Javy Baez plays baseball like no one else. Can he save the game?

By Ted Gregory

Major League Baseball, some say, is experiencing an identity crisis.

Revenue is up. Attendance is down.

Data analysis known as sabermetrics has yielded dramatic changes in the game but arguably makes it boring and drives a wedge between new and old fans.

Younger players, with their vast, elaborate tattoos, edgy hairstyles and bat flips, are viewed by their fans as fun self-expressionists. Traditionalists, meanwhile, say all the spectacle insults the game's decorum.

Then there's the Cubs' Javier Baez, a versatile, 25-year-old infielder who is leading the youth movement but also happens to stoke the affections of old-guard fans. Can he save baseball from itself?

"He's actually the perfect player for baseball now," said Jessica Mendoza, ESPN baseball analyst and broadcaster and former gold medal Olympic softball player. She said Baez has the best instincts in baseball.

By some measurements, Baez — who was

Workers' habits at odds with transit agencies

Mary Wisniewski
Getting Around

One of the fastest-growing forms of commuting is not commuting at all.

In the Chicago region, the number of people who said they usually work from home grew by 23 percent between 2013 and 2017, according to the latest estimates from the U.S. Census Bureau. That's a total of 238,137 people who were working from home in 2017, or 5.1 percent of Chicago-area workers.

The trend is also national, with the number of people working from home up 28.3 percent in four years, to almost 8 million in 2017, surpassing the number of workers taking public transit, according to the U.S. Census Bureau's American Community Survey. Driving is still the most common way of getting to work, now followed by working from home, either for yourself or someone else.

The survey asked people to say how they "usually" get to work, meaning those working from home only once or twice a week are not counted. That means the number of people who telecommute at least occasionally is much larger.

The National Equity Fund, a Chicago-based nonprofit, started a telecommuting program four years ago and found that allowing most employees to work from home has "really toned down the stress," said Gaylene Domer, vice president of facilities.

"We've found the work-life balance has been incredibly successful for us," Domer said. "If you're

Confusion reigns over probe's reins

Fight over Kavanaugh intensifies amid disagreement on FBI investigation's limits

By Mike DeBonis
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The White House has not placed any limits on the FBI investigation into claims of sexual assault leveled against Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh but also is opposed to an open-ended "fishing expedition" that could take a broader look at Kavanaugh's credibility, two Trump administration officials said Sunday.

Kavanaugh

The statements, made by press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders and presidential counselor Kellyanne Conway in television interviews, followed reports that federal investigators are pursuing allegations made by two women but not a third, Julie Swetnick, who signed a sworn affidavit accusing Kavanaugh of sexually aggressive behavior and being present at parties where gang rapes occurred.

Trump himself tweeted late Saturday that he wanted the FBI "to interview whoever they deem appropriate, at their discretion."

Sanders said on "Fox News Sunday" that the White House is "not micromanaging this process" but also said an open-ended probe into Swetnick's claims and whether Kavanaugh may have misled lawmakers in his Senate Judiciary Committee testimony would not be acceptable.

Tickets sell fast for Obama book tour

Former first lady drawing crowds for Nov. 13 event

First she preregistered on the website and then she got a text message with her secret code.

On the morning that tickets for former first lady Michelle Obama's book tour went on sale Sept. 20, she logged in early so that she could be one of the first in line to make a purchase.

"I knew it would be crazy, I knew it would be pandemonium," said Sandria Washington, 38, of Woodlawn. "I wanted to be logged on and in the queue.

"I was one of the lucky ones."

Just days after tickets for Obama's Nov. 13 United Center appearance went on sale, fewer than 160 of the most expensive seats were still available, according to the Ticketmaster website. The venue seats about 23,500.

Monique Sowinski, a spokeswoman for Live Nation, said that 10 percent of the tickets have been set aside for charities and schools. But she would not say who in Chicago got those tickets or how they will be distributed.

But minus the set-aside seats, that means that Obama managed to draw about 20,710 people to the kickoff of her book tour — a sign of how much her book and appearance in her hometown are anticipated.

By the standards of usually staid book events, it's a pricey ticket — from $29 in the upper decks to $3,000 right in front — and made

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Crucial question for jurors in Van Dyke trial: Why fire 16 shots?

Dahleen Glanton

No one seemed as frightened of Laquan McDonald the night he was killed as the man in the bulletproof vest.

Not the truck driver who fended McDonald off by throwing his cellphone and a fistful of gravel after confronting the teenager in a parking lot. Not the woman who encountered McDonald in the alley behind her home at 3 a.m. and ended up "laughing and talking" with him.

Not even the nine other police officers who stood by and watched while Officer Jason Van Dyke shot McDonald 16 times.

Only the seasoned law enforcement official with 13 years of experience on the force felt the need to empty his automatic service revolver on a young man holding a knife in his hand as he walked away.

Yes, the 17-year-old was high on drugs. And yes, he was acting erratically, because as a pharmacology expert testified last week for the defense, McDonald was "whacked on this PCP."

Even if McDonald indeed was on a "wild rampage through the city" as defense attorneys contend he was that night in October 2014, he never actually hurt anyone. And at the time of the shooting, Van Dyke had no reason to think that he had.

What Van Dyke knew for sure when he arrived at the scene was that the suspect had continued walking after police ordered him to stop.

The question jurors will face once deliberations begin is why did Van Dyke have to kill him? And why did he have to continue emptying his weapon on the suspect once he had fallen to the ground?

If they find that he reasonably feared for his life and the lives of his fellow officers on the scene, then they must acquit him of first-degree murder. But if they determine he fired for any other reason, he could be found guilty.

What other reason could there be? Why would a veteran police officer arrive at the scene after other officers already were there and start firing at the suspect as soon as he stepped out of his squad car?

Prosecutors think they know the answer.

During opening arguments two weeks ago, special prosecutor Joseph McMahon planted a seed. He hasn't offered any proof to back it up so far in the trial, but his statement was so powerful that it will likely stick with some jurors.

What Van Dyke saw, McMahon said, was "a black boy walking down the street toward a chain-link fence and had the audacity to ignore the police."

Think about that for a moment. It is hard for most of us to fathom that a police officer, sworn to protect each and every one of us, would have such disregard for a human life. In fact, none of us — regardless of where we live — want to believe that a police officer could have that mentality.

But the unfortunate truth is that there are officers in our city and across the country who feel that way about African-Americans, black men in particular. I would never suggest that it applies to every police officer, but we have seen a pattern of blacks needlessly being killed by law enforcement officials.

There is a culture among police officers that we civilians will never fully understand. They have a kind of brotherhood that allows them to seemingly know what the other is thinking and assume that whatever decision a fellow officer makes is the correct one.

And even if it isn't, they will put their own careers on the line to cover up the mistake and clear their fellow officer's name. This brotherhood was on full display in the aftermath of the McDonald shooting.

In this case, Van Dyke very well may have walked upon the scene and quickly surmised there was a threat. The culture that has long existed in the Police Department dictates that the best way to stop a threat is to shoot.

Somebody had to do it that night. Somebody had to step up to the plate and get things under control. Somebody had to stop this defiant suspect.

When Van Dyke starting firing, he intended to stop McDonald even if it meant killing him. With 16 shots, he would ensure that.

That goes against everything police officers are taught in their training. From the beginning, they are taught that the decision to shoot is an important one. And the decision to stop shooting is equally as important.

According to the testimony of Nicholas Pappas, a now-retired police officer who conducted Van Dyke's firearms training in 2001, police should resort to using their firearms only after they have tried all other reasonable means to control the suspect.

Shooting a suspect, in any case, should be the last resort. Even then, the goal is to stop the threat. Not to kill.

Once the suspect goes down, Pappas conceded during cross-examination by the prosecutor, the officer is supposed to reassess whether to continue shooting.

It is clear that Van Dyke didn't do that. With 16 shots, Van Dyke's goal wasn't merely to wound, either.

He couldn't wait around for someone to arrive with a Taser. As far as Van Dyke was concerned, the only way to stop someone who had disobeyed a police order was to kill him.

Treasure Island felled by 'industry conditions'

Family-owned Chicago grocery chain to close its 6 locations by Oct. 12

By Greg Trotter and Ese Olumhense
Chicago Tribune

Treasure Island Foods stores will close in less than two weeks, as the longtime family-owned Chicago company shuts down amid heavy competition for grocery shoppers' business.

"Everything must go!" shouted one sign at the store at 680 N. Lake Shore Drive in the Gold Coast neighborhood. "Nothing held back!" read another. "All sales final." Many items were on sale, and signs near the checkout stand said, "Do not pay with checks."

Employees were notified that all their locations will be shuttered by Oct. 12, and a note to employees from Treasure Island CEO Maria Kamberos said, "we made the very difficult decision to wind down operations as a company."

"We have done everything we could to attempt to get the company on solid ground to try to operate for another 55 years," Kamberos said, according to the note to employees. "Unfortunately, given the current industry conditions, it has been impossible for us to continue to operate without losing money."

Treasure Island's corporate employees were called into one-on-one meetings Friday afternoon and given the news before it was then delivered to the hundreds of store employees.

Treasure Island is not offering severance, payouts for paid time off or benefits beyond Sunday for its corporate employees, according to a former employee. Most of the corporate employees were let go Friday, including some who had been with the company more than 40 years. The former employee said there was "a whole lot of crying, yelling" at the office after the news was delivered.

"Completely shellshocked, floored and immensely hurt," the former corporate employee said.

Christ Kamberos Jr., president of Treasure Island, did not return calls and text messages Saturday and Sunday. CEO Maria Kamberos also could not be reached. Managers at multiple Treasure Island locations declined to comment on the store closure and referred the Tribune to the company's corporate office, which did not return requests for comment.

Treasure Island is the latest victim of Chicago's intensely competitive grocery industry. It likely won't be the last. After Dominick's closed in 2014, a slew of newcomers flooded into the city to compete for market share — a proliferation that only recently has reached a tipping point. Meanwhile, the growth of online grocery sales and delivery also has pressured retailers.

On Saturday evening, local shopper Clarisse Perrette focused on happier times for Treasure Island, like when she lost her wallet at the Gold Coast store and the staff quickly found and returned it, with nothing missing. For that, she wrote a letter of commendation to the CEO.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Treasure Island cashier Norma Solorzano receives a hug Friday from colleague Guy Magierek outside the Chicago store where they work.

"I tend not to have too much emotion about my grocery store, but this was very startling," said Perrette, who has been shopping at Treasure Island stores for a decade.

But Saturday, things were different, she acknowledged. The typically friendly staff seemed withdrawn, and inventory seemed leaner. When she asked an employee where a favorite yogurt was, she was told it was out of stock — permanently — as store staff were told Oct. 12 would be the store's last day.

"Treasure Island was a staple," Perette said. "This neighborhood isn't saturated with grocery stores. Everyone I know who lives in the neighborhood goes to Treasure Island."

Treasure Island, a family-run local chain of European-style supermarkets selling domestic and imported foods, has six locations.

Treasure Island was founded in 1963 by Christ Kamberos Sr., who died in 2009, and his brother Frank Kamberos. Christ Kamberos Sr.'s wife, Maria Kamberos, is the company's CEO.

Renowned U. of C. observatory closes Monday

Will birthplace of modern astronomy become a subdivision?

By Ted Gregory
Chicago Tribune

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Breece Gahl, left, and Logan Beckman carry furniture onto a truck as offices move out of Yerkes Observatory on Thursday in Williams Bay, Wis.

Monday's closing of the renowned Yerkes Observatory after 121 years hits Kate Meredith professionally and personally.

As education outreach director there, Meredith has scrambled over the last few months to find a temporary new home for the program, which has been located at the ornate observatory for about 20 years.

And since she and her family live in a house on the bucolic Yerkes site on the shore of Geneva Lake, she has to move now too.

"When I stop moving some days," she said one hectic afternoon, "I just fall asleep."

A cherished southern Wisconsin landmark that has been home to Nobel laureates and important scientific achievements, Yerkes has now outlived its research usefulness. Sometime Monday, University of Chicago, which owns Yerkes and is selling it, will lock entrance gates to the observatory grounds. About a dozen full-time employees, including Meredith, have lost their jobs, she said.

"When you're coming from Yerkes, nothing looks pretty," Meredith said of her new office, a little more than a mile away. "But it'll be our home and it will be drama-free, hopefully."

A bit of drama has been swirling around Yerkes since University of Chicago announced in March that on Oct. 1 it would be closing the observatory in Williams Bay, about 75 miles northwest of Chicago. Hundreds of area residents worried about the fate of the distinctive observatory and its 77-acre grounds attended a pair of community meetings.

But intrigue and silence also have been abundant.

Some have complained that the university hasn't shared adequate information about its plans. Critics also say U. of C. left too little time after announcing the closing to find an owner who would honor community wishes to keep the site largely as is.

The school's Yerkes Updates website last posted an announcement on Sept. 14, stating that the university "is in the final steps of a plan to close Yerkes," hardly breaking news.

From observatory to subdivision?

Still, the university did provide insights in the update.

U. of C. says it continues to talk with the Yerkes Future Foundation, the community nonprofit established to come up with a plan that would retain much of Yerkes' mission and setting. The foundation hasn't yet provided a detailed proposal or funding plan.

No other entity was mentioned in the update, which Williams Bay Village Trustee Jim D'Alessandro said indicates that few, if any, other viable proposals have been brought to the university. That might be a reflection of residents' concerns about redevelopment, he added.

"I'm sure (the university) felt a bit handcuffed trying to find someone to purchase the property," D'Alessandro said. "I think a lot of people just turned away."

Still, the school's online update did acknowledge that "low-density residential use is being explored" for part of the land.

Development on the property is a touchy subject. Some local residents have said they want no new construction on the land. Others say revenue from taxes and the sale of homes could help fund the preservation of the core of the Yerkes site.

All that is complicated by the land's zoning, which would require village board approval for residential development, and environmental protections on the property's desirable lakefront.

University officials declined to be interviewed. In a statement Friday, the vice president for civic and engagement and external affairs, Derek Douglas, said the institution continues working on finding "a long-term steward" for Yerkes and is "hopeful of reaching an agreement that reflects the observatory's potential for education."

Douglas added that the Yerkes Future Foundation "has shown dedication to preserving the observatory, and talks with parties that demonstrate such a dedication will continue."

Overwhelmed but 'reasonably optimistic'

Named for Charles Yerkes, a corrupt Chicago businessman who is credited with establishing the city's elevated train system and who subsidized the observatory, the facility is considered the birthplace of modern astrophysics. Its most prominent feature is the world's largest refractor telescope, a 20-ton contraption with a 40-inch lens and 63-foot tube.

In addition to the pair of Nobel laureates who worked at Yerkes, a third laureate was affiliated with the observatory. Albert Einstein visited, and Carl Sagan and Edwin Hubble studied there.

Acclaimed landscape architect Frederick Law Olmsted, whose work includes New York City's Central Park, designed the grounds.

But, over the last several decades, cutting-edge research has moved beyond Yerkes' equipment. The University of Chicago has made sizable investments in more sophisticated reflecting telescope projects in Chile.

Yerkes remained a unique place that brought together formally trained scientists, educators, students and more casual enthusiasts of astronomy and astrophysics.

"These communities learn from one another, build relationships, and create programs," Yerkes website states, "which result in enriched experiences and learning opportunities for young and diverse members of our society."

Yerkes Future Foundation, the group attempting to retain much of the observatory's mission, is finding that absorbing all the complicated aspects of managing Yerkes "has been a bit overwhelming," chairwoman Dianna Colman said.

At this point, the group is "refining some of our concepts and models," she said. That effort included consulting with staff at Lowell Observatory in Flagstaff, Ariz., which was established in 1894 and draws nearly 80,000 visitors a year.

The future Yerkes site needs "a marquee experience" to draw enough visitors to generate significant funding, Colman said, but added, "If you ask me what that is, I have no idea."

Funding is likely the highest hurdle. One foundation member said the organization would need $20 million to purchase Yerkes. D'Alessandro said maintenance could cost $400,000 to $800,000 a year.

None of the deep-pocketed donors the foundation has approached has refused them outright, Colman said, "but they are hesitant in the sense that they want to see more defined plans, and that is what we're trying to put together."

The university, she added, has been "top-notch, very understanding and very responsive. I have no issue with them at all."

Although the gates will be locked Monday, pedestrians and bicyclists will still have access to the property, university officials said. The school will continue maintaining the grounds and building. All five of Yerkes' telescopes will continue to operate, and the observatory will be open for research, the university stated on its Yerkes Updates website.

While Yerkes' next chapter unfolds, Meredith and three colleagues are busy setting up the new office for the nonprofit they created to fill part of the void left by Yerkes' closure.

She said the university has contributed $8,000 to the group, Geneva Lake Astrophysics and STEAM, or GLAS.

"It's a time crunch," Meredith said of her office move, "but we're really grateful that we have a space to move into, and it's climate controlled."

It will be temporary, however, she said. Meredith plans to return to Yerkes as soon as possible, and make it the house of GLAS.

3 things to know about Yerkes' 121 years

Here's a few things to know about the birthplace of modern astrophysics.

1. It's named for American financier Charles Tyson Yerkes, who was imprisoned for seven months for misappropriation of funds but is also credited with creating Chicago's "L" train system, in part through widespread bribery and corruption. Purportedly motivated by a desire to polish his reputation, Yerkes gave University of Chicago money to build the observator.

2. Local newspaper lore says that upon a visit to the U.S. in 1921, Albert Einstein asked to see two places: Niagara Falls and Yerkes. With virtually no fanfare, he visited the observatory in May that year.

3. Yerkes can claim three Nobel laureates: Gerhard Herzberg and Subrahmanyan Chandrasekhar worked there. Laureate James Cronin was also affiliated with Yerkes. Another notable alum is Edwin Hubble.

Painting heads to auction to fund library work

$10M-$20M sale could restore regional status of West Side facility

By Jennifer Smith Richards
Chicago Tribune

Chicago's North Side has a regional library. So does the South Side. But the West Side hasn't had one since 1977, when the stately Beaux Arts Legler library building in West Garfield Park was decommissioned and made a regular branch.

But the expected proceeds from the sale of a valuable Kerry James Marshall painting that now hangs in the Legler Branch will fund its return to regional status, the city is expected to announce Monday. For the library, it would mean longer hours, significantly more services and programs for adults and children, and collections unique to the surrounding West Side community.

The large painting, "Knowledge & Wonder," is owned by Chicago Public Library. Christie's will handle the sale, which library officials said could be valued at between $10 million and $20 million. Proceeds from the art sale also will be used to establish what Mayor Rahm Emanuel called the city's first-ever permanent public art fund to support public art in under-served communities.

Emanuel, along with Chicago Public Library Commissioner Brian Bannon, and Mark Kelly, who heads the city's Department of Cultural Affairs and Special Events, plan to announce details of the library turnaround effort at an event at the library Monday. The mayor called the absence of a West Side regional library a "big hole" in the community.

"It's a piece that was done in 1995 — it's up on the second floor. Not many people knew it even existed," Emanuel said. "We're taking something on the second floor and investing in the larger West Side community and modernizing and really improving the neighborhood library. Given this is a beautiful building, but hasn't had the type of capital investment it needed to really make it shine, that's what we're going to do."

Marshall's work is known for featuring African-American life and history. The "Knowledge & Wonder" painting shows several children and adults facing oversize books that depict objects of fascination: shooting stars, planets, cells, a bright red cardinal perched on a tree. One of Marshall's paintings, "Past Times," which had been purchased for $25,000 by the Metropolitan Pier and Exposition Authority (owner of McCormick Place) in 1997, sold this year at Sotheby's to Sean Combs for $21.1 million. It was widely reported that Marshall, who lives in Chicago, became the highest-paid African-American artist with the Sotheby's sale.

The library painting was commissioned in 1993 as part of the city's "Percent for Art" program, which required that construction and renovation of municipal buildings contribute about 1 percent of the project cost to public art at the facility.

"We're not set up in a neighborhood library to preserve and secure it," said Bannon, the library commissioner. He said city officials have shared their plans with Marshall and that he is supportive. Marshall could not be reached for comment.

"What's so exciting is we're taking something that was part of a public arts program for this neighborhood, turning that around, selling it and making a deep investment in the arts and in the neighborhood itself," Bannon said.

The two existing regional libraries in the city are in the Lincoln Square neighborhood and in Washington Heights. They keep the same hours as the Harold Washington Library, which is Chicago's main facility.

"Harold Washington Library can't really serve the city as a central library because we're so geographically spread," Bannon said. "What a regional library does is serve as a quasi-central library for that region of the city."

The regional library designation means Legler will be open seven days a week with extended morning and evening hours, Bannon said. That could happen as soon as 2019. And while the Legler library currently has story time for children, the new funding from the Marshall art sale will allow the library to expand its children's space to include early childhood classes and workshops, and a new STEM-focused children's library, Bannon said. The current space for teens will gain a high-tech sound studio.

A new computer space will be paired with an adult workforce training center, and the library will get an adult "maker space" similar to the ones at the Harold Washington Library and Woodson Regional Library.

Officials said Legler will be the first city library location to have an "artist-in-residence" with a studio space named for Marshall. A community artist will use the space to host adult, teen and family art programs, and the space will gain digital arts and digital production capabilities, Bannon said. The library plans to hold a competition for the interior building design.

It's not clear why Legler was decommissioned as a regional library, Bannon said. Often such moves are budget-driven, as regional libraries cost more to operate than branches, he said.

Built in 1920, Legler, which is on the National Register of Historic Places, has received more than $900,000 in renovations over the last two years for structural repairs and to improve accessibility for people with disabilities. The art-auction proceeds will give the library the money it needs to do more than just basic upkeep, Bannon said.

"When we invest in libraries and invest in neighborhoods through libraries, people use them," Bannon said. "When it comes to this neighborhood, this is a high-need neighborhood. They deserve to have a regional library like the north and south."

Can Javy Baez save baseball from itself?

born in Puerto Rico, raised in Jacksonville, Fla., and played his first major league ballgame at 21 — is the anti-data.

He swings at too many pitches — nearly half of those that are outside the strike zone by one calculation — which means he draws too few walks, a no-no in sabermetrics.

He tries stealing bases often, viewed as too risky in today's actuarial approach to the game.

And the percentage of time he gets on base is slightly above pedestrian.

Yet Baez is considered the league's most exciting and fun player, known as El Mago, The Magician. He also is a leading candidate to earn the National League Most Valuable Player award.

Lifelong Cubs fan Ryan Rivera said he began following Baez because of their shared Puerto Rican heritage. Rivera, 30, of Chicago's Portage Park neighborhood, elevated Baez to favorite Cub after witnessing his acrobatic defense and clutch hitting.

"His progression has been awesome to see, and you know he's the real deal because he does it in the postseason," Rivera said while taking in the Cubs-Pittsburgh Pirates game Tuesday night at Wrigley Field. "To do it at that age, with that much poise, you know you have something special on your hands."

Though Rivera had to endure a Cubs shutout loss, his favorite player came through, smacking a couple of singles and making a pair of fielding gems that robbed the Pirates of two hits.

On Sunday, Baez picked up his 100th RBI and 40th double in the Cubs' victory over the St. Louis Cardinals, but Chicago still has to defeat Milwaukee in a tiebreaker Monday to win the division.

Transcending new and old

"He's just a great player," said John Thorn, Major League Baseball's official historian. The notion that Baez's play contradicts data-driven baseball is "a false dichotomy," Thorn said.

"He is a Swiss Army knife of a ballplayer," he said, "which is a great thing in modern baseball. He's a delight. He plays with verve and flash and is just a pleasure to watch."

While he plays for a team that employs a heavily data-driven strategy, Baez is said to all but ignore that approach. He does, however, excel in what might be the most important number-crunching statistic and is one of the top performers in crucial categories that transcend the eras of baseball.

He's second among National League position players in "wins above replacement" — an estimated number that expresses how many wins a specific player would be worth over a typical replacement — and is tied for fourth in home runs among National League hitters.

"The thing I find most fascinating about Baez," said Ryan M. Spaeder, a baseball statistician, author and contributor to NBC Sports and The Sporting News, "is you put him in the 1950s, he could potentially win an MVP."

The same would be true for Baez in every decade until about 1990, Spaeder added, when Baez's value would have dropped during the early stages of analytics that placed a disproportionate value on the percentage of time a hitter reached base.

In plumbing the depths of modern data, Spaeder sees examples of how Baez transcends the new and old, making him valuable in a way that's unlike almost any other player.

Take his free-swinging approach and daring base-stealing as examples, Spaeder noted.

Baez swings so hard and sweetly that more of his hits drop for doubles and triples than the hits of other players, and his extra-base hits are a crucial metric in the data-driven analysis of baseball.

And because Baez's theft of bases is more or less successful — he has stolen home four times in his career, twice this year — Baez boosts his extra base total, Spaeder said. If, for example, he hits a single, steals second and then scampers to third on an errant throw to second base, he has, essentially, created a triple for himself.

Apart from his thrilling offense, Baez is a nimble, acrobatic defender at second base, shortstop and third base. He possesses uncanny instinct, obvious passion for the game and lightning-quick reflexes that produce moves like his famous behind-the-back tags of runners trying to steal bases.

Mendoza, the ESPN analyst, said Baez combines his instincts with robust performance in data-rich elements of the game. But he hasn't allowed statistical analysis to influence his approach too much, she added.

"First and foremost, he's stayed true to who he is," Mendoza said, "which I think is important."

But Baez has evolved. His manager, Joe Maddon, said as much after his star player moved to shortstop in the recent City Series against the White Sox.

In the Sept. 22 game, Baez hit a two-run homer in the first inning and added an insurance RBI in the ninth. He also made a sliding stop in left field that robbed Welington Castillo of a single.

"It's nice to see Javy arrive at this point," Maddon said after the game. "When we first got here (in 2015), he had all the talent in the world with a big swing. He was a little out of control with his game, making errors on routine plays. And all of a sudden he's making routine plays, and he's still able to make spectacular plays."

Sean Forman, president and founder of Baseball-Reference.com, an extensive and widely used resource of player statistics, said Baez probably benefits from sabermetrics, particularly as a fielder.

He manages to field many balls that most players cannot, Forman noted, although Baez may be unable to field those plays cleanly. Under the old statistic of fielding percentage, Baez would record an error and his ranking would drop.

But sabermetrics gives less weight to errors, Forman said. Baez also benefits from sabermetrics' valuing players by individual positions in its wins above replacement estimation, Forman added.

The result, he said, is that Baez is more frequently in the mix as a Most Valuable Player than he would have been a decade ago.

Baseball savior?

Baez's ascent comes at a time when Major League Baseball revenue is healthier than ever.

In November, Forbes reported that the league recorded 15 consecutive years of record gross revenue, surpassing $10 billion that year. The average value of a team also rose last year, the magazine reported, to more than $1.6 billion, 7 percent higher than the previous year.

Attendance, however, is dropping, from an average of 32,400 fans per game a decade ago to 28,600 by late September this season, according to Baseball-Reference.com.

Is Baez a player who can generate enough excitement to put more fannies in seats across major league stadiums, helping attract a younger crowd while retaining the existing fan base?

Probably not, experts said. The issue with attendance dropoff is more complicated than one player can solve and has to do with length of games, competition for entertainment and, at least this year, inclement weather stretching through almost the first six weeks of the season.

Writers and analysts, especially lately, also have complained that sabermetrics' reliance on placing fewer balls in play is wringing the life out of the game.

Thorn, Spaeder and Forman downplay the attendance drop, saying it may be a blip. They also note that attendance is much higher than it was from the 1950s through the early 1990s.

Spaeder said Baez plays with a flair and excitement that resonates with younger fans, "but I can't hang my hat on that" as a strong enough attraction to draw more fans to stadiums.

People, especially younger people, have many ways to consume baseball in much smaller portions — primarily via highlights, Spaeder noted.

"Are the young fans going to be willing to go out and see him at the ballpark?" he asked. "I can't answer that."

Regardless of whether he wins baseball's MVP award, finding a ballplayer who compares to Baez's profile is tough.

"I'd be hard-pressed, to be honest," Spaeder said.

Forman added that his "glib, initial answer" is Cal Ripken Jr., the Hall of Fame former Baltimore Oriole infielder who holds the record for most consecutive games played, 2,632.

Then Forman took nearly a minute to run through records on his computer.

"Cubs fans are going to like this," he finally said.

His closest all-time comparisons, which historian Thorn also mentioned, were two familiar names:

Ryne Sandberg and Ernie Banks.

*If you believe your only options are agonizing knee pain or surgery... You are WRONG!

Thousands of Chicagoland Boomers and Seniors are now getting knee pain RELIEF, INSTEAD of knee replacement.

It turns out, the secret of enjoying the "golden years" is NOT simply having a giant nest egg for retirement Why?

Recent research showed that Baby Boomers and seniors who lead an active lifestyle during retirement, and continue doing the things they truly enjoy, free of pain, ARE happier, regardless of income level or wealth.

And truth be told, people who don't have their mobility to enjoy their favorite activities at that age, all the money in the world won't bring true happiness.

We know this because we hear people say this over and over again at the Joint Relief Institute in Orland Park. Comments like this . . .

"I didn't know how much LIFE and SLEEP I was missing because of my knee pain, until it went away with this wonderful treatment."

— George R.

You know how it is . . .

You start to recognize your knee is hurting, and you try pain medicines, braces, or different over-the-counter arthritis supplements. Soon enough, you realize they either cause lots of side effects, or they fail to live up to their promise of fast, long-lasting relief, and are not worth the price of the bottle they come in.

And BECAUSE you'd prefer NOT to go under the knife . . .

And can't afford to be put in bed for several weeks, and because you know people who still hurt EVEN after surgery . . . you give up, and learn to live with the pain. BUT, you miss out on things you enjoy doing, and lose your golden years one activity at a time.

With less activity, comes weight gain, and depression . . . Yes, you can put up with this ache in your knee, but the cost of doing nothing about it is HUGE. You are not doing yourself a favor by "toughing it out."

"Six months later, I found out the one thing between me and losing 20 lbs, WAS my knee pain"

— Mary T.

"Every day was hard. I couldn't enjoy my favorite activities anymore. But thankfully, now I'm back in full form. I am doing yard work for the first time in years!"

— Phil M.

What are my options if I don't want to undergo surgery?

Today we live in an age with tremendous technology advances, and that's what Joint Relief Institute doctors use to put new life and energy into failing knee joints.

Using precise, advanced imaging, they gently place an all natural joint lubricant directly inside your knee to replace the lost fluid that's causing your pain. This treatment has proven to have a very high rate of success.

However, it HAS to be done right with advanced imaging . . .

A recent study examined trained

Advanced Digital technology is used to eliminate a HUGE percentage of treatment failures. Every treatment at Joint Relief Institute is pin-pointed to the damaged area inside the knee. The doctors see the medication live as it goes to help the troubled joint.

doctors and surgeons who attempted these injections without using advanced imaging. Instead, they simply felt the knee with their fingers and BLINDLY delivered the replacement fluid.

The study revealed that these doctors missed the target most of the time . . . In fact, 30% of the time, they didn't even place the treatment inside the joint. Yes THIRTY percent. It is not a typo.

Alternative to the knife for your knee pain? Non-Surgical treatment success rate soars after using new digital technology

Even after missing the target, they had no way of knowing they missed, because they are not SEEING it with advanced imaging.

That means these patients went away thinking they had received a life-changing treatment, and, in fact, did not get any benefit at all. Even worse, many of them went on to have surgery they didn't need.

How did Joint Relief Institute find the Antidote to this MISERABLE failure . . .

The doctors at the Joint Relief Institute are trained in using cutting-edge low dose motion digital imaging. These highly skilled, Board Certified doctors are able to see into the knee joint. They actually watch the medicine, live, as it goes where it needs to be. This technology is so precise, so advanced, and so forefront that it was able to make a whole difference in Non-surgical treatments.

"We've had so many patients tell us they RECEIVED treatments like Synvisc or Orthovisc in the past, and it didn't work. So they were considering surgery, and some even had surgery scheduled. Luckily, we were able to save many of those people from the knife." Said Dr Mike Hana at the Joint Relief Institute.

Joint Relief Institute's proven accuracy and effective treatment is why people are traveling hundreds of miles to get knee pain treatment from their Doctors.

Why did Knee treatments from Joint Relief Institute become the talk of the town?

Many seniors walk out feeling better than they have in years! So as you might imagine, when their friends see them move easier, walk further, sleep better and are happier, they want it also.

Only days after this treatment, people usually notice a decrease in: Pain... Stiffness...Muscle weakness... Swelling... Locked joints... Reduced range of motion... and Cracking sounds.

Most patients who receive the treatment are able to live pain free for up to 6 months, and some even get relief for 3-5 years with NO additional treatments.

How does the treatment help relieve your joint pain...

It's pretty simple, really. You see, when you're young, you have a thick, fluid protein inside your knee joints to lubricate them as you move.

This fluid also acts as a cushion and shock absorber inside your knee. It's called synovial fluid, and it works much like the oil in a car's engine to keep all the parts moving freely, without friction.

However, as you age, this fluid dries out, leaving your bones to painfully rub and grind against each other with every step. And unfortunately, there's no way for the joint to make more.

After years of trusted service in moving you everywhere you need to go, you start to feel a subtle ache in your knees with certain activities like kneeling down, or getting out of the car. With time, it becomes a constant ache. If left untreated, it can keep you awake at night, and hurt with every step.

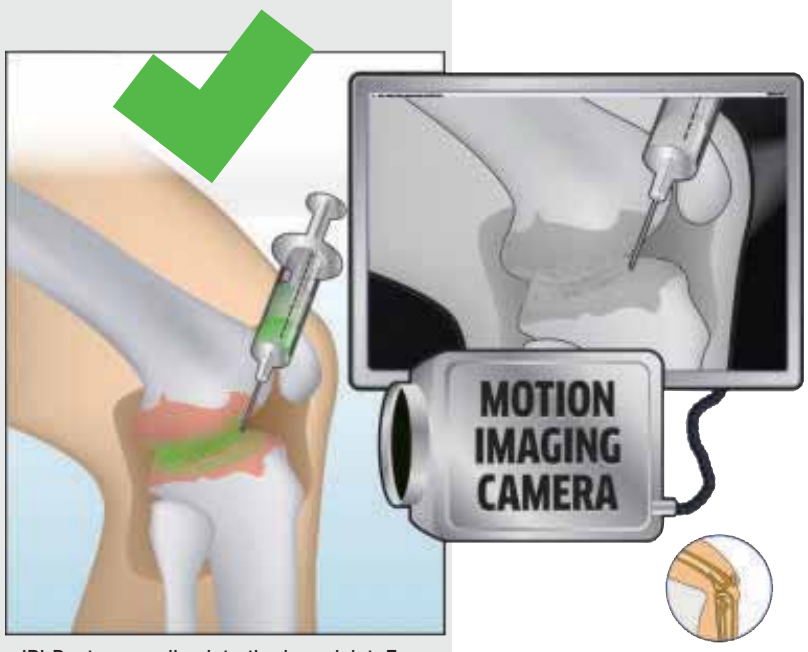
The good news is, researchers discovered an almost identical, all natural lubricating fluid called Hyaluronic acid. It has been proven in numerous clinical studies to act as a natural lubricant in your joints.

It's FDA approved and is a perfect cushion and shock absorber for your joints. Once it's correctly placed inside your knee, it can make them feel just like new again, eliminate any rubbing and friction, and make your joints glide smoothly.

Are there any side effects to this treatment? Is the treatment painful?

After numbing the skin with a special spray, Joint Relief's imaging technology makes this treatment virtually painless. And because you are getting a supplement for a protein we are all born having, there are NO known after effects.

If you received this kind of treatment in the past, and it didn't relieve your pain, there is a BIG chance the medication landed somewhere around, but not INSIDE, the joint where it can't help you.



JRI Doctors see live into the knee joint. Even you will be able to tell the medicine went where it needs to be. No guess work, no poking around, the medicine cushion lubricate and help heal the damaged knee.

That is right, this is a quick, natural long-lasting, non-invasive, non-surgical treatment with NO known side effects...

Is it true this natural treatment costs NOTHING?...

Yes, more good news, besides the pain relief, is that because this non-surgical program has already proven to help thousands of seniors, Medicare and other insurance plans DO cover the full cost of the treatment.

So there is very likely NO COST to you for this life-changing treatment.

Here is what you need to do if you or a loved one is suffering with knee pain…

Call now for a free screening...

If you or a loved one is suffering with knee pain, this could be the blessed relief you're looking for. You are personally invited to a FREE knee pain screening from the Joint Relief Institute doctors to see if you are a good candidate for this all-natural, highly-precise treatment.

Due to high demand, they can only offer a limited number of FREE screens every month. So if you're interested, Call now (708) 914-5145.

Waiting will not help you feel better...

This ache in your knees could be a sign of serious damage and people who choose to simply "tough it out" will definitely see their knees deteriorate further over time. The one thing we know is: The damage will NEVER undo itself without some help.

Your screening will only take about 20-30 minutes of your time, as one of their doctors sits down with you and answers all the questions you have about your knees.

On the day of your treatment, you'll be able to come in on your own, and be done within 30 minutes or less. No pain. No problem driving yourself home. ■ driving in a car and you see road rage, or you miss the train and you're soaking wet and have to catch the next train, you get to work and want to rip somebody's eyeballs out."

Trends at odds with transit agencies

Not all those who work from home agree that the lack of a commute means less stress and more personal time. Lisa Milam, 54, a legal editor who lives in the Belmont Cragin neighborhood, said telecommuting for the last 10 years has "destroyed" her work-life balance, though it saves her money on Metra tickets and wardrobe.

"The time you would otherwise be in transit, I think most telecommuters give that time up to their employers, rather than taking that time to themselves," Milam said.

ZBIGNIEW BZDAK/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2017

Metra has seen a drop in riders and monthly pass purchases. Factors may be cheaper gas and higher fares.

Public transit impact

Metra believes that the increase in working from home is a factor behind its falling ridership.

The transit agency has seen a drop in both riders and purchases of monthly passes. Likely factors behind the ridership decline include low gas prices, higher fares and telecommuting, said Lynnette Ciavarella, Metra's senior division director of strategic capital planning.

Passenger trips dropped to 78.6 million in 2017 from 83.4 million in 2014. The number of monthly passes purchased fell by 16 percent between the first half of 2014 and the first half of 2018, while 10-ride tickets are up 29 percent, according to Metra.

"A lot of people are making decisions a little more carefully," Ciavarella said. "They look at their schedule and decide how many days they might be telecommuting, how many days they might have to travel."

Metra spokesman Michael Gillis said there may be a slight revenue decline from passengers switching to 10-ride tickets from monthlies, but it is hard to separate that from the fact that people are riding less.

Leanne Redden, executive director of the Regional Transportation Authority, which oversees Metra, the CTA and Pace, said she was not surprised to see the increase in people working from home.

"The way people work is changing," Redden said. "Even anecdotally, 50 to 80 percent of the people I know don't commute to work five days a week anymore."

The RTA continues to promote the benefits of transit. "There's the convenience of it — you can work, you can read, you can talk to people," Redden said.

Other survey findings

Overall use of public transit for commuting has increased as employment rates have risen, the survey found. In the Chicago region, commuting by public transit rose by 8.5 percent from 2013 to 2017. But the percentage of workers taking public transit has stayed flat — 12.2 percent of workers in 2017 compared with 11.8 percent in 2013.

Within public transit, taking the bus has dropped. In the Chicago area, the number of workers who say they usually took the bus to work was down 2.1 percent in the last four years.

RTA chief Redden said one possible reason for the decreased interest in riding the bus is that buses are in the same traffic everyone else is in, which reduces bus speeds. Transit agencies continue to look for ways to increase travel speeds, including the use of "bus on shoulder" routes on expressways, she said.

The biggest increase seen in the survey was in the number of people who reported usually taking a taxi to work, which would include ride-share services like Lyft and Uber. That number more than doubled locally, to 18,635 commuters regularly hiring a car to go to work in 2017. Though the jump was large, the number represents less than half a percent of all commuters.

Some studies have blamed ride-sharing for increased traffic congestion. Ride-share companies say they are helping to ease congestion by taking private cars off the streets.

Biking was also up in the Chicago area, with the number of those who said they usually used a bike to get to work up 16.8 percent in 2017 from 2013. Bike commuters represented less than 1 percent of workers surveyed.

The most common way for people to get to work locally continues to be driving alone — 70 percent of the total in the Chicago area.

The Chicago metro area is defined by the census as the city and its suburbs and includes southeastern Wisconsin and northwestern Indiana.

Transportation song quiz

Last week's song was about a four-legged means of transportation, the color of the sun, who takes the narrator across the southern border to avoid a little trouble. The song is "Tennessee Stud," by Jimmy Driftwood. Don Vahldick of Lisle was the first with the right answer.

This week's song is about someone who became the head of a transportation-related branch of government, because he knew nothing about it. Just keep polishing. What's the song, and who wrote it? The first to email me with the correct answer gets a Tribune notebook, and glory.

some buyers think twice. But in the end those prices did little to diminish enthusiasm among fans.

"I feel like Michelle Obama is doing something we haven't seen before," Washington said. "When have you seen anyone host a book tour in an arena? I just wanted to be in the building. ... I feel like it's historic."

On Sept. 12, Obama announced on Twitter that she was finished with her book and would kick off her book tour in Chicago. Billed as an "intimate conversation," Obama will be interviewed onstage at the United Center on the same day her book is expected to go on sale.

After Chicago, Obama will make stops in Los Angeles, Boston and Dallas. She'll also visit Philadelphia, Detroit and Denver and plans to appear twice in Washington, D.C., and Brooklyn, N.Y.

Officials who are working on the events would not say who will interview Obama in Chicago, how long the conversation will last or whether there will be guest appearances. They did not respond to emails inquiring about ticket sales in other cities, but those other venues seat fewer people than the United Center.

Obama's tour is being managed, in part, by Live Nation, an events promoter known more for pushing concerts by Sting, Justin Timberlake, Iggy Azalea and Cher than book events.

There is no official organization that tracks the size or magnitude of book events, but the fact that Obama is filling stadiums is noteworthy, said Mike Shatzkin, a longtime book industry consultant and chief executive of The Idea Logical Co.

"Usually the challenge for a publisher and author is to get any audience to a venue," he said. "So this (response) speaks to her celebrity and popularity and shows the prospects of the book. Michelle Obama is a very special person with a special following. Melania Trump will not have that cachet. Hillary Clinton didn't have it."

Since she released the initial announcement and video on social media, Obama has been quiet about her book and tour. On the day that the ticket sales opened to the public, Obama posted on her Instagram account.

JOHN LOCHER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michelle Obama appears at a voter registration rally last month. Her book "Becoming" is due out Nov. 13.

"Truly humbled by the response," she wrote in the caption. "I can't wait to share BECOMING with all of you & hope to see you somewhere along the way!"

She has said little about the content of the book itself.

That didn't stop local residents from clamoring to get seats to see her.

Securing tickets was a process — fans had to register to get early access and provide their email address and cellphone number. Those who gained access were sent a pass code giving them access to available seats.

Terri Sharpp, 52, of Broadview, went through all those steps. But by the time she got access to seats, the only remaining seats were priced at $500 and above — way beyond her budget.

"This was the first opportunity that I, as a regular person, could pursue to see her since she's been out of the White House," she said. "It was more difficult to get tickets to this book event than it was to get tickets to Beyonce or Diner en Blanc. I thought, 'I'm up early, I'll get in.' But no. She's so well-liked by so many people ... everyone was trying to get to this show."

When the disappointment set in, Sharpp went to Obama's website and sent the former first lady a heartfelt email.

"I told her I would have loved to have been a part of her day," Sharpp said. "But at those prices, I won't be able to participate. My daughters, who look up to her, won't be in the room.

"Maybe she will add additional appearances here — that's what other superstars do. I'm trying to remain hopeful."

Cynthia Flowers, 52, of the South Loop, gave up on the Ticketmaster website after it moved too slowly and later kept telling her it didn't have the amount she wanted available. She turned to a ticket resale site on Friday and paid $607 for two seats on the floor.

"This is not something I would typically do," she said. "But it was something I really wanted.

"I didn't get to experience the Obamas in the White House. I didn't make it to the inauguration or any events. I'm proud of Michelle's legacy as a woman. The title of her book grabbed me: I'm also from the South Side of Chicago and I'm also becoming what I envision. Like her, I am a mom, and I wanted to sit and hear her recap her story."

Like Washington, Nicole Jordan-Reed, 44, of Pullman, logged in early. She wasn't able to find clusters of tickets so instead she bought six, scattered throughout the same section on the floor.

On the night of the show, she and her "sister circle" plan to have a dinner before the show. And then the squad will hustle over to United Center.

"I have a huge amount of respect for Michelle Obama, period, because of her background and her achievements," Jordan-Reed said. "I'm interested to hear her speak and tell her story in her own voice. I'm really curious to hear what she will say."

It didn't bother Jordan-Reed that she had to pay between $170 and $209 for each ticket. It also didn't bother her that she and her friends won't be next to each other or that they can't read the book in advance.

"I'll pay to see Michelle Obama — she's at rock star status," Jordan-Reed said

Last year, Obama and her husband, former President Barack Obama, both agreed to release books through Penguin Random House. In addition to that deal, the couple brokered an agreement with Netflix to produce movies and television series for the streaming service.

Officials have not said how much the book deals and Netflix contract are worth.

Michelle Obama grew up on the South Side, in South Shore, and appeared in Chicago last November at the Obama Foundation's first international summit. At that event, she told the audience that the Obama Presidential Center in Jackson Park will be a place where art, music and creativity are celebrated and public art will be made available for residents on the South Side.

During her remarks, Obama discussed her modest upbringing in Chicago, her time in the White House and the need for leaders to be mindful about what they say on social media.

At that event, Obama was interviewed by her friend, the poet and essayist Elizabeth Alexander. Much of her conversation was about how her parents, especially her mother, continue to influence her decisions and how she carries herself.

She stayed true to the themes she often talks about: surrounding herself with good girlfriends who make her laugh and the importance of parents advocating for their children and spending time with them.

Killed: Man with dogs in Rogers Park, teen walking in S. Austin

By Elyssa Cherney
Chicago Tribune

A 73-year-old man was fatally shot during a possible robbery attempt while returning to his Rogers Park apartment Sunday morning after walking his dogs, according to authorities and neighbors.

Police responded to a call of shots fired about 10:10 a.m. in the 1400 block of West Sherwin Avenue and found the man with a gunshot wound to the head, said Chicago police Officer Jessica Rocco, a spokeswoman.

Neighbor Lynda Kaplan said she was sitting in her first-floor apartment sipping coffee with her brother when she heard the gunshot and ran outside.

"I saw him facedown on the ground," said Kaplan, 50. "We see each other every day. He's out with his two older dogs, walking them, and he's a frail older man. What could anybody possibly have against him?"

The man, who has not been identified by the Cook County medical examiner's office, was pronounced dead on the scene.

By the time Kaplan got outside, neighbors across the street were holding the man's dogs. One was described as a black pug and the other as a tan dog that weighed about 15 pounds.

Kaplan said the man lives with his husband and his elderly mother-in-law.

Police were reviewing surveillance camera footage and interviewing several witnesses, Ald. Joe Moore, 49th, posted in a neighborhood Facebook group.

Moore said he was outside cleaning his front gate at home, just a block and a half away, when the shooting happened.

Neighbor Fallon Sowers said she and the man had chatted about their dogs.

"We always joked that our dogs looked alike, like they could be in the same litter," said Sowers, a 35-year-old social worker who also has a small, tan dog.

"He seemed very gentle, very kind, and it's just heart-wrenching."

On Sunday evening, Sowers said, neighbors began putting flowers at the spot where the man was shot, on the sidewalk outside the courtyard apartment building.

The man's dogs had been turned over to relatives, Rocco said.

No arrests had been made in the killing.

Later on Sunday, two 15-year-old boys were shot, one fatally, police said.

In the fatal attack, a boy was walking in the 5500 block of West Monroe Street in the South Austin neighborhood just after 4:40 p.m. when someone in a passing green SUV started shooting, police said.

The boy, shot in the shoulder and the chest, was taken to Stroger Hospital in critical condition and later pronounced dead.

The medical examiner's office had not identified the boy.

About 1:15 p.m., a 15-year-old boy was wounded in the Gresham neighborhood, police said.

The boy was sitting on a front porch in the 8800 block of South Laflin Street when someone in a vehicle began shooting out of the front passenger seat, authorities said.

The boy suffered a gunshot wound to the right arm and was taken to Little Company of Mary Hospital in Evergreen Park, where his condition was stabilized.

No arrests had been made.

Defend, Detect and Repel

Part one of a three-part series on cybersecurity for small business

98.2% of all enterprises in the U.S. are small with fewer than 100 employees (U.S. Census Bureau, 2015). They are thriving thanks to a new generation of networked devices, smart workspaces and new ways to innovate, collaborate and engage with customers.

However, those tools have exposed small businesses to new threats. While many owners think they are too small to be targeted by cybercriminals, they are in fact a top target because there are so many small businesses and their security measures tend to be less robust than large organizations.

Don't become a cybercrime statistic. Learn how you can protect your business both proactively and reactively, through a mix of technology and educated employees.

Secure access to shield your business from hackers

A good defense is layered and involves both robust technology and smart people. Building that shield starts with knowing the threats you face and ensuring the defenses you have in place are oriented towards those threats.

Just as important as having the right defenses is ensuring they are actually used correctly – a lock only works on a door that is closed. Here are four common defenses you can deploy cost-effectively to help seal security gaps.

SECURITY MEASURE: Train your employees.
Help them learn to spot fraudulent emails, not click on suspicious links or attachments, use secure passwords and change them frequently.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: Fraudulent emails are a common first step in stealing passwords or scamming an employee into sending money. Many viruses and trojans (legitimate-looking software that does something bad in the background) come through email or unsafe web browsing. Weak passwords can be guessed in mere hours. All these can be prevented if employees stop, think and make smart choices.

SECURITY MEASURE: Use email encryption. Install software to encode emails so that they can't be read if they are intercepted by a hacker.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: A great deal of sensitive business information is sent via email, making it a common target of attacks. Most end users aren't familiar with the encryption options built into their email system, so setting it up to encrypt automatically is critical.

SECURITY MEASURE: Protect network access and devices.
Require logins on your Wi-Fi, network, computers and mobile devices. Use the latest laptops equipped with security-enhancing 8th gen Intel® Core™ i5 vPro™ processors and hardware login security like TPM 2.0 (Trusted Platform Module), fingerprint readers and facial recognition.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT:
Unprotected networks and devices offer many opportunities for hackers to get into your system – once logged in, they may be able to log onto computers on the network or get into your shared files, where they can do enormous damage.

SECURITY MEASURE: Use robust anti-virus and firewall solutions.
High-quality security software solutions are affordable and effective at sniffing out attacks and helping repel them.
WHY IT'S IMPORTANT: Attackers are clever and aggressive. They change tactics often and develop new tools. No security is perfect, but network security systems are best able to keep on top of the latest threats and give you time to react if an attack does get past first-line defenses.

Part Two

Shields up: Why and how to shield your small business from hackers

From phishing to ransomware to viruses, the threats facing businesses are growing every day, both in number and sophistication.

Fighting back: How small businesses can detect, respond and recover from a cyberattack

When a cyberattack happens, the effects on a small business can be catastrophic. Taking proactive steps so that you're ready to react quickly and correctly is a crucial part of any cyberattack response plan.

Learn what it takes to get your business back up and running fast.

Coming Wednesday, October 3

Detect, repel and recover from attacks

Hackers are not passive; they are creative, tenacious and persistent. The sheer scale and variety of cyber attacks shows convincingly why small businesses need to be vigilant and active in their own defense – cybersecurity isn't a one-and-done installation, it's a mindset and a way of life.

Some attacks will get through, despite your best defenses, but you can still take action as long as you have planned and prepared. Here are four ways to minimize the harm from cyberattacks.

PREPARE: Establish a cybersecurity incident plan.
By having clearly laid out steps to follow, you eliminate panic and ensure a rapid response to attacks, with everyone working together.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Make sure your employees are trained on what to do if an attack gets through – most importantly, notifying an established (or pre-identified) security lead on your team, evaluating the system and quarantining potentially compromised hardware and files. Ensure the right people know where backups are kept and how to deploy them. Time is of the essence – every hour you can't serve customers compounds losses.

BACK EVERYTHING UP: Automatic backups can avert disaster.
A reasonable investment in backup technology can ensure business continuity.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Backups often involve software that automatically copies files on protected computers and copies it either to a separate data storage drive at your business or a cloud storage, where it is kept in an off-site data facility. Your best option? Both.

DETECT: Make network monitoring someone's job.
On average, malicious software lives in a network for months before being detected, often because no one is looking for it.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Setting up and using anti-virus and firewall software. Businesses must also establish policies for reviewing reports, tracking down threats and removing them.

REPORT: Call in reinforcements and alert stakeholders. An attack isn't a time to improvise. Report anything suspicious to an IT expert. Don't be afraid to ask for help fixing things and make sure customers or other stakeholders know.
WHAT'S INVOLVED: Transparency about attacks serves many purposes. One, it gets the right people involved to set things straight. Two, you can educate employees to watch for similar attacks, and your experience may help inform other businesses. Being honest with customers lets them take steps to protect themselves and is better in the long run for your reputation than hiding an incident.

Quiet docket ushers in high court's term

Nominee's woes overshadow eight justices' caseload

By Mark Sherman and Jessica Gresko
Associated Press

RICKY CARIOTI/THE WASHINGTON POST

The Supreme Court is scheduled to begin its new term Monday. Brett Kavanaugh's confirmation has been delayed, leaving eight justices on the bench.

WASHINGTON — It's the storm before the calm at the Supreme Court.

Americans watched Thursday's high court nomination hearing of Judge Brett Kavanaugh with rapt attention. The televised spectacle was filled with disturbing allegations of sexual assault and Kavanaugh's angry, emotional denial.

On Monday, the court begins its new term with the crack of the marshal's gavel and not a camera in sight.

The term's start has been completely overshadowed by the tumult about Kavanaugh's nomination.

Republicans had hoped to have Kavanaugh confirmed in time for the court's first public meeting since late June, an addition that would cement conservative control of the court.

Instead, there are only eight justices on the bench for the second time in three terms, with a breakdown of four conservatives and four liberals.

An empty seat on the bench often forces a push for compromise and leads to a less exciting caseload, mainly to avoid 4-4 splits between conservatives and liberals.

The cases the court has agreed to hear so far this term look nothing like the stream of high-profile disputes about President Donald Trump's travel ban, partisan redistricting, union fees and a clash over religious objections to same-sex marriage that the court heard last term.

"It's a time of transition for the Supreme Court," Solicitor General Noel Francisco, the Trump administration's top Supreme Court lawyer, recently told a Federalist Society meeting in Washington.

Justice Anthony Kennedy won't be on the bench for the first time in more than 30 years, meaning lawyers will not have to aim their arguments at attracting his swing vote. Chief Justice John Roberts probably will be the justice closest to the center of the court, although he is far more conservative than Kennedy on most issues.

"All eyes ought to be on the chief justice," said Greg Garre, a solicitor general during George W. Bush's presidency. Roberts' votes in favor of President Barack Obama's signature domestic legislation, the Affordable Care Act, show "he's willing to buck other conservatives on hot-button, high-profile issues," Garre said.

In addition, even if Kavanaugh or another Trump nominee eventually joins the court, Roberts' concern about the public's perception of the court might make him unwilling to move the court too far, too fast in any direction, Garre said.

So far, the court has agreed to hear about 40 cases. It could add a few dozen to decide by the end of the term in June.

The first case involves the federal government's designation of Louisiana timberland as critical habitat for the endangered dusky gopher frog, though the frog is found only in Mississippi.

Two cases involving the death penalty will be argued in the first two months, including one Tuesday in which lawyers for Alabama death row inmate Vernon Madison argue he shouldn't be executed because strokes and dementia have left him unable to remember the details of the killing of a police officer in 1985. In November, Missouri inmate Russell Bucklew says he shouldn't be subjected to execution by lethal injection because he has a rare medical condition that could cause him to choke on his blood during an execution.

The court stopped both executions on the days they were supposed to take place, which often suggests the inmate will prevail. But Kennedy was a vote for the inmates in both cases, and it's not clear there is a majority of five justices for either Madison or Bucklew.

The court also will take on issues including the detention of immigrants, uranium mining in Virginia and the settlement of a class-action lawsuit involving Google in which the settlement largely directed money to organizations rather than search engine users.

Supreme Court terms often get off to a slow start, then roar to their finish.

Francisco, in his Federalist Society talk, suggested that could be the case during the next few months.

"The real key to the coming term is what's in the pipeline," he said.

Lawsuits about the Obama-era program that shields young immigrants from deportation, a new challenge to the health care law, anti-discrimination protections for LGBT people, the Trump policy on transgender service members and a new fight over partisan gerrymandering are percolating in federal courts.

Deaths hit 800 in Indonesia after disaster

By Simon Roughneen and Shashank Bengali
Los Angeles Times

ARIMACS WILANDER/AP

Rescuers evacuate an earthquake survivor in Palu, a town of about 380,000 people in Indonesia, on Sunday.

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Anisah Firdaus Bandu's mother called her in tears from her hometown of Palu on Friday evening when a magnitude 7.5 earthquake jolted the island of Sulawesi in eastern Indonesia.

Since then, with cellphone towers and other infrastructure damaged by the quake and an ensuing tsunami, Anisah hasn't heard from her parents, who are among thousands believed unaccounted for in the disaster that killed at least 800 people, officials said Sunday.

"My mother cried a lot; she tried to pick up my father at his office," said Anisah, a civil servant in Jakarta, the capital.

As anxious relatives tried to place phone calls in vain and clamored to board military or relief flights to Palu, a town of about 380,000 people, emergency crews struggled to reach the worst affected areas, including a string of coastal towns that remained cut off by washed-out roads and downed communication lines.

Indonesia's national disaster agency said the official death toll had more than doubled overnight, to 832 people, but nearly all of those casualties were in Palu. Officials said the toll was likely to rise as relief workers reach major towns such as Donggala, with a population of about 300,000 that is normally a half-hour drive north of Palu.

"The death toll will increase but I cannot say (by) how much," said Sutopo Nugroho, the disaster agency spokesman.

With "catastrophic damage" in many areas, relief agencies braced for a large loss of life once teams could assess the effects in Donggala and other towns, said Tom Howells, program implementation director for Save the Children's Jakarta office.

"Aid agencies and local authorities are struggling to reach several communities around Donggala. We hold grave fears for many of the towns in this area," Howells said.

Images shown on local TV and social media sites from Palu showed scenes of death and destruction: crumpled buildings and bridges surrounded by dead bodies, some covered in blankets, some with their clothes partly ripped off by the force of a tsunami that measured between five and 20 feet high.

Indonesian news media said dozens of people were trapped beneath toppled hotels and malls in Palu, an echo of scenes on the island of Lombok in August when a series of earthquakes killed more than 460 people.

An Associated Press reporter in Palu said that rescue workers were focusing on an eight-story hotel where on Saturday voices were heard calling for help from under the rubble. Officials estimated about 50 people were inside the hotel, but the cries for help were no longer heard by Sunday afternoon, the AP reported.

With roads into Palu blocked by landslides and the town's airport damaged, getting teams of relief workers from elsewhere in Indonesia to the disaster zone was proving difficult, delaying timely assistance to survivors and the arrival of heavy equipment that could save the people trapped inside downed buildings.

Officials said they would deliver some assistance via Makassar, the biggest city on Sulawesi, an island of about 18 million people. Makkasar is at the southern end of the island, a 12-hour drive from Palu.

Dozens of strong aftershocks struck Palu, where many fearful residents were reluctant to re-enter their homes, said Rafiq Anshori, head of the Indonesian Red Cross's disaster preparedness division.

He spoke by phone from Palu, where some communications had been restored by Sunday evening.

"Many road(s), houses, other facilities are broken," he said. "People are finding it difficult to get food, water, fuel."

Special public defender, 99, has no plans to rest his case soon

By Pat Eaton-Robb
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — Attorney Morton Katz, 99, recalls just one client assigned to him as a special public defender who made an issue of his age.

That man, charged with stealing a car while on probation, was unhappy about how long it was taking to resolve his case.

"He wrote me the most vicious letters," Katz said. "The mildest one began, you senile old son of a — well, I won't quote all the language he used, but it got pretty violent."

Katz became a lawyer in 1951, after serving in World War II, and continues working contractually with the state of Connecticut as a special public defender. He does almost all of his work in person and over the phone, rather than using computers, but he impresses far younger colleagues with his sharpness of mind and recall of detail. And he has no plans to retire.

Katz

"There are frustrations to beat all hell, but I like what I'm doing. It's very satisfying," he said.

Katz, of Avon, was born on May 15, 1919. He graduated from Connecticut State College, the school that became the University of Connecticut, and saw action in World War II in North Africa, Italy, France and Germany before attending law school at UConn.

Superior Court Judge Omar Williams said Katz is asked to handle difficult cases with tough defendants and is very good at what he does.

"Obviously, it's amazing that there is someone who is 99 years old who is still working in this field," Williams said. "But to be putting out that type of work product, to be every bit a persuasive advocate — it's absolutely incredible."

As a special public defender, Katz is paid $350 per case, no matter how much work he puts in, unless the case goes to trial, and then he gets an hourly wage.

He dedicated himself to public service after an uncle, who put Katz through college, refused his offer to pay him back.

"He said, 'No, what you will do is find someone else who needs your help, and you will help them,' " Katz said.

Neither the American Bar Association nor the National Association of Public Defenders could say whether Katz is the oldest practicing lawyer in the United Statess.

Katz, for his part, said he plans to end his legal career "when they carry me out of here."

And the accused car thief who had such vicious words for Katz? He came around a bit once Katz managed to get the case tossed.

Las Vegas is remembering victims of the mass shooting on the one-year anniversary.

Year after shooting, Las Vegas reflects but doesn't dwell on it

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

LAS VEGAS — A small bouquet of dried flowers was wedged inside the padlock on Gate 5 of the killing ground that was the Route 91 Harvest Festival one recent day, the only visible reminder that it was the site of the worst mass shooting in modern American history.

A peek inside the chain-link fence, covered in green sheeting to keep out prying eyes, revealed a sprawling patch of asphalt and little else. Towering above were the gold windows of the Mandalay Bay, where a gambler spent the last minutes of his life in Room 32-135 taking the lives of 58 others in a meticulously planned slaughter.

Around Las Vegas, there are scattered remembrances of the horrors of that night a year ago.

Almost every week, there is another release of police body-camera videos that provide flashbacks to the night the gunman turned the fun of the glittering Las Vegas Strip into a nightmare of death and despair. And lawsuits by MGM Resorts International to force survivors to give up their right to sue the casino company that owns Mandalay Bay opened fresh wounds during the summer.

But the "Vegas Strong" T-shirts have largely been put away. The original handmade white crosses for each victim have long since been taken away from the "Welcome to Fabulous Las Vegas" sign to eventually reside in a museum in neighboring Henderson, though some new ones were brought in for the anniversary.

There has been no closure, at least officially. Authorities say they likely never will be able to determine what it was that turned a high-limit video poker player into a mass murderer.

But in a city that always has looked ahead relentlessly, there is not a lot of time devoted to reflection.

"A lot of the feeling among people is more, 'Let's move on,' " said Pauline Ng Lee, a community activist and chairwoman of the Nevada Republican Men's Club. "We don't have a lot of long traditions here. You can see it with buildings. Casinos come up; casinos get knocked down."

Indeed, a look out one side of the high windows of the Mandalay Bay shows the normal sight of dozens of tourists taking pictures front of the Welcome to Las Vegas sign. A glance to the left draws the eye to the vacated and somber site of the shooting on 15 acres of valuable Las Vegas Strip land that for the foreseeable future simply cannot be used for anything.

It's not that the city has forgotten the shooting or the victims. The white crosses adorned with pictures of those killed were moved recently for the anniversary to the rotunda of the Clark County government building, accompanying a heart-wrenching display of paintings of each person.

But now, as the popular local Twitter feed Vital Vegas asked: How do you commemorate something you don't want to think about?

"A lot of people have probably put it out of their minds," said Steve Sisolak, a Clark County commissioner who in the hours after the shooting spearheaded a victim's fund that raised millions and is now running for governor. "The anniversary is going to bring up a lot of feelings, good and bad."

The city is marking the anniversary with a string of events in the days surrounding Oct. 1. And at 10:01 p.m. — the time the shooting began — the lights on gleaming marquees will dim along the Strip.

U.S. and Canada reach deal to salvage NAFTA

By David J. Lynch
The Washington Post

Canada late Sunday agreed to join the trade deal that the U.S. and Mexico announced in August, with a public announcement expected before a self-imposed midnight deadline designed to allow the current Mexican president to sign the accord on his final day in office, according to two people familiar with the talks.

Diplomats from all three countries consulted over the weekend, reviving hopes of preserving the three-country format of the original North American Free Trade Agreement favored by business groups and congressional Republicans.

The new treaty is expected to be signed by President Donald Trump and his Canadian and Mexican counterparts in 60 days, with Congress likely to act on it next year.

Administration officials anticipate a fierce political battle to win congressional approval, especially if Democrats regain control of the House of Representatives in November.

"We will enter October with a trilateral North American trade deal," said Dan Ujczo, a trade lawyer with Dickinson Wright. "This was the least difficult part. The heavy lift is going to be getting a trade deal through the next Congress in 2019 as well as ratification by Mexico's new Congress and in Canada during a federal election year."

Securing a replacement for the nearly 25-year old NAFTA would be a major accomplishment for Trump and his chief trade negotiator, Robert Lighthizer. The president, long a NAFTA critic, complains that the original treaty cost the United States millions of factory jobs and led to persistent U.S. trade deficits with its southern neighbor.

Last year, the U.S. goods imports from Mexico exceeded exports by $71 billion. So far this year, the trade deficit with Mexico is even larger.

Sunday morning, Peter Navarro, one of Trump's closest White House trade advisers, said negotiators were working "in good faith" to reach a three-country deal by midnight and had reached "broad agreement" on most issues.

"There are several sticking points," he acknowledged.

One of the toughest obstacles was Canada's demand for an exemption or other form of protection from the president's tariffs on imported steel and aluminum, which may potentially be extended to automobiles from Canadian factories.

Canada is expected to agree to some form of quota on its shipments to the United States, according to two sources briefed on the talks who asked for anonymity to discuss confidential deliberations. But details remained to be worked out Sunday evening.

Other final issues included U.S. demands for greater access to Canada's dairy market and Canadian insistence on preserving a dispute settlement process that Washington wanted to scrap.

Provincial elections in Quebec, a center of the Canadian dairy industry, also overshadowed the talks. Canadian officials were reluctant to surrender on the politically sensitive dairy issue as voters head to the polls on Monday, according to several analysts.

Administration officials had insisted all last month that they needed to release the text of the new deal — with both countries or only Mexico — by Sunday. That would have complied with a congressional notification requirement and allow Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto to sign the deal on his last day in office, they said.

Officials said they wanted the deal signed before the new Mexican president, left-wing populist Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador, took office in case he sought changes. But Lopez Obrador said Friday that he would not try to reopen talks, calling into question the validity of the negotiators' self-imposed deadline.

Confusion reigns over probe

the terms. They laid out the request, and we've opened it up," she said, adding, "This can't become a fishing expedition like the Democrats would like to see it be."

Conway said on CNN's "State of the Union" that "it's not meant to be a fishing expedition." She added that who will be interviewed was "up to the FBI" in its expanded background investigation into Kavanaugh.

The remarks Sunday added to the swirl of public confusion about the parameters of the FBI inquiry and who is setting them. The order to the FBI was signed by Trump but has not been made public, while the White House has sought to lay responsibility for the details on the Senate.

The only official description of parameters has come from Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, who said Friday the FBI probe would be no more than a week long and would be limited solely to "current credible allegations" against Kavanaugh.

Grassley and other senators have provided few other specifics, and a committee spokesman declined to comment after Trump's tweet Saturday endorsing a broader approach.

Thursday's riveting hearing, featuring testimony from California professor Christine Blasey Ford about her allegations that Kavanaugh assaulted her when both were high school students in the early 1980s, prompted several wavering Republican senators to demand a more thorough federal probe of the alleged incident.

At the hearing, Kavanaugh angrily and categorically denied assaulting Ford or any other woman. Two others, Swetnick and Debbie Ramirez, have publicly come forward to accuse Kavanaugh of other sexual misconduct.

The FBI on Sunday interviewed Ramirez, according to media reports.

In speaking to FBI agents, Ramirez detailed her allegation that Kavanaugh exposed himself to her at a party in the early 1980s when they were students at Yale University, according to a person familiar with the matter who was not authorized to publicly discuss details of a confidential investigation.

The person familiar with Ramirez's questioning, who spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, said she also provided investigators with the names of others who she said could corroborate her account.

Kavanaugh has emphatically denied Ramirez's allegations.

Swetnick's accusations, brought forward in a sworn statement by lawyer Michael Avenatti, have been treated much more gingerly, including by Democrats, because of a lack of corroboration.

Senate Democrats have put special emphasis on having the FBI interview the people Ford says were present for the party at which the alleged assault took place — particularly Mark Judge, the high school classmate of Kavanaugh's who Ford says was in the room for the incident.

Judge has said in written statements that he does not recall the incident; Senate Republicans declined to call him to testify.

Two others said by Ford to have been present for the party also have said they do not recall it.

Many Democrats have called for the FBI to take a broader look at whether Kavanaugh may have misled senators by minimizing his carousing behavior in high school and college or by mischaracterizing entries in his high school yearbook that could indicate a penchant for drunken and misogynistic behavior.

Sen. Amy Klobuchar, D-Minn., speaking on CNN, said Kavanaugh's claims that he never had blacked out or suffered any memory loss while drinking "doesn't quite make sense to me" and said she hoped the FBI would interview friends to determine whether that was credible.

"I've never heard that the White House, either under this president or other presidents, is saying: 'Well, you can't interview this person; you can't look at this time period; you can only look at these people from one side of the street,' " she said. "I mean, come on."

In a statement released Sunday, a Yale classmate of Kavanaugh's said he is "deeply troubled by what has been a blatant mischaracterization by Brett himself of his drinking at Yale."

Charles "Chad" Ludington, who now teaches at North Carolina State University, said he was a friend of Kavanaugh's at Yale and that Kavanaugh was "a frequent drinker, and a heavy drinker."

"When Brett got drunk, he was often belligerent and aggressive," Ludington said.

While saying that youthful drinking should not condemn a person for life, Ludington said he was concerned about Kavanaugh's statements under oath before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., a member of the Judiciary Committee, said the parameters of the probe are based on the wishes of three wavering colleagues — Sens. Jeff Flake, R-Ariz., Susan Collins, R-Maine, and Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska — for a "limited review."

Mississippi city mourns 2 of its officers killed over the weekend

BROOKHAVEN, Miss. — Residents mourning two police officers shot and killed over the weekend in a Mississippi city left roses, balloons and other mementos in their honor Sunday, ahead of an evening prayer vigil planned in their memory.

A candlelight service for Officer James White, 35, and Cpl. Zach Moak, 31, was being organized outside the Brookhaven Police Department where the officers had worked.

White and Moak were killed early Saturday.

Warren Strain of the Mississippi Department of Public Safety said Sunday that the shooting suspect, 25-year-old Marquis Flowers, was hospitalized after being wounded in the confrontation.

Strain said charges are pending against Flowers and that investigation is ongoing. He did not provide an update on Flowers' medical condition.

Amid low turnout, referendum OKs Macedonia name change

SKOPJE, Macedonia — A referendum on changing Macedonia's name as part of a deal that would pave the way for NATO membership won overwhelming support Sunday, but low voter turnout highlighted the hurdles that still remain for the Balkan country to join the alliance.

Prime Minister Zoran Zaev had hoped for a strong show of support in the referendum on whether to accept a June deal with Greece changing the country's name to North Macedonia. That would help him with winning parliamentary support for the required constitutional amendments.

Results from more than 97 percent of polling stations showed 91.3 percent of voters approving the deal. But turnout stood at 36.8 percent, a far cry from the massive support he had hoped for.

Problems for Pentagon's immigrant recruitment push

WASHINGTON — Stricter immigration policies have stymied Pentagon plans to restart a program that allowed thousands of people with critical medical or Asian and African language skills to join the military and become U.S. citizens, according to U.S. officials.

The decade-old program has been on hold since 2016 amid concerns that immigrant recruits were not being screened well enough. Defense officials shored up the vetting process, and planned to relaunch the program last month.

But there was an unexpected barrier when Homeland Security officials said they would not be able to protect new immigrant recruits from being deported when their temporary visas expired after they signed a contract to join the military, the U.S. officials said.

Calif. is 1st state to mandate women on corporate boards

California has become the first state to require publicly traded companies to include women on their boards of directors, according to a law signed Sunday by Gov. Jerry Brown.

The measure requires at least one female director on each board of California-based corporations by the end of next year. Companies would need up to three female directors by the end of 2021, depending on the number of board seats.

The Democratic governor referenced the objections and legal concerns that the law has raised.

"I don't minimize the potential flaws that indeed may prove fatal to its ultimate implementation," Brown wrote in a signing statement. "Nevertheless, recent events in Washington, D.C. — and beyond — make it crystal clear that many are not getting the message."

Some European countries, including Norway and France, already mandate that corporate boards include women.

Having more women on boards will make companies more successful, said state Sen. Hannah-Beth Jackson, who authored the bill, SB 826.

Women tend to be more collaborative and are better at multitasking, the Santa Barbara Democrat said. She believes having more women in power also could help reduce sexual assault and harassment in the workplace.

A fourth of publicly held corporations with headquarters in California don't have any women on their boards of directors.

The California Chamber of Commerce has argued that the composition of corporate boards should be determined internally, not mandated by government.

Trump-Rosenstein summit could be delayed again

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump's highly anticipated meeting with Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein could be delayed again.

A face-to-face meeting set for last week was pushed to this week because it had been scheduled for the same day as last Thursday's Senate hearing featuring testimony from Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh and Christine Blasey Ford, the woman who says he sexually assaulted her when they were teenagers.

Kavanaugh has denied the allegation.

White House press secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders said Sunday that the meeting could be delayed again given the continued focus on Kavanaugh's nomination.

"I could see it pushing back another week, given all of the other things that are going on with the Supreme Court," sh e said.

Cameroon declares Boko Haram has been defeated

YAOUNDE, Cameroon — Cameroon's president says Boko Haram has been defeated in the country, the first such announcement since he declared war on the extremist group four years ago.

President Paul Biya spoke during his first visit to the Far North region since 2012 as he campaigned on Saturday ahead of the Oct. 7 election.

The 85-year-old, one of Africa's longest-serving leaders, has been in power since 1982 and is likely to win again.

Security is a major issue in Cameroon, a U.S. and French military ally, as it also faces a bloody English-language separatist movement in the southwest and northwest.

Addressing a rally in Maroua, Biya said he would focus on rebuilding the Far North "now that terrorism has been defeated."

A really cold war: Britain's defense secretary says the U.K. will boost its military presence in the Arctic amid concerns about Russian aggression. Gavin Williamson says the government is preparing a "defense Arctic strategy" that would deploy 800 commandos to Norway in 2019 and establish a new military base there.

In Japan: Denny Tamaki was elected Sunday as the next governor of Okinawa prefecture in Japan, after a campaign focused on sharply reducing the U.S. military presence on the island. Okinawa is home to about half the 54,000 U.S. troops stationed in Japan and houses the largest U.S. air base in the Asia-Pacific region.

Purging the scourge of lead from Chicago's drinking water

Do you remember the last time you pulled into a gas station and filled up your tank with leaded gasoline? It seems like eons ago, right? Or how about the last time you bought a can of paint that had lead in it? Again, ancient history.

Yet 4 of 5 houses and small apartment buildings in Chicago still rely on lead service lines to deliver water from the city's water supply system. And it's abundantly clear that the lead doesn't stay in the pipes. Earlier this year, the Tribune analyzed two years of test results from 2,797 homes and found that lead appeared in nearly 70 percent of those water samples.

No amount of lead is safe to consume. Even minute amounts can damage a child's growing brain. Later in life, lead can contribute to heart disease, kidney failure and other health troubles.

Many other cities understand. Boston, Denver, Milwaukee, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh are among cities that have embarked on service line replacement efforts. Madison, Wis., tore out every foot of lead piping over a span of 11 years. Homeowners paid for the work, but the city reimbursed them for half the cost. Cincinnati has begun a similar program.

We have urged City Hall to purge lead from water, to join with homeowners in removing the danger posed by lead service lines. City Hall has resisted. Mayor Rahm Emanuel has repeatedly maintained that it's up to homeowners to get rid of lead service lines, since the lines are on private property.

But Emanuel forgets that the city shoulders some of the blame for lead getting into water. Since 2011, Chicago has borrowed $312 million to replace water mains. Lead service lines connect a home or apartment building to the water main. When water mains are replaced, the work can shake loose a protective coating inside the lead service lines. The lead can leach into the water and reach homeowners' faucets.

Previous efforts by aldermen to take up lead in water have been sidetracked by Emanuel's City Council allies. Now there's a new initiative from Ald. Gilbert Villegas, 36th, that we think is worth exploring.

Villegas has introduced an ordinance that would create a new "lead abatement transfer tax" of $50 for a citywide lead service line replacement effort. The tax would be applied to every real estate title transfer. Villegas says he is open to simply increasing the city's real estate transfer tax to pay for the work.

The alderman envisions individual homeowners shouldering perhaps a quarter to half of the cost of service line replacement, but that and other details aren't addressed in the current draft of the ordinance.

How do homeowners know if they have lead service lines? Any home built before 1986 likely has one; the city required the use of lead service lines until 1986, when Congress banned the practice.

Nearly 400,000 single-family homes and small apartment buildings have lead service lines. Villegas says replacement can cost from $4,000 to $7,000, which means the entire effort could carry a price tag of $1.6 billion to $2.1 billion. Villegas says it's worth it. "There hasn't been a serious discussion about replacing service lines," he tells us. "We've got to do something."

Villegas' idea has some rough edges and unanswered questions. How much of the cost would homeowners share? How long would it take to replace every last line? What about homeowners who can't afford their share?

But he's right when he says something needs to be done. The timing couldn't be better. City elections loom. Candidates for mayor and City Council should commit to tackling the lead problem. Ignoring a long-term fix risks the health our city's children — now and years from now.

Will Florence force wisdom about floods?

Many of the people who live in eastern North and South Carolina were flooded out of their homes and businesses during and after the arrival of Hurricane Florence, which dumped up to 50 inches of rain on them. After they have returned to their properties, surveyed the damage and salvaged what they could, it will be time to rebuild. Right?

This is the natural impulse of residents attached to their communities. But it's not necessarily the best response after you've survived a massive inundation. As climate change produces higher sea levels and more intense weather, coastal regions in particular are increasingly exposed to natural disaster. Houston had three "500-year storms" in three years. But instead of retreating from vulnerable areas, Americans are flocking to them in growing numbers.

One reason is that the federal flood insurance program encourages people to disregard the risk to property. Its premiums are set below the level needed to cover the claims that keep piling up. Last year, Congress had to write off $16 billion of the program's debts, while voting for $120 billion to pay for disaster aid.

Even more perverse is that the National Flood Insurance Program pays homeowners to rebuild their flooded homes in the same low-lying spots, over and over. Before Hurricane Harvey, Texas had nearly 5,000 homes that had flooded an average of five times apiece, only to rebuilt each time with federal money.

JASON LEE/AP

The Polo Farms neighborhood in Longs, S.C., off Highway 905, is largely underwater Sept. 24 after flooding from Hurricane Florence.

One Louisiana house worth less than $60,00 has been restored 40 times, at a cost of $428,000.

Such "severe repetitive loss properties" account for no more than 2 percent of structures covered by the flood insurance program — and nearly a third of the claims. Last year, the House voted to limit total payouts for a home to three times its value. But the measure died in the Senate.

Added to this bad incentive is that some people would rather relocate but can't, because it usually takes far longer to get money to move than to rebuild in the same spot. "We spent all this money to rebuild these homes, and we spend very little money helping people get out of these homes — even when that's what they want," Natural Resources Defense Council analyst Rob Moore told Bloomberg. Reallocating funds would save money and avert heartache.

State and local governments also need to discourage building in vulnerable areas. But even after Harvey, the Houston City Council approved a new 900-home development in a flood plain. A city official's excuse? "The city is going to grow and we just have to figure out how to regulate that." OK in theory, but a lax approach is always tempting for municipalities eager to expand their tax rolls.

In 2010, a North Carolina state commission projected that sea levels could rise more than 3 feet this century. "Rather than inspiring terror or action by the local community to protect themselves," reported Business Insider, "the projections sparked outrage among local business owners and developers, who saw them as a threat to future development along the Carolina coast." The legislature responded with willful blindness, barring use of this forecast for regulatory purposes.

Florence should stimulate new thinking, in North Carolina and beyond. Hurricanes and floods are natural disasters whose impact can be limited or multiplied by human decisions. It shouldn't be a hard choice. We can delay action, but nature isn't waiting.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

Senator Bernie Sanders spent much of the summer highlighting the low wages at major American corporations. ...

A petition he launched in August targeted Amazon specifically, noting that CEO Jeff Bezos makes "more money in 10 seconds than the median employee of Amazon makes in an entire year" and arguing that "thousands of Amazon employees are forced to rely on food stamps, Medicaid and public housing because their wages are too low."

This assistance amounts to a form of "corporate welfare," Sanders argued, and earlier this month he and California Representative Ro Khanna introduced a bill that aims to curtail it. The Stop Bad Employers by Zeroing Out Subsidies Act (Stop BEZOS) would require companies with 500 or more workers to reimburse the government for the cost of the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP), Medicaid, school lunch, and Section 8 benefits claimed by their employees.

Because these benefits aren't predicated on work, they aid low-wage workers, not low-wage employers. The only thing Stop BEZOS might accomplish, critics said, is incentivizing employers like Amazon to avoid hiring workers, such as single parents, who are likely to be eligible for public assistance.

I considered exposing my rapist. Then I thought about his wife.

By Beth Jacob

We do not live in the same city, but if we did we might be friends. At least, that is what Google suggests. Thanks to the power of the internet, it takes only a few minutes to find we are both 40-something mothers raising children in big cities. We are both well-educated professionals, Hillary supporters, members of progressive faith communities and active in our kids' schools.

She is also married to the man who raped me. In more than two decades, I never went looking for him. But when I did, after Christine Blasey Ford came forward with her story, I found myself deeply troubled: over not my rapist but his wife.

Safe and sound

He was my friend's boyfriend, and I told no one after it happened. Because my friend was out of the country and I could not face telling her by phone. Because I had been drinking. Because I had not spoken up during the previous months while he harassed me.

But most of all, because I remembered only flashes of before and after: his promise to give me a safe ride home from a party and the sound of his footsteps behind me on my apartment stairs. The feel of the chipped hall floorboards against my bare back. My blue sweater, now inside out. His face, in shadow, before he turned to go — but not without warning me first: She would never believe me over him.

So there, now I've reported it. Please do not call me brave, because the shame of this story is his, not mine. Instead, consider this: What happened that night is savagely ordinary, one of countless acts of violence so many women bury, imposing forgetfulness over them like layers of river silt.

Dishing out blame

But dredge it up and you will find that the stories often have another side. Not his; I know that one already. (When I finally broke down and told my friend, I found out he had talked to her first and said it was consensual. And, as he'd predicted, she believed him. She ended our friendship.)

No, I am talking about his wife's side, today. What would happen if she knew what I do about the man she presumably fell in love with — the one who must have been in the delivery room when their children were born?

My online search reveals a head shot of her warm, open face, and I can imagine her in my book club, where we talk about politics far more than the book. We could have been packed in together at the Women's March, furious, hoarse and exhilarated. I picture her skimming the news on her phone at karate class, while our daughters practice their snap kicks and jabs.

By all appearances, she is a busy mother and a progressive, like me. Right now, with survivor narratives flooding the news and our social media feeds, women like us are almost uniformly outraged and grieving. We are walking out and wearing black and tweeting photos of ourselves saying we #BelieveSurvivors.

Would my rapist's wife believe me? Do I have a responsibility to name him, knowing it could bring solace to other women I heard rumors about — women who might have gone through what I did at his hands? Should she know because she probably loves him, and maybe he's a different person now who could learn from what he did? Or because he might not be different at all?

This past week, I read an account of the recent Values Voter Summit, where former Family Research Council President Gary Bauer warned American women of "a country where ... the man in your life can be ruined by someone getting up and saying '36 years ago, he did this to me.' "

You can almost imagine the spike of dread each woman in the audience must have felt. Because of course the ruin Bauer conjured up was not just that of the man in their lives but their own. The pitying glances of friends and neighbors; the gossip at work; the kids complaining of teasing at school.

Would it be any different for the wife of the man who assaulted me? Given her progressive community, wouldn't it be worse? People like us read stories of sexual assault skeptics — especially other women — and we seethe. But what if it were my spouse or partner accused? Picture facing your circle of feminist friends or your children after a story like mine surfaced about the person you love. Now tell me you don't feel a cold trickle down your neck.

His wonderful life

My internet search revealed that my rapist had helped refugees in the United States a few years ago. He sounded like a good man, a kind man, a loving father. That is the person my rapist's wife knows. (I have deliberately kept details about him and our shared past vague.)

Technically, learning of my story would make my rapist's wife a secondary survivor, although the term is commonly reserved for people close to survivors themselves. Research shows that hearing about a loved one's assault can take a heavy toll. According to one study, as many as 1 in 4 secondary survivors experience post-traumatic stress disorder, tormented by imagining what befell someone they love or wracked with guilt at not having prevented it.

As for the family members of perpetrators, given that nearly 2 in 3 sexual assaults are not reported to police and that research shows many college-age men do not associate forcible intercourse with rape, the odds are that they will never know what their loved ones did.

Saving him

I could change that, at least in this case. But as I inventory potential consequences, I know my silence will go on protecting me and my unasked-for compatriot, my rapist's wife. By not naming him, I spare us both. I remain safe from scrutiny and reliving another brutalizing round of doubt. Not from the people around me this time, but from at least some of those around him.

Maybe she would believe me. If so, it would come at a terrible price. It would surely rock their marriage — maybe even end it. If her children are old enough to ask why, she would have to find a way to tell them.

Like me, she would have to decide how and to whom to tell this story of how her life went off the rails; how she was forced to question everything she thought she knew about herself and the people she loved.

And like me, she might spiral into paralyzing depression, finding simple tasks insurmountable and full recovery years away.

Her husband had that power over me and used it. Now I have that power over another woman, so I won't.

Scrabble has a whole new vocabulary. Yowza, yowza, yowza!

By Ammon Shea

After Merriam-Webster recently released the sixth edition of "The Official Scrabble Players Dictionary," aficionados might have greeted it with a "yowza" or "whirra," depending on whether they were happy to see the more than 300 new words admitted for play or in mourning because they thought that, say, the arrival of "OK" was decidedly not okay. "Yowza" and "whirra," too, are among the new entries.

For 40 years the dictionary has served as one of the main reference works providing information about which words are permissible to play in Scrabble. (Some tournaments, particularly outside the United States, use a list that includes words from the Collins Dictionary) The Scrabble dictionary was initially compiled by taking eligible words from five college-level dictionaries. Now it includes words recently added to Merriam-Webster's dictionary online.

Scrabble is, of course, a game of language, but the vocabulary of a high-level competitive game can have as much in common with that of a newspaper as theoretical calculus has with the numbers in your checkbook. "Imipenem," "agyria" and "exome" — words from science and medicine — are now playable for your Scrabble games, if not your quotidian conversations. Welcome, too, is "aquafaba," the liquid that results when beans are cooked in water. Hardcore players probably already knew that "wirra," a variant spelling of the newly added "whirra," was already allowable.

Capitalizations, abbreviations, acronyms, single-letter words, foreign words and words with hyphens or apostrophes are not eligible for play, but any other established member of the English language is. While in theory it is possible for a word played in Scrabble to be as many as 15 letters long, the Merriam-Webster dictionary for the game includes only those up to eight letters long — the great majority of words played.

These new words are in many ways a snapshot of the changes occurring in English itself. There are words showing orthographic shift, such as the aforementioned "OK" (which in adjective use is now recognized as not needing periods or capital letters) and "dholl" (a dish of lentils and spices, also spelled "dal," "dahl" and "dhal"). There are terms popularized by the internet, such as "bloggy" (characteristic of blogging) and "rootkit" (software that allows a person to secretly gain access to a computer).

There are words that have recently shifted from a foreign borrowing to a full member of English, such as "cotija" (a Mexican cheese) and "santoku" (a Japanese knife). Social and political issues are visible here too; "antifa" (a person or group opposing fascism) and "truther" (one who believes that the truth is being hidden) are now included. "Woke" has been entered as an adjective and is eligible for play in its comparative and superlative forms, "woker" and "wokest."

Dedicated Scrabble players recognize that knowing which adjectives may be modified with the "un-" prefix can dictate whether you experience the vicious joy of successfully challenging your opponent's play or the mortification that comes with losing a challenge (and your next turn). Are "unshowiest," "untrendiest" and "ungaudiest" playable? Yes, yes and no.

"Ew" and "OK" are the newest additions to the roster of two-letter words, bringing the total to 107, ranging from "aa" (a kind of lava) to "za" (pizza). A familiarity with these can increase players' chances of putting their letters on the board, building off words from previous rounds. Serious players have almost certainly committed the list of two-letter words to memory, and the truly dedicated have command of all the three-letter specimens, which now number 1,054, as we've added "sho" (a former monetary unit of Tibet) and "zen" (a state of calm attentiveness).

There are those who would sniff at words that are variant spellings of foreign monetary units ("qapik," from Azerbaijan) or recent coinages ("bizjet," for business jet), arguing that Scrabble should be restricted to words of common usage. But Scrabble is a game, not a term paper or an editorial, and these new words facilitate the game's playfulness. Furthermore, given that the language has for hundreds of years shifted and turned, spelling words in splendidly improbable fashion, and changing its mind on a whim, few things in life lend themselves to play as readily as the English language itself.

General Iron Industries is in an evolving neighborhood on the North Side, located alongside the Chicago River.

Polluter or good neighbor? Setting the record straight.

By Adam Labkon

For more than 100 years, my family's business, General Iron Industries, has provided a vital service: We process and recycle the Chicago area's discarded metal products, including demolition debris, vehicles and kitchen appliances. While the need for our recycling service has grown, our neighborhood along the North Branch of the Chicago River has changed dramatically.

Now, with our planned manufacturing district and industrial neighbors gone, we no longer fit amid the rapidly gentrifying development that will surround us. We get it, and because of that, we have begun the process to transition to a new site that will create and preserve jobs in Chicago.

During our transition, we want to work with, not against, our current and future neighbors to address their concerns, and assure them that our business is utilizing — and continually striving for — the best-in-class environmental controls.

Unfortunately, some have branded us with a scarlet "P" for polluter, and questioned the motives of aldermen who recently defeated an order ostensibly to restrict our hours, but which effectively would have crippled our operations. In the cynical view of such critics, aldermen who acknowledged the necessity of our business and our tenure in the neighborhood were deemed compromised, while the lone alderman who moved to effectively shut us down had only altruistic motives. This conclusion is both wrongheaded and dangerous because it lacks a thoughtful examination of the facts, starting with the record before a City Council committee and the entire council.

It should not be meaningless that the Department of Public Health has inspected our business 40 times in 2018 and has not found a single violation to support a credible claim that we are a public nuisance. Also missing is the Law Department's assessment that aldermen could run afoul by ordering the health commissioner to revoke our expanded hours without due process, including any documented evidence establishing that our business' permitted hours created a nuisance.

The fact is that our business provides a vital, albeit gritty, service for the Chicago area. When we process approximately 700,000 tons of obsolete metal products annually, we are removing the equivalent of all the garbage collected in Chicago in a single year. We also serve to keep city sanitation costs from skyrocketing and help prevent heavy metal objects from obstructing streets and alleys. Landfills are simply not a viable alternative.

The most important facts, however, demonstrate our commitment to environmental protection and public health. General Iron is one of only a few metal shredding facilities, and the only one in the Chicago area, that has installed a high-efficiency air filter to control particulate matter and metals emissions. Recent tests supervised by the federal Environmental Protection Agency showed that our particulate matter and metals emissions were far below relevant standards and our particulate matter emissions rate was less than 3 percent of our permitted limits.

Separately, the Chicago health commissioner stated in a letter last spring that it was inaccurate for a neighborhood resident to assert a public health risk based on a pilot academic study, which happened to be scientifically flawed. Further, our recent testing for 17 specific metals, as well as an additional impact assessment that General Iron voluntarily performed, yielded positive results.

Unfortunately, these important facts are being obscured by political malice, flawed methodology, and some environmental violations that we believe were premature and erroneous. Even so, we are working cooperatively with the EPA to resolve any issues. As a step in that process, we are committed to exceeding a state requirement to reduce our volatile organic compound emissions by 81 percent by installing new control equipment. We are preparing to spend approximately $2 million to operate the first metal shredder in Chicago, and one of the first in the country, with a highly effective regenerative thermal oxidizer that will greatly reduce VOC emissions.

In addition, we hope aldermen and city officials support our commitment to preserve jobs in the city for approximately 130 workers whose average income is $80,000 annually.

We accept that recycling the vast quantity of material that we process comes with a heightened level of responsibility to our neighborhood, as well as to our employees, suppliers and the entire city that we have proudly called home for more than a century.

A new site in the city offers an opportunity to rebuild our operation at a location with an expansive buffer and the chance to construct an enclosed, technologically advanced metal shredder. We are looking forward to having the same high standards applied in our new neighborhood.

Highway mileage fees: Set aside politics

By Joseph L. Schofer

The race for Illinois governor took an unusual turn recently when paying for maintaining the state's highways actually found its way into the debate.

One candidate's ad accuses his opponent of planning a mileage-based fee for use of the road system. Whether this was proposed or opposed by either candidate, the idea of charging directly for the use of the roads is a pretty good one for at least three reasons: We've massively underfunded transportation infrastructure in Illinois for decades; the current gas tax won't cut it; and mileage-based fees are more fair for all road users.

The first thing to be clear about is that the roads we use every day aren't free. We've just created a system that makes us think they are free, and the public, by and large, has accepted the ruse. We pay for building and maintaining highways through taxes on all that gasoline we put into our cars. In Illinois, the gasoline tax is now 19 cents per gallon (21.5 cents for diesel fuel) — a tax rate that hasn't changed since 1990. And there's a federal excise tax, 18.4 cents a gallon (24.4 cents for diesel), also dedicated to surface transportation, that was last increased in 1993! (Ryne Sandberg, who turned 59 on Sept. 18, was the Cubs' big star in 1990.) Consumer prices have gone up by almost a factor of 2 since then. The Illinois Economic Policy Institute reports that total revenue collected from our state's fuel tax started to decline in 2007, a trend that has continued every year since.

That's because our cars have become much more energy-efficient, allowing us to pay less for each mile we drive. The fleet average fuel economy (all cars, SUVs and light trucks) has increased 18 percent over the past 28 years; new car fuel economy has gone up by 35 percent. At the new car rate of 38 miles per gallon, you are now paying Illinois a half cent per mile to use the roads; combined with federal fuel taxes, you are paying about a penny per mile. In 1990 you were paying 36 percent more per mile. More recently, the hybrid fleet has grown rapidly, and there are a growing number of electric vehicles on the road. That's great for the environment, but those drivers in battery-powered cars aren't paying anything to use Illinois roads. For them it really is free.

It costs money, and lots of it, to maintain the roads — to fix the bridges, resurface highways and fill the potholes. And the older the infrastructure gets, the faster the burn rate of that ever-declining pot of maintenance money. It is not just a question of fixing what we already have. That fuel tax money also goes to relieving bottlenecks and adding to roadway capacity. Some of it supports mass transit, bicycle and pedestrian facilities, whose users pay nothing for the roads.

One solution to the shortfall is to raise the motor fuel tax. In the past five years alone, more than half the states have increased fuel taxes to ensure that they have the transportation infrastructure necessary to compete in the global economy. Still, that is a short-run approach, because fewer and fewer vehicles will depend on liquid fuels as we move to all — or mostly — electric fleets. In the long run, a better option is to replace the fuel tax with a mileage-based fee, a charge for the use of the road network based on miles driven: Pay for what you use.

But won't we need to track your vehicle to do this? Yes, and there is a lot of vehicle tracking going on right now, and most of us have accepted it with little or no pushback.

The overwhelmingly favorable response to open road tolling by the Illinois State Toll Highway Authority and tolling agencies across the country shows that tracking vehicle movements to assess charges is acceptable and can be done accurately and securely. There are thousands of video cameras watching the streets and parking lots in our major cities. Remember the 10 o'clock news stories about surveillance videos used to track criminals? They can track your car too. And through your smartphone, Waze, Google, INRIX and even Amazon all know where you are and where you've been.

We can protect privacy with a road user fee system, recording only distance driven by highway type and time of day, and dumping those data periodically after computing your road use fee. The mileage charge would replace the motor fuel tax, not sit on top of it.

But be forewarned — it is likely to grow over time, something the gas tax should have done all along if our political leaders were honest with us about the true cost of providing transportation infrastructure. Those mileage fees would be fair — pay for what you use — and fees collected on busy roads would show decision-makers where the market is and where new investments may be needed.

In Illinois, it has been just one more issue, or nonissue, in a heated race for governor. But when serious discussion begins, remember that a mileage-based road user fee is not a new charge for what had been free. It is a different, better and more efficient way to pay for what we have been secretly charging you for at least 90 years. The inescapable fact, testified to by crumbling bridges and congested highways, is that drivers have not been paying the true cost for their roads. There is no such thing as a free highway, and there are better ways to pay for them.

This scheme probably seems pretty radical — especially if that's a Tesla, Leaf or Volt in your driveway. But it would be familiar to people in Oregon, California, Minnesota, Nevada or Delaware, where experimentation with mileage-based road user fee systems is underway or under study.

Do not be misled by myths that promise to eliminate the need for us to pay for transportation infrastructure: Self-driving cars will still need roads. Private-sector investments to pay for our transportation infrastructure are indeed investments. The banks, bondholders and equity partners are in the game for the money. They want it back, with some profit. Where does that money come from? Us, the road users, train riders and taxpayers. Paying by the mile simply makes good sense.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Tell all

Given that President Donald Trump's term is less than half over, I would like for biographers to wait until 2021 before publishing any new books. There is much more material waiting to be gathered.

— Raymond J. Strauss, Grayslake

Stuck on repeat

"Witch hunt," "Russia hoax," "deep state," "fake news" and "no collusion." These are a few of the terms that are constantly in the news. These terms can be heard on television, read in the newspaper, observed on social media and seen on the internet.

In 1977, a study was conducted that showed that if something is repeated often enough, people will eventually believe it whether it is true or false. This phenomenon is called illusory truth effect, validity effect or reiteration effect. The study showed that repetition, saying something over and over again, would breed agreement whether it is true or not. Exposure to false information changes the perceived truthfulness of information and the actual truth is lost.

Notice how often you hear or see these or similar key terms mentioned above again and again. Additional terms that are often seen or heard include "enemy of the people," "fake news media," "alternative facts," "failing New York Times" and "totally legal."

Not only are these terms misleading, but their repetition is also dangerous to our democracy and leads to further division of our country.

Tax folly

I always laugh when I hear a candidate talk about raising taxes on the rich.

But what bothers me more is why no one in the press ever questions what this means.

And I think the reason is what the candidate thinks is rich and what the taxpayer thinks is rich are worlds apart. I took a look at the Illinois state income tax statistics for 2016 and found the data very interesting. Income is grouped at different amounts, and the top grouping is $500,000 or more. I believe that the vast majority of taxpayers in Illinois would think that this would constitute the rich, but that is beside the point. There were over 50,000 tax returns in Illinois that had an income in that group. The total tax that was paid for in that group was $2.9 billion. If the tax was increased from the current 4.95 percent to 10 percent (which would be a tough sale) that would yield an additional $2.9 billion or so. In 2016, this additional revenue would not even have covered the budget deficit.

So the question is how does someone get away with saying that increasing the tax on the rich would allow the Illinois government to decrease taxes on the middle taxpayers, give property tax relief and increase spending on education.

It doesn't add up.

Equal access

The current state of civil discourse and behavior in the U.S. can, in my opinion, be attributed to a huge disconnect between the perception of the civil rights we are all presumed to have and the actual availability of the machinery that enables access to those rights.

The "machinery" that the founders envisioned would forever prevent the person-to-person conflict so often seen today included "freedom of the press," and ready access to our legal system via attorneys, courts and juries.

My contention is that vast swaths of our population do not have free and convenient access to those freedoms, giving those citizens few options to handle differences between themselves or other local entities, aside from personal confrontations or "eating crow." Too many of late elect to resort to violence.

I think it would be naive to ignore the role that "think tanks" play in this scenario — if they occupy themselves with things like gerrymandering, voting restrictions and abortion rights, I think we can safely assume that they've taken steps to control the ownership of rural America's press and pressured the American Bar Association into restricting or influencing the pro-bono obligations of America's attorneys.

I think we all have to pay a lot more attention to what's happening in Washington.

Reflecting on actions of 10 years ago

The traditional anniversary gift for a 10th anniversary is tin or aluminum, so to mark 10 years since the financial crisis, let's make a pinky swear and vow not to turn a tin ear to what happened and learn some important lessons.

To mark the occasion, I turned to what I think may become the first big picture, historical account of the event. Columbia University Professor of History Adam Tooze has penned a 600-page analysis of the causes and effects of the financial crisis called "Crash: How a Decade of Financial Crises Changed the World."

Rather than focus only on U.S. events, Tooze highlights how the highly interconnected globe was doomed to feel the impact of the financial crisis "and the economic, political and geopolitical responses to that crisis are essential to understanding the changing face of the world today."

While a geek like me was delighted to immerse myself in the Tooze tomb, it also made me think, what larger lessons can I learn, 10 years after the global financial cataclysm? I went back to some of my notes and media appearances from the early days of the crisis to see if the advice and analysis I proffered at the time holds up today.

On Sept. 26, 2008, when I was a practicing planner and investment adviser, I was a guest on a TV network. The anchor asked, "Should I pull out of my investments and wait until the storm passes?" My answer was: "Assuming that you're a long-term investor and don't need to access your money for 10 years, guard against the emotional pull of the mattress. Look, going through bear markets is the price you pay to be an investor. If you pull out, you risk not participating in the recovery and yes, we will recover from this difficult period."

Soon after, I fielded a lot of angry emails from people who thought that my advice was lousy. More importantly, I started to recognize an underlying fear that I had never experienced in my 20 years in the business. I quickly realized that it was important to acknowledge that the 2008 sell-off was not like a run-of-the-mill bear market.

While I was reluctant to state my innermost anxiety — that the financial system was on the precipice of a major meltdown — I needed to recognize that there was a huge emotional component at work for everyone with money at risk.

When I was on the air a month later, I started the segment differently by saying: "This is a scary and difficult time," and recognized that some may have made the mistake of taking on too much risk.

Then I reiterated that for long-term investors, sticking to the pre-crisis game plan would serve them well. But at the time, the U.S. stock market was down about 25 percent. Six months later, the magnitude of the loss would double. Of course, with a longer lens, it's easy to see that fighting the urge to sell and remaining with a diversified portfolio makes sense. But in real time, that was hard to do.

Anniversaries of market upheavals should be a time to reflect on both are smart and not-so-smart actions we took — not to gloat but to ensure that we don't repeat mistakes of the past.

REWARD YOURSELF

Tips for making loyalty and points programs work

By Emily Rosenbaum
Tribune Content Agency

Loyalty programs and rewards credit cards have their own rules, points systems and fine print, and some seem to intentionally be confusing.

Perhaps you signed up for a loyalty program at a hotel chain you frequent, but you have trouble keeping track of your points and how to use them. Maybe you got a rewards credit card and you have enough points for a free flight, but then you hit blackout dates. You may start wondering if it's worth the hassle.

Rewards programs can be beneficial, however, if you are willing to spend a little time and employ some tips to get the most out of them.

Think about what you want

Do you live for an upgrade to a ritzier room? Interested in a free flight or the use of the member lounge at the airport? Think about what you want and then do a little online research. WalletHub.com and ThePointsGuy.com have comprehensive lists of the best rewards programs out there based on various criteria.

Opting for a simple cash-back credit card or a travel one with no blackout dates or foreign transaction fees may be the smart move for you. There also are credit cards with miles that never expire and that allow you to transfer travel points to other programs, including Southwest Airlines Rapid Rewards and the Marriott and Hyatt loyalty programs.

Sign up for programs you actually will use

If you enjoy staying at Marriott hotels, for instance, then it makes sense to be a member of the Starwood Preferred Guest program, which offers several benefits when you stay at any Starwood hotel. Starwood, Wyndham Rewards and other programs also offer credit cards that earn you bonus points you can use for travel.

If you are a big fan of cruises, then opt for a rewards program from a specific cruise line you enjoy.

Think about where you live

Interested in a co-branded airline credit card? There are many out there with varying points systems and bonuses, but the most important consideration might be where you live. If your local airport is dominated by an airline, such as United in Houston, then that airline's card is probably your best bet.

Other airports, such as O'Hare in Chicago, are served by many major airlines, so you can choose between several cards.

Read the fine print

What will the points get you and how can you use them? Do you get the most bang for your buck when you use points for travel or cash back? Are there blackout dates? How quickly do points expire? Is there an annual fee for the credit card after the first year? What's the APR? Read all the fine print and decide if the program or card is right for you.

It makes sense to have only one or two credit cards to make it easier to pile up your points. That also will help keep you from charging too much.

Make sure you are getting a good deal

It's easy to get hooked on the idea of getting something for nothing, but you still are spending money. It's a transaction, so be smart about it. If booking a domestic flight will get you heaps of miles toward an overseas flight you have been savoring, then go for it.

Always pay off your balance each month to avoid interest charges that could end up negating the rewards you got for your card purchases.

Keep track of everything

If you have multiple loyalty accounts and have trouble juggling all the details, try AwardWallet.com. It allows you to add and track your account balances for more than 600 loyalty programs, including Amtrak, Amazon, KLM, Kayak, Walgreens, Petco, Hilton and Royal Caribbean. According to the Award Wallet site, at least 20 percent of all frequent-flier miles never get redeemed.

The basic service is free and you can get alerts when points or rewards are about to expire.

Look into dining programs

Dining programs are an easy way to double your pleasure because you rack up rewards for paying with a specific credit card and get extra points when you eat at a participating restaurant.

If you have a card that slides you bonus points on dining, such as Chase Sapphire Preferred, you can enroll in an airline's dining program and pay with your registered card. Several major airlines and hotels also have dining programs that are linked to their loyalty programs and co-branded credit cards.

Use the shopping portals

It doesn't make sense to go to a retailer's website if you can earn rewards through a credit card, airline or hotel's shopping portal.

Members can scroll through an online mileage mall, such as AAdvantage eShopping mall, and get points or miles for what they spend. Those miles or points can be in addition to the rewards earned for using the credit card.

Redeem your points

This seems like a no-brainer, but it's easy to forget what you've earned, especially if the company isn't alerting you or you have no idea what you can earn.

You may have racked up points on a credit card and not be aware that you can get cash back or a gift card to Target, L.L. Bean, Macy's or another favorite store. Redeem those points.

Naming trusts as IRA beneficiaries

When it makes sense

By Elliot Raphaelson
The Savings Game

IRA expert Ed Slott makes an important point regarding naming trusts as IRA beneficiaries. "There is no tax benefit that can be gained with a trust that cannot be gained without one."

If an adviser or attorney tells you otherwise, you need a new adviser or attorney. However, there are situations in which naming a trust as your IRA beneficiary may be the proper solution. But you should use the trust for only personal (non-tax) reasons.

Some of the reasons would be when the ultimate beneficiary is a minor, disabled, incompetent or otherwise unable to make his/her decisions. Other reasons would be to manage the trust funds, to deal with a second marriage situation or for creditor protection. Your attorney should be able to inform you as to whether you would need creditor protection in your state.

Because of excellent returns on equities over the last nine years, many IRAs have increased greatly in value. Therefore, owners of substantial IRAs may want to control the post-death distributions and restrict easy access to beneficiaries who might not be able to manage a large inheritance.

In this situation, the owner of the IRA can consider naming the trust as the beneficiary. The beneficiary of the trust could be the child or any other individual the IRA owner specifies. The owner could also specify an initial income beneficiary and name subsequent beneficiaries who would receive the remainder of the trust assets after the initial beneficiary dies.

The main purpose of the trust should be to control or protect post-death distributions from the inherited IRA (or other retirement plan). If that is not the intention, then a trust may not be the right solution.

In order to protect the stretch option for beneficiaries, the trust must be established properly under applicable IRS rules. If it isn't done right, the stretch option is lost. It is necessary to use an attorney who understands the IRS rules that apply to IRA distributions.

Here are some circumstances in which naming a trust as an IRA beneficiary can makes sense:

Minor as beneficiary:

If a beneficiary is a minor (based on state law), then a trust should be used because minors cannot make tax decisions. If a minor is named as a direct beneficiary, the probate court could require a guardian be appointed.

A guardian could be named as a beneficiary based on existing legislation, but the custodian in most states cannot make IRA distribution elections. In addition, the custodian does not have the same rights that would be granted to the trustee of a trust. A trust may be the best alternative in this situation.

Managing the IRA:

The trust may also be desirable if the beneficiary needs help managing IRA funds and taking required distributions. Consider the trust option if the beneficiary is not physically or mentally capable of self-care, or is unable to handle money responsibly. If there is danger that an unsophisticated beneficiary may be taken advantage of, use a trust.

Second marriages:

A trust can be used as the IRA beneficiary when IRA owners want to control the destination of the IRA. An IRA owner may want the income from the IRA go to the second spouse, but the remaining assets go to the children from the first marriage.

In this situation, the trust to use is a QTIP (qualified terminable interest property) trust. In the opinion of Ed Slott, QTIP trusts have unique problems and generally should not be named as an IRA beneficiary.

The main reasons not to name a trust as an IRA beneficiary is to avoid restrictions and trust complications. In addition you would save on estate or income tax. Trust income taxes are the highest income tax rate. (The Roth IRA is the best IRA to leave to a trust because distributions will be income tax free.) Also, there is the cost associated with establishing the trust.

You should make sure your attorney has expertise regarding IRAs when considering naming a trust as an IRA beneficiary.

Safeguard your home before the storm

Seal cracks, take inventory, go over insurance

By Kimberly Lankford
Kiplinger

Q: Is there anything I can do to protect my house before the next hurricane?

A: Yes, you can safeguard your home from storm damage before hurricane season ends at the end of November. Here are some steps to take:

Secure your home

The best time to protect your home from hurricanes is when you're replacing your roof. But even a few days before a hurricane, you can still walk around your house and shine a light in your attic to make sure any tiny cracks are sealed so water can't come in, says Leslie Chapman-Henderson, CEO of the Federal Alliance for Safe Homes. Caulk and seal around doors and windows.

Clean your gutters and make sure downspouts are clear and pointing away from the house. Make sure your sump pump is working, and consider a battery-powered backup. If you're in a high-risk area, you can protect your windows with 5/8-inch plywood or thick plastic shields. (And when you have more time, consider impact-resistant glass or storm shutters and impact-tested doors.)

LISAFX/DREAMSTIME

Your garage door is often the largest and weakest opening. Make sure the rollers and tracks are tightened, and consider buying a kit to brace the door, says Chapman-Henderson.

Also check all exterior door frames to make sure that the screws are tight and that the length of the deadbolt reaches all the way to the door frame.

Check out government resources

The Federal Emergency Management Agency offers hurricane preparation checklists as well as contacts for states' emergency management divisions.

The Department of Homeland Security's hurricane preparation page at Ready.gov includes steps to take starting 36 hours before a hurricane hits your area. You also can sign up for weather alerts from the National Weather Service.

Create a home inventory

This is the No. 1 thing that hurricane victims say helped them get their claims paid smoothly. Take your smartphone and walk through your house, open up closets and make a video of your home and possessions. Then store it on the cloud or in a way you can access it outside your home.

Many insurance companies and the National Association of Insurance Commissioners have inventory tools. Gather records of valuable purchases and other key documents.

Understand your insurance coverage

Many people don't realize until after a hurricane that their claims may not be paid if the damage is determined to be from flooding, as many Houston residents discovered after Hurricane Harvey. Homeowners insurance covers wind damage and wind-driven rain, but not flooding, which is water from the ground up. For that, you'll need a separate flood insurance policy.

The National Flood Insurance Program has a 30-day waiting period before its coverage kicks in. Private insurers often have shorter waiting periods, but they usually have a moratorium on new policies when a storm is on its way.

Get in the game to save money on college

The annual race to score money to pay for college starts Oct. 1, when the new FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) becomes available for the 2019-2020 school year. And because much of the money is given out on a first-come, first-served basis, it pays to get going right away.

After writing some recent columns bemoaning the $1.4 trillion mountain of student loan debt, I hate to provide the instruction manual for taking on this debt. But not only is the FAFSA form required to apply for federal student aid, it also forms the basis for distributing free money in the form of grants, work/study programs and many scholarships.

This year the process will be easier and more convenient. Applicants can now fill out the forms on a smartphone. It's all done through the new MyStudentAid app, which can be downloaded for Apple and Android devices.

The app is expected to be ready soon to retrieve parents' 2017 income tax forms. Currently, the retrieval tool is only available to those who file online at FAFSA.ed.gov. That 2017 information will be used for filing, although if family circumstances have changed since those tax forms were filed last April, there is an opportunity to update the information.

So don't wait until January when you have your 2018 year-end income to start filling out the forms.

Here are a few more tips for FAFSA filers:

- Gather your information in advance. Start by setting up your account and creating a password. This process will create your Federal Student Aid ID. Parents and children can and should create separate passwords, helpful for parents who want to keep income information private and out of view of either the student or a divorced spouse. You'll need social security numbers, birth dates, driver's license numbers, 2017 tax information and W-2 forms to fill out the forms completely. Be sure to save the information every time you use the website or app.
- Start now. Nearly 60 percent of high school seniors fill out the forms. The earlier you file, the sooner you get your SAR (student aid report), the form that lets you know how much aid you might be eligible to receive. This report helps schools put together a total financial aid package for you.
- If you're applying to a state college or university, list that school first on your application. It is an indication to the school of your priorities. And many state schools have earlier deadlines, so be sure to check the deadlines for your state.
- Remember, filing the FAFSA is free. There is no need to pay anyone to help you file the forms.
- This is also the time to check out scholarship websites such as Scholarships.com, Fastweb.com, Tuitionfundingsources.com and the scholarship search service at SallieMae.com. The earliest applicants get the money on these free search websites.

Taking control of the financial aid process is the first step toward a successful college career. If you can't be bothered to treat this as a major project, perhaps college isn't for you. The only thing worse than graduating with the burden of student loan debt, is not graduating yet still having to repay some debt. Now is the time to get serious about college — and money. That's the Savage Truth.

Terry Savage is a registered investment adviser and the author of four best-selling books, including "The Savage Truth on Money." She responds to questions on her blog at TerrySavage.com.

Make travel with parents a breeze

If you and your parents are travel buffs, there's no need to halt your trips because they are retired and on a budget.

Look for discounts

American Airlines, United, British Airways and Southwest are a few of the airlines that offer senior fares on some routes. Amtrak offers a 10 percent discount for seniors for coach travel on most trains. Many major hotel chains in the U.S. offer senior discounts, so shop around for the best rate. You might also consider taking advantage of a hotel rewards program for free stays and other benefits.

Consider travel insurance

Travel insurance is a good idea for long, expensive trips and can reimburse you if there are accidents, illness, emergency evacuations and more. At Travelinsurance.com and Squaremouth.com, you can plug in your dates and other information and compare plans. Read the fine print to know when cancellation, interruption and delays are covered.

Get traveler's checks

They may seem horribly old-fashioned to you, but traveler's checks still can be a good idea for those who worry about using credit cards, carrying lots of cash or trying to find an ATM in a remote area when traveling overseas. You also can get prepaid credit cards for your trip.

8 habits of the most valuable employees

By Marcel Schwantes
Inc.

How do you define a valuable employee? Is it experience or maybe work ethic? Do you see competence in a specific area as the determining factor or employee value?

What about soft skills? Do they hold the same value when interviewing for a rock star engineer or strategist position? Well, they should.

While technical skills and other hard skills defined in the job description matter, it's an employee's people skills and a whole host of other personal attributes that are crucial for long-term success.

Most companies undervalue soft skills or the impact people development will have on an organization. They assume the hard stuff holds more weight and makes the business go around.

In turn, when difficult personalities and egos emerge, when sudden change and uncertainty take place, and when conflict seems inevitable, it's the employees with the natural ability to communicate and respond to crisis who hold the most value.

Here are eight employees you should consider hiring:

1. People who are active listeners

Effective communication isn't just about talking; it is also the ability to listen and understand what's happening on the other side of the fence. The best people-centered employees will listen and reflect back what they hear to clarify ("What I hear you saying is ..."), and they ask questions to probe the other person's feelings or opinions. This can be as simple as: "Tell me how you feel about this."

2. People with emotional intelligence

Once you land a job and start thinking about increasing your role, managing multiple priorities, getting promoted, leading others and navigating political landscapes, IQ will be begging for EQ to show up.

Daniel Goleman, an authority on EI/EQ, suggests asking yourself a few questions, including: Am I usually aware of my feelings and why I feel that way? Can I adapt smoothly to changing realities? Can I usually sense the feelings of the people I interact with and understand their way of seeing things?

3. People with a high degree of patience

People with patience have the capacity to process a situation about to go south, get perspective, listen without judgment to someone they disagree with, and hold back from reacting head on. Practicing this rare business virtue may mean deciding to sit on your decision.

By thinking over things with a rational and level head, you'll eventually arrive at a more sane conclusion. These are the people you want to build a company culture around.

4. People who avoid drama

Employees with emotional intelligence have a clear advantage: they cut through the drama by telling the facts as they see them and how it affects them. Let me unpack that further: These people are able to diffuse an emotionally charged moment with a calm demeanor, explain the outcome they're hoping for, and ask for other ideas for solutions with an open mind.

By hiring people with the ability to manage conflict, you'll see more constructive, productive, and respectful discussions taking place, which can help resolve hairy situations to everyone's satisfaction.

5. People who can manage their emotions

Self-control is a personal competence developed in every person. The question behind self-control is: Can I manage my emotions and behavior to a positive outcome? Not everyone can.

EDHARDREAM/DREAMSTIME

Goleman says this about people with self-control: "Reasonable people — the ones who maintain control over their emotions — are the people who can sustain safe, fair environments. In these settings, drama is very low and productivity is very high. Top performers flock to these organizations and are not apt to leave them."

6. People who reject multitasking

Productive people are successful in managing their time because they avoid juggling many things. Research says multitasking is a myth and can be damaging to our brains. You end up splitting your focus over many tasks, losing focus, lowering the quality of your work and taking longer to hit your goals.

7. People who value and practice well-being during work hours

Top employees are looking for companies that allow them to integrate work and life during their schedule, and the smartest bosses are giving them that flexibility because it makes business sense. One example is the workplace habit of taking short, frequent breaks.

A 2016 study showed that hourly five-minute walking breaks (out in nature with a friend, for example) boosted energy levels, sharpened focus, and improved mood throughout the day. These "microbursts of activity" increase motivation and concentration and enhance creativity, according to researchers at Stanford University.

8. People who self-manage extremely well

Forget time management; you want people who are good managers of "self." By managing your life, tasks, and priorities efficiently, you can seamlessly transition to more productivity, higher work satisfaction, and better personal well-being.

And that's what the most valuable employees do to reach their most optimal level of self-management. For example:

They start and end meetings on time, and don't get sidetracked or allow the agenda to get hijacked.

They set boundaries and say no to people when needed, so their time is protected.

They identify the time of the day when they're most productive and focus their energy on doing the most important things during those times.

They're aware of time-wasters such as visitors dropping by their workspace to gossip; they ensure they don't spend time in useless meetings, distracting phone calls, and anything that else that disrupts their state of flow.

OBITUARIES

DAVID WOLKOWSKY 1919-2018

Developer helped transform Key West

By Antonia Noori Farzan
The Washington Post

In 1962, Key West, Fla., was a remote naval outpost on six square miles of limestone rock, mostly known for its proximity to Cuba at the height of nuclear tensions with the communist island. Rickety wood-frame houses lined its streets, at times threatening to collapse. The declining waterfront, once a busy trading port, offered visitors little more than a selection of weather-beaten bars.

David Wolkowsky, a developer who had returned to the city of his birth after years away, saw opportunity. For the next few decades, he devoted himself to the task of restoring the island's dilapidated historic buildings, eventually helping Key West become a major resort destination.

Wolkowsky, 99, who became widely known as "Mr. Key West" for his role transforming the island, died Sept. 23 at a hospital in Key West. The cause was complications from pneumonia, said a nephew, photographer Timothy Greenfield-Sanders.

By salvaging turn-of-the-century homes, Wolkowsky helped ensure that the city of 25,000 retained a distinctive sense of character. Key West has an enduring eccentricity that prevents it from being just another wealthy seaside town: Free-range roosters wander the streets with impunity, bougainvillea sprouts from yards with wild abandon, and a year-round crew of crusty burnouts provides a welcome contrast to the tourists lining up for fudge and trolley tours.

Instead of high-rise condominiums, the city offers something rarely found elsewhere in Florida: a sense of history.

"David began to renovate those buildings and really, I think, was one of the main people responsible for the historic preservation movement and for showing people that Key West's past, its history, was worth saving, had a certain glamour to it, was beautiful," Arlo Haskell, a local historian, told Miami-based radio station WLRN last week.

Wolkowsky's own family was deeply embedded in that history. His grandfather Abraham was a Jewish immigrant from Russia who arrived in Key West in the early 1880s and quickly went from being a street peddler to becoming a successful local merchant. The family business eventually included clothing stores, saloons and a billiards hall.

David William Wolkowsky was born in Key West on Aug. 25, 1919. Several years later, the city went through an economic slump after a devastating hurricane hit the island and the Navy pulled out many of its operations in the wake of World War I.

"We left on the train when I was 4 and moved to Miami," Wolkowsky told the Key West Citizen. "I can remember eating guava jelly on saltine crackers in the dining car of the train."

After attending the University of Pennsylvania, he spent four years in the Merchant Marine and settled in Philadelphia. Under the name David Williams — to avoid anti-Semitism — he began renovating and rehabilitating shabby rowhouses near Rittenhouse Square in Center City, participating in Philadelphia's inner-city renaissance.

Wolkowsky was 42 when his father died, and he inherited a handful of aging buildings in Key West. He bought up more underappreciated properties, including a former cigar factory, a bar where writer Ernest Hemingway used to drink and an old department store.

His efforts to preserve and protect ramshackle buildings went against the conventional wisdom of the 1960s. Throughout the country, cities were bulldozing blighted historic neighborhoods in the name of urban renewal.

Walkable, tightly packed commercial strips like Key West's Duval Street were falling out of favor and were quickly being replaced by shopping centers with ample parking.

Wolkowsky instead chose to invest in Key West's historic Old Town. In 1968, he opened the Pier House, a waterfront hotel where Jimmy Buffett played some of his earliest dates. With a keen sense of public relations, Wolkowsky invited literary celebrities including Tennessee Williams and Truman Capote to come and stay — and got national magazines to photograph them at the hotel.

Williams, who later settled in the city, "was the best PR person for Key West back then," Wolkowsky told the Key West Citizen newspaper. "He brought the likes of Vivien Leigh, Gary Cooper and many others to Key West."

Many years later, the Miami Herald identified the opening of the Pier House as "the turning point in Key West's transformation from washed-up military outpost to funky tourist destination." In the late 1970s, Wolkowsky sold the hotel for $4.6 million and invested in other properties.

His survivors include a sister.

Typically dressed in Panama hats and crisp white linen shirts, Wolkowsky rode around Key West in golf carts and a vintage Rolls-Royce. In 1974, he purchased Ballast Key, a small rocky island located roughly eight miles from Key West.

"I used to come out and picnic here when it was a deserted island," he told the Fort Lauderdale Sun-Sentinel in 1983. "And I'd see people cutting down these mangrove trees which took decades to grow, cutting them to make hot dog fires, and I'd get annoyed. Then I got interested in buying the island to protect it."

In August, the Monroe County commission voted to rename the island "David Wolkowsky Key."

The name change has not been made official, since the U.S. Board of Geographic Names doesn't consider applications until five years after a person has died.

Smith, David Charles

David Charles Smith, 68, spent more than forty years playing music in Blues and rock clubs in Chicago while supporting himself and his family doing contracting work and carpentry. He died in his sleep on Thursday, September 27, 2018, surrounded by family at St. Joseph's Hospital following open heart surgery.

Born in Philadelphia, Dave Smith spent part of his childhood in Girard College, an orphanage for boys, but eventually made his way to Jacksonville University in Jacksonville, Florida, where he captained the undefeated 1969 varsity soccer team and graduated with a BA in Fine Art. After graduation, he worked a variety of jobs before becoming a contractor: on riverboats on the Illinois River, as a first-grade teacher in an elementary school, and as a door-to-door salesman.

He played bass and guitar with several notable Chicago bands, including the Joe Kelly Band, the Virginia Klemens Band, Scorched Earth Policy, Big Sweaty Men, The Bread and Butter Band, Rockin' Billy and the Wild Coyotes, and Ice Bombe. His thick, smoky bass lines and laid-back style of lead guitar drew on Chicago's rich Blues genre and his easy, friendly manner made him a much-in-demand player.

His oldest child, Lena Rush, captured the many sides of her father on Facebook: "My Dad. The blues man, the Chicago icon, the carpenter, the fine craftsman, the father to literally anyone who needed a Dad, the patron to every bakery, the art curator, the love, the kindness, the mentor, the joker, the chocolate lover, my big cookie, the love of my life, the sweetest friend to every single person in this city/entire world."

In addition to his daughter Lena, Dave is survived by his wife Wendy Love and his four other children: David Colin Smith of New York, NY, Andrew Smith of Chicago, Brianna Love of Chicago, and Isadora Smith-Ritchie of Chicago, as well as two brothers, Patrick Charlton of Newport Beach, CA and Martin O'Hara of Phoenix, AZ.

A memorial service is scheduled for Saturday, October 13 at 3:30 p.m. at St. Paul's United Church of Christ, 2335 North Orchard Street, Chicago. Following the service, at 6 p.m., friends and family will gather for a celebration of Dave Smith's life at Nick's Beer Garden, 1516 North Milwaukee, Chicago, where Dave Smith performed regularly over the last 20 years.

In lieu of flowers, the family kindly requests donations be made to the American Heart Association or the Musicians Foundation, which supports musicians facing financial difficulties due to illness.

GAME 163!

Let's play one more

In a season when we couldn't figure out the Cubs, a rare Game 163 is only fitting

PAUL SULLIVAN
On the Cubs

This is not your father's Game 163, this Cubs-Brewers showdown Monday for the National League Central title.

"I don't expect anything less than a bloodbath," left fielder Kyle Schwarber said Sunday after the Cubs sealed the deal with a 10-5 win over the Cardinals at Wrigley Field. "I think it's going to be a really quality game and it's a wild-card game to see who goes to the wild-card game and who goes to the Division Series."

This isn't a do-or-die situation, more like a do-or-do-it-again, since the loser still gets to compete in Tuesday's wild-card game against the Rockies or Dodgers, who will have their own Game 163 to decide the NL West champion.

Monday's Cubs-Brewers loser forfeits home-field advantage in any ensuing series, while the winner gets home field through at least the National League playoffs, not to mention a couple of days off to kick back and watch the wild-card games on TV.

The Brewers come in with a seven-game win streak and have played tough against the Cubs all season. Although the Cubs earned the right to host Game 163 with an 11-8 record in the season series, the Brewers won four of six in September as they erased a five-game division deficit.

NL WILD CARD?
If the Cubs lose Monday ... The Cubs would play the loser of the NL West tiebreaker between the Dodgers and the Rockies at 7 p.m. Tuesday at Wrigley Field.

NLDS?
If the Cubs win the division or the wild-card game ... The Cubs would play Game 1 of the National League Division Series on Thursday. As division winners, they would host the wild-card winner. As the wild-card winners, they would play the Brewers at Miller Park.

I know we've moved into the Golden Age of Cubs baseball, but blowing a five-game division lead in the last 26 games and being forced to play a tiebreaker that could subject them to the crapshoot wild-card game seems closer to a step back to a "Cubbie occurrence."

Bears' romp made possible by Buccaneers' horrific 'D'

BRAD BIGGS
On the Bears

When the Bears finally get their offense rolling at full capacity — and coach Matt Nagy would be the first to tell you after four regular-season games they're a long way off — it's rarely going to resemble what we saw in Sunday's 48-10 demolition of the Buccaneers at Soldier Field.

That's because they won't often encounter a defense so negligent with its assignments and so woefully out of place. Bad defenses don't leave receivers uncovered downfield as often as the Buccaneers did Sunday, and the Bears and second-year quarterback Mitch Trubisky did what is expected. They pounced and then pounced again and never let up.

The last time the Bears whipped an opponent by more than 38 points was when they went into Dallas and blanked the Cowboys 44-0 in 1985. This isn't to draw a comparison to that team but to point out how unusual such blowouts are. Usually, even a lousy opponent can steady itself for at least a short period. That never happened.

Trubisky makes Bears history, restores hope on special day

DAVID HAUGH
In the Wake of the News

Late in the fourth quarter of Sunday's 48-10 flattening of the Buccaneers, the Soldier Field video board honored Mitch Trubisky for becoming the first Bears quarterback since Johnny Lujack in 1949 to complete six touchdown passes in a game.

Sheepishly, Trubisky smiled on the sideline as his image appeared.

"It's very humbling because you know the history of the Bears," Trubisky said. "Just a special day."

Chicago has been waiting to use that word — special — to describe Trubisky and it applied often as he completed 19 of 26 passes for 354 yards and those six touchdowns without an interception. That gave Trubisky an eye-popping passer rating of 154.6.

For local context, Jay Cutler, the franchise's most statistically accomplished quarterback ever, started 102 games for the Bears from 2009 to 2016 and never did that. From a league perspective, Trubisky's six-touchdown game matched Patrick Mahomes of the

‘Franchise QB’ finally arrives

The Mitch-O-Meter is a simple concept. There are only three levels worth noting when assessing the play of Bears quarterback Mitch Trubisky, a choice of just three grades to hand out, a mere three floors on which to exit.

On Sunday against the Buccaneers, Trubisky just zoomed from the basement that is the Bears winning despite him to beyond the acceptable stage of the Bears winning with him and rocketed to the penthouse that is the Bears winning because of him.

Just like that. In the span of a week. Ding! Ding! Ding!

But wait. The Bears didn’t just win because of Trubisky. No, they made history because of him, destroying the Bucs with five touchdown passes in the first half, something no Bears quarterback had done before.

In the first three games this season, Trubisky had led the Bears to four offensive TDs total. The Bears matched that in the first 20:01 Sunday.

The red zone that had been the Bears’ private hell all season? Five-for-5 Sunday, all Trubisky TD passes.

In their first three games, the Bears had managed just five plays of 20 yards or longer. They had six on their first five possessions Sunday.

Talk about taking the express elevator to franchise quarterback.

Sunday was why Bears general manager Ryan Pace traded up from third to second in last year’s draft and traded other draft picks to make sure he could get Trubisky.

But wait. There’s more. So much more.

It was all you could eat for the quarterback who was essentially completing his rookie season with his 16th career NFL start. Trubisky displayed his much-hyped accuracy on passes both deep and short.

One of the latter throws worth highlighting gave the Bears a 21-3 lead. Trubisky fired a delicate but critical pass to Tarik Cohen on a post pattern from the Bucs 9, like Trubisky was Tom Brady or Aaron Rodgers or some guy the Bears always face but never get to root for.

OK, so the Bucs have the worst pass defense in the league. What if Trubisky hadn’t ruined them? That would’ve been an issue. The Bucs deserved to get slaughtered, and Trubisky delivered a resounding beating.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mitch Trubisky is all smiles Sunday after a six-touchdown performance against the Bucs.

Credit rookie head coach Matt Nagy for some terrific calls after the script was done. The Bears have scored most of their offensive TDs by adhering to the scripted plays chosen earlier in the week. But Sunday, Nagy and the Bears administered a chokehold on the game that was being played in front of them.

Nagy said he would continue to take shots downfield and offensive coordinator Mark Helfrich said Trubisky had to make the routine plays looks routine. Check and check.

Nagy’s play-calling gave Trubisky great matchups and big windows, and Trubisky connected almost every time. He hit on 14 of 18 passes for 289 yards and a Rodgers-like average of 16.1 yards per pass. And that was just the first half.

Trubisky would start the second half with a sixth TD toss.

Credit the offensive line, too, for giving Trubisky the kind of time he hadn’t seen before. I’m including the wide receivers and tight ends — targets who turned into protectors playing all-around games.

Oh, and those TDs went to five receivers, which answered some questions about Trubisky’s ability to read the field.

And for what it’s worth, Trubisky induced the Bucs into a couple presnap penalties by varying his cadence. Yeah, Trubisky displayed big-boy talent all over the place.

The Bears go into their week off with a 3-1 record that is good enough for sole possession of first place in the NFC North. Like we all predicted.

But just like that, perhaps, the Bears head into their week off with a franchise quarterback.

Bears hot, but Bucs’ ‘D’ gets an ‘F’

of the game,” Buccaneers coach Dirk Koetter said. “All aspects.”

The Bears (3-1) have won three straight for the first time since the start of the Marc Trestman era in 2013. They are atop the NFC North at the quarter pole of the season, so questions about Trubisky’s ability to see the field and incorporate the vertical passing game, as well as concerns about red-zone struggles, will quiet down as the team enters its week off. Those were legitimate concerns even after wins over the Seahawks and Cardinals. Those wins were propelled by a defense that was once again dominant with two interceptions of Bucs backup Jameis Winston and one of starter Ryan Fitzpatrick to go with four sacks.

Trubisky completed 19 of 26 passes for 354 yards with six touchdowns, becoming the first quarterback for the franchise not known for its quarterback play to throw six scores in a game since Johnny Lujack did the trick in a 52-21 rout the Chicago Cardinals on Dec. 11, 1949.

Trubisky, who was averaging 5.7 yards per attempt entering the game, had six completions for 30 yards or more and the Bears moved up and down the field at will. They scored on their opening possession for the third time in four games and finished 4-for-4 in the red zone. With the offensive line setting the tone, they averaged 8.7 yards on first down, including handoffs to Jordan Howard when the running back finally got some touches in the closing minutes with a goal of grinding out the clock. It was as if whatever Nagy dialed up worked just as it was planned in practice, creating mismatches galore.

“That is what we look to do,” said running back Tarik Cohen, who had 174 yards of total offense and was one of five players to catch a touchdown. “Try to get the mismatch everywhere across the field. You can’t expect it, but you look forward to it with the things that we do and the things that we bring with this offense. We want that to happen.”

Cohen, wide receivers Taylor Gabriel and Josh Bellamy and tight end Trey Burton had huge gains with no defenders in sight. Safety Justin Evans fell down on Burton’s touchdown. A pump fake sprang Bellamy wide open for a touchdown. Cohen smoked cornerback M.J. Stewart for a 35-yard gain as he was loose down the sideline.

Trubisky explained that the similar looks the offense gives have started to create openings. In other words, the high volume of wide receiver screens and jet sweeps brings with it more fireworks.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Taylor Gabriel (18) and the Bears receiving corps torched the Bucs secondary on Sunday.

“It’s just plays off plays,” he said. “We have a run built into (the 20-yard touchdown pass to Bellamy), and then we have a bubble screen, and that’s the play as well. It was a built-in pass, pump fake, and you’ve got to see the safety and they’ll bite on the bubble because they’ve seen it so many times on film.”

Koetter was asked if he would consider replacing defensive coordinator Mike Smith after the debacle, which came six days after the Bucs fell behind 30-10 at halftime in a loss to the Steelers. The Bucs have allowed 139 points, most in the NFL.

“Based on that game today, we couldn’t make enough changes,” Koetter said. “We should fire every person that was on that field starting with me. That was horrific.”

Bucs linebacker Lavonte David said he hadn’t seen Trubisky perform like that on film.

“You haven’t and I haven’t,” David said. “But you know when he’s got guys running down the field wide open, I mean, he’s got no choice but to hit ’em. They didn’t do anything special. They just lined up and flat-out beat us. You’ve got to give them props. They kicked our butts.”

It’s part of the gradual building process, one the Bears hope to continue when they play again Oct. 14 vs. the Dolphins in Miami.

“When you’re a coach, you start seeing things in the beginning of the week that ... you say, ‘OK, I think this could work. I think that could work,’” Nagy said. “And then you give it to the players and they practice it. And then when it happens in the game, it’s pretty cool, and that happened today. It happened more so than most games.

“I don’t know how long it is going to take, but I think today we got a lot better offensively and our belief in one another increased greatly.”

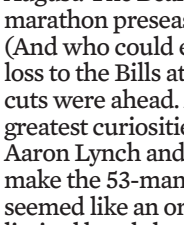
Trubisky toast of the locker room



DAN WIEDERER
On the Bears

In the more-you-can-do department, Bears running back/receiver/return specialist Tarik Cohen has carved out another new niche — as postgame emcee and victory party DJ.

Thus Sunday’s celebration at Soldier Field, the Bears’ third in as many weeks, left Cohen searching for just the right jam to get the home locker room appropriately lit.

“We had ‘My Dawg’ by Lil Baby going,” Cohen said. “And we were all just looking at Mitch like, ‘That’s my dawg.’ Because he balled today.”

Who could argue? After a 48-10 thrashing of the Buccaneers, there was little question that second-year quarterback Mitch Trubisky was the toast of the locker room and the talk of Chicago. In his first truly special performance as a Bear, Trubisky threw five first-half touchdown passes and six for the game. He made good decisions and a series of terrific throws. He threw for 354 yards, ran for 53 and gave the Bears a 3-1 record. And the Bears, in turn, gave a rejuvenated home crowd a glimpse into their potential.

“This shows us what we can be consistently,” Cohen said. “And that’s really what we’re putting our big emphasis on right now. Consistency. Learning to do this week in and week out.”

What an afternoon. What a month.

Pause for a second, Bears fans, and take yourself back to the last day of August. The Bears had completed a marathon preseason the night before. (And who could ever forget that 28-27 loss to the Bills at Soldier Field?) Final cuts were ahead. And at the time, the greatest curiosities surrounded whether Aaron Lynch and Marcus Cooper would make the 53-man roster. The Bears seemed like an ordinary team with limited breakthrough potential.

Now imagine if someone told you about the series of scintillating September surprises that awaited the Bears.

On the first day of the month, the general manager traded for one of the top five defensive stars in the league.

On the final day, the franchise quarterback threw six TD passes — to five receivers.

In the 28 days in between, the Bears came to life as a team full of playmakers, a united bunch with a think-big mentality. They put together their first three-game winning streak in more than five years. They put their claws into first place in the NFC North.

September’s lone blemish? A loss at Lambeau Field in which the Bears actually led the Packers by 20 points in the second half.

What a month indeed.

Circle Sunday as the day fun officially returned to Soldier Field. Not since 2013 had there been such a contagious pregame buzz pulsing off the lakefront. And not since December 1980 had the Bears rewarded their home fans with a win so lopsided.

Sunday’s blowout was a complete performance in every way. In addition to Trubisky’s explosion, Cohen and Taylor Gabriel each topped 100 receiving yards. Trey Burton opened the scoring with a beautiful 39-yard touchdown catch. Mack had his fourth strip-sack in as many weeks. The defense had four sacks and three more takeaways.

Eddie Jackson, who had a second-quarter interception himself, took a moment to appreciate the positive energy spreading through his home stadium. Jackson hasn’t been around long and has had to live through only one of the Bears’ four consecutive last-place finishes. Still, there he was after Sunday’s game telling rookie cornerback Kevin Toliver how different Sunday felt.

“This is new,” Jackson acknowledged. “When I got here last year, you could feel the energy was down. We were losing games. We’re not even thinking about losses right now. We’re thinking about how we can continue this.”

Through four games, the Bears have had eight offensive players reach the end zone and 13 defensive players record either a sack or a takeaway. Suddenly, they seem to have a roster with few glaring holes.

And if Trubisky continues to play at anywhere near the level he reached Sunday, the Bears have every reason to dream big. For the rest of this season and the half-decade beyond it.

Mack called Trubisky’s performance Sunday “real special” and said he knew it was coming. Mack said he could see it in Trubisky’s face. He could feel it in his demeanor.

“He’s a very, very, very competitive dude. And a special talent. And you seen that today. ... From here on out, that’s what you want to see.”

If the regular season’s first month could include so many spectacular surprises, who knows what the next three might hold.

Allen Robinson, right, celebrates his first touchdown as a Bear with fellow wide receiver Taylor Gabriel in the first half of Sunday's blowout of the Buccaneers at Soldier Field.

2nd score almost perfect

Trubisky does sterling job on play that ends with Robinson's 1st TD as Bear

By Rich Campbell | Chicago Tribune

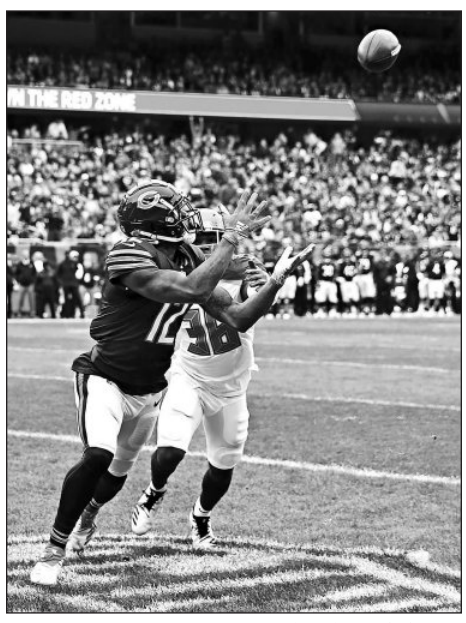
Pity the sportswriter tasked with choosing the Bears' play of the game from Sunday's 48-10 dismantling of the Buccaneers. Mitch Trubisky threw six touchdown passes, tripling his previous career high, for goodness' sake. The only folks this spoiled for choice dine at country club buffets.

It's a dirty job, but somebody's got to do it. It's a rare one too. Trubisky (354 yards, 154.6 rating) became the first Bears quarterback to throw six in a game since Johnny Lujack hung a six-pack on the Chicago Cardinals on Dec. 14, 1949, at Wrigley Field.

Consider each of Trubisky's touchdowns, the details of his long-awaited breakthrough. Indeed, when subjected to the most intense scrutiny, one stands out above the rest.

The filet mignon at the carving station was touchdown No. 2: Trubisky's 14-yard lob to Allen Robinson on a corner route in the first quarter.

Yes, the first of Taylor Gabriel's two 3-yard touchdown catches featured a fake handoff to backup QB Chase Daniel.



JOE ROBBINS/GETTY

Allen Robinson beats the Bucs' M.J. Stewart and hauls in the Bears' second score of the day in the corner of the end zone.

Yes, Trey Burton's sliding 39-yard touchdown catch on the opening series was the longest of the six.

But Robinson's touchdown met three important criteria.

One, it was the first of four red-zone touchdowns a week after Nagy lamented how the Bears offense sputtered inside the 20 against the Cardinals.

Two, it was Robinson's first touchdown since joining the Bears on a three-year, $42 million contract in March.

Three, and most importantly, Trubisky identified the man-to-man coverage, anticipated the throw and hit the bull's-eye, conquering three elements with which he was inconsistent during the first three games.

"It was just a really good throw," coach Matt Nagy said. "He made a lot of those today."

Two understatements in one breath.

On first-and-10, Robinson and Tarik Cohen lined up wide left with Robinson in the slot. As Trubisky took the shotgun snap, running back Jordan Howard released into the left flat.

Cohen got upfield and crossed in front of Robinson, clearing the safety and attracting three defenders to the post.

That left Robinson in single coverage against cornerback M.J. Stewart. Robinson won an inside release with a nifty juke, then stemmed his route with an inside step that seemed to lose Stewart.

Trubisky's timing made the play. He actually began his throwing motion before Robinson left Stewart behind with that hard step at the 5-yard line.

"I anticipated the corner to Allen, and I saw him win on leverage," Trubisky said. "I let it go pretty early ... but you play with that confidence and conviction, you kind of know where it's going to go. So Allen was wide open."

So, too, was Howard in the left flat. The defender who was supposed to cover him ran with Cohen. Trubisky recognized Howard was uncovered, but he was more confident that throwing to Robinson would be a touchdown.

"You just have a bunch of options and playmakers in this offense," Trubisky said, "and it all comes together when those guys up front are playing so well."

That was evident in how the Bears scored touchdowns on all four red-zone trips a week after going 1-for-3. Nagy, Trubisky and others attributed the improvement to sharp practices last week.

Trubisky's pass was perfectly placed out in front of Robinson where only he could catch it. "Really fantastic ball," the receiver said.

Robinson held it long enough for the touchdown to count, then chucked it into the stands. That'll cost him $6,683 in a fine from the NFL.

Oh, well. There were four more touchdown passes to come.

Pity the Buccaneers.

THREE KEYS

The drought is over. The Bears have their first three-game winning streak since opening the 2013 season at 3-0. The Bears trampled the Buccaneers 48-10, a feel-good win in every way. Matt Nagy's team now charges into its week off with a surge in confidence and a belief that they can become a playoff team. Here's our review of the three keys for Sunday's game.

1. Find a comfort zone

Postgame recap: Yeah, so ... It appears the Mitch Trubisky troubleshooting went pretty well. From the first drive Sunday, the second-year quarterback was locked in and playing with a blend of calm and aggressiveness that had been lacking in the first three games. Trubisky led the Bears on a 75-yard touchdown march to open the game. But the fireworks didn't stop after the scripted plays were finished. Trubisky threw five touchdown passes before halftime and six for the game, a career high. He threw for 354 yards, a career high. He posted a 154.3 rating, a career high.

2. Red alert

Postgame recap: Only four red-zone touchdowns in the first three weeks? No sweat. The Bears put the ball in the end zone on all four red-zone trips Sunday. Matt Nagy showed off some creative play-calling, particularly on Trubisky's 3-yard chest-pass touchdown to Taylor Gabriel, a gadget play that came with both Trubisky and Chase Daniel in the shotgun. In the first quarter, Trubisky made a pretty 14-yard TD toss to Allen Robinson on a corner route. Trubisky's 20-yard scoring strike to Josh Bellamy came with a sharp play design and a well-executed pump fake by the quarterback.

3. Inside job

Postgame recap: Buccaneers quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick came into the game as the NFL leader in passing yards (1,230), including 17 completions of 20 yards or longer. Fitzgerald only lasted a half Sunday, benched in favor of Jameis Winston when the third quarter began. Akiem Hicks' first-quarter sack was a thing of beauty with the Bears defensive end absolutely abusing Bucs guard Caleb Benenoch and shooting into the backfield. Roy Roberston-Harris and rookie Bilal Nichols combined on a sack of Winston in the third quarter.

Safety Eddie Jackson (39) celebrates his interception with Roquan Smith and Bryce Callahan (37) on Sunday at Soldier Field.

Happy but hungry

Trevathan: 'It feels like we're a complete team' after defense, offense rip Bucs

By Colleen Kane | Chicago Tribune

Bears safety Eddie Jackson could see the playmaking ability of his team's offense in practice. Linebacker Danny Trevathan heard coach Matt Nagy preaching that an offensive breakout was around the corner after the Bears defense carried the load in their first two victories.

So after Mitch Trubisky threw for 354 yards and six touchdown passes in a 48-10 victory over the Buccaneers on Sunday at Soldier Field, the Bears defenders were amped to celebrate the full-team, full-game effort.

"I'm hyped over there," Trevathan said of his reaction on the sideline to the offense. "I'm trying to sit down to get my time, but every time they make a play I can't help but be happy. It feels like we're a complete team. It's the first time we did that for four quarters. The team is happy where we're at, but we're still hungry."

The Bears defense also did their thing against a hyped Buccaneers offense.

The Bucs entered the game with the NFL's top passing offense through three games. Veteran quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick had become the first player in NFL history to pass for 400 or more yards in three straight games.

But Fitzpatrick was out of the game by the second half after completing just 9 of 18 passes for 126 yards with two sacks and an interception as the Bucs fell behind 38-3 at halftime. Jameis Winston fared only a little better in his season debut, completing 16 of 20 passes for 145 yards, a touchdown and two interceptions in the second half.

"All week Coach Vic (Fangio) was telling us we had to come with the right mindset to win this type of game," outside linebacker Leonard Floyd said. "We made sure we kept piling it on. We didn't want to let up. We didn't want what happened to them last week, when they came back on Pittsburgh, (to happen to us). We wanted to come out every series and put it on them, to keep them down."

With three interceptions Sunday, the Bears have matched through four games the franchise-low eight they totaled in each of the last three seasons. Their 18 sacks, after four Sunday, rank third in Bears history through the first four weeks, behind only the 1987 and 1976 teams, which had 33 and 21 through four games.

The individual accomplishments also are piling up, most notably for outside linebacker Khalil Mack.

Mack has a forced fumble and a sack in each of his first four games with the Bears. He is the first player to record a forced fumble in each of the first four games since 1994, when forced fumbles first were recorded.

"Everybody's playing fast," Nagy said. "They're playing relentless. They're having fun out there. They're playing aggressive. It's controlled chaos, and I just love it."

The defense forced the Bucs to go three-and-out on three of six drives in the first half, and safety Eddie Jackson ended another with an interception. He anticipated Fitzpatrick's throw to Mike Evans and charged forward for his second pick of the season.

Early in the third, Mack charged toward Winston and swatted at his arm. Winston's pass floated high into the air, and Trevathan intercepted it. Aaron Lynch's first career interception came after the two-minute warning in the second half. He jumped into the air to grab Winston's pass and punctuate the Bears' victory.

The combination of a clicking offense and a surging defense is precisely what the Bears had been dreaming about during the first three weeks.

"It's a vision (where) you can see what's in front of us," Jackson said. "If they come out striking like that every week, it's going to be scary. It's definitely going to be scary."

Hicks pushes official, may face ban

By Rich Campbell and Colleen Kane
Chicago Tribune

Bears defensive lineman Akiem Hicks was ejected for pushing a game official in the second quarter of the Bears' 48-10 win over the Buccaneers on Sunday.

Hicks will be subject to a minimum $33,425 fine by the NFL and a possible suspension pending the league's review of the altercation.

Additional league discipline could result from Hicks' subsequent outburst as he left the field. He pulled off his jersey and shoulder pads and threw them into the stands near the tunnel to the Bears' locker room.

Hicks did not stay in the locker room to speak to reporters after the game.

Referee Jerome Boger said the incident followed a scuffle between Hicks and a Buccaneers player following Bears safety Eddie Jackson's interception on third-and-19.

"The official — the down judge — was breaking up a skirmish between two opposing players, and after he got the players separated, No. 96 came back and charged through him and pushed him."

Hicks was ejected when the officials ruled his push to be a separate and deliberate act from his altercation with the unidentified Bucs player.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Akiem Hicks sacks Buccaneers quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick on Sunday at Soldier Field. Hicks later was ejected for pushing an official.

Hicks stayed on the Bears bench for several plays into the next series instead of leaving the field. Game officials alerted the Bears that he had to leave the field once they became aware Hicks had not.

He would not have been subject to a game penalty for throwing his equipment into the stands because that occurred in the team area on the sideline, Boger said.

"It's an emotional game, and he knows that he can't do that," Bears coach Matt Nagy said. "We've got to handle it."

Daniels on the line: Bears rookie offensive lineman James Daniels played the first offensive snaps of his career.

The second-round pick out of Iowa rotated drives at left guard with Eric Kush, who has started all four games. Daniels played only on special teams during the first three games.

Daniels wasn't the only rookie to get his feet wet. Seventh-round pick Javon Wims was active for his NFL debut as fellow rookie Anthony Miller sat out with a left shoulder injury. Wims was targeted once with no receptions.

Injury report: Outside linebacker Sam Acho suffered a pectoral injury in the first half and didn't return. Nagy didn't immediately have more information about the nature of the injury.

Inactives: Cornerbacks Prince Amukamara and Marcus Cooper both were inactive as expected because they are recovering from hamstring injuries.

Outside linebackers Isaiah Irving and Kylie Fitts, offensive lineman Rashaad Coward and defensive lineman Nick Williams were healthy scratches for the Bears.

Gutsy Bears restore hope

Chiefs, the wunderkind whose feat earlier this season only intensified the pressure on the guy selected eight spots ahead of him in the 2017 NFL draft.

"I was just feeling it," Trubisky said. "I didn't set out to set any records. All the credit to my teammates who made it easy for me today."

On a day steeped in Bears history, Trubisky restored hope for the future at Halas Hall. On a big day in Chicago sports, the boldest headline belonged to the Bears: "Trubisky arrives." The Buccaneers defense proved no match for Mitch but, even with their embarrassingly bad effort, Trubisky looked too good to care. He exhibited poise behind solid protection, showing improved field vision by spreading the ball to seven receivers. He showed progress and rewarded patience. He made plays.

"Hopefully this is a day we look back and say you remember that day he had that great game and it helped catapult him," Bears coach Matt Nagy said.

This was mature Mitch, Trubisky 2.0, a passer known for accuracy finally showing some, such as on the 14-yard touchdown pass to Allen Robinson that fell just out of the reach of Bucs beaten cornerback M.J. Stewart. This was a quarterback showing the polish from those 2,000 preseason practice snaps Nagy valued so much. This was faith in Trubisky replacing doubt, the game a beleaguered quarterback needed, a city starving for results wanted and a coach oozing with optimism promised.

"Leader, passion," Bears wide receiver Taylor Gabriel said of Trubisky. "He put the work in throughout the week and that's what you get."

This is what it looks like when everything comes together, the most impressive half of football by the Bears since at least the Lovie Smith era, the kind of performance that stops people from rolling their eyes when someone starts talking playoffs. This was an NFL version of Alabama vs. Louisiana-Lafayette, a rout emphatic enough to announce the Bears as legitimate NFC North contenders, a display of offensive innovation and execution worthy of coaching clinics.

"Everything Coach Nagy was calling was working," Trubisky said.

By halftime, the Bears had amassed 400 yards on offense. For the sake of comparison, that exceeded the four-quarter output in 14 of Trubisky's previous 15 NFL starts, the exception coming in a 482-yard anomaly last Dec. 10 against the Bengals.

"I give it to Nagy, man," Gabriel said. "The different plays, the schemes. We kind of schemed them up throughout the week, hoping those plays came open and they did."

One play amused the Bears more than the rest. On Gabriel's 3-yard scoring catch in the third quarter, the Bears lined up with backup quarterback Chase Daniel alongside Trubisky, who faked a handoff to Daniel after shoveling a pass to Gabriel. The Bears call the play "Willy Wonka," and it's always sweeter for a coach when he can discuss gimmicks that actually work. Add another one to Nagy's list.

"You like that?" Nagy asked with a grin. "We just kind of mixed it up, had some fun with it."

As the Bears enter their week off riding their first three-game winning streak in five years, Nagy's team ranks among the league leaders in fun now after Trubisky looked capable of justifying all the belief in him. The frivolity started when outside linebacker Khalil Mack arrived in the Sept. 1 trade with the Raiders, changing everything and making Bears fans eternally grateful to Raiders coach Jon Gruden.

For the fourth straight game, Mack sacked the quarterback and forced a fumble, a lethal combination that naturally created intimidation every series for the opposing offense. Mack led a defensive effort that made any "FitzMagic" disappear, harassing Bucs ballyhooed starter Ryan Fitzpatrick into completing only 9 of 18 passes for 126 yards and an interception. Rusty replacement Jameis Winston threw two more picks in the second half.

After the first quarter of the NFL season, the Bears defense rivals the Rams offense as the most dominant unit in the NFC. Is it too early to wonder if the Bears-Rams game Dec. 9 will be flexed into prime time by NBC? Forgive Nagy for focusing on answers to more pressing questions.

"I just told the guys, whether you're 1-3 or 3-1 never get too high, never get too low," Nagy said. "We are trying to figure out who we are every day."

This is who they were Sunday: A complete football team. And that's what the Bears can be in 2018 when their young quarterback doesn't play like one.

ROUNDUP

Rodgers mediocre in Pack's shutout

Associated Press

The Packers put together their most complete game of the season in a 22-0 victory over the Bills on Sunday in Green Bay, Wis.

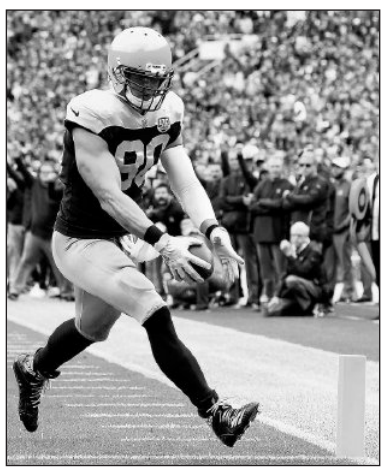
Aaron Rodgers, playing again with a brace on his injured left knee, was not at his best, going 22 of 40 for 298 yards with his first TD pass to Jimmy Graham.

But the Packers had decisive edges in total offense (423-145) and first downs (22-11), and the defense had seven sacks and pitched a shutout for the first time in eight seasons.

Raiders 45, Browns 42: Derek Carr threw four TD passes and a tying two-point conversion with 30 seconds left in regulation, setting up Matt McGrane's FG in OT for Jon Gruden's first win since returning as coach. Carr threw for 437 yards, Marshawn Lynch ran for 130 yards and Amari Cooper (128) and Jared Cook (110) topped 100 yards.

Titans 26, Eagles 23: Marcus Mariota hit Corey Davis with a 10-yard TD pass just before the end of OT for the Titans' best start since 2013 at 3-1. They trailed 23-20 in OT before coming back behind Mariota, who in his first start since leaving the opener with an injured elbow threw for 344 yards and two TDs while also running for a score.

Cowboys 26, Lions 24: Brett Maher's fourth FG came as time expired after Dak Prescott's 34-yard completion to Ezekiel Elliott. Elliott had 240 all-purpose yards.



DYLAN BUELL/GETTY

Jimmy Graham scores in the first quarter of the Packers' shutout of the Bills at Lambeau Field.

Bengals 37, Falcons 36: Andy Dalton's 13-yard scoring pass to A.J. Green with 7 seconds left won it. Dalton moved the Bengals 75 yards in four minutes, completing two fourth-down passes to Tyler Boyd, who had 11 catches for 100 yards.

Patriots 38, Dolphins 7: Tom Brady threw for 274 yards and three TDs to deny the Dolphins their first 4-0 start since 1995. Rookie Sony Michel rushed 25 times for 112 yards and his first career TD.

Texans 37, Colts 34: Ka'imi Fairbairn took advantage of his second chance on a 37-yard FG attempt, making it as time expired in OT. He had missed the first kick wide left — just after the Colts called timeout. The Texans ended the league's longest losing streak at nine games.

Saints 33, Giants 18: Alvin Kamara ran for three second-half TDs and Wil Lutz kicked four FGs in the Saints' third straight win. Kamara ran for 134 yards on 19 carries. Drew Brees went 18 of 32 for 217 yards and Eli Manning 31 of 41 for 255 yards.

Chargers 29, 49ers 27: Philip Rivers threw for three TDs and Melvin Gordon rushed for 104 yards as the Chargers rallied from an 11-point deficit. C.J. Beathard, starting for the injured Jimmy Garoppolo, went 23-for-37 for 298 yards with two TDs and two INTs.

Jaguars 31, Jets 12: Blake Bortles threw for a career-high 388 yards and tossed two TD passes.

Seahawks 20, Cardinals 17: Sebastian Janikowski kicked a 52-yard FG as time expired.

Ravens 26, Steelers 14: Joe Flacco threw two TD passes and Justin Tucker kicked four FGs. Flacco went 28-for-42 for 363 yards as the Ravens ended a three-game losing streak to their AFC North rivals. Ben Roethlisberger was 27 of 47 for 274 yards with a TD and an INT.

AROUND THE NFL

■ Seahawks: S Earl Thomas fractured his lower left leg in the victory over the Cardinals. Thomas, embroiled in a contract dispute with the franchise, made an obscene gesture toward the Seahawks side of the field as he was carted off with his leg in an air cast.

■ Bengals: TE Tyler Eifert broke his ankle in a gruesome injury and likely will undergo surgery, ESPN reported. Eifert landed awkwardly on his right leg after catching a pass and being tackled. His leg went sideways as he came down. He appeared to have tears in his eyes when he gave a slight wave to the crowd as he left the field.

■ Browns: In his starting debut, Baker Mayfield passed for 295 yards and two TDs but also committed four turnovers in the loss to the Raiders. "I'm tired of growing pains," coach Hue Jackson said. "We can be better. Baker can be better. Our offense can be better, defense can be better, kicking game can be better."

■ Patriots: TE Rob Gronkowski, one of Tom Brady's favorite targets, left the win over the Dolphins in the third quarter with a right ankle injury and didn't return. ... WR Josh Gordon made his Patriots debut, finishing with two catches for 32 yards.

■ Colts: Adam Vinatieri kicked his NFL-record 566th FG at the end of the first half and added No. 567 in OT before the Texans rallied for a 37-34 victory. "It's weird, you know, you come off a loss and it doesn't feel quite the same way," Vinatieri said. "I'm sure I'll look back at in years to come and it will be pretty special." The previous record belonged to Hall of Famer Morten Andersen. Vinatieri moved within 26 points of breaking Andersen's career scoring record of 2,544.

■ Jaguars: Coach Doug Marrone insisted he was following the strategy chart by calling for a two-point conversion after a TD in the final seconds of a 31-12 rout of the Jets. Or maybe Marrone sent a message to the team that snubbed him for its coaching job in 2015. But Marrone denied anything sinister. "We're not good enough to send a message right now," Marrone said.

■ Cardinals: In his first NFL start, Josh Rosen completed 15 of 27 passes for 180 yards and a TD with no INTs. But the Cardinals dropped at least five passes in falling to 0-4 for the first time since 1986. "I don't care if I threw 10 picks, I'd take that and a win over what happened today," Rosen said.

■ Dolphins: Ryan Tannehill went 11-for-20 for 100 yards and an INT against the Patriots and was pulled in the fourth quarter in favor of Brock Osweiler. Osweiler connected with Frank Gore for a 6-yard TD pass, the Dolphins' lone score.

CUBS

Cubs host Game 163

"They can win eight or nine or 10 in a row, but you know what, baseball is baseball," Cubs catcher Willson Contreras said. "They're going to come here, they're going to try and do too much. We're going to go out there and have fun, because any way, we're in. Both teams are in, so we can't put pressure on ourselves."

There's nothing like Game 163, as Cubs fans learned back in 1998 when they tied the Giants for the wild-card spot on the final day of the regular season to set up a tiebreaker at Wrigley Field. That, however, was do-or-die, and the team hadn't made the postseason in nine years, so the pressure was on the Cubs not to be "the Cubs."

They backed into the game with six losses in their last eight games, but beat the Giants on behind Steve Trachsel's dominance and Gary Gaetti's home run. The atmosphere was unique to say the least, and some fans outside the bleachers paraded a giant helium balloon of Harry Caray's head up and down Waveland and Sheffield avenues, making sure the late announcer was part of the show.

The 1998 season was one of the wildest in Cubs' history, with Kerry Wood's 20-strikeout game, Sammy Sosa's pursuit of the single-season home run record and Brant Brown's dropped fly ball at County Stadium in Milwaukee.

It all led up to that frenzied night that ended with a Cubs win and a Wrigleyville party that went on until the wee hours.

"Sometimes you shouldn't bother trying to explain the moment," Cubs pitcher Terry Mulholland said afterward. "You just have to enjoy it."

You really can't explain this Cubs season either. It may be one for the ages, but it has aged all of us from Day 1. If the team seems more confident in itself than the fans are, that's because it's true.

The Cubs tied the Brewers for the most wins in the National League going into Game 163, but it didn't feel like they were the best team by any stretch of the imagination. Their lineup of heavy hitters was yin and yang all year. In September, they ranked 27th in the majors in slugging (.357), and 28th with 20 homers.

But they managed to come through Sunday when it mattered most, with Anthony Rizzo knocking four hits, Contreras homering for the first time since Aug. 1 and Ben Zobrist coming up with the third-inning triple that woke up a somnolent crowd that seemed to be braced for the worst.

Manager Joe Maddon seemed to be throwing in the kitchen sink when he brought in Allen Webster to replace Mike Montgomery in the third-inning with the Cubs trailing by 2-0. Webster? A guy who hadn't pitched in the big leagues since 2015 until the Cubs brought him up in late September?

All around Wrigley, fans asked "Who in the world is this guy?"

"I'm sure," he said. "Yeah, it's been a few years since I've been in a locker room like this."

Webster recorded two outs and was credited with the win when the Cubs scored four runs in the bottom of the third, tying Yu Darvish with one 2018 victory. In a year that began with the slogan "Everybody In," Webster became the last one in.

"You always think about that stuff, but then again it's hard to believe it's really going to happen," he said.

It happened. We saw it. It was real.

Now comes the matchup we hoped would happen in the NL Division Series. We may yet see it happen, but consider Game 163 a sorbet to cleanse the palate. The return of Christian Yelich, flamethrowing reliever Josh Hader, and, of course, Ryan Braum the man Wrigley loves to boo.

Braun told me he feeds on the Cubs fans' hostility, which might be why he always seems to save his best performances for Wrigley.

"I think that's part of it," Brewers manager Craig Counsell said. "Players who get booed on the road, they always use that (as motivation). They don't boo the bad players on the road."

So that's what we have in store for Game 163, a bonus for everyone who loves baseball, rivalries and ignoring work for a few hours on a Monday afternoon.

Welcome to the bloodbath.

Rally thrillers

Two 4-run innings enough to force a tiebreaker game

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

The Cubs needed eight relievers and two four-run rallies Sunday just for the right to play the Brewers to determine the National League Central title.

But along the way to a 10-5 win over the Cardinals, long-awaited contributions surfaced that have the Cubs believing that their playoff run could be formidable.

"Whatever it takes, we'll be ready," Anthony Rizzo said after a 4-for-4 performance that included the go-ahead double during a four-run third inning that shifted the mood of a sellout crowd of 39,275 at Wrigley Field.

After overcoming a 2-0 deficit with clutch hitting and 6⅔ innings form the bullpen, the Cubs felt better about their chances against the Brewers, who overcame a five-game deficit on Sept. 3 and won their final seven games to finish with the same 95-67 record as the Cubs after 162 games.

The Cubs earned the right to host the tiebreaker based on their 11-8 record in the season series, but the Brewers won four of the six games against the Cubs in September and possess the hottest hitter in the game in Christian Yelich.

The winner gets a two-day break and home-field advantage throughout the NL playoffs, while the loser will host the NL wild-card game on Tuesday against the loser of the Rockies-Dodgers tiebreaker.

"You are managing two games (Monday)," Cubs manager Joe Maddon said. "It's how you get out of the blocks, feel what's going on, and make your best guess. But you have to consider both games.

"Of course you want to win (Monday). But if it gets more bleak, then you have to start considering the next day."

Maddon said the Cubs adjusted their rotation so lefthander Jose Quintana, who is 6-2 lifetime with a 1.60 ERA in 10 career starts against the Brewers, would be lined up to pitch Monday.

A bigger issue for the Cubs, however, is the state of their bullpen. Maddon didn't use Jesse Chavez or Justin Wilson on Sunday, and Steve Cishek threw only 10 pitches in his 79th appearance.

"We need a good start out of Q," Maddon said. "That's really important for us to be successful. That's going to be a big part of it."

The other important factor will be getting a lead early to prevent the Brewers from using their dominant relief threesome of Josh Hader, Corey Knebel and Jeremy Jeffress.

Brewers manager Craig Counsell hasn't named a starter, but all signs point to Jhoulys Chacin, a slider maven who has been pulled early in each of his last five starts because of the team's reliance on its bullpen.

"It's going to be a different animal," Maddon said of the need to score early. "Everyone will be in this heightened awareness. We talked about being more alert than normal."

The Cubs were 6-for-11 with runners in scoring position Sunday, and Willson Contreras hit a two-run home run, his first since Aug. 1, to cap a four-run fifth.

"I know haven't hit (many) homers this season, but you have be able to forget about that and help your team in any way," Contreras said. "We trust ourselves and (knew) there was a lot of game left."

Rizzo's third-inning double helped him become the first left-handed hitter in franchise history with at least 100 RBIs in four seasons.

"It's something I take pride in," said Rizzo, who had nine RBIs on April 30. "To be honest, I didn't think in May I'd be able to reach that. It feels good, but all that personal stuff doesn't matter. It's all about a win (Monday).

"I'll reflect on that stuff in the first or second week of the offseason. Now we got to figure out a way to win Monday."

CUBS NOTES

Unheralded relievers ride to rescue

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

The Cubs' core players haven't held their meeting on how they plan to distribute their playoff shares, but Allen Webster and Alec Mills might have earned themselves a bigger chunk than their service time with the team would indicate.

Webster relieved starter Mike Montgomery on Sunday afternoon and bailed him out of a jam in the third inning. Mills followed with two scoreless innings as the Cubs rallied to take the lead on their way to a 10-5 win over the Cardinals.

The victory, combined with the Brewers' 11-0 win against the Tigers in Milwaukee, forced a NL Central tiebreaker game at 12:05 p.m. Monday at Wrigley Field.

Webster, making his third appearance of the season, came in after Paul DeJong's double with one out against Montgomery and the Cubs already trailing 2-0. The right-hander struck out Tyler O'Neill, hit Patrick Wisdom with a pitch and retired Harrison Bader on a fly ball to right field.

He was credited with the win, his first in the majors since 2015, as the Cubs took a 4-2 lead in the third.

"It happened so fast I didn't have time to get nervous," Webster said. "It was, 'Get the job done.' "

Mills, appearing in his seventh major-league game this season, followed Webster. The 26-year-old right-hander kept the Cardinals off the board in the fourth and fifth innings before allowing the first two batters of the sixth to reach. Those runners scored against Carl Edwards Jr. after Mills left, but he helped stabilize the game as the Cubs increased their lead from 4-2 to 8-2.

Less than three weeks ago, Webster, 28, merely was staying in shape in his native North Carolina after Triple-A Iowa completed its season.

The Cubs thought Brandon Morrow would be available for the final 10 days of the regular season, but when his recovery from the bone bruise on his right forearm plateaued, Webster was sent to train at the Cubs' spring training facility in Arizona. On Sept. 19, when Morrow was ruled out for the season, Webster was called up.

Mills, who was promoted from Iowa on Sept. 9, helped manager Joe Maddon script his bullpen for the latter part of the game as the Cubs took a commanding lead.

"Webster and Mills were the secrets to our success," Maddon said.

The struggles continued, though, for Edwards, who was replaced by Randy Rosario after he issued a walk to Greg Garcia with two outs in the sixth.

"Carl having a rough day put a lot of stress on the guys," Maddon said. "We got to get that right. If he's right right there, all this other stuff probably doesn't happen. But I got to get him out there. He's a big part of what we do."

Extra innings: Javier Baez became the first Cub to hit at least 40 doubles since Anthony Rizzo (43) in 2016. ... The Cubs scored 10 or more runs 17 times, trailing only the Dodgers (18) in the NL.

WHITE SOX

TWINS 5, WHITE SOX 4

Season ends with 100th loss

By Patrick Donnelly
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The White Sox lost their 100th game of the year Sunday, wrapping up their season with a 5-4 loss to the Twins. It was the first time they've hit the ignominious number since 1970.

"As far as the numbers, they are what they are," manager Rick Renteria said. "I think I have to reflect on how we got to that point and some of the things we have to do to correct it, and move on."

One aspect to work on: Yoan Moncada's strikeouts. The Sox second baseman struck out once Sunday, giving him a major league-leading 217. That's just six behind the record of 223, set by the Rockies' Mark Reynolds in 2009.

Moncada was a small part of Joe Mauer's emotional goodbye from his hometown Twins.

Mauer, 35, the longtime face of the franchise, was playing the final game of an eight-year, $184 million contract. He doubled into the left-center gap with a line drive of Juan Minaya in his final at-bat.

Mauer then made a surprise appearance behind the plate in the ninth. He emerged from the dugout in his catching gear, the first time he'd worn it since late 2013, when a series of concussions forced him to move to first base. He stood alone at home plate as fans, teammates and opponents showered him with applause.

The 2009 AL MVP caught one pitch from Matt Belisle. Then he walked off to a final standing ovation and was replaced by Chris Gimenez.

"We had an opportunity to do that, and I didn't think that was going to be a possibility ever," Mauer said. "I'm glad I took that opportunity."

Twins manager Paul Molitor said he'd worked out the logistics of the moment with Renteria before the game.

"Rick was fantastic. I told him I didn't want to disrespect the game," Molitor said. "(I said) it would be a one-pitch scenario and we assured him that we would try to throw a ball. And it worked out."

Moncada was the batter at the time and said he was more than happy to do his part.

"When I went to home plate, he said, 'Hey, can you take the first pitch?' " Moncada said. "It was very exciting, and an emotional moment. I was just glad to be part of that."

Dodgers roll, set sights on West title

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The Dodgers want no part of a wild-card game or the long flight that would come with it.

The plan: another NL West crown.

Max Muncy and his free-swinging Dodgers mates are headed for a one-game showdown against Colorado to determine the division winner back home, jumping on the Giants from the start Sunday in a 15-0 win for a weekend sweep.

The Rockies routed the Nationals 12-0 at Coors Field, setting up a tiebreaker at Dodger Stadium on Monday that the home team has every intention of taking. The winner gets the division and hosts the Braves in the best-of-five NLDS starting Thursday; the loser is on the road for the NL wild-card game Tuesday against either the Brewers or Cubs.

"We'd rather win the division than be the wild card," Matt Kemp said. "We're going to play it like any game we've been playing this last month. We've been playing each game like a playoff game. We've got to keep it going."

Walker Buehler will start for the Dodgers (91-71) as the defending NL champions try for a sixth straight West title.

Rich Hill (11-5) pitched two-hit ball for seven innings Sunday to keep the Dodgers on a roll.

Manny Machado, Kemp and Muncy all joined the hit parade as the Dodgers left nothing to chance in Game No. 162. Kemp had a two-run double and RBI single among his three hits, while Muncy and Brian Dozier each hit two-run homers.

Now, on to game No. 163.

"It's obviously not do-or-die, but I think that it's a must-win game," manager Dave Roberts said. "To win the game and get a couple days off, to host the division series is very important."

AROUND THE HORN

■ Rockies: The playoff-bound Rockies are headed to Los Angeles for a tiebreaking game to decide the NL West title after routing the visiting Nationals 12-0 behind Charlie Blackmon's first career cycle. The Rockies, who are vying for their first division title, won for the ninth time in 10 games. Nolan Arenado hit two of the Rockies' five HRs. Trevor Story also went deep, and David Dahl homered for the sixth time in seven games. Blackmon tripled in the first, homered in the third, singled in the fifth and doubled in the eighth. LHP Tyler Anderson (7-9) scattered four hits over 7⅔ innings. RHP German Marquez (14-10) will start Monday against the Dodgers.

■ Brewers: With Monday's NL Central tiebreaker against the Cubs, Christian Yelich still has a shot at winning the NL triple crown. Stats from Game No. 163 will count to the season totals. Yelich is hitting .323, giving him a huge lead in the batting race. He has 109 RBIs, tied with the Rockies' Nolan Arenado and two behind leader Javier Baez of the Cubs. Yelich's 36 HRs are tied with the Rockies' Trevor Story and Cardinals' Matt Carpenter and one behind Arenado. The last NL player to win the Triple Crown was Joe Medwick in 1937 for the Cardinals.

■ Red Sox: OF Mookie Betts finished first in the majors in slugging (.640), runs (129) and WAR (10.8) and became the first player to to lead in batting average (.346) and also record at least 30 steals and 30 HRs. Red Sox teammate J.D. Martinez won the AL HR crown with 43.

■ Twins: 1B/C Joe Mauer doubled in his last at-bat Sunday in what likely was the final game of his career. The 35-year-old former AL MVP and six-time All-Star played his entire 15-year career with the Twins.

■ Angels: The Angels rallied past the A's 5-4, giving manager Mike Scioscia a victory at home in his final game as the team's manager. Scioscia led the Angels for 19 years. In 2002, they beat the the Giants for the franchise's only World Series title.

1903: ThePirates defeated theRed Sox, 7-3, in the first World Series game. Jimmy Sebring hit the first series home run. Deacon Phillippe was the winning pitcher and Cy Young the loser.
2014: Madison Bumgarner pitched a four-hitter with 10 strikeouts and Brandon Crawford hit the first grand slam by a shortstop in postseason history as the San Francisco Giants routed the Pirates 8-0 in the National League wild-card game.

Bobby Portis (5) goes up for a basket over the Pelicans' Julius Randle in the first half of the Bulls' win.

Pelicans' Mirotic sits out as LaVine, Dunn lead Bulls

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Predicting whether Nikola Mirotic and Bobby Portis would hash out last season's fight in which Portis' punch broke two of Mirotic's facial bones during a preseason fight was easier than guessing how the Lauri Markkanen-less Bulls would look in Sunday's preseason opener.

Mirotic and Portis didn't. And Zach LaVine and Kris Dunn sparkled in the Bulls' 128-116 win against the Mirotic-less Pelicans.

Looking explosive, LaVine finished with 21 points in 24 minutes, while Dunn added 12 points, eight rebounds and three assists while ballhawking defensively. In their Bulls debuts, Jabari Parker scored 15 points, while Wendell Carter Jr. posted 11 points and seven rounds, and Chandler Hutchison added seven points.

Get used to some of these shootouts for what projects to be a defensively challenged bunch.

As for Mirotic, he read Portis' comments last week complimenting his play last season following the February trade with the Pelicans in which the Bulls received a first-round pick that became Chandler Hutchison.

"I appreciate that," Mirotic said Sunday morning, sitting courtside at the United Center for the first time since the deal. "He also had a great end of the season. I watched some games. I obviously see all the stats. He had that huge game against Philly at home. I'm also kind of happy that he's finding his role and he's playing his best basketball."

But anyone seeking closure in the form of the two rehashing the incident for the first time will be waiting.

"I don't think there's something where we should talk," Mirotic said. "Sometimes, just that silence could help both of us. It helped when we were here. People were writing, 'But they're not talking.' But sometimes not talking and having a professional relationship on the court and playing well with him was huge.

"It was very, very challenging for me. But at that point, I had to prove that I was here for the team. And mentally, I was prepared to accept that challenge. When I came back, we won (seven) in a row; 'Niko's back.' "

Indeed, that was Mirotic's catchphrase during that unexpected stretch. The way Portis and Mirotic played effectively together last December when Mirotic first returned after missing 23 games because of his injuries remains one of last season's more remarkable storylines. The Bulls won seven straight and 10 of 12, and Mirotic, often playing alongside Portis, led the team in scoring five times and rebounding four times.

But like then, when the players merely slapped hands in support on the court but never talked off it, Mirotic and Portis didn't rehash history Sunday night. Mirotic didn't play as he battles minor tendinitis in his left Achilles.

"There is nothing behind. We were professional before. There's no reason to not be now," Mirotic said. "We all want to win when we play against each other."

Mirotic called returning to the United Center "emotional" and actually snapped some pictures of the court and building to send to his wife.

"We all know that it was kind of the best decision for all of us for me to move on," Mirotic said. "I think it's not about proving who won that deal. I have great memories here. I'm very thankful for the organization. They gave me a chance. I wish them the best luck. We are moving on.

"I need to just think about myself, to get better. It's an important year for me also. Whatever happens, I'm winning. You have to think that way. That's the mentality I'm always having."

BLACKHAWKS

A few key points before the opener

By Jimmy Greenfield
Chicago Tribune

The Blackhawks made their final roster cuts after Saturday's 4-1 preseason win over the Blue Jackets at the United Center, sending forward Dylan Sikura and goalie Collin Delia to Rockford in preparation for Thursday night's season opener against the Senators.

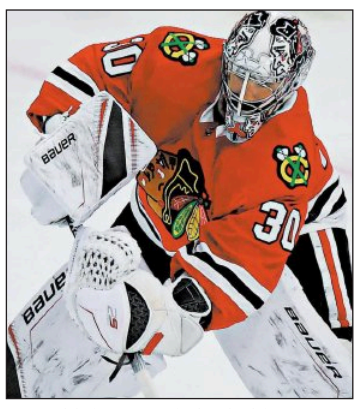
The 22 healthy players left in camp likely will be in Ottawa, but will these be the same players on the roster in a few weeks? Here's what we know about the Hawks' roster heading into the season:

1. Injuries will leave them without some key players for a significant amount of time. The main focus during training camp has rightfully been the health of goalie Corey Crawford, who still is suffering from post-concussion symptoms.

Coach Joel Quenneville said Crawford could return to practice this week, but how hard he can go and when he will be ready for game action remain unknown.

Injured defensemen Connor Murphy (back) and Gustav Forsling (wrist) won't be ready until mid-November at the earliest, which will give the coaching staff plenty of time to determine whether 19-year-old rookie Henri Jokiharju is ready for the NHL or needs more seasoning.

The Hawks have said the timetable for Murphy's return could extend into December; he'll be re-evaluated in a few weeks. On the other hand, Forsling has been skating, shooting and stickhandling during camp and appears to be on target for his return. The odd man out likely would be Erik Gustafsson or Brandon Davidson.



NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cam Ward will be the starting goaltender for the Blackhawks, at least to start the season.

2. Cam Ward is the starting goalie, at least to start the season. Ward was miserable in his first preseason game, giving up goals on the first two shots he faced and six overall before he was pulled after two periods. The 34-year-old had a much better game Saturday, stopping 16 of 17 shots as he prepares for his first season with the Hawks after 13 with the Hurricanes.

Anton Forsberg, who led the Hawks with 30 starts in goal last season, had an uneventful but solid training camp and could assume the starting role if Ward falters.

3. Dylan Sikura likely will stay in Rockford for a while. By the end of camp, it was apparent Sikura would start the season in Rockford. While John Hayden, Luke Johnson and David Kampf clearly won their jobs, Andreas Martinsen likely would be on his way there if Sikura didn't need more seasoning.

Sikura is a good prospect, and the Hawks will want him to get regular playing time and some confidence, so don't expect him back soon. In fact, Victor Ejdsell, Alexandre Fortin and Matthew Highmore could get opportunities to return from Rockford before Sikura.

4. Dominik Kahun is ready for the top line. The ease with which Kahun, a free agent signing out of Germany, moved to the top line with Jonathan Toews and Alex DeBrincat has to be the biggest surprise in camp. The 23-year-old rookie's speed, skills and comfort level have been apparent from the start.

5. Duncan Keith and Brent Seabrook are the keys to an inexperienced defense. Seabrook (1,004) and Keith (995) have combined to play 1,999 NHL games. The other five defensemen — Brandon Manning (207), Davidson (152), Gustafsson (76), Jan Rutta (57) and Jokiharju (0) have combined for 492, and none of them played more than 65 last season.

The veteran blue-liners, both in their 14th season after joining the Hawks in 2005-06, will be paired to start the season. Despite their ages — Keith is 35, Seabrook 33 — they will be counted on to play a lot of minutes all season long.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Playoff picture close to Buckeyes or bust

Teddy Greenstein
On the Big Ten

ive things we learned about the Big Ten, including this reminder: Don't feed the animals.

1. The Big Ten looks like a one-bid (at best) playoff league. If Ohio State had lost 27-26, Buckeyes supporters eventually would have lobbied for an at-large bid, arguing that an 11-1 Ohio State team with wins over TCU, Michigan State and Michigan and a tight road loss to a conference champion (Penn State) deserved inclusion. All that is moot. The Buckeyes won 27-26. It's not quite Buckeyes-or-bust for the playoffs, but it's close.

Penn State won't get much credit for its 51-6 victory over Pitt, given that the Panthers are 2-3. The Nittany Lions' other non-league wins were over Appalachian State (in overtime) and Kent State. Wisconsin should win the West. But even at 12-1 with a victory in the Big Ten title game, a playoff berth would not be assured. That's what the Badgers get for losing to BYU and scheduling Western Kentucky and New Mexico.

If Armageddon strikes teams like Notre Dame, Clemson and the Pac-12 winner — meaning they get saddled with two losses — the Big Ten will try to prop up the winner of the Nov. 10 Wisconsin-Penn State game as a potentially attractive one-loss alternative. But that's a long shot — and a long way off.

2. Dwayne Haskins needs to be better. The Ohio State quarterback walked into Beaver Stadium highly motivated, having exchanged words on Twitter with Shareef Miller, the Penn State defensive end. Miller said during an ESPN interview of Haskins: "Couple of guys on our team played with him. They told me if you hit him a lot of times, he's gonna fold." Hours before kickoff, Haskins replied: "You poking the wrong lion buddy."

Miller's assessment was off, but not by much. Haskins gets flustered by pressure, not hits. His loss of accuracy while on the run was jarring, as was the inability of his receivers to catch routine grabs in the first half. Haskins and his pass-catchers were far better after the break, with Binjimen Victor playing Frogger during a 47-yard touchdown catch.

Haskins' numbers (23-for-39, 270 yards) turned out solid, but his play also gave defensive coordinators a plan of attack: apply as much heat as humanly possible.

3. James Franklin should remember: There's a time and a place. As Penn State's coach walked to the tunnel after the loss, a fan told him: "Fourth-and-5, should have passed it, Coach. That was a bad call."

Franklin responded: "I appreciate your input." That was fine, but then he needed to be restrained from approaching the fan, who said: "I love you, but that's a bad call."

Franklin found the right tone and content in postgame interviews. He blamed himself for the fourth-and-5 call that was the equivalent of getting Led Zeppelin to play Wrigley Field only to have the speakers go out. Running back Miles Sanders was swallowed up on the zone-read play, which Ohio State coaches reportedly saw coming. Trace McSorley, who set a school record with 461 yards of total offense (286 passing, 175 rushing) didn't get a chance to make a play.

"We obviously didn't make the right call in that situation," Franklin said, "and that's on me, nobody else."

Franklin also laid out a manifesto, saying: "We've gone from an average football team to a good football team to a great football team. But we're not an elite team yet. ... Right now we're comfortable being great, and I'm going to make sure everyone in our program, including myself, is very uncomfortable, because you only grow in life when you're uncomfortable."

4. Scott Frost is tasting humble pie. Nebraska has lost eight straight games, four on Frost's watch.

After watching his team get flagged 11 times in its 42-28 loss to Purdue, Frost said: "We look like one of the most undisciplined teams in the country, and it kills me."

Frost might also need to be more disciplined in what he says. After his team got drilled at Michigan one week ago, he said: "We get a game that we can win next week."

Purdue coach Jeff Brohm said his team took note of that remark.

Frost also called out Huskers reserves who were dancing on the sidelines to music being played in the stadium Saturday during kickoffs. The Huskers were losing big at the time, prompting Frost to say: "They look like they love losing."

5. Michigan looks like a four-loss team. The Wolverines' front seven is spectacular, and Shea Patterson showed impressive mobility on a 9-yard scramble on a third-and-6 midway through the fourth quarter. But as a whole, the Wolverines looked like a B-level Big Ten team Saturday in Evanston, falling behind 17-0 in a lethargic effort on both sides.

Michigan (4-1) will face equal or greater competition than Northwestern six times: Maryland, Wisconsin, at Michigan State, Penn State, Indiana and at Ohio State. The Wolverines are lacking in the skill-position department. Will Tarik Black's foot injury heal quickly enough to make a difference?

BIG TEN POWER RANKINGS

1. Ohio State (last week 1): Urban Meyer looked seasick before his team survived those choppy waters.
2. Penn State (2): Maybe wearing white after Labor Day is not such a good idea.
3. Wisconsin (4): BYU getting smoked by Washington is bad news for a potentially flimsy resume.
4. Michigan (5): OK, OK: Jim Harbaugh had every right to gripe about the phantom holding call on Karan Higdon.
5. Michigan State (3): Through four games, the word to describe Michigan State is this: average.
6. Iowa (6): Fact or fiction: Once confirmed, Kirk Ferentz will be given a lifetime appointment.
7. Maryland (7): Got to chillax for a week after thumping Minnesota.
8. Minnesota (8): Had to chillax for a week after getting thumped by Maryland.
9. Indiana (9): The Big Ten's all-name team must include receiver J-Shun Harris II.
10. Northwestern (10): "You know what's so great about Twitter?" Pat Fitzgerald asked. "Nothing." Instagram guy?
11. Purdue (11): Boilers deserve to rise after crushing Nebraska, but they're boxed out after losing at home to Northwestern.
12. Illinois (12): Will the TV crew that has Saturday's Illinois-Rutgers game even try to fake enthusiasm?
13. Nebraska (13): Scott Frost: The program he built (UCF) is way better than the one he runs.
14. Rutgers (14): Scarlet Knights won the second half (against Indiana). Tim Beckman would be proud.

CHRIS KNIGHT/AP

Ohio State quarterback Dwayne Haskins led his team to a win against Penn State, but he was flustered by Nittany Lions' pressure.

Justin Rose holds up the Ryder Cup as teammate Henrick Stenson looks on Sunday. Europe beat the U.S. 17½-10½.

RYDER CUP

No doubt: Europe cruises to Cup win

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

SAINT-QUENTIN-EN-YVELINES, France — Europe waited two long years for that one moment when the Ryder Cup was back in its hands.

Exactly when it happened Sunday was unclear, making it all the better.

At roughly the same time, in two singles matches on two greens at Le Golf National separated by 150 yards of water, Francesco Molinari and Sergio Garcia each made par to secure at least a half-point, either one giving Europe the 14½ points it needed to regain the Ryder Cup from the Americans.

As the celebration was getting started, Molinari capped off the first 5-0 week at the Ryder Cup for a European.

Three of those points came at the expense of Tiger Woods, who left France without contributing a point. Molinari won his singles match against Phil Mickelson, officially putting the winning point on the board for Europe and putting Mickelson in the record book for the most losses in Ryder Cup history.

Then, Garcia won his match to set the record for the most career points in Ryder Cup history.

It was like that all week.

Europe produced stars old and new with a team that was as strong as ever.

"We got it righ," European captain Thomas Bjorn said. "We never looked toward their team about what they were about. We were about us and what we do. Everything that this Ryder Cup was is what I think the Ryder Cup should be about for a European team."

Mostly, it's about winning.

The final shot came from Alex Noren, who after conceding a short birdie putt to Bryson DeChambeau on the 18th hole, made a 40-foot birdie putt to win the match.

That made it 17½-10½, the biggest Ryder Cup rout in 12 years.

Europe has won nine of the last 12. The Americans remain winless away from home since 1993.

And there wasn't much U.S. captain Jim Furyk could do about it.

"They played great golf," Furyk said. "Thomas was a better captain and their team outplayed us. ... They deserved to win."

Several pitchers were allowed to stay home for the one-game trip, while Anthony Rizzo led a sleep-weary traveling party by wearing his uniform on the plane. Javier Baez homered in the sixth (above) and bunted home the winning run in the 10th (right). The victory came at a cost, as closer Pedro Strop suffered a season-ending hamstring strain.

Former NASCAR driver and current television analyst Dale Earnhardt Jr. chats it up with driver Chase Elliott in August before the NASCAR Cup Series race in Brooklyn, Mich.

Out for spin with Dale Jr.: What next on track, TV?

By Brendan Marks
Charlotte Observer

TERRY RENNA/AP

NASCAR fans walk past a billboard at Daytona International Speedway advertising Dale Earnhardt Jr. in his new role as a broadcast personality.

In an exclusive interview with the Charlotte Observer, Dale Earnhardt Jr. laid everything on the table.

NASCAR's former Most Popular Driver, who retired in November 2017, was at Charlotte Motor Speedway last weekend for the track's inaugural "roval" race. But instead of competing, like he did last weekend in a one-off Xfinity Series race, Earnhardt was in the NBC broadcast booth.

Earnhardt talked about that Richmond race, his hopes for his broadcast career, adjusting to home life with wife Amy and daughter Isla Rose, and whether retiring when he did was the right decision.

Question: You mentioned one reason for your racing in the Richmond Xfinity Series race as still having an "itch to scratch." Did that one race fully satisfy that itch, or is there still some urge to race from you?

Answer: I really had a lot of fun at Richmond. My habit is to get real competitive and make racing probably more work than it is enjoyable, and I put a lot of pressure on myself, and I feel like there's pressure from the outside — it's probably not real, but it's something I imagine.

And so I make it harder than it has to be. I make it more high-pressure than it has to be, and I build things up in my mind to be tougher, more challenging.

So a lot of times, I didn't foster a positive experience for myself. I would always kind of assume the worst and hope for the best, but always expect, 'Ah, well I knew this would happen,' if it went bad.

My wife's the opposite. She believes in the law of attraction. 'You've gotta believe good things are going to happen to you, you're going to win this race, make it happen, will it into existence,' and I never felt that way. I was the complete opposite.

But I told myself when I went to Richmond, I'm going to have fun. I'm not going to worry about how good I'm running or how bad I'm running, I'm just going to race and love, whether I'm battling for 30th or first, I'm gonna just enjoy the pure part of racing, of competing, and love the feel of the car and being on the track again. For the most part I was able to do that. So that encourages me to go do it again.

We have four teams at JR Motorsports that run every single week. They aren't fully funded for next year — there's a few openings here and a few openings there. The only reason that I run these races are to put together deals. If a company calls and says, 'Man, you know we want to do a PSA with Dale, you think you could drive a race for us? Is that something you'd be interested in?'

And we say, if he's going to be in a racecar, it's going to be packaged with sponsorship for X amount of races on one of the other four cars. I'll never run a race where it's just one race for me and doesn't benefit the other teams.

So that's the whole driving force behind me ever going back to the racetrack again. If I go to the racetrack next year, that's what makes it happen or pushes that into motion.

Question: When was the last time you had that level of enjoyment driving a racecar?

Answer: I can't remember ever racing without any pressure.

Question: Really? That had to have been a huge breath of fresh air then.

Answer: Oh, it was incredible.

Imagine like every time you put something out there, there's that expectation of what you think you're capable of, and then there's the perception of whether people liked it or didn't like it, you've got what your boss thinks about it, and all this sort of decides and determines your future, right? Everything you do.

Imagine being able to write whatever you want about anything you want, without any repercussion or perception and just enjoying the experience. That's kind of what I got to do.

I don't think I ever would have been able to do that, even if I tried racing in the Xfinity Series in the '90s, racing in the Cup Series all of my career — the pressure to compete and perform, to get points, to win championships, to win races, to please sponsors, to please my expectations, to please my team's expectations, fans' expectations — all that's always going to be there.

At Richmond, it wasn't. I told everybody, I said, 'Hey, I'm going to go have fun, let's not sit here and think where should we finish, I don't want the fans feeling that way or thinking that way.' And everybody that I saw as far as the feedback on social media from people who went to the race, they were just like, 'Hey, man, go enjoy yourself. Go have fun, don't even worry about it.' So I did.

Question: So then what was it like having your daughter there at the track with you for the first time?

Answer: You know, I was sitting there months before I was going to run this race, and I would talk to people about her, and I'm thinking, 'Man, she is never going to experience what my life was like,' or experience her dad as a racer. So I just assumed that the only way I was kind of going to be able to help her understand who I was, was by pictures and videos and so forth, and the trophies and whatnot. But even then, she wouldn't really understand what the experience was like.

And she's not going to remember this weekend, but I think that when she looks at pictures and sees herself in them, that may help her connect to it when she's an adult. If she was to look at photos and videos and not see herself in them, she'd go, 'Who is this person? Who is this life?'

We went to the racetrack and we're standing out on pit road, having the anthem and all that, she's sitting there in Amy's arms and I held her for a little bit, and for her to have that moment and for us to get it in photographs and video and be able to show her when she's 15 or whatever and go, 'Hey, look, you were at this one race,' it might connect her to my career a little tighter.

Otherwise, I doubt it would even register.

Question: What has fatherhood been like overall for you, especially now that you're balancing it with the broadcasting?

Answer: The broadcasting has been a perfect fit for me and where I am with my life and fatherhood. The broadcasting doesn't come with the pressure and the stresses that racing the car did.

I still want to do well, I still want to make my bosses proud, I still want to get great feedback and people appreciate what I'm doing, but it definitely isn't anywhere near the stress level that racing a car was and feeling the pressure of performance in that. That's made me more of an easy person to be around.

That's also allowed me to not you know, when I was in the racecar, I couldn't ever stop thinking about it. Even when I'd go home, I couldn't let loose of it. I couldn't let it off my back. And it was always there hanging over me. So with broadcasting, I can kind of disconnect for a couple of days. So it's great, and I'm enjoying it.

Isla's been great, Amy's doing well. Isla's 5 months now. It's just going so well, and we're just trying to be great parents, whatever that is. Just trying to do everything everyday that gives her the best opportunity of being whoever she wants to be.

Like I said, I want to keep working and I want to have a purpose. And me and my wife talk about that all the time, what our purpose is, and having value, and feeling valuable. Even if it's a small role, having some value to something, to a team or to a process. The broadcasting checks all those boxes for me.

Question: You mention purpose, and I'm sure being a father also gives you a sense of that. Have you had any 'welcome to fatherhood' moments? Something you might not have expected or anything like that?

Answer: It happens multiple times. You'll be sitting there with your wife, and she'll also have these little moments where we're sitting there, and it just dawns on me. Like, I cannot believe I have a kid. I cannot believe I'm raising a child.

I sit there and look at Isla all the time thinking, 'Oh, my God, I'm responsible for this,' and 'Do I have what it takes? Will I be enough of a parent and a father to help her become something great?' That happens all the time.

TOM PENNINGTON/GETTY

Dale Earnhardt Jr. celebrates after winning the Daytona 500 in 2014. Earnhardt has now retired from auto racing to work in the television booth.

As far as the mechanics of being a dad — feeding the baby, changing diapers, and those kinds of things — those things haven't been a wake-up call at any moment. It's all been what I expected. (But) I'm scared to death. Am I doing everything I'm supposed to be doing? Am I giving her what she needs? Even at this little tiny 5-month-old baby age, you're like, 'Oh, am I leaving a bad impression on her? Is what I'm saying, doing, acting, how I'm talking to my wife, is anything we're doing around her, in front of her, like is that she's impressionable, how are we shaping her?

It's kind of scary.

And I'm the worst. I'm super worried about everything. You just have to forget about it and just let it go. Trust the process.

Question: OK, last question then. During your last season in NASCAR, you said one of the primary reasons you wanted to retire was so you could spend more time with Amy and start a family. Now you've got all that — is it what you expected, and does it validate the choice you made to retire?

Answer: Yeah. It did. The last couple of things that I kind of had any doubt about were cleared up at Richmond, believe it or not. Being able to get in the car, drive, race, compete, go in the booth that weekend, and do all those things together kind of reaffirmed that decision. Like, 'Yep, I made the right choice.'

I love being in the booth, I want to be in the booth. I enjoyed driving, but I damn sure don't want to do it every week. And I do want to be at the racetrack calling the races, talking about what's happening. It's such an incredibly interesting sport, so I'm loving that.

I don't know how to say this, but I felt like if I kept going back to the well and taking those risks that I was taking with my health. I was just delaying the chance to enjoy my family.

And when I got hurt in 2016, my wedding was New Year's Eve, and I was telling the doctor, I said, 'I have to get well. I have to be well for this wedding. I can't go through my wedding with my head screwed up, I just can't do that. That's such an important day and my wife deserves me to be well. This whole thing is such a special day. We've got to get to work here and fix this.'

So going through that experience, it made me think: Man, I don't want to ever get sick again and have to be sick with a daughter or trying to raise a daughter, trying to help and support my wife. That was six months of me just being ineffective and not a part of the process.

I'm 43, I can't afford to give away half a year in whatever years I've got left. It was just the right choice for me at the time.

Every day I get further away from that decision, I feel better and better about it. I feel more confident in what future I have in broadcasting. I would love to do that for a long time.

Nothing will ever feel like winning a Daytona 500. I'm never going to do anything in broadcasting, probably anything in any other professional job that will feel like winning the Daytona 500.

I'll never experience that again. And I'm good with it.

Are sex offenders people too? Norris challenges audience

By Chris Jones

As the nonprofit American theater has primarily become a gathering place for educated, like-minded progressives, those who provide its content have a sacred moral and artistic duty not just to confirm the assumptions and worldview of their audiences, but to challenge all their settled preconceptions. Few dare. Theaters love to claim an affinity for risk even as they run away from anything other than confirmation.

But playwright Bruce Norris, whose intellectually rigorous new play "Downstate" will be remembered as one of the more incendiary and thus important productions in the illustrious history of the Steppenwolf Theatre Company, has no problem attacking the elite liberal complacencies of the likes of Clybourn, or rather Lincoln Park.

This is a lifetime habit for Norris at his home theater. I've watched him do it for more than two decades, and he has always been hardest on the liberal tendency to turn rabidly conservative when it comes to the care and protection of your own kids. But "Downstate," which is a co-production with the National Theatre in London and is blisteringly acted under the direction of Pam MacKinnon, dares to do something that even Norris has not done before: to ask an audience to gather and debate the not-so-gentle proposition that sex offenders are people too.

To embrace that trite phrase, of course, implies some degree of sympathy or empathy. In "Downstate," which is set entirely in a group home for sex offenders, located in an unnamed Illinois community southwest of Joliet, Norris is asking us to consider a number of painful, potentially triggering things.

Does the statistic that says how being abused as a child often leads people to abuse represent mitigating circumstances? Have the dysfunctional realities of life as a registered sex offender come to represent cruel and unusual punishment? Is it fair to punish our fellow Americans so severely for what is generally agreed to be an illness?

Norris asks those questions by showing us the crummy intersecting lives of four sex offenders. Fred (Francis Guinan) is an aw-shucks piano teacher who abused two of his preadolescent students. He is in a wheelchair now, following a jailhouse attack. Dee (K. Todd Freeman) is a smooth-tongued actor who appeared in a Cathy Rigby tour of "Peter Pan" and, over a period of months, abused one of the lost boys. Felix (Eddie Torres) abused his own daughter, despite claiming ongoing love and concern. And Gio (Glenn Davis) is a younger man whose lower-grade offense is intended to make us think about how the sex-offender dragnet also snares those whose crimes are more understandable, assuming you are inclined to make such a distinction.

"Downstate" is not a crude apologia for the sex offender. It contains the gut-wrenching testimony of a survivor, Andy (Tim Hopper), who appears at the

Is Chicago ready for big-screen video art?

Art on theMart has ambitions to be one of city's new landmarks

By Steve Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Rivers of eyeballs flowed across the Merchandise Mart on Saturday night. A giraffe projected against the central section of the great behemoth of a building stared out at the opening night crowd gathered across the Chicago River. Thickets of flowers sprouted, and spread, and resolved themselves into something else.

Art on theMart, in the inaugural showing of what is being pitched as a three-decade, ongoing public art work, showed itself to be surreal, populist, inscrutable, obvious, confounding and engaging Saturday before a crowd that included city bigwigs down on the Riverwalk and thousands of Chicagoans up on the closed-off Wacker Drive.

The project has the potential to be a lot of things as a visual backdrop to the nighttime kayakers, the Riverwalk promenaders, the Brown Line "L" trains crossing the river on the bridge to the east, as it shows for two hours a night, five nights a week, every month but January and February. But, to its credit, it does not seem desperate to pander with easily readable takes on how to fill a 2.5-acre drive-in movie screen.

Yes, there were elephant butts walking away as Diana Thater's nature video portion of the program announced "The End," but there was also University of Chicago professor Jason Salavon's take on Chicago art history, with fragmentary visual references to Kerry James Marshall, to the fluorescent faces of Ed Paschke and to the frizzy lines of Moholy-Nagy.

San Francisco firm Obscura Digital guided the permanent installation of 34 projectors firing almost 1 million lumen at the Mart.

But whatever was showing on the screen, whether trippy or horticultural or both, Chicagoans can boast of this new fixture with a First City superlative. It is, the dignitaries noted, the largest permanent exhibit of

Giancarlo Esposito plays drug kingpin Gustavo "Gus" Fring on AMC's "Better Call Saul."

MY WORST MOMENT

'Better Call Saul' star on last-minute monologue

By Nina Metz
Chicago Tribune

As the drug kingpin first on AMC's "Breaking Bad" and now "Better Call Saul," Gustavo Fring is a man of intense inner discipline. He is proper. Courtly. Formal, even.

"There's a reason I chose to create Gus that way," said actor Giancarlo Esposito. "I was really struck by a stage direction that said he was hiding in plain sight. And I started thinking about how many people do we know that we really don't know? That we think we know, but we really don't. So the impetus behind that kind of dignity that Gus embodies — his grace and cordiality — I didn't want to see the stereotypical gangster drug dealer, I wanted to see a mastermind."

Esposito's own personality is considerably more exuberant and talkative. "Little do people know when they see me, they are shocked when I smile because Gus is so stoic."

When asked to share a worst moment from his career, it was his experience working on a film about politics that came to mind.

My worst moment ...

"Tim Robbins made a very beautiful film that was really ahead of its time called 'Bob Roberts' (from 1992; Robbins is the writer, director and star). It was about a candidate for office who was sort of a cross between David Duke and probably the first George Bush. He played guitar and sang, and this character was being investigated by a small-time reporter who couldn't even touch him, named Bugs Raplin and that's who I played.

"The character had cerebral palsy and I remember preparing very deeply. I got all the tools I

Cher admits she wanted Kennedy honor from Obama

The phone call telling Cher she was a Kennedy Center honoree was certainly welcome — but she admits she wanted to get it earlier.

The Grammy, Emmy and Oscar winner, whose ABBA-tribute album "Dancing Queen" was just released, acknowledged she'd long hoped for that call. She said she "wanted to get it so badly" during the Obama administration.

Now she will, at age 72, during the Donald Trump administration, which might make for an awkward gathering. A regular at anti-Trump rallies and marches, Cher ranks among the most outspoken celebrities against the U.S. president. The White House said no decisions had been made on whether Trump would participate in this year's Kennedy Center Honors program.

The Kennedy Center prize is given to those in the performing arts for lifetime contributions to American culture. This year's other recipients are composer and pianist Philip Glass, country music entertainer Reba McEntire, and jazz saxophonist and composer Wayne Shorter. The co-creators of the Tony-winning musical "Hamilton" will receive a special award as trailblazing creators of a transformative work that defies category.

It's a busy period for Cher, whose latest world tour began Sept. 21 and runs through May, ending in Minneapolis. She's co-producer of a jukebox musical about her life, "The Cher Show," with previews set to begin Nov. 1 on Broadway. And the Kennedy Center Honors will be taped Dec. 2 in Washington, D.C.

ASK AMY

'Neighborly' encounter takes bad turn

uiDear Amy: About a year ago, my husband, baby and I moved to a new neighborhood. The neighborhood is "turning over." It was once a somewhat dangerous area, but in the last 10 years or so it has improved significantly, partly because of an influx of young professionals.

When we moved here, we made friends with our neighbors, including folks who were new to the area, and those who had been here more than 40 years.

Recently, I walked around the corner to a restaurant. My husband and baby were not with me. As I was waiting, a man — older and larger than I — left his party (two women) and approached me to make small talk. He asked if I lived in the neighborhood. I told him I did. He then asked what street I lived on and asked me to describe my house. I told him I wasn't comfortable sharing that information. He then read me the riot act, saying, "This isn't that kind of neighborhood" and "It's not like I'm going to rob you."

Frankly, I wasn't worried about being robbed (or worse) before that comment, but I was worried afterward. I didn't want to engage, so I simply said, "Yeah, OK."

Amy, I'm sure this man is perfectly pleasant to those who know him. But I'm a young woman, and no one should (1) ask a stranger where she lives, and then (2) respond so aggressively when she politely declines to answer.

Is there a better way to handle this in the future? I don't think I was being a baby, but I wish more men understood that questions like this are inherently intimidating to women.

— Wondering Woman

Dear Wondering: Your instinct is not to disclose your address to a stranger, for common-sense security reasons. But I'd like to suggest an alternate storyline: He engages you in small talk and asks which house is yours. You deflect: "It sounds like you know the neighborhood well. Do you live here, too?"

Or you answer truthfully: "It's the yellow one with the white trim," and he says, "Oh, the Robinsons used to live there. They raised five kids in that house." You say, "Oh, we love that wonderful kitchen. How long have you lived in the neighborhood?"

And you've both formed a connection.

You bear no blame for reacting the way you did (my scenario might be wrong). He should not have reacted so defensively — and offensively. But you assumed the worst and swatted away his bid for connection — and he responded badly.

In the future, you can respond to entrees by deflecting with politeness.

When a stranger asks you any question you don't want to answer, you can say, "Hi, I'm 'Sandy.' I didn't get your name ...?" This is a way of rewiring the encounter. The person's response to this polite deflection will reveal what you might want to do next.

Dear Amy: My husband of 41 years died. I do not plan to remarry. Now I'm wondering, do I continue to wear my wedding band?

Someone told me you wear it on your right hand if you're widowed. Should I do that, or should I take off my ring?

— Widowed

Dear Widowed: You should do whatever you want to do. After 41 years of marriage, you might feel lost without your ring where it has always been.

There are no rules on this. Some widowed people take their ring off immediately. Some switch it to the right hand. Give yourself time to make the decision that feels right. You can also make one choice and then change your mind. Don't let anyone tell you how to manage your loss.

Norris asks audience tough question

home with his spouse (Aimee Lou Wood), looking to confront his now-neutered abuser, Fred, as a way of trying to dig himself out of a hole he was pushed inside many decades ago, without regard to his own deserving.

Knowing Norris' writing as well as I do, one of Andy's monologues feels to me like a recent expansion, maybe from a suggestion from a nervous script reader understandably concerned that the play was not adequately reflecting the white-hot #MeToo concerns and thus would cause offense. But thanks in no small measure to Hopper's heart-stopping performance, you are not ever left with the feeling that this play is minimizing the damage done by its protagonists. It is hardly news to America by now that most abusers come packaged with personal charm.

That loquaciousness is the way for such fine actors as Freeman, who is at once appealing and terrifying, to find their way into these men, stuck in a devil's waiting room designed by Todd Rosenthal to look like everywhere and nowhere and all points between.

When: Through Nov. 11

Where: Steppenwolf Theatre Company, 1650 N. Halsted St.

Running time: 2 hours, 30 minutes

Tickets: $20-$99 at 312-335-1650 or www.steppenwolf.org

Freeman, doing the best work of his formidable career, evokes a caring man stewing in a pot of righteous bitterness, unseasoned by self-awareness, sure, but also boiling with indignation at the undeniable inequities of American punishment. As jumpy as Freeman is smooth, Davis comes up with a guy who keeps trying to turn on the faucet of charismatic escape, even though society has turned off the water. Torres, meanwhile, concentrates on the corrosive force of guilt, forever shrinking the on-stage space he occupies.

And what of Guinan's sweet, regretful Fred?

Who is this person, you think as you watch, searching Guinan's face for every possible clue.

Watching over these men is their parole officer, Ivy, played by Cecilia Noble, one of several British actors from the National in the cast. Noble's work is also exceptional. She is avoidant of all cliche, ensuring that Ivy is just caring and unfeeling enough to make both part of the equation but, we always suspect, the only person on the stage who is all-seeing and all-knowing. Actually, her presence makes you think about how few of our furious opinions on these matters are fully substantiated — unless, of course, we have experience, as so many of us have said we do, which only makes this must-see play yet more agonizing.

The play opened, of course, days after Bill Cosby, a convicted abuser, was led away in handcuffs, and less than 48 hours after America was riven by a Supreme Court confirmation hearing that asked whether allegations of abuse should be allowed to derail the career of an enraged nominee. You might argue this is the best of all possible moments for a fearless play determined to make the anti-Panglossian case that nothing in jurisprudence, in life, is as binary as it might seem. Or you might argue, as those who have stayed silent pay the price of coming forward, that this is the very worst moment imaginable. You will have to see for yourself.

Jazz Festival animates Hyde Park

By Howard Reich
Chicago Tribune

Music always resonates in Hyde Park, but over the weekend it was practically ubiquitous.

The 12th annual Hyde Park Jazz Festival was the reason, musicians performing in far-flung venues, from churches to concert halls to the great outdoors.

Following is one listener's diary of some of Saturday's events, which kicked off two days of stylistically wide-ranging jazz.

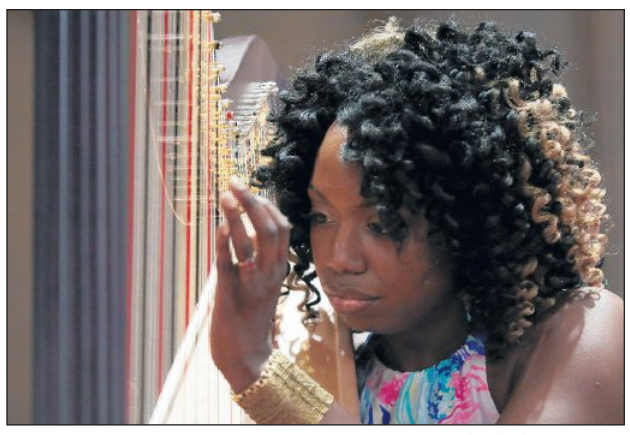
3:46 p.m. — Chicago Yestet. It's standing-room-only at the Wagner Stage on the Midway, named for the late James Wagner, who had a dream of revitalizing jazz in Hyde Park and clearly achieved it (in part by co-founding this festival). The Yestet epitomizes the muscularity of Chicago jazz, its robust horns and rambunctious spirit articulated by some of the city's most admired musicians. Though tenor saxophonist Geof Bradfield is bedeviled by an uncooperative sound system, he manages to remind listeners of the sway that classic bebop still holds on 21st century jazz. Guitarist Mike Allemana starts contemplatively but soon is producing an avalanche of notes.

4:30 p.m. — Brandee Younger Trio. Performer and venue are well matched when harpist Younger unfurls celestial tones in Hyde Park Union Church. Even apart from the setting, there's no mistaking the spirituality at the core of Younger's performance. She opens with what amounts to an homage to Alice Coltrane, who gave the harp prominence in jazz. Performing alongside bassist Rashaan Carter, Younger offers florid playing in Coltrane's "Rama Rama," then expands the ensemble with flutist Anne Drummond in "Games," from the "Afro-Harping" album of another key jazz harpist, Dorothy Ashby. Here, Younger weaves several layers of sound yet sustains exquisitely long melodic lines.

5:35 p.m. — Ryan Cohan. The festival achieves one of its high points with "Originations," Chicago pianist Cohan's ambitious, six-movement suite for three horns, jazz rhythm section and string quartet. But this is much more than a "jazz plus strings" affair, Cohan deftly combining and contrasting these groupings of instruments. Each movement has something significant to say, but the deepest impressions are left by the Middle Eastern scales and related influences of the opening movement, "The Hours Before Dawn"; the poetic melody-making of the ballad-like third movement, "Heart"; and the constantly shifting moods, textures and rhythms of the fourth, "Sabra." Cohan's score benefits from the contributions of several musicians, including John Wojciechowski's impeccably detailed flute solos, Michael Raynor's sharply wrought drum work and Geof Bradfield's sinuous lines on bass clarinet.

7:35 p.m. — Mike Reed's "The City Was Yellow: The Chicago Suite." Everyone knows that Chicago has been a font of jazz creativity for roughly a century, but Chicago drummer Reed dramatically underscores the point with the Chicago premiere of this still-evolving suite. Built on tunes written by Chicago composers between 1980 and 2010, "The Chicago Suite" attests to the expressive breadth of work this city's composers have penned in recent times. The suite opens gently, with vibraphonist Jason Adasiewicz's "Rose Garden," which Reed aptly describes as a lullaby. Saxophonist Geof Bradfield's "Nairobi Transit" yields bristling, front-line counterpoint from the septet's horns and one of the evening's several all-over-the-keys solos from pianist Angelo Hart. Elsewhere there's Thelonious Monk-influenced, late-night romanticism from Jeff Parker's "Four in the Evening"; deep-blues expression in Reed's "Afterthoughts"; a series of rotating and oft-ferocious solos in Nicole Mitchell's "Navigator"; and ebullient dance music graced with the spirit of the jazz avant-grade in "The Big Dig" by Edward Wilkerson Jr. Reed's septet dispatches all this music with as much technical acuity as depth of feeling. Of special note: striking work from Hunter Diamond on clarinet, intricate phraseology from Rajiv Halim on alto saxophone and pervasive lyricism from Quentin Coaxum on trumpet, with Reed, of course, driving it all.

9:31 p.m. — Miguel de la Cerna. Listeners are so accustomed to hearing pianist de la Cerna accompanying one of the city's most accomplished jazz singers, Dee Alexander, that it's easy to forget how fully he can occupy a spotlight of his own. From the outset of his performance, at the University of Chicago's International House, he reminds the audience of his strengths as both pianist and bandleader, his solos immense in scale, his music sometimes flirting with pop-tinged sensibility. De la Cerna inspires expansive soliloquies from saxophonist Irvin Pierce and bassist Junius Paul; both, like drummer Makaya McCraven, represent a younger generation than de la Cerna, all clearly taking their lead from the pianist. Pierce, especially, comes on strong, as in an a cappella solo as charismatic as it is cohesive.



JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Harpist Brandee Younger embraces the music of Alice Coltrane on Saturday at Hyde Park Union Church.

11:07 p.m. — Ravi Coltrane and Brandee Younger. Saturday's activities at this festival always culminate with a late-night set at Rockefeller Memorial Chapel, but I've never seen this enormous space more crowded during the Hyde Park Jazz Festival than on this occasion. The audience enthusiasm is justified, for saxophonist Coltrane and harpist Younger — joined by drummer Johnathan Blake and bassist Rashaan Carter — play music from Coltrane's program "Universal Consciousness: Melodic Meditations of Alice Coltrane." As the title suggests, saxophonist Coltrane conjures the serene, otherworldly message of Alice Coltrane, his mother, whose musings Younger evokes on harp. Which is not to say that this music is entirely ethereal. Though Ravi Coltrane starts softly, he builds intensity, switching from tenor saxophone to soprano and back in performing "Journey in Satchidananda," "Blue Nile" and "Rama Rama" without interruption. The most tender music emerges in "For Turiya," which Charlie Haden wrote for Alice Coltrane and recorded with her on their "Closeness' Duets" album. Ravi Coltrane's declamatory melody-making on tenor saxophone and Younger's shimmering passagework on harp represent the high point of the set and one of the most effective performances Coltrane has led in Chicago. Remarkably, he manages to make the most of the cavernous room's heavily reverberant acoustics, using this dynamic to dramatize his sound.

Scarlett Strallen plays Nell Gwynn and Timothy Edward Kane is King Charles II at the Chicago Shakespeare Theater.

IN PERFORMANCE 'Nell Gwynn' ★★

Show has its laughs, but when and where are we?

By Chris Jones
Chicago Tribune

A charming courtesan is plucked from her former milieu by a rich and powerful patron. Although initially reluctant, she moves into his rooms, relieving his boredom and even helping him, in her rough-hewn, common-sense way, to do better at his work. In return, he softens his usual rules about dating posher women. He even falls in love.

This is the plot of "Pretty Woman."

And if you strip away the 17th-century frippery, the fancy wigs, the oranges and the British accents, it's also exactly the plot of "Nell Gwynn," the limited if intermittently amusing new comedy-with-music by Jessica Swale, now in its American premiere at the Chicago Shakespeare Theater, following a successful beginning in London.

Now, you might well think that after the week America has just endured, there is much to recommend a visually spectacular evening that includes some calming 17th-century remove, a parade of truly gorgeous gowns and set-pieces from the gifted designer Hugh Durrant, plenty of tongue-in-cheek laughs, a parade of (ahem) expansive comedic performances and a self-aware progressive patina to gently fight with the inevitably regressive plot. On Friday night, many in the audience were clearly willing to enjoy the company of characters with one little toe in poet John Dryden's London and the rest of their foot in the timelessly ahistoric and self-perpetuating world of the theater.

"Nell Gwynn," which I found disappointingly unrevealing about the famous actress-turned-mistress of King Charles II, is one of a slew of in-vogue, para-history plays dealing with the backstage goings-on at historic European theaters. It is not far away from Theresa Rebeck's "Bernhardt/Hamlet," which opened on Broadway last weekend, although that is a much sharper piece of writing, nor from Lolita Chakrabarti's "Red Velvet," another work seen at Chicago Shakespeare Theater that struggles to reconcile its historic setting with a contemporary agenda. The best of all of these recent plays is Lauren Gunderson's fantastic "The Book of Will," set around the Globe Theatre, mostly because it actually makes you believe everyone is struggling through a real life in the moment in which they actually lived.

I doubt you will care much about anyone in "Nell Gwynn." None are especially empathetic or vulnerable, at least in this production, broadly directed by Christopher Luscombe as if each thing everyone does has been set up, mapped out and agreed upon in advance. So much deadness behind the eyes is not really the Chicago way.

When: Through Nov. 4

Where: Chicago Shakespeare Courtyard Theater, Navy Pier

Running time: 2 hours, 30 minutes

Tickets: $48-$88 at 312-595-5600 or www.chicagoshakes.com

Sure, this is anachronistic comedy ("the French have arrived; they're all driving on the wrong side of the cobbles"), but it still would be far better if only it could agree on a consistent set of rules and stick with them. Some of the comic action here is out-and-out farce, and the visiting British actors in particular tend to perform not like they're in a relatively intimate thrust theater but back in some West End proscenium — so much so, in fact, that one wanted to shout back at them, "We're all right here."

Then again, the show (which includes music by Nigel Hess) never fully commits to full-blown crazy, which would involve moving along at about double the speed of what here transpires. Instead, we have an uneasy hybrid. Some scenes are mostly truthful; others will do anything for a gag. Some of the performers, such as Larry Yando, who plays Charles' evil adviser Lord Arlington, and Timothy Edward Kane, who plays Charles, find themselves trapped in both kinds of scenes at different moments. Both men are funny and have scenes when they show themselves as we well know them to be as actors, but this is not a secure environment. Natalie West, who plays a comic Lady in Waiting and has shrewdly figured out how to be consistent, gets off the best gags, rivaling the show's bravura comedian, David Bedella. And the most appealing performance comes from Emma Ladji, who very credibly plays Nell's sister, Rose, and comes off as more grounded than anyone on the stage.

Scarlett Strallen also has her charms and successes in the title role, but she plays Nell as if she were talking through a coquettish grin 24 hours a day and, frankly, that gets wearing. It also undermines Swale's noble efforts to turn Nell into a proto-feminist boundary crosser who grabbed every opportunity afforded her in a tough life and made sure that selling stuff was nothing more than an entry-level job into some really nice royal rooms. One up there on Eliza Doolittle.

Minhaj's comfort zone is politics

By Zach Freeman
Chicago Tribune

The paranoia of comedians is growing. Taking your phone out of commission and emptying your pockets to step through a metal detector is becoming the new norm for attending a big-name comedy show in a large venue. The metal detectors are understandable given our own expanding societal concern for safety in large group settings, but what of the phone thing? Attention control? Content control? Context control?

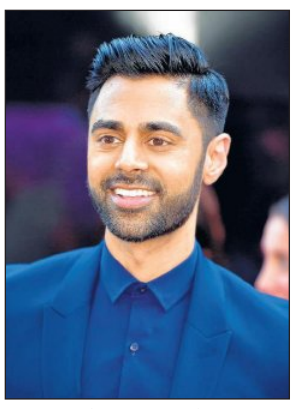
For many of today's comics, maybe all of the above. And some comics have more reason to closely guard their intellectual property than others. Or their employers do.

On Saturday night, during the second of two sold-out shows at the Chicago Theatre, comedian Hasan Minhaj — who will, with the launching of his own weekly political show on Netflix later this month titled "Patriot Act with Hasan Minhaj," join the long, vaunted list of former "The Daily Show" correspondents becoming show hosts — claimed one specific image as the culprit for his no-phone policy.

"This is why we can't have phones," he declared, pointing at the projected photo — a Photoshopped promo for a fake reality show called "ISIS Shark Tank" — on a giant screen behind him. It was as good a culprit as any, even if the more likely reason for the restriction is Netflix having a strong preference for controlling the rollout of its newest shot into the political comedy world (especially after the abrupt cancellation of "The Break with Michelle Wolf").

There were plenty of ISIS-based jokes throughout Minhaj's mostly well-paced and focused set, a work in progress that Minhaj compared to a TED Talk, and that hints at what "Patriot Act" will look like in practice — a familiar mix of news clips, commentary and investigative journalism/comedy.

Minhaj is currently nearing the end of a two-month tour titled "Before the Storm," and from the looks of what he's got, he's been using his time on the road wisely to test-drive a structure for the show — an intent targeting of one news topic (in this case terrorism) with both informative and comedic sidebars throughout. Phrases like "VIOLENT EXTREMISM" and "CULTURE OF PROFILING" flashed on the screen behind him as he delved into the odds of an American being killed by a foreign terrorist (extremely low) or the categorization of white males who commit violent acts as "lone wolves."



JAMES DEVANEY/GETTY 2017

It's compelling material, and an ever-so-perfectly scruffed and coiffed Minhaj — energetically pacing the stage in white sneakers, black pants, a white shirt and a blue jacket — is compelling to watch passionately deliver it. As in his Peabody Award-winning special "Homecoming King" — which premiered on Netflix last year — Minhaj has a precision and smoothness to both his movements and his delivery that helps to highlight the more serious aspects of his work while simultaneously sneaking the laughs in neatly to soften the blow.

"I wanted the show to be 'Homecoming King 2' and now he's doing some weird political rant," he imagined a disgruntled audience member grousing at one point. For this imaginary fan craving personal stories rather than political commentary, he's tacked on a bit of an addendum, discussing how he recently became a father and how he proposed to his wife five years ago. These two sections are inarguably the weakest of the night.

its kind in the world. Obscura Digital, the San Francisco firm that guided the installation of 34 projectors firing almost 1 million lumen at theMart, has "thrown light" all over the world, but this is the one that intends to stick around, not just be a temporary event.

"We are eager to welcome Art on theMart into the pantheon of iconic public art in Chicago," alongside Cloud Gate, the Daley Plaza Picasso and the murals in Pilsen, said city cultural Commissioner Mark Kelly, in the minutes before Saturday's roughly half-hour program began.

But video art, as anybody who's been to a museum can tell you, is a challenging medium for a people trained to expect narrative when they see images moving on a screen. The spectacle itself, of filling two football fields of architectural surface with colored light, is stunning. But if this one catches on the way those other works have, it seems more likely to be a Picasso-like process of exposure, then understanding, then, perhaps, affection, rather than the instant charm blitz of Cloud Gate, Anish Kapoor's reflective bean in Millennium Park.

Still Chicago and Vornado Realty, which owns the Building Formerly Known as the Merchandise Mart and is footing the multimillion-dollar bill to illuminate its southern facade, want this to be a showcase for curated artwork, not just the latest and largest (and most heavily windowed) video screen in town.

"No messaging, no sponsorship, only artists!" Kelly proclaimed, shortly before he, Mayor Rahm Emanuel and some of the four artists commissioned to do the first pieces for the screen led a countdown.

"This will always be a place where Chicago artists can show their work," Emanuel said. The coming two-hour programs will show on rotation the initial four commissions, also including a complex floral homage to Chicago art by local artist Jan Tichy and an imaginative piece transforming theMart "simultaneously ... into an aperture and a void," by Chinese artist Zheng Chongbin, plus interstitials from Obscura Digital.

The biggest oohs and aahs from the crowd came when one of Thater's elephants appeared on screen — something recognizable, suggesting a possible story, rather than abstract imagery! — and then at the end. That's when the one-night-only fireworks seemed to fire out of the statues in front of theMart, the row of busts on tall pedestals that David Letterman once called "the PEZ hall of fame."

"To be honest, I was expecting something with a little more music and motion," said Alejandro De la Luz, who lives near Midway and works in theMart, for the Illinois Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. (All those lumens, organizers said, are so precisely aimed that they only illuminate building walls, not the hundreds of windows.)

As artists see it in use, suggested his companion at the opening event, his mother, Laura Guerrero, artists will learn to adapt and to make use of the project's unique features.

Music, though, is a challenge. Speakers played whatever soundtrack the artists wanted on opening night, but organizers don't want this to be a new noise feature in the city. Future showings will be coordinated with music that viewers can call up via the project's website and their own headphones.

"I thought it was cool," said Matt Greenwood, a Morton Grove resident who works downtown as a software developer. "People got excited when the fireworks started — and when the elephant showed up."

Added his wife, financial modeler Amanda Greenwood, "Kids were saying, 'Where are the lions?' And they were grossed out by the eyeballs."

The Greenwoods agreed it's a worthy addition to the city's range of attractions.

"Hopefully," Amanda Greenwood said, "it will get people off their phones."

'Serse' a timeless comedy of manners

By Alan G. Artner
Chicago Tribune

Always there is the claim that opera directors need to "breathe new life" into classic works through updatings and reinterpretations. But as the last 50 years of such events have shown, the life intended by past composers and librettists often is lost in the process.

Can it be recovered?

Saturday night at the Studebaker Theater, the Haymarket Opera Company opened its eighth season of historically informed performances with a creditable production of George Frideric Handel's "Serse" that musically and dramatically went back in time to show a contemporary audience the enduring and timeless.

Over the years, Haymarket's offerings were modest in scale and frequently unfamiliar. Saturday's was different. "Serse" lasts nearly three hours and has become one of Handel's most revived operas on-stage and on recordings. The 1985 production by the English National Opera that a decade later came to the Lyric Opera of Chicago was in fact the grandest work to celebrate the Handel Tercentenary. So here was an opus that Haymarket felt the need to work up to.

In Handel's day, "Serse" was, however, a failure, partly because the vogue for Italian opera in England was waning. But other reasons included how it departed from expectations. Serious opera was not supposed to embrace comic elements, though "Serse" does. The common form for arias in the Baroque period was in three parts — the third repeating the first, with ornamentation — whereas "Serse" presents a variety of aria forms, most of them short. Irony comes into play when two arias are repeated in their entirety. And three duets are equally unorthodox.

Serse, an actual Persian king who reigned from 486 to 465 B.C., was the subject of two operas before Handel's. Few historic characteristics remain. Handel's story is mostly fiction, in essence a comedy of manners about control and amatory frustration.

Handel does not make light of the frustration. Everyone central — two brothers, two sisters, a promised bride who is court outsider — suffers openly and sometimes rages. Where Handel's arias of flirtation and revenge are the very stuff of opera, his music for the arias at the start of Act 2 goes deeper than convention. And two arias in Act 3 press firmly upon veins of tragedy and regret despite an audience knowing all will turn out well in the end.

The Lyric's 1995 venture conveyed no specific epoch, was sung in an English translation and was played on modern instruments. Haymarket's single pavilion-in-a garden set (by Sarah JHP Watkins) and sumptuous-on-a-budget costumes (by Meriem Bahri) are fantasies evoking Handel's own period rather than, say, ancient Persian miniatures. Clifford Bartlett's edition of the score is being sung in the original Italian with small cuts that nonetheless loom large by tightening the focus on the lovers, giving little respite from oath-taking and squabbling.

Sarah Edgar's study of 18th century movement and acting techniques proves particularly significant, as stage gestures back then were different from ours and, of course, were influenced by what the singers wore plus how well it found a place within the artifice of the settings. As the poses color the singers' characters, so do the instruments of Handel's time give a palette to trigger emotion. Craig Trompeter's orchestra of 17 brings us closer to the more delicate feelings of "Serse" through warm tints of gut strings, recorder, violone and theorbo.

Handel wrote the part of Serse for a celebrated castrato. Now it is one of the opera's several male roles sung by women. Suzanne Lommler projected a vain effeteness from which love seemed perhaps an escape. This Serse was, however, faster to rage than tenderness. The famous opening aria, "Ombra mai fu," had Lommler skimming the surface; she impressed most in later outbursts. Here was ruler-as-tyrant. No surprise Katelyn Lee's poised, aristocratic Romilda — less memorable for vocal fireworks than Greer Garson calm — should recoil from him.

His promised bride, Amastre, shows the widest range of moods of any of the principals. But for most of the action she masquerades as a youth new to the kingdom, which seems to call for a more boyish, trumpet-ilke tone quality, which Angela Young Smucker provided. Her high point came in the great aria of reflection and regret, which still sounded a bit like having been learned rather than felt. The staging of her attempted suicide was clumsily unclear. Her ultimate unmasking and forgiveness were necessary for plot resolution but dramatically tepid.

Megan Moore's Arsamene, brother of Serse and true love of Romilda, conveyed vexation and inwardness less strenuously than one might expect from a much put-upon figure. He is torn by doubt, banished and sentenced to death before finally arriving at the altar with his beloved. The achievement of Moore's assumption was to not make him into a "type" — which is what the remaining characters are. Nonetheless, Erica Schuller's Atalanta, sister of Romilda and the crafty coquette, had considerable softening charm while sharing with the others an ease with runs and ornaments.

The one comic character, the servant Elviro, can be portrayed as a drinker and little else, which allows for tiresome exaggeration. David Govertsen's Elviro resembled Oliver Hardy in "The Fighting Kentuckian," the comic's rare non-comedic role. Large of frame and bass-baritone voice, Govertsen hinted at a hidden lumbering pathos that came through even Elviro's broad impersonation of a flower seller. Ryan de Ryke's Ariodate, father of Romilda and Atalanta, was the standard confident general, as so many baritones are.

The program was scheduled to be repeated at 5 p.m. Sunday and at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at Studebaker Theater, 410 N. Michigan Ave.; $30-$85; 312-898-7446; info@haymarketopera.org.

needed to do the physicality of it. And I had all my lines down and took it very seriously, what I was doing.

"I come in contact with Bob Roberts in a few powerful scenes, but there's one scene toward the end of the movie where I get a chance to basically ramble to camera and it's a four-page monologue that Tim had written. The night before, Tim had called me at 3 o'clock in the morning and he said: 'I need some help with this monologue, did I wake you up?' And I said, 'Yeah, you did but it's OK because I have a lot of thoughts. The only thing missing from this monologue is hubris. What about the idea of hubris in our country and our world right now?'

"So we hang up and I hardly got any sleep, I'm thinking all these thoughts, but I knew this four-page monologue backward and forward. So that morning, I get in the car, Tim gets in next to me and he's writing! And I'm like, oh my God, this is not a good sign! He's sitting there for the first 20 minutes of the ride, rewriting the monologue. So I figured he was adjusting some paragraphs or words here and there.

"Well, he turns to me and hands me a completely different monologue of four pages. And I said, 'You're serious?' And he said, 'Yeah!' And I said, 'Driver: How long is the drive from here?' And it was about an hour left. Tim looked at me: 'Do you think you can do it?' I said, 'I'll try my best.' And really my mouth dropped. How am I going to memorize an entirely new monologue? How am I going to render this real?

"So we get to set and end up getting a couple of takes that were really pretty good, I thought. But the more we went, and the deeper I got, the more irritated I got because I was trying to reclaim my memory of the new monologue but also while trying to be emotional. Because it's not just the words, it's what the character's trying to say. And I remember the heat of the room, and my brain going, and the character had palsy.

"Twenty-six takes later, I am wasted. (Laughs) I am exhausted! I had given everything I had. And I look at Tim. And he looks at me. And he says: 'Wow that's really pretty close. But you know what? Do it one more time.'

"You have to understand, you're on a movie set with everyone breathing down your throat. So you want to know what you're doing — or have a sense of the road map. You want to own it, and I was so exhausted and so broken down from trying to claim my memory of what he had just written that morning.

"I decided to just let it all go. And I did it for the 27th time and it was gold. I cried as I did it because I was just so worn out, so I would stop and let the tears come. And if I couldn't remember the lines, I just waited — I stayed right in it until the lines would come back to me, and it was the most brilliant moment of my career. But I felt horrible inside, to not get through it one time completely the way I wanted. We as actors want things to go a certain way. But really, when they don't go that way, that is when the magic happens."

"I mean, I was sweating. I was wet. I was nervous. I was embarrassed. All of those things that made the character vulnerable. This guy was eventually killed in the film and this is the moment before his death. I was thankful Tim had such patience. He had more patience than I did."

What was going through Esposito's mind?

"I mean, I'm a professional so I felt betrayed by Tim when he gave me an entirely new monologue and almost no time to learn it! I was angry at him! So in my brain, I still think of it as the worst moment.

"I'm a jazz aficionado and you have a metronome to practice with — why? Because there's no freedom without parameters. And for me, the parameters are the writer's words. For me not to give you every single word the way you wrote it is a killer! Because I come from theater — I don't change the words, I don't paraphrase.

"So it was my worst moment inside. But you would never know it watching that scene."

The takeaway ...

"Keep going. Don't give up. I mean, after 26 takes, your brain is toast. And yet between the 26th and 27th take, when I finally let go, I was able to capture what Tim Robbins was trying to get at. So don't give up.

"I put so much pressure on myself that day to please who? The director, the writer, the guy I like, my friend — but what about me?

"I mean, who ever wants to remember their worst moments? But you do want to think about it in terms of growth. And for me, my deliverance was really that I was able to persevere and not get frustrated with myself.

"You want a performance to be informed by 'percolating circumstances under the surface,' I call them. If you have percolating circumstances — some other information that's underneath what the words are — then you're really acting. So I was honored to have the opportunity to be challenged, even if I didn't expect it to happen quite that way!"

Beth Behrs and Max Greenfield

"The Neighborhood" (7 p.m., CBS): Any show that starts out being directed by sitcom master James Burrows ("Will & Grace") has a definite plus going in, and this comedy's premiere has that advantage. Max Greenfield ("New Girl") and Beth Behrs ("2 Broke Girls") play a Midwestern couple who relocate to Los Angeles, where a new neighbor (Cedric the Entertainer) develops immediate doubts about them ... and has no qualms about expressing those. Another performer with much experience in this genre, Tichina Arnold ("Martin"), also stars.

"The Resident" (7 p.m., FOX): Bell (Bruce Greenwood) sees red when Marshall Winthrop (Glenn Morshower) — the new chairman of the board and, not coincidentally, Conrad's (Matt Czuchry) father — asks for his son's feedback to some hospital budget considerations in the new episode "The Prince & the Pauper." Emily VanCamp and Jane Leeves also star.

"Queen of the World" (7 p.m., 2 a.m., HBO): This new British documentary draws extensively on footage from Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Ediburgh's private film archives, as well as treasures of the Royal Collection, to offer a unique perspective on the monarch's role as a figure on the global stage, a baton that she is passing to younger members of the British Royal Family. Filmed over the course of a year, director Matt Hill's film chronicles how the British Commonwealth has been a central focus throughout Queen Elizabeth's life.

"Happy Together" (7:30 p.m., CBS): Both the junior and senior Damon Wayanses have weekly series in this season, since as Sr. continues "Lethal Weapon," Jr. stars in this new sitcom with Amber Stevens West ("The Carmichael Show," "Ghosted") as a married couple prompted to tap back into their younger, wilder sides.

"9-1-1" (8 p.m., FOX): The new episode "Help Is Not Coming" finds the first responders continuing to deal with the horrific damage from a severe earthquake as well as the lingering threat of more aftershocks to come. Athena (Angela Bassett) tries to keep things running smoothly as Bobby (Peter Krause) and his team attempt to rescue victims still trapped in a collapsing high-rise hotel, as well as others pinned in the rubble below.

"Manifest" (9 p.m., NBC): As they struggle to pick up their personal lives after their baffling disappearance, the passengers from Flight 828 are dismayed to find themselves under government scrutiny in the new episode "Reentry." Meanwhile, Michaela (Melissa Roxburgh) understandably is having a hard time wrapping her mind around the reality that Jared (J.R. Ramirez) now is married to her former best friend.

Here are the answers to the weekly quiz:

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ K 3 ♥ 10 6 3 ♦ Q 10 7 5 2 ♣ K J 4
Partner opens 1S and right-hand opponent overcalls 2H. What call would you make?
A.1—A negative double is possible, but a 3C rebid by partner might be awkward. We like bidding 2S. We'll swear to have four trumps the next time we raise.

Q.2—North-South vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ K 10 4 ♥ K J 7 ♦ 10 8 6 5 ♣ 8 7 3
Partner opens 1D and right-hand opponent makes a takeout double. What call would you make?
A.2—1NT would be perfect if the opponents promise not to bid. Bid 2D instead. Partner will be in a good position if they do bid.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ Q 4 ♥ A K Q 6 ♦ A 8 5 4 3 ♣ K 7
Partner opens 2S, weak, and right-hand opponent overcalls 3C. What call would you make?
A.3—You won't get to nine tricks in no trump if partner has a hole in his spade suit. Bid 4S.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South, you hold:
♠ K 10 6 ♥ Q 9 7 2 ♦ A J 3 ♣ A 10 2

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	1♦	Pass

What call would you make?
A.4—Old timers will bid 1H and not give it a second thought. Many modern experts will rebid 1NT. Neither is wrong.

CHICAGO WEATHER CENTER

chicagoweathercenter.com | By Tom Skilling and WGN9

MONDAY, OCT. 1 NORMAL HIGH: 68° NORMAL LOW: 48° RECORD HIGH: 92° (1971) RECORD LOW: 32° (1974)

Warmth, storms to mark beginning of October

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
77	64

■ Frontal boundary draped across the area brings an ongoing storm threat.

■ Showers, and a few t-storms will likely be ongoing at daybreak, especially the city, north.

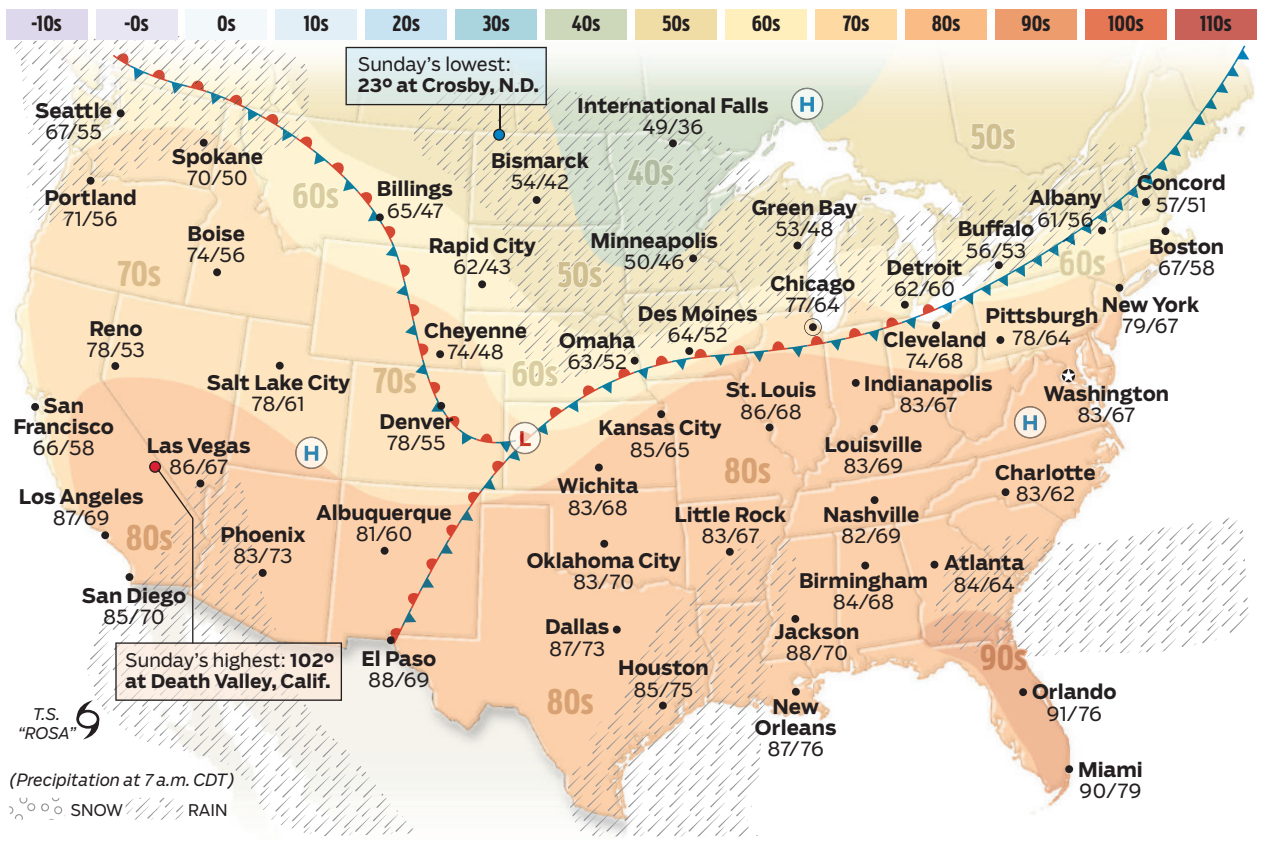
■ Showers scatter midday. peeks of sun emerge, especially south sections.

■ E-SE winds 10-15 mph.

■ High temps range from around 70 far north, to mid 80s far south.

■ More concentrated storms develop toward evening and much of the night, primarily impacting the north half of the metro area. Some storms could be severe.

NATIONAL FORECAST



Forecasts remain consistent in developing a warm, wet weather pattern for much of the central U.S.

The recent intrusion of chilly air that brought scattered frost to portions of the area Saturday morning has retreated to the north while a more summerlike regime evolves. By midweek, a large dip in the jet stream is forecast to develop in the West, while subtropical high pressure builds over the Southeast.

This places the Chicago area in a region of strong southwest flow aloft, which is to act as a conduit for unseasonably warm, moist air. Tropical air to the south will be separated from more seasonable air to the north by a front that is expected to oscillate across the region, bringing fluctuations in day-to-day temperatures. This boundary will also be a focus for thunderstorm clusters in coming days.

TUESDAY, OCT. 2

HIGH	LOW
71	60

Cloudy early, with patchy light rain or drizzle, then becoming partly sunny as low pressure moves east. Afternoon temps from upper 60s lakeside, to upper 70s far SW sections. NE winds 10-15 mph.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 3

HIGH	LOW
86	63

Chance of isolated t-storms N sections early, otherwise, partly sunny, windy and unseasonably warm. Temps reach the low-mid 80s area-wide. Showers possible overnight. SW winds 20-30 mph and gusty.

THURSDAY, OCT. 4

HIGH	LOW
70	59

Showers may linger S-E early. Front pushes through bringing cooler air. Periods of sun emerge, but temps hover around 70 due to NE winds of 10-20 mph. New round of t-storms arrives overnight.

FRIDAY, OCT. 5

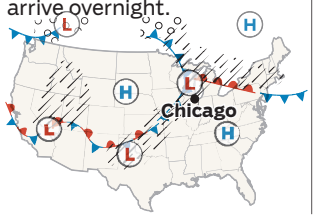
HIGH	LOW
77	65

Approaching wave of low pressure brings another round of showers, storms. Temps climb to near 70 N, and around 80 S. Mild, with more storms possible at night. Winds become S-SW 10-20 mph.

SATURDAY, OCT. 6

HIGH	LOW
72	61

Spotty showers linger through morning, then partly, to mostly cloudy. Not as warm. Highs range from near 70 N-W, to upper 70s S-E. Light SW winds turn NE 10-15 mph. More rain may arrive overnight.



SUNDAY, OCT. 7

HIGH	LOW
80	66

Morning showers, t-storms give way to partly sunny skies in the afternoon. Turning breezy and warm. Late-day highs reach the upper 70s and low 80s. Winds become S-SW 20-25 mph.

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

When is the earliest that a frost has been recorded in the Chicago area?

— Chris Townsend, South Elgin

Dear Chris,

Because the first occurrence of fall frost is patchy and scattered, the National Weather Service does not keep statistics regarding frost but instead uses the season's first temperature of 32 (degrees) or lower to define the end of the growing season. Chicago's "heat island" and its proximity to the warm waters of Lake Michigan delay, by about a month, the average first arrival of freezing temperatures in the core of the city and near the lake.

On average, the season's first freeze occurs about Oct. 3 in the coldest outlying areas, Oct. 13 at O'Hare International Airport, Oct. 24 at Midway Airport and Nov. 5 downtown. In official records since 1871, Chicago's first fall freezes range from as early as Sept. 22, 1995, to as late as Nov. 24, 1931.
