Massacre defendant in court

Rabbi welcomes Trump; others say he shouldn't come

By Allen G. Breed, Mark Scolforo and Maryclaire Dale
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The man charged in the Pittsburgh synagogue massacre was brought into court in a wheelchair Monday, as some members of the Jewish community and others objected to President Donald Trump's plans to visit, accusing him of contributing to a toxic political climate in the U.S. that might have led to the bloodshed.

With the first funerals set for Tuesday, the White House announced that Trump and first lady Melania Trump will visit the same day to "express the support of the American people and to grieve with the Pittsburgh community" over the 11 congregants killed Saturday in the deadliest attack on Jews in U.S. history.

Some Pittsburghers urged Trump to stay away.

"His language has encouraged hatred and fear of immigrants, which is part of the reason why these people were killed," said Marianne Novy, 73, a retired college English professor who lives in the city's Squirrel Hill section, the historic Jewish neighborhood where the attack at the Tree of Life synagogue took place.

Meanwhile, the alleged gunman, 46-year-old truck driver Robert Gregory Bowers, was released from the hospital where he was treated for wounds suffered in a gun battle with police. Hours later he was wheeled into a downtown federal courtroom in handcuffs to face charges.

A judge ordered him held without bail for a preliminary hearing Thursday, when prosecutors will outline their case. He did not enter a plea.

During the brief proceeding, Bowers talked with two court-appointed lawyers and said little more than "Yes" in a soft voice a few times in response to routine questions from the judge. Courtroom deputies freed one of his cuffed hands so he could sign paperwork.

Field Museum plans to revamp Native American Hall — with Native Americans as 'partners'

By Steve Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Field Museum will transform its aged Native North American Hall in the next three years, working to develop the new exhibits with Native Americans as "community partners," the museum announced Monday.

It is a "much, much needed renovation," Field president and CEO Richard Lariviere said. "This project intends to correct the way the museum tells the Native American history by doing so through the lens and voices of Native Americans."

The hall will remain open throughout the three-year overhaul, with fall of 2021 as the targeted completion date, but some of the artifacts in the Chicago natural history museum's rich collection have already begun to be taken down.

"I think it's going to be one of the most exciting projects the museum has ever undertaken," said Alaka Wali, curator of North American anthropology. "The challenge is to bring out our spectacular collections, but contextualize them in a way that connects the past to the present and the continuity of the Native American experience."

The current displays date mostly to the 1950s and in addition to being relatively stodgy in their presentation of materials by contemporary museum standards, they treat native peoples as parts of the past.

"What you see in their current exhibits, it really puts native peoples in historical context," said Heather Miller, executive director of the American Indian Center in Chicago. "It does not

Overseas betting on midterms a big deal

Roughly $400K has been wagered on Illinois' top race

By Katie Galioto
Chicago Tribune

Far, far away on the Caribbean island of Antigua, Pat Morrow is paying more attention to the midterms than many Americans are.

These days, the Canada native often spends at least four or five hours scouring the internet for new polls, new articles, new tweets — anything that could offer insight to voter behavior in the time leading up to the Nov. 6 elections. As the head oddsmaker for Bovada.lv, a popular online betting site, it's Morrow's duty to stay one step ahead of the American public.

It's a relatively new part of the job, he said, because political gambling used to constitute a minuscule portion of Bovada's dealings.

"Since 2016, we take the wagering on politics much more seriously," Morrow said, crediting President Donald Trump for surging interest in the line of business. Morrow calculates Bovada has received almost 10,000 individual bets on different midterm races — a number he expects to grow to at least 50,000 by election night.

So far, about $400,000 has been wagered on the Illinois gubernatorial race, according to data from bookies.com, a London-based aggregator of online gambling sites. Predicting which party will hold postelection control of the House and Senate is another popular bet, racking up about $3 million across the industry.

One year later, Zach Miller has goal: Playing again

On Monday, as Bears tight end Zach Miller met with reporters inside Halas Hall, he exuded the easygoing cheer that has made him so well-liked. For those who lost track of the calendar, Monday was a milestone, the one-year anniversary of the day Miller dislocated his left knee and tore his popliteal artery while trying to haul in a touchdown catch in New Orleans. The injury was horrific. Doctors scrambled to save Miller's leg from amputation. In the span of 2 ½ months, he needed nine surgeries. Chicago Sports

Raoul elbows Trump, Harold hits corruption

By Mike Riopell
Chicago Tribune

The two major candidates to be the state's next attorney general hammered on their main campaign themes during their last televised forum on Monday, with Democrat Kwame Raoul saying he'd be a check on President Donald Trump and Republican Erika Harold saying she'd investigate corruption in Illinois government.

Raoul, a state senator from the Hyde Park and Kenwood areas, said Illinois' next top lawyer in state government needs to be the "last line of defense against Donald Trump's policies" by challenging the administration in court.

"We've seen it in terms of keeping families together, protecting the environment, protecting students from … predatory lending and protecting access to health care," Raoul said.

Harold, an Urbana attorney, said she'd ask state lawmakers to allow her office to convene statewide grand juries that could help deal with public corruption.

"You want the attorney general to be able to be more proactive in combating public corruption," she said.

Pittsburgh terrorism, Trump and the language of hate

Rex W. Huppke

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

President Donald Trump speaks Saturday at a rally in Murphysboro, Ill. Trump's language signals to his supporters that their views are part of the mainstream.

The words of an anti-Semitic killer and the words of the president of the United States should not intersect. In America in 2018, they do.

The paranoid fears of mentally unstable citizens shouldn't be fed by the unchecked rantings of the president of the United States. In America in 2018, they are.

The president of the United States should not speak in anti-Semitic code words or promote anti-Semitic conspiracies. In America in 2018, he does.

The man accused of killing 11 Jews in a Pittsburgh synagogue ranted about "globalists" and actually criticized President Donald Trump for not being enough of a "nationalist." Trump himself speaks forebodingly of globalists, and has proudly declared himself a nationalist.

The man allegedly responsible for the deadliest attack against Jews in American history saw the migrant caravan slowly moving through Mexico as an invading force that must be stopped. Trump has done everything he can to make that caravan seem like an existential threat to the country.

The Pittsburgh terrorist — because what else do you call someone who slaughters innocents in a place of worship? — bought into right-wing conspiracy theories about liberal billionaire George Soros. Trump has spun conspiracies about Soros, suggesting, among things, that he's funding liberal protesters.

Words like "globalist" and "nationalist," along with conspiratorial talk that paints a Jewish billionaire as a malevolent force, are anti-Semitic dog whistles, and they have been since long before Trump entered the political arena.

Don't take my word for it. Just look at the language the Pittsburgh terrorist used, the same language used by white supremacists in the most vile corners of the internet.

Trump uses that language willfully, unapologetically. He has been warned about it, told it's the lexicon of the darkest souls among us.

And he doesn't care.

Last week, a Florida man who latched onto Trump's cult of personality and guzzled the paranoia the president dispenses was charged with targeting prominent Democrats — including Soros, Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama — with pipe bombs. The targets were all people Trump routinely attacks on Twitter and at his rallies.

In the wake of that massive assassination attempt, Trump was asked if he should tone down his rhetoric. The president said no, and he suggested that if anything he should "tone it up."

One of the pipe bombs was sent to CNN headquarters in New York City. Monday morning, Trump sent a tweet calling the media "the true Enemy of the People" and another blaming anger and division in America on "Fake & Dishonest reporting."

A sticker bearing the words "Dishonest Media" was one of the many pro-Trump stickers covering the alleged bomber's van. Another read: "CNN Sucks."

Trump is not directing anyone to commit acts of violence. He doesn't have to — the language he uses does the work for him.

He is a conductor. His orchestra is Fox News and its far-right-wing pundits, Republicans who seek political gain by riding the president's coattails and parroting his language, and a Twitter and Facebook army of aggrieved Americans eager to blame their problems on "others."

At a rally Friday, Trump warned his faithful that Democrats are "openly encouraging millions of illegal aliens to break our laws, violate our borders and bankrupt our country."

He said: "Democrats' extreme immigration policies will overwhelm your schools, your hospitals and communities, and strain public resources to the breaking point."

Trump doesn't have to use this kind of language. He could easily make a point about differences in immigration policies without effectively cutting-and-pasting the ominous tones and language of white supremacy.

He doesn't have to call himself a nationalist. He doesn't have to speak about menacing "globalists." He does it to be defiant, to trigger the pleasure centers of supporters who know those words are meant for them, signals that their views are now part of the mainstream.

He does it to benefit himself, plain and simple.

Trump said he plans to visit Pittsburgh, as presidents often do in the wake of a tragedy. A group of the city's Jewish leaders responded with a letter telling the president he is not welcome:

"For the past three years your words and your policies have emboldened a growing white nationalist movement. You yourself called the murderer evil, but yesterday's violence is the direct culmination of your influence. President Trump, you are not welcome in Pittsburgh until you fully denounce white nationalism."

I'll say it again: Trump is not directing anyone to commit acts of violence.

But he is speaking a language of hate, the same language used by the hateful man accused of killing 11 Jews in a synagogue, the same language used by the hateful man who allegedly mailed pipe bombs that could have killed all manner of people.

When Elie Wiesel accepted the Nobel Peace Prize in 1986, he said this: "We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the victim. Silence encourages the tormentor, never the tormented."

The words of an anti-Semitic killer and the words of the president of the United States should not intersect. In America in 2018, they do.

Which side are you on?

The only way to respond to the mass killing in Pittsburgh is with strength

BRENDAN SMIALOWSKI/GETTY-AFP

During a vigil Sunday at the Allegheny County Soldiers & Sailors Memorial Hall in Pittsburgh, Rabbi Hazzan Jeffrey Myers, right, from the Tree of Life synagogue, hugs other rabbis who were leading services at the synagogue when it was attacked.

Mass shootings are part of American culture. It is time we owned up to it.

We had hoped that these acts of violence could not weave their way into our nation's fabric. We tried to hold this grim reality at bay, hoping that each incident could somehow remain an anomaly.

But so far, we have lost every battle against guns in our society, and slaughters are now part of our norm.

So is hatred.

Most of us would denounce anyone who blatantly expressed disdain for another based on his or her race, religion, ethnicity or sexual orientation. That's what decent people are taught to do.

But few of us have ever seen hatred up close. It remains a vague concept only observed from a distance, from the viewpoint of someone else's eyes. And too often, our thoughts of it are fleeting.

Some Americans naively believed that we had long buried this demon, but hatred is a formidable foe. The moment we let down our guard, it rises and grips us by the neck, wrestling us into the dirt, where we wallow until we find the strength to pull ourselves up.

What happened at the Tree of Life synagogue in Pittsburgh last weekend was the merger of two evils that have been allowed to flourish in our country. It was a marriage of convenience between hatred and guns that would inevitably lead to tragedy.

The gunman, who authorities said had been spewing hatred toward Jews online for months, was able to obtain 21 guns registered in his name. He used an AR-15-style assault rife and three handguns during his rampage.

When the victims of mass shootings are young, as they often are in this country, we mourn the loss of innocence and the shattering of dreams not yet achieved. Sadly, we have become accustomed to the theft of our babies. But what, when the victims are old?

The irony of this shooting is that elderly people died as they were gathered to bless the young.

The 11 victims had more than 800 years of combined wisdom between them, and according to those who knew them, each had so much more to give.

Rose Mallinger was the oldest. At 97, she was described as spry and vibrant with "a lot of years left." Melvin Wax, 88, was said to be always full of jokes. Bernice Simon, 84, and her husband, Sylvan, 86, died together in the same synagogue where they were married 62 years ago.

Perhaps it was a coincidence that this partnership between hatred and guns would be revealed during a traditional baby-naming ceremony, where Jewish children are given a Hebrew name that will follow them through every major cycle of their life.

From the consecration ceremony, to their coming-of-age, to marriage to their burial, this name will be used as a testament to who they are. The people had gathered to offer their wishes for a life filled with loving relationships and performance of good deeds.

Maybe the shooter wasn't that conniving or even that clever. Perhaps he just stumbled upon this symbolic occasion that bridges the gap between the young and old. Perhaps, as a bigoted killer, he might just consider himself lucky.

Though his vicious assault has caused the entire nation great pain, the hate-filled shooter did not win. He has no cause to celebrate.

If anything, he has made our nation more resilient. He has forced those of us who support gun control to pick up the mantra yet again and vow to keep it in the forefront. He has made people who detest hatred of any kind more determined to stand up against evil.

On Monday, Rabbi Hazzan Jeffrey Myers said his synagogue would rebuild and "be back stronger and better than ever."

"You can cut off some branches from our tree, but Tree of Life has been in Pittsburgh for 154 years. We're not going anywhere," he said on CNN. "I will not let hate close down my building."

If we are to change our nation's course, all of us must be as committed as the rabbi to being stronger and better than ever. We cannot allow this deadly union to strengthen. We can not allow these evil deeds to forever define who we are as a country.

We must fight harder for stricter gun laws. And we must scream out so loud against bigotry that it silences the voices of hatred.

Chico backs legalized marijuana, casino to address city finances

Candidate says next mayor must 'fight for Chicago's share' of pie

By Bill Ruthhart
Chicago Tribune

Mayoral candidate Gery Chico backed legalized marijuana and a long-pursued Chicago casino Monday as a way to address the nearly $1 billion in additional annual payments the city's next mayor will have to make to underfunded public employee pensions.

Chico

In a speech to the City Club of Chicago, Chico said he believed the "city's financial crisis" needed to be tackled "head-on" but left plenty of wiggle room on how he'd get that job done.

He gave legalizing weed and the casino as his only two specific examples, which even under the rosiest projections would fall far short of $1 billion in annual revenue. Chico estimated a casino could bring in as much as $300 million per year while saying the city should get the largest share possible of an estimated $350 million to $700 million legalized marijuana would bring the state.

"The next mayor has to sit at the table and fight for Chicago's share of the pie," he said. "We have to make our city's case. Why? We're going to be the place with the largest number of dispensaries and stores that are going to sell this, not just to the people of Chicago, but throughout the Midwest."

When Chico brought up the idea of legalized marijuana, it drew just scattered applause from the largely Loop business set at the luncheon.

"A pall comes over the room," he joked. "An overwhelming number of Chicagoans support the legalization of marijuana, and I do too."

Chico also said Chicago should consider its own separate tax on marijuana in addition to whatever the state passes. He noted he still supports the long-discussed Chicago casino, as he did when he ran for mayor and finished a distant second to Rahm Emanuel in 2011.

By 2023, City Hall will have to make nearly $1 billion in additional pension payments each year under state legislation that requires increased payments to shore up the underfunded public employee retirement funds. Before Emanuel abruptly announced last month that he wouldn't run for a third term, he floated the idea of borrowing up to $10 billion in pension obligation bonds to reduce the debt tied to the pension funds.

After delivering his budget address earlier this month, Emanuel declined to say whether he might still move forward with the plan, only noting that he would give a major speech on the pension issue in December. Investment experts have had varying views on the idea, with some calling it risky while Emanuel allies present it as an alternative to another round of painful tax increases.

"My initial reaction to this was, 'No.' I thought there was a great deal of risk involved," Chico said. "But I think it has to be kept on the table."

The onetime chief of staff under former Mayor Richard M. Daley said he was "deeply evaluating" the possibility and consulting three experts on whether the possible risks to the city could be managed, including the continued likelihood of increased interest rates.

Chico said he'd like to avoid raising property taxes, which Emanuel already has tapped at a record rate to help shore up some of the pension funds.

"I'm not going to impulsively hit the pedal on property taxes. That's not fair to Chicagoans," Chico said. "I am 100 percent committed to looking for alternative sources of revenue first before going to taxpayers to foot the bill."

Still, Chico, like many of the 14 other candidates in the race, did not unequivocally rule out the possibility of a property tax increase.

Chico is a 62-year-old attorney who has been a City Hall lobbyist and has worked as president of the Chicago Board of Education, president of the Chicago Park District, chairman of the City Colleges of Chicago and chairman of the Illinois State Board of Education.

In addition to running for mayor in 2011, Chico lost the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate in 2004, a race won by then-state Sen. Barack Obama.

Chico is one of three candidates who joined the crowded field for mayor after Emanuel announced he wasn't running, along with Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle and former U.S. Commerce Secretary Bill Daley, whose brother and father both served as mayor.

Unlike when fellow candidates Lori Lightfoot and Paul Vallas recently addressed the City Club, Chico filled the large banquet room at the Maggiano's restaurant in River North, where the event was sold out. He spent the beginning of his speech noting his Mexican, Greek and Lithuanian roots and his childhood growing up in McKinley Park on the Southwest Side.

Chico also unveiled his campaign slogan, which nods at the city's ongoing struggles to tamp down violent crime: "Safer. Stronger. Together."

"We don't want to be known as citizens of a city where crime is all we're known for," Chico said. "I know we can do better. I've seen it. I've been a part of it."

That experience theme surfaced throughout Chico's 40-minute speech, in which he addressed issues facing the city with the punctuation: "Let's get it done."

On crime, Chico said he'd emphasize community policing and called the proposed federal consent decree on police reform a "crucial step" in improving the Chicago Police Department. He said he favored clemency and expunged records for those previously convicted of marijuana possession once the state legalizes the drug.

On education, Chico stressed his support for charter schools, noting many have been top performers in the city. He also said he would expand the number of high-performing schools opened up to citywide lotteries. And he vowed to use city incentives to get many of Chicago's shuttered schools reused as affordable housing, training centers or other types of neighborhood anchors.

Chico also said he'd prioritize neighborhood economic development while "obsessively" pursuing corporate headquarters. On that last point, Chico lauded Emanuel's efforts, which have helped drive an increase in the number of corporate headquarter openings downtown over the last eight years.

"I'm going to say this about Mayor Emanuel: He did a fine job in this area. He really worked hard," Chico said as the crowd applauded. "He worked very hard to lure companies into this city, and why is that a big deal? Our residents need jobs."

Chico finished his talk by casting many of the other candidates running in the Feb. 26 city election as eager to please but not ready to tackle the demanding job of mayor.

"You'll hear plenty from candidates for this job about how deeply they believe in this or that, and you'll hear promises about what they're gonna do. You'll hear it every day," Chico said.

"And yet Chicago voters will have to ask themselves this question: What's the likelihood that this candidate or that candidate will deliver on any of this stuff? What have they actually done? Do they know how to run a city as big and complex as Chicago? Do they really understand what is waiting for them on the mayor's desk on day one of the job?"

Skokie vigil for Pa. attack victims

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Candles are lit Monday as people attend a vigil at Temple Beth Israel in Skokie for victims of Saturday's synagogue attack in Pittsburgh. Eleven congregants of Tree of Life synagogue were killed in what is believed to be the deadliest attack on Jews in U.S. history.

Lombard synagogue member lost 2 brothers in Pittsburgh shooting

By Robert McCoppin
Chicago Tribune

Neighboring houses of worship have shown an outpouring of support for a Lombard synagogue whose members include a woman who lost two brothers in the Pittsburgh temple shooting.

Two of the 11 people killed in Saturday's shooting, Cecil and David Rosenthal, are brothers of Diane Rosenthal Hirt, a member of Congregation Etz Chaim in Lombard. The brothers, who were developmentally disabled, were greeters at the door of the Pittsburgh synagogue.

Members of the Lombard temple met the brothers a few years ago when they attended bat mitzvah services for two sisters at Congregation Etz Chaim, Rabbi Andrea Cosnowsky said.

"These gentlemen, their souls would shine through when they smiled. They were such good men," she said. "That's what makes this so tragic: They were unarmed and without malice, just really solid men."

While Hirt flew to Pittsburgh to be with her family immediately after the attack, Cosnowsky said, the congregation held a service of healing and hope Sunday in honor of the victims at the Tree of Life synagogue. The general mood was one of shock.

"I think people were sucker-punched," Cosnowsky said. "This is the worst tragedy that American Jews have faced, and we have shattered the innocence of our belief that it can't happen here."

Etz Chaim announced the local connection to the shooting on the synagogue's Facebook page Monday, writing that "our hearts are breaking as we send our deepest sympathies" to Hirt, her husband, Michael, and their two daughters.

The Lombard synagogue has received many messages of condolence and support from nearby churches and a mosque.

"The outpouring of support from the Muslim and Christian community in this area has been unbelievable," Cosnowsky said. "My email and voicemail have been overwhelmed by the partnerships and connections that we've made in this community."

Ron Feltman, senior pastor of Epiphany Lutheran Church in Elmhurst, wrote a message of support to Etz Chaim: "As your colleague down the road in Elmhurst, I want you to know that our hearts have been with you and all our Jewish brothers and sisters in the face of the act of terror in Pittsburgh.

Cecil Rosenthal, left, was killed with his brother, David, when a gunman opened fire at a Pittsburgh synagogue on Saturday.

"In our worship services yesterday, I confessed that I do not know what it is like to fear violence simply because of my religion, skin color, or sexual orientation. I just know that we can share with you how dear our religious kinship is and that we stand with you in any way we can."

Azam Nizamuddin, chairman of the interfaith committee at the Islamic Foundation in Villa Park, sent a note to the rabbi asking if foundation members could visit this week to show support.

"I am sure there is a profound sense of concern and fear in your community," he wrote. "But please know that we stand with you and you can count on us for support. We hope that this tragic incident and senseless crime will provide us with an opportunity to renew our faith in our Creator, in our neighbors, and with each other."

A few years ago, out of a sense of interfaith support, Cosnowsky said, Etz Chaim interceded in support of the Masjid Haqq mosque's plans to locate nearby. While the rabbi spoke to the Tribune on Monday, her congregation was holding one in a series of classes on the historical connections between Jews and Muslims.

"We're very blessed," she said. "We have great relationships, and people are coming together through our shared humanity to say what a horrible thing this is."

The previous day in front of her congregants, Cosnowsky said, she quoted from Rabbi Paul Kipnes in praying for "peace that comes because we did not become inured to the continual violence in our houses of worship and our concert venues, our schools, our malls, and our neighborhoods, and we did not allow the calls for prayers to turn us away from the actions we must take to end mass shootings."

Cosnowsky also recounted how one congregant, a Holocaust survivor, said the most important thing to understand is "to not let hate rob us of our dignity, and that we should always hold our head up and be proud of who we are, and believe in the goodness of humanity."

A funeral for the brothers was scheduled for Tuesday in Pittsburgh.

People who knew the Rosenthal brothers, who were in their 50s, said the pair never missed a Saturday service at Tree of Life. They were well-known in the community and looked out for each other with help from a social service agency that assists people with disabilities.

Regarding the Hirt family, Cosnowsky said, "The family wants the privacy to grieve but appreciates the outpouring of love and support from the community."

Congregation Etz Chaim itself was the target of an attack in 2014, when a man broke seven windows, wrote "death" on the door and put knives and a hatchet near the entrance.

Authorities said they caught the man, John D. White, driving through the synagogue yard, and recovered firearms and ammunition from his home, along with prescribed medications he had not been taking regularly.

White was found not guilty by reason of insanity and was sent to Elgin Mental Health Center; court records indicate he was released this past spring.

3 cops face charges of official misconduct, obstruction, conspiracy

By Megan Crepeau and Stacy St. Clair

A Cook County judge Monday allowed cameras in court for three current and former Chicago police officers charged with covering up the circumstances surrounding the 2014 Laquan McDonald shooting.

Judge Domenica Stephenson left unclear whether she still might bar the cameras from carrying testimony from the three defendants or several officers who could be called to the witness stand.

Attorneys for David March, Joseph Walsh and Thomas Gaffney vociferously objected, saying that if their clients' images were broadcast, their safety would be compromised. They also argued that cameras in the courtroom could keep witnesses from being candid.

In response, attorney Brendan Healey, representing several media outlets, noted that the defendants' photos are already widely available and that separate measures can be taken to ensure their security.

"The public has a right to see what happens in this courtroom, not just hear it, not just read transcripts, dead words on the page," Healey said Monday in court.

Special prosecutor Patricia Brown Holmes told the judge she did not object to the cameras, saying, "We support the public's right to know."

March, Walsh and Gaffney are scheduled to go on trial late next month on charges of official misconduct, obstruction of justice and conspiracy.

Prosecutors allege that the three filed false police reports to exaggerate the threat that McDonald posed to Officer Jason Van Dyke, who shot the teen 16 times in October 2014.

In a historic verdict this month, a Cook County jury convicted Van Dyke of second-degree murder and 16 counts of aggravated battery.

March was the lead detective in the shooting investigation, Walsh was Van Dyke's partner that night and Gaffney was among the first officers on the scene. March and Walsh left the Police Department after city Inspector General Joseph Ferguson recommended their firing following his investigation of the shooting. Gaffney remains suspended without pay.

In siding with the media, Stephenson ruled that the defendants, their attorneys and courtroom spectators may be filmed. However, she held out the possibility she could order the cameras turned off to prohibit particular witnesses from being recorded.

Judge Vincent Gaughan allowed cameras in the courtroom for Van Dyke's trial. While several witnesses asked not to be shown on camera during their testimony, Gaughan granted that request for only a few — including Walsh, who was not seen or heard on video or audio.

Nearly a half-million households reportedly tuned in for the Van Dyke verdict, and livestreams of daily testimony also drew wide audiences, a reflection of the intense public interest in the proceedings.

Stephenson's rules for courtroom media coverage are almost identical to Gaughan's, though she will allow her image to be captured while Gaughan prohibited his picture from being shown.

That's a key concession because Stephenson ultimately will decide the officers' fate in a bench trial, while Van Dyke opted for a jury.

All three defendants lodged formal objections to the so-called "extended media coverage," along with four officers at the shooting scene who could be called as witnesses: Joseph McElligott, Janet Mondragon, Daphne Sebastian and Dora Fontaine. McElligott and Fontaine both testified on camera during Van Dyke's trial.

Stephenson did not specifically address their objections in her ruling.

While arguing that their clients have grappled with security issues since their indictments, the defendants' attorneys also insisted that not enough public interest existed in the case to merit courtroom cameras. They pointed out that the benches in Stephenson's small courtroom have been empty for most of the hearings leading up to the officers' trial.

Only the news media are interested in the case, said March's attorney, James McKay.

"These are not secret trials," he said. "These doors are always open."

Carrying the proceedings live could contribute to a "circus atmosphere," said Will Fahy, who represents Gaffney.

"If it is live, it is only going to stoke up those passions of the public," he said. "Tom has enough to worry about at this point."

Rubio stumps for Roskam in House race

By Patrick M. O'Connell

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE
U.S. Rep. Peter Roskam, left, and U.S. Sen. Marco Rubio greet workers at Elkay in Downers Grove on Monday.

Two days after President Donald Trump flew to Downstate Illinois for a Republican pep rally that U.S. Rep. Peter Roskam did not attend, the congressman from the western suburbs turned to one of the president's former rivals for a home-stretch campaign boost.

U.S. Sen. Marco Rubio, R-Fla., visited Oak Brook and Downers Grove on Monday, hosting a hotel luncheon fundraiser for Roskam as he tries to hold onto his seat in the House. Roskam is locked in a re-election fight with Democrat Sean Casten in Illinois' 6th Congressional District, one of the country's most expensive and closely watched contests this fall.

"People in the 6th District can have strong feelings one way or the other, but what I appreciate about Senator Rubio is he's an unabashed conservative," Roskam said with Rubio at his side during a post-lunch news conference at the offices of Elkay, a plumbing products manufacturer.

"He comes to the public square as a conservative and yet he has also demonstrated a capacity to bring people together. The other thing is, the president came five hours away, and so I'm going to stick close by my constituents."

Rubio said he made the trip in support of Roskam because the Wheaton Republican has the temperament and experience Congress needs. His visit comes just after Trump's trip to southern Illinois and before former Vice President Joe Biden's campaign stop Wednesday in St. Charles for Democrat Lauren Underwood, who is challenging U.S. Rep. Randy Hultgren in the state's 14th Congressional District next door to the Roskam-Casten battle.

"It's not just about keeping the majority in the House, it's about ensuring that when you have such a clear contrast, such as in a race like this, that people make the right choice in terms of what kind of representation they're going to have in Congress," Rubio said.

The Florida senator, whom Trump defeated for the 2016 Republican presidential nomination, said the "cycle of anger and outrage" in politics and the country is coming from "all sides" and " has to be toned down because an angry nation cannot be a country that works together on issues of great importance."

"It's important to remember the job of being in Congress, with all of the noise and all of the attention being paid to everything happening, at the end of the day, the job of a member of the House is to take the views, the opinions, the ideas, the thoughts and the concerns of the district, of people, and bring it to Washington, D.C., and find policy solutions," Rubio said. "He does it as well as anyone in does in Washington today, on either side of the aisle."

Casten's campaign blasted Rubio's visit, emphasizing the Republicans' record on gun issues two days after a gunman killed 11 people in a synagogue in Pittsburgh.

"Peter Roskam's approach to gun safety measures are wrong and out of touch with his constituents," Casten campaign spokesman Greg Bales said in a statement. "We should not allow the public to have access to weapons designed to kill large numbers of people quickly like assault weapons, but Peter Roskam doubled down on his opposition to banning deadly assault weapons like the one used in the Pittsburgh shooting just last week on (a debate on) WTTW."

Roskam on Monday skirted questions from reporters about his opposition to an assault-style weapons ban, instead saying he has supported universal background checks and so-called red flag laws that would identify troubled individuals prone to violence.

Asked after the WTTW debate last week about his stance on an assault-style weapons ban, Roskam said, "I think most suburban voters say, look, there's more to gun violence than simply the instrumentality."

Rubio said a ban on all semiautomatic weapons, including those used for hunting, is not going to curb gun violence.

"There would still be millions of guns on the street available for people to buy, so that really wouldn't be effective," said Rubio, who is not up for re-election this year.

Though the 6th District race has mostly focused on wooing affluent whites, 11 percent of the district is Hispanic, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Rubio, born in Miami to Cuban-born parents, said Hispanic voters should turn to Republicans such as Roskam if they want higher wages and more economic opportunity.

"I believe that free enterprise, that limited government, that tax reform the congressman worked on, and that the other reforms that we'll continue to work on will provide that sort of opportunity for people," Rubio said.

"Ultimately, our nation is defined by the fact that each generation has left the next better off than themselves. That's especially true among immigrant communities. And no community in this country understands that better than Americans of Hispanic descent."

A recent Pew Research poll found half of U.S. Latinos say their situation in the country has worsened over the past year, up from 32 percent in the weeks after the 2016 election and the highest level since the Great Recession. More say they have serious concerns about their place in America today and a majority worry that they, a family member or close friend could be deported, according to the Pew report. The survey also found enthusiasm for the midterm elections among Hispanics is high.

The Casten campaign said Hispanic voters should turn to him because Roskam was part of the House Republican leadership that "refused to allow a vote on the bipartisan comprehensive immigration reform bill that passed the Senate overwhelmingly (which Rubio helped draft then backed away from when he ran for president), has opposed bipartisan agreements to protect Dreamers, and he voted to deport people who self-identified under DACA," or Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals.

Outside the luncheon at the DoubleTree hotel across the street from the Oakbrook Center mall, about 100 demonstrators protested Roskam and his positions on guns and health care, chanting "Hey hey, ho ho, Peter Roskam's got to go!" and holding "Resist" flags and Casten signs.

"I'm extremely concerned about Peter Roskam's donation from the NRA (National Rifle Association) and his position on gun control," said Dianne McGuire of Naperville. "Gun reform is a health care issue, too. ... Residents in the 6th District want gun reform and they don't want assault weapons on the street."

Another protester, Florence Appel of Lombard, said Republicans such as Roskam "can't be trusted" and have been misrepresenting their positions on health care legislation, especially as it relates to coverage of pre-existing conditions.

"They're scared they're going to lose the House," Appel said. "And if I have anything to do with it, they will."

really signify to visitors that we're still a thriving people here in Chicago and Illinois."

Marcus Winchester, cultural director for the Pokagon Band of the Potawatomi, said, "It's essentially just old beadwork, old baskets, stuff like that just pinned up, and it has whatever tribe it's attributed to. But it doesn't tell the stories about who we are as a people, and it doesn't get into the meat and potatoes."

Another key issue, Winchester said, is that museums organize by chronology, but for his people time is a continuum, where "there is no beginning and no end," he said. "A lot of indigenous academics and professionals are encouraging museums to get away from the chronological timeline."

Miller and Winchester were among the native representatives who took part in a land recognition ceremony Friday morning that is part of the museum working to correct its record with regards to Native Americans.

In the museum's new outdoor northeast garden, richly planted with native species, Lariviere stood at a portable dais and announced that "in order to create this bright future and to become the inclusive, forward-looking institution that we aspire to, we must honor and acknowledge the nations that were the first stewards of this land."

He unveiled a new plaque in the garden stating: "The Field Museum resides on the traditional homelands of the Three Fires Confederacy: Ojibwe, Odawa, and Potawatomi. The area was also a site of trade, travel and healing for more than a dozen other native tribes."

Miller, whose center on the North Side of Chicago has been working with the museum on cultural issues for decades now, and Winchester, as representative of the closest Potawatomi group, in southwest Michigan and northern Indiana, both spoke at the ceremony.

"It was a wonderful expression of the Field Museum's commitment to working with native communities and making a positive change in the way they portray history," Miller said afterward.

Adrien Pochel of Chicago, of Cree and Lakota heritage, sang two native songs, accompanying himself on hand drum. The second, he said, was a contemporary song about the strength of Mother Earth and the life-giving power of water created during the recent fight to stop the Dakota Access Pipeline that would carry crude oil across traditional tribal lands from North Dakota on a southeasterly route to central Illinois.

And Maritza Garcia, a dancer of Choctaw heritage in a bell-decorated "jingle dress," performed a traditional Ojibwe dance. (The bells, Winchester later explained, signify rain and its healing powers.)

"It means a lot for such an influential museum in the United States to put themselves out there and acknowledge indigenous people as traditional landowners," Winchester said after the ceremony.

In his five years as cultural director, he said he's seen more museums reaching out to tribes. "They want to make sure they get Native American input," he said. "Some are better than others. Some just want to ask Native American tribes for one last checkmark. That certainly isn't the case for the Field Museum, from what I've seen."

Development of the museum's new exhibits will take place over the next year or longer, museum specialists said, and will always include Native American scholars and community members as co-curators.

Among the goals that Alaka Wali, curator of North American anthropology, outlined are to employ Native American workers in the hall who can help interpret the exhibits, to make a presentation that better melds past and present and to create a more dynamic hall, where material is rotated in and out more frequently.

"We can't do that without collaboration with the native community," she said.

Shooting on Ryan fourth of month

By William Lee
Chicago Tribune

In the past two weeks, at least four cars have been hit by gunfire on the Dan Ryan Expressway on the South Side and Interstate 57 in the south suburbs, according to Illinois State Police.

The latest attack occurred around 4:15 a.m. Monday when a passenger was shot in the leg on the inbound lanes of the Dan Ryan near Marquette Road, state police said.

The 27-year-old man was taken in serious condition to the University of Chicago Medical Center. State police described the injuries as not life-threatening.

Two others in the car were not injured.

On Oct. 22, two men were killed and another person was injured when shots were fired from one car at another on northbound I-57, causing both cars to crash, according to state police.

The shooting happened about 6 miles from another attack on I-57, in the southbound lanes between Kedzie Avenue and 159th Street in Markham, that also injured three people.

On Oct. 19, northbound I-57 between 119th and 127th streets on the Far South Side of Chicago was shut down after shots were fired at a car. No one was injured.

So far this year, there have been 38 shootings on Chicago-area expressways. There were 51 all of last year and 54 in 2016, according to state police. This year's shootings have left 23 wounded, four of them fatally.

Past shootings have led to expanded partnerships between state and Chicago police and the Cook County sheriff's office to assign extra patrols to expressways and gang-afflicted areas.

process skyrocketed after the election of Trump, many foreigners and expats have developed a fascination with the U.S. government over the past two years, Morrow said.

"Not only are they paying attention to Trump, they're paying more attention to Senate races, House elections," he said. They're paying money too, in the hopes of translating their newfound knowledge into profits through a few well-placed bets.

Though political betting is illegal in the United States, many other countries consider wagering on elections to be an acceptable practice, even a longstanding tradition.

"People love to bet on British elections, European referendums, Scottish referendums," said Alex Donohue, spokesman for bookies.com. "It's such a normal and natural thing for me."

Customers making these types of wagers are different from the sports bettors that make up most of Donohue's clientele. "I think most people who bet on politics see it as sort of an intellectual pursuit because of the research it requires," he said.

In Britain, he added, some see political gambling as a sort of investment, similar to stock trading. It's quite common to see big donors, or even candidates themselves, bet on the election outcome they desire.

"You have some politicians who are more than happy to put their money where their mouth is," Donohue said.

For this reason, it can be interesting to keep an eye on the odds leading up to an election. They sometimes tell a different story from the polls, though much of the lingo is the same — pollsters borrowed terms like "dark horse" and "tight race" from the world of gambling.

Just look at the 2016 race. A HuffPost poll taken that October gave Trump a 1.7 percent chance of winning; betting markets had the now-president's odds at 25, 30 and even 40 percent, Donohue said.

"Public opinion polling is a representative snapshot of a voter's intention," Donohue said. "A bet, or a betting market, is better stating the percentage chance of something happening."

Right now, Democrat J.B. Pritzker is a heavy favorite for Illinois governor among bookies.com oddsmakers, with 1-20 odds to incumbent Bruce Rauner's 9-1 going rate.

Looking at the national political landscape, Bovada bookies say there's a 75 percent chance the Republicans maintain control of the Senate and a 70 percent chance the Democrats take the House. There's a parlay option for bettors predicting both outcomes, Morrow said, that pays 66 cents in winnings on the dollar. The average wager Bovada receives for a midterm contest is about $250.

JOSE M. OSORIO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

> "Whatever your opinion of Donald Trump is, bookmakers are incredibly grateful for him coming into power."
> — Alex Donohue, spokesman for bookies.com

Don't expect political gambling to make its way to America anytime soon, at least legally. Sports betting is lawful in only six states, though quite a few others — including Illinois — are discussing legislation to allow wagers on athletic contests.

"I think you're going to see an expansion of other types of betting, but there's no talk, really, on allowing election gambling," said Jennifer Roberts, associate director of the International Center for Gaming Regulation based in Nevada.

"There are just some events that we don't want affected by betting."

For now, those wishing to place a wager on the midterms will have to take a vacation to Britain or Antigua or another country that allows political gambling.

There, bookies will happily take your money, making a mental note to thank the American president for the boom in business he created.

"Whatever your opinion of Donald Trump is," Donohue said, "bookmakers are incredibly grateful for him coming into power."

Officials say body found at recycling site not employee

By Elvia Malagon
Chicago Tribune

A man found dead Monday at a metal recycling company near the North Branch of the Chicago River was not a worker there, a spokesman for the company said.

Just before 7:10 a.m., a man whose age was not immediately determined was found dead in the 1900 block of North Clifton Avenue in the Ranch Triangle neighborhood on the city's North Side, according to Chicago police. He had not been identified as of Monday afternoon, according to the Cook County medical examiner's office.

The body was found at General Iron Industries, a metal recycling company just east of the river in an industrial area. Security workers for the company found the man, but he was not employed there and was not authorized to be on the property, according to a statement released by the company.

"We are fully cooperating with Chicago Police in their investigation and we defer to them to provide any further information. We extend our condolences to the individual's family," the company statement said.

Authorities gave no indication regarding how the man died. Police were conducting a death investigation.

Pawar announces he's running for city treasurer

By John Byrne
Chicago Tribune

Ald. Ameya Pawar launched a bid for Chicago treasurer Monday, saying he wants to create a public bank so the city can stop paying out banking fees for basic financial services and instead use the savings for affordable housing and investments in neighborhoods.

Pawar, who's stepping down as alderman of the 47th Ward and who ran unsuccessfully for governor, said he wants to push a progressive agenda as treasurer. Incumbent Kurt Summers announced this month that he would not run for re-election.

"I'm running in a divisive time, in a time where a few divisive right-wing billionaires and corporations use their billions to shape the political economy," Pawar said. "They use their money and influence to decide who gets what, to decide who deserves and who doesn't. All I'm simply saying is, let's harness the power of this office and use our billions to match theirs. The march toward equity begins and starts through the treasurer's office."

The treasurer's office is largely dependent on the cooperation of the mayor to push a financial agenda for the city. Pawar declined to say whom he supports to succeed Mayor Rahm Emanuel. "I'm not concerned about being able to work and build coalitions in government," he said. "We've done that."

State Rep. Melissa Conyears-Ervin also is building support and collecting signatures as she considers a run for treasurer. Peter Gariepy, who lost to Cook County Treasurer Maria Pappas in the March Democratic primary, is considering a bid as well.

Raoul, Harold hammer at campaign themes

With a week before Election Day and thousands of voters already casting their ballots, Monday's WTTW forum offered both candidates an outlet to sound off at a time when much of Illinois' political energy is being sucked up by the bitter race for governor and hotly contested congressional races.

The forum came as Raoul on Monday unveiled his final TV ad hours beforehand, touting endorsements from newspapers and former President Barack Obama, whom he replaced in the Illinois Senate nearly 15 years ago.

In Harold's latest commercial, she says electing her would protect voters if Democrat J.B. Pritzker is elected over Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner. Asked if the ad suggested she thinks Rauner won't be re-elected, Harold said she hopes he is.

"The reality is that, if he is not, then many people want to see a two-party system maintained within Illinois," she said. "And I would be a check."

Harold's campaign has received $3 million from Rauner, who this summer said she "will prosecute" his chief political nemesis, Democratic House Speaker Michael Madigan. Harold on Monday said "it would be inappropriate to go into office with any sort of agenda to start prosecuting people, especially for political purposes."

Asked by moderator Carol Marin whether she's seen anything Madigan's done that's "indictable," Harold said, "I have not." But she said lawmakers shouldn't be allowed to set tax policy in Springfield while running a law firm helping businesses seeking property tax relief, as Madigan's firm does.

Rauner has spent years and millions of dollars trying to hang most of the state's ills on Madigan's tenure in Springfield.

Raoul called Madigan's tenure in Springfield "a mixed bag."

"There's also been a lot of impasse in Springfield that I believe is unnecessary," Raoul said.

Harold cited the state's two-year budget impasse when asked about Rauner's term but praised him for working on criminal justice reform.

The surprise decision last year by Attorney General Lisa Madigan, the speaker's daughter, not to seek re-election fueled Democrats' scramble to run for the seat — a significant political plum that's been largely out of reach for hopefuls in both parties while Madigan held the office. Raoul emerged from the crowded Democratic primary by defeating former Gov. Pat Quinn and others. Harold got into the race before Madigan announced her decision and easily won her primary.

After the debate, Harold criticized Lisa Madigan's probe of the Rauner administration's response to the deadly Legionnaires' disease outbreak at the veterans home in Downstate Quincy.

"The timing of the announcement of the criminal probe into the Quincy veterans home seemed political because it occurred a couple of hours before the gubernatorial debate," Harold said. "And you never want people to question the political motivations of the attorney general."

Throughout much of the campaign, Raoul has attacked Harold for her views on social issues. She opposes abortion rights but says she'll follow the law and on Monday said she doesn't oppose same-sex marriage. Raoul supports abortion rights and same-sex marriage. Both oppose the death penalty. On guns, both favor banning bump stocks. Raoul said he favors banning assault-style weapons depending on how they're defined. Harold said she "wouldn't ban all of them."

They clashed on Monday over the Affordable Care Act, with Raoul criticizing Harold for her stance in favor of replacing the law known as Obamacare when she ran for Congress four years ago.

Harold said it's "preposterous" for Raoul to suggest that someone running for state attorney general could take away people's health care.

In response, Raoul pointed to Republican attorneys general who sued in Texas "to do just that."

"Where Donald Trump and Jeff Sessions have backed away from defending the lawsuit, Democrat attorneys general have stepped in to defend the lawsuit," he said.

Libertarian Bubba Harsy of Du Quoin also is running for attorney general.

No survivors likely in Lion Air crash

By Niniek Karmini and Stephen Wright
Associated Press

ULET IFANSASTI/GETTY

Family members await news Monday at a crisis center at Soekarno-Hatta International Airport in Indonesia.

JAKARTA, Indonesia — Rescuers in inflatable boats retrieved human remains, pieces of aircraft and personal belongings from the Java Sea on Monday after a new-generation Boeing jet operated by an Indonesian budget airline crashed minutes after takeoff, presumably killing all 189 people on board.

Distraught family members struggled to comprehend the sudden loss of loved ones in the crash of the 2-month-old Lion Air plane with experienced pilots in fine weather.

They gathered at crisis centers set up by the authorities at airports, hoping desperately for a miracle. But a top search official, citing the condition of the remains recovered, said no survivors are expected.

The disaster is a setback for Indonesia's airline industry, which just emerged from decadelong bans by the European Union and the U.S. over safety concerns.

President Joko Widodo ordered an investigation and urged Indonesians to "keep on praying."

The crash of the Boeing 737 Max 8 is the latest in a series of tragedies that have struck Indonesia this year, including earthquakes and a tsunami that killed several thousand people.

An air transport official, Novie Riyanto, said the flight was cleared to return to Jakarta after the pilot made a "return to base" request two to three minutes after taking off. It plunged into the sea about 10 minutes later. Weather conditions were normal, but the plane, which Lion Air received in August, had experienced an unspecified technical issue on its previous flight.

Relatives and friends wept, prayed and hugged each other as they waited at Jakarta's airport and at Pangkal Pinang's airport on Bangka island off Sumatra where the flight was headed. Some including Indonesian Finance Minister Sri Mulyani headed to the search and rescue agency's headquarters in Jakarta for information. About 20 ministry staff were on the flight.

Latief Nurbana said he and his wife Yeti Eka Sumiati stayed up late Sunday talking to their 24-year-old son Lutfi Nuramdani, squeezing every moment they could from his weekend visit to Jakarta to catch up on his life in Pangkal Pinang.

Nurbana said they talked until falling asleep and Sumiati woke up early to take their son, a post office worker, to the airport.

"Last night, we were chatting together about his wife who is now seven months' pregnant, his plans and his dreams with his own small family, until we fell asleep," he said as his wife wept and clung to him.

"Now he's gone. We can't believe that he left us this way, we can't believe that his plane crashed. That's something we only see on TV news, now it happened to my son," Nurbana said. "We want to see his body, his face, his remains."

More than 300 people including soldiers, police and fishermen are involved in the grim search, retrieving aircraft debris and personal items such as a crumpled cellphone, ID cards and carry-on bags from the seas northeast of Jakarta.

Search and Rescue Agency chief Muhammad Syaugi said he's certain it won't take long to locate the hull of the aircraft and its black box due to the relatively shallow 100- to 115-foot depths of the waters it plunged into.

The jet, on a 1-hour flight, was carrying 181 passengers, including one child and two babies, and eight crew members.

Lion Air said there were two foreigners on the plane: one of the pilots, Indian national Bhavye Suneja, and an Italian citizen.

The pilot of Flight 610 had more than 6,000 flying hours while the co-pilot had more than 5,000 hours, according to Lion Air.

The Transport Ministry said the plane took off from Jakarta around 6:20 a.m. and crashed just 13 minutes later. Data from FlightAware showed it had reached an altitude of only 5,200 feet.

Boeing Co. said it was "deeply saddened" by the crash and was prepared to provide technical assistance to Indonesia's crash probe.

The 737 Max 8 was leased from China Minsheng Investment Group Leasing Holdings Ltd., according to the official China News Service.

Malindo Air, a Malaysian subsidiary of Lion Air, was the first airline to begin using the 737 Max 8 last year. The Max 8 replaced the similar 800 in the Chicago-based plane maker's product line.

Lion Air president-director Edward Sirait said the plane had a "technical problem" on its previous flight from Bali to Jakarta but it had been fully remedied. He didn't know specifics of the problem when asked in a TV interview.

The crash is the worst airline disaster in Indonesia since an AirAsia flight from Surabaya to Singapore plunged into the sea in December 2014, killing all 162 on board.

Lion Air, a discount carrier, is one Indonesia's youngest and biggest airlines, flying to dozens of domestic and international destinations. Earlier this year it confirmed a deal to buy 50 new Boeing narrowbody aircraft worth an estimated $6.2 billion.

5,200 troops headed to Southwest border

Gen. Terrence O'Shaughnessy, left, and Kevin McAleenan speak at a news conference Monday to announce deployment to the border.

WASHINGTON — A week out from the midterm elections, the Pentagon said Monday it is sending 5,200 troops, some armed, to the Southwest border this week in an extraordinary military operation to stop Central American migrants traveling north in two caravans that were still hundreds of miles from the United States. The number of troops is more than double the 2,000 who are in Syria fighting the Islamic State group.

President Donald Trump, eager to focus voters on immigration in the lead-up to the elections, stepped up his warnings about the caravans, tweeting: "This is an invasion of our Country and our Military is waiting for you!"

His warning came as the Pentagon began executing "Operation Faithful Patriot," described by the commander of U.S. Northern Command as an effort to help Customs and Border Protection stiffen defenses at and near legal entry points. Advanced helicopters will allow border protection agents to swoop down on migrants trying to cross illegally, he said.

"We're going to secure the border," Air Force Gen. Terrence O'Shaughnessy, the Northern Command leader, said at a news conference. He spoke alongside Kevin McAleenan, commissioner of Customs and Border Protection.

Eight hundred troops already are on their way to southern Texas, O'Shaughnessy said, and their numbers will top 5,200 by week's end. He said troops would focus first on Texas, followed by Arizona and then California.

The number of people in the first caravan has dwindled to 3,500 from about 7,000, though a second one was gaining steam and marred by violence. About 600 migrants in the second group tried to cross a bridge from Guatemala to Mexico en masse Monday but were met by ranks of Mexican federal police who blocked them from entering. The riverbank standoff followed a more violent confrontation Sunday when the migrants used sticks and rocks against Mexico police.

The first group passed through the spot via the river — wading or on rafts — and was advancing through southern Mexico. That group appeared to begin as a collection of about 160 who decided to band together in Honduras for protection against the gangs who prey on migrants traveling alone and snowballed as the group moved north. They are mostly from Honduras, where it started, as well as El Salvador and Guatemala.

Overall, they are poor, carrying the belongings that fit into a knapsack and fleeing gang violence or poverty. It's possible there are criminals mixed in, but Trump has not substantiated his claim that members of the MS-13 gang, in particular, are among them.

The president's dark description of the caravan belied the fact that any migrants who complete the long trek to the southern U.S. border already face major hurdles, both physical and bureaucratic, to being allowed into the United States. Migrants are entitled under both U.S. and international law to apply for asylum, but it may take a while to make a claim. There is already a bottleneck of asylum seekers at some U.S. border crossings, in some cases as long as five weeks.

The military operation drew quick criticism.

"Sending active military forces to our southern border is not only a huge waste of taxpayer money, but an unnecessary course of action that will further terrorize and militarize our border communities," said Shaw Drake of the American Civil Liberties Union's border rights center at El Paso, Texas.

The troops — which will include military police, combat engineers and others — are expected to perform a wide variety of functions such as transporting supplies for the Border Patrol, but they are legally prohibited from engaging in immigration enforcement, officials said.

The escalating rhetoric and expected deployments come as the president has been trying to turn the caravans into a key election issue just days before the midterm elections that will determine whether Republicans maintain control of Congress.

"This will be the election of the caravans, the Kavanaughs, law and order, tax cuts, and you know what else? It's going to be the election of common sense," Trump said at a rally in Illinois on Saturday.

On Monday, he tweeted without providing evidence: "Many Gang Members and some very bad people are mixed into the Caravan heading to our Southern Border."

"Please go back," he urged them. "you will not be admitted into the United States unless you go through the legal process. This is an invasion of our Country and our Military is waiting for you!"

Saudi, Turkish prosecutors discuss Khashoggi killing probe

By Christopher Torchia and Zeynep Bilginsoy
Associated Press

ISTANBUL — Top Saudi and Turkish prosecutors on Monday discussed the investigation into the killing of Saudi writer Jamal Khashoggi, a show of cooperation amid Turkish demands that Saudi Arabia turn over 18 detained suspects for a murder trial.

Saudi Arabia's top prosecutor, Saud al-Mojeb, met with Istanbul's chief public prosecutor, Irfan Fidan, for an hour and 15 minutes at Istanbul's main courthouse, Turkey's state-run Anadolu news agency said.

The two countries have announced a joint investigation of the journalist's killing in Saudi Arabia's consulate in Istanbul, although Turkey has leaked evidence to the media in an apparent effort to pressure its regional rival over the crime committed by Saudi officials.

Turkey alleges a hit squad from Saudi Arabia traveled to Istanbul to kill the journalist who was critical of the Saudi leadership and then tried to cover it up.

Under mounting international pressure, Saudi Arabia has changed its narrative about Khashoggi's killing several times, only recently acknowledging that Turkish evidence shows it was premeditated.

Turkey says a trial in Turkey would be transparent, reflecting concerns about Saudi attempts to dodge responsibility for the killing.

Turkey's foreign minister, Mevlut Cavusoglu, on Monday welcomed the cooperation between Turkish and Saudi investigators and said he hoped there would be no further delays.

"The investigation should be concluded as soon as possible," Cavusoglu said. "The whole world is curious. All the truth should be revealed."

Turkey has been pushing Saudi Arabia to help locate Khashoggi's body, which has not been found.

Turkey is seeking the extradition of the Saudi suspects detained for the killing, which happened after Khashoggi entered the consulate on Oct. 2. Saudi Foreign Minister Adel al-Jubeir, however, says the kingdom will try the perpetrators and bring them to justice after the investigation is completed.

Saudi officials characterize the killing as a rogue operation carried out by Saudi agents who exceeded their authority.

Yet some of those implicated in the killing are close to Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, the kingdom's heir-apparent whose condemnation of the killing has failed to ease suspicions that he was involved.

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan says his country will reveal more evidence about the killing but is not in any rush to do so. U.S. Defense Secretary Jim Mattis has said the killing undermines regional stability and has urged Saudi Arabia to conduct a full and complete investigation.

Defendant in court; Trump visit stirs debate

A woman stands at a memorial outside the Tree of Life Congregation on Monday, two days after 11 people were shot and killed at the synagogue.

He was expressionless.

"It was not the face of villainy that I thought we'd see," said Jon Pushinsky, a congregant who was in court for the hearing.

Federal prosecutors are pressing for the death penalty against Bowers, who authorities say expressed hatred of Jews during the attack and later told police, "I just want to kill Jews" and "All these Jews need to die."

After the hearing, U.S. Attorney Scott Brady called the shootings "horrific acts of violence" and added: "Rest assured we have a team of prosecutors working hard to ensure that justice is done."

The weekend massacre — which took place 10 days before the midterm elections — heightened tensions around the country, coming just a day after the arrest of the Florida man accused of sending a wave of pipe bombs to Trump critics.

The mail bomb attacks and the bloodshed in Pittsburgh set off debate over whether the corrosive political atmosphere in Washington and beyond contributed to the violence and whether Trump himself bears any blame because of his combative language.

Pittsburgh Mayor Bill Peduto, a Democrat, said the White House should contact the victims' families and ask them if they want the president to come. He also warned Trump to stay away when the first funerals are held.

"If the president is looking to come to Pittsburgh, I would ask that he not do so while we are burying the dead," Peduto said. "Our attention and our focus is going to be on them, and we don't have public safety that we can take away from what is needed in order to do both."

The White House did not immediately respond to the mayor's request.

Asked if Trump has done enough to condemn white nationalism, spokeswoman Sarah Huckabee Sanders said he has "denounced racism, hatred and bigotry in all forms on a number of occasions."

Tree of Life Rabbi Jeffrey Myers says that Trump is "certainly welcome."

For his part, Trump lashed out anew Monday at the news media, calling it "the true Enemy of the People," and he again blamed what he called "fraudulent" reporting for anger that has led to last week's high-profile attacks as well as other violence.

Some in Pittsburgh, however, looked forward to the president's visit.

Tree of Life Rabbi Jeffrey Myers said that Trump is "certainly welcome."

"I am a citizen. He is my president," Myers told CNN.

But Barry Werber, 76, who hid in a dark storage closet as the gunman rampaged through the synagogue, said he doesn't want Trump to come to Pittsburgh. He said Trump is trying to "instigate his base," and "bigots are coming out of the woodwork."

Kristin Wessell, a homemaker who lives near Squirrel Hill, also said Trump should steer clear of Pittsburgh, to let the victims' families "grieve how they see fit."

The youngest of the 11 dead was 54, the oldest 97. The toll included a husband and wife, professors, dentists and physicians.

Bowers was charged with offenses that included causing death while obstructing a person's right to the free exercise of religion — a hate crime — and using a gun to commit murder. He was also charged under state law with criminal homicide, aggravated assault and ethnic intimidation.

Merkel won't seek another term as German chancellor

By Geir Moulson and David Rising
Associated Press

TOBIAS SCHWARZ/GETTY-AFP

German Chancellor Angela Merkel speaks during a news conference at CDU headquarters Monday.

BERLIN — Angela Merkel set off Monday on what could be a three-year countdown to the end of her leadership of Germany, a stint that has made her the European Union's longest-serving leader and a key figure in facing the continent's many crises.

Merkel announced that she will give up the leadership of her conservative Christian Democratic Union in December and won't stand for a fifth term as chancellor — signaling the beginning of the end at the helm for the woman many had labeled the "leader of the free world."

That's a title she herself objected to, saying leadership is never up to one person or country. But she has been a stalwart face of Western democracy through turbulent times, including the European debt crisis, the migrant influx of 2015, Britain's decision to leave the EU and escalating trade tensions with the United States.

With her announcement, she indicated she has no intention of shirking the "major foreign policy challenges" ahead, suggesting by taking the question of her future out of the picture, her often rancorous coalition might govern better.

"With this decision, I am trying to contribute to allowing the government to concentrate its strength, finally, on governing well — and people rightly demand that," Merkel said.

Merkel, 64, has led the CDU since 2000 and Germany since 2005. She governs Germany in a "grand coalition" of what traditionally has been the country's biggest parties — the CDU, Bavaria's conservative Christian Social Union and the center-left Social Democrats.

She announced her decision the day after voters punished both her CDU and the Social Democrats in an election in the central state of Hesse. It came two weeks after a similar debacle for the CSU and Social Democrats in neighboring Bavaria.

Her announcement comes amid growing concerns about far-right nationalist parties making inroads in Europe, including Germany. Sunday's result in Hesse means that the Alternative for Germany party now holds seats in every state legislature and federal parliament.

Many in Europe also have looked to Merkel as U.S. President Donald Trump has increasingly called into question traditional trans-Atlantic ties with his announcements of trade tariffs, repeated criticism of European contributions to NATO, and other issues. Merkel has walked a fine line, criticizing some of Trump's decisions while emphasizing that a good relationship with Washington is "central" to her government.

At the moment, it is still too early to tell whether she will be able to govern effectively as a lame-duck chancellor, or if it will strengthen her coalition, said Thorsten Faas, political science professor at Berlin's Free University.

"The pressure obviously was so great that there was no other solution left," he said. "It will be interesting to see what happens now, because this is initiating a dynamic, the outcome of which is unforeseeable today."

For her part, Merkel said she sees "many more opportunities than risks for our country, the German government and also my party" in setting a transition of power in motion.

She said she hopes to open the way for "new success for the CDU" by letting it prepare for her departure as chancellor, and she won't interfere with the choice of a successor.

Two prominent candidates immediately threw their hats in the ring: Annegret Kramp-Karrenbauer, 56, the party's general secretary, who is viewed as a Merkel ally and largely backs her centrist approach; and Health Minister Jens Spahn, 38, an ambitious conservative who has talked tough on migration and has criticized Merkel.

Bomb suspect had hit list of targets, official says

By Curt Anderson And Michael Balsamo
Associated Press

JOE RAEDLE/GETTY

Daniel Aaronson, attorney for pipe-bomb suspect Cesar Sayoc, speaks to reporters Monday outside federal court.

MIAMI — The man suspected of sending pipe bombs to prominent Democrats and other opponents of President Donald Trump kept a list of elected officials and others who investigators believe were intended targets, an official told The Associated Press on Monday.

The disclosure came as 56-year-old Cesar Sayoc made his initial court appearance in Miami federal court Monday, saying little but tearing up, and after bomb squads were called to a post office in Atlanta about a suspicious mailing to CNN similar to the pipe bomb packages recovered in the case last week.

Sayoc

The official said authorities had recovered soldering equipment, a printer, and stamps similar to those used on the package bombs in the investigation into Sayoc, who was arrested last week in Florida. Authorities believe Sayoc was putting explosives together in his van.

The official wasn't authorized to discuss the ongoing investigation and spoke on condition of anonymity to the AP. The official also said that, as part of the investigation, authorities were scrutinizing Sayoc's social media posts.

The FBI said via its Twitter account that the recovered package in Atlanta was "similar in appearance" to the bubble-wrapped manila envelopes authorities say were sent by Sayoc to intended targets from Delaware to California, including former President Barack Obama, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and former Vice President Joe Biden.

CNN President Jeff Zucker says all mail to CNN has been screened offsite since last week, when a series of package bombs began appearing around the country. Among them were two apparent mail bombs sent to CNN.

At least some listed a return address of U.S. Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, former chairwoman of the Democratic National Committee.

She represents the South Florida district where the former male stripper, pizza driver and strip club DJ lived in an older van covered with bumper stickers praising Trump, disparaging Democrats and CNN and showing rifle crosshairs over liberals like Clinton and filmmaker Michael Moore.

At Monday's hearing, federal prosecutors said they will seek to keep Sayoc jailed until trial as a flight risk and a danger to the community. A judge set another hearing for Friday on whether to grant bail to Sayoc and to discuss when he will be sent from Miami to New York, where five federal charges were filed.

One of Sayoc's attorneys, Daniel Aaronson, urged people not to rush to judgment based on media reports.

"Right now, we know very, very, very little," Aaronson said of the case. "We do not know all the evidence the government has. You have to keep in mind he has not been found guilty of anything."

Sayoc, shackled at the wrists and ankles and wearing a tan jail jumpsuit, said little at the hearing but at one point tearing up. Aaronson said he did not know what made Sayoc seem emotional but noted he is facing decades in prison if convicted.

Although authorities did not immediately say who might be responsible for the most recent package to CNN, the FBI said it believes the package discovered Monday is similar to those that Sayoc is accused of sending. Law enforcement officials have said they believe the packages were staggered and more could be discovered.

Sayoc was arrested Friday outside a South Florida auto parts store after investigators said they identified him through fingerprint and DNA evidence.

Authorities say Sayoc faces more than 50 years in prison if convicted on all charges. None of the bombs exploded and no one was injured.

Gun injuries send more than 8,000 kids to ER each year, study says

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

Gun injuries, including many from assaults, sent 75,000 U.S. children and teens to emergency rooms over nine years at a cost of almost $3 billion, a first-of-its-kind study found.

Researchers called it the first nationally representative study on ER visits for gun injuries among U.S. kids. They found that more than one-third of the wounded children were hospitalized and 6 percent died. Injuries declined during most of the 2006-14 study, but there was an upswing in the final year.

The researchers found that 11 of every 100,000 children and teens treated in U.S. emergency rooms have gun-related injuries. That amounts to about 8,300 kids each year.

The scope of the problem is broader though; the study doesn't include kids killed or injured by gunshots who never made it to the hospital, nor does it count costs for gunshot patients after they're sent home.

"I don't know what more we need to see in the world to be able to come together and tackle this problem," said Dr. Faiz Gani, the lead author and a researcher at Johns Hopkins University medical school.

The study is an analysis of estimates on emergency department visits in a national database created by the U.S. government's Agency on Healthcare Research and Quality.

The researchers focused on victims under age 18; the average age was about 15.

Almost half the gun injuries were from assaults, nearly 40 percent were unintentional, and 2 percent were suicides. There were five times more ER visits for boys than for girls.

Pediatric ER visits for gun injuries fell from a rate of 15 per 100,000 in 2006 to about 7 per 100,000 in 2013, then jumped to 10 per 100,000 in 2014, the most recent data.

University funding paid for the analysis, published in JAMA Pediatrics.

The findings highlight that gun violence involving kids extends beyond mass shootings that gain the most attention, said Dr. Robert Sege, co-author of an American Academy of Pediatrics gun injuries policy.

"It's extraordinarily sad, because these children grow up in fear and it affects their ability to feel safe and comfortable at home or in school. It has an enormous ripple effect on child development," said Sege, a Tufts University professor of medicine who was not involved in the research.

Pressure from the gun lobby has limited government funding for research on gun injuries and death, and that has led to big gaps in understanding the scope of the problem, said Dr. Denise Dowd, an ER physician at Children's Mercy hospital in Kansas City.

"It's really important that we have an idea of the magnitude of life lost and injured and how much money we are spending so we can prioritize it as a national health concern."

Jimmy Carter wades into Georgia governor's race

ATLANTA — Former President Jimmy Carter is wading into the contentious Georgia governor's race with a personal appeal to Republican candidate Brian Kemp: Resign as secretary of state to avoid damaging public confidence in the outcome of his hotly contested matchup with Democrat Stacey Abrams.

Carter's request, made in an Oct. 22 letter, attempted to approach the matter less as a partisan who has endorsed Abrams and more as the former president who's spent the decades since he left the Oval Office monitoring elections around the world.

"One of the key requirements for a fair and trusted process is that there be a nonbiased supervision of the electoral process," Carter wrote.

Kemp has dismissed Democratic demands that he step aside as the chief elections officer.

9 wounded by female suicide bomber in Tunisia's capital

TUNIS, Tunisia — A female suicide bomber wounded nine people, mostly police officers, on a busy avenue in Tunisia's capital on Monday afternoon, authorities said.

The 30-year-old woman, who wasn't previously known to authorities, blew herself up near a police patrol in Tunis, an Interior Ministry statement said. It said eight police officers and one civilian were wounded. Apart from the bomber, there were no further reported deaths.

Habib Bourguiba avenue, where the attack occured, is considered the cultural, political and economic heart of Tunis — and is sometimes called Tunisia's Champs Elysees.

Tunisian radio station Mosaique FM, citing an unnamed security source, said the bomber's body appeared largely intact after the explosion.

A North Carolina high school student shot and killed a fellow student during a fight in a crowded school hallway Monday, officials said, prompting a lockdown and generating an atmosphere of chaos and fear.

The male student accused of firing the fatal shot was quickly taken into custody by a school resource officer and arrested as investigators secured the campus at Butler High School in Matthews, about 12 miles southeast of Charlotte, police said. Students remained inside with the school on lockdown for about two hours after the shooting and classes resumed for students who remained on campus.

The male student who was shot died at a hospital. Neither the suspect nor the victim's names or ages were immediately released.

U.S. citizen held 13 months for suspected ties to ISIS is freed

WASHINGTON — An American citizen held by the U.S. military without charges for more than a year as a suspected member of the Islamic State in Syria has been freed from custody, according to the American Civil Liberties Union, which represented him.

The man, who has not been named in court filings, was released in a third country Sunday, the ACLU said. The man had been imprisoned since being turned over to American forces in September 2017 after he was captured at a rebel Syrian Democratic Forces checkpoint and he declared his U.S. citizenship.

U.S. officials have said they lacked admissible evidence to criminally charge the man, who grew up in Saudi Arabia and is a dual citizen, but detained him as an "enemy combatant." His extraordinary case set off a yearlong legal battle over whether U.S. citizens captured on a battlefield as suspected Islamic State fighters have the right to challenge their detentions.

His release means the government will avoid a court ruling on that issue, and specifically over whether the wartime authority granted by Congress after 9/11 that targeted al-Qaeda and the Taliban extends to the struggle against the Islamic State, also known as ISIS.

FBI interrogators said that he claimed to be a freelance journalist who agreed to work for ISIS to gain his release after it captured him.

The FBI said a U.S. military intelligence report on an ISIS recruiting file indicated the man registered with the group in July 2014 as a "fighter," declining a choice of "suicide bomber."

Typhoon Yutu prompts Philippine evacuations

Philippine authorities started to move people to safer grounds as Typhoon Yutu approaches, tracking a path similar to last month's storm that devastated rice-producing provinces in the main island of Luzon.

Yutu, which last week became the strongest storm since 1950 to hit the U.S. territories in the Northern Mariana Islands, is now the equivalent of a Category 2 storm on the U.S. Saffir-Simpson scale. Its maximum winds have slowed to 103.6 mph, according to the latest Joint Typhoon Warning Center forecast, compared with 121 mph earlier on Monday.

The typhoon is forecast to make landfall on Tuesday either in the province of Isabela or Aurora in the northern Philippines. Mangkhut, which killed more than 120 people in the Philippines, slammed into Cagayan province, also in north Luzon, in September.

Partly built $13B airport rejected in Mexico vote

MEXICO CITY — Mexico's President-elect said Monday he will respect the result of a referendum that rejected a partly built new airport for Mexico City, effectively ending the $13 billion project.

"The decision taken by the citizens is democratic, rational and efficient," Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador said after 70 percent voted against the plan. "The people decided."

It is unclear what will be done with the enormous foundations already built on the site, a former lakebed known as Texcoco.

The organizers of the referendum reported late Sunday that just over 1 million people participated in the referendum. The vote has been criticized, in part because only about 1 out of every 90 registered Mexican voters participated.

In Turkey: President Recep Tayyip Erdogan inaugurated a gleaming new aviation hub in Istanbul on Monday, a megaproject that he has pushed to fulfill his dream of making Turkey a global player. By the end of the year, the massive airport on shores of the Black Sea will replace Istanbul's Ataturk International Airport.

In Oakland, Calif.: The two men charged with involuntary manslaughter for the 2016 warehouse blaze that killed three dozen partygoers will face trial early next year. Derick Almena and Max Harris each pleaded no contest to involuntary manslaughter before a judge vetoed a plea deal worked out with prosecutors.

Murders in Pittsburgh, anti-Semitism in an Illinois election

The armed man who entered a Pittsburgh synagogue on a Sabbath morning to massacre Jewish worshippers was infected by a disease of hatred that customarily lurks in dark corners.

Anti-Semitism should have been eradicated centuries ago. But it endures in this country as a small, sick idea that defies logic. Of course it defies logic. How are Jews different from any other group of Americans with unique religious and cultural traditions? Yet anti-Semitism exists, and there is no easy cure. There is only vigilance against outbursts.

On Saturday, a villain in Pittsburgh killed 11 people and wounded several others, including four police officers. "I just want to kill Jews," said the captured shooting suspect, Robert Bowers. That same day, early voting was underway in Illinois. On the ballot in the 3rd Congressional District as the Republican nominee is Arthur J. Jones of Lyons. He is an anti-Semite, Holocaust denier and neo-Nazi.

Jones is an ugly character, a lurker who managed to snooker — his word — the Republican Party by running for Congress in a heavily Democratic Chicago-area district. The GOP knew it wouldn't take the seat, so party officials weren't paying attention when Jones entered the race. He won the Republican primary because he was unopposed. Now Jones faces incumbent Democratic Rep. Dan Lipinski of Western Springs. We hope every 3rd District voter tells Jones where to go by supporting Lipinski. Vigilance, please.

Signe 10-30-18 Phila. Inquirer Daily News

SIGNE WILKINSON/PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER, DAILY NEWS

The Pittsburgh shooter acted on his hatred by killing. For Jones, anti-Semitism is a form of political branding. He told Politico he's running to counter a "two-party, Jew-party, queer-party system." He says the Nazi extermination of Jews didn't happen; the Holocaust is "an international extortion racket." The Anti-Defamation League, which combats anti-Semitism and monitors extremism, says Jones has a long history with neo-Nazi activities.

Millions of Jewish Americans are assimilated contributors to society. Yet owing to their surnames, their places and patterns of worship and their prominence in many professions, they're also a conspicuous and thus vulnerable minority. Fair to say many Jewish people know the feeling of being seen as outsiders. Institutional discrimination — no Jews hired by this company, no Jews allowed in that country club — is mostly gone, but as Pittsburgh proves, virulent anti-Semitism remains. Many Jews who didn't feel uneasy a week ago surely do today.

While Jews represent 2 percent of the U.S. population, they account for more than half of the victims of religious hate crimes, according to FBI data from 2016. The ADL reported a 57 percent rise in anti-Jewish incidents last year. Among them was a series of desecrations of Jewish cemeteries. White nationalists who marched and rioted in Charlottesville, Va., chanted anti-Semitic and Nazi slogans.

President Donald Trump failed to condemn those marchers, but he used direct language after the Pittsburgh massacre: "It will require all of us working together to extract the hateful poison of anti-Semitism." That welcome statement isn't enough to end discrimination or correct Trump's track record. His coddling of white supremacists and personal attacks on foes appear as approval of hate speech for those seeking a cue.

The president isn't an anti-Semite, but as he said, everyone needs to do more to combat anti-Semitism. It is a disease that lurks in corners. In Pittsburgh, it turned murderous. In the 3rd District U.S. House race, it gained a spot on the ballot.

Anti-Semitism survives in America. When you see it, when you hear it and when you vote, reject it.

Keep calm about the caravan

REBECCA BLACKWELL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

When someone sitting at home hears an unexpected knock at the door, the question arises: Does the person on the other side mean well or ill? When a throng of foreigners begins a long march toward our border, Americans understandably wonder about their intentions. The caravan of several thousand people coming north through Mexico has stirred all sorts of fears here at home.

The concerns have gotten some, well, encouragement from the administration, with the president saying the group includes "criminals and unknown Middle Easterners" and the vice president attesting, "It's inconceivable that there are not people of Middle Eastern descent." The gunman who allegedly carried out a mass slaughter at a Pittsburgh synagogue had claimed that a Jewish organization that works with refugees "likes to bring invaders in that kill our people."

But the actual grounds for fear are sparse. The president offered no evidence that dangerous thugs have joined the march with hopes of preying on Americans. Most of the caravan members are reported to be women and children, and it's not clear how many will actually finish the journey. Almost all the suspected terrorists apprehended trying to get into this country are nabbed when they arrive at airports.

A large share of the people in the procession apparently mean to apply for asylum when they reach the border, as the law allows them to do. But the great majority of those applying from Central American countries in recent years have been rejected — and under the Trump administration, no one should expect an easier process now.

To qualify for asylum, the law requires applicants to show "a well-founded fear of persecution" based on "race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion" or a likelihood of being tortured if returned home. Mere poverty is not sufficient. They are interviewed by federal asylum officers, and those who can't demonstrate a "significant possibility" of qualifying are ordered removed. The others are allowed to stay, mostly in detention, until their cases are resolved.

No doubt some of the caravan members will weigh the odds and decide they have a better chance of sneaking over illegally. But if even a few thousand were to try it, they would pose no unusual challenge to the Border Patrol — which apprehended nearly 6,000 people every week last year crossing from Mexico. The administration has also announced it will deploy 5,000 troops to the border as an extra safeguard, on top of 2,000 National Guard forces sent earlier.

There's always the worry that people who come here because of alleged persecution at home could be potential terrorists bent on killing Americans. During the campaign, Donald Trump promised "extreme vetting" of foreigners coming here.

But the vetting was thorough even before. Since the 9/11 attacks, Cato Institute policy analyst David Bier found only 13 cases where radical terrorists managed to get in legally — and only one where it led to a lethal attack. "The rate for deadly terrorists was 1 for every 379 million visa and status approvals from 2002 through 2016," he calculated.

A body of evidence indicates that immigrants in general are less likely to commit crimes than native-born Americans.

Data specifically on refugees and those granted asylum are hard to come by, but the New American Economy Research Fund looked at the 10 cities with the highest rates of refugee arrivals and found that "nine out of 10 of the communities actually became considerably more safe, both in terms of their levels of violent and property crime."

Certainly the caravan is a reminder of the need for solid border security and careful screening of those who want to enter the United States. The administration is right to focus on those obligations. But the people walking in our direction are not cause for alarm.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

Saber-rattling around the Taiwan Strait has been common. But China might not be able to deliver on its repeated threats. Despite the vast discrepancy in size between the two countries, there's a real possibility that Taiwan could fight off a Chinese attack — even without direct aid from the United States. …

Chinese commanders fear they may be forced into armed contest with an enemy that is better trained, better motivated, and better prepared for the rigors of warfare than troops the People's Liberation Army could throw against them. A cross-strait war looks far less like an inevitable victory for China than it does a staggeringly risky gamble. …

Both Westerners and Taiwanese should be more optimistic about the defense of Taiwan than is now normal. Yes, the Taiwanese Army projects that it can only hold off its enemy for two weeks after the landing — but the PLA also believes that if it cannot defeat the Taiwanese forces in under two weeks, it will lose the war!

Yes, the disparity between the military budgets on both sides of the strait is large, and growing — but the Taiwanese do not need parity to deter Chinese aggression. All they need is the freedom to purchase the sort of arms that make invasion unthinkable.

If that political battle can be resolved in the halls of Washington, the party will not have the power to threaten battle on the shores of Taiwan.

DISPATCH FROM SQUIRREL HILL:

Dread in a peaceful place

By David M. Shribman

We knew it could happen here — any here, anywhere — when we learned that nine people were killed three years ago in the historic Mother Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, S.C. We knew it could happen here — any here, anywhere — when we learned that six were killed in the Islamic Cultural Centre of Quebec City last year.

Now we know it can happen here, as anywhere, because it has.

Here, this weekend, is Squirrel Hill, home of a dozen synagogues and for more than a century and a half not only the spiritual center of Pittsburgh Judaism but also a vital landmark in the history of Jews in America, along with New York's Lower East Side and Boston's Blue Hill Avenue, one of the vital centers of Jewish identity since the beginning of the Industrial Revolution.

And here — amid the kosher grocery and the kosher restaurant and the kosher-style deli, and where the knotted fringes of tzitzit are familiar features at the corners of the garments of the Orthodox who walk through the area just before sundown Friday evenings — it didn't require social media for the news of the shooting at the Tree of Life synagogue to spread.

The news was in the air, along with the shock and the sadness, the grief and the gruesome details, the worst of which were confirmed within hours.

You could hear it in the sirens that broke the stillness of the morning and shattered the serenity of the Saturday routines at the cleaners, at the shoe store, at the hotcake house. No need, of course, in a place like this to identify the name of the cleaners, the shoe store, the hotcake house. Everyone knows them, just as they know the names of almost everyone along Forbes Avenue at any time of the day.

And precisely because everyone knows everyone around here — the one immutable Squirrel Hill truth that is at once irritating and comforting — the news that raced down the street as noon approached Saturday was about a rare stranger in this peaceful place: dread.

Dread that someone you knew was in morning prayers marking the beginning of a baby's new life.

Dread that the police officers who sped to the scene — truly there were scores of them, almost as if it were a police funeral, for it was clear that soon there could be one — were in danger.

Dread, too, that our country, our city, our neighborhood, our lives have come to this, and that this has come home.

Before long the whole tragic scene was on television, and there was David Johnson, the WPXI anchor, on the sidewalk. He lives here, mere blocks away. On the scene, too, was Ken Rice, the KDKA anchor. He and his wife, Lauren, took their pre-marriage lessons just down the street.

Then there also was the downtown businessman, a Squirrel Hill resident since he was 3 days old — everyone knows his name, too, though he won't permit it to be used in this story — who was in the Five Points Bakery, hard by the synagogue. He was there to buy a morning muffin for his wife. But the line was too long so he headed back home, down Wilkins Avenue and toward Fifth, and this is what he saw:

"There were four, maybe six officers, and they rushed into the synagogue with guns. Then I saw the officers start to fire and back out and I saw what looked like gunfire from the synagogue. And I saw an officer holding his arm being escorted out. And the next thing I knew there were cops all over the place."

And the very next thing he did was call the executive editor of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, because he knew I lived only three blocks away from the synagogue and he knew this was news, of the worst but most important kind.

And soon Rabbi James A. Gibson of Temple Sinai, the Reform synagogue that is nearly a neighbor of Tree of Life, was on the phone. "We're stunned that the peace of Shabbat was destroyed by murderous intent and act," he said, the words spilling forth in a Niagara of disbelief unusual for a man of devout belief. "We cannot comprehend what happened. It's a tragedy for us all, and especially for those who are victims."

This was, to be sure, a 21st-century event. Gunfire in a house of worship. Text messages flying at the speed of bullets. (Mine came from Saskatchewan and Alberta and Ontario, from a nephew at Yeshiva University in New York, and brothers and my sister from Boston's North Shore and from neighbors the next street over.) And of course: confusion, and then clarity, over how many dead, how many wounded.

And confusion, but no clarity, about what this means, and whether the toxic political and cultural environment caused this, or merely reflected it. But one thing had clarity. At a time of peril, in a period of media disruption, people turned to the much-maligned mainstream press to find out what happened, when they needed the news most, when it counted the most, when it didn't matter whether you voted for Donald Trump or Hillary Clinton or what your definition of nationalism was.

Changes in demographics, increased intermarriage and the growth of the suburbs have diluted the Jewish identity of Squirrel Hill somewhat, but it remains true, as Steven R. Weisman, author of "The Chosen Wars," the most recent history of Judaism in America, put it in a phone conversation only hours after the shooting, that "the fabric of American Judaism is woven into Squirrel Hill."

Because this was our neighborhood, caught in the crossfire of the strains of the global village, and for once — sadly, so very sadly — the hurt was ours, and the victims were ours and the need to heal is ours. For now it has happened here; for millions across this wounded nation, we are the focus of anguish and anger and solace, the it-can-happen-anywhere place of the moment. And we know, given the tempo of tragedy in these times that are ours, that the title won't be ours for long.

In our grief — shared across all faiths — we need something to lean on, to steady us. We might reflect on the passage from Proverbs that lent its name to this place of tragedy, a reference to the metaphor describing Judaism's most sacred text, the Torah, as a tree of life, or, in transliterated Hebrew, Etz hayyim: It is a tree of life to all who hold fast to it; its ways are ways of pleasantness, and all its paths are peace.

FBI agents in Florida escort Cesar Sayoc, who is accused of sending pipe bombs to critics of the president.

Don't blame politicians for violence they don't encourage

By Hugh Hewitt

After the arrest of a Florida man for allegedly sending homemade bombs to former President Barack Obama, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and other Democratic leaders, many on the left — and not a few allegedly neutral reporters and pundits — predictably attempted to assign blame for his deranged and dangerous acts to President Donald Trump. They pointed to "lock her up" chants at Trump's noisy rallies, to the "fake news" charges and to a long list of Trump lines that left-wing activists and some mainstream media voices have categorized as beneath the dignity of the president.

The truth is the spectrum of violent behavior runs from the far-left extreme of the Bernie Sanders-supporting shooter at an Alexandria baseball field to last week's mailing of pipe bombs to prominent Democrats to Saturday's stomach-turning massacre at a Pittsburgh synagogue by a Trump-hating neo-Nazi, which made an already awful week even worse. That is the whole range of criminality at the fringes of American politics, a left-right full spectrum of angry, hate-filled obsessives. The threatening envelopes sent to both Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, and Vanessa Trump, like those received by members of the media and no doubt by elected officials on the left, means crazy figures on the fringes of the far left and far right are a permanent part of the political terrain.

We are now arguing over what is properly considered "incitement" to violent action of all segments of that fringe. Consider the moron who accosted Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., and Labor Secretary Elaine Chao in a Louisville restaurant, or the mobs that chased Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, and his wife or Homeland Security Secretary Kirstjen Nielsen or Stephen Miller from their eateries: Who is responsible for inciting that behavior? For the physical attacks on two GOP candidates in Minnesota? For the Portland antifa gang harassing motorists and a woman in a wheelchair? The reasonable apprehension of physical violence is assault, not free speech. Who is responsible for the assaults and the far worse violence of the bombs and the shootings?

Is it Rep. Maxine Waters, D-Calif., who explicitly called for confronting Trump officials in public places? Former Attorney General Eric Holder, who urged that when Republicans "go low, we kick them"? Hillary Clinton, who questioned the very idea of civility toward the GOP? Sanders and his "fight back" campaign and the rhetoric of class warfare that is a fixture of his rallies?

The answer is none of them. "Incitement" is a concept dangerous to free speech, and the Supreme Court has limited it as a result to only those individuals who urge immediate violence and who possess the intention and ability to trigger that violence. Responsibility for criminal acts lies with criminals, not convenient political targets.

An early effort to link political violence to a political figure unrelated to it was President Bill Clinton's assigning blame for the Oklahoma City bombing to Rush Limbaugh and talk radio. "We hear so many loud and angry voices in America today whose sole goal seems to be to try to keep some people as paranoid as possible and the rest of us all torn up and upset with each other," Clinton claimed. "They spread hate. They leave the impression that, by their very words, that violence is acceptable." This speech set off endless rounds of seeking-to-assign-blame for violence and threats of violence to disfavored political speech. It was a low stunt by Clinton, a smear of people with whom he disagreed, but the tactic has lived on.

The truth of course is that of the nearly 63 million Americans who voted for Donald Trump, just like the nearly 66 million of voters for Hillary Clinton, and the millions of votes for Sanders, Obama and George W. Bush, there is an almost infinitesimally small crossover between the loud and very demonstrative and the violent on both the left and the right. There is a vast chasm between the menacing and the enthusiastic. Chants are not chases; hurled insults are not hurled rocks. Obscuring the difference is a ham-handed attempt at silencing opposition.

Opprobrium for those who menace is appropriate. Prison for those who injure or worse is needed. Prosecution of everyone who threatens domestic political activity's ordinary course is right and just.

But if we go down the road of assigning blame for violence to political figures, that trail travels in both directions and public figures left, right and center will never be certain which words they use will set off which single one of their millions of followers to violence. One standard: Don't blame political figures for violence they don't specifically encourage and intend, and don't confuse rally rhetoric with criminal behavior because you do don't like the speaker or the message. Prosecute criminals, not speech.

Illinois politics: Conservative women on outside

Kristen McQueary

It's one week before Election Day and the results Nov. 6 likely will be a repeat of "1992: Year of the Woman." More women in 1992 were elected to Congress than any previous decade.

This year, momentum among female candidates and voters in Illinois bears a similar vibe. The election of Donald Trump as president, or more precisely the defeat of Hillary Clinton, mobilized women here and nationally to organize. We need more women in office, they say.

There's a neon-flashing disclaimer to that message, however. The momentum is behind Democratic and "politically progressive" women, not conservative or Republican women.

Don't miss the distinction. "Women" in the context of this movement does not include all women. Its leaders and participants should at least be upfront about it.

The environment in Illinois politics is telling. Among the least-represented voices in Springfield are those of conservative women. The House and Senate, made up of 177 members, include 61 women of both parties. That number should be higher, but it's not abysmal. Of those women, the majority are Democrats and mostly lean left. The House right now has only 13 Republican women. The Senate has two.

Let me repeat that for emphasis: Of the House's 118 members, 13 are GOP women. Of the Senate's 59 members, two are Republican women. If the movement is truly about lifting women, shouldn't it be focused on raising those numbers? Bringing more capable, opinion-diverse women into the pink-hat pavilion?

But doing so would disrupt the narrative and invite policy discussions this women's movement does not embrace.

The two women in the Senate, for example, are fiscal conservatives and, for the most part, social conservatives too. Both hail from outside the Chicago area. Sen. Sue Rezin is from Morris, and Sen. Jil Tracy is from Quincy. They are widely respected and serve as GOP spokeswomen on committees. They have voted against tax hikes. They have said "no" to patently unbalanced budgets. They voted for much-needed pension reform. And they voted against House Bill 40, which expanded taxpayer funding of abortion to Medicaid participants and state employees.

Their voting records, both economic and social, reflect the views of many women whose politics and policy positions are more textured than the square that women as a group often get boxed into. Regardless of their political ideology, most women care deeply about economic issues, the economic health of the state — state government's terrible debt load, high taxes and unpaid bills. Yet for all that Illinois women have in common, many of them can't pass a liberal litmus test.

Which leaves them on the outside, looking in. Groups nationally and locally that formed following Clinton's presidential defeat in order to propel more women into office are fixated on the litmus test: The movement wants women who are pro-choice, pro-public education, pro-universal health care. It's pass or fail, and the grading usually falls along party lines. Republican and conservative women with contrarian views in any category need not apply.

The unfortunate byproduct of that approach, however, is the loss of bridge-building between women — and isn't that the goal of a true women's movement? There are areas of commonality that could be explored and leveraged with more sincere conversation and acceptance.

For example, a recent Pew Research Center poll revealed that Republican women are almost twice as likely as Republican men to recognize the need for more women in office. Sixty-four percent of women who identified as Republican-leaning said women are forced to worked harder than men to win elections.

"Republican women are also significantly more likely than men in their party to say that sexual harassment, differences in party support, and voters 'not being ready' to elect women keep women out of office," to quote National Public Radio, which dissected the poll.

Sound familiar? In other words, Republican women understand the #MeToo movement. It's the #MeToo movement that doesn't understand them.

The number of women elected to seats in the Illinois General Assembly next week could hit a record high. A number of suburban Democratic women are challenging Republican male incumbents.

But be careful in assuming that electing more women will bring about greater diversity of opinion or more leverage for women. It won't. The actual elevation of women would require the inclusion of conservative women, their viewpoints and experiences, and on that, #MeToo has been clear about #NoThanks.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Learned behavior

It is ignorance. It is hate. It is taught.

It was 1965. My parents had recently moved our family to Skokie. I was 9 years old. During my brief life, I had learned about a pope while seeing his televised 1963 funeral and asking my father, "What is a pope?" He replied, "A pope is a very important man in the Catholic Church." I also experienced what it was like to lose a U.S. president to an assassin's bullet — and to sit on the bimah at our synagogue as the kiddush girl that very Shabbos evening while trying to absorb and comprehend the rabbi's words and thoughts about the nation's loss. I do not recall hateful or prejudicial rhetoric during these times.

At that time, I had a friend named Mary Jane. She attended the local parish school. We enjoyed playing together. One day we were making mud pies. I was having fun. Then Mary Jane took me by surprise. She slammed a rock onto the back of my hand. I cried out and asked her why she had struck me. Her reply: "Because you are a dirty Jew!" She had such rage on her face.

I was confused and hurt. I ran home. My parents comforted me. They told me that we do not hate others, and we do not make such statements. My parents said nothing against Mary Jane's faith; they did say that these beliefs are sadly taught at home.

Things were never the same on my block. I never had anything more to do with Mary Jane. She never apologized for hurting me.

Now I have learned about Squirrel Hill.

It is ignorance. It is hate. It is taught. It is enabled by the highest officeholder in the land.

It is time for a revolution of love, tolerance and respect; all this can be taught, too.

Assault weapons ban

I want to take your guns.

There. I said it.

I'm so sick of American gun culture. My husband and I lived in England for a year, where firearms were all but banned, and for our entire time there, there was only one shocking stabbing at a Liverpool mall.

Personally, if not one single gun existed in this country, I'd be thrilled. At one point I said: military and police? Fine. Hunters with rifles? Fine. I know most gun violence comes from handguns, and even though I read about more heartbreaking accidents or suicides than I do about a handgun saving someone, it now seems obvious that individuals see them as a sacred right. So fine — handguns, carefully registered and stored.

But automatic weapons? Militia-style firearms? You don't need an AR-15 to kill a deer. If you think you need an assault rifle to protect yourself from the government, zombies, whatever, you need to go to a psychiatrist. I can't buy fireworks, recreational marijuana, even spray paint in Chicago, but somehow, the bodies of men, women and even little children can pile up and the sales of these kinds of weapons continue. It makes me sick.

— Eileen Aldrin, Chicago

America's shame

President Donald Trump: What happened in Pittsburgh is on you. I would ask how you can sleep at night knowing what you have caused through the culture of hatred and bigotry you promote each day, but clearly you have no conscience, and no doubt the import of your outrageous conduct is entirely lost on you and for which you are too small a person to ever accept any responsibility or acknowledge that you should be held accountable.

Shame on you!

The leader of our nation needs to be a role model and set the moral tone for us all. However, the tone you now perpetuate is one that is simply destructive to everyone and everything. Please stop and grow up!

Ex-Grace chef looks to Fulton Market district

By Ryan Ori | Chicago Tribune

ABEL URIBE/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2012

Chef Curtis Duffy and general manager Michael Muser led Grace to a string of three Michelin stars before a falling-out with Grace's owner.

Chef Curtis Duffy has picked his next destination, almost a year after Grace abruptly closed amid a dispute with the acclaimed restaurant's owner.

Duffy and former Grace general manager Michael Muser plan to open a new restaurant on the ground floor of Fulton West, an office building in the city's Fulton Market district, according to people familiar with the deal.

The deal at 1330 W. Fulton Market provides a long-awaited landing spot for Duffy and Muser, who led Grace to three consecutive years of earning three Michelin stars, making it one of the nation's top restaurants.

Specific details of the new restaurant, including the name, are not known. Duffy did not respond to requests for comment.

Muser said no lease has been signed, and that no business deals — including a lease — will be signed until after Duffy's noncompete agreement expires Nov. 22.

The eight-story building, developed by Sterling Bay, opened last year. Office tenants include Glassdoor, Dyson, Skender Construction and Sterling Bay's headquarters.

Duffy's restaurant will join Fairgrounds Coffee & Tea as a ground-floor retail tenant. Sterling Bay managing principal Andy Gloor declined to comment on the deal with Duffy.

The chef's new venture is the latest in a line of high-profile restaurant openings on and around West Randolph Street.

The area west of the expressway has changed significantly in recent years, as meatpackers and food wholesalers have given way to office tenants such as McDonald's headquarters and Google's Midwest headquarters, as well as boutique hotels, retail and apartment buildings.

Grace was one of Chicago's best-known restaurants when a simmering dispute between owner Michael Olszewski and his chef and general manager led to the restaurant's closing in December.

The sides have filed multiple lawsuits against one another, including one by Duffy and Muser seeking to nullify a noncompete agreement in order to open a new restaurant in Chicago.

Grace opened in 2012 at 625 W. Randolph St. and quickly made a mark. Tribune restaurant critic Phil Vettel in 2013 wrote that Grace was "so good that any foodie who fails to dine here will find his Chicago-dining-scene pontificating hopelessly compromised."

Grace also was the subject of a 2015 documentary, called "For Grace," that was co-directed by former Tribune food writer Kevin Pang. The film was based on a series Pang wrote for the Tribune.

JPMorgan Chase & Co. plans to add 400 branches in the next five years thanks to bank-friendly regulators in the Trump administration.

JPMorgan prepares to cash in

Trump officials roll back restraints, promote expansion

By Michelle F. Davis
Bloomberg News

For almost six years, Washington secretly shackled JPMorgan Chase & Co., the nation's biggest bank. Now the chains are off, thanks to bank-friendly regulators in the Trump administration.

In actions never before made public, Obama administration regulators prevented the bank from opening branches in new states as punishment for violating banking rules, according to people familiar with the matter. JPMorgan's ambitious plan to expand nationally, announced earlier this year, was made possible by the Trump administration's rollback of those restraints, which date from 2012, said the people, who asked not to be identified discussing regulators' impact on the bank's plans.

JPMorgan has racked up more than $30 billion in penalties, legal costs and related obligations since the 2008 financial crisis, some of which stemmed from its acquisitions of Bear Stearns Cos. and Washington Mutual Inc. Missteps include excessive risk taken by the London Whale trader and failing to flag transactions related to Bernard Madoff's Ponzi scheme. Privately, the U.S. Office of the Comptroller of the Currency stopped JPMorgan from expanding into additional states while resolving compliance breakdowns as part of an unwritten regulatory policy, the people said.

While banks often have private conversations with regulators and even gauge their reactions to potential plans, the people with knowledge of the matter described the ban as one of the more extreme ways they exerted their control behind the scenes.

Regulators went to even harsher lengths earlier this year to punish Wells Fargo & Co., placing a cap on its assets after a pattern of lapses and abuses. Janet Yellen, who served as Federal Reserve chair under President Barack Obama, announced the unprecedented punishment on her final workday in office.

JPMorgan, the biggest U.S. bank by assets, operated 5,130 branches in 23 states at the end of last year. With fresh assurances from regulators under President Donald Trump, the people said, it is planning to open 400 branches in as many as 20 new markets in the next five years, including plans to build in Boston, Philadelphia and Washington. This is the first time the bank is opening branches in a new state in more than a decade. The moves could translate into an additional $1.5 billion of revenue a year by 2022, according to Morgan Stanley.

"We are extremely excited to be expanding again, as smart regulatory policy and a competitive corporate tax system help us to deliver on our commitment to invest in our customers and communities," Chief Executive Officer Jamie Dimon said Oct. 12.

JPMorgan has resolved many of its compliance issues, but the OCC still has open enforcement actions against the bank, according to agency data.

Chicago's Cresco Labs poised for more growth

By Ally Marotti

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2016

Dustin Kosteroski, a packaging agent, trims buds of leaves at the Cresco Labs medical marijuana cultivation facility in Joliet.

Medical marijuana company Cresco Labs is set to acquire a cannabis dispensary in Elmwood Park weeks after the Chicago-based firm announced plans to go public in Canada.

With the purchase, the FloraMedex facility in Elmwood Park will become Cresco's first wholly owned dispensary in Illinois as the company expands its footprint in the state and elsewhere. Cresco, which co-owns two dispensaries in Buffalo Grove and Champaign, also operates three cultivation centers in Illinois, including one in Joliet that recently doubled its growing capacity.

Cresco's expansion — fueled by $100 million in private funding it raised earlier this month — is part of a recent flurry of activity among Illinois-based medical marijuana companies. Over the past month, Cresco disclosed plans to go public on a Canadian stock exchange, another firm announced it would be acquired for nearly $700 million, and a new Chicago-based marijuana holding company raised $120 million in financing.

Interest in the drug is increasing in Illinois amid changes in state regulations and a debate over marijuana policy in the race for governor. Republican Gov. Bruce Rauner signed legislation this summer that allows people prescribed opioid painkillers to use medical marijuana, but he has opposed legalizing recreational pot. Democratic challenger J.B. Pritzker has said he would work to legalize recreational marijuana in the state.

A state report out earlier this month found that use of medical pot has risen 83 percent this year in Illinois, which has more than 46,000 qualified patients. Before the new law, patients had to have

Target to close 2 locations in Chicago

Morgan Park and Chatham stores on list for February

By Lauren Zumbach
Chicago Tribune

Target plans to close two of its five stores on Chicago's South Side in February.

The decision to close the stores in the Morgan Park and Chatham neighborhoods "follows a rigorous annual process to evaluate the performance of every store in the portfolio and maintain the overall health of the business," the Minneapolis-based retailer said in a statement. Four other stores are closing nationwide.

About 115 people work full or part time at the 128,000-square-foot Morgan Park store, which opened in 2008. Roughly 120 work at the 126,000-square-foot Chatham store, which opened in 2002.

Employees in good standing at both stores will be given the option to transfer to a different store in their area, Target said.

The retailer has been expanding in the Chicago area over the past few years and has plans for two new North Side stores, in the Rogers Park and Logan Square neighborhoods, by the end of 2020. The chain also is investing in existing stores. Target said it plans to revamp 18 Chicago-area stores this year, on its way to more than 1,000 remodels by 2020.

But most of the recently opened stores are Target's new smaller format, designed for urban areas, dense suburban neighborhoods and college campuses.

Except for a roughly 20,000-square-foot store that opened in Hyde Park in 2016, most new stores in the area have been downtown, on the North Side or in the northern suburbs.

One, in Lakeview, is within a mile of two other Target locations. The Target stores closest to the closing Chatham and Morgan Park stores are a 5- or 6-mile drive away, respectively.

Once those locations close, Target's remaining South Side stores will be in McKinley Park, Archer Heights and Hyde Park.

Target said it does consider the proximity of other stores when making decisions about closing locations. But it also looks at the store's profitability over several years and other options available to customers, such as shopping online and having orders delivered, Target spokeswoman Jacque DeBuse said.

"This is based on the business and is not about a neighborhood or geography," DeBuse said. "As you have seen, Target remains committed to Chicago, as we've been remodeling stores across the metro (area) and continuing to open new stores to serve new guests."

Agritourism hits rough patch

Gripes, rulings create challenges for farm owners

By Elise Young
Bloomberg News

MICHELLE GUSTAFSON/BLOOMBERG NEWS

Guests browse pumpkins and decorative corn in Bucks County, Pa. Some agritourism promoters are facing obstacles.

The neighbors were fine with apple picking and toy tractors. Then zombies swarmed the pumpkins, and the zoning officer wanted a word.

Agritourism was supposed to be a profit bonanza for Tabora Farms, in Bucks County, Pa., and other family-owned U.S. farms that have jumped on the rural land-use trend. Instead, some are running into homeowner gripes and legal bills while homebuilders, eager to turn fields into luxury subdivisions, circle with offers of quick-and-easy riches.

In New York, farmers say their cows and horses can't handle a wedding barn's fireworks. In one of America's wealthiest suburbs, outside Washington, one farm's bid for recreational activities has dragged for more than three years. A Lehigh Valley, Pa., couple, appealing an order to stop renting a camping tent on their 42 acres, are caught between a state government that hails non-traditional uses of farmland and local authorities trying to balance the demands for revenue and rural tranquility.

The biggest growth industry in the rural U.S. is outdoor entertainment, which includes agritourism, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures. Yesteryear, tourists may have paid for apple bobbing and costume parades. Now wine tastings, for-fee fishing and ziplines are a hit. So are artillery-grade cannons that turn pumpkins into surface-to-air missiles traveling 600 mph.

At Tabora Farms, some neighbors are unhappy about seasonal "haunted" cornfields and paintballs-vs.-zombies skirmishes in the pumpkin patch. On autumn weekend nights, visitors speed down country byways and turn cars around in their driveways, they say, and their screams and laughter shatter the quiet.

"It used to be a really lovely corner, but now the place is like being next door, quite honestly, to a Wawa," said Robert McGraw, 90, a corn and soybean farmer, referring to a convenience store and gasoline chain widespread in Bucks County.

More than half of U.S. states have laws regulating agritourism and its offshoot, agritainment, according to the National Agricultural Law Center, a Fayetteville, Ark., service run by the state university. Colorado employs an agritourism director, and state universities in California and Massachusetts run seminars on the topic geared to farm owners.

In New York's Finger Lakes region, livestock owners are pleading with Lansing town officials to ban fireworks at Dutch Harvest Farm, where a 7,000-square-foot wedding barn is under construction. The noise can spook animals in their fields, leading them to break through fences, residents argue, saying even those indoors have potential to panic and injure themselves.

Owner Laura Huizinga, though, said fireworks are part of the country experience. She described herself and her husband as "mom-and-pop people" with newborn twin boys, trying to make a living by offering a homespun alternative to over-the-top wedding mills.

"We just want to be good neighbors, be a part of the community," said Huizinga, 32.

On a GoFundMe.com page set up Oct. 21, a Bangor, Pa., couple are seeking $10,000 as they appeal a municipal order to stop renting a 10-foot-by-10-foot camping tent on property zoned for agriculture. "Our goal was that the income from the tent would help offset the cost of our property taxes," owner Karen Thatcher-Smith wrote.

From 2010 through 2016, a record 1,350 non-metropolitan U.S. counties lost population, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Though rural areas had a slight uptick from July 2016 through July 2017, the increase was greater in cities.

At the same time, agritourism has exploded. The industry generated at least $700 million in revenue across the country in 2012, according to the most recent agriculture department research. By 2015, though, Virginia alone had reaped $2.2 billion, according to the Pamplin College of Business at Virginia Tech University.

Open space is at a premium in Fairfax, Va., a Washington suburb whose $112,844 median household income makes it America's third-richest county, U.S. Census figures show. Amid the wealth, the 225-acre Whitehall Farms — heavy on cattle and pigs, school tours and produce sales — operates at a loss, according to Jeff Waters, whose wife's family has owned the land since 1960.

Neighbors rejected Whitehall's pitch to add paintball, seemingly allowed under Virginia's 2014 agritourism law. After three years of back-and-forth, a zoning board in August denied permission to operate a rope obstacle course. Legal bills from both fights totaled more than $70,000, Waters said.

"The land is worth a ton of money, and my wife is convinced the zoning board wants us to sell so they'll have revenue from 42 McMansions," Waters, 63, said in an interview. "I think they're just control freaks."

At Tabora Farms, the violation notices began arriving in March.

"The issue, in my mind, is whether it's agricultural or entertainment," Dave Taylor, the zoning officer who issued citations over a special-event tent, an outdoor dining area and other issues, said in an interview. "The township's interest is in the farm operating within the law."

Caleb Torrice, the farm's 43-year-old owner, said he was puzzled by the onslaught six years after he and his wife, Patricia, bought the 10.6 acres for $2.1 million in 2012. Free festivals have drawn throngs for years without complaint, he said. In July, more than 100 people packed a public hearing to show their support.

The former owner, at a public hearing in August, told officials that made-from-scratch baked goods and sandwiches, another source of contention, were prepared and sold on-site with the township's knowledge.

"You buy a farm and you plant 4,000 fruit trees — those trees aren't going to produce for five years," said Torrice, who has four school-age children. "You still need to support yourself. Agritainment is going to do that."

A half-mile down the road from Tabora, the former Peace Valley Winery is under construction, renamed The Vineyard at Peace Valley and with 12 houses planned to sell for about $850,000 each. Torrice said he routinely turns down offers to sell to developers.

For now, a GoFundMe.com account has raised $1,430 toward attorney and engineering bills of $50,000, and $15 T-shirts, also part of the fundraiser, are for sale alongside cider doughnuts and vampire-themed cookies.

Red Hat acquisition boosts IBM's cloud cred

By Ed Hammond, Kiel Porter, Alex Barinka and Gerrit De Vynck
Bloomberg News

IBM's $33 billion purchase of Red Hat — the world's second-largest technology deal ever — is aimed at catapulting the company into the ranks of the top cloud software competitors.

The cash deal boosts the 107-year-old company's credentials overnight in the fast-growing and lucrative cloud market — and gives it much-needed potential for real revenue growth. The company once synonymous with mainframe computing has been slow to adopt cloud-related technologies and has had to play catch-up to market leaders Amazon.com and Microsoft in offering computing and other software and services over the internet. Shares of IBM slumped in premarket U.S. trading.

"The acquisition of Red Hat is a game-changer," said Ginni Rometty, chairman and chief executive officer of International Business Machines, in a statement Sunday. "It changes everything about the cloud market."

IBM has seen revenue decline by almost a quarter since Rometty, 61, took the CEO role in 2012. While some of that has been from divestitures, most is from declining sales in existing hardware, software and service offerings, as the company has struggled to compete with younger technology companies. She has been trying to steer IBM toward more modern businesses, such as the cloud, artificial intelligence and security software, with inconsistent results.

IBM shares declined about 5 percent in early U.S. trading on Monday. The stock has dropped 19 percent this year, giving it a market value of $114 billion.

In its third-quarter earnings report, IBM disappointed investors who were seeking more progress in those areas after six years of declining sales that had only recently started to show gains. Still, the improvements had been coming largely from IBM's legacy mainframe business, rather than its so-called strategic imperatives. Cloud revenue grew 10 percent in the period to $4.5 billion, but that was slower than the 20 percent expansion in the second quarter.

The Red Hat deal could signal to investors that IBM wasn't as well positioned in cloud as it had been claiming, said Jim Suva, an analyst at Citigroup Research.

"We expect investor skepticism around the deal given IBM's messaging that it is well underway in its transformation," he said.

Investors have grown impatient as the stock has dropped 31 percent over the last five years. Warren Buffett virtually gave up on IBM last year. His conglomerate, Berkshire Hathaway, cut its stake in the company by 94 percent, while increasing its investment in Apple.

The Red Hat deal represents an admission by Rometty that in-house growth wasn't going to be enough to keep IBM from falling permanently behind in a market that is growing in importance and size.

IBM will pay $190 a share in cash for Raleigh, N.C.-based Red Hat, according to a statement from the companies Sunday.

U.K. to start taxing big internet firms

By Danica Kirka
Associated Press

DANIEL LEAL-OLIVAS/GETTY-AFP

British Chancellor of the Exchequer Philip Hammond announced a tax on internet companies' U.K. revenue.

LONDON — Britain's Treasury chief on Monday unveiled a new tax on big internet companies' revenue, insisting it is time that the global tech giants with profitable business in the U.K. pay their fair share for public services.

Philip Hammond made the announcement as he outlined his budget, explaining that while he preferred trying to find a global solution to address the borderless nature of the wealth of the likes of Google and Facebook, negotiations with other countries had been too slow.

He said the tax will be "narrowly-targeted" on the U.K.-generated revenue of specific digital platform business models.

"The rules have simply not kept pace with changing business models," Hammond said. "And it's clearly not sustainable, or fair, that digital platform businesses can generate substantial value in the U.K. without paying tax here in respect of that business."

Companies typically pay their taxes where they are based. But while local governments can impose a sales tax on physical goods in shops and restaurants, that has not been the case with online service providers.

And in the European Union, foreign companies like Amazon, Google and Facebook pay what tax they owe in the country where they have their regional base — usually a low tax haven like Ireland. So their business generates little to no tax revenue in countries, such as the U.K., where they have significant operations.

Hammond said the digital sales tax will be structured to apply to "established tech giants" rather than tech startups and was at pains to emphasize that it was "not a online-sales tax on goods ordered over the internet."

It will only apply to firms making $640 million a year in global revenue. The text will come into effect in April 2020 and is forecast to bring in 400 million pounds a year.

Dan Neidle, a partner at law firm Clifford Chance, said the tax could chill innovation and, given the dominance of the tech giants in the United States, would likely be met with a hostile reception by the Trump administration.

"For 100 years, businesses have been taxed based on where they are, not where their customers are," he said. "The digital tax represents a revolutionary change: It taxes digital companies, regardless of their legal structure, if they have users in the U.K. There are many, particularly in the U.S., who will regard limiting that revolution to one particular sector as opportunistic, particularly when it's a sector where the U.K. (and Europe as a whole) have conspicuously failed to create world-beating businesses."

The announcement came as Hammond splashed out on health services in a spending plan signaling the easing of eight years of austerity with a modest uplift in public spending and few major tax increases.

Hammond declared the end is in sight for the budget cuts implemented by a series of Conservative-led governments after the global financial crisis, reiterating a commitment made by Prime Minister Theresa May this month. But he cautioned that the government's plans to end austerity could be thrown off track if Britain fails to secure a deal that protects trade with the EU.

Hammond said improving public finances after years of belt-tightening meant he could give government departments a real-term spending boost next year. Beneficiaries include the Ministry of Defense, which will get an extra $1.3 billion.

There was also more money for mental-health services and social care, and $1.3 billion to ease the transition to a simplified benefits system known as Universal Credit. Small businesses got a cut in property tax rates, and workers will see an increase in the amount they can earn before paying income tax.

The pressure has been on for May's administration. Government workers and the public have been agitating to end years of austerity.

Consumer spending rose 0.3 percent in September, helped by a 3.5 percent increase in spending on automobiles.

Consumer spending up 0.3 percent

By Josh Boak
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. consumer spending rose in September by a solid, inflation-adjusted 0.3 percent, led by increased spending on health care services and motor vehicles.

The Commerce Department also said Monday that the Federal Reserve's preferred measure of inflation returned to the central bank's 2 percent annual target after having been slightly elevated in prior months.

In addition, personal incomes rose 0.2 percent in September — the smallest gain since June 2017. Roughly half of that increase was wiped out by inflation.

Consumer spending accounts for the majority of U.S. economic activity, and it was the key driver of overall growth during the July-September quarter.

The economy climbed at an annual rate of 3.5 percent in that quarter, helped by the strongest jump in consumer spending in about four years, the Commerce Department said Friday.

But economic growth slowed from a 4.2 percent gain in the second quarter as the pace of business investment fell and continued growth may depend even more on consumer spending.

Ian Shepherdson, chief economist at Pantheon Macroeconomics, expects that consumer spending will begin to slow after having gotten a jolt this year from the tax cuts signed into law by President Donald Trump.

"Spending recently has been boosted by the tax cuts but the incremental boost to spending power is now over," Shepherdson said.

Consumers did pull back on their spending for food services last month, but spending on autos rose 3.5 percent.

Cresco Labs acquiring dispensary

one of about 40 conditions, such as cancer or AIDS, to be able to use medical marijuana.

Cresco is expanding its retail footprint at a critical time, Joe Caltabiano, Cresco president and co-founder, said in an email.

"As manufacturers, it's important to have a direct touch point with the patients to hear their feedback and personal experiences with our brands and identify the need for additional product offerings," he said.

The FloraMedex dispensary opened in 2016 and employs seven people. Caltabiano said the company plans to hire more dispensary employees based on the increasing patient count.

Being part of Cresco will give the existing FloraMedex employees more opportunities, said Jared Boyar, agent in charge at the dispensary.

"A stand-alone dispensary like ours simply can't offer the benefits, 401(k) plan, those kinds of things, that a larger, better capitalized company can," Boyar said.

Terms of the deal were not disclosed. It is expected to close later this year, pending approval from the Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation.

Cresco employs about 300 people, more than half of whom are in Illinois. The company also has licenses to operate in Pennsylvania and Ohio and has acquired dispensary and cultivation operations in Arizona, Nevada and California.

United launches nonstop service to Leon, Mexico

By Robert Channick
Chicago Tribune

United Airlines launched daily nonstop service over the weekend from Chicago to Leon in the central Mexican state of Guanajuato.

The new route, which features one flight daily to and from O'Hare International Airport, is the only direct service between Chicago and Leon, a historic city best known as the leather and shoemaking capital of Mexico.

Chicago-based United has operated service to Leon for more than 25 years from its hub at Houston's George Bush Intercontinental Airport.

"We are pleased to offer our customers a new way to get to Leon, a key business and tourism center for customers connecting in O'Hare from across the U.S., Asia and Europe," Jake Cefolia, senior vice president of worldwide sales for United, said Monday in a news release.

With the addition of Leon, United has direct service from O'Hare to eight Mexican cities, including Cancun, Cozumel and Mexico City, spokeswoman Natalie Noonan said.

Situated in a region known for its historic architecture and culture, Leon has a 400-year history of shoemaking, with an abundance of stores featuring locally produced footwear.

The new route departs daily at 4:15 p.m. from O'Hare to Leon, with the lowest-priced one-way tickets ranging from $337 to $417 per person for flights over the next two weeks, according to an online search.

Mexico is United's second-largest market after the United States in terms of the number of flights and destinations.

United has grown from eight to 21 destinations in Mexico over the last 20 years.

Andrew Gray, a JPMorgan spokesman, said the bank wouldn't comment about supervisory issues.

"Opening new branches is a sustainable and long-term investment in the communities we serve," Gray said. "Entering new markets will bring the full force of JPMorgan Chase's business and philanthropic capabilities, create thousands of good-paying jobs, and allow us to serve more customers and local businesses by lending and investing in their community."

OCC spokesman Bryan Hubbard declined to comment.

In loosening their grip on JPMorgan, authorities removed a critical barrier to the lender's growth. A 1994 law prohibits mergers between banks if the transaction would give any of them control of more than 10 percent of U.S. deposits.

With $1.3 trillion, JPMorgan already controls more than 10 percent — second only to Bank of America Corp. — which means adding branches in new markets is one of its only avenues for expansion.

The rule reversal comes amid anti-regulatory fervor under Trump. It's also consistent with the declared willingness of the new OCC head, Joseph Otting, to give financial institutions more flexibility when resolving concerns raised by OCC staff. Otting worked closely with future Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin at OneWest Bank, now part of CIT Group Inc., when the lender came under fire for its mortgage-servicing business.

The OCC has overturned measures put in place by Thomas Curry, who led the agency from 2012 to 2017. He instituted tough standards in an effort to change the perception that regulators were too close to the institutions they were meant to police.

Banks are responding to friendlier regulators under Trump by pushing into new markets and reassessing deals that likely would have been vetoed under Obama. Many elected officials and policymakers blamed reduced oversight for the 2008 financial crisis, which triggered the longest and deepest recession since the 1930s.

One person familiar with JPMorgan's plans said regulation was only partly to blame for JPMorgan not broadening its consumer bank in the decade after the crisis. The bank constantly evaluated ways to expand the consumer bank, but executives were hesitant because of the cost and difficulty, the person said.

JPMorgan is embarking on the biggest expansion of its consumer bank in a decade as new liquidity rules encourage banks to draw more funding from deposits, which tend to be cheaper, and rising interest rates stiffen the competition for retail customers.

Bank of America also announced plans to open branches in new markets earlier this year.

OBITUARIES

TODD BOL 1956-2018

Little Free Library book-sharing founder

JIM MONE/AP

Todd Bol poses with a Little Free Library lending box in Hudson, Wis. Bol founded Little Free Library in 2009.

HUDSON, Wis. — The Wisconsin man who founded the Little Free Library, a nonprofit that began with a dollhouse-like box of free books in his front yard and ballooned into an international book-sharing and literacy project, has died.

Todd Bol died Thursday in a Minnesota hospice of complications from pancreatic cancer, said Margret Aldrich, spokeswoman for the nonprofit. He was 62.

Bol designed and built the first Little Free Library at his home in Hudson, Wisconsin, in 2009, as a tribute to his mother, who was a teacher and book lover. He put up a miniature version of a one-room schoolhouse on a post outside his home, filled it with books and invited neighbors to borrow them.

They loved it, and the idea quickly caught on. Thanks to the power of a good idea, the allure of a book and the wildfire of the internet, the boxes have since popped up across the U.S. and in more than 80 countries.

The whimsical boxes, placed mainly in front yards, parks and gardens, are designed to hold 20 to 100 books. They invite passers-by to "take a book, share a book."

"It's weird to be an international phenomenon," Bol told The Associated Press in 2012.

Bol, a former international business consultant, soon found himself at the head of what became the Little Free Libraries organization . There are now more than 75,000 registered Little Free Libraries worldwide.

The book-sharing boxes are also being adopted by a growing number of groups as a way of promoting literacy in inner cities and underdeveloped countries.

Bol, diagnosed earlier this month with pancreatic cancer, recently reflected on the power of the dollhouse-sized libraries and those caring for them during an interview with the Star Tribune .

"If I may be so bold, I'm the most successful person I know," Bol, with a sideways smile, told the newspaper. "Because I stimulate 54 million books to be read and neighbors to talk to each other. As far as I'm concerned, that's the very definition of success."

ON OCTOBER 30 ...

In 1915 Fred Friendly, the pioneering American broadcast journalist, was born in New York.

In 1932 film director Louis Malle was born in Thumeries, France.

In 1938 the radio play "The War of the Worlds," starring Orson Welles, aired on CBS. (The live drama, which employed fake news reports, panicked some listeners who thought its portrayal of a Martian invasion was true.)

In 1945 the government announced the end of wartime shoe rationing.

In 1961 the Soviet Union tested a hydrogen bomb with a force estimated at 58 megatons. Also in 1961 the Soviet Party Congress unanimously approved a resolution ordering the removal of Josef Stalin's body from Lenin's tomb.

In 1974 Muhammad Ali knocked out George Foreman in the eighth round of a 15-round match in Kinshasa, Zaire, to regain the world heavyweight boxing title.

In 1975 Prince Juan Carlos became king of Spain after the death of Francisco Franco. Also in 1975 The New York Daily News ran the headline "Ford to City: Drop Dead" a day after President Gerald R. Ford said he would veto any proposed federal bailout of New York.

In 1979 President Jimmy Carter nominated Shirley Hufstedler, a federal appellate judge, to head the newly created Department of Education.

In 1984 police in Poland found the body of kidnapped pro-Solidarity priest Father Jerzy Popieluszko, whose death was blamed on four security officers.

In 1989 Mitsubishi Estate Co., a major Japanese real estate concern, announced it was buying 51 percent of Rockefeller Group Inc. of New York.

In 1994 Pope John Paul II named 30 new cardinals, including the archbishops of Baltimore and Detroit and the first-ever from Sarajevo, Bosnia-Herzegovina, and two former East Bloc states, Albania and Belarus.

In 1995 a Quebec secession referendum was defeated on a vote 50.6 percent to 49.4 percent.

In 1996, after a four-hour trial, a Chinese court sentenced pro-democracy activist Wang Dan to 11 years in prison for "conspiring to subvert the Chinese government." (Wang was freed in April 1998 and sent into exile in the United States.)

In 1997 a jury in Cambridge, Mass., convicted British au pair Louise Woodward of second-degree murder in the death of 8-month-old Matthew Eappen. (The judge later reduced the verdict to manslaughter and set Woodward free.)

In 1998 more than 2,000 Nicaraguans died when a mudslide caused by Hurricane Mitch destroyed homes on the slopes of Casitas volcano in Posoltega.

In 1999, 55 people were killed in a fire at an illegal bar in Inchon, South Korea.

In 2001 Ford Motor Co. chairman William Clay Ford Jr. took over as chief executive after the ouster of Jacques Nasser.

In 2003 the House approved an $87.5 billion package for Iraq and Afghanistan.

In 2005 Al Lopez, a Baseball Hall of Fame catcher who managed the "Go-Go" White Sox to their first pennant since 1919, died in Tampa, Fla.; he was 97.

In 2012 the Walt Disney Company announced plans to acquire Lucasfilm for $4.05 billion in a surprise deal that gave the media giant control of the "Star Wars" franchise.

In 2013 Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius apologized to Americans for problems with the launch of Obamacare's website, HealthCare.gov. "You deserve better," Sebelius said in testimony at a House Energy and Commerce Committee hearing. Also in 2013 the Boston Red Sox defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 6-1 in Game 6 to win the World Series.

In 2014 Pennsylvania authorities captured survivalist Eric Frein, 31, after a 48-day manhunt. He was charged with killing a state trooper and wounding another Sept. 12.

In 2016 the Cubs beat the Indians 3-2 in Game 5 at Wrigley Field in the first World Series win for the home team at the North Side ballpark since Oct. 8, 1945.

Elmore, Gloria Dian

Gloria Dian Elmore passed away on October 24th, 2018 at the exact time of day as her soulmate and beloved husband, Elbert Elmore. Gloria died peacefully in her home surrounded by her daughter Cynthia, son-in-law John, her son Stephen, her grandchildren Ariane and Sophia, and Ariane's fiance Andrew. Gloria loved to travel, and before she passed, all the family including her beautiful and adoring granddaughters, future grandson-in-law, and her son Stephen's kind partner, Michael were honored to accompany her on a tour through Croatia culminating in a lovely dinner in Venice on the Grand Canal. Never at a loss to experience more, Gloria requested one last weekend of partying and siteseeing in New Orleans with her devoted children, Cynthia and Stephen, and son-in-law John where beignets and margaritas were enjoyed by all. She was a loving aunt to Scott, Boyd, Deen and Gigi and their beautiful children Dianna, Veronica, BJ, Steve, Kiley, Jennifer and Jaclyn and all their happy babies. We will miss Mom's beautiful smile and laugh, smart and kind wit, and her zest for adventure. She has left us a stronger family, determined to enjoy our lives as she did: with love, elegance, kindness and respect for all, and an undying lust to explore the world and to enjoy all its gifts. In lieu of flowers, please make donations to the Christopher House in Chicago in honor of Gloria and Bud Elmore. Please go to christopherhouse.org to make a donation tribute gift. Chicago Tribune Death Notices

Chicago Tribune extends our condolences to the families and loved ones of those who have passed.

chicagotribune.com/deathnotice

Keenan, Jr., Joseph D.

Joseph D. Keenan, Jr., 97, of Eagle River, Wisconsin, died Saturday Oct. 27 in Saint Mary's Hospital in Wisconsin, of sudden cardiac arrest.

"Big Joe", as he was affectionately known to his legions of friends and family, was born Sept. 20, 1921, in Chicago. He was the son of Chicago labor leader Joseph Keenan who was International Secretary emeritus of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Labor's Representative on the World War II War Production Board and the recipient of both the prestigious Medal of Freedom and the Medal of Merit for his service to the United States during and after World War II.

Big Joe retired as the owner of Edward Electric in 1985. He was a lifelong member of the Local 134 IBEW and a former president of the Electrical Contractors Association in Chicago. He was a proud graduate of Campion Jesuit High School in Prairie du Chien Wisconsin where he met many lifelong friends.

He then attended the University of Notre Dame from 1939 to early 1942 when he enlisted in the Navy after Pearl Harbor. Mr. Keenan was an honored and decorated member of the seminal World War II Scouts and Raiders, the original Special Operations Personnel who provided the backbone of Naval Special Warfare and from which the current Naval SEAL Teams evolved. Mr. Keenan is recognized by the current SEAL Teams as one of the founding fathers upon whose brave shoulders those who followed learned and served proudly.

Prior to being deployed to China under the command of the legendary Navy SEAL Captain, the late Phillip M. Bucklew, known as the "Father of U.S. Naval Special Warfare" (https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Phil_H._Bucklew#World_War_II), Mr. Keenan underwent training under the Navy's V-12 Program at the University of Wisconsin. While at Wisconsin, he was Captain and Most Valuable Player for the 1943 football team. Mr. Keenan was also honored on various All-Big Ten Teams that year for his play as a center/middle linebacker and was an Honorable Mention at center on the 1943 United Press All-American team. The University of Wisconsin celebrated Mr. Keenan late in life by naming him Honorary Captain for the 2016 Wisconsin-Illinois football game in Madison, one of his proudest moments.

After his service in World War II, Big Joe returned to the University of Wisconsin where he met the love of his life, Florence Dobranski. They were married in 1947. When Mrs. Keenan passed away in 2006, they were soon to celebrate their 59th wedding anniversary. As parents, grandparents, great grandparents and friends to many, there were none better.

A resident of Park Ridge, Illinois, from 1952 to 1994, Joe was an enthusiastic supporter of Father John Smyth's Standing Tall Foundation and Maryville Academy in Des Plaines Illinois. He was a charter member of its Chuck Wagon fundraising teams. He received the Standing Tall Award from Maryville in 1983, and also was honored for his long-time volunteer work with St. Vincent DePaul Settlement House in Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. Keenan's special place was their second home in Eagle River Wisconsin which they acquired in 1971. After retirement, they made their "special place" in Eagle River their permanent home in 1994. During retirement, Joe remained an active volunteer at Eagle River Hospital and member and generous supporter of Saint Peter the Fisherman Catholic Church in Eagle River. He was well known in the community for his exuberant presence, his ease at making friends wherever he went, and his love of frequenting the local restaurants. A menu item named for him at Eagle River's Chanticleer Inn—"Joe's Mac and Cheese"—stands testimony to his favorite food. Bartenders in town were well-versed in preparing his "Windsor Perfect Manhattan" (on the rocks, with a twist, and heavy on the sweet vermouth) as soon as he came through the door.

He is survived by four children, Joseph III (Sally) of Park Ridge; Linda of New Orleans, LA; Patrick (Kathy) of Boca Raton, FL; Michael (Denise) of Wheaton, IL; five grandchildren, Courtney, Katharine (Nate) Tackaberry, Patrick, Jeffie Leigh Lanter, and Joseph IV, and one great granddaughter, Brynn Katharine Tackaberry; as well as beloved cousins in Arizona, California, Chicago, and Washington, D.C.

Visitation will be at Ryan-Parke Funeral Home, 120 S. Northwest Hwy., Park Ridge, on Friday, Nov. 2, from 4 to 8 p.m. Funeral Mass at St. Paul of the Cross Church, Park Ridge, at 10 a.m. on Saturday, Nov. 3. Interment Queen of Heaven Cemetery, Hillside. In lieu of flowers, donations can be made to Father Smyth's Standing Tall Foundation in Des Plaines, Illinois, https://www.standingtallfoundation.org/revsmyth.html or the charity of your choice are appreciated. Miller reflects on the anniversary of his gruesome knee injury

By Dan Wiederer | Chicago Tribune

Zach Miller was in good spirits Monday afternoon. Then again, when isn't he? The Bears tight end has an exuberance and a positivity that has been infectious for the last five seasons he has spent with the organization. ¶ On Monday, as Miller met with reporters inside the PNC Center at Halas Hall, he again exuded the easygoing cheer that has made him so well-liked. ¶ Said Bears coach Matt Nagy: "Zach is one of my favorite people that I've been around in a long time. I absolutely love the kid. ... He's a humble, down-to-earth, happy person that just loves life. He loves people, and he's a great teammate. ¶ "Our guys feed off him. I feed off him."

For those who lost track of the calendar, Monday was a milestone day, the one-year anniversary of the day Miller dislocated his left knee and tore his popliteal artery while trying to haul in a touchdown catch in New Orleans. The injury was horrific. Doctors scrambled to save Miller's leg from amputation. In the span of two and a half months, he needed nine surgeries. Miller needed more than a month before he could walk again.

He persevered through his recovery process and grinded through the most grueling rehabilitation of his life. He set a goal to be running again a year out from his injury. He vowed to retain a positive attitude.

And while all signs pointed to Miller's 2017 injury as a career-ender, he has refused to close the door on a possible return to playing football.

Far-fetched? Probably. But it has been a driving force behind Miller's effort to give everything he has to get his leg and his body back to full strength. In reflecting on the last 365 days of his journey — first during a news conference at Halas Hall and later in a one-on-one Monday with the Tribune — Miller was, as he always is, introspective, enthusiastic and hopeful.

■ Some of Miller's most detailed thoughts from those sessions, Page 6

Teddy Greenstein
On Northwestern

There was a strange vibe at Pat Fitzgerald's Monday news conference. The Northwestern coach initially declined to throw plaudits at Notre Dame's top players, something he managed to do even before the Wildcats played Rutgers.

"I'm excited for tomorrow's practice for our team," Fitzgerald said in response to a question about how the Irish have improved since quarterback Ian Book became the starter. "We will focus on us. We're playing an outstanding football team, great in all three phases, talent at every position. Anything else?"

Asked if this was a motivational ploy, Fitzgerald replied: "No. I'm totally playing with you guys just to have fun."

And then he laughed.

Here are three takeaways from the media session as Fitzgerald's crew prepares for the third-ranked Irish (8-0) in prime time Saturday (6:15 p.m., ESPN). Northwestern will be seeking its first win over a top-five team since 1959.

1. It's an odd week.

So maybe Fitzgerald's initial stance made sense. Northwestern (5-3, 5-1) is consumed with winning the Big Ten West — and the Big Ten for the first time since 2000. If the Wildcats beat Iowa on Nov. 10, they're about 98 percent home. Saturday's game will not affect that either way, unless players get injured.

"It's unique, isn't it?" Fitzgerald said, "We're stepping out of Big Ten play (while in contention late in the season).

Bulls watch as Warriors' Thompson shatters NBA record with 14 3-pointers in blowout win

By K.C. Johnson

Everything you needed to know about the history-chasing Warriors' unselfishness played out in full display as they set more records Monday night at the United Center.

Stephen Curry entered with an NBA record seven straight games with at least five 3-pointers.

And yet, throughout the Warriors' 149-124 decimation of the Bulls, Curry barely looked for that shot. The entire team — so adept at sacrificing, so selfless for the greater good — focused its energy on the Klay Thompson Reclamation Project.

Thompson entered a very un-Thompsonlike 5-for-36 from 3-point range. With his teammates setting screens and looking for him on virtually every possession, Thompson broke Curry's NBA record by one with 14 3-pointers, sinking arecord-tying 10 in the first half.

"We've got to do a better job of trying to contain him," the Bulls' Zach LaVine said. "I've got to do a better job trying to chase him. But when a dude gets on a run like that, you can't do (expletive) about it."

Warriors guard Klay Thompson celebrates after scoring one of his record 14 3-pointers in the victory over the Bulls on Monday night.

Thompson scored 52 points in 27 minutes, including 36 in the first half, and exited to loud cheers from an opposing crowd. In one third-quarter stretch, with Thompson sporting a yellow headband to help close a cut made by an inadvertent elbow from a teammate, the Warriors passed up easier shots and sought him out in transition for three straight 3-point attempts.

That's unselfishness.

"At that point, the guys were just feeding him every time," Warriors coach Steve Kerr said. "That's how much they care about Klay and felt for him because he's had a rough start to the season. Obviously, he got it going tonight to say the least."

Bears a ratings juggernaut

The Bears television juggernaut rolled on Sunday, with roughly one-fourth of households in the Chicago market watching the 24-10 victory over the visiting Jets on CBS-2.

Peaking at a 28.1 Nielsen household rating locally as Matt Nagy's team pulled away at about 2:15 p.m., the Bears-Jets telecast averaged a 25.04 household rating here, which translates to more than 814,000 homes.

The Packers' late-afternoon 29-27 loss to the Rams drew a strong 16.04 Chicago-area household rating on FOX-32.

When the Rams' Todd Gurley shrewdly stopped short of the end zone late, it ensured the victory but foiled those counting on the Rams to win by more than 7½ points and for the total scoring to clear the "over" benchmark of 57½ points.

In prime time, the NFL barely held off MLB's decisive World Series game in the Chicago-area TV ratings, with each averaging close to 10 percent of area homes.

The Saints' 30-20 defeat of the Vikings on NBC-5 averaged a 10.05 household rating in the Chicago market, while the Red Sox's 5-1 Game 5 victory to take the championship, four games to one, averaged a 9.82 household rating here.

In case you were wondering, the 7-hour, 20-minute Friday-Saturday 18-inning Dodgers-Red Sox marathon in Game 3 averaged a 6.74 Chicago-area household rating, peaking at a 9.3 in the half-hour leading into 10 p.m.

But even as the game lost viewers to sleep the longer it went, it averaged a healthy 4.6 rating, almost 150,000 homes in this market, in its final half-hour between 2:15 and 2:30 a.m.

Hurts to hear: The sound of pain captured by the field-level parabolic microphones when the Bears' Kyle Long injured his right foot late in the fourth quarter was a bit too vivid for WBBM-AM 780/WCFS-FM 105.9 play-by-play man Jeff Joniak.

"I think you should turn the parabolics away because you hear his screaming going on down there because he's not in a good place," Joniak said to his crew on the air. "Given his injury history and what he's gone through, it's not good."

Care Bear stare? Why would CBS Sports' Tony Romo make fun of the family of four dressed in brightly colored onesies at the Bears game the weekend before Halloween?

I guess a dad and a mom trying to have fun with their young kids are fair game now. Hard to imagine the NFL really wants to discourage families — or anyone — coming out to watch pro football in dank Chicago fall weather.

Don't stop me now: Fox's use of Queen music in its World Series coverage was a none-too-subtle reminder that the Queen bio flick coming out this week, "Bohemian Rhapsody," is a 20th Century Fox release.

Unscientific screening: Not sure how Fox Sports' Twitter account could possibly mistake pitching great Sandy Koufax for Bill Nye the Science Guy in a photo with actor Rob Lowe at Dodger Stadium, but it did Friday night. The tweet was deleted five minutes later.

Jordan teases GOAT debate

By Phil Rosenthal
Chicago Tribune

Michael Jordan weighed in on the Greatest of All Time debate Sunday on NBC — sort of — prompting a playful response from LeBron James on Twitter.

It turns out the old NBA G.O.A.T. was really hyping this weekend's "Sunday Night Football" NFL showcase featuring the Packers' Aaron Rodgers and the Patriots' Tom Brady.

"A lot of talk going on these days about who is the greatest ever, about who has the titles, raw talent, the most clutch moments," Jordan says in a 45-second video, shot in artsy black and white with a spare, plaintive piano accompaniment to resemble some fancy Nike commercial.

"I get it. It's a tough call. I mean, even the jersey numbers are the same. But maybe the best way to settle this debate is to play it out head to head."

"I'll watch that," Jordan says.

The Lakers' James, who has worn Jordan's No. 23, playfully tweeted an acceptance of the initial challenge, then doubled back: "IM READY!!!! Oh my bad I thought, maybe u were, umm never mind back to my regular schedule program."

The Jordan promo is expected to get heavy play this week across NBC Universal and Comcast platforms.

Once ubiquitous in commercials, Jordan at 55 looks a tad rounder in the face than in his last TV ad appearance, which, according to the trade publication Adweek, was in a 2015 reprise of Gatorade's "Be Like Mike" campaign.

The man whose silhouette is a logo for his Jordan Brand was among those saluting Derek Jeter's retirement in 2014 for Nike's "Re2pect" ads. He also did a Hanes commercial that year.

His last promo for NBC touted its 2008 Ryder Cup coverage.

Sunday's Rodgers-Brady game will be only the second time the future Hall of Fame quarterbacks have squared off. Rodgers led the Packers to a 26-14 victory over the Patriots in 2014, but he was injured when the teams met in 2010 and wasn't the Packers starter in 2006.

CUBS

Decisions to be made before free-agent frenzy

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

The Bryce Harper/Manny Machado sweepstakes began Monday, but the Cubs and the other 29 major-league teams have some internal business to finalize first.

In the Cubs' case, they must decide by Friday whether to pick up the options on starting pitcher Cole Hamels and relievers Pedro Strop and Brandon Kintzler.

Hamels is expected to remain with the Cubs, whether it means picking up his $20 million option or finalizing an extension that could involve the Rangers — Hamels' former team — paying a $6 million buyout.

Hamels, 34, was 4-3 with a 2.36 ERA in 12 starts with the Cubs after being dealt from the Rangers on July 27.

Strop's value to the bullpen last season also might result in the Cubs picking up his $6.25 million extension. Strop, 33, was 6-1 with a 2.26 ERA in 60 appearances — including a 1.77 ERA with 11 saves in the second half after closer Brandon Morrow was sidelined with a bone bruise in his right arm.

Strop will receive a $500,000 buyout if the Cubs decline the option.

The Cubs are expected to decline the $10 million team option on Kintzler, who has a $5 million player option he is expected to exercise. Kintzler, 34, allowed 14 earned runs in 18 innings after being dealt from the Nationals on July 31.

The free-agent filing period started Monday. In the case of Harper and Machado — the top two free agents — teams are allowed to contact them but cannot negotiate financial terms until Saturday.

"Bryce Harper is somebody that I will l say, in my entire career, he has the greatest skill level and the greatest character level of any superstar I've ever been involved with, and I think our game is going to see historic performances from him," Boras said.

"We know who the team is — it's already completed and done — but Bryce has told me that he wanted to tell you personally, so I'm going to let him do that."

Kay replied, "That's such a tease."

The Cubs and other major-league teams have an exclusive five-day window to negotiate with their own free agents. The Cubs' free agents are relievers Jesse Chavez, Jorge De La Rosa, Justin Wilson and Jaime Garcia, second baseman Daniel Murphy and catcher Bobby Wilson.

WHITE SOX

Jones will be back but Shields won't

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

In an attempt to stabilize their bullpen, the White Sox on Monday picked up the $4.65 million option on reliever Nate Jones.

The Sox also cut ties with starter James Shields by declining a $16 million team option for 2019 and electing to exercise a $2 million buyout.

The move allows Shields to become a free agent.

Jones, 32, was 2-2 with a 3.00 ERA and five saves in 33 games.

Jones' season was cut short by a pronator muscle strain in his right pitching arm. The Sox hold team options on Jones for 2020 ($5.15 million) and 2021 ($6 million).

Shields, 36, was 7-16 with a 4.53 ERA in 34 games.

Shields was tied for third in the American League with 204⅔ innings. Shields worked at least six innings in 26 starts in 2018, tied with Aaron Nola of the Phillies and Zack Greinke of the Diamondbacks for for fifth most in baseball.

McKinnie's surreal trip: He's a Warrior

By K.C. Johnson

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Alfonzo McKinnie of the Warriors tries to block a shot by the Bulls' Jabari Parker in the first half Monday at the United Center.

Alfonzo McKinnie was 5 when the Bulls won the last of their six championships in 1998. But that dynasty was special enough to sear memories to last a lifetime for the native of Chicago's West Side.

"I grew up watching the Bulls," McKinnie said. "Michael Jordan was pretty much everybody's favorite player. Being a kid in Chicago, you wanted to play basketball. You wanted to be like Mike. Just knowing what those banners mean and the guys who got them, I'm just blessed to go on this court and play."

McKinnie, 26, is blessed to go on any court and play.

Lightly recruited out of Marshall High School and undrafted out of Green Bay, the 6-foot-8 forward improbably has found a home with the NBA's latest captivating dynasty. McKinnie, who had a career-high 19 points and ten rebounds Monday night at the United Center, has worked his way into the rotation of the Warriors.

Steve Kerr, who played for three of the Bulls' six title teams and has coached the Warriors to three championships in the last four seasons, said McKinnie's versatility and athletic ability have made him a perfect fit.

"He's somebody we had our eye on from the first day of training camp because of his athleticism. But he's really gotten a lot better since camp," Kerr said. "He's making some shots for us. He's getting a feel for our offense, playing well with other guys. He seems to fit the modern NBA game of positionless basketball. He can be out on the floor and guard multiple spots and switch.

"The guys really like him too. He's been through quite a bit trying to get to this point. And I think our players have a lot of respect for his journey, but also the way he carries himself. He's a very professional, hard-working kid."

McKinnie has played in Germany, Mexico and the G League, including a stint with the Windy City Bulls. He broke into the NBA last season with the Raptors, with whom he played 14 games.

As if his journey weren't fascinating enough, he signed papers to buy his mother a home earlier in the day.

"It actually does feel surreal at times," McKinnie said. "There was a point in time I didn't expect this to happen. ... I talk to guys every day, guys who are younger than me and going through things in college. I just tell them my story. They've seen from where I started to now. I tell them you gotta keep pushing."

Tex tribute: Kerr showered heavy praise on former Bulls assistant coach Tex Winter, who died earlier this month at 96.

"It's hard to quantify Tex's impact on the game," Kerr said. "I never met a coach — and I've played for a lot of Hall of Famers — so dedicated to the fundamentals of the game. And I know his influence on me is there every single day. When we go to practice, when we watch film, I'm constantly thinking about Tex's voice in my head.

"He taught me probably more about the game than anybody — the details, the minutia, how to teach those details. I learned a ton from Tex. And I know so many other people would tell you the exact same thing. He dedicated his life to the game and lived an amazing life."

Memory lane: Twenty years have passed since Kerr won three straight titles with the Bulls.

"The cliché is time flies when you're having fun. And it's actually been true for me," Kerr said. "I've lived a charmed life broadcasting, coaching and being involved in basketball. I still have amazing memories walking back into United Center."

four, making two. He scored 23 points in 25 minutes. Draymond Green posted 11 assists in 25 minutes. Kevin Durant added 14 points in 28 minutes.

None of the Warriors' Big Four played past the 4-minute mark of the third quarter.

The Bulls allowed the fifth-most points in team history and the most ever in a home game.

"The disappointing thing is the lack of edge we played with to allow them to get comfortable and get confidence and get going," Bulls coach Fred Hoiberg said. "When they hit us in the mouth, we didn't respond well.

"It's pretty simple: We got our ass kicked."

The Warriors scored 92 points in the first half, the second most before halftime in NBA history.

"I wouldn't be able to break these records without the system I play in and the guys I play with," Thompson said. "Even before I went out in the second half, Steph looked at the box score and said, 'Go get it.' That just shows you the unselfishness of him."

In the first half, the Warriors shot 62 percent and sank 17 3-pointers, an NBA record. The Bulls trailed by 42 at halftime, tied for the fourth-largest deficit in league history.

One almost expected Joakim Noah, the former Defensive Player of the Year winner who sat in the Reinsdorfs' suite and drew a standing ovation when shown on the video board, to run down and give a flagrant foul to somebody.

"It's unacceptable to start the game like that, especially against the defending champs," LaVine said of a deficit that reached 45 points. "We have to have better energy, better toughness. We just didn't have it. It's on us. They played the way they were supposed to."

The Warriors improved their record against the Eastern Conference to an astounding 105-19 since 2014-15.

LaVine and Antonio Blakeney with a career high led the Bulls with 21 points apiece.

"I'm just trying to help these guys enjoy every moment of what's happening to them. Because it goes by fast. It doesn't seem like 20 years have passed since the (Bulls') '98 championship," Kerr said. "Life goes by fast. So you have to enjoy every minute. That's what this year is about — enjoying our time together, hoping it continues."

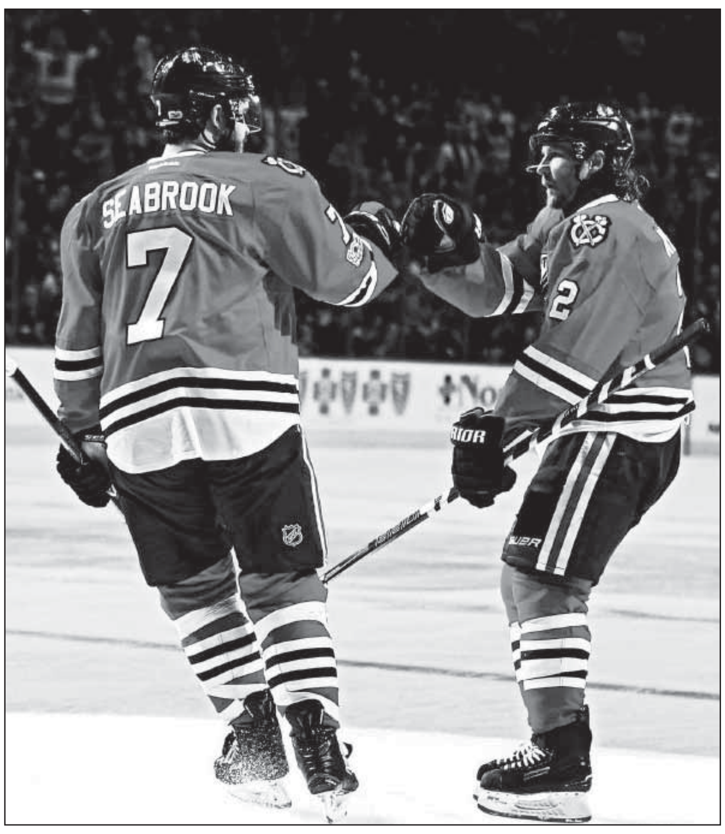
BLACKHAWKS



CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Defenseman Brent Seabrook and Duncan Keith have seen a lot, and they like what they see so far from this season's Blackhawks.

Keith, Seabrook: Still work to do to be contender

By Jimmy Greenfield
Chicago Tribune

The tumult that comes with the start of an NHL season is in the rearview mirror, and a dozen games have been crossed off the Blackhawks' schedule.

There have been more ups than downs, which is certainly a good sign as the league's playoff contenders begin to reveal themselves, but there's work to be done.

Duncan Keith and Brent Seabrook know this as well as anybody. The defensemen, who have played 980 games together with the Hawks since making their NHL debuts during the same game on Oct. 5, 2005, are the veteran linchpins necessary for any playoff run to have legs.

"We're trying to find our way," Seabrook said. "We're playing some good periods, we've had some periods where we haven't been very good. But that's something we're trying to shore up and trying to put together a full 60 minutes."

Or a full 65 minutes. Half of the Hawks' 12 games have needed overtime to decide, including Sunday night's 2-1 loss to the Oilers at the United Center.

"I thought we were ordinary in the first period," coach Joel Quenneville said. "But I thought we were OK the last two periods."

In Quenneville parlance, that means the Hawks were pretty bad in the first period and decent during the final two.

The Hawks were playing for the second night in a row and for the sixth time in nine days, yet the game was indicative of how they've played for most of the season. Except for that debacle against the Lightning on Oct. 21, the Hawks have been in every game.

"We're still trying to build that identity," Keith said. "But we know that when we play with pace and we're smart with the puck, we're good defensively. (We) are getting pucks out when we need to get them out and getting them in when we have to get them in. When we have that checking mentality we can play with any team."

The Hawks offense has been much more consistent than the defense, which has been searching for a consistent third pairing. Brandon Manning, Jan Rutta and Brandon Davidson all have taken turns there, but each has been a healthy scratch. Rookie defenseman Henri Jokiharju, who may not have even made the roster if Connor Murphy didn't suffer a back injury before training camp, has been a lifesaver.

The 19-year-old Jokiharju has been playing important minutes since the start of the season while finding a home on a pairing with Keith. It was hoped Jokiharju would benefit from playing with Keith, and he has. But Keith also has liked knowing he may have found a partner for the next few years.

"I was actually thinking about that before the (Oilers) game," Keith said. "I've bounced around with a few different partners. It's a good feeling for sure to know that he's as young as he is and as good as he is. Definitely bodes well for the team and myself as a partner with him. We're going to keep trying to get better one game at a time. I know that we can."

BLACKHAWKS NOTES

Pathetic power play a cause for concern

By Jimmy Greenfield
Chicago Tribune

A message from Captain Obvious: The power play needs help.

Sure, the Blackhawks scored their lone goal against the Oilers on Sunday night on the power play, but that comes with the enormous caveat that they did it with a two-man advantage.

"At least we scored on the 5-on-3," Hawks coach Joel Quenneville said. "Which you have to."

You also have to score when it's 5-on-4, or at least more often than the Hawks have this season. The Hawks were 1-for-5 on the power play against the Oilers to drop to 5-for-41 overall.

The Hawks had eight minutes of power play time Sunday night and generated two shots on goal.

Minor problem for Kruger: If there's one thing Quenneville loves from his players, it's predictability — but not the kind Marcus Kruger has been showing off lately.

Kruger has been taking penalties at an alarming pace, averaging one per game in the last six games. Quenneville wasn't sure the tripping penalty he took Sunday night against the Oilers was the right call, but he agreed Kruger needs to stay out of the box.

"Tonight you could argue that one," Quenneville said. "But he can't take penalties."

Resurgent Ward: It became fashionable to bash goalie Cam Ward when he struggled at the start of the season and Corey Crawford's return began to appear imminent.

And it is true that Ward didn't play particularly well in his first three games, when he gave up 14 goals and had an .843 save percentage against the Senators, Blues and Maple Leafs.

But in his last four starts — including a 49-save effort in a loss to the Lightning — Ward has been exceptional. He stopped 24 of 26 shots against the Oilers to give him a .919 save percentage in those four games. That's more than acceptable and should allow Quenneville to be more comfortable giving Crawford an extra night or two off as he continues his comeback from a concussion.

NFL NOTES

Browns pull plug on Jackson's tenure

Associated Press

Hue Jackson's failed, flawed tenure with the Browns is finally over.

The team fired its embattled coach Monday, ending a run of futility nearly unmatched in NFL history. Jackson, who went 3-36-1 in two-plus seasons, was dismissed by general manager John Dorsey with the backing of owners Dee and Jimmy Haslam.

The Browns also fired offensive coordinator Todd Haley and made defensive coordinator Gregg Williams the interim coach. Haley was in his first season on Jackson's staff after spending the last six with the Steelers.

Jimmy Haslam intimated the firings were prompted by an irreparable divide between Jackson and Haley.

"Hopefully we made a big step today," Haslam said. "It's very troubling. It's hard to win in the NFL; if anybody knows that, it's us. And I think the message today is we're not going to put up with internal discord."

Winston benched: Jameis Winston's inability to cut down on turnovers cost him his starting job with the Buccaneers.

Without speculating on what the move means for the young quarterback's future with the team, coach Dirk Koetter said veteran backup Ryan Fitzpatrick will lead the offense against the Panthers on Sunday.

Winston, 24, was benched after throwing four interceptions in a 37-34 loss to the Bengals.

"We're going to start Fitz at quarterback this week. That's what we feel we need to do this week to give ourselves the best chance," Koetter said.

Winston, who entered the NFL as the No. 1 overall pick in the 2015 draft, has 11 turnovers — 10 interceptions and one fumble — in 3½ games since returning from a suspension for violating the league's personal conduct policy.

Patriots cruise: Devin McCourty returned an interception 84 yards for a touchdown, and the Patriots defense smothered the Bills' anemic offense in a 25-6 win.

James White scored on a 1-yard run, and the Patriots relied more on Stephen Gostkowski's leg than on Tom Brady's arm for their fifth straight win, which improved their AFC East-leading record to 6-2. Brady finished 29 of 45 for 324 yards but was held without a touchdown pass for the first time this season.

Gostkowski hit four of five field-goal attempts, including two from just 25 yards after Patriots drives stalled inside the Bills' 10-yard line.

Extra points: Chargers DE Joey Bosa said a couple weeks ago that he was optimistic about returning after the bye week. Coach Anthony Lynn, however, said Bosa still needs to make more progress. Lynn hasn't declared Bosa out for Sunday's game at the Seahawks but hinted that Bosa wouldn't be doing any team or individual drills. ... The Cowboys fired offensive line coach Paul Alexander less than halfway into his first season with the team, marking the first time for coach Jason Garrett to make an in-season change to his coaching staff.

IN BRIEF

BASEBALL: Agent Brodie Van Wagenen has agreed to switch roles and become the Mets' general manager, team spokesman Harold Kaufman confirmed. Kaufman said chief operating officer Jeff Wilpon and Van Wagenen have settled on contract terms, although no paperwork had been signed. Van Wagenen, 44, has represented high-profile players all around the majors, including current Mets stars Jacob deGrom, Yoenis Cespedes and Todd Frazier. ... The Diamondbacks picked up the $14.5 million option on Paul Goldschmidt's contract for the 2019 season. ... The Nationals exercised their $6 million club option for 2019 on lefty closer Sean Doolittle. ... Adam Wainwright became a free agent, then finalized a $2 million, one-year contract with the Cardinals that allows him to earn $8 million in performance bonuses as a starting pitcher, $3 million for relief appearances and $4 million more for games finished.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL: Oklahoma coach Lincoln Riley said he's not interested in the NFL right now. The question came up on the day the Browns fired coach Hue Jackson. Riley coached Browns quarterback Baker Mayfield at Oklahoma but said, "I love Oklahoma. I love coaching here. I love college football. I certainly don't have that itch right now." ... Ohio State coach Urban Meyer addressed speculation that he could step down at the end of the season, saying he feels fine and definitely will be back next year. ... Illinois defensive coordinator Hardy Nickerson resigned, citing personal "health-related circumstances beyond my control." In year three under coach Lovie Smith and Nickerson, the Illinois defense has allowed 52.6 points per game during the last three weeks in blowout losses to Purdue, Wisconsin and Maryland. ... Baylor quarterback Charlie Brewer is in a concussion protocol and his status is uncertain for Saturday's home game against Oklahoma State.

HORSE RACING: Accelerate, the California-based 5-year-old who has won five of six starts this year, is the 5-2 morning-line favorite for the Breeders' Cup Classic after drawing the far outside No. 14 post for the $6 million race at Churchill Downs. West Coast, one of two entries trained by Bob Baffert, is the 5-1 second choice after drawing the No. 7 post. He will start to the right of stablemate McKinzie, the co-third choice with Mind Your Biscuits at 6-1.

SOCCER: In just months, Julen Lopetegui has lost two of the most high-profile coaching jobs in the world. Lopetegui was fired by Real Madrid less than five months after he was sacked by Spain before the World Cup for not telling federation officials he accepted the Madrid job. Santiago Solari, coach of Real Madrid B, will take charge for the Copa del Rey match against third-division club Melilla on Wednesday.

Nickerson cites health concerns for resignation

By Shannon Ryan
Chicago Tribune

Illinois defensive coordinator Hardy Nickerson has resigned, the team announced Monday.

He cited health reasons for his midseason departure. Coach Lovie Smith said he will take over defensive play-calling duties, starting Saturday against Minnesota.

The Illini defense has ranked among the worst nationally and allowed 712 yards — including 431 rushing yards — in Saturday's 63-33 loss to Maryland.

"When I was contacted about being offered this job back in 2016, I was excited for the opportunity to come in to coordinate and run Illinois' defense," Nickerson said in a statement. "I had every intention of helping put our defensive student-athletes in the best possible position to win, and, ultimately, to make the University of Illinois community and fans proud of our results."

Illinois ranks last in the Big Ten in scoring defense (37.6 points per game), total defense (535.6 yards per game) and rushing defense (248.1 yards per game). The Illini (3-5, 1-4) have allowed 52.7 points per game in losing their last three by an average margin of 32.7.

Smith said in a statement Monday: "Hardy informed me yesterday that he felt it was in the program's best interest to leave our staff. I've known and coached with Hardy for many years, and know what an outstanding person he is."

At his weekly news conference in Champaign, Smith called Nickerson's departure difficult. Smith was an assistant coach when Nickerson was a five-time Pro Bowl linebacker for the Buccaneers, and Smith later hired Nickerson for his coaching staffs with the Bears and Bucs.

Defensive analyst Rob Wright was promoted to replace Nickerson as linebackers coach. Wright spent the last two seasons at Illinois as a graduate assistant.

We've got nothing to lose. So I think our guys will prepare really well and be excited for the challenge. I've got a ton of respect for (Irish coach Brian Kelly). I know a lot of guys on that staff. They do an outstanding job, and I'm sure we'll become closer after this game, when we don't play each other."

Offensive lineman J.B. Butler agreed with the "nothing to lose" mantra, saying: "I think Fitz is right on that. There is nothing to lose, but it's a great opportunity to showcase our program in prime time against the No. 3 team in the country. It's a cool deal and I know it means a lot to a lot of the guys. That can be something we stress all week: You can play loose and have fun because it doesn't impact the Big Ten."

2. Isaiah Bowser is the No. 1 tailback.

That's how he's listed on the depth chart, anyway, after back-to-back 100-yard games. But don't look for him to get another 34 carries, as he did against Wisconsin. NU coaches still like Solomon Vault, who wasn't cleared to play until Friday and did not get a carry in the 31-17 win. Speedy freshman Drake Anderson can play in two more games before losing his redshirt, but it's doubtful Fitzgerald would burn one in a nonconference game.

"Whatever plan we had preseason (before Jeremy Larkin had to retire) is out the window," Fitzgerald said. "Now it's day by day, game by game. Hopefully (Vault) will be able to practice Tuesday. That position is kind of like our team. There have been some awesome games and production and playing the position the way we're used to around here. And there have been some runs where you say: What was that?"

The Wildcats remain last in the Big Ten in rushing yards per game (91.1) and per attempt (2.6).

3. Drew Luckenbaugh seems to be OK.

Northwestern's kicker suffered an injury, believed to be a hip flexor, less than 30 minutes before Saturday's kickoff. So the Wildcats had to use Charlie Kuhbander, who was injured and left his shoes in his dorm room. A member of the equipment staff had to retrieve them before kickoff.

"How about that?" Fitzgerald said. "There's been a lot of weird stuff this year. Maybe he will bring his shoes to Ryan Field on Saturday."

Kuhbander won't need them if Luckenbaugh, who has made his last three field-goal tries, is OK. He indicated as much to Fitzgerald on Monday.

"He said, 'I feel great,' and was smiling as usual," Fitzgerald said.

Coleman-Lands means business

By Shannon Ryan
Chicago Tribune

COLLEGE BASKETBALL 2018-19
DePaul opener: Nov. 7
vs. Bethune-Cookman, 6:30 p.m., FS1

Jalen Coleman-Lands popped by DePaul's entrepreneurship center. The marketing major and junior guard on the basketball team is always tinkering with new ideas.

He has plenty, he said, stored in his mind.

"I've always been into entrepreneurial things," he said. "The hustle mentality has always been in me."

A fan of the TV show "Shark Tank" and of P. Diddy's business acumen, a former vice president of his high school's entrepreneur club and the son of parents who pushed him to think innovatively, Coleman-Lands has a brain for business.

At Illinois, he helped develop with a business major an app called Volume that allowed people to check on wait times at clubs and restaurants. (He could not use his likeness or association with college sports to promote it because of NCAA rules.)

He recently sold his share in Volume — after again checking with NCAA compliance officers, Coleman-Lands said — to focus on basketball and his studies at DePaul, where he transferred in July 2017.

He applied a similar analytical approach to maximizing his time off the court last season, which he had to sit out per NCAA transfer rules.

> "He's getting his self-confidence back. He's known very well for shooting the basketball. As he grows, he can expand."
> — DePaul coach Dave Leitao

"Being prepared," he said. "Being confident knowing I used my time wisely. I feel like I'm a better player. My IQ has increased. I can see the floor better. I had time to work on my game."

After two seasons at Illinois, where he set a freshman record with 87 3-pointers, Coleman-Lands decided to look elsewhere when the Illini fired the coach who recruited him, John Groce, and replaced him with Brad Underwood.

"I took my time. I talked to (Underwood) and it was cool," he said. "I just didn't feel comfortable enough. I wanted my own option, the ball in my court (to pick a coach)."

DePaul is desperate to take a leap forward in the Big East, coming off an 11-20 season that included a tie for ninth in the conference at 4-14. The Blue Demons' lackluster recent history — they haven't had a winning record since 2007 — didn't dissuade Coleman-Lands, who said he also had offers to transfer to Gonzaga and Xavier.

He arrived at Illinois from La Lumiere School in La Porte, Ind., as a consensus top-50 recruit. Coleman-Lands said he's comfortable playing for programs looking to make the next step. He helped his first high school team, Cathedral in Indianapolis, develop into a two-time state champion, and he said La Lumiere has evolved into a national power after he arrived.

His relationship with DePaul assistant coach Shane Heirman, who coached Coleman-Lands at La Lumiere, was also important in his decision to come to Lincoln Park.

"I've always been an underdog who worked for what I wanted," he said. "That's my life path."

A skilled shooter who averaged 9.1 points and hit 40.2 percent of his 3-pointers at Illinois, Coleman-Lands should provide a boost for the Blue Demons. The return of guard Devin Gage, who missed all but eight games with an Achilles injury, to join Max Strus (16.8 points per game) and Eli Cain (11.7) gives DePaul multiple scoring threats.

Coleman-Lands' shooting ability should help a team that hit just 42.8 percent from the field last season. He said he's getting his shooting legs back after having surgery last year for stress fractures in his left leg that plagued him at Illinois.

"He's getting his self-confidence back," DePaul coach Dave Leitao said. "He's known very well for shooting the basketball. As he grows, he can expand."

Coleman-Lands said he was drawn to DePaul not only for the chance to help turn around the program and showcase his skills, but also to attend a school with a strong business program in a city where he can network with corporate leaders.

An Academic All-Big Ten perfomer at Illinois, he reads Maya Angelou and dabbles in writing poetry. His father encouraged him to watch documentaries on Darfur and World War II when he was growing up.

"I have deep, contemplative parents," Coleman-Lands said. "It was just to be aware of the world and open my mind to a different perspective."

He's ready to get back to business with DePaul's opener Nov. 7 against Bethune-Cookman. After a year of not playing in games, there will be some sentiment bubbling too.

"There's a lot of built-up emotion," Coleman-Lands said. "I'm excited."

Coaches make plans if Long can't play

By Colleen Kane
Chicago Tribune

Bears coach Matt Nagy said Monday at Halas Hall that he and his staff are sorting through their options on the offensive line should they be without right guard Kyle Long this week and beyond.

Long suffered a right foot injury in the final minutes of the Bears' 24-10 victory over the Jets on Sunday at Soldier Field, and Nagy said the severity of the injury was being evaluated a day later. He said he didn't know yet if the injury is season-ending and would provide more on Long's status in the next day or two.

"It could be a little bit of time, but I don't know if it's necessarily season-ending," Nagy said.

Long's scream could be heard on the CBS broadcast on Jordan Howard's 1-yard run with 3 minutes, 37 seconds remaining. Bears tight end Dion Sims landed awkwardly on Long's leg in a pile of players, and Long required trainers to help him off the field because he couldn't put weight on his right leg. He used crutches to get around afterward.

Long, the Bears' 2013 first-round draft pick and a Pro Bowler in each of his first three seasons, suffered a season-ending right ankle injury in 2016 that forced him to miss the final seven games and required surgery on multiple ligaments and tendons. He also ended the season on injured reserve last year before having shoulder, neck and elbow surgeries.

"For him to go through what he's gone through the last couple of years with injuries, you feel for the guy," Nagy said. "Right now we're hoping that it's good news. ... When we do find that out, then we've got to deal with either way. He's just got to stay mentally strong as much as he can."

Nagy said Long has been a "constant leader" and has "really done things the right way" for the Bears this season, and that makes his potential absence even more difficult to swallow.

Nagy said guard Eric Kush is expected to return from a neck injury that kept him out of Sunday's game. Kush and rookie James Daniels had been rotating at left guard, but Daniels played all 66 snaps on offense Sunday with Kush out.

Nagy said the Bears also can use fourth-year guard Bryan Witzmann as depth. Witzmann started 13 games for the Chiefs last season when Nagy was the offensive coordinator there. And Nagy said he would leave it to general manager Ryan Pace to worry about possibilities before Tuesday's NFL trade deadline.

If Daniels is making the jump to full-time starter, Nagy thought he got off to a good start Sunday.

"There were a couple of things in there where he got a little bit off balance, but one of his strengths is being able to recover with leverage," Nagy said. "There were a couple of other times where he was pulling in the run game and had some thumpers where he was bringing it. ... Overall, the offensive line did a really good job in giving green grass to Mitch (Trubisky), and specifically (Daniels) for being in there as much as he was, he did well."

"Our bond is a little different because we've had surgery together on the same days in the same places," Miller said. "I've seen what he went through and how hard he's worked to get to where he's at, all the stuff he's overcome. I just feel for him because I know what he's put in.

"But I know how he is. I've seen him come back from all that, and I don't think it will be any different. As soon as he gets through this, and hopefully he's on the mend soon, he'll be back helping us win football games."

Mack watch: Nagy said the status of outside linebacker Khalil Mack (ankle) and wide receiver Allen Robinson (groin) this week would be "day to day, hour to hour."

Mack and Robinson both missed Sunday's game, and Nagy said the decision to sit Mack came down to if he would make the injury worse and if he could be effective enough if he played.

"They want to be out there," Nagy said. "But this is just part of the business. We have to make sure we're doing what's best for both parties. ... It should be getting better. That's what we hope. We hope each day we can say, yes, it's getting closer and closer to where we feel like it benefits us (for them) to be out there."

No pass rush, no problem

Credit Bears' secondary for locking down Jets, Darnold on third down

Brad Biggs
Bears Rewind

The Bears improved to eighth in the NFL in third-down defense after Sunday's 24-10 victory over the Jets, and they should only improve if they continue putting opposing quarterbacks in tough spots.

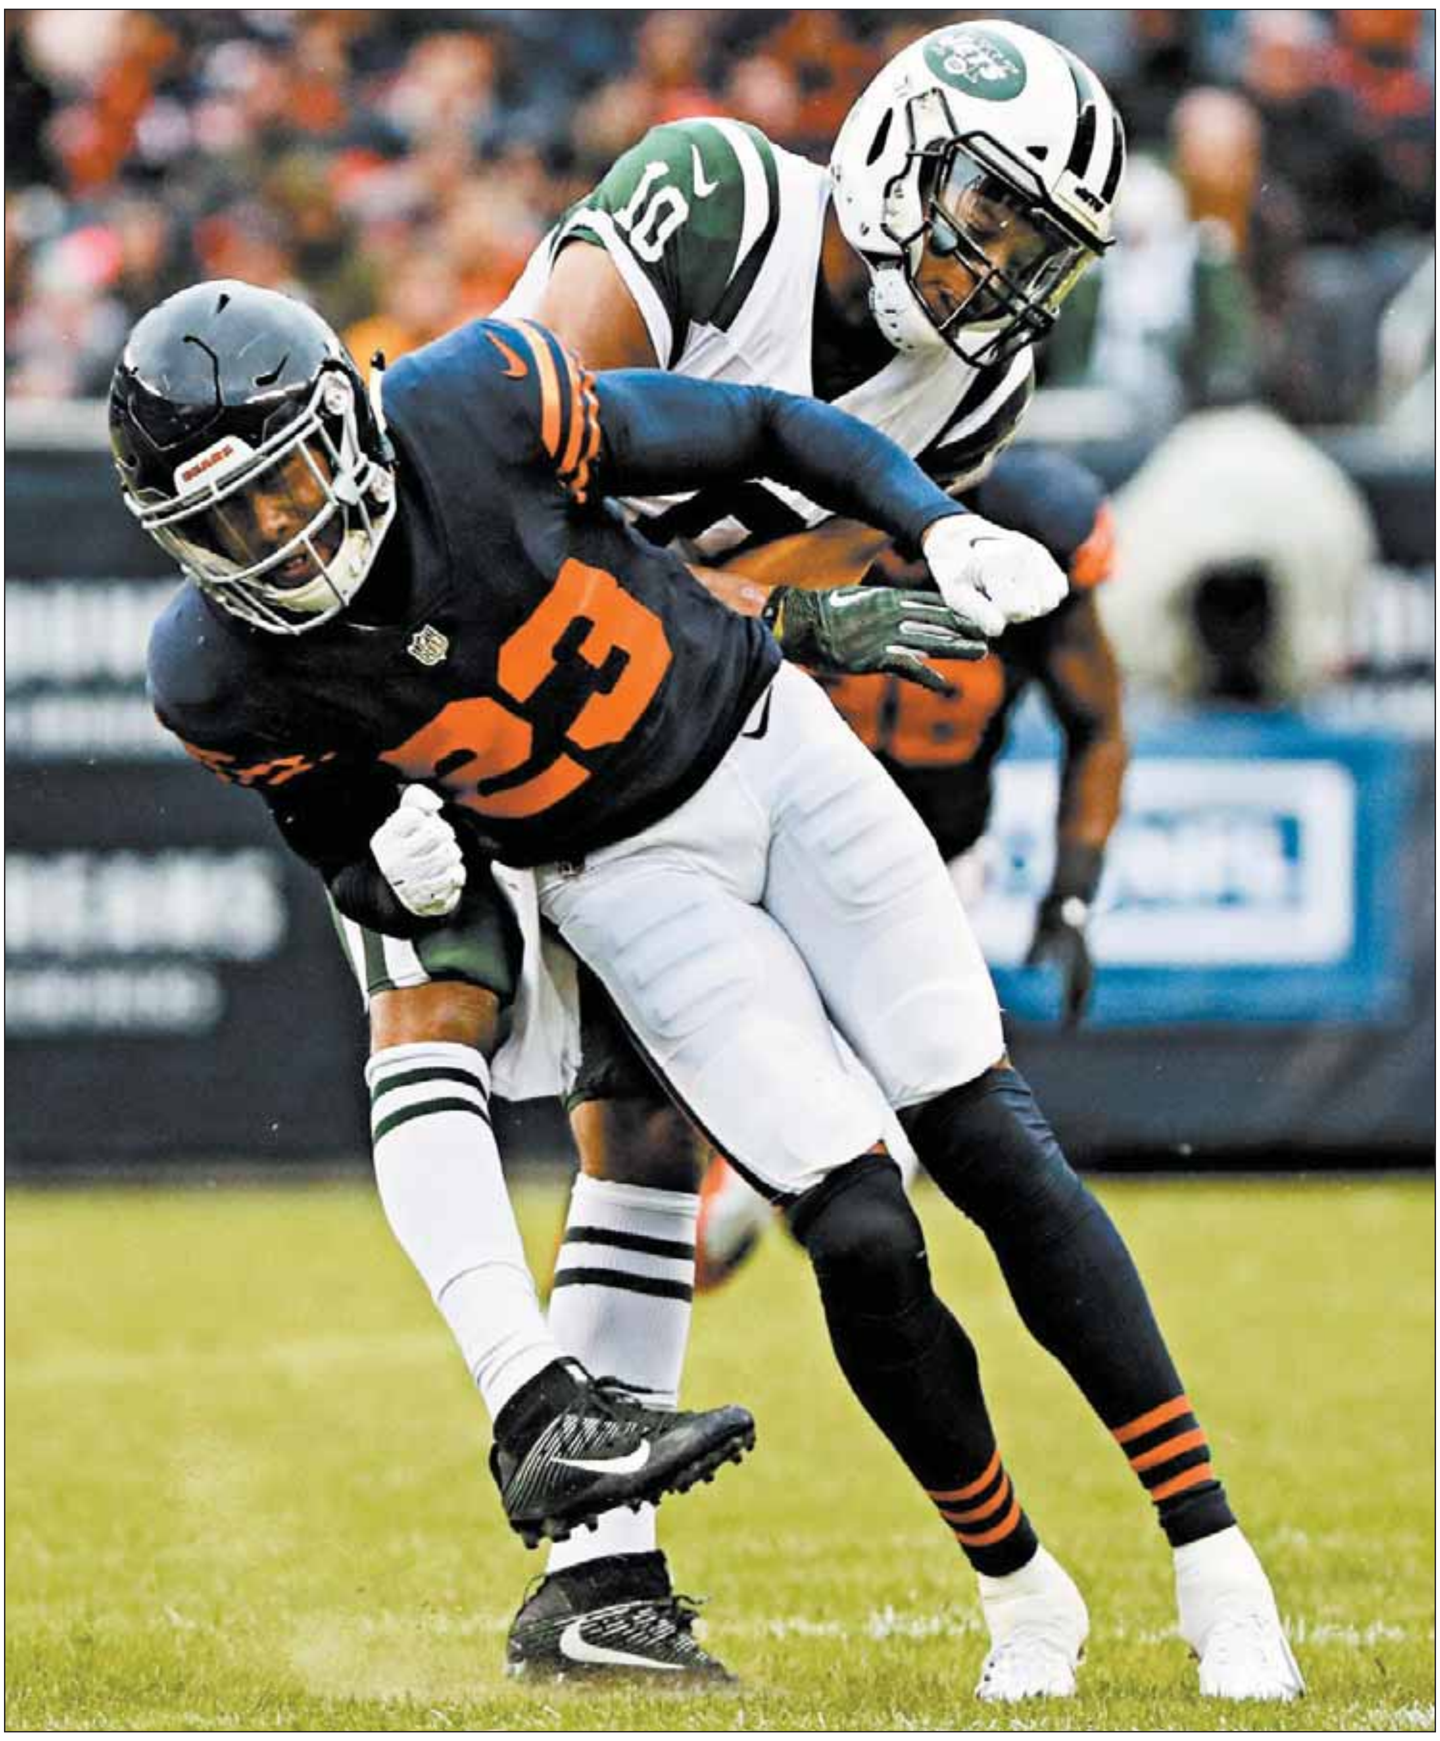
That was as much of the story as anything else for Jets rookie Sam Darnold, who had a rocky day throwing the ball. Although Darnold wasn't intercepted, he completed only 14 of 29 passes for 153 yards, and six of the Jets' 11 possessions went three-and-out.

A review of the game shows the Bears secondary played particularly well, especially on third down. The Jets converted only 3 of 14 third downs. Bears opponents have converted only 35.9 percent of third downs against the defense this season. It was a particularly strong showing considering the pass rush was mostly quiet.

Darnold faced third-and-9 or more on nine occasions and third-and-6 or more on 11 occasions, and the tone was set on the first third down of the game when cornerback Kyle Fuller was able to break on a pass intended for Jermaine Kearse and deflect it, one of six pass breakups by the Bears. Safety Adrian Amos was draped on tight end Chris Herndon on the next third down, another incompletion.

Nickelback Bryce Callahan shined brightest. He had three pass breakups, knocking a pass for Kearse away late in the second quarter on third-and-3. He had four tackles and the only sack when he came off the edge on a blitz.

The Jets were short-handed at wide receiver without Quincy Enunwa and Robby Anderson and then more so when Kearse left with an injury, but the Bears need not apologize for that. They had tight coverage, did a nice job of playing the first-down marker on third downs and were routinely around the ball. Maybe the biggest error was Fuller mistiming a jump on a deep sideline shot to Deontay Burnett. A missed opportunity for an interception turned into a 29-yard gain.



ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears cornerback Kyle Fuller deflects a ball away from Jets wide receiver Jermaine Kearse early in the Bears' victory Sunday.

No time to kick

There was some buzz over the Bears' decision not to try a free kick on the final play of the first half. Had Tarik Cohen called for a fair catch and successfully fielded Lachlan Edwards' punt, the Bears could have elected to attempt a free kick — worth three points just like a field goal — from the spot of the fair catch. It would have been an untimed down, meaning the Bears could have attempted the free kick even though time had expired before Cohen caught the punt. The defense is not permitted to rush the kicker, so the kick can be made from the line of scrimmage — in this instance Cohen caught the punt at the Bears 45-yard line. So it would have been a 65-yard attempt by Cody Parkey.

Obviously, the Bears didn't play for a fair catch, and that was the right call. Parkey had missed wide right from 40 yards earlier in the half and in the wind a 65-yard free kick likely would have been out of his range. Also, the Jets would have put a returner in the end zone to run back the kick if it was short. So do you want to give Cohen a chance to make a play with the ball in his hands or do you want to try to cover Andre Roberts, who entered the week as the NFL's top punt returner?

Two-minute drill

The run defense was the primary reason the Bears were able to keep the Jets in third-and-long. Defensive end Akiem Hicks came off a double team to stop Isaiah Crowell for a 3-yard gain on the first snap of the game, and that was what amounted to a good run for the Jets. Hicks played strong and Roy Robertson-Harris made four solo tackles in only 16 snaps. Bilal Nichols and Eddie Goldman were stout up the middle.

■ Kyle Long took a bad penalty late in the second quarter getting mixed up with linebacker Darron Lee. It wiped out a 20-yard pass to Kevin White and a roughing-the-passer call that would have set the Bears up on the Jets 20-yard line.

■ Mitch Trubisky threw a couple of nice passes, including the 4-yard touchdown to Anthony Miller, but he was high and wide on throws again. Trubisky has completed 42 of 79 passes the last two games.

■ As well as the secondary played, the front seven should have produced more than two quarterback hits.

One year later, Miller still has goal of playing again

On whether he is getting close to running again ...

Yeah. I don't know if we're medically permitted to talk about that. Or I guess on these premises. So ask me outside. That was a personal goal of mine just to have something to aim for. I haven't been medically cleared to run. ... But I know my body. I know if I can push the envelope and do things, (I will). I think that's more of a they don't want me to trip and fall and injure something. But I've (run) and I'm proud of that, so it's been good. It's good.

On how this injury and the recovery process changed him ...

I'm certain it changed me a little bit. Perseverance. I've always felt that I've had that, but this is just on another level. Patience for sure. Just sitting there for six months and your foot won't move and you're trying to move it? It teaches you a little bit of patience and I guess just the will to keep on fighting.

I mean, that's what I'd like to do. But I don't know how that will play out. I haven't been told no. I haven't been told yes. It's kind of just a day-to-day thing. I know there will be a point where I'll be able to decide that. I'm not there yet. So I just continue to work toward that, knowing that if I can get it done, that would be awesome. And if I can't, I'd be willing to accept that fact knowing that I gave everything I could to get there.

On being a high-level professional athlete who has spent the last year of his life trying to figure out how to run again ...

I think the competitor in me drives me. You accept the challenge. And as a competitor, when you get challenged, you work toward it. You do anything you can to accept the challenge and conquer the challenge. So that's the approach I think I've accepted and taken throughout the entire thing. This is just another challenge. Maybe looked at it as a little odd. But that's how I get through it. That's how I approach every single day. I was just in there just doing little foot (raises). In rehab. Just 10 minutes ago. Foot exercises. Just the monotony of trying to raise my foot and strengthen it. Things like that. It's challenging every single day. And it's something I'll continue to do.

On his newfound appreciation for everyday normalcy ...

I'll tell what you, there are some things in your normal life that you take for granted: walking, getting in and out of the shower, going to the bathroom. Everyday things what we as people do. It gives you perspective on all of that. I've been connected with a couple people that had similar injuries to me and it went the opposite way. It just makes you appreciate things. To see where I'm at now compared to where I was even six months ago, I'm just very thankful.

On his push to get himself back to be able to play with his kids as much as possible ...

That was my No. 1 goal as I spoke with all my doctors. As much as I wanted to play football and do want to play football, the main thing was can I enjoy everyday life with my kids? Can I run around in the backyard, throw the football, kick a soccer ball? And be able to beat them until they at least get into high school — because that's what I'm planning on doing. That was the main thing. And, yeah, they're already falling in line. I'm already able to do that, which for me, that's a win. So if I get to be able to do that for a very long time I'll be happy.

I had messed around (with the piano) some. And then after this, (I had) a little bit of time on my hands. I taught myself to play the guitar in college. And I had a piano at the house, so might as well see if we can get this done. It's good. I play a lot of Sam Hunt. I'm a huge Sam Hunt fan. I play that. Have you guys seen the movie "A Star Is Born" yet? (I've learned) a couple of those songs the last couple weeks. If I can sing, then I might have something going on here. But I can't sing very well. I can sing, just not in tune.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2017

Bears tight end Zach Miller dislocated his left knee and tore his popliteal artery on Oct. 29.

We talked all night. Yeah. I told him, 'Anything you need, I've got your back.' If you want to generalize it, that was it. I reached out to see how it was initially and we talked. And then through text all night long up until this morning again. That was just to be a friend. That's my guy. He knows it.

We flew out to North Carolina two years ago and had surgery on the same day. In the same room. Split by the curtain. We woke up at the same time like 'Heeeeeey. How are you doing over there?' For me that was my Lisfranc (foot ligament). And Kyle was doing his ankle. So that was just making sure he's good and seeing where he's at mentally. And you get to a point where, with Kyle, he has had to grind back with everything he went through, playing well, getting back to where you want to be. And then, bang. That can be deflating.

On his relationship with California teenager Alex Ruiz, who dislocated his knee playing football weeks before Miller did and ultimately had his leg amputated ...

We are in contact probably weekly. That's been everything. Calls, texts, FaceTime. Yeah. A lot of communication with him. Just because A) we're going through the same thing. And B) I was leaning on him because it happened to him earlier. So I know that as much as people want to say that I was a big help to him, he was probably an even bigger help to me. I mean, you've got a 33-year-old man talking to a 16-year-old kid asking him all these questions. 'Hey how did this feel? How did this go? What's up with your nerves?' Just the general questions we were going through. I wasn't too proud to ask a young man how he felt or how he was dealing with the situation. And I think in turn it probably helped him open up and talk about it. And accept it. And it helped us work through the same things on a day-to-day basis.

SETH WENIG/AP

National Hockey League commissioner Gary Bettman, right, and James Murren, CEO of MGM Resorts International, announced a multiyear agreement Monday.

NHL IS BETTING ON BENEFITS OF DATA

League will partner with MGM for sports gambling, becoming second major sport to strike a deal with a casino

By Denis Gorman | Associated Press

NEW YORK — The NHL announced a multiyear agreement Monday to provide MGM Resorts International with data for use in betting, the second major U.S. professional sports league to strike a deal with the casino giant since the Supreme Court opened the way for expanded gambling last spring.

Las Vegas-based MGM is the league's first official sports betting partner, just as it is with the NBA and WNBA. That deal was reached in July.

As part of the agreement, MGM gains access to proprietary NHL data that could eventually include puck and player tracking information once that goes through a testing phase. Access to that data will allow MGM to provide customized game details along with betting opportunities for U.S. customers where gambling is legally available.

The data will not be exclusive to MGM. The NHL is not getting a cut of gambling profits, but other terms were not disclosed.

> "We have no concerns about the integrity of our game, of our players, our officials. We've never had an issue. Secondly, the integrity of the sports betting landscape is just as important to the bookmakers."
> — NHL executive vice president and chief revenue officer Keith Wachtel

"The new sports betting landscape presents a unique opportunity for fan engagement utilizing technology and data that are exclusive to our league," NHL Commissioner Gary Bettman said. "Fan engagement, technological advancement and innovation are paramount to our progressive approach and will be at the forefront of everything we do."

MGM and other casino operators are moving aggressively to capitalize on the U.S. sports betting market, which is expanding after the Supreme Court ruled in May that states could take sports bets if they wanted. MGM has made a series of significant moves, including the multiyear deal with the NBA and WNBA.

Bettman and MGM Resorts Chairman and CEO Jim Murren said the NHL's agreement differs from that with the NBA.

"I'm led to believe by Jim that our deal is more encompassing and includes basic sponsorship that we have together," Bettman said.

The deal will include promotions during the league's marquee events, including the Stanley Cup playoffs, the All-Star game and the Winter Classic.

"We couldn't be more excited to enter into this historic partnership with the NHL," Murren said.

Bettman said player tracking will be implemented next season.

"That's been the plan," he said. "While we've tested it in some forms at the World Cup, that was 16 games in two weeks at one arena. Having to scale this for 1,271 regular season games in 31 arenas is a little bit harder."

There are no plans to change the way teams report player injuries, which are often described only in generic terms like upper-body or lower-body.

"Our players tend to play hurt," Bettman said. "I'm not sure we have any interest in changing our reports. We're comfortable with the way things are because it's important to the well-being of our players. We don't want them targeted when they're playing injured."

Bettman said the league and the NHL Players' Association will split the "fixed revenue" generated by the partnership with MGM, as the collective bargaining agreement calls for. Bettman cited a report commissioned by the American Gaming Association that estimated expanded sports betting could increase league revenue by more than $200 million.

Bettman also said the deal with MGM would not preclude teams from striking deals with individual sports books. Earlier this year, bookmaker William Hill struck deals to do promotional work and post odds at the home arenas of the Las Vegas Golden Knights and the New Jersey Devils.

NHL executive vice president and chief revenue officer Keith Wachtel said being able to provide enhanced data and analytics to MGM will allow "some creative and unique things that don't really exist in the sport right now."

"The more data and analytics that a gaming operator can have, the better it will be in enabling them to set odds," Wachtel told The Associated Press. "Whether or not they're using the data for actual purposes of creating prop bets and things like that certainly is something (that's possible). But more importantly, they're going to use it to be able to set odds and proper odds that they're going to be able to create."

In an email to The Associated Press, NHL Deputy Commissioner Bill Daly said MGM "will access (NHL data) through our third party vendor, SportRadar. That may or may not change in the future." SportRadar also provides NBA data.

Some leagues, including Major League Baseball and the NBA, had called for an "integrity fee" — essentially, states would give leagues a cut of the money wagered on their games to pay for expanded monitoring of suspicious betting and to protect intellectual property. The effort has been largely unsuccessful thus far.

"We have no concerns about the integrity of our game, of our players, our officials," Wachtel said. "We've never had an issue. Secondly, the integrity of the sports betting landscape is just as important to the bookmakers, which is why the NHL does not have a discussion and we don't talk about this notion of integrity fees."

Bettman dismissed concerns that NHL players could be persuaded to gamble on or even throw games.

"We monitor all of the games," said Bettman. "Through third party resources. We watch what goes on, whether or not betting lines shift and the like. It hasn't been an issue and we don't anticipate it being an issue."

Scott Butera, MGM Resorts' president of interactive gaming and a former Arena Football League commissioner, outlined how the puck and playing tracking data will help bettors.

"If I know one player is faster than the other, if I know one expends less energy than the other, if I know one has a faster slap shot than the other, it gives me information that I can bet," he said. "If I'm betting on who will score the most goals, I have that tool. Ultimately when enough data is collected on that, we'll be able to actually bet on that data itself. So you could have a bet on which player's going to have the highest average slap shot throughout the game."

Butera said MGM believes expanded sports betting will eventually be available in 25 to 30 states. The 24 U.S.-based NHL teams play in 18 different states, with seven more in Canada, which does not allow single game betting.

The league is moving toward adding a 32nd team, in Seattle in what would be its 19th state (Washington).

Bettman said the seven Canadian teams "have been working with the lotteries who control gambling on a provincial basis."

"I think that will continue," he said. "I know there have been a lot of discussions about going to single game betting as opposed to parlay, which is what currently exists. And as the law evolves, you will see our evolution in dealing with it."

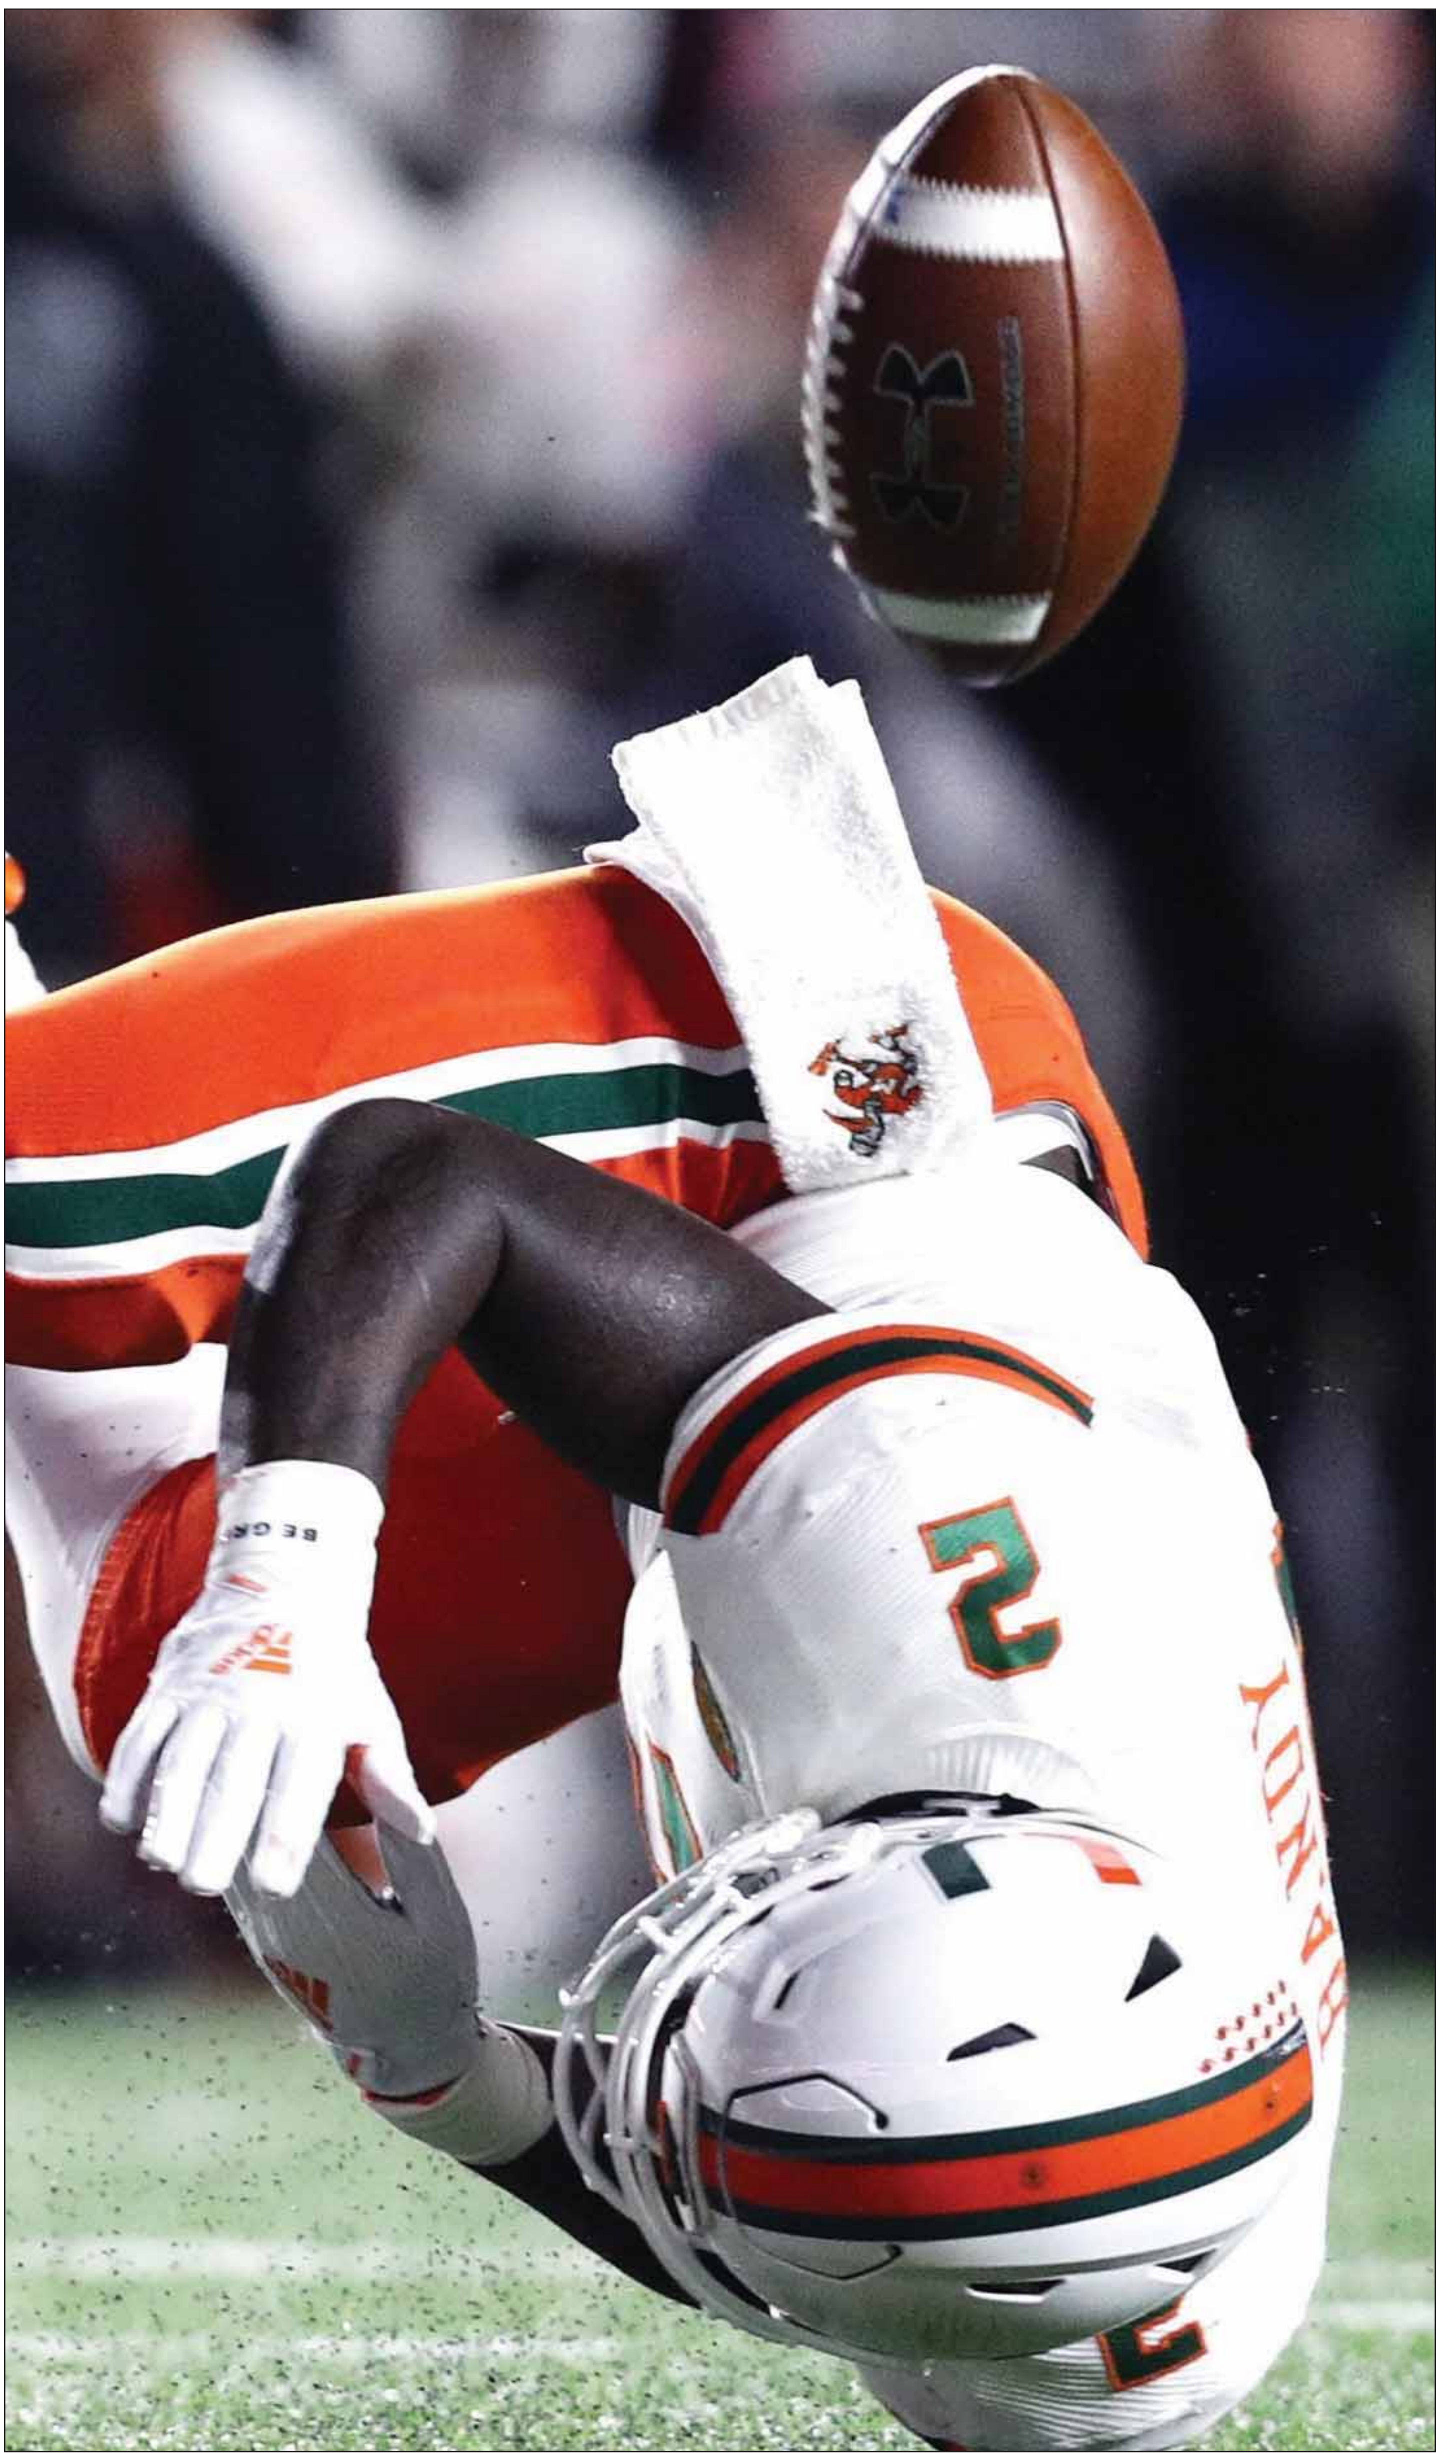
Miami Hurricanes looks to find winning ways after Boston College loss

By Hal Habib
Palm Beach Post



MADDIE MEYER/GETTY

Trajan Bandy of the Hurricanes dives for an incomplete pass at Alumni Stadium on October 26 in Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts.

CHESNUT HILL, Mass. — Every now and then, one loss in the standings feels like more than just one loss in the locker room.

The University of Miami's 27-14 loss to Boston College on Friday night was one of those times.

It was the second consecutive defeat for the Hurricanes. It may be a critical blow to their hopes of winning the ACC Coastal Division. And it came on a night in which their proud defense was manhandled for a season-worst 426 yards.

About a year ago, the Hurricanes were cruising along at 10-0 and fans were beaming about how The U was back.

Now?

"We've got to stop the bleeding," quarterback Malik Rosier said.

Make no mistake: The Hurricanes know that's not going to be easy.

"Disappointment for some guys, I feel like it's all the way through the roof," linebacker Zach McCloud said. "And others, I don't know how they feel. I can't really gauge everybody on the team but some guys, you can see it on their faces. I'm sure everybody has it in the pit of their stomach."

As much as Rosier said this is no time to point fingers, running back DeeJay Dallas said there's a reason the Hurricanes aren't executing the way they can.

"I don't like making excuses but if you look at who's playing, you've got the likes of Mark Pope and Dee Wiggins," Dallas said of two freshman receivers. "You've got guys that haven't played a lot of football. Across the country you've got old teams. We've just got a young team."

And a team that's 5-3 overall and 2-2 in the ACC, trailing Virginia Tech and Virginia, both 3-1 in the conference. The Cavaliers also have just beaten UM 16-13.

"You never know what can happen," UM coach Mark Richt said. "Gosh, if you watch some of the games so far in our Coastal Division, everybody has taken turns beating each other. So, there's certainly still hope."

Breaking down the defeat: Did they forget how to play defense in Miami? A day after the Dolphins' defense continued to be in a daze, South Florida football fans tuned in thinking they could at least count on a Hurricanes defense ranked second in the country.

Wrong.

The Eagles scored on all three of their opening possessions, embarrassing UM with a 20-play, 79-yard drive that consumed 7:04. At least the only damage from that drive was a field goal, but by then BC was up 17-7.

The saving grace for the Hurricanes was that UM's offense was able to finally respond with a sustained drive of its own. At that point, it was almost a tossup on what was the most important result of that drive: UM pulling within 17-14 or finally giving the defense a chance to catch its breath. A three-and-out at that point could have opened floodgates.

"They went with tempo and a little razzle-dazzle and they had good runners," Richt said. "Quarterback threw the ball well and he runs the ball well too. He had a really good plan and it took us a while to get it slowed down a little bit."

Quarterback question rears its head: In the first half, Rosier played like a senior. He didn't put up stunning statistics but took care of the ball, made smart choices on when to run and played like a leader.

Then, the second half happened.

Two interceptions handed the Eagles 10 points inside 82 seconds.

Rosier had an excuse on the first interception. He was hit by linebacker Max Richardson as he released the ball, setting off a wild scene.

The ball popped straight up, recording terrific hang time. Defensive end Wyatt Ray had a shot at it. So did receiver Michael Harley. Finally, cornerback Hamp Cheevers — from, of all places, just outside Gainesville — did clutch it, giving the Eagles the ball on the UM 14 and setting up a field goal.

Rosier had no excuse on the next series, which also handed BC the ball on the UM 14. He threw into double coverage while looking for Jeff Thomas. Cornerback Taj-Amir Torres intercepted, and one play later, running back AJ Dillon coasted into the end zone for a 27-14 lead.

"He just made a great break," Rosier said of Torres. "I asked Jeff if he wasn't undercut, would you have made the catch? He goes, 'Yeah.' "

Rosier went 18-of-35 for 149 yards with one touchdown and two interceptions. He ran 14 times for 71 yards.

You could almost hear grumbles of UM fans clamoring for freshman N'Kosi Perry, who had been handed the starting job earlier this season but couldn't hold onto it. Perry also made news last week by appearing in a spoof video on social media with a wad of cash.

Richt said the tight game didn't allow for Perry to play Friday.

"We had plans to get him in there but it was just one of those games we couldn't do it," Richt said. "I thought Malik was playing well and the game, we were behind and we needed to battle and get back in it and we did. We got within three and then got within six. Even when it was 13, we got the ball on the 9 at the turn of the fourth quarter. You score right there and it's a whole new ballgame."

> "You never know what can happen. Gosh, if you watch some of the games so far in our Coastal Division, everybody has taken turns beating each other. So, there's certainly still hope."
> — UM coach Mark Richt

The loss likely was sealed in that sequence. Facing fourth-and-goal from the 3 early in the fourth quarter, Rosier attempted to find Darrell Langham in the end zone, but Will Harris smacked into Langham -- apparently helmet to helmet -- as Torres broke up the pass. Harris survived a replay review to see if he was guilty of targeting.

"I really don't understand the targeting rule very good," Richt said. "Because if there ever was one, sure looked like it to me."

On second thought Early in the week, UM linebacker Shaq Quarterman said "I'm not really worried" about facing Dillon.

He should have been.

Dillon, the ACC rushing leader, is a 6-foot, 245-pound load who dragged Hurricanes all over the field. Dillon, a sophomore, finished with 32 carries for 149 yards (a 4.7 average) and one touchdown.

Dillon's best effort came in the second quarter when he started right but ran into a wall. After shoving one of his own blockers out of this way, Dillon decided to explore what was happening to the left. That cutback nearly toasted the entire defense. It faked out cornerback Michael Jackson, who whiffed on a tackle. Dillon's 20-yard run to the UM 3 set up a field goal.

"We knew what to expect from him," McCloud said. "He's a hard runner."

Inspector Gadget vs. Inspector Gadget: At one point of the first quarter, Jeff Smith had more passing yards for Boston College than Rosier did. The problem: Smith is a wide receiver, and his passes churned out 58 yards of razzle-dazzle.

On one hand, you might say it showed respect for UM that BC felt it had to go that route. On the other hand, those plays completely fooled the Hurricanes, which had to leave coordinator Manny Diaz steaming.

Richt, proving two can play that game, had Dallas throw a pass after catching a lateral from Rosier, but it was incomplete. Richt dug into his bag of tricks again, having CHDallas take a direct snap in the Wildcat, then run 10 yards for a TD to make it 17-14 at halftime.

In terms of remarkable moments, they all took a backseat to what another guy did for BC. During a second-quarter timeout, a former BC quarterback named Doug Flutie appeared on the field, drawing huge applause. His "Hail Flutie" claim to fame, of course, came against UM.

Special night at BC: Boston College designated this game as its annual "Red Bandanna Night," honoring Welles Crowther, a former Eagles lacrosse player who was credited with saving at least a dozen lives on Sept. 11, 2001, at the World Trade Center.

Crowther died when the South Tower collapsed.

Crowther's trademark was wearing a red bandanna, so officials passed out red bandannas to fans entering the stadium. His parents were given a loud ovation and the Eagles continued a tradition of playing well on Red Bandanna Night.

This was a night when New England sports fans had something else on their minds. Something about the Red Sox playing in the World Series on TV.

It also was a night when the wind chill was in the upper 30s.

So when fans could have sat in warm living rooms and flipped back and forth between college football and the World Series, 41,892 decided they'd rather freeze and support their Eagles.

Good sports fans, they are.

MUSIC'S NEWEST HIGH-TONED HOME

A grand launch for DePaul University's Holtschneider Performance Center

Howard Reich
On Music

When DePaul University's School of Music unveils its $98 million Holtschneider Performance Center at 2330 N. Halsted St. on Thursday, the school's students and faculty won't be the only beneficiaries.

For Chicagoans will be able to partake of a spacious new musical nexus encompassing four performance halls, each with a character of its own. The music-making launches with Unveiled, an 11-day festival of classical music and jazz offering a taste of what lies ahead, with performances by violinist Itzhak Perlman, soprano Ana Maria Martinez, percussionist Evelyn Glennie, the Orpheus Chamber Orchestra, trumpeter Nicholas Payton and others.

In effect, DePaul's new arts center stands to be a boon to anyone who wishes to hear major artists in cutting-edge facilities.

"It means we can bring in world-class musicians," says music school dean Ronald Caltabiano.

"We can have more than one thing happening at once," he adds, referring to the quartet of soundproof venues.

"It's a place that welcomes the community. We finally have something where we can host national and international conventions of particular musicians."

So the center, named for former DePaul president Rev. Dennis Holtschneider, instantly makes the corner of Fullerton Avenue and Halsted Street something more than a hub of dining and nightlife: Sophisticated music now has a high-toned home there.

True, DePaul long has offered musical performances on its Lincoln Park campus, but not in a venue nearly so technologically advanced and aesthetically sleek. Or, as Caltabiano concisely puts it, the place is "beautiful, elegant and not even a touch opulent — that's DePaul."

Meaning that although the concert spaces come equipped with computer-controlled acoustic systems designed to meet wide-ranging musical needs,

Jazz fan's memories from Copenhagen to Chicago

By Chris Jones

Billie Holiday was dead at the age of 44. Had Lady Day moved to Europe like Nina Simone, Dexter Gordon and so many of her other peers, would her life story have had a different ending?

That's certainly the opinion of Helene, the titular Lady in Denmark in playwright Dael Orlandersmith's new one-character play of the same name. Helene, who is performed in this Goodman Theatre world premiere by the very capable Linda Gehringer, is a fictional creation, albeit with a basis in Holiday's biography. In her 1956 autobiography, "Lady Sings the Blues," Holiday writes of her rapturous reception in Copenhagen on her 1954 European tour, a monthlong, 60-city voyage ending in London's Royal Albert Hall. She specifically mentions meeting a Danish doctor and his 12-year-old

Son of comedy pros makes his own laughs on the Zanies stage

Bert Haas has arguable heard more jokes than anyone on this planet. Since 1980, with only a reluctant interlude of a few years when he unsatisfactorily tested other careers, he has worked at Zanies, the venerable and still wildly popular chain of comedy clubs that began in a former strip club on Wells Street in 1978.

He started as a waiter but — "because I was terrible at that job," he says — soon became a manager and has for many years been the executive vice president of the laugh-filled operation. He has never felt the urge to perform, but so much a part of the comedy world is he that when it came time for him to take a bride, as he did in November 1987 when he married Sally Edwards, a talented stand-up comic.

They are married still, the parents of three adult children. The eldest, Brendan, is getting his Ph.D. in astrophysics at Washington University in St. Louis. The youngest, Christine, a graduate of the University of San Francisco with a degree in architecture, has worked for Habitat for Humanity and is now living in Australia and working with at-risk youth.

Comic Steven Haas is the son of Bert Haas, Zanies executive vice president, and Sally Edwards, a stand-up comic herself.

Education is vital in this family. Haas is a graduate of Vanderbilt University with a degree in economics and German. Edwards graduated from Denison University with a degree in psychology.

Middle child, Steven, decided to join the family business. He graduated from Columbia College with a degree in television production and has for some years been living in Los Angeles, pursuing a screenwriting and filmmaking career. But a few weeks ago he was on the stage at the Zanies Wells Street club, doing stand-up, that precarious comedic form.

"I did not grow up in the back of the club," he said while in town. "I think my parents would bring me to one of the clubs every once in a while when I was very young but that was a rarity. I would have to think that comedy came into my early life on a subconscious level."

Demi Moore opens up about recovery

Demi Moore has come a long way since she first became a star with her career-making turn in 1985's "St. Elmo's Fire."

It was early in her career, she says, that she found recovery. "I was spiraling down a path of real self-destruction, and no matter what success I had I just never felt good enough," Moore said Saturday at the Beverly Hilton Hotel, where she was honored with the Woman of the Year Award by Los Angeles-based women's recovery center and sober living program Peggy Albrecht Friendly House.

Moore went on to say, "Life is certainly not a straight line, and I think everybody here has dealt with not feeling good enough at some point in their lives. I know that in a moment of great struggle for me, I reached out to a wise teacher and I expressed my fear that I wasn't good enough and she said, 'You will never be good enough, but you can know the value of your worth. Put down the measuring stick.'

"So today," Moore concluded, "I put down the measuring stick and I thank you for this beautiful acknowledgment and the opportunity to know the value of my worth."

The annual luncheon was hosted by Amber Valetta and also included an award for interventionist Dr. Louise Stanger.

Rock-Hart collaboration: Universal is in negotiations to sign Chris Rock, above, to direct Kevin Hart in the comedy movie "Co-Parenting." The project is based on an original idea by Rock and Hart. Hart will portray a stay-at-home dad who raises the kids while his CEO wife serves as the breadwinner and finds himself in turmoil when his wife decides to ditch him, leading to a bitter divorce and custody battle.

Rapper released from hospital: Management for rapper Yella Beezy says he's out of the hospital after being shot three times on a highway in the Dallas area. Police say the rapper, whose legal name is Deandre Conway, was driving on the Sam Rayburn Tollway in Lewisville early Oct. 14 when someone in a vehicle pulled up next to him and opened fire. Yella Beezy opened for Beyonce and Jay-Z when their tour stopped in North Texas in September.

'Vandal' canceled: "American Vandal" has been canceled at Netflix. The half-hour mockumentary series launched its second season in September. A person with knowledge of the situation said that other platforms have expressed interest in continuing the series. "We're grateful to the creators, writers, cast and crew for bringing their innovative comedy to Netflix," the streaming service said.

Oct. 30 birthdays: Actor Henry Winkler is 73. Actor Harry Hamlin is 67. Actor Kevin Pollak is 61. Actor Matthew Morrison is 40. Actress Janel Parrish is 30.

ASK AMY

Abused siblings want to speak out

Dear Amy: My siblings recently disclosed that our mother subjected them to sexual, mental and physical abuse. As a child, I was physically and mentally abused by her, but I always assumed I was the sole focus of her ire. I moved out of the house the day after high school graduation. I no longer have any contact with her.

One of my siblings has informed me that after I left home, my mother turned her abuse toward my siblings. The worst of the abuse involved two of my sisters, who were sexually assaulted by friends of my mother's. My mother condoned this. No one ever went to the police.

Hearing that my mother's behavior escalated after I left home causes me great guilt for not having been there for my siblings. I am at a loss for the next steps to take.

One of my sisters has come to me for help with recovering from the trauma of her childhood. I've thought about talking with the police. However, the assaults were over 30 years ago, and the statute of limitations has passed.

Our mother is 78, and she is active in her church, where she probably has contact with children. Confronting her will likely achieve nothing. What should I do?

— Guilty

Dear Guilty: First, you should create a safe and open space where your siblings can tell their stories, if they want to (some might not want to talk about this). Tell them you believe them, and emotionally hold them close. Your own experience might make this sort of intimacy challenging, but now is the time to "come home," figuratively, to be the best and most loving version of yourself that you can be.

If a sister wants to go to the police, go with her, regardless of the statute of limitations. And yes, confront your mother. If being in her presence would traumatize you, then write her a letter, as individuals or as a group. If you believe she is a potential danger to any children, then you are duty-bound to report this to her church clergy and the police. But if your main impulse is to ruin her reputation in her church community, then I don't believe you should do so.

RAINN.org offers a 24-hour telephone hotline (800-656-4673), with an online chat option. Contact a RAINN (Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network) counselor for advice and local services.

Dear Amy: My daughter is getting married. We are not allowing "plus-ones" because of the expense. Invites were sent with RSVP cards stating the number of seats reserved for each family. To my sister and her family, I noted that we had four seats reserved for their family of four.

In the response card, guests were simply supposed to state whether all the guests were coming or fill in the number that would be attending, if not everyone could make it. My sister changed the number from four to five and added the name of my niece's college roommate, whom I don't even know. How do I clear this up with her? I thought my RSVP card would make this clear.

— Unsure Sister

Dear Unsure: It's called a telephone. You use it, immediately, to communicate with your sister about her misunderstanding. You say, "Hi, I just received your RSVP card and I see that you have added a person. Unfortunately, we can't add any guests. We're excited to see you, Wayne and the kids."

Your sister has already leapt over a (nicely engraved) boundary, so she will probably try to overpower you in this context, too. Just respond firmly, consistently and politely. Repeat after me: Her problem (wanting her nearly grown daughter to have a play date at a family wedding) is not your problem.

Dear Amy: I just wanted to send some hugs to "Sad Mom," who is raising a toddler and a newborn. My own kids were 18 months apart, and those early months were rough. I felt like a robot most days.

But now my kids are grown, productive adults and I look back on those difficult days fondly.

We've all been there: "Sad" should lean on dad, grandparents, and aunts and uncles to give her some rest. But she's got this — because it turned out that I did, too!

— Happy Mom

Dear Happy: Help, support and encouragement are exactly what this mom needs.

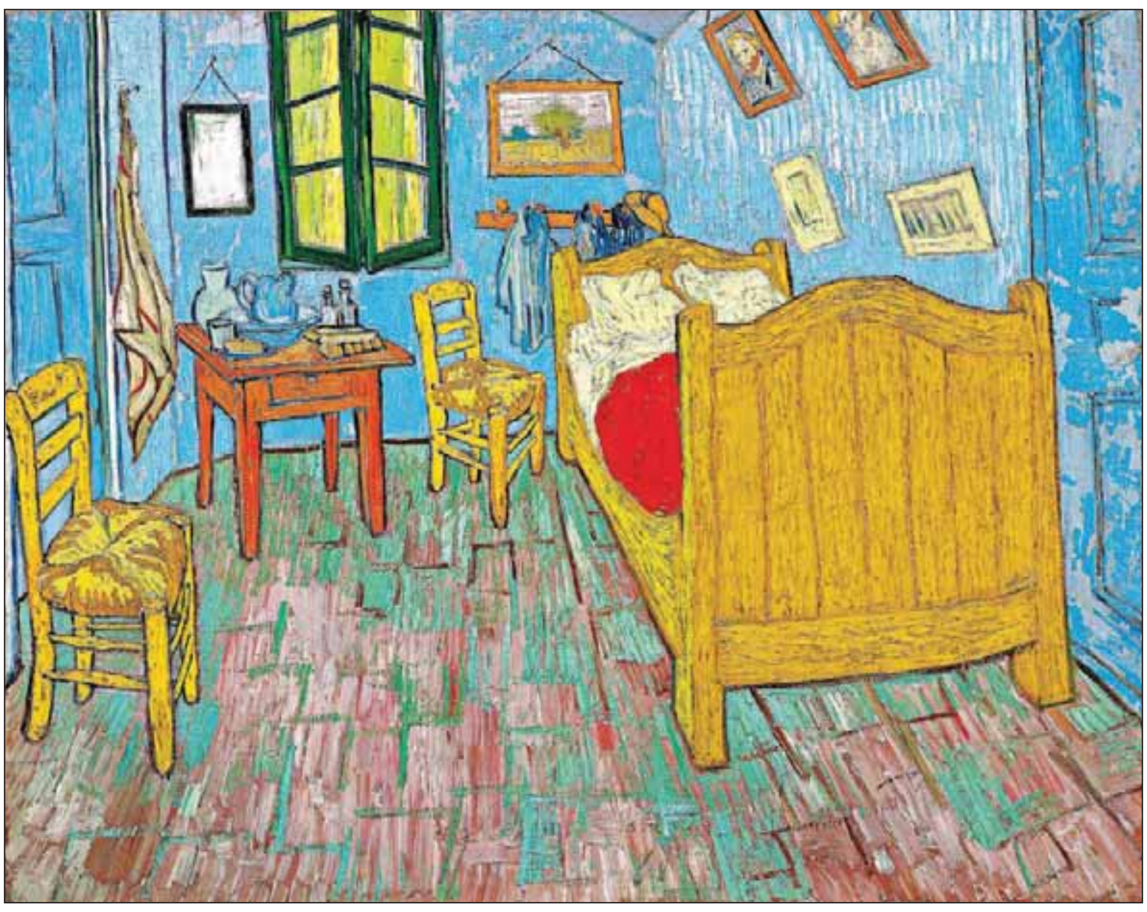
Art Institute goes 'open access' with tens of thousands of images

By Steve Johnson
Chicago Tribune



ART INSTITUTE OF CHICAGO

Vincent Van Gogh's "The Bedroom" is one of the Art Institute's pieces now in the public domain.

Van Gogh's "The Bedroom" is now the background image on my home desktop computer, and it not only looks beautiful in its high-resolution glory, it also subtly reminds me to not isolate myself from my friends.

All it took was going to the Art Institute's website, downloading a detailed photograph of the iconic painting that is a pillar in the museum's collection, and making the iMac make me a visual sophisticate.

I could have done the same — and probably will, after I tire of that twisted little bed — with Renoir's "Two Sisters," Seurat's "A Sunday on La Grande Jatte" or tens of thousands of other artworks that are both in the museum's collection and in the public domain.

It's a shift in art propagation strategy at the venerable Michigan Avenue treasure temple that began earlier this week, with the easily downloadable images being featured on a redesigned, and much more generally inviting, website at www.artic.edu.

Many revered AIC paintings, to be sure, are not public domain: Edward Hopper's "Nighthawks" and Grant Wood's "American Gothic" to name two.

But the ones that are — Manet, Monet, Caillebotte, to keep rolling in the museum's signature genres of impressionism and post-impressionism — are now up there and explicitly covered by a Creative Commons Zero license.

What the new approach, dubbed "open access," amounts to is the museum saying: Take this image of this work, do what you will with it, spread it far and spread it wide.

"If you are creatively inspired, you can work with it. You can use it for any particular reason," said Michael Neault, AIC's executive creative director of experience design and the guiding hand behind the three-year website overhaul process, the first redesign in six years. "We wanted to get our collection into the hands of more people."

Creative Commons Zero, or CC0, is the least restrictive of licenses offered by the global nonprofit dedicated to making copyright and content sharing on the web more clear.

"No rights reserved," is Creative Commons' shorthand explanation of what the license means. It goes on to explain that the museum is "waiving all ... rights to the work worldwide ... You can copy, modify, distribute and perform the work, even for commercial purposes, all without asking permission."

Previously, people who wanted to download images of public domain art from the museum would have to contact the museum's "image licensing team" first, said a spokeswoman.

A simple way to check which works qualify is to call them up under the new, more prominent "The Collection" tab on the site, Neault said. If there's a download button, then you are a click away from having a high-resolution image — a 3.8 MB file size for "The Bedroom," for instance — reside on your device. You can also simply filter for "public domain."

The Art Institute is following the path of other museums that have gone to open access and seen increased traffic associated with the moves, Neault said. He cited the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

On the new site, the museum has also "enhanced the image viewing capabilities on object pages, which means that you can see much greater detail on objects than before," Neault wrote in an explanatory blog post. "Check out the paint strokes in Van Gogh's 'The Bedroom,' the charcoal details on Charles White's "Harvest Talk," or the synaesthetic richness of Georgia O'Keeffe's 'Blue and Green Music.' "

The new website as a whole aims to promote more open access to the museum, and it does so with "responsive design" that works across different types of devices. The key organizing tabs Visit, Exhibitions & Events, and The Collection top every page, as does the museum's hours.

With an esthetic aiming for "modern but timeless," Neault said "the home page is almost like opening a big window onto all of the events, the programs, the collection."

It is hard to doubt that. Almost every square inch of the walls at the Zanies Chicago club is covered with photographs and paintings of the thousands of comics who have appeared on its 8-by-15-foot stage. From that stage millions, yes millions, of one-liners and observations have filled the air. It is, as Jay Leno once told me, "the perfect comedy club." So perhaps Steven's career choice was inescapable.

"I blame it all on Sally," says husband/father Bert, with a broad smile. "She was performing, even did a Showtime special, into her eight month of pregnancy with Steven and she will tell me that as a result his comedic timing comes directly from her. He was always naturally funny. He understood joke structure when he was four."

Steven says, also with a broad smile, "Well, that's very nice of my dad."

Steven's parents have watched him perform on stage often, doing so each time with what they call a combination or "pride and anxiety."

"He is very good," says Bert. "I tell you honestly, he's the funniest person I have ever known."

The son says, "I have wanted to write comedy since I was in high school. I was very quiet, making jokes in the back row of class. But I was probably influenced more by 'The Simpsons' than by any specific stand-up, though I admire so many."

Stand-up is "just one aspect of my comedic world," and a look at his website, stevenhaascomedian.com displays a full picture, telling of awards he has won for his writing and offering clips of his other work. He proudly labels himself a "clean comedian," meaning he avoids profanity and scatological material. He is the co-creator of the YouTube channel "Cow Clown," which delivers bi-weekly animated sketches, and he has created a web series called "Life Pro Tips with Steven."

Not yet 30 years old, he is what he calls an "observational, autobiographical comic," and he will occasionally use stories about his parents in his routines.

"They have always been very supportive," he says. "They will offer some advice, especially my mom, if they think I need it. Of course, I listen."

That's been essential and healthy, for his parents know better than most that the comedy world is a tough and harsh place. Both have seen all manner of talents crash and burn over the decades.

As Jerry Seinfeld, a Zanies regular before, well you know, told the New York Times on Sunday, "I started with hundreds of guys and women, 99 percent are gone. And some of them were great. Why are they gone? Every reason you can name. Every human frailty there is. Every hairline crack in your personality gets pulled on — let's see if we can make it a gash and then pull you into it. That's what happens in stand-up."

Seinfeld went on to say, "The thing about being in comedy is, 'We hate you, get off the stage' is what we're used to. Every comedian has that as part of their life. Getting booed, yelled at, hated. So you almost don't notice it. You either have the skin for it or you don't."

Haas obviously does. His is a nice young man, polite but with a devilish look in his eye. Having seen him first perform some years ago and listening to his material recently, I see a more self-assured comic with a deceptively simple but effective delivery and very solid material. It's easy to understand how he is able to successfully work the national college and comedy club circuit.

His mother Sally will still perform occasionally. She also gives motivational talks and is the author of many books, including the delightful book "Comedy Mom! My Funny Stand-up Life." In it, she writes lovingly about all three of her kids and this is some of what she writes about Steven:

"'Steven, you're looking at colleges. What are you thinking of studying?' "

"My son sat at his computer with a glum face and no expressions. He shrugged his shoulders, 'I don't know. Maybe history ... It just seems like the least of the evils.'

At that point, the mother said, "You know what to say to make people laugh. You're a natural. Let's look at some creative options."

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

there's nothing lavish about the place. Its clean lines, wide-open lobby and wood-paneled rooms place the focus on the music, not the venue.

We won't know how the place functions acoustically until the concertizing begins, of course, but the rehearsals I heard during a recent tour suggested that the place sounds as warm as it looks.

The centerpiece is the Mary Patricia Gannon Concert Hall, at 505 seats the largest of the listening rooms. Despite its shoebox design, it feels surprisingly intimate, all the more considering that its spacious stage can accommodate 135 instrumentalists or, for choral works, 90 instrumentalists and 60 vocalists.

The 140-seat Murray and Michele Allen Recital Hall feels quite open and airy for such a small space, in part because of its towering windows and two-story height (with a third story as adjustable acoustical space).

Still smaller is the 80-seat Brennan Family Recital Hall, the bustle of Halsted Street apparent through its windows, yet exterior noise does not seem to sneak in.

Finally, the 75-seat Mary A. Dempsey and Philip H. Corboy Jazz Hall is the only space in the building designed for a specific genre of music. Intimacy, appropriately enough, is the key feature here, the steeply raked seating giving visitors direct visual contact with musicians.

These are just the portions of the performance center that welcome the public. There's much more inside designed for students, including 80 practice rooms, rehearsal spaces of various sizes for instrumental and vocal ensembles, a high-tech recording studio, classrooms, outsized lockers (to store musical instruments) and so on.

For DePaul's School of Music, the emergence of the 185,000-square-foot complex "means that our students and our faculty have all the tools they need to accomplish their goals," says Caltabiano, listing a few: "State-of-the-art equipment, including video and audio recording in almost every space, rooms appropriate to specific ensembles, a specific jazz room.

"What's important to me is that the students don't have to worry about whether they'll find a practice room or whether there will be a good piano in the room or whether the room they're playing in has acoustics that will be reasonable for the instruments or their voices.

"Students should worry about their craft and their art, not their facilities."

In coming years, DePaul's students will have even less to worry about, for the university's board just approved construction to begin later this year on renovation of the school's Concert Hall, which will re-emerge 14 months later as the Sasha and Eugene Jarvis Opera Hall. It will include a "full-sized stage, orchestra pit, backstage facilities, theatrical lighting, dressing rooms, etc.," says Caltabiano.

In the final phase of this expansion, the current School of Music building will be modernized with acoustical soundproofing and other amenities.

For now, though, all eyes and ears are focused on the Holtschneider Performance Center, which Caltabiano sees as not just a home for the musical arts but a means of reaching out to Chicago.

"Even more important" than featuring marquee stars, the place "allows us to fulfill DePaul's mission of giving back to the community. So this is a rehearsal space where we rent it out to people who can afford it, but there are lots of groups that we can give the space to if they have no budget at all."

daughter at the airport: "They spoke English, not too good, but I could understand them. They told me how they loved me. Had every record I had ever made."

Suffering from a cold, Holiday — who did not make friends easily — ended up going to the fans' home for care and medicine, something she wrote would have been unimaginable in the United States: "If something like this happened at La Guardia people would say I am crazy."

No kidding.

Orlandersmith's play takes Holiday's documented visit to a Danish home and imagines the future life of the 12-year-old girl in the story, very reasonably assuming this child of a jazz-loving home in postwar Copenhagen became a lifelong Billie Holiday fan, which would make her eventual emigration to the United States more likely. Chicago — home of the Green Mill and all that — would surely have been an attractive destination.

And thus "Lady in Denmark," which opened Monday night, consists of Helene addressing the audience from designer Andrew Boyce's Prairie-influenced take on her home in Andersonville, the famously livable neighborhood on Chicago's North Side with its proud, if less and less visible, Scandinavian heritage.

Riffing on a small scene in a work of nonfiction is a fine way to start a play — Tom Stoppard started his "Rock 'N' Roll" that way. And this piece does a service by exploring the difference in how great African-American artists were treated in Europe in the first decades of the 20th century, in some cases literally saving their lives. I'm often struck by how many young people in Chicago have no idea of this history, not least because it does not fit into the usual binaries. And thus for Orlandersmith, a distinguished oral historian, to pay tribute in this way to an ordinary Danish family that cared for Holiday is generous, unifying and moving.

The main issue with the show at this juncture is that you are listening to one long monologue told almost entirely in the past tense — and that is not always as dramatic as it could be. It's not easy to grab hold of what is at stake in the present moment, what catharsis we may all experience together.

Orlandersmith, who works here with the director Chay Yew, has imagined the woman late in her life, following hard on the death of her husband, and the sections of the show that deal with pain and loss are very richly written. Still, it seems to me that "Lady in Denmark" is a fine idea that has yet to be fully theatricalized.

I don't know what rights issues might have been solved here, but there's no question that Holiday's music is insufficiently present. There are so many ways, both dramaturgical and technological, in which Holiday's music and biography could be better worked into a show that could and should be a tribute to the relationship between a great artist and fans from across the water who understood what those nearer home often failed to see.

Robyn explores sensuality and loss on the dance floor

By Greg Kot
Chicago Tribune

CHARLEY GALLAY/GETTY

Robyn performs on the first day of the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival in 2011 in Indio, Calif.

Robyn's last album was actually a trilogy of "Body Talk" EPs in 2010, which included an era-defining single, "Dancing on My Own." It was a club hit spackled with hurt, confusion, a sense of betrayal and yet — in spite of it all — resolve. She's invisible to the person that matters most to her, but she's still in motion, "giving it my all."

"Dancing on My Own" is one of the most intriguing pop songs of the last decade, and countless artists have borrowed from Robyn's emotionally nuanced brand of club music, from Solange to FKA Twigs. In a way, she's at the forefront of her own genre. As Robyn told the Tribune in a 2010 interview after "Dancing on My Own" dominated dance floors across the world, the club "is the place I have always gone to be myself. That's where my generation has gone to figure out things."

On "Honey" (Konichiwa/Interscope), her first album in eight years, she extends and expands the idea behind "Dancing on My Own." Dance music becomes a salve, a testament to the idea that rhythm-based music can be a kind of meditation or even a self-medication.

When she began focusing on making new music, the singer not only co-wrote all the music, she also played a bigger role in production, alongside Metronomy's Joseph Mount, Klas Ahlund and a handful of others.

Though the album is less immediate than "Body Talk," the choruses not as insistent, it exudes a hypnotic pull nonetheless: Though there's a disco pulse anchoring "Missing U," the airy spaciousness created by a matrix of hovering, undulating keyboards and the ache in Robyn's voice suggest emptiness. Love's a phantom. In "Human Being," she argues for her flesh-and-blood neediness in a numbed-out voice over rickety, reverberating percussion and ghostlike noises and backing vocals.

In the practically vaporous "Baby Forgive Me," the bass bubbles improbably, the organ plays a dirge and Robyn's voice whispers the hook in the listener's ear. The hook continues to reverberate through the next track, "Send to Robin Immediately," which offers its own spectral rewind of Lil Louis' 1989 house classic "French Kiss." In the brilliant title song, beats decay throughout the plush arrangement, and Robyn's voice becomes a texture: soft, insinuating. Though she does not make sex or sexiness an overt part of her image, the singer nonetheless crafts music that is undeniably sensual, and this track is Exhibit A.

Loss threatens to undo that sensuality, but it never can, which is why Robyn's music is so consistently alluring. The party plans being hatched in "Beach 2K20" are buried beneath a glitchy update of the rhythm track in Timmy Thomas' soul lament "Why Can't We Live Together." It feels like a five-minute palate cleanser, a farewell to summer's past, before the emancipatory "Ever Again."

Robyn vows she's "never gonna be brokenhearted ever again," her voice wispy yet resolute while gliding atop a buoyant bass line. She might be talking only to herself. No matter. She's ready to lose herself in the music again, a disco loner "giving it my all."

WATCH THIS: TUESDAY

Sara Gilbert

“The Conners” (7 p.m., ABC): Halloween was always a very special holiday on the original “Roseanne,” and it’s shaping up the same way on this spinoff, until a school e-mail announces that certain costumes — including Mark’s (Ames McNamara) outfit of choice — are banned, in the new episode “There Won’t Be Blood.” That news sparks a heated debate between Dan and Darlene (John Goodman, Sara Gilbert).

“The Nightmare Before Christmas” (5:45 p.m., FREE): And you thought it was disconcerting to see Christmas decorations in the stores at Halloween! Currently marking the 25th anniversary of its release, this surreal 1993 animated fantasy from Tim Burton (“Edward Scissorhands”) takes the overlapping holiday scenario to the extreme. The Pumpkin King, ruler of Halloween Town, hatches a plan to kidnap Santa Claus and put his own ghostly spin on the yuletide season.

“7 Little Johnstons” (7 p.m., 11 p.m., TLC): The biggest little family (to our knowledge) in the world opens their fourth season as Trent and Amber Johnston move their large brood into a new home, where they quickly discover their new residence isn’t exactly as perfect as it first appears to be (hence the title of the premiere, “Mo’ House, Mo’ Problems”). In other new developments this season, daughter Elizabeth is channeling her pain over a break-up into a local art show.

“Carrie” (7:30 p.m., 12:15 a.m., SUN): You don’t have to have been picked on in high school to love this 1976 horror classic, but having been there does add to the enjoyment of watching Carrie (Sissy Spacek) get her revenge for that bloody promnight prank. The winsome Texan earned her first Oscar nomination for her portrayal of the telekinetic teen whose mind is a terrible thing to be wasted by.

“Monster Encounters” (9 p.m., 12 a.m., TRAVEL): Wildlife expert Casey Anderson travels to remote corners of the Earth to track down its fiercest and most elusive creatures in this new unscripted series, which kicks off with “Bloodthirsty Bats,” a Halloween-friendly episode that sends Casey south of the border to Mexico in search of plasma-suckers.

“New Amsterdam” (9:01 p.m., NBC): Max (Ryan Eggold) is forced to deal with even more pressure as he undertakes his first annual gala hospital fundraiser, where family members join some of the doctors, in the new “Anthropocene.” Things remain tense between Bloom and Reynolds (Janet Montgomery, Jocko Sims), while Iggy (Tyler Labine) has to break some hard news to his daughter.

TALK SHOWS

“The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon” (10:34 p.m., NBC): Filmmaker Tyler Perry; actress Abbi Jacobson; actor Sunny Suljic; KISS performs.*

South
♠ A K 2
♥ A 10 9 7 5
♦ Void
♣ K 10 9 8 6

This is the first of many deals we'll be featuring from the recent World Championships held in Orlando, Florida. North opened a "modern" one no trump with a distribution that would have been unacceptable not too many years ago. It is considered routine in the modern game.

Not all tables reached the slam. Many pairs played game in no trump, hearts, or clubs. The tables that did reach six clubs saw a couple of interesting defensive points. Many players love to lead a singleton, if they have one. This is often wrong, especially into declarer's side suit, and would have been fatal on this deal. South would have had no trouble coming to 12 tricks after the lead of a heart, whether or not East splits his honors at trick one.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1NT	Pass	2♦*	Pass
2♥	Pass	3♣	Pass
3♦	Pass	4♣	Pass
5♣	Pass	6♣	All pass

Transfer to hearts

Opening lead: Six of ♠

Consider the play after a spade lead. Declarer will probably feel that he needs to set up his heart suit and is likely to win the opening lead in dummy and try to cash the ace and king of hearts. West will ruff and lead his remaining trump. When South plays low from dummy, East must withhold his jack. Declarer will then not be able to ruff two hearts in dummy without promoting the jack of clubs into a winner. This would be sharp defensive play.

Withholding the jack of clubs would also be important should West choose a trump for his opening lead instead of a spade.

TOM@TEN
WGN9
NEWS AT TEN

TUESDAY, OCT. 30 NORMAL HIGH: 57º NORMAL LOW: 39º RECORD HIGH: 85º (1950) RECORD LOW: 21º (1988)

Next weather system to turn Tuesday mild, wet

LOCAL FORECAST

HIGH	LOW
64	46

- Frontal system brings surge of mild air, a likelihood of rain.
- The day opens breezy and mild. Temps at sunrise hover in mid-upper 40s.
- Periods of sun early, give way to clouds. Skies turn cloudy W-N of city by late morning. Across rest of area through early afternoon.
- S winds become SW 20-25 mph and gusty.
- Mild. Highs from mid 50s far W-N, mid 60s S-E.
- Showers become likely mid-late afternoon and continue much of night. Some thunder possible.
- Rain exits most of the area toward daybreak.

NATIONAL FORECAST

Monday's highest: 94º at Death Valley, Calif.

Monday's lowest: 4º at Antero Reservoir, Colo.

SNOW RAIN

Early October was not only very warm; it also was wet. Temperatures in the 70s and 80s helped fuel thunderstorms on several occasions. The city's official rainfall totaled 4 inches by the 10th, representing 127 percent of the normal rainfall for all of October. Over the ensuing 19 days, the area has been frequented by cold, dry air masses and precipitation has been scant, totaling just over a third of an inch. That trend is about to change. Increasing southwest winds will sweep mild air across the region Tuesday, sending temperatures above 60 degrees across most of the metro area.

By late in the day, an approaching cold front is forecast to bring widespread showers. Forecasts suggest that a half to a full inch of rain will fall by Wednesday morning. Drier air will push rain out of the area by afternoon.

WEDNESDAY, OCT. 31

HIGH	LOW
56	43

Lingering showers S-E of the city exit the area early. Some sun emerges, but extensive mid-high level cloudiness remains. Not as mild. Temps peak in the mid 50s. N-NE winds 10-15 mph.

THURSDAY, NOV. 1

HIGH	LOW
53	41

Sun dims at times as a wave of low pressure develops along a front to the south, spreading high clouds across the area. Temps again reach the mid 50s. N-NE winds 10-15 mph. Clouds arrive overnight.

HIGH	LOW
50	37

Cold air aloft and a weak weather disturbance promote gray skies. Light showers/sprinkles possible. Chilly. Temps struggle to reach the upper 40s. Partial clearing at night. SE-E winds around 10 mph.

SATURDAY, NOV. 3

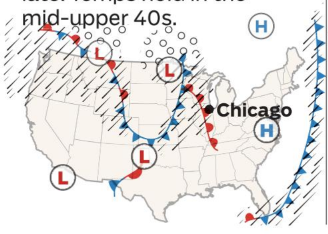
HIGH	LOW
51	44

High pressure ridging brings partial sun. Temps get closer to normal. Highs reach the low 50s. Light winds turn SE around 10 mph. Clouds thicken at night leading to a chance of rain toward morning.

SUNDAY, NOV. 4

HIGH	LOW
52	46

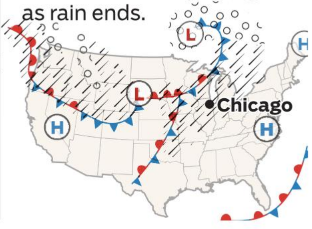
Windy with rain likely. Temps slowly climb to around 50 degrees. SE winds 15-25 mph become S late. Mostly cloudy, breezy and mild overnight. Showers arrive late. Temps hold in the mid-upper 40s.



MONDAY, NOV. 5

HIGH	LOW
54	48

Storm system enters upper Midwest. Strong S-SW winds gust over 30 mph allow temps to reach mid 50s despite extensive cloudiness and widespread showers. Blustery at night as rain ends.



ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

I recall an exceptionally warm Halloween in the early '90s. I went trick-or-treating with my daughter in shirt sleeves! Kids were in costume without wearing parkas! Could you research the high temperature for that day?

— Greg Prost

Dear Greg,

You are remembering the spectacularly mild 1990 Halloween when the mercury peaked at a balmy 73 degrees, steadily rising from a morning low of 42. It was a sunny day with brisk south-southwest winds, providing ideal weather for trick-or-treaters. It was the warmest Halloween in the 1990s, surpassing the 69-degree high in 1999 and the high of 65 in 1997. The city's warmest Halloween dates to 1950, when the mercury surged to 84. In sharp contrast, the city's coldest Halloween occurred nearly a century and a half ago in 1873, on a snowy day with a high of just 31 and a low of 23.
