sip pretty, glittery latte art

You need coffee. You can do your daily caffeine routine in the sleep from which you've barely emerged, whether it's fumbling for a preset cup at home or shuffling along the line at Dunkin'. But when you can actually take a break, be it brunch or a post-project reward, where are the special coffee drinks in Chicago?

In a town where people still wait hours to Instagram their Au Cheval cheeseburger, and the Alinea bacon trapeze ranks as a culinary classic, it's surprising that so few craft coffeehouses make pretty, much less glittery, coffee art. After tasting every single sparkly cup currently in the city, I can tell you, they're (mostly) downright delightful. And maybe counterintuitively, they're often a sign of some serious coffee.

While the latte art of hearts and tulips remains highly regarded, some coffee professionals are diving deeper beneath the surface, considering the whole drink as a canvas for culinary creation. Yet it's still a relative rarity. Among dozens of craft coffee shops in Chicago, only four shops are going beyond classic latte art.

The practice landed here big after restaurateur Brendan Sodikoff and his Hogsalt Hospitality team met Hiroshi Sawada, the award-winning latte artist, at his Streamer Coffee Co. in Tokyo. Together they opened Sawada Coffee in Fulton Market in 2015 with the trademarked Military Latte. It's made by mixing vegetal green matcha powder and house-made vanilla syrup, feathering steamed milk in the house style and finishing with a Metropolis Coffee espresso shot plus cocoa powder on top. The Black Camo latte uses a stark black hojicha roasted green tea powder instead. You can also find both beautifully balanced drinks at Sawada Matcha in River North, which opened in February.

Goddess and the Baker partners chef Debbie Sharpe and Tamar Mizrahi introduced a limited edition rainbow latte for Pride month in 2017, which they brought back this June, but I missed it. "We try to keep the rainbow lattes special," said Mizrahi. "We don't want it to turn mundane."

She's also puzzled as to why the pretty latte trend has largely skipped Chicago so far, unlike Amsterdam; Berlin; Tel Aviv, Israel; and Melbourne, Australia, Sharpe's hometown.

A late-summer Liquid Gold latte is currently on the Goddess menu, made with the ingredient of the Instagram moment: edible glitter.

A Mumbai location of Coffee by Di Bella, an Australian roaster, launched the glitter trend with photos of its sparkly gold-and-diamond cappuccino posted in July 2017 and going viral in November. While glitter has yet to dust Starbucks' pumpkin spice lattes, Costa Coffee in the U.K. added "shimmer" as an option for Christmas last year. Coca-Cola bought Costa for $5.1 billion in August, so you may see shimmery coffee on your commute soon.

The gold Goddess drink starts with Monin brand vanilla syrup and gold glitter, then a double shot of Metric Coffee espresso and your steamed milk of choice.

For Halloween, expect a charcoal latte with red decoration on the black, and a pumpkin maple latte with pumpkin art this fall at both Goddess locations in the Loop.

Limitless Coffee makes two shimmery drinks, but the garish food-coloring heart on the charcoal latte packaged mix (Copper Cup red latte) that's the base for the Beet Rose, to my palate, proves that all that glitters is not necessarily delicious.

The epicenter of pretty and glittery lattes in Chicago is, without a doubt, Werewolf Coffee. DMK restaurant group partners David Morton and Michael Kornick opened their first foray into coffee with a converted bread truck parked inside a loft space in the North Branch Industrial Corridor in April 2017. But the colorful craft coffee drinks are the creation of one woman, general manager and barista Lindsey Reason.

Reason first made a charcoal latte a month after Werewolf opened, following trends worldwide, with food-grade activated charcoal powder. But she makes all her own syrups. The jet black drink is sweetened subtly with house-made honey lavender syrup, jolted with espresso and crowned with steamed milk.

Last August she created an eclipse latte to mark the solar event by adding turmeric, with white milk foam ringed dramatically by gold and black.

This February, Reason revealed her first edible-glitter drink with the Sweetbeet latte. The stunning drink starts with a syrup of beet powder, pink peppercorns, honey and vanilla bean. Glitter plus artfully poured steamed milk, a fruity Passion House espresso shot, and dried rosebuds and rose petals finish it. While edible, the flowers serve as an aromatic garnish, like an orange twist on a cocktail.

"My biggest inspiration in creating these drinks is that I do want to create a full experience," said Reason. "Just like when you go into a restaurant and have an amazing meal. It's not just the food you're eating, but how it's plated and presented, then how it tastes."

She now adds rainbow glitter to the charcoal latte, for a mesmerizing galactic effect.

Reason is also inspired by other art forms, including the distinctive visual style in the films of Wes Anderson. This was the summer of "The Life Aquatic With Steve Zissou," with a drink called The Zissou: cream and espresso shaken with a syrup of lemon, mint and white peppercorns.

This fall, look for an ode to "The Royal Tenenbaums," with The Margot, named for the character played by Gwyneth Paltrow and her poignant butterscotch sundae. A butterscotch latte with liquid smoke-laced syrup will be topped with a candy cigarette and a smoked cherry stuffed with nuts. The Royal will improbably evoke burgers, with a tomato and plum jam base, espresso, frozen bruleed whipped cream and sesame seeds.

You might find fellow customers and girlfriends Natalie Ayala and Syrena Sanchez back photographing their drinks at Werewolf, but they're ahead of the trend. "We actually went to Puerto Rico not too long ago," said Ayala, while sipping her Sweetbeet latte. "That's where we first tried glitter lattes, and they were really good. It wasn't even a coffee shop; it was a breakfast restaurant in San Juan."
