Watchdogs want outside look at hospital

Increase in allegations of child sexual abuse at psychiatric facility

BY CHRISTY GUTOWSKI
Chicago Tribune

Top child welfare watchdogs want outside experts to take a closer look at conditions inside a prominent Uptown psychiatric hospital following a rise in complaints this year alleging that highly vulnerable kids were sexually and physically abused as a result of lax supervision and improper staff conduct.

Among the more serious allegations, two girls ages 7 and 12 accused a male hospital worker of touching them sexually. In another case, an 8-year-old boy told his mother he was battered by peers and exposed to two masturbating roommates.

Illinois Department of Children and Family Services leaders have rejected an independent investigation of Chicago Lakeshore Hospital. They say it would lead to unnecessary bureaucracy and instead have stepped up the number of hospital visits to ensure the well-being of young patients.

In addition to the abuse complaints, the hospital faces the loss of crucial federal funding after health officials questioned whether staff had correctly monitored patients, kept empty rooms locked and completed required documentation about medication in some patient files.

The past year has marked a troubled time for the hospital. The Tribune found that four lawsuits have been filed alleging adult patients were raped, as well as police investigations into hospital employee misconduct.

DCFS Inspector General Meryl Paniak and Cook County Public Guardian Charles Golbert said there are plenty of red flags that merit their concerns. They argue it's difficult for the child welfare agency to be impartial because it relies on the hospital to care for hundreds of low-income children with traumatic histories of abuse and neglect each year.

"I think the department has an inherent bias," Paniak said of the need for an independent probe. "My concern is (DCFS) hasn't done enough to ensure children are safe."

DCFS spokesman Neil Skene said the number of hotline complaints, while concerning, is not proof of

Cop with troubled past eyed in beating

No charges in Sept. attack on 2 men outside nightclub

BY JASON MEISNER
Chicago Tribune

Hours after the brutal beating of two men outside an Andersonville neighborhood nightclub, two friends of an off-duty Chicago police sergeant implicated him in the attack under questioning by a Chicago police detective.

The next day, a friend of the victims picked out Sgt. Eric Elkins "immediately and without hesitation" as the main assailant when detectives showed him a photo array of suspects, police reports show.

More than a month after that identification, though, no charges have been filed against the 19-year police veteran in the attack outside @mosphere, a gay club in the 5300 block of North Clark Street, on Sept. 29.

On Wednesday, Anthony Guglielmi, a Chicago police spokesman, called Elkins "a person of interest" in the beating and said the investigation "is still continuing."

"It's about building the strongest case possible," Guglielmi said. "It's a decision that will be made jointly with prosecutors."

The Cook County state's attorney's office declined to comment.

Attorney Timothy Cavanagh, who has filed a personal injury lawsuit in Cook County Circuit Court against Elkins, blasted the delay in bringing criminal charges despite the positive identification.

"It's a code of silence. They protect their own," Cavanagh said. "They had probable cause to arrest (Elkins) weeks ago. But because it's a Chicago police sergeant, nothing."

The beating left both victims with serious injuries — a compound leg fracture for John Sherwood and broken cheekbones and a perforated trachea for his longtime partner, Tom Stacha.

The suit also names as defendants an Oak Park

With political angst running high as midterms approach, voters on both sides worry:

WHAT IF THINGS DON'T GO MY WAY?

BY KATE THAYER
Chicago Tribune

Driven by fear and anger over the current political climate, 51-year-old Ann Walther of Lombard recently voted for the first time in her life.

"I am horrified," said the self-described Democrat, who voted early in the upcoming midterm election. She said she's offended by a lot of what she's seen and read from President Donald Trump, especially surrounding the recent confirmation hearings of U.S. Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh. And she's worried about the future of the Affordable Care Act. "It creates emotion in me. ... It's bringing up a whole bunch of things."

Melodee Yaklich of downstate Kewanee describes similar emotions, also citing the ACA and Kavanaugh hearings, but instead calls herself "a quiet Trump supporter."

During these past two years, Yaklich said the government has finally represented some of her interests, not just those of "California people" and the East Coast. "If the Democrats come roaring back and take the House ... I'll be tremendously underrepresented."

People on both sides of the political spectrum describe feelings of angst as the midterm elections approach. While Democrats are still reeling from Trump's victory, those who are more conservative say they still recall a long eight years of feeling unrepre-

County promoted worker after slurs about Mexicans

In 2016, reviewer advised firing; she consults on labor

BY GREGORY PRATT
Chicago Tribune

Cook County officials promoted a former Chicago alderman despite a hearing officer's previous recommendation that she be fired over allegations she made various offensive comments at work, including, "I can't stand these Mexicans," records and interviews show.

The county promoted former Ald. Vilma Colom in the spring to labor liaison officer, a $97,000-per-year position responsible for helping officials during collective bargaining. But in fall 2016, an internal investigation determined that she made "offensive comments about people from Mexico" while working as a labor hearing officer, records show. The reviewing official recommended that she be fired, but Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle's human resources chief instead ordered that Colom receive sensitivity training and monitoring.

Two workers at Stroger Hospital said they overheard Colom make offensive comments while on the phone in June 2016, according to records. One said Colom was speaking "loudly and with a clipped tone" and said, "These (expletive) Mexicans." The other allegedly heard Colom say, "There's too many of them over here, they need to go back across the Rio Grande," according to the report.

John Kass

A lesson in decency from the doctors in Pittsburgh

In this most indecent time of political rage and politically weaponized tragedy, America desperately needed to see decent people do the decent thing:

Like Dr. Jeffrey Cohen and other Jewish doctors and nurses who treated the wounded, raving and murderous anti-Semite who'd just slaughtered 11 people at the Tree of Life synagogue in Pittsburgh.

Cohen is a member of the Tree of Life synagogue. The killer — I will not mention his name — committed the worst act of anti-Semitic murder in American history.

Yet when brought to Allegheny General Hospital, Cohen and others — Jews and non-Jews — treated the hater with care.

"He got great care here," Cohen, president of Allegheny General, told a British TV station. "Many of the people who attended to him were Jewish. And they're heroes. They did like the cops did. They did their job. They went and confronted the problem, and they're true to their core beliefs and I'm very proud of them."

Cohen said his job wasn't to judge the man but to take care of him.

"I went up to meet him. And I was just curious to, who is this guy?" Cohen said. "And, quite honestly, he's just a guy ... people say he's evil, (but) he's some mother's son. And how did he get from that to where he is today? That's going to be a large debate that we have to wrestle with as a society."

In the immediate aftermath of hate directed at the innocent, Cohen and Rabbi Jeffrey Myers and others at Tree of Life expressed something desperately needed by all of us: a demonstration of decency.

They followed the ancient teachings of the Torah.

"What you hate for yourself, do not do to your neighbor," the famous Rabbi Hillel once said. "This is the whole law; the rest is commentary. Go and learn."

Yet look around you, just days before the midterm elections, and you will be hard-pressed to find decency in American politics. What we hate for ourselves we do to each other, with gusto.

There has never really been much decency in politics, the dark art of who gets what from government and who pays.

And what we're witnessing now is a fight for federal power, following the collapse of a cynical establishment center that was destined to fall of its own corrupt weight.

That establishment still holds on, in the American palace of Versailles that we call Washington. And like Versailles, Washington is complete with guardians, mincing courtiers and sophists. They play for time.

Without a center to hold, the leftist blue and conservative red face off, each demanding that the other bend the knee in capitulation. But capitulation is not compatible with decency, is it?

If you insist on thinking as a child, you may believe that the anger started with the election of Donald Trump as president in 2016. But it didn't. This has been much longer in the making. And some who read the culture think we're on the precipice of civil conflict, as America was in the late 1700s with the Expulsion of the Loyalists, and the mid-1800s and the Civil War.

There are righteous coalitions at each other's throats, and little room for fence-sitters. Those with whom you disagree are to be demonized, shamed and cast out. And the witless are the first who reach for a gun or bomb or an envelope of poison.

I think we're smarter than that, and if we hold to the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, and understand the reason we fight each other is that our federal government is far too large and powerful, we may avoid it. But our discourse makes me wonder.

You might like your tax cut because you can finally pay your bills. But others will shame you and say that your greed has cost people their lives.

Your free speech about what kind of country we want to live in — one with sovereign borders, or one with liberal immigration policy— may trigger some unhinged nutball into violence.

But if violence comes, even if you did not tell the nutball to pull the trigger or mail the bomb, you are to be shamed into silence, lest you incite others. This is how free speech is throttled now. And, as it is squeezed, things become worse.

We've seen the slaughter of those 11 innocents at the Tree of Life synagogue, with the dead immediately transformed into political weapons even before their funerals.

All these are symptomatic of our national state of mind.

You understand this most dangerous game: Your visceral beliefs grant you moral superiority and entitle you to view me as shameful. Do my beliefs entitle me to moral superiority over you as well?

Democrats and much of the media say it's all Trump's fault. Republicans and conservatives say the blame lies with Democrats and their media allies.

But as you vote, you might want to think of the old Jewish teachings, taught again to all of us the other day: What you hate for yourself, do not do to your neighbor.

Decency.

Thanksgiving is canceled, so get out there and shop

REX W. HUPPKE

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

It wasn't even Halloween yet, but Christmas season decorations were already visible in Macy's display windows in the Loop earlier this week.

Halloween is over. Merry Christmas.

We have a lot of work to do before Dec. 25, so I'm going to need you all to focus.

Hopefully you got last week's memo and made sure to eat all your Halloween candy immediately after trick-or-treating was over. Any leftover Halloween candy must be unwrapped, melted down and remolded into festive holiday shapes, ideally with a drizzle of peppermint frosting on top. No exceptions.

Please clear your yards of any Halloween decor — tombstones, fake spider webbing, pumpkins — and make sure the area is prepped for light-up candy canes, long strands of twinkling colored LEDs and no fewer than three inflatable Christmas characters, including at least one Santa Claus (minimum height: 3 feet).

We only have 54 days until Christmas, and the clock is ticking. Try to keep up.

Have you planned your Christmas meal yet? No? Well, that's just great. Good luck finding yams to candy and a decent ham at this late date. You're really screwing this up.

I realize there has been some grumbling about this year's timeline. I hear people saying, "It's too soon!" or "What about Thanksgiving, doesn't that come first?"

You people make me nuts. Thanksgiving used to come first, but if you paid even the slightest bit of attention to the memo we sent out in August you would know the traditional Halloween-Thanksgiving-Christmas order of holidays has been strategically transitioned to a more cost-effective model.

The loan company LendEDU conducted a study that found American consumers spend a measly $2.98 billion on Thanksgiving dinner. But the National Retail Federation is predicting more than $720 billion in Christmas spending this season.

A simple cost-benefit analysis showed us that Thanksgiving was no longer pulling its weight. In fact, the stress of getting together with relatives, combined with post-Thanksgiving-feats sluggishness, was distracting people from Christmas preparation enough to offset any fiscal benefit the food-centric holiday could offer.

Don't think of it as canceling Thanksgiving. Just think of it as right-sizing the holiday schedule. We now break up the final months of the year into more practical segments: Halloween; Pre-Black-Friday; Black Friday; Post-Black-Friday; Pre-Christmas; and Christmas.

Black Friday, of course, starts on the Thursday that used to be Thanksgiving (now known as the final day of Pre-Black Friday) and extends through the Friday following what used to be Thanksgiving. Then it's the Post-Black-Friday season until Dec. 11, at which time the two-week Pre-Christmas season begins. That is followed, of course, by Christmas, which begins on Dec. 25 and continues until next Halloween.

Honestly, I can't believe I had to go through all that again. If you people really cared about Christmas (and you should've started caring weeks ago), you would READ THE MEMOS!!

We are in the process of finalizing a nationwide turkey ban that Congress will pass during an emergency session prior to the end of Pre-Black Friday. This is a precautionary step to ensure a smooth transition away from Thanksgiving.

If you spot friends or neighbors purchasing cranberry sauce or setting up gourd-filled wicker cornucopias, please report them immediately to local authorities. Chances are they also plan to ignore mandatory pre-December hall-decking laws. You do these tryptophan-addicted scofflaws no favors by letting them get away with non-Christmas-related activity.

To go with the overall schedule change, we have added several new Christmas carols you should start learning now. They include: "The 54 Days of Christmas"; "I Heard the Bells on Black Friday Eve"; "Post-Black-Friday Blues (My Baby Took a Turkey and Ran)"; "Shopping, Shopping, Shopping, Shop! (That's What the Lord Would Have Us Do)"; and "Grandma Will Soon Get Run Over by a Reindeer."

Lyrics for those songs and others were in the September memo, which I'm sure you all saved, right? Or did you delete it? You people are impossible. I'll resend the memo, but if we get to Mid-Post-Black Friday Mass and you don't know the words, that's on you. Understand?

Moving on.

Are your holiday cards ready yet? You should get those done and in the mail by the end of the week. (Keep in mind that if you have a pet, the animal must be in your Christmas card photo wearing a Santa hat or, at minimum, felt reindeer antlers. That includes pet fish.)

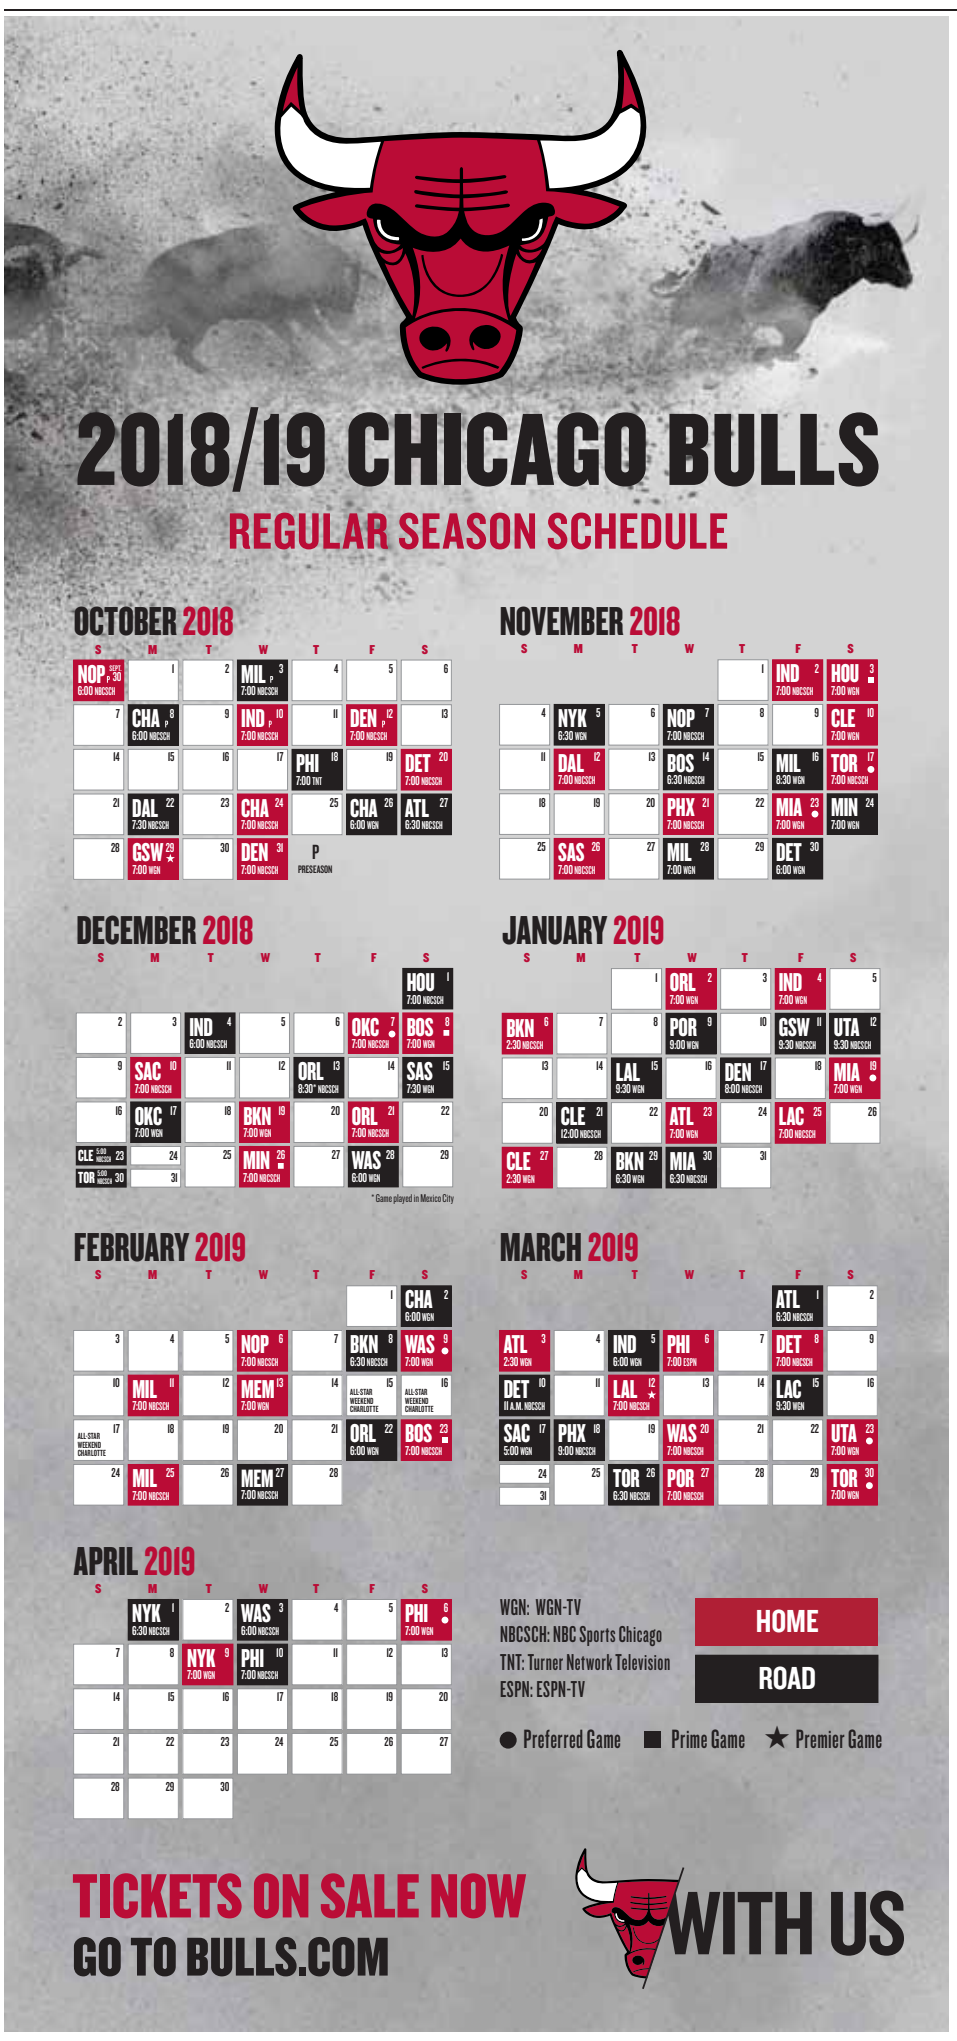

At home, you should be using only coffee mugs that carry witty Christmas slogans along the lines of: "Bah Hum-Mug"; "Jolly AF"; "Let's Get Lit!" (only if it includes a drawing of a lit-up Christmas tree); and "Don't Ring Sleigh Bells Until I've Had My Coffee!"

Above all else, I hope you all have started your Christmas shopping. If you haven't, I have one question: Why do you hate both Christmas and America?

GET YOUR ACT TOGETHER! Get out there and start enjoying the now-extended holiday season. It's the most wonderful darn time of the year, for Prancer's sake.

And it starts RIGHT NOW!

Biden campaigns for Underwood in 14th

Big political names visit Illinois, signal significance of races

By Patrick M. O'Connell

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Former Vice President Joe Biden urged a St. Charles crowd Wednesday to vote for Lauren Underwood, left, in the 14th and Sean Casten in the 6th.

Former Vice President Joe Biden campaigned for Democratic congressional candidate Lauren Underwood on Wednesday, telling an exuberant crowd of supporters in St. Charles that "the very character of our country, of who were are, is on the ballot" in next week's midterm elections.

Underwood, a 32-year-old registered nurse from Naperville and political newcomer, is challenging incumbent Republican U.S. Rep. Randy Hultgren in the far north and west suburban 14th Congressional District.

"Democrats choose hope over fear, unity over division, allies over enemies, truth over lies," Biden said. "... If we stand for who we have always been, we will win on Tuesday and we will take back the House."

Biden's visit signals significant interest in Underwood's bid and comes as a flood of big political names are rushing into Illinois in the closing days of the campaign to try to help out in races of national importance to both parties.

Republican U.S. House Speaker Paul Ryan will be in McHenry County on Friday to try to give Hultgren a boost in a district that's long been in GOP hands. And former President Barack Obama will be in Chicago on Sunday to help Democratic governor nominee J.B. Pritzker, Underwood and others.

During a 40-minute speech in the exhibit hall of the Kane County Fairgrounds, Biden praised Underwood, who worked in Obama's administration as a senior staffer in the Department of Health and Human Services, as someone will be one of the "most informed" members of Congress if elected.

Biden spoke about the need for more pay equity, affordable health care that covers pre-existing conditions, middle-class job opportunities, the "unfair" Republican tax bill and education opportunities. He also denounced the rhetoric of President Donald Trump and some Republicans, saying "words matter."

After his speech, Biden shook Underwood's hand. He also implored those who live in the nearby 6th Congressional District to vote for Democrat Sean Casten, who is trying to unseat U.S. Rep. Peter Roskam in one of the country's most closely watched congressional races.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

U.S. Rep. Randy Hultgren, 14th District, is scheduled to be joined by U.S. House Speaker Paul Ryan on the campaign trail Friday in Spring Grove.

"Let's make this a double play, OK?" Biden said.

Biden then left the stage to meet the throng of voters. He took selfies, shook hands and chatted with the crowd.

"Thank you, all," Biden said as he left the arena, headed for another campaign stop during the afternoon with Democrats in the Metro East region near St. Louis.

Underwood said she was appreciative of the former vice president's visit.

"He's someone that helps us talk with voters across parties without necessarily talking about being a Democrat or being a Republican, just the shared experience of being in this community," Underwood told reporters. "We're so grateful to have his support."

Underwood, who has embraced the progressive label during the campaign, said she hopes Biden helps attract voters in the middle of the political spectrum.

"The vice president excites people," she said. "We want people to come out and vote, we want them to come out and vote early, and his presence certainly helps us stir up more excitement and enthusiasm."

People were waiting for Biden, Underwood and Casten before the event started. The crowd, which organizers estimated at about 1,000 people, was made up of women and men, young and old and several mothers feeding babies bottles and rocking them in their arms to the pre-pep rally music.

Dorcas Keating, a mother of two from St. Charles, stood holding a "Lauren Underwood for Congress" sign alongside her 11-year-old son, Edward. It was Edward's first political rally, though he has attended a few protest marches with his mother, including one against the Trump administration's family separation policy.

"I'm definitely voting for Lauren Underwood, and Joe Biden is just the cherry on top," said Keating, who described herself as an independent. She said she thought Hultgren "hasn't done very much for us and has not done enough to take on Trump, to take on the politics that are dividing us."

Keating said she likes Biden because he is compassionate, empathetic and reaches across party lines to get things done in Washington. Asked if she thinks Biden's visit will boost Underwood to victory in the midterms, she said she wasn't sure because many Republicans "may be scared of change." But, Keating said, "It certainly can't hurt."

A few feet away was longtime Democratic voter Vito Sperando, 57, of Elburn.

"I'm here to see Joe Biden. He's my hero," Sperando said. "He's a quality person and he's kind and he realizes that we're all Americans and we're in this together. And he'd never hurt anybody."

Sperando also said he plans to vote for Underwood. The reasons: "She cares about health care and she wants to stand up to Trump."

Underwood's day was scheduled to wrap up in the evening with a fundraising concert by the band CAKE at a venue in Geneva.

Meanwhile, Hultgren's campaign announced Wednesday morning that Ryan, of Wisconsin, will join him for a Friday afternoon rally at Scot Forge, a metal forging company in Spring Grove.

Hultgren, of Plano, was on stage with President Donald Trump in southern Illinois over the weekend. Hultgren said just a few words at the rally, telling the crowd hundreds of miles from his district to get out and vote early.

"We've got a tough battle," he said from the podium with Trump by his side, adding that Underwood is "absolutely dying to support Nancy Pelosi for speaker."

Defense asks: Toss murder conviction or grant new trial

By Megan Crepeau and Stacy St. Clair
Chicago Tribune

Jason Van Dyke was escorted into a Cook County courtroom Wednesday clad in a bright yellow jail uniform and with a look of exhaustion on his face.

The former Chicago police officer's first court appearance since his murder conviction lasted only moments. Van Dyke was soon taken behind the courtroom to meet briefly with his family and then make the trip back to the western Illinois jail where he is awaiting sentencing.

A jury in early October convicted Van Dyke of second-degree murder and 16 counts of aggravated battery with a firearm — one for each time he shot teenager Laquan McDonald while on duty in October 2014. The verdict, after a monthlong trial, marked the first time a Chicago police officer had been convicted of murder for an on-duty incident in more than half a century.

Van Dyke's attorneys filed two motions Wednesday asking the judge to toss out the verdict, requests that are slated for argument at the next court date in mid-December.

An apparent miscommunication kept the news media from taking any video or photos of Van Dyke during his brief court appearance.

No sentencing date was set for Van Dyke, who is no longer a police officer since the Illinois State Police revoked his certification with his conviction. He remains an unpaid, suspended employee of the Chicago Police Department until the Police Board rules on his termination.

His lead attorney, Daniel Herbert, told reporters that Van Dyke is being held in constant isolation at the Quad Cities-area jail.

"He is doing OK, but he is sad, he is scared and he is lonely," Herbert said.

While his two daughters, his wife and his attorneys have made visits, Van Dyke mostly interacts with guards at the jail, Herbert said. Van Dyke passes the time by writing letters to family and reading extensively. Herbert has sent him several books, including the tear-jerker memoir "Marley and Me: Life and Love with the World's Worst Dog."

Van Dyke

"He exercises," Herbert said. "He's found a way to maneuver the bed where he can do dips and pushups."

Before the proceedings began Wednesday, Van Dyke's attorneys filed two motions asking the court to throw out his murder conviction or grant a new trial. The motions argue that a series of errors — including the judge's refusal to move the trial outside Cook County because of the extensive publicity — made a fair trial impossible for Van Dyke.

In his motion to acquit Van Dyke, Herbert argued that the prosecution's own witnesses proved the defense's case. Three officers on the scene that night all testified that McDonald posed a threat as he walked down the street and ignored repeated commands to drop a knife. But none of the nine other officers on the scene that night fired their weapons — a fact that jurors said they took into account.

"The state's evidence fell substantially short of meeting its burden," the motion said. "In fact, the government's case provided more doubt with each witness that took the stand on the state's behalf."

In another filing, Herbert asked for a new trial based on a series of alleged mistakes by Judge Vincent Gaughan. The document contends that the judge gave the jury erroneous instructions to follow during its deliberations and allowed biased jurors to decide the case.

The 35-page motion largely rehashes whether Van Dyke could find a truly impartial jury in Cook County. Gaughan delayed deciding on whether to move the trial until after jury selection. After swearing in 12 jurors and five alternates, the judge said a fair panel had been selected and there was no need to hold the trial elsewhere.

Van Dyke was given the rare opportunity to wait until after the jury selection to decide whether he would instead opt for Gaughan to determine his fate in a bench trial. He chose to let a jury decide, but his attorneys now say some jurors were biased.

"The passage of time has not soothed or erased community prejudice," the motion said.

The motion singled out a juror who described the infamous police dashboard camera video of the shooting as "horrific" during the selection process and said she believed Van Dyke shot too many times. Under questioning by the judge, that juror, Charlene Cooke, said she could be fair to the officer.

Cooke was the only African-American selected for the jury. In the weeks leading up to trial, the defense had argued that black jurors in Cook County, in particular, could not be fair to Van Dyke.

In an exclusive post-trial interview with the Tribune published last week, Cooke said she was surprised to be picked for the jury but was determined to give Van Dyke a fair trial. She also said she was one of two jurors who wanted to convict the officer of first-degree murder in the first vote taken at the start of deliberations.

The jury settled on second-degree murder after a few hours of debate, jurors said.

Cooke's comments, however, rankled the defense, which referred to the interview in the motion but did not specifically name her.

"It's important to note that this same juror bragged to the press after the verdict that she was one of a few jurors that believed the defendant was guilty of first-degree murder before deliberations began," the motion states.

If Gaughan denies the motions, as most judges do during this phase of the proceedings, Herbert said his client will appeal to a higher court.

While a sentencing date has not been set, Herbert said he plans to argue that Van Dyke should be sentenced on just the second-degree murder conviction — not the aggravated battery counts that carry stiffer penalties.

But the sentencing range faced by Van Dyke remains as "clear as mud," Herbert told reporters.

By Rosemary Sobol
Chicago Tribune

A man serving life in prison but hoping for a new trial after alleging he was beaten by a member of disgraced former Chicago police Cmdr. Jon Burge's infamous "midnight crew" of detectives nearly 30 years ago became emotional as he testified before a judge on Wednesday.

Wiping his eyes with a tissue at times, Gerald Reed, 54, talked about the hours after his arrest, when he was questioned by two Chicago police detectives, Michael Kill and the man he said beat him, Victor Breska.

"Kill told me if I didn't help out," Reed would face the death penalty, Reed said under questioning by his attorney, Elliot Zinger.

Reed choked up, saying a death sentence would "send his mother to his grave."

"That's my rock," Reed said, looking out at his mother, Armanda Shackelford. "That's my heart," he said.

"I will be glad when it's all over," Shackelford said during a break in the hearing, her eyes welling with tears. She wore a white T-shirt with black lettering that read, "Free Gerald Reed."

Reed has spent the last 28 years in Stateville prison, serving out a life sentence for a 1990 double murder. He appeared on Wednesday before Judge Thomas V. Gainer Jr. at the Leighton Criminal Court Building.

Lawsuits from victims of Burge, who died in September, have cost taxpayers many millions in settlements and judgments, much of it paid out of city coffers in the past decade. Burge never was charged directly in any of the torture allegations.

Reed's earlier claims of torture went nowhere despite jail X-rays taken shortly after the alleged beating that showed a steel rod in his leg from an old gunshot injury had been broken, and two orthopedic screws were knocked loose, according to court records. His attorney and his surgeon, who testified earlier this week, contend that this was evidence of abuse.

Reed's case is one of several involving Burge that were assigned to judges after lengthy investigations by the Illinois Torture Relief and Inquiry Commission.

Under Zinger's questioning, Reed detailed the hours after his arrest in October 1990. He said he was brought into a small room "about the size of the jury box" with a desk.

Officers handcuffed him to the wall as he sat in one of two chairs. Kill and Breska walked in and told Reed they wanted him to "cooperate."

"I didn't know anything about" the murders, Reed said.

Reed said he heard a "very intimidating" Breska tell someone that he was going to "take care of this one."

"He was calling me n-----," Reed said. "He was all in my face."

Breska then began kicking the left side of Reed's wooden chair "very, very hard."

"Then the chair collapsed," Reed said.

"What happened next?" asked Zinger.

"I was kicked a number of times in my back and thigh area. Until Michael Kill came in and grabbed Breska."

The beating lasted about two minutes, Reed said.

"He got to kicking me, and I just curled up in a knot. I was calling out for help. No one wanted to be there," he said, dabbing his eyes.

On cross-examination, special prosecutor Lawrence Rosen asked if he had told Kill, Breska or anyone that he needed to get to a hospital.

"Did you use a cane? A wheelchair? Were you carried?" Rosen asked while questioning how he was able to get around in the hours after the attack. "No, sir," Reed said. "I limped."

Reed eventually signed a confession, was convicted at trial and was sentenced to life in prison.

Man pleads guilty to aiding terror organization

By Jason Meisner
Chicago Tribune

He's been dubbed the "hipster terrorist" for the glamorous social media shots of him posing in snazzy shirts and designer sunglasses, an iced latte in hand and jacket slung casually over a shoulder.

But Aws Mohammed Younis al-Jayab cut a much different profile Wednesday in a federal courtroom in Chicago, where he wore an orange jail jumpsuit and was shackled at the ankles as he pleaded guilty to charges of aiding a terrorist organization and lying to immigration officials.

Al-Jayab, 25, a Palestinian native with ties to Wisconsin, admitted in a plea agreement with prosecutors that he flew from O'Hare International Airport to Turkey in November 2013 and then entered Syria. Once there, he joined Ansar Al-Islam, a U.S.-designated terrorist group that was a precursor to the Islamic State, also known as ISIS, according to his plea agreement.

After al-Jayab returned to the U.S. in 2014 and settled in California, he told immigration officials that he'd been overseas visiting relatives, according to the court filing.

"I wanted to do the right thing ... to defend the Syrian people," al-Jayab told U.S. District Judge Sarah Ellis Wednesday in broken English. He acknowledged, however, that he knew the group he was joining was engaged in terrorist activities and that he tried to hide his involvement when he returned.

His plea agreement calls for a sentence of up to 15 years in prison.

According to the charges, al-Jayab was born in Palestine and spent much of his childhood in Iraq before coming to the U.S. as a refugee in October 2012. While living in Arizona and Wisconsin, al-Jayab communicated on social media about his intention to go to Syria to fight for terrorist organizations, according a criminal complaint filed in Sacramento, Calif.

Worker sues Chicago anti-violence group

Alleged repeated sexual harassment at Cure Violence

By Madeline Buckley
Chicago Tribune

A supervisor at a prominent anti-violence group run by University of Illinois at Chicago repeatedly harassed and sexually abused several women, and group leaders and UIC officials ignored complaints about the harassment for years, a federal lawsuit filed on Wednesday alleged.

The women, who work or previously worked for Cure Violence, formerly called CeaseFire, allege in the lawsuit that Ricardo "Cobe" Williams, a senior administrator of the organization, demanded oral sex, exposed himself, blocked the door of his office so they couldn't leave and touched them in sexual ways without their consent.

Named as defendants in the lawsuit along with Williams are Gary Slutkin, the head of Cure Violence, and UIC, which operates the organization through its School of Public Health. The lawsuit was brought on behalf of Angalia Bianca, who works as a database coordinator for Cure Violence.

Two other women, Lakisha McGowan and Ameena Matthews, are not listed as plaintiffs but are mentioned by name in the suit. Both are former violence interrupters, and Matthews starred in an award-winning documentary about the organization. Allegations from a fourth woman are referenced, but she is not named.

Bianca, McGowan and Matthews spoke out Wednesday during an emotional news conference during which they detailed, at times tearfully, their experiences at Cure Violence and said they were threatened with retaliation if they complained.

Williams

Slutkin

Williams "has made doing the work I love almost unbearable with his ongoing harassment," Bianca said.

Matthews, who worked for Cure Violence from 2006 to 2013, said she complained to Slutkin but he did not respond.

"I thought CeaseFire meant what they said, that they are violence preventers," Matthews said. "They did not practice what they preach."

Bianca said she filed a complaint with UIC's Office for Access and Equity in August. Her attorney, Ed Mullin, said the complaint was met with "intense cross-examination and skepticism."

The unnamed woman sought help from human resources and filed a written complaint with the Office for Access and Equity in December 2013, the lawsuit says, but the office found no evidence of wrongdoing.

Despite multiple complaints since at least 2013, the lawsuit says, Cure Violence and UIC have kept Williams in his senior position. He remains listed as "deputy director of U.S. programs" on the Cure Violence website.

UIC released a statement acknowledging that "one charge of alleged misconduct related to Cure Violence" was being investigated by its Office for Access and Equity but gave no details. "No further information will be provided related to the allegations due to the ongoing investigation," it said.

In a statement sent by his attorney, Jessica Tovrov, Williams said he "categorically denies" all allegations laid out in the suit. Slutkin did not respond to a request for comment.

State Rep. Kelly Cassidy also spoke at Wednesday's news conference, expressing disgust over the allegations. Cassidy said she has been a frequent advocate for the organization and has fought for program funding in the state budget but is now withholding support as she waits to see how it handles the allegations.

"They need to restore that faith, and they need to do it now," she said.

Cure Violence was originally called CeaseFire when it began working in the West Garfield Park neighborhood in 2000. A documentary called "The Interrupters" focused on the story of three CeaseFire workers in 2011, including Matthews and Williams.

It was reorganized as Cure Violence the following year and, according to Slutkin, relies on strategies associated with disease control to fight violence: detecting and interrupting conflicts, and tracking down the people considered most at risk.

Voters worry: What if things don't go my way?

Many voters worry: What if things don't go my way?

Experts say strong emotions often spur action and fuel more political involvement. And while research after the 2012 election showed that strong emotions dissipated quickly, voters in today's political landscape seem to be holding on to their outrage.

A study published last week in the Journal of American College Health showed a quarter of college students surveyed two to three months after the 2016 presidential election reported clinically significant feelings of distress related to the results. That's in line with a 2017 poll conducted by the American Psychological Association, which showed that more than half of Americans were stressed over the political climate.

Earlier research showed that political dissatisfaction can incite emotions even stronger than those from hearing about a national tragedy, especially when one's preferred party loses, said Todd Rogers, a behavioral scientist and public policy professor at Harvard University who studied this phenomenon following the 2012 election. The study showed the feelings were even stronger than those felt by Boston residents during the marathon bombing, or by parents of small children who heard about families affected by the school shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School.

"The pain experienced ... was pretty devastating," Rogers said. "We interpret that as further evidence of how partisanship is in who we are and our identities."

Those feelings, while intense, ebbed over the course of a few weeks, which Rogers credits to the human ability to quickly adapt.

But Walther said the horror she felt after election night 2016 has not subsided. She said it's led her to pay closer attention to politics, because if her preferred candidates don't win, she doesn't want to feel the same way she did that night — that she could've done more. As a breast cancer survivor, Walther said she's fearful that Republicans could prevail and and ultimately overturn the ACA, specifically rules about pre-existing conditions. After a career change, she said she now relies on the health insurance exchange for medical coverage.

Her yoga therapy instructor, Laura Jane Mellencamp, 63, said she often hears from her students about their reaction to the political divisiveness of the country. The political climate has people riled up, she said, and looking to her to help calm their nerves. Attendance is up at Mellencamp's studio, Yoga Among Friends, in Downers Grove.

"They are coming in with great sadness or anxiety ... to the point where I see people having more migraines or stomach disorders," she said. "It's definitely affecting people's well-being."

Yaklich, 61, said she keeps her emotions in check and steers clear of political talk to avoid disagreements, but she still experiences fear and anger when she watches political coverage and thinks about what could happen once votes are cast.

Although recently retired, Yaklich owned a small real estate business and for years bought her own health insurance. "I feel Obamacare is geared against me. I'm paying for things I don't even need anymore."

And the Kavanaugh hearings left Yaklich "disgusted," she said. "I am the mother of sons, and I was appalled that a man could be railroaded like that with absolutely no evidence."

Matt Motyl, assistant professor of psychology at the University of Illinois at Chicago, said American politics have struck an angrier note in recent election seasons, especially now. And while that anger can be a powerful motivator to the electorate, Motyl also points to research that shows it's often short-lived.

The exception could be when people feel cheated. "The fact that Trump lost the popular vote might contribute to liberal anger; it's seen as cheating," he said. "When people break moral norms, like cheating and honesty, that can lead to (sustained) anger."

Motyl added that the high level of media attention to politics, and Trump's Twitter presence, could also help retain strong emotions in voters on both sides.

"If you have a political figure that is constantly poking that position, the opposition is going to be more angry," he said.

Eli Shearn, 39, of Chicago, said he's still upset by the outcome of the 2016 election and has turned his emotions into action. He's canvassed for congressional candidates in the suburbs and in other states. He's also attended several protests and marches, some with his 9-year-old daughter.

"I realized I was kind of complacent (before). I was shirking my own responsibility," he said. But now, "I feel like I need to be doing something."

Despite this action, Shearn said he's worried the political involvement he sees will die down and people will lose motivation.

"For a lot of people in day-to-day life, they're doing fine ... and don't see the impacts," he said. "It can be painful to resist. People become complacent."

"My feeling is, we're in an emergency," he added. "The world is burning down around us."

systemic problems given the size of the hospital and "challenging population" of youth with complex mental health, substance dependence and abuse traumas that other psychiatric facilities often will not accept.

"From our standpoint, it's important that we are there every day during a time of uncertainty for the hospital to ensure our children are safe and in a good environment," he said. "We would like to see them get back on track and continue to be a safe and effective partner for our kids."

Lakeshore CEO David Fletcher-Janzen declined an interview request but defended the hospital's record.

"Chicago Lakeshore Hospital takes every allegation of impropriety very seriously and files reports immediately," he said in a statement. "All allegations, regardless of probability, are reported to maintain a high level of caution and transparency. We work closely with DCFS and the Chicago police on any and every allegation of impropriety and adhere to the highest industry standards."

There's precedent for an outside review.

Several years ago, DCFS had experts at the University of Illinois at Chicago investigate conditions inside various psychiatric hospitals, including Chicago Lakeshore. The university's 2011 report found that inadequate staffing levels and lax supervision contributed to four incidents in which youths allegedly were sexually assaulted or abused by their peers.

The hospital sharply disputed the findings, and the report was shelved without further action.

In its current investigation, the Tribune pieced together the problems at Lakeshore through confidential records, federal inspection reports and numerous interviews. A ProPublica Illinois investigation of the hospital, which found similar problems, was published Wednesday afternoon.

'It's unacceptable'

Chicago Lakeshore employs more than 400 staff members and serves about 5,000 patients each year. The majority are adults, but the hospital expanded its acute care to children in 2013 by opening a separate 60-bed unit about two blocks away from the main building. Previously, it had a 45-bed children's unit in the main hospital.

DCFS does not have the authority to regulate private psychiatric hospitals like Chicago Lakeshore, which are inspected, licensed and certified by state and federal health officials. But the agency is charged with investigating complaints to Illinois' child abuse hotline. It also works with several psychiatric facilities across Illinois to provide mental health services when needed for children and teens who are in the state's protective legal custody due to histories of abuse and neglect.

And Chicago Lakeshore is a primary partner: One-quarter of the estimated 1,200 DCFS kids across the state who are hospitalized for psychiatric reasons each year are treated there, according to the agency's statistics. As of mid-October, there were 15 DCFS youths receiving inpatient services at the facility.

DCFS confirmed that it has looked into at least 16 complaints this year alleging young patients faced harmful conditions. The investigations began with calls to the state's child abuse hotline and involved both patients who were in DCFS' care and youths who were not in the state system.

Paniak, the agency's watchdog, said the 16 hotline complaints are a lot, given that there were only 17 total in the three years prior. She also recently raised concerns that children were languishing too long at the hospital, most notably a 4-year-old boy who had been hospitalized there for more than two weeks. Paniak warned acting DCFS Director Beverly "B.J." Walker about the situation, and the child was later discharged.

The DCFS inspector general and the Cook County public guardian said there are plenty of red flags about Chicago Lakeshore Hospital. They argue that it's difficult for the child welfare agency to be impartial because it relies on the hospital to care for hundreds of low-income children with traumatic histories of abuse and neglect each year.

Skene said many of the hospital's hotline investigations allege inadequate supervision related to sexual activity or fights between underage patients. He said DCFS determined seven complaints were unfounded and four were "indicated," meaning the agency deemed enough credible evidence existed to substantiate the complaint. Five are pending.

Hospital officials, however, told the Tribune they conducted an internal investigation and determined all 16 incidents were unsubstantiated. Paniak called that "ridiculous."

Skene provided details about some of the incidents. The Tribune also reviewed confidential reports in several cases.

In a pending investigation, a 7-year-old girl said a 12-year-old boy pulled down her pants and sexually assaulted her with a finger. At the time of the Sept. 10 incident, the girl had been hospitalized for more than two months for homicidal and suicidal behaviors. The boy, who had a history of sexual aggression, had been hospitalized for nearly three months.

The girl also was one of the two females who accused a male staff member of touching them inappropriately. She said the worker kissed her and sexually assaulted her with his finger in early September. The other girl, who is 12, told a counselor the man touched her breast in late August. DCFS and Chicago police are still investigating.

Separately, in April, a 15-year-old patient complained the same worker made her feel uncomfortable after he made sexually suggestive comments, including that he wanted to be her roommate. The child welfare agency determined her complaint was unfounded.

Chicago Lakeshore officials said the man has not been working at the hospital during the DCFS investigation.

In another pending complaint, the mother of an 8-year-old boy called the hotline Sept. 9 alleging her son was battered by peers, touched sexually and exposed to two masturbating roommates during the five days he was hospitalized. She told the Tribune that hospital staff failed to properly monitor her son's safety.

"If they were doing 15-minute checks as promised, they would have noticed my son was up all night long scared to death," said the mother, who asked not to be named to protect her son's privacy. "We put him there to get help, not to traumatize him further."

In one of the four cases DCFS deemed credible, a 10-year-old girl complained her 11-year-old female roommate asked her to have sex and was touching other girls in their unit in a sexual manner. When questioned, the 11-year-old reported having sexual experiences at a previous hospital and at home.

DCFS also found credible an April complaint from the mother of a 17-year-old patient with intellectual and mental health issues. The boy suffered a bloody mouth and facial cuts and bruising after two staff members dragged him to his bedroom and threatened to break his arm while pinning him down on his bed, with his arms held over the bed rail, according to documents.

The teen's mother told the Tribune her son has a history of hospitalizations at other facilities but had never before suffered injury. She alleged that hospital staff discouraged her from reporting the injuries and could not produce video camera evidence despite the incident beginning in the hallway, where cameras are present.

"They insisted that he was out of control and they had no choice. But if the video backed up their story, they would have saved it," she said, also speaking anonymously to protect her son's privacy. "It was horrifying. You take them there to be safe and instead they're put in more danger."

In another complaint DCFS substantiated, a 12-year-old boy said he was sexually abused by an older teen. Several other patients also complained about the teenage boy, who was then sent to the juvenile detention center. DCFS found the hospital had provided inadequate supervision during the incidents.

DCFS also has a pending complaint involving Chicago Lakeshore from last year in which a 14-year-old patient said she was repeatedly sexually abused by a female nurse who showed her pornography, according to a source familiar with the investigation. Police are looking into the complaint, and the nurse no longer works at the hospital, the source said. The nurse's professional license expired this year, state records show.

James McIntyre of the Illinois chapter of the Foster Care Alumni of America called the recent issues at the hospital "disgusting." He called on state lawmakers to hold a hearing to better understand conditions inside the facility.

"This is a psychiatric hospital that receives both state and federal dollars that is paid to work with our most vulnerable youth," said McIntyre, the group's co-founder and board president. "It's unacceptable."

Hospital officials said they take each complaint seriously. They noted that "it is common in our industry for patients to fabricate allegations in an effort to change their circumstances," especially DCFS kids who have been cleared to leave but who remain hospitalized as the state struggles to find less-restrictive, appropriate places for them.

The problem has long vexed the state. On any given day, an estimated two dozen DCFS kids are stuck in psychiatric hospitals across Illinois despite being cleared for discharge, agency statistics show. Part of the problem is attributed to the reduction in recent years of an estimated 450 beds in less-restrictive, residential treatment placements.

Skene said as of mid-October, there were two kids cleared to leave Chicago Lakeshore, but DCFS had not yet found them a suitable place to live.

Track record

Chicago Lakeshore has been held in good standing by the Illinois-based Joint Commission, an independent, not-for-profit group that accredits and certifies nearly 21,000 health care organizations and programs nationwide. It's up for review every three years, with the next cycle to begin later this year.

Still, in recent months the hospital has faced increased oversight by state and federal health officials. In late September, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services threatened to cut off the hospital's ability to bill Medicare after regulators cited safety violations concerning suicide prevention, documents showed.

No patient deaths were found, but federal authorities took the facility to task for various related deficiencies, including the length of wall-mounted telephone cords.

As a deadline approached, the hospital asked a federal judge to intervene. Officials said they spent more than $550,000 since 2017 on related improvements, including special doors to prevent suicide attempts. More than 80 percent of Chicago Lakeshore's patients receive Medicare and Medicaid benefits, hospital officials said, and they would have had to close if the federal funding was lost.

Both a DCFS deputy director and state Rep. Greg Harris, a leading Democratic voice on social services, submitted signed declarations in support of the hospital's federal request. They argued its closure would exacerbate an ongoing critical access to care shortage for inpatient psychiatric services in Chicago and the surrounding community.

The hospital promptly withdrew the request for a temporary restraining order after federal officials eased off the termination deadline.

Federal officials determined the hospital had fixed the initial issues, but in follow-up visits, state health officials who actually do the inspections for them cited other concerns. Among them: whether staff had correctly monitored specific patients, locked empty rooms and completed required documentation in some patient files regarding medication and observation logs. The hospital now faces a Nov. 30 deadline to address those issues.

A Tribune review of hundreds of pages of hospital inspection reports dating back through 2015 showed federal regulators have raised similar concerns about patient safety in the past, and staff members regularly cooperated with plans to correct cited deficiencies.

Among the most alarming deficiencies, a female patient alleged a man raped her in 2017. Regulators found that the hospital put the woman and other patients at risk by not closely monitoring the male patient, who had a history of sexually inappropriate behavior. And in 2016, a 15-year-old girl required 18 stitches after she broke a porcelain toilet and used the shards to cut herself. Also in 2016, a 16-year-old patient told investigators about three times in which she injured herself by either swallowing screws and other items or inserting them into her rectum.

Besides the state and federal investigations, the Tribune also found that four former adult patients have sued the hospital in the last year alleging sexual assault.

One man said he was sodomized by a much larger male peer in his room in 2015 despite warning staff of his safety concerns, according to one of the lawsuits. The man died earlier this year, according to his lawyer, but family is continuing the suit.

Two women also sued, alleging a male mental health counselor raped them. One of the suits was voluntarily withdrawn. The hospital worker, Stuart Woods, pleaded guilty in July to a reduced charge of criminal sexual abuse for incidents involving both of his accusers, court records showed. The 44-year-old Chicago man was placed on three years' probation and was required to register as a convicted sex offender.

In the most recent lawsuit, filed Oct. 24, a female patient with a history of depression and anxiety accused a hospital employee of not allowing her to contact police last summer after she suspected she had been attacked while sedated. In her complaint, the woman said she woke up the morning after being heavily medicated to physical symptoms consistent with a sexual assault. Her family contacted Chicago police several days later after staff failed to act, her lawyer said.

Advocates argue the hospital and the state child welfare system would only benefit from an independent review. Given the complex patient population, such a program could assist in identifying problems before they escalate and help DCFS advocate for additional resources and services, they said.

"Why wouldn't you want to bring in an expert to find out what's going on there?" said Paniak, the agency's inspector general.

But little came from such a review after the 2011 UIC report. Hospital officials contested that report's findings, calling it "undisciplined and highly subjective" and skewed because it relied on the isolated incidents as "the basis of an indictment" against the entire hospital.

The UIC review followed a Tribune investigation that uncovered multiple allegations of rape or sexual abuse of minors at a half-dozen area psychiatric hospitals, including four incidents at Chicago Lakeshore.

Fletcher-Janzen, who was not the hospital's CEO back in 2011, defended the current program and commitment to children.

"Chicago Lakeshore Hospital is proud to provide the highest level of services to some of the most vulnerable children in the state of Illinois," he said in a statement. "We will never give up on any child who needs help. ... Our goal is to improve the lives of these young patients so they can grow to be healthy adults, both physically and mentally."

County promoted worker after slurs, review

One of the employees complained about Colom's alleged comments, leading to an investigation by the county's equal employment opportunity office. An officer there who also is an attorney interviewed the workers, a supervisor and Colom, then recommended her firing, the report said. County human resources chief Velisha Haddox rejected the recommendation after Colom denied making the offensive remarks. Colom did acknowledge repeating statements from the other end of the call because of hearing issues, the report said.

Haddox concluded that the complainant lacked "context" on what was said during the call and found there was "no direct evidence" that Colom's alleged statements reflected a personal bias.

Preckwinkle spokeswoman Becky Schlikerman echoed Haddox in a statement.

"This was an employee's private conversation, which was overheard and interpreted with very little context," Schlikerman said. "There was not enough evidence to determine that this isolated incident was severe or pervasive enough to warrant termination."

In an interview with the Tribune, Colom, who is Puerto Rican, cited her support for Jesus "Chuy" Garcia's 2015 mayoral campaign as evidence that she wouldn't make such comments.

"I am not a racist. I am not against Mexicans. I am not against anybody," Colom said.

Rather, Colom said, "someone took bits and pieces of a conversation and spinned it for whatever reason they spinned it. It's a shame, but that's the way life is today."

Schlikerman said Preckwinkle "does not tolerate discrimination, inappropriate or disrespectful behavior in the workplace" and "encourages that such behavior be reported so that it can be evaluated and that appropriate action related to the conduct can be implemented."

"It is important to look at the totality of the circumstances in any case in order to determine what, if any, discipline is required," the spokeswoman said.

Preckwinkle supported both the initial review and the human resources chief's review and had "no influence on either process," Schlikerman said.

Colom and Preckwinkle served together on the Chicago City Council for a period in the late 1990s to early 2000s.

The position Colom was promoted to is exempt from the decades-old Shakman decree, which prohibits hiring based on politics, and the move was approved by the president's office. The county was released from Shakman oversight this week after it was found in "substantial compliance" with long-standing prohibitions against patronage hiring.

County Commissioner Tim Schneider, a Bartlett Republican who also chairs the state GOP, said the decision to keep Colom in her position despite the recommendation she be fired opened up the county to second-guessing in some cases where Colom ruled.

"It looks to me like she got preferential treatment by human resources because the (equal employment opportunity) office basically said they corroborated the story of the two witnesses and didn't believe that her testimony was credible," Schneider said. "The EEO office recommended her to be fired yet HR (chief) overruled that."

Commissioner Richard Boykin took exception to how the county handled the incident. Boykin, an Oak Park Democrat and frequent Preckwinkle critic, said the punishment is a "slap on the wrist."

"To have a credible finding of ... inappropriate kind of language and then to turn around and promote that person further demonstrates under this Preckwinkle administration just the sheer disregard for good government and for equal rights and equal protection under the law," Boykin said.

Schlikerman disputed "preferential treatment" was given.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2007

Vilma Colom: "Someone took bits and pieces of a conversation" from a phone call "and spinned it."

The allegations

On June 23, 2016, the worker who complained about Colom said she was walking from her office to a cubicle when she heard "a loud voice speaking from the hallway leading to the bathroom say, 'These (expletive) Mexicans,'" the investigator's report said.

The complainant looked down the hallway to see who was speaking and saw Colom on her phone, the report said. The complainant went back to the office she shares with another worker and asked if she had heard anything, the report said.

Colom remained on the phone and also said, "crossing the Rio Grande," the complainant said.

After a brief pause, the complainant also heard Colom say, "I'd rather have someone else," and "from here," the report said.

A witness said the complainant came into the office and asked, "Did you hear what (Colom) was saying in the hallway?" according to the report.

The witness went with the complainant into the hallway and the witness heard Colom say, "I can't stand these Mexicans," according to the report. The witness moved closer to the intersection of the two hallways and heard Colom say, "There's too many of them over here, they need to go back across the Rio Grande," the report said.

Colom walked around the corner and into the main hallway toward the conference room, the witness said, according to the report. The witness then heard her say, "They have too many children," the report said.

The complainant debated whether to report what she heard, the report said, and she was concerned because Colom's job "requires her to be a neutral party between the unions and management."

Both people told the investigator that Colom did not seem to be quoting someone else, the report said.

'Why would I say that? I'm Puerto Rican.'

The county's equal employment opportunity officer interviewed the two workers, a supervisor who spoke with Colom and Colom herself, according to reports the county released in response to an open records request.

Colom denied making the remarks when interviewed by a superior, the report said.

"Why would I say that? I'm Puerto Rican," Colom said, according to the report.

Colom said she was on the phone with a neighbor who was having some construction done and had an issue with tenants, the report said.

During the conversation with her supervisor, Colom acknowledged she may have repeated offensive comments made by her neighbor, the report said. Colom said she speaks loudly and it might have sounded to someone else as though she herself were making the comments.

"(The supervisor) recalled that, from the way (Colom) explained the conversation to him, she admitted that she might have repeated both '(Expletive) Mexicans' and a comment about crossing the Rio Grande," the report said.

The supervisor found the complainant and witness "credible," and neither had been party to a case in front of Colom, the report said.

Colom told the equal employment opportunity officer she missed four or five calls from her neighbors that morning, so when her phone rang again, she went into the bathroom to answer the call, the report said. She said several of her neighbors were on the other end of the line to discuss a building on their block that had squatters living in it, and they brought it to her attention because she is captain of their block club, the report said.

She said she had a conversation with the owner of the building, "who is of Mexican descent," and said her neighbor told her, "There's too many of them in the apartment. What do I do?" according to the report.

She said she told the neighbor "to be careful about what he said because even though he's Mexican, it could be perceived that he was kicking the squatters out because they are Mexican," the report said.

She denied saying, "These (expletive) Mexicans" and said she "does not talk like that," the report said. She also denied saying, "They need to go back across the Rio Grande" and did not recall it coming up "at all" during the conversation.

She also denied saying, "I'd rather have someone else" and "from here," according to the report.

Colom said she had a hard time hearing the phone call and might have repeated things because of that, the report said.

She said that "members of the department might have been angry about a disciplinary case she overturned approximately six or seven months ago," the report said.

Rejected recommendation

In her September 2016 report, the equal employment opportunity officer found Colom's account not credible and recommended her termination.

"Based upon the statements of complainant and witness #1, we find that (Colom) did make offensive comments about people from Mexico. Furthermore, we find that the comments were sufficiently egregious, given their nature and her position as a neutral party who is expected to hear cases impartially, that they rose to the level of harassment" in violation of ordinance and personnel rules, the report said.

In December 2016, Haddox reviewed the officer's report and concluded she could not "in good conscience" say that the "totality" of the circumstances should lead to Colom's firing.

Haddox said "the report describes a single incident in which an employee's private conversation was overheard and interpreted with very little context, if any, as offensive and as representing the employee's personal views. The facts to support this conclusion, however, are simply not present."

Haddox also said "the complainant lacks context to accurately determine what occurred during (Colom's) conference call. Without the context, I am left to rely on the context provided by (Colom)."

Because of the "totality of the circumstances," Haddox said, there was no "direct evidence" that Colom's alleged statements reflect a personal bias.

"I cannot conclude the remarks made reflect (Colom's) personal beliefs and that she is unable to perform her job without bias," Haddox found. "Without proper context for the alleged disparaging remarks, there is simply not enough objective evidence to demonstrate that (Colom's) conduct was so severe or pervasive as to unreasonably interfere with the complainant's work performance or her own, requiring her termination."

Haddox agreed that Colom showed a "lack of judgment."

The county decided in December 2016 to counsel Colom on her conduct, send her to "appropriate training internally" and at the Illinois Department of Human Rights to address "racial sensitivities and workplace etiquette," and instruct her bosses to "monitor her decisions to insure against potential bias, if any," being reflected in her decisions as a hearing officer.

Colom told the Chicago Tribune she made a "mistake in judgment" and got the training she needed as a result of the investigation. She said she did what she "had to do to learn my lesson" and is "moving on" with her life.

"Anyone who knows me, regardless of what you write in the paper, will know the truth about Vilma Colom," she said.

Cop eyed in beating has troubled past

police officer — identified as Elkins' boyfriend in a police interview — as well as two of their friends.

Records show Elkins has a checkered history with the Police Department. In nearly two decades on the force, he has amassed at least 35 citizen complaints, including allegations of illegal searches, neglect of duty, profanity, theft and sexual harassment. He has never been disciplined, though, because the city's police oversight agencies — much maligned over the years — never sustained a single allegation against him, records show.

Elkins has also twice faced criminal charges involving alleged sexual encounters with teenage boys.

As a young patrolman in 2003, he was charged with sexually abusing a male student while moonlighting as a security guard at a North Side high school, records show. He was later acquitted in a bench trial by a Cook County judge who said there were too many holes in the victim's testimony. Elkins remained on the force and was promoted to sergeant in 2007.

Two years ago, Elkins was charged in Michigan on allegations he sexually abused a teen at a family party the year earlier, records show. But he pleaded guilty in August 2016 to a misdemeanor battery count in exchange for probation and a small fine. More than two years later, he remains on paid desk duty — earning a $105,000-a-year salary — pending the outcome of a disciplinary case stemming from the incident.

Elkins, 44, did not return phone calls seeking comment from the Tribune, and no one answered this week at his North Side condominium.

In an interview at their lawyer's Loop office last week, the two beating victims said they are struggling to recover from the attack and have been left shaken and angry that a police sergeant may have been responsible.

"I was just sick to my stomach for days," said Sherwood, 53, sitting in a wheelchair with his leg propped up in a thick cast. "... It's our city. We pay taxes so the police can be there to protect us. That part of it is very, very upsetting."

'An absolute rage'

The night of the attack started like a typical Saturday for Sherwood and Stacha.

The couple, who have been together for 14 years, had friends over to their Edgewater condo for drinks and food, then took an Uber to the popular night scene of Andersonville a couple of miles away. After hitting one bar, they crossed the street to @mosphere, a dance club they said was not their usual haunt.

Because of the pending lawsuit, the couple's lawyer did not want them to talk in detail about the altercation inside the club that precipitated the attack. The suit alleges that Elkins' group attacked Sherwood. A friend of Elkins' who was arrested that night told a detective in a recorded interview that it was Sherwood and his friends who were the aggressors, saying someone in their group called him a "short s---" and pushed his husband hard enough to knock him down.

Sherwood, a customer service manager for a suburban food company, said their group decided to leave the club because the friends were uncomfortable with the situation. He said no one had kicked them out.

"We were on our way out, minding our own business and ready to go on with our night," said Sherwood, adding that he was the first one out of the door.

Sherwood said a "bald guy" who had been inside the bar — whom he now alleges in his suit is Elkins — came out in "an absolute rage," breaking through the bouncer trying to contain the crowd at the door. Sherwood said he suddenly found himself under assault. Within seconds, he said, he felt his leg snap and he crumpled to the sidewalk as blows continued to rain down on his head.

"I went instinctively into the fetal position, and they kept kicking and punching my head," Sherwood said. "Then they seemed to concentrate on Tom after that. The whole thing happened in about 30 seconds."

Stacha, 44, who had followed his partner out the door, said the beating was over before he could even think about defending himself.

"There were just punches and kicks coming from everywhere," said Stacha, a safety director for an airplane cleaning company.

With Sherwood and Stacha lying on the pavement, the attackers fled on foot. An ambulance was called. Police body camera video taken by officers arriving at the scene — which was turned over to the victims' attorney by the city as part of the lawsuit and reviewed by the Tribune — showed Stacha holding a towel to his face, his head swollen and bleeding. Behind him, Sherwood was shouting in pain. He had propped his foot up on a curb to keep it stationary.

Witnesses at the scene told police that the offenders had fled in two different directions. Based on the descriptions, police quickly found two of Elkins' friends walking down Balmoral Avenue a few blocks away. The other two were not found.

Video of the arrest, which also was turned over as part of the lawsuit and viewed by the Tribune at Cavanagh's office, showed the two men being handcuffed and placed in a squad car. On the ride back to the scene of the attack, one of them cried and denied involvement, while the other hissed at him, "Just stop talking!"

When the officers brought the two back to the scene, they were identified by both a bar employee and Stacha as having been among the attackers, according to police reports and what can be seen on the body cameras. But when they were interviewed at the police station several hours later, both men denied taking part in the beating, telling a detective that Elkins was responsible — and that he was an off-duty officer.

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

"If there was a fight, I'm sure it was the other bald man in a black shirt who is a Chicago police sergeant," said one of the men, later referring to Elkins by name, according to a video recording of the interview reviewed by the Tribune. They also named Elkins' boyfriend and identified him as a police officer in Oak Park.

Elkins

Police held the men for nearly two days before releasing them without charges "pending further investigation," the arrest reports show.

'My head looked like a cabbage'

While detectives questioned witnesses, Sherwood and Stacha were taken to nearby Weiss Memorial Hospital, then transferred to the trauma center at Advocate Illinois Masonic Medical Center in the Lakeview neighborhood, records show.

A day later, on Oct. 1, a detective with the Area North violent crimes division came to the hospital with photo arrays of suspects to see whether anyone could identify the attackers. In a family waiting room, the detective spread a series of photos in front of the couple's friend who was with them that night and witnessed the beating.

The friend "immediately and without hesitation identified Eric J. Elkins in position #3 as an offender in this incident," the detectives' report said.

"(He) circled the picture of (Elkins) and placed his initials and date on the photo line-up for verification," the report said, adding that the friend then said, "He's the drunk guy that was kicking John outside."

The same friend also was shown a separate photo array that included Elkins' boyfriend, according to the report. He pointed at the Oak Park police officer's photo and said he was "80 percent" sure of his involvement, the report said.

At the same time, another Area North detective was showing Sherwood a different series of photo arrays in his hospital room. Sherwood picked out one of Elkins' friends from one spread, but not Elkins, police reports show. In his interview with the Tribune, Sherwood said the entire incident was a blur.

Sherwood underwent surgery on his leg on the day after the attack. To repair the compound fracture, doctors shored up the bone with two metal plates secured with screws, he said. Sherwood was forbidden from putting any weight on the leg for six weeks, and his doctor told him there was a 50 percent chance he'll need a second surgery down the road. As of last week he had missed four weeks of work but was planning on returning once he could get around on crutches.

Stacha, meanwhile, suffered fractures to both his left and right cheekbones as well as damage to his trachea that could have been caused by a punch to the throat. "My head looked like a cabbage," he said. "At some point at the hospital I was choking with blood."

Stacha has since returned to work, although parts of his face are "still numb." He also occasionally coughs up dried blood, he said.

An acquittal and a plea deal

At the time of the incident at the club, Elkins had been on paid desk duty for more than three years because of an allegation of sexual assault filed in his hometown in northern Michigan, records show.

Michigan State Police records show Elkins was accused of getting drunk at a Fourth of July family reunion in 2015 and attempting to fondle four teenage boys, some of whom went to a tent to retrieve pocketknives for protection.

One of the alleged victims who claimed Elkins touched his genitals eventually went to the police. In April 2016, prosecutors filed charges of criminal sexual conduct involving a minor, which carries a sentence of up to two years in prison as well as the requirement to register as a sex offender. A warrant was issued for his arrest, and two weeks later Elkins was booked at the Ogemaw County Jail and released on bond, records show.

In August 2016, Elkins pleaded guilty to reduced charges of assault and battery and disorderly conduct and was sentenced to a year of probation and fined $1,200, court records in Michigan show. He also was ordered to enroll in substance abuse counseling and to avoid alcohol and establishments that serve alcohol during his probation, records show.

Records show Elkins successfully completed his probation in October 2017 — exactly one year to the day before he was picked out of a lineup as an attacker in the bar beating probe.

Guglielmi, the Chicago police spokesman, said Wednesday that Elkins remains on paid desk duty while an internal investigation into the Michigan case is "progressing." He said the probe has been delayed by the criminal proceedings in Michigan and also because the victims and witnesses live far from Chicago.

In 2003, Elkins' career as a police officer had nearly derailed when he was charged with sexually abusing a 16-year-old male student at Admundsen High School, where he worked part time as a security guard. Then a patrol officer in the Englewood District, Elkins was stripped of his police powers and given a $100,000 bond after the grand jury indictment was announced.

The student alleged that Elkins befriended him at the school in the 5100 block of North Damen Avenue, then had sex with him on numerous occasions over a five-month period, both at the school and at Elkins' home, according to the charges. The teen described for investigators the car Elkins drove, provided his personal cellphone number and drew a diagram of Elkins' apartment from memory, according to a 2004 Tribune report of the allegations.

Like most Chicago police officers facing criminal charges, Elkins chose a bench trial instead of opting to have a jury decide his fate. In June 2004, Cook County Judge Kenneth Wadas acquitted the officer on all counts, saying the teen did not have a good recollection of the abuse itself and that no physical evidence corroborated it, according to the Tribune report.

The boy's memories of the car, the officer's phone number and Elkins' apartment were too circumstantial, Wadas said. The phone number could have been offered by the officer in a counseling role, the judge said, and the apartment layout could represent any city two-flat.

"I bet just about every kid in that high school knows where the security guards park and what kind of cars they drive," Wadas said. "Today's street-smart Chicago teenagers? You bet they do."

The Tribune reported that Elkins "raised his hands in court as the judge made his ruling and celebrated in the hallway with fellow officers, who had watched the bench trial to support him."

State's highest-paid superintendent fired following investigation

By Zak Koeske
Daily Southtown

Less than a week before he was set to retire, the highest-paid superintendent in Illinois was terminated Friday for allegedly padding his own pay without authorization, destroying or altering documents involving when he worked and misrepresenting the district's financial status, documents show.

Troy Paraday, who made more than $430,000 this past year as Calumet City District 155 superintendent, was fired following a school board investigation into alleged misconduct, according to a board resolution authorizing his discharge.

An attorney for the district said the board turned its findings over to local police, but it wasn't immediately clear whether they had opened a criminal investigation into the longtime superintendent.

Paraday, 56, had been on paid leave since Oct. 6, pending the outcome of the board's investigation, records show.

Steven Glink, an attorney representing Paraday, said Tuesday that he and his client "completely disagree" with the board's decision and believe its accusations are without merit.

Glink said the board's decision to investigate and ultimately terminate Paraday came just weeks after a Fox 32 Chicago television news report revealed he was set to receive more than $762,000 in compensation for unused vacation and sick days upon his retirement at the end of the month.

"Once his contract came to light on television and they were criticized because they gave him a very good contract ... they were embarrassed and now they tried to find what they think is a legal way out of paying him," said Glink, who referred to the board's recent actions as "a dog and pony show."

He said he didn't believe Paraday had done anything improper and claimed the board was simply firing him to save face after his lucrative contract was exposed.

The district's claims against Paraday include the alleged destruction and alteration of district records and documents; misrepresentations contained in the 2019 district budget presented to the board; the misrepresentation of facts to the board's attorney; improperly granting himself a 6 percent increase in his total creditable earnings for 2019; and implementing a "compensatory time scheme... to result in a sizable financial gain to only the superintendent following retirement," among other issues, documents show.

According to Paraday's own calculation of payment due after retirement — which included three unused personal days, 532 unused sick days and 350 unused vacation days multiplied by his nearly $2,000 per diem rate — the district owed him $1,757,229.45, documents show.

A board-approved resolution discharging Paraday states that "he is not entitled to any severance payment or any post-contractual or post-retirement benefits that may be provided for in his employment contract."

Glink said the discharged superintendent had not yet decided if he would file suit against the district over his termination.

District 155 attorney Catherine Locallo said the district had no comment on Paraday's termination and referred a reporter to his notice of discharge and a bill of particulars detailing the board's reasons for firing him.

Assistant superintendent Joseph Zotto has been acting as the district's superintendent since Paraday's ouster, board member Kathryne Stern said.

Trump rips Ryan on U.S. birthright

President also says number of troops being sent to help border agents could hit 15,000

By John Wagner and Felicia Sonmez
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump pushed forward with his vow to end birthright citizenship Wednesday, even as it put him in conflict with a key leader in his party.

Also Wednesday, Trump said the number of military troops deployed to the U.S.-Mexican border could reach 15,000 — roughly double the number the Pentagon said it currently plans for a mission whose dimensions are shifting daily.

Ryan

The president in tweets said he was willing to take the fight over the constitutionality of an executive order that would deny automatic citizenship to children born in the United States to parents in the country illegally under the 14th Amendment to the Supreme Court.

He also used Twitter to harshly criticize House Speaker Paul Ryan, R-Wis., who a day earlier said that Trump could not carry out such an act.

"Paul Ryan should be focusing on holding the Majority rather than giving his opinions on Birthright Citizenship, something he knows nothing about!" Trump tweeted Wednesday. "Our new Republican Majority will work on this, Closing the Immigration Loopholes and Securing our Border!"

The rebuke from Trump came one day after Ryan pushed back on the president's remarks on the issue, saying "you cannot end birthright citizenship with an executive order."

In remarks to reporters before leaving Washington for a rally in Florida, Trump said the issue of birthright citizenship is "much less complex" than people think. He also maintained that a constitutional amendment would not be required and that the change could be achieved through "a simple vote in Congress" or an executive order.

Trump vowed in tweets earlier Wednesday to end the 150-year-old practice "one way or the other," seeming to leave the door open to either congressional action or a constitutional amendment, which many legal scholars say would be necessary to achieve his aims.

Regarding the the troop deployment, the Pentagon said "more than 7,000" military personnel were being sent to the Southwest border to support the Customs and Border Protection agents. Officials said that number could reach a maximum of about 8,000 under present plans.

Just last week officials were indicating that about 800 to 1,000 might be sent. On Monday, officials announced that about 5,200 were being deployed. The next day, the Air Force general running the operation said more than the initially announced total were going, and he pointedly rejected a news report that it could reach 14,000, saying that was "not consistent with what's actually being planned."

Gen. Terrence O'Shaughnessy, commander of U.S. Northern Command, told reporters the number would exceed the initial contingent of 5,200, but he offered no estimate of the eventual total.

Just 24 hours later, Trump thrust new uncertainty into the picture, catching the Pentagon by surprise.

With his eyes squarely on Tuesday's contests, Trump has rushed a series of immigration declarations, promises and actions as he tries to mobilize supporters to retain Republican control of Congress. His own Republican campaign in 2016 concentrated on border fears.

"As far as the caravan is concerned, our military is out," Trump said. "We have about 5,800. We'll go up to anywhere between 10,000 and 15,000 military personnel on top of Border Patrol, ICE and everybody else at the border."

His comment was the latest twist in a story that has prompted questions about whether Defense Secretary Jim Mattis was allowing the military to be leveraged as a political stunt.

"We don't do stunts," Mattis said Wednesday.

Trump rejected the idea he was "fearmongering" or using the issue for political purposes, but his escalating rhetoric in the waning days of the campaign season calls that denial into question. Trump has railed against illegal immigration, including several caravans of migrants from Central America slowly moving toward the U.S. border. The caravan of an estimated 4,000 people is still nearly 1,000 miles from the border.

Trump's comments Wednesday left some in the Pentagon scratching their heads. Officials said they had no plans to deploy as many as 15,000 troops. The number conceivably could reach 10,000, counting the 2,100 National Guard soldiers who have been operating along the border for months as part of a separate but related mission. The number of active-duty troops tapped for deployment stood at 7,000 as of Wednesday but could reach 8,000.

A deployment of 15,000 would bring the military commitment on the border to roughly the same level as in war-torn Afghanistan. And it would more than double the number of people thought to be in the caravans.

In his Wednesday tweet, Trump asserted that birthright citizenship is not subject to the 14th Amendment because of the inclusion of the phrase "subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

Legal experts have debated for years how to interpret the citizenship clause of the 14th Amendment, but the consensus is one-sided: Most agree that it grants citizenship to those born on U.S. soil.

The first section of the amendment says: "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside."

Some legal scholars argue that the phrase "and subject to the jurisdiction thereof" seems to give the government some leeway to restrict the right, just as other constitutional principles can be limited. But the mainstream opinion is that it is more likely that a constitutional amendment would be needed to change the birthright conferred on people born here.

Wait times for U.S. citizenship applications stretch to 2 years

By Amy Taxin
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — More than 700,000 immigrants are waiting on applications to become U.S. citizens, a process that once typically took about six months but has stretched to more than two years in some places under the administration of President Donald Trump.

The long wait times have prompted some immigrant advocates to ask whether the delays are aimed at keeping anti-Trump voters from casting ballots in elections.

"People are motivated to participate, and they're being frustrated from being able to participate in the elections they're excited about," said Manuel Pastor, director of the University of Southern California's Center for the Study of Immigrant Integration.

The number of immigrants aspiring to become U.S. citizens surged during 2016, jumping 27 percent from a year earlier as Trump made cracking down on immigration a central theme of his presidential campaign. At first, the federal government kept up with the applications, but then the wait grew.

Backlogs are nothing new in the U.S. immigration system. It often takes years to receive asylum or to be deported.

But naturalization — the final step to become an American citizen, obtain a U.S. passport and receive voting rights — had not been subject to such delays in recent years.

Now the average wait time for officials to decide on applications is more than 10 months. It takes up to 22 months in Atlanta and as long as 26 months in parts of Texas, according to official estimates.

Trump tweeted last week that Central American migrants headed north in a U.S.-bound caravan should return home and can apply for American citizenship if they wish. "Go back to your Country and if you want, apply for citizenship like millions of others are doing!" he posted as thousands continued their trek through Mexico.

But immigrants generally must be legal permanent residents of the United States to apply for citizenship and getting a green card can take years — if a person even qualifies for one.

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services said the longer waits to naturalize are because of the surge in applications, not slower processing. The agency decided 850,000 cases in 2017, up 8 percent from a year before.

Despite "a record and unprecedented" spike in applications, the agency is operating more efficiently and effectively and "outperforming itself," spokesman Michael Bars said in a statement.

To become an American citizen, immigrants must hold green cards for at least three years, demonstrate good moral character and pass English and civics tests.

Pa. suspect indicted on 2nd day of funerals

By Maryclaire Dale
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The suspect in the Pittsburgh synagogue massacre was indicted by a federal grand jury Wednesday, and members of a grief-stricken Jewish community endured another round of funerals for victims of the worst anti-Semitic attack in American history.

Robert Bowers, a 46-year-old truck driver who authorities say raged against Jews as he gunned down 11 and wounded six, was charged in a 44-count indictment with murder, hate crimes and other offenses that could bring the death penalty. The indictment was announced on the second day of a weeklong series of funerals for congregants who perished in the mass shooting at Tree of Life synagogue.

"Today begins the process of seeking justice for the victims of these hateful acts, and healing for the victims' families, the Jewish community, and our city," U.S. Attorney Scott Brady said in a statement. "Our office will spare no resource, and will work with professionalism, integrity and diligence, in a way that honors the memories of the victims."

One after another, services were held for three more victims of the rampage: Joyce Fienberg, 75; Melvin Wax, who was in his late 80s; and Irving Younger, 69.

"It can't be fixed," Robert Libman said at his sister's funeral. "My sister is dead. My sister was murdered. There was no one I know like her. Pure goodness. She was the most tolerant and gentle person that I've ever known."

Fienberg's sons, Anthony and Howard, said she spent five years caring for their father as he battled cancer, then, after his death a few years ago, devoted more of her time and energy to Tree of Life. She was a retired researcher at the University of Pittsburgh.

"My mom would be very angry that her funeral wasn't able to be at Tree of Life, and that her friends lost Saturday couldn't be here," Howard Fienberg said.

Younger had a small realty office in Squirrel Hill, the heart of Pittsburgh's Jewish community, and coached baseball for more than 20 years. He loved to talk, and would gladly share his life story or stop strangers on the street to show them pictures of his grandson in California. One friend called him "a kibbitzing, people-loving man."

Widowed a decade ago, Younger had a son and daughter in California, who waited Saturday to learn whether he had survived. "That waiting stage was just unbearable," said his son, Jared. "Saturday was the most lonely day of my life."

Jared Younger said that when his sister contacted him, he had a feeling it was about his father. Irving Younger hadn't been in great health, undergoing bypass surgery last year. Jared Younger said his dad drank Diet Coke for 40 years, quipping he was "anti-water."

The day's other funeral was held for Wax, a retired accountant who was regarded as a core member of the congregation at New Light, which rented space in the lower level of Tree of Life.

Tree of Life Rabbi Jeffrey Myers, a survivor of the weekend shooting, hurried from service to service. "I can't imagine the stress he's under," said his predecessor, Rabbi Charles "Chuck" Diamond.

GENE J. PUSKAR/AP
Pallbearers carry the casket of Joyce Fienberg, 75, from the Beth Shalom Synagogue after her funeral service Wednesday in Pittsburgh. Eleven people were gunned down Saturday.

As Younger's service was wrapping up, Myers momentarily forgot to read a letter to her family that another rabbi had sent.

"After preparing for five funerals, you get a little verklempt," Myers said of his emotional state.

Bowers, who remained jailed without bail ahead of an arraignment scheduled for Thursday, also faces number of state charges filed over the weekend, including 11 counts of criminal homicide.

Allegheny County District Attorney Stephen Zappala said Tuesday that his office sought to have Bowers arraigned on the state charges but were denied by federal authorities.

Zappala said that he would prefer that local residents "sit in judgment" of Bowers in a trial, but instead would let the federal case proceed and put the state charges on hold for the time being.

Federal investigators concluded that Bowers legally acquired and possessed all of the guns recovered from Tree of Life synagogue and his home, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives.

Authorities have not said whether Bowers — who was wounded during the gun battle with police responding to the synagogue — is cooperating with investigators or detailed what he may have told them. But according to the hospital that treated him for two days after the attack, he continued making comments there about wanting to kill Jews, even though some of the nurses and doctors who treated him were Jewish.

Anger toward media spreading out

By David Bauder

JIM MONE/AP

NEW YORK — The hostility she's felt from the public recently wasn't necessarily the last straw in television news photographer Lori Bentley-Law's decision to quit the business after 24 years, but it was one of them.

Bentley-Law's recent blog post explaining why she was leaving Los Angeles' KNBC-TV hit home for many colleagues. While President Donald Trump's attacks on the media are usually centered on national outlets such as CNN and The New York Times, the attitudes unleashed have filtered down to journalists on the street covering news in local communities across the country.

When a president describes the press as enemies of the people, "attitudes shift and the field crews get the brunt of the abuse," she wrote. "And it's not just from one side. We get it all the way around, pretty much on a daily basis."

The Radio Television Digital News Association is spreading safety and self-defense tips to journalists, most notably advising limits on the use of one-person news crews. The RTDNA has begun compiling anti-press incidents, like last week when an intruder was shot after kicking down doors at Fox's local station in Washington. The National Press Photographers Association is developing workshops to spread safety advice to its members.

"The environment has changed," said Chris Post, a photographer for WFMZ-TV in Allentown, Pa. "I've witnessed the transition."

CNN White House correspondent Jim Acosta made news recently by saying Trump's attacks on the media "have got to stop" because he feared someone would get hurt. He's been the target of chants and epithets when covering Trump rallies, including one recently where a man looked at him and made a motion like he was slitting a throat. Since then, three suspicious packages have been addressed to separate CNN offices.

While the examples of Acosta and others who follow Trump are most visible, there are countless other, more private examples that happen across the country — such as when Post arrived to cover an immigration rally and a man in a car asked him where he was going.

Told it was a pro-immigration rally, the man became agitated and stepped on his accelerator, stopping just short of hitting Post and giving him a self-satisfied look, Post recalled.

"I'm 6-foot-5, 300 pounds," he said. "I've had somebody try to grab my camera. When it gets to that point, where does it stop? It's a tough time to be a journalist."

Bentley-Law was startled when the essay on leaving her job got 11,000 hits in three days. She usually counts readers to her personal blog in the dozens. Her intention was to tell friends and colleagues why she was leaving, and instead was flooded with texts and emails from frustrated journalists across the country.

"I suppose my experience isn't unique and certainly resonated," Bentley-Law said via email.

On her blog, she wrote that "I don't want to be immersed in sadness every day. I don't ever want a cute little girl in pigtails to look up at me and say, 'We hate you.' I don't want to hear 'fake news' shouted at me anymore, or to be flipped off while driving my news van."

She said that some of the incidents she wrote about — the hateful little girl and the man who stuck his bare butt out the window and defecated — predate Trump. There are other factors that contributed to her desire to leave, including shoulder woes from carrying heavy equipment for many years and a constant diet of murders and other depressing story assignments.

So far this year the RTDNA's "press freedom tracker" counts 39 incidents of journalists being attacked in the United States, including the June 28 shooting at the Capital Gazette in Annapolis, Md., where five people were killed. In less lethal examples, a man purposely crashed a pickup truck into the side of a Dallas television station, a Miami reporter and a photographer were physically attacked while doing a live shot and a North Carolina crew had its power cable cut while covering a demonstration.

Last year, the first time a count was kept, there were 48 such cases for all of 2017.

"Since the election, people are emboldened more," said Nic Coury, a freelance photographer who works in California's affluent Monterey County.

Coury has been called part of the liberal scum media, an enemy of the state and told he and his colleagues lie all the time. When conservative Arizona politician and former law enforcement officer Joe Arpaio made a local appearance, "it was like walking into the dragon's lair," he said.

Still, Coury has given no thought to quitting. Despite Bentley-Law's experience, Shelley said colleges are finding that more people want to get into journalism.

"It matters," Coury said, "and I think now more than ever it matters."

"I don't want to be immersed in sadness every day. I don't ever want a cute little girl in pigtails to look up at me and say, 'We hate you.' I don't want to hear 'fake news' shouted at me anymore, or to be flipped off while driving my news van."

Study: Oceans have retained more heat than previously thought

By Chris Mooney and Brady Dennis
The Washington Post

The world's oceans have been soaking up far more excess heat in recent decades than scientists realized, suggesting that Earth could be set to warm even faster than predicted in the years ahead, according to new research published Wednesday.

Over the past quarter-century, the Earth's oceans have retained 60 percent more heat each year than scientists previously had thought, said Laure Resplandy, a geoscientist at Princeton University who led the study published in the journal Nature. The difference represents an enormous amount of additional energy, originating from the sun and trapped by the Earth's atmosphere — more than 8 times the world's energy consumption, year after year.

In the scientific realm, the new findings help to resolve long-running doubts about the rate of the warming of the oceans prior to the year 2007, when reliable measurements from devices called "Argo floats" were put to use worldwide. Before that, different types of temperature records — and an overall lack of them — contributed to murkiness about how quickly the oceans were heating up.

The higher-than-expected amount of heat in the oceans means more heat is being retained within the Earth's climate system each year, rather than escaping into space. In essence, more heat in the oceans signals that global warming itself is more advanced than scientists thought.

"We thought that we got away with not a lot of warming in both the ocean and the atmosphere for the amount of CO2 that we emitted," said Resplandy, who published the work with experts from the Scripps Institution of Oceanography and several other institutions in the U.S., China, France, and Germany. "But we were wrong. The planet warmed more than we thought. It was hidden from us just because we didn't sample it right. But it was there. It was in the ocean already."

Wednesday's study also could have important policy implications. If ocean temperatures are rising more rapidly than previously calculated, that could leave nations even less time to cut the world's emissions of carbon dioxide, in hopes of limiting global warming to the ambitious goal of 1.5 degrees Celsius above pre-industrial levels.

The world already has warmed 1 degree Celsius since the late 19th century. Scientists backed by the United Nations reported earlier this month that with warming projected to steadily increase

Wanted: A few good poll workers

Recruitment and retention a problem as many remain unaware of opportunities

WASHINGTON — Local election officials are dealing with myriad issues ahead of Tuesday's contentious midterms, not least of which is securing systems from malicious actors. One lesser-known problem that continues to concern them is the national shortage of poll workers.

They greet you at the plastic folding table set up in your neighborhood's library, church or fire station, asking you for your name, address and, depending on your state, photo ID before handing you a ballot or directing you to a voting machine. More than just glorified receptionists, these underpaid few are the gatekeepers to democracy.

Poll workers can be the difference between a smooth election and long lines, mass confusion and miscounted ballots. But poll workers are older, less prepared and becoming more scarce.

In its 2016 biennial survey, the U.S. Election Assistance Commission found that two-thirds of jurisdictions had a hard time recruiting enough poll workers on Election Day, compared with fewer than half of officials in 2008 and 2012.

The shortage is a matter of recruitment and retention, said Aerion Abney, the Pennsylvania state director for All Voting is Local, a project of the Washington, D.C.-based nonprofit Leadership Conference Education Fund.

"I recognize that being a poll worker is not the most glamorous job," Abney said. "People might not even be aware of it. Being a poll worker is an underappreciated job, but they provide a critical service to the public. We want to make sure people know this is an opportunity that exists."

All Voting is Local organizers claim it is the first multistate effort to recruit poll workers. The project launched its online campaign last month, while also targeting Arizona, Florida, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin through billboard, digital newspaper, radio and social media ads.

Organizers want to make sure poll workers reflect the communities in which they serve to make voters feel more welcome, focusing especially on people of color and younger people.

Poll workers tend to be middle-age or elderly. Younger people often have work or school conflicts, Abney said.

He has traveled around Pennsylvania, showing up at community events and local election offices to spread the word of their initiative. After all, he tells people, it's an opportunity to be civically engaged and get paid. There is no set salary for poll workers statewide, but poll workers in Allegheny County, for example, earn between $115 and $140 a day.

The group's efforts seem to be working. Nationally, organizers have recruited more than 2,400 people — 924 of whom live in Pennsylvania, where organizers have spent more time because needs are more acute.

Cherie DeBrest was ready to sign up to be a poll worker in Pennsylvania. For 18 years, she worked with parents and caregivers as a social worker at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, guiding them through the obstacles of medical care. Over the last three presidential elections, DeBrest, 49, led voter registration drives at the hospital, registering staff and the family members of patients whenever she could.

Until this election, she never sought to become a poll worker on Election Day. For years, she noticed poll workers were much older than her. Who, other than retirees, has the time to take off work on a Tuesday, she thought. But when she saw the city was looking for new poll workers, she figured it was time to act. "I was already thinking about it," she said. "There's no time like the present, so I got on the website and signed up."

Counties and states have tried to recruit new poll workers for years. Local election officials are even targeting high schoolers for the job.

After Hamilton County, Ohio, implemented electronic poll books in 2015, county officials partnered with local pizza chain LaRosa's to hold a countywide competition to see which high school could contribute the most poll workers. The winning school gets a pizza party, and students who serve earn $181.50 for the day.

The benefits of younger poll workers are undeniable, said Sherry Poland, the director of elections in Hamilton County, Ohio. They bring enthusiasm, energy and a familiarity and comfort with technology like electronic poll books and optical ballot scanners, she said. They also are more likely to remain poll workers for future elections.

"It sparks an interest in voting and civic engagement at an early age that might last a lifetime," Poland said.

Hamilton County had only four high school poll workers in 2012, Poland said. In 2016 it had 367 — 14 percent of the county's poll workers that year, she added.

In 2016, Ohio, California, Delaware and Michigan were the only states where more than 10 percent of poll workers were 25 or younger, according to the Election Assistance Commission. (Washington, D.C. also beat the 10 percent standard, which was the national average.) A quarter of poll workers in California were 25 and younger.

Hamilton County, however, still struggles to get enough poll workers for elections, following the national trend, Poland said. It's an "extremely long day," she said, and getting people to commit to a four-hour training class, a two-hour precinct setup, and a 15-hour Election Day is difficult.

More than half of states allow students over 16 or 17 years old to serve as poll workers, according to the Election Assistance Commission.

In 2013, President Barack Obama ordered a review of election procedures after the 2012 presidential election was plagued with long lines. One of the "signal weaknesses" of the U.S. election system, a national commission found, was "the absence of a dependable, well-trained corps of poll workers."

The primary causes of the problem, according to a 2014 report from New York-based think tank Demos, are a lack of uniform training before Election Day, disparate wages, and little recruitment among public employees and high school and college students.

Pipe bomb suspect Cesar Sayoc's van had photos of Trump critics in crosshairs.

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Pipe bomb suspect Cesar Sayoc searched for addresses of his targets online and had photos of many of them on his cellphone, including one of Michelle Obama's driver's license, federal prosecutors said in a letter outlining more evidence against him.

The letter sent by Justice Department prosecutors in New York to a Miami federal judge also says Sayoc began plotting the "domestic terror attack" in July while living in his van. The old white vehicle was plastered with photos praising Donald Trump and targeting his critics, depicting some of Sayoc's alleged targets with red crosshairs on their faces.

The FBI says Sayoc ultimately mailed 15 improvised explosive devices to prominent Democrats, Trump critics and media outlets before he was arrested last week.

Sayoc, 56, faces five federal charges in Manhattan carrying a combined maximum sentence of 48 years behind bars, prosecutors said.

Prosecutors said in the letter to U.S. Magistrate Judge Edwin Torres that Sayoc should remain jailed without bail. A detention hearing is set Friday in Miami, as well as a hearing on when Sayoc should be sent to New York to stand trial. Additional charges are likely, they said.

"Because of the powerful proof that the defendant perpetrated these acts, he poses a substantial danger to the community. In light of the consequences at issue and the likelihood of conviction, the defendant is also a substantial flight risk. Therefore, pretrial detention is appropriate," the letter says.

Among Sayoc's online searches for addresses, prosecutors said, were for former President Barack Obama, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, billionaire George Soros, California Sen. Kamala Harris, New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker, former Attorney General Eric Holder and for "cnn building."

The FBI recovered explosive devices sent to all of them, among others.

Sayoc's cellphone contains photos of some of his alleged intended victims, the letter adds, including Soros, the homes of Obama and former Vice President Joe Biden, and the driver's license belonging to Michelle Obama.

The laptop computer found in the van also has a file with the address in Sunrise, Fla., of the office of U.S. Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz, former chairwoman of the Democratic National Committee. That office was used as the return address on the packages containing the pipe bombs, according to the FBI.

The computer file was labeled "Debbie W.docx".

In addition, prosecutors said the FBI has found DNA evidence linked to Sayoc from 10 of the improvised explosive devices and fingerprints on two of the mailing envelopes.

Sayoc was arrested last Friday outside a South Florida auto parts store after the pipe bombs began surfacing around the country. None of them exploded and no one was injured, but investigators say they contained real explosive material.

"The defendant also placed shards of glass in several of the IEDs for the apparent purpose of maximizing harm to his intended victims through the detonation of the devices that he had mailed," prosecutors wrote.

U.S. pushes for cease-fire, start of talks over Yemen

By Robert Burns and Matthew Lee
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration is calling for a halt to the Saudi-Iran proxy war in Yemen and the start of negotiations in November toward a political settlement of a conflict that has pushed millions to the brink of starvation in the Arab world's poorest country.

The renewed push for a political solution in Yemen comes amid growing criticism of U.S. military support for Saudi Arabia's Yemen air campaign and American arms sales to the Saudis, in the aftermath of the killing of Saudi writer Jamal Khashoggi in a Saudi Consulate in Turkey.

As the administration weighed responses to the Khashoggi case, lawmakers stepped up demands for responses to the murder and to the crisis in Yemen.

Secretary of State Mike Pompeo urged a cease-fire, specifically citing both missile and drone strikes into Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates by Iran-backed Houthis and the airstrikes in populated areas of Yemen by the U.S.-backed Arab coalition.

"The time is now for a cessation of hostilities," Pompeo said in a written statement late Tuesday shortly after Defense Secretary Jim Mattis made similar statements in an appearance at the United States Institute of Peace. The secretary of state urged the implementation of "confidence-building measures" to address the underlying issues of the conflict.

Mattis was more specific than Pompeo in his call for urgent movement toward a political solution to the fighting, under peace talks being urged by U.N. Special Envoy Martin Griffiths.

Mattis said a cease-fire should take effect within 30 days.

"We're calling on all the parties, specifically the Houthis and the Arab coalition, to meet in Sweden in November and to come to a solution," Mattis said.

Sweden's foreign minister said Wednesday that Griffiths has asked Sweden to host such talks.

Griffiths on Wednesday welcomed the U.S. calls for immediate resumption of the political process and said the United Nations remains committed "to bring the Yemeni parties to the negotiations table within a month."

Mattis called for demilitarization of Yemen's border with Saudi Arabia "so that the Saudis and the Emirates do not have to worry about missiles coming into their homes and cities and airports." He also said measures should be taken to "ensure that all Iranian-supplied missiles to the Houthis" are put under "international watch."

"This has got to end. We've got to replace combat with compromise," Mattis said.

Meanwhile, a group of five Republican senators cited the situation in Yemen as well as the Khashoggi killing as reasons for calling on the administration to halt ongoing negotiations with Saudi Arabia on a civilian nuclear energy agreement.

The administration's new push for peace comes amid mounting fears of a fresh Arab coalition assault on the Red Sea port of Hodeida, a city that has been the lifeline for international aid deliveries to Yemen. The city's port is helping keep millions of starving Yemenis alive by serving as the entry point for 70 percent of food imports and international aid.

"People in Yemen face two horrifying menaces: war and hunger," the International Committee for the Red Cross said in a statement.

The conflict in Yemen began with the 2014 takeover of the capital, Sanaa, by the Houthis, who toppled the internationally recognized government. The Saudi-led coalition allied with the government has been fighting the Houthis since 2015.

Passenger belongings, debris found in fatal Lion Air crash

By Niniek Karmini and Stephen Wright

JAKARTA, Indonesia — The search for the crashed Lion Air plane has found aircraft debris and passenger belongings on the seafloor but the object thought to be the fuselage is still missing, an Indonesian official said Wednesday.

Search and Rescue Agency chief Muhammad Syaugi said the findings give search team members confidence they will find the body of the aircraft. The location of the airplane's "black box" flight data recorder has been identified, he said, but currents prevented it from being recovered.

"We saw belongings such as life jackets, pants, clothes scattered on the seabed," Syaugi said. "We believe the fuselage will be around there, we hope that our target can be found."

The 2-month-old Boeing 737 MAX 8 jet plunged into the Java Sea early Monday just minutes after taking off from Jakarta, killing all 189 people on board.

The disaster has reignited concerns about safety in Indonesia's fast-growing aviation industry, which was recently removed from European Union and U.S. blacklists, and also raised doubts about the safety of Boeing's new generation 737 MAX 8 plane.

Syaugi said one of the ships with high-tech equipment being used in the search dispatched a remote-operated vehicle that recorded parts of the aircraft on the seafloor but not the 72-foot-long object detected at a depth of 105 feet that is believed to be the fuselage. He said the area is about 1,300 feet from the coordinates where the airplane lost contact.

Searchers have sent 57 body bags containing human remains to police identification experts who on Wednesday said they'd identified their first victim, a 24-year-old woman, from a ring and a right hand.

Anguished family members have been providing samples for DNA tests and police say results are expected within four to eight days.

Musyafak, head of Said Sukanto Police Hospital, said nearly 150 samples for DNA testing have been collected but more are still needed, especially from parents and children of victims.

Boeing Co. experts were headed to Indonesia on Wednesday and Lion Air has said an "intense" internal investigation is underway in addition to the probe by safety regulators.

Data from flight-tracking sites show the plane had erratic speed and altitude in the early minutes of a flight Sunday and on its fatal flight Monday. Safety experts caution, however, that the data must be checked for accuracy against the plane's black boxes.

Several passengers on the Sunday flight from Bali to Jakarta have recounted problems that included a long-delayed takeoff for an engine check and terrifying descents in the first 10 minutes in the air.

Lion Air has said maintenance was carried out on the aircraft after the Sunday flight and a problem, which it didn't specify, was fixed.

Lion Air's technical director was removed from duty Wednesday at the order of the Transport Ministry. It also has ordered all Boeing 737 MAX 8 planes operated by Lion Air and national carrier Garuda to be inspected. Lion has ordered 50 of the jets, worth $6.2 billion, and currently operates nine.

Turkish prosecutor: Saudi writer killed as part of plan

By Louisa Loveluck and Kareem Fahim

Saudi's top prosecutor, Saud al-Mojeb, left Turkey after two days of meetings in the death of Jamal Khashoggi.

ISTANBUL — Turkey's public prosecutor said Wednesday that Jamal Khashoggi was strangled and dismembered upon arrival at the Saudi Consulate in Istanbul on Oct. 2 as part of a premeditated plan to kill the prominent Saudi journalist and dispose of his body.

The statement, delivered as Saudi Arabia's own prosecutor left Istanbul for Riyadh, marked the most conclusive official description to date of what happened to the journalist and Washington Post contributing columnist when he entered the diplomatic mission last month.

It also intensified pressure on Saudi Arabia to find its way out of a crisis that has elicited criticism from Western allies and put the spotlight on the Trump administration's close relationship with the kingdom.

Irfan Fidan, the Turkish prosecutor, said Khashoggi was "strangled as soon as he entered the consulate" in line with "premeditated plans."

Khashoggi's body, "after being strangled, was subsequently destroyed by being dismembered, once again confirming the planning of the murder," Fidan said.

Turkish media reported that Saud al-Mojeb, Saudi Arabia's top prosecutor, had left for the airport in Istanbul after two days of meetings with his Turkish counterpart and representatives of Turkey's National Intelligence Organization. A senior Turkish official said al-Mojeb did not give Fidan the location of Khashoggi's body or the identity of a "local collaborator" who Saudi authorities have asserted helped dispose of the journalist's remains.

Since the prosecutor arrived in Turkey on Monday, "Saudi officials seemed primarily interested in finding out what evidence the Turkish authorities had against the perpetrators" in Khashoggi's killing, said the official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

"We did not get the impression that they were keen on genuinely cooperating with the investigation," the official said of the Saudi delegation.

Al-Mojeb's visit came just days after Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman hailed the "unique" cooperation between Turkey and Saudi Arabia in the investigation into the killing of Khashoggi, who was last seen entering the Saudi Consulate in Istanbul on Oct. 2.

Turkey says members of a 15-man hit team dispatched from Saudi Arabia killed Khashoggi inside the consulate. Turkish investigators have not publicly released a key piece of evidence in the case — a purported audio recording of what occurred inside.

Saudi Arabia has provided shifting explanations about what happened to Khashoggi, who had written opinion columns criticizing Mohammed. Saudi authorities have acknowledged that Khashoggi was killed in the consulate but blamed the murder on agents acting outside the state's authority.

On Wednesday, a Saudi official said the kingdom had not officially concluded that Khashoggi's death was premeditated.

"The public prosecutor has acknowledged seeing that information from the Turkish side. We have not said if that is true or not true. We are waiting for the results of the investigation," the official said.

Turkish officials have repeatedly complained that Saudi Arabia is hampering the investigation by refusing to provide critical pieces of information, including the location of Khashoggi's body. Turkey has also requested the extradition of 18 suspects who the Saudi government says have been arrested in the case.

Saudi Foreign Minister Adel al-Jubeir said the suspects will be tried in domestic courts.

The killing has unleashed a storm of criticism, causing Germany to suspend export licenses to the kingdom and placing President Donald Trump in a quandary. In addition to being a major purchaser of U.S. weapons, Saudi Arabia sits at the heart of the administration's foreign policy in the Middle East.

Posing as a witch punishable in Canada

By Amanda Coletta
The Washington Post

TORONTO — Two Ontario women have been charged in as many weeks with a seemingly unusual crime that would not seem out of place in 17th-century Massachusetts: posing as a witch.

The first is Dorie "Madeena" Stevenson, a 32-year-old fortune teller in Milton, Ontario, who police allege swindled more than $60,000 out of one of her clients as the owner of Milton Psychic. On her business website, nearly a dozen "accurate, in-depth, amazing" psychic readings are on offer for $75 each.

The second woman is 27-year-old Samantha Stevenson from Toronto, who police claim bilked a 67-year-old man out of $600,000 in a so-called "evil blessing scam." Police say she promised to ward off evil spirits if he sold his house and transferred the money into her bank account until the spirit removal was complete. It was never returned.

(Officials are looking into whether the women are related or if their identical surnames are just a spooky coincidence.)

The women were charged under section 365 of Canada's criminal code, which deals with the crime of "pretending to practice witchcraft." Considered by many to be an archaic section of the law, the offense occurs when someone "fraudulently" pretends to tell fortunes or "to use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment or conjuration." It also makes illegal using "knowledge of an occult or crafty science" to locate lost objects.

The offense carries a punishment of up to six months in prison or a $2,000 fine, or both.

Section 365 has been law in Canada since 1892. It originated in a British statute from 1735 that repealed an earlier law classifying witchcraft as a felony, after centuries of witch hunts in early modern Europe.

The 1735 repeal reserved "a minor punishment" for "cheats and rogues" pretending to practice witchcraft, according to a paper in the Marquette Law Review.

The law remained unchanged in Canada over the decades but for the addition of the word "fraudulently" in the 1950s.

This means that practicing witchcraft is not a crime in Canada, but faking it in order to extort or deceive others is. In fact, in a news release announcing one of the arrests, police were careful to note that the "charge is not connected in any way to any religion."

Legal experts say that convictions under section 365 are extremely rare. Sometimes, charges are dropped if restitution is paid.

In his writings, Roosevelt talks softly

Former president's papers are made available online

By Michael E. Ruane
The Washington Post

RICKY CARIOTI/WASHINGTON POST

Teddy Roosevelt's diary marks one of the darkest days of his life — Feb. 14, 1884 — when his mother and young wife died within hours of one another. The diary is part of a trove of the 26th president's papers made public for the first time.

In his pocket diary, Theodore Roosevelt drew an X under the accursed Thursday of Feb. 14, 1884.

"The light has gone out of my life," the future president of the United States wrote underneath.

Earlier that Valentine's Day, his mother had died of typhoid fever in their home in New York City, and that afternoon his wife had died of kidney failure in the same house, as he held her in his arms.

"For joy or for sorrow, my life has been lived out," he wrote.

He was 25.

This glimpse into the early heartache of the man who would go on to remarry, have many children, and become the 26th president is part of a trove of Theodore Roosevelt's papers that has just been made available online by the Library of Congress.

The 276,000 documents include his reaction to the deaths of his mother and wife, whom he worshiped, the antics of his children in the White House — they shot spitballs at a portrait of Andrew Jackson — and his fury at President Woodrow Wilson, who refused to let him raise a force for the U.S. Army in World War I.

"I am a man of action," he wrote in 1917, "and the President has refused to let me take part."

Roosevelt was then 58, out of office for almost a decade, and would be dead less than two years later of a blood clot.

But selections from his papers displayed by the library last week show the arc of a vigorous life of privilege, loss and public service, along with mentions of pet snakes, roller skates and further hijinks in the White House, where for a time there was also a pet bear.

Roosevelt, known for his gigantic grin, bushy mustache, and pince-nez glasses, served as president from 1901 to 1909. He was vice president under William McKinley, governor of New York, assistant secretary of the Navy, head of the New York City police department, and a New York state legislator.

He led the Rough Riders cavalry outfit during the Spanish American War, was an explorer, historian, big game hunter, conservationist and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

He was also devoted to his family, which included six children.

"You definitely get a sense of how much he loves his children and his family," Michelle Krowl, a Civil War and Reconstruction specialist in the library's manuscript division, said of the papers. "That really comes through. Particularly when he's writing to friends. He'll often talk about the children and ... (their) pets. They have a menagerie of pets in the White House."

"They have horses. They have dogs. They have cats. They have guinea pigs," she said at the library last week. "In 1900 and I think even into 1901, they have a bear named Jonathan Edwards."

The bear was named by the Roosevelt children, in part, for the fiery 18th century New England preacher. "They thought they detected Calvinistic traits in the bear's character," Roosevelt wrote.

"The bear added zest to life in more ways than one," he remembered. "When we took him to walk it was always with a chain and a club. And when at last he went to the zoo, the entire household breathed a sigh of relief, although I think the dogs missed him."

On Oct. 27, 1880, his 22nd birthday, Roosevelt was married to Massachusetts socialite Alice Hathaway Lee, who was then 19.

He called her his "darling little sunshine," and wrote in his diary, "I do not think ever a man loved a woman more than I love her. For a year and a quarter now I have never (even when hunting) gone to sleep or waked up without thinking of her."

But she had a delicate constitution. She gave birth to a daughter on Feb. 12, 1884, and died two days later, hours after her mother-in-law, Martha "Mittie" Roosevelt. She was 22. Mittie was 48.

"We spent three years of happiness, greater and more unalloyed than I have ever known fall to the lot of others," he wrote in his pocket diary two days after his wife's death. "On Feb. 16th they were buried together . . . On Feb. 17th I christened the baby Alice Lee Roosevelt." (Alice Lee Roosevelt Longworth would live a long life, dying in Washington in 1980, aged 96.)

Two years after his first wife's death, Theodore Roosevelt married a childhood friend and former flame, Edith Carow. They would go on to have five children and she would become first lady.

And it is during those years that the papers portray a Roosevelt who is fun loving, humorous, and interested in almost everything.

In 1907, he wrote his 13-year-old son Archibald a letter about an encounter in the White House between members of Congress and his 9-year-old son Quentin's pet snakes.

Quentin had just returned to the White House on roller skates after acquiring three snakes at a local pet store. "I was discussing certain matters with the Attorney General . . . and the snakes were deposited in my lap," the president wrote. "I suggested that (Quentin) go into the next room, where four Congressmen were drearily waiting."

"I thought that he and his snakes would probably enliven their waiting time," he wrote. "He at once fell in with the suggestion and rushed up to the Congressmen with the assurance that he would there find kindred spirits."

A year later, Quentin was in trouble again. He and his friends had deposited spitballs on presidential portraits in the White House. Krowl said the exact method of application is not clear. But one of Quentin's friends, in a memoir, recalled "some very fine shots" at a portrait of Jackson.

Roosevelt made Quentin clean the spitballs off the targeted portraits, and the next day arraigned the youngsters.

He told them that "it would have been a disgrace to have behaved so in any gentleman's house, but it was a double disgrace in the house of the Nation," he wrote. "They were four sheepish small boys when I got thru with them."

By 1917, Roosevelt was eager for the United States to enter World War I on the side of France and Britain against Germany and Austria-Hungary. He was eager for his sons to be part of it and prayed they would experience battle. All three did.

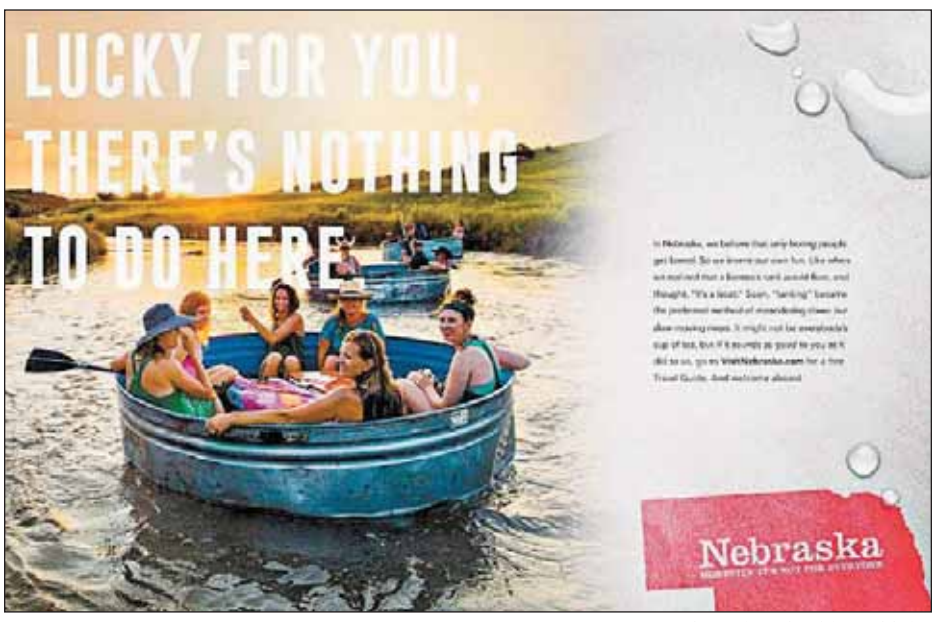

Roosevelt, himself, ever the old Rough Rider, offered to help lead U.S. forces overseas. But Wilson rebuffed him.

"I very much regret that I cannot comply with (your) request," Wilson wrote in a May 19, 1917 telegram a few weeks after the U.S. entered the war. "I need not assure you that my conclusions were based entirely upon imperative considerations of public policy and not upon personal or private choice."

Eleven months later, Quentin, now a young man serving as an allied aviator, was shot down and killed in a dogfight with German planes.

The library's papers contain many of the condolence letters that poured in. One, from a Milwaukee businessman, went:

"I can only express my deep sympathy and say that if my son who is also in France should lose his life I would be heart broken, but proud he lost it in fighting for so just a cause."

NEBRASKA TOURISM COMMISSION

Self-deprecating ads will start in the spring as a way to pitch Nebraska to tourists.

'Not for everyone'? Nebraska using humor to draw tourists

By Antonia Noori Farzan
The Washington Post

Nebraska has an image problem.

For four consecutive years, it's come in last on a list of states that tourists are interested in visiting, according to the travel marketing research firm MMGY Global. Even though travel writers routinely praise Omaha's music and art scenes and the state's spectacular wildlife, people on the coasts tend to think of Nebraska as a really long cornfield they have to drive through to reach the Rockies.

So tourism officials are trying a new approach. The Nebraska Tourism Commission recently revealed its new slogan: "Honestly, it's not for everyone."

A news release from the Nebraska Tourism Commission acknowledges that the state "may not be on everyone's bucket list of places to visit." But, the commission said, "if you like experiences that are unpretentious and uncomplicated or if you enjoy escaping the big city life for moments of solitude in the open plains, creating your own fun or exploring the quirkiness the state has to offer, chances are, you will like it here."

The tagline is featured in ads that will begin running next spring, with the goal of changing people's perception of Nebraska as a place where there's nothing to do, the commission said. One shows hikers on a rock formation alongside the phrase, "Famous for our flat, boring landscape." Another features a waterfall running through a forest and the line, "Another day on the dusty plains."

Brand consultants hired by the state found that most consumers don't consider Nebraska to be a leisure travel destination, the commission said in its news release. The campaign needed to be "disruptive," the commission wrote, because of the "marketing challenge" facing Nebraska. The slogan's self-effacing humor was well-received when tested in out-of-state markets that could potentially deliver tourists to Nebraska, the commission said.

Still, not all Nebraskans are sold on the new marketing strategy. A poll by the Omaha World-Herald shows that a majority of readers say they like the slogan, but critics say that it doesn't help sell the state as a place that tourists might want to visit.

"I just don't think the best way to pitch ourselves is calling out stereotypes about ourselves," Micah Yost, a Nebraska native who owns a branding and marketing firm in Omaha, told The Washington Post. "There's no reason why that would draw people to the state."

So, how would he pitch his home state to outsiders? "Nebraska was part of the original frontier, and there could be the idea of discovery and really helping people discover things that are out here that they maybe weren't aware of," he said, citing the energy of cities like Omaha and Lincoln, and the easy access to outdoor activities, trails and wildlife.

Officials told the World-Herald that the state spent $450,000 on the campaign.

The self-deprecating slogan lends itself to parody. On Twitter, some Nebraskans jokingly proposed their own slogans, such as "Nebraska: We don't want to be here, either."

Water out of thin air: Calif. couple's device wins $1.5M

By John Rogers
Associated Press

MARCIO JOSE SANCHEZ/AP

The Skysource/Skywater Alliance co-founders David Hertz and his wife, Laura, show how the device works.

LOS ANGELES — It started out modestly enough: David Hertz, having learned that under the right conditions you really can make your own water out of thin air, put a little contraption on the roof of his office and began cranking out free bottles of H2O for anyone who wanted one.

Soon he and his wife, Laura Doss-Hertz, were thinking bigger — so much so that last month the couple won the $1.5 million XPrize For Water Abundance. They prevailed by developing a system that uses shipping containers, wood chips and other detritus to produce as much as 528 gallons of water a day at a cost of no more than 2 cents a quart.

The XPrize competition, created by a group of philanthropists, entrepreneurs and others, has awarded more than $140 million over the years for what it calls audacious, futuristic ideas aimed at protecting and improving the planet. The first XPrize, for $10 million, went to Microsoft co-founder Paul Allen and aviation pioneer Burt Rutan in 2004 for SpaceShipOne, the first privately financed manned space flight.

When Hertz learned a couple of years ago that a prize was about to be offered to whoever could come up with a cheap, innovative way to produce clean freshwater for a world that doesn't have enough of it, he decided to go all in.

At the time, his little water-making machine was cranking out 150 gallons a day, much of which was being given to homeless people living in and around the alley behind the Studio of Environmental Architecture, Hertz's Venice Beach, Calif.,-area firm that specializes in creating green buildings.

He and his wife, a commercial photographer, and their partner Richard Groden, who created the smaller machine, assembled The Skysource/Skywater Alliance and went to work. They settled on creating little rainstorms inside shipping containers by heating up wood chips to produce the temperature and humidity needed to draw water from the air and the wood itself.

"One of the fascinating things about shipping containers is that more are imported than exported, so there's generally a surplus," said Hertz, adding they're cheap and easy to move around.

And if there's no wood chips around for heat, coconut husks, rice, walnut shells, grass clippings or just about any other such waste product will do just fine.

"Certainly in regions where you have a lot of biomass, this is going to be a very simple technology to deploy," said Matthew Stuber, a professor of chemical and biomolecular engineering at the University of Connecticut and expert on water systems who was one of the panel's judges.

He called their water-making machine a "really cool" merging of rather simple technologies that can be used to quickly deliver water to regions hit by natural disasters, stricken by drought or even rural areas with a shortage of clean water.

Hertz and Doss-Hertz are just starting to contemplate how to accomplish that.

Theirs was among 98 teams from 27 countries who entered the competition. Many teams were bigger and better funded, while the couple mortgaged their Malibu home to stay in the game. At one point, they were told they hadn't made the final round of five, but one team dropped out and they were back in.

"If you say we were the dark horse in the race, we weren't even in the race," Hertz recalled.

Now, though, they are in for the long, wet haul.

"There's no restrictions whatsoever on how it's used," Hertz said of the prize money. "But Laura and I have committed to using it all for the development and deployment of these machines, to get them to people who need the water most."

Pakistani Christian acquitted of blasphemy, spared execution

ISLAMABAD — A Christian woman who spent eight years on death row under Pakistan's blasphemy law was acquitted and ordered released Wednesday by the country's top court, a ruling that raised fears of violence by religious extremists who held angry protests over the verdict.

Asia Bibi, 54, was in an undisclosed location for her safety, and her lawyer said she would soon leave the country. France and Spain have offered asylum to the mother of five, who is a Roman Catholic.

Thousands of supporters of the Tehreek-e-Labbaik party, led by firebrand cleric Khadim Hussain Rizvi, took to the streets in several cities, demanding Bibi's public execution.

Bibi, who has been held since 2010, was accused of blasphemy after she quarreled with fellow farm workers, who refused to drink from a container used by a Christian.

BISMARCK, N.D. — The four large American Indian tribes in North Dakota are providing free identification to thousands of members in advance of Tuesday's election.

The effort comes in the wake of a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling allowing the state to continue requiring street addresses on IDs, as opposed to other addresses such as post office boxes.

Streets addresses aren't important on reservations, and some feel the rule could disenfranchise thousands of Native American voters.

So far, the Lakota People's Law Project and the Four Directions nonprofit have provided more than 2,000 free IDs. That's about half of a federal judge's estimate of the number of Native Americans who don't possess a voter ID under state rules.

Official: Hit man for Mafia suspected in Bulger's slaying

BOSTON — A Mafia associate and hit man who is said to hate "rats" is under suspicion in the slaying of former Boston crime boss and longtime FBI informant James "Whitey" Bulger, who was found dead hours after he was transferred to a West Virginia prison, an ex-investigator briefed on the case said Wednesday.

The former official said that Fotios "Freddy" Geas, 51, and at least one other inmate are believed to have been involved in Bulger's killing.

Authorities have not disclosed the cause of death. Nor have they said why Bulger, 89, was moved to to the prison, or why a known informant was in the general population instead of more protective housing.

Geas, 51, was sentenced to life in prison in 2011 for his role in several violent crimes.

Wis. OK'd to ask applicants for Medicaid about risky behavior

WASHINGTON — The Trump administration is allowing Wisconsin to become the first state to compel certain poor residents to disclose behavior such as drinking and exercise to qualify for Medicaid — and to charge more to people whose behavior the state judges as risky.

Federal health officials, however, rebuffed an unprecedented effort by Wisconsin to impose drug tests on Medicaid applicants. The rejection placed a limit on the flexibility the administration has been urging states to embrace for the safety-net health insurance system, though illicit drug use can be an item in a health-risks questionnaire.

The decisions were part of an announcement Wednesday that the Department of Health and Human Services' Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services has approved a plan that will make Wisconsin the most recent to compel people to work or prepare for jobs to receive Medicaid.

Four other states have won such permission this year, including Arkansas, which has cut off several thousand people from benefits for failing to meet its "community engagement" requirement. A federal judge has blocked the work requirement in Kentucky, the first state to attain permission last winter; Wisconsin becomes the administration's first new approval since the court ruling early this summer.

The agency's decision in January to let states impose work requirements represented a profound shift in the public insurance program that began in the 1960s as part of the War on Poverty. The Obama administration had rejected several states' requests to create such requirements.

Track Palin's custody delayed for treatment

ANCHORAGE, Alaska — The oldest son of Alaska's former Gov. Sarah Palin has won a postponement on serving a year in custody in an assault case after his lawyer said a bed at a treatment hospital for veterans became available.

Track Palin was supposed to turn himself in to an Anchorage halfway house Wednesday after a judge recently decided new assault allegations disqualified him from a court program intended to rehabilitate veterans and said he would have to serve time instead.

Anchorage District Judge David Wallace approved a motion by Palin's attorney Friday seeking to allow him to begin serving his sentence Dec. 5.

Palin, 29, an Army veteran who served a year in Iraq, has been accused of three attacks, most recently in September after a female acquaintance said he hit her in the head.

Suspect in Ky. store shooting is indicted for murder

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The white man accused of opening fire in a Kentucky grocery store and parking lot, killing two black people, was indicted Wednesday on murder charges, but it's too soon to determine if the death penalty will be sought, a prosecutor said.

The suspect, Gregory Bush, was indicted by a grand jury on two counts of murder, one count of criminal attempted murder and two counts of first-degree wanton endangerment stemming from the attack at a Kroger store in suburban Louisville last week.

Jefferson County Commonwealth's Attorney Tom Wine said he first wants to talk to the victims' families before deciding whether to pursue the death penalty against Bush, 51.

The victims were identified as Maurice Stallard, 69, and Vicki Lee Jones, 67.

In England: Dominic Raab, Britain's Brexit secretary, has told lawmakers in a letter released Wednesday that he expects a long-elusive divorce deal with the European Union to be finalized before Nov. 21, though there is still little sign of a breakthrough on the vexing issue of the Irish border.

In the U.N.: Secretary-General Antonio Guterres has informed the Security Council that he intends to appoint veteran Norwegian diplomat Geir Pedersen as his special envoy for Syria. Pedersen is Norway's ambassador to China and will replace Staffan de Mistura, who plans to leave the post at the end of November.

Do your homework.

Then vote 'no' on bad judges.

We write a lot about holding police officers, public officials and others accountable for their actions. Does that apply to judges too?

You have to wonder.

Earlier this month, Cook County Judge Joseph Claps was acquitted of a misdemeanor by another judge who refused to "speculate" that the object Claps dropped in the courthouse lobby was a gun.

Two Cook County sheriff's deputies who witnessed the oopsie testified that it was a gun. Surveillance video backed them up. But Will County Judge Edward Burmila, who was brought in to hear the case, could only shrug after Claps' lawyer suggested it could have been a water pistol or a cigar lighter or "almost anything."

Claps, of course, knows what fell out of his jacket. But he didn't testify, and Burmila let him off the hook.

We don't think for a minute that this would have been a winning strategy for an ordinary citizen.

Nor do we think it will succeed with the Judicial Inquiry Board, which is investigating. That could lead to discipline by the Illinois Courts Commission. In the meantime, the judge collects a six-digit salary while assigned to administrative duty.

ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Voters should do their research, then cast a ballot that holds judges accountable.

Disgusted? All you can do in this case is trust the disciplinary system to do its job. Now let's talk about yours.

At the bottom of Tuesday's Cook County ballot are the names of 59 Circuit Court judges seeking retention. Your job is to decide whether they deserve another six years on the bench. Are you prepared to hold them accountable? Cook County voters have that power, but they rarely exercise it.

Once elected, judges need a 60 percent "yes" vote every six years. The last time voters removed a sitting judge was 1990.

We're reminded of former Circuit Court Judge Cynthia Brim, charged in March 2012 with misdemeanor battery on a sheriff's deputy after a disturbing courtroom rant about race, justice and "kahoonas." She was acquitted by reason of insanity. She'd been suspended with pay for more than two years by the time the courts commission removed her from the bench in 2014.

Voters could have removed her themselves long before that. Local bar associations had rated her unqualified for the bench in 2000, 2006 and 2012, based on a rigorous vetting process that typically identifies a handful of incompetent judges. But too few voters availed themselves of this valuable resource.

You can see the current ratings at voteforjudges.org.

In makings its endorsements, the Tribune relies heavily on that research, as well as interviews with judges and lawyers. How to fix a disputed tax break for pastors

The life of a church pastor doesn't always fit within the normal workplace boundaries. A minister may carry out many duties in his or her home — counseling parishioners, writing sermons, even holding worship services.

In the old days, pastors often were required to live in parsonages near their churches, and Congress elected to exclude the value of their lodging from income taxes — as it had done with seamen living on ships and other workers obliged to reside in employer-provided quarters. When more clergy came to live in private homes, as most now do, the exclusion was applied to the housing allowances they get.

But a federal district judge in Wisconsin recently ruled the latter break unconstitutional as a special favor to religion. Her verdict has been appealed to the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. Clergy members and congregations across the nation are watching warily, fearful that ending the tax break would force some churches to stop delivering ministerial services, or to close.

Pastors say the tax exemption is vital to their congregations. The Rev. Chris Butler, who leads a Pentecostal church on the South Side, told the Tribune's Angie Leventis Lourgos that he lives close by so he can work with poor people and at-risk youngsters in the neighborhood. "Taking this vital provision away would be detrimental to Chicago's neediest communities that receive important support from ministries run by Chicago Embassy Church and other ministries," he attested.

No doubt he's right. But Judge Barbara Crabb struck down the exemption on the reasonable ground that it "provides a benefit to religious persons and no one else" — violating the First Amendment requirement of government neutrality on religious matters.

ALYSSA POINTER/CHICAGO TRIBUNE 2017

The Rev. Chris Butler, of Chicago Embassy Church, says clergy rely on a housing tax break. Clerics across the country are worried about a court ruling that could end the exemption.

The head of a small, underfunded community outreach group that is secular in nature, who is expected to live close by for the benefit of the organization, might have similar obligations as a clergy member — but is not automatically eligible for the favored tax treatment. If this employee were to receive a housing allowance, it would be included as taxable income, unless he or she could show that the housing location serves the convenience of the employer.

There is no doubt that the existing law grants religious leaders a tax break denied to similar nonreligious people. And there is no doubt that such uneven treatment is constitutionally objectionable. It is also expensive to the Treasury, costing some $700 million a year in lost tax revenue.

The policy has one obvious benefit: It spares the IRS from having to examine internal church policies and practices to see if they meet the usual requirements to exclude the allowances from taxation. The appeals court might find that abolishing it would force just the sort of government entanglement with religion that the Supreme Court has forbidden.

But there's a way to avoid both pitfalls. As Judge Crabb noted, it could expand the exemption in any of several ways, such as applying it to employees of tax-exempt charitable organizations "who are on call at all times." That would ensure religious neutrality while keeping the IRS out of church affairs.

That expansion would also add to the revenue loss, but that effect could be easily offset by putting a ceiling on the amount of housing allowances that are exempt or on the income of the employees claiming it.

The case presents a thorny choice for the courts, and the final decision will leave one side or the other aggrieved. The best outcome would be for Congress to step up to satisfy both sides, as well as the interests of fairness.

WHAT OTHERS ARE SAYING

Republicans are hemorrhaging mea culpa voters who regret having voted for Trump in the first place. And that will cost the GOP not just in House races, but also in state houses across the country. No Democrat needs to be reminded why statewide elections in places like Pennsylvania, Michigan, and Wisconsin matter in presidential campaigns. But until now, the Democratic National Committee has seemed intent on letting everyone ignore the GOP's biggest vulnerability, namely the fact that those three states — not to mention swing states like Florida, Ohio, Iowa, and Minnesota — are electing governors next week.

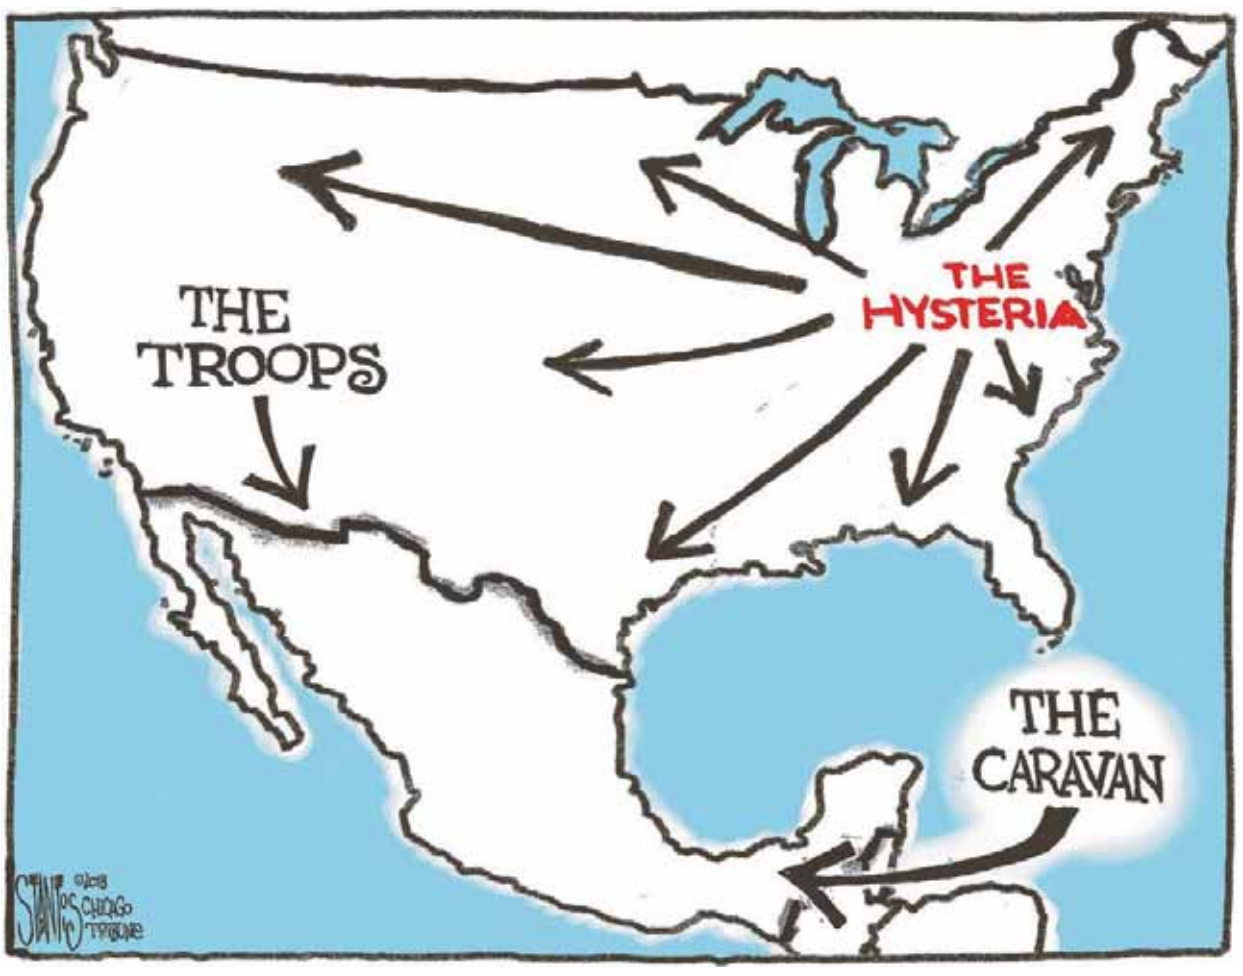

If Democrats end up flipping state houses in places Trump won in 2016, they will have proved themselves capable of winning in the places coastal elites derisively refer to as "flyover America." ... It's not that power in Congress isn't important — it is. But over the long haul, the gubernatorial contests are likely to have a much bigger impact. ... Who knows how the 2016 campaign would have turned out if Democratic governors had controlled Michigan and Wisconsin, places where Hillary Clinton lost by three-tenths and seven-tenths of a point, respectively?

Rahm Emanuel, The Atlantic

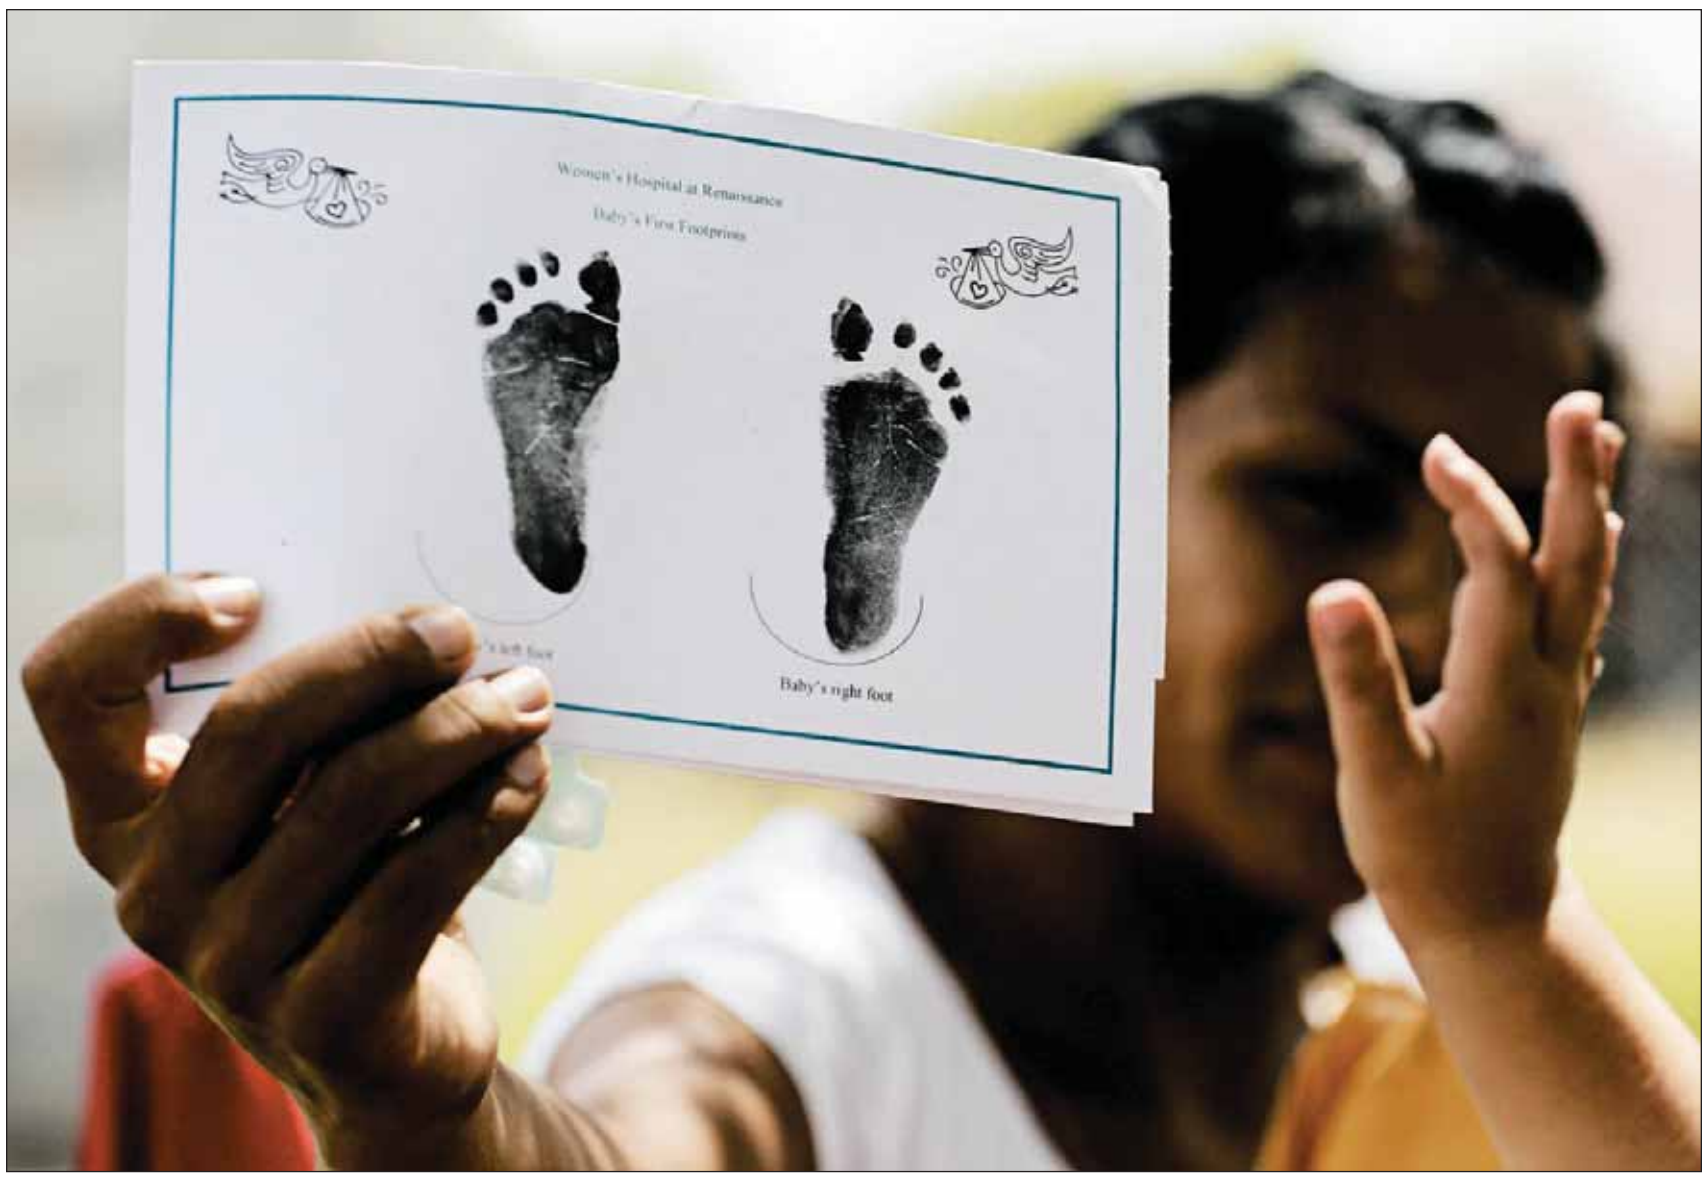

The Detroit Red Wings are so bad this year that they are costing their fans a chance not just at the Stanley Cup, but, even worse, at free curly fries from Arby's. For more than a decade, Arby's has had a promotion in which fans would have the option to get free curly fries if a Red Wings player scored a hat-trick. That hasn't happened yet this year for the 3-7-2 squad and didn't happen for last season's 30-39-13 squad, so Arby's altered the promotion and lowered the bar. Now, fans have a shot at free fries if the Red Wings overall, rather than an individual player, score three or more goals. ... Given the team's futility, fans of the fries are lucky Arby's didn't put the whole promotion on ice.

Curbing birthright citizenship would be self-defeating

STEVE CHAPMAN

Donald Trump and his more ardent supporters don't like unauthorized foreigners. So they have an ingenious idea: Create more of them.

That would be the result of his plan to restrict birthright citizenship by executive order. When unauthorized migrants come, they are denied a legal place in American society — but any children they have here automatically become American citizens. If Trump had his way, they, like their parents, would be consigned to unlawful status.

The number of people who would be affected is significant. In 2014, reports the Pew Research Center, unauthorized parents accounted for some 275,000 births — 7 percent of all births. If these children were denied citizenship, we would add that many new foreigners living here illegally each year. If the change were applied to children previously born to parents who were here illegally, the number would jump into the millions.

To call Trump's idea half-baked is to exaggerate the time it spent in the oven. The 14th Amendment says, "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States." The sole exception is for babies born to foreign diplomats, who are not "subject to the jurisdiction" of the U.S.

The Supreme Court settled the issue in 1898, in the case of a man born here to Chinese parents, who could not become citizens because of the Chinese Exclusion Act,an infamous artifact of racial animus. He left to visit China, and the U.S. government barred him from coming back, claiming he was not a citizen.

But the court ruled that having emerged from the womb in San Francisco, he was. The 14th Amendment, it declared, "has conferred no authority upon Congress to restrict the effect of birth, declared by the Constitution to constitute a sufficient and complete right to citizenship" (emphasis added).

Anti-immigrant advocates fantasize that this policy entices foreigners to come and bear "anchor babies" who will ensure them safe haven. In fact, parents here illegally are subject to deportation regardless of whether their children have citizenship. The "anchor" is not attached to the boat.

From the alarms, you would assume pregnant women are lounging on the far bank of the Rio Grande, waiting for labor pains to begin so they can wade across to deliver. But the Pew Research Center found that in 2009, 91 percent of such births were to parents who were in the U.S. for two years or more.

Unauthorized couples bear children for the same reason other people do: They want them. Their desires and decisions would be the same even if birthright citizenship were eliminated.

Limiting it would not reduce the problems associated with unauthorized migration. If you want foreigners to speak English, adopt American customs and not undercut American workers, denying them citizenship would be supremely self-defeating.

The change would push these individuals into the shadows, deterring them from normal interaction with the rest of us and diverting many to the underground economy. It's a mistake made with Turks admitted to work in Germany. For decades, Germany barred them and their descendants from becoming citizens, impeding their assimilation.

Granting those born here automatic citizenship, by contrast, gives them every reason to become full, contributing members of society, as most children of immigrants are.

A 2013 Pew survey found the offspring of Asian and Hispanic immigrants to be "much more likely than the immigrants to speak English, to have friends and spouses outside their ethnic or racial group, to say their group gets along well with others, and to think of themselves as a 'typical American.'" Their median household income exceeded the national median.

There is also the phenomenon of "birth tourism," when wealthy people from abroad travel here purely to gain U.S. citizenship for their soon-to-arrive infants. It infuriates some Americans, but what's the downside?

If the gripe is that unauthorized interlopers break immigration laws, get government assistance and remain here for good, the critics should be glad to see foreigners come on valid visas, pay their own costs and leave promptly. If we see such behavior as a problem, though, we could deny visas to pregnant women or make it a crime to come here for the purpose of giving birth.

Birth tourism may be unwelcome, but it's not a problem that justifies discarding a noble constitutional rule. The greater problem is Trump's urge to discard noble constitutional rules.

Finding strength in dark times

By Stephen J. Lyons

On the morning of the synagogue massacre in Pittsburgh, my 87-year-old father was undergoing surgery at New York City's Mount Sinai Hospital to repair a broken femur. On his way to a routine doctor's appointment at Mount Sinai, Dad had exited an Uber and tripped over a curb. Luck was twice on his side. He fell in front of the hospital, and a fractured femur is less problematic than a splintered hip. Optimistic as usual, Dad called the accident a "minor setback."

The morning of the surgery a medical team of doctors and nurses was putting my father back together using their expertise, their modern instruments of healing and their compassion. In Pittsburgh that same morning, a 46-year-old white male (I will not dignify his name) left home armed with an AR-15 assault rifle, three handguns, a heart filled with hate and a goal to kill as many Jews as possible.

The killer slaughtered 11 members of the Tree of Life synagogue and wounded six others during, of all things, a baby-naming ceremony. There remains an unknown mental health toll as friends, relatives, first responders and the nation were plunged into despair over yet another mass shooting.

Forgive me the selfish mention of my dad at this time; a broken leg does not come close to 11 murders, but the contrast caught my attention. On the one hand, you have a group of talented professionals working together to heal one elderly man, while conversely you have a lone gunman who savagely ends the lives of 11 people, including two who were older than my father.

What to make of this contrast?

I followed the horrors in Pittsburgh on Saturday while texting with my relatives about the progress of Dad's surgery, and I remembered another day of contrast 17 years ago, on Sept. 11, in the small central Illinois town where I live. In the wake of that sorrowful day my wife and I walked down to a local church to donate blood. On our way we came across a little boy who had fallen off his bike. He was holding back tears while pointing to his knee, which had been bloodied in the fall.

As we comforted the bicyclist and waited for his mom to pick him up, I knew the boy had no idea what had occurred that morning in New York City, Washington, D.C., and in a field in Pennsylvania. On Saturday, I thought back to that day and contrasted his blood with the blood of the almost 3,000 people who perished in the terrorist attack and all the blood that would be spilled in the years of wars to come.

Today that boy would be around 27 years old, a man who has lived through so much relentless homegrown, gun-related carnage. I wonder if he remembers when two strangers comforted him on the sidewalk on the same fateful day when 19 men created a violent event that reverberates to this day.

The past week or so has been especially dark. Besides the Pittsburgh massacre, another loner, fueled by hate, sent package bombs across the country in an attempt to assassinate political opponents. On Oct. 24 in Kentucky yet another white, middle-aged man killed two black shoppers at a Kroger store near Louisville. Thank goodness he did not carry out an apparent plan to enter a nearby Baptist church filled with dozens of black parishioners.

By Sunday it felt as if our nation had reached a tipping point in which evil had permanently overtaken good, hate had supplanted love and that no place — school, church, synagogue, mall, grocery store, nightclub — was immune from what might now be a rite of passage in America: witnessing or being victimized by a mass shooting.

Am I alone in feeling that everyone is either spitting mad or hopelessly depressed, and alone with their anger and sorrow? It is understandable, and perhaps necessary in the short term, to escape into a solitary shell while disengaging from neighbors and community. Yet more loneliness will not sustain us, nor will thoughts and prayers.

Strength exists in numbers, a strength that comes when Americans work together to mend our broken world. We will never regain what we have lost, we will never completely repair the shattered lives of the innocent, but we can build upon what remains.

I believe with all my heart that even in the wake of one of my country's bleakest moments that what remain are the helpers, the teams of Americans spreading more good than evil, and more love than hate.

This week, I saw a Jewish man on a Metra train, hunched over what appeared to be a prayer book, his lips silently moving, the words inscrutable to me.

I saw two young men, teenagers maybe, locked in a loving kiss on a street corner in the Loop. When the light turned green, they reluctantly parted.

In my office building, I saw two Muslim women descending on the escalator, their dark eyes luminescent beneath their hijabs, their dimples creased in laughter.

Later that day, I saw an albino bucket boy, solemn between shows for the tourists, his pale blue eyes looking up to the sky.

By the Randolph Street Bridge, I saw one elderly man standing over another, pressing money into his palm. The homeless man croaked out his blessings in a deep baritone.

On Randolph Street a few days prior, a blues band of black and white men played a searing tune, its title just beyond reach, as passers-by lingered to listen. Some nodded to the thumping bass line, others held up their phones to record video they would later share. "I was here," they might say. "I saw this."

Aboveground, the lights of the theater marquees twinkled in the dusk as commuters hustled home. For others, the day was just beginning. What beautiful sights to see in the city of Chicago. How lucky I was to see them.

This is America to me.

A secular prayer for my neighbors in Squirrel Hill

By Stephen Heyman

My wife, Yana, and I moved to the Pittsburgh neighborhood of Squirrel Hill from Paris in the fall of 2015. Technically we are Jewish, but the only thing we did religiously up to that point was eat smoked fish. We never went to synagogue and had not been bar or bat mitzvahed. I'm not sure we had any idea of what being Jewish meant.

We rented our house sight unseen. We didn't even realize Squirrel Hill was a Jewish enclave until we met our first Orthodox neighbor, Rochel, a hippie-ish mother of three who swept up her chestnut hair in fluorescent headscarves. "Welcome to the shtetl!" she said, and invited us to our first Pittsburgh Shabbat dinner.

That November, Yana and I watched the news as the attacks unfolded in Paris. We felt a mixture of grief and relief, wanting to return to the city in solidarity, but also grateful that we had landed in a place that seemed so removed from international terrorism, so safe, particularly for Jews. "If you're frum," one neighbor told us, using the Yiddish word for observant, "Pittsburgh is paradise."

At our next Shabbat dinner, I spoke to my new friend Sruli, from two doors down. He plays harmonica in a Jewish-flavored funk band — yes, such things exist. I asked if he had ever been to France. "I don't think they'd like me over there," he said.

"Why not?"

He grabbed his orange beard and gestured to his yarmulke. "Because of this, dude."

The Shabbat invitations kept coming. We laughed when our neighbors showed up on our doorstep with a ram's horn to blow or palm fronds to shake, the rites of different holidays.

Soon other sides of the community came into view. On Saturday afternoon runs, we'd pass Orthodox boys coming home from shul with their starter-set earlocks, shirts untucked and broad-brimmed hats nattily tipped to the side. We'd see Conservative Jews, fathers and daughters, walking to synagogue in modern suits and fancy dresses. And we'd see Reform and secular Jews buying challah from an artisan bakery rather than the kosher supermarket.

Our next-door neighbor happened to be a rabbi who moonlights as an IT guy. Or vice versa. Izzy, short for Yisroel, is an extremely charming man, with a giant gray beard, who dresses in a chic remix of Ellis Island immigrant garb, including suspenders and a newsboy cap. One day he knocked on our door, garden shears in hand. He wanted to cut a hedge that was spilling from our yard into his. Also, he said, "I lost my father."

He delivered the news without sentimentality. There was protocol to fall back on: the shiva (the first seven days of mourning) and the shloshim (the extended grieving period); and preparations would need to be accelerated because of the onset of Sukkot, the harvest celebration. There was also a bris, the ritual circumcision, for yet another grandson. He set to work on the hedge.

Then came a night last year, when my wife's mother was very sick — her oncologist had told us the worst possible news — and my father-in-law begged us to ask Izzy the rabbi/IT guy to say a prayer for her.

"Seriously?" I asked Yana. We felt awkward; we had kept the illness private. Yana knocked on the door. I stood behind her.

Izzy was asleep. His wife, Karen, mother of 10, born in South Africa, answered. Again, no sentimentality — just kindness. "What's your mother's Hebrew name?" she asked.

We told her that Yana's mother had no Hebrew name, that she had been born in Soviet Ukraine, where Judaism was all but banned. Karen nodded. She promised that Izzy would say a prayer the following day.

Since the shooting at Tree of Life synagogue, I've been wanting to say a prayer for my Jewish friends in Pittsburgh. Such prayers are hurled about the internet with alarming facility, but I don't really believe in God, and I don't know how to invoke a negative space.

Without prayers, all I have are thoughts. I've been thinking about the different kinds of Judaism: my kind; Izzy and Karen's kind; the mystical, Klezmer-playing Sruli's kind; the kind practiced by the 11 murdered at Tree of Life; the kind embraced by the Reform families who get their challah from the hipster bakeshop.

I've also, curiously, been thinking about former New York Mayor Ed Koch's tombstone, how he inscribed it with journalist Daniel Pearl's dying words: "My father is Jewish, my mother is Jewish, I am Jewish."

What a strange thing to put on your grave, I once thought, so intense, so tribal. But now I understand better. I had always deluded myself into believing that being Jewish was an option, something I could switch on or off, depending on the situation. The closer the attacks come, the less I feel that way.

Trying to ban hate speech in America is not the answer

By Erwin Chemerinsky

The wave of deeply disturbing hate crimes in recent days — the killing of two African-Americans, allegedly by a white supremacist in Kentucky, the mail bombs sent to numerous former and current officials, the massacre at a synagogue in Pittsburgh — has led to new calls to ban hate speech.

Although the government may impose greater punishments on crimes motivated by hate, the law is clear that the expression of hate is protected by the First Amendment. The government cannot punish speech even if it is deeply offensive. And there is no reason to believe that censoring hate speech will make hate crimes less likely.

The Anti-Defamation League reports that anti-Semitic incidents across the country have increased dramatically.

I often have the sense that a rock has been turned over in society in the last couple of years and people are expressing and acting in a way that has not been seen for decades. And I believe that President Donald Trump's divisive rhetoric and his race-based appeals have contributed to this.

Last year, after a protester was killed during an anti-racism march in Charlottesville, Va., Trump said there "were very fine people" marching among the neo-Nazis chanting "Jews will not replace us."

Trump has appealed to hate and stoked its flames. Yet the law is clear that he — like all Americans — has the right to do so.

In fact, the First Amendment unquestionably protects hateful speech. In the late 1970s and early 1980s, the village of Skokie — a Chicago suburb with a significant population of Holocaust survivors — did everything it could to keep the Nazi party from marching. But every court, including the U.S. Supreme Court, ruled that the Nazis had the constitutional right to demonstrate and express their hateful message.

In 1992, the high court declared unconstitutional an ordinance in St. Paul, Minn., that banned burning a cross or painting a swastika in a manner likely to anger, alarm or cause resentment. The justices unanimously ruled that such symbols of hate are protected by the First Amendment.

Typically, in both the United States and Europe, laws prohibiting hate speech outlaw expression that "stigmatizes," "demeans" or "insults" people on the basis of race, religion, gender or sexual orientation. In the early 1990s, more than 360 U.S. colleges and universities adopted hate speech codes using language like this. Every code taken to court was declared unconstitutional.

Moreover, hate speech is protected under the Constitution because it expresses an idea, albeit a vile idea. Protecting hate speech is necessary because the alternative — granting governments the power to punish speakers they don't like — risks even greater harm.

"Speech that demeans on the basis of race, ethnicity, gender, religion, age, disability, or any other similar ground is hateful; but the proudest boast of our free speech jurisprudence is that we protect the freedom to express 'the thought that we hate,' " the Supreme Court declared in June 2017.

History shows that punishing hate speech risks creating martyrs and rallying support. There is no evidence that banning hate speech does anything to lessen the presence in society of racist ideas or even racist crimes. The law is clear that hate-motivated crimes can be subject to enhanced punishments; it is just the speech that is protected by the First Amendment.

I do not minimize the harms of hate speech, and I am truly frightened by the hate crimes of recent days. It is imperative that we reflect as a society on what is causing this and what to do about it. But censorship is not the answer.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Political fault lines

Thank you, Kristen McQueary, for putting into words what I have been feeling for the past two years ("Illinois politics: Conservative women on outside," Oct. 30). Yes, I am a female voter, but that doesn't mean I automatically side on the liberal end of "women's issues," an erroneous assumption I feel the political progressives make right now. In my mind these very vocal and active progressive women have created an unhealthy environment where we conservative women self-censor our voices — on issues such as limiting abortion rights (under many circumstances), embracing fiscal and budget discipline, developing pension and tax reform, and promoting women based on their merits not just their gender — for fear of being cast as anti-feminist or anti-woman.

For a moderate female voter, the progressive left's current stance of "you are with us 100 percent on our progressive issues or you are against us" has the impact of disenfranchising conservative women from the women's movement. But we also believe in a need for more strong female corporate and political leaders from all persuasions who can help to create a more diverse leadership environment. We just wish for the return of a time when politicians, female and male, of all parties would see the value of incorporating moderate voices into the discussion and in working together on all issues, not just women's topics, to reach a productive compromise and progress for everyone!

Warning signs

Wednesday morning, a father and mother woke to a house with their three children gone, forever.

In an appalling violation of responsibility and respect, a young woman in Rochester, Ind., ignored school bus signage and took the lives of their children and another who waited with them for their bus.

When I began driving, my mother said to me, "If you strike a child, you will never get over it." Each time I leave our driveway, I utter a prayer that I not hurt anyone.

I am struck by increasingly aggressive driving on neighborhood streets, as well as major roadways, where many drivers endanger other travelers.

This is a conversation that needs to be addressed in strong terms as we struggle to reclaim respect for the lives of others.

— Betty Baker, Homewood

Offering sanctuary

There are thousands of men, women and children walking toward the United States seeking political asylum and safety. President Donald Trump has ordered troops to the U.S. border with Mexico to stop them. Wouldn't it be better if 3,000 U.S. families — or church congregations — stepped up and offered to sponsor these families? Providing food and shelter for people who are fleeing for their lives seems so much more American — so much more Christian — than calling out the troops. It's called compassion and love; it's not an invasion.

— Leonard Haynes, Homer Glen

Midterm folly

I sincerely hope American voters see behind the ruse President Donald Trump is attempting.

Sending thousands of troops to the border well in advance of the asylum-seekers' pending arrival is meant to bolster his "tough on the border" rhetoric. Also, his purposely misleading threat to alter the 14th Amendment with an executive order is another blatant appeal to his base's fear of immigrant hordes. How much more can the people endure of his daily attacks on our sensibilities?

— John Hankes, Geneva

Proxy war

Campaigns in the current governor's race would seem to cast in opposition two politicians not even in the running for the office. Those two are, of course, our commander in chief and our Illinois speaker of the House. That speaker has held the office all but two years since 1983 and must share some responsibility for the fortunes of our state during that period. Many are disappointed with the current state of affairs in Illinois and how these conditions have evolved during the past.

A recurrent theme in the governor's race is that "four years of failure is enough." Is it fair to suggest that three decades of failure is also enough? If so, a voter's choice seems clear.

Wages increase by 2.9 percent

Growth is biggest U.S. workers have seen since 2008

By Heather Long
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — U.S. workers are seeing the largest wage increase in a decade, the Labor Department reported Wednesday, as companies compete harder for employees than they did in recent years.

The typical worker received a 2.9 percent raise from September 2017 to September 2018, according to the Labor Department's Employment Cost Index, a widely watched measure of pay. It's the biggest increase since the year that ended in September 2008, during which wages rose 3.1 percent.

Sluggish pay growth has been one of the biggest problems in this recovery, but employers are finally having to hike wages at a more normal level typically seen during good economic times.

Unemployment is at a 49-year low and there are more job openings than jobless Americans, which forces companies to fight for available workers.

"Wages are grinding higher as the labor market continues to tighten," said Justin Weidner, an economist at Deutsche Bank. "Wage growth is likely to be over 3 percent again soon."

On Friday, the Labor Department will release the other most-watched wage metric: average hourly earnings. Many economists expect that will be above 3 percent for the first time since April 2009.

"How hot is the labor market? Hot enough for employers to pony up some more cash to get workers to come work for them," wrote Chris Rupkey, chief financial economist at MUFG Union Bank, in a note to clients.

In a sign companies are struggling to find enough workers, just 23 percent of companies said their firms are not have any trouble hiring, down from 42 percent a year ago, according to a survey by the National Association for Business Economics released this week.

McDonald's plans to sell 34 acres alongside its former Oak Brook headquarters to a developer that wants to build high-end town homes, thwarting the local park district's effort to buy the vacant land and continue using it for sports fields and open space.

Homebuilder PulteGroup has a contract to buy Autumn Oaks, the 34-acre site at Jorie Boulevard and Kensington Road, the buyer and seller confirmed Wednesday.

Pulte is proposing a luxury, gated residential community with 170 town homes on the property, which was previously used as soccer fields and park space, according to the statement. "Pulte is focused on making investments in communities where we know consumers are looking for a variety of new housing options of the highest design quality," Rob Getz, vice president of land acquisition at Pulte, said in a statement provided by commercial real estate brokerage Jones Lang LaSalle.

The sale price was not disclosed.

Pulte's bid creates a big obstacle to the park district's plans.

The Oak Brook Park Board in July unanimously voted to put a referendum on the Nov. 6 election ballot for a $17.9 million bond sale to fund the site's purchase.

Ryan Ori
On Real Estate

But the park district has not submitted a formal bid, since it requires a referendum, JLL spokeswoman Lesley Long said. "Pulte has been in negotiations and talks with McDonald's long before the park district contemplated a referendum," Long said in an email.

Pulte has not presented formal plans to the village board, and there is no guarantee that the developer will gain zoning approval.

"We're going to wait and see what the residents decide on Nov. 6 and then go from there," said Laure Kosey, executive director of the park district. "If the referendum were to pass, we would approach McDonald's and see if there's any opportunity to purchase the land and keep an open space."

McDonald's opened its new headquarters in Chicago's Fulton Market district in June, and the company is in the process of trying to sell more than than 100 acres in Oak Brook. Brokers Scott Miller and Lindsey Fahey of JLL are representing McDonald's in the Oak Brook property sales.

The company in October 2017 sold an office building at 711 Jorie Blvd. to Pennsylvania-based Exeter Property Group for about $14.5 million, according to DuPage County property records. In July, McDonald's announced plans to sell McDonald's Plaza, an office building and large parking lot along the Reagan Memorial Tollway, to Hines.

The Houston-based developer plans to demolish the office building and redevelop the 16.5-acre site into multiple new towers. Hines is expected to seek zoning for a mix of office, residential, hotel and retail space on the site.

Autumn Oaks is south of the tollway, and just west of McDonald's former 74-acre headquarters campus. The main campus remains for sale, according to JLL.

Pulte's proposed gated community would include a series of lagoons that will help with storm water management, according to JLL.

Atlanta-based Pulte, one of the country's largest homebuilders, is a longtime player in the Chicago area. This year the firm has announced plans for housing developments in Naperville, Vernon Hills, Plainfield, Wheaton and Woodridge, totaling more than 430 home sites, the statement said.

"Just as we did with the former McDonald's Plaza, it was important to us that we find a buyer that could deliver an exceptional vision for the community, and we are thrilled to have found a buyer that is bringing an exciting residential vision to the current and future residents of Oak Brook," Joe Endress, McDonald's vice president of facilities and systems, said in the statement.

Food hall planned in former poultry processing facility

By Ryan Ori
Chicago Tribune

A Pittsburgh-based food hall operator is coming to a former poultry processing facility in the Fulton Market district, adding to the neighborhood's already extensive dining options and Chicago's growing list of multivendor food emporiums.

Galley Group has leased 12,912 square feet on the ground floor of the former Aspen Foods building at 1115 W. Fulton Market, the company and landlord McCaffery Interests said.

A food hall with five yet-to-be-chosen restaurant concepts is expected to open there in April, co-founders Tyler Benson and Benjamin Mantica said.

"Chicago is an incredible food city," Mantica said. "There's a deep pool of chefs who want to open their own restaurant, but the cost is too high. We think our value proposition resonates well in Chicago."

Food halls have boomed in Chicago in recent years, including multivendor venues such as Revival Food Hall in the Loop and single-operator concepts such as Eataly near North Michigan Avenue.

Food halls, which typically feature stalls with meals from smaller local restaurants and chefs, differ from chain-dominated food courts traditionally found in shopping malls and airports.

Just down the street from Galley Group's planned space, the London-based publisher of Time Out entertainment magazines plans to open a food hall at 916 W. Fulton Market next year. That concept, called Time Out Market, originated in Portugal in 2014.

DIMIT ARCHITECTS LLC

Pittsburgh-based Galley Group plans to open a food hall in a former poultry processing facility in Chicago's Fulton Market district.

Galley Group, which started in 2015, has two food halls in Pittsburgh, one in Cleveland and one that will open this month in Detroit, with plans to expand to additional cities, the company said.

Galley Group's model is a hybrid of food halls and incubators designed to launch new food businesses.

The company plans to create five fully built-out kitchens, which it will provide rent-free to the five fledgling Chicago chefs or restaurants that it chooses.

Galley Group also provides things like wait staff, plates and silverware, as well as resources such as marketing, branding, social media and menu design. That provides a chef looking to open a first restaurant, or a company looking to add a second or third concept, an upfront cost of as little as $10,000 or $15,000, the company said.

"We consider ourselves more like a tech accelerator than a food hall," Mantica said. "We've tried to eliminate every barrier to entry."

The company funds its leases and earns profits by taking 30 percent of the vendors' sales, as well as owning and running coffee and cocktail bars, according to the company's founders.

Customers will order at the kitchens, with the order then delivered to communal dining or

Deadline for bids set

Tribune Publishing gives potential buyers until 11 a.m. Thursday

By Robert Channick
Chicago Tribune

Tribune Publishing has given potential suitors a deadline of 11 a.m. Thursday to submit a formal bid to buy the Chicago-based newspaper company.

The owner of the Chicago Tribune and other major daily newspapers has retained investment bank Lazard to conduct a sale process, after months of open-ended speculation regarding interest from potential buyers, according to sources.

Tribune Publishing spokeswoman Marisa Kollias declined to comment Wednesday.

The deadline was included in a letter this week outlining bid requirements. All offers must include purchase price and sources of financing, among other specifics, sources said. Tribune Publishing reserved the right to evaluate terms and conditions, and to accept or reject any bids for board consideration, according to sources familiar with the letter.

Parties that have shown interest in buying Tribune Publishing include newspaper chain McClatchy, investment firm Donerail and Texas-based newspaper owner and former Sun-Times Media CEO Jeremy Halbreich, sources said. Michael Sacks, chairman and CEO of Chicago-based asset management firm GCM Grosvenor, also has explored a deal, according to published reports.

"We do not comment on rumors and speculation," McClatchy spokeswoman Jeanne Segal said in an email Tuesday night. Halbreich declined to comment, while Donerail and Sacks did not respond to a request for comment Wednesday.

Tribune Publishing, formerly known as Tronc, also owns The Baltimore Sun; Hartford Courant; Orlando Sentinel; South Florida's Sun Sentinel; the New York Daily News; the Capital Gazette in Annapolis, Md.; The Morning Call in Allentown, Pa.; the Daily Press in Newport News, Va.; and The Virginian-Pilot in Norfolk, Va. The company reverted to its legacy Tribune Publishing name earlier this month.

Sources say Tribune Publishing is seeking $17 to $20 per share, which would value the company at upward of $700 million. The stock closed at $15.09 per share on Wednesday.

California-based newspaper chain McClatchy, a publicly traded company that owns more than 30 newspapers in 14 states, emerged as a potential buyer in September, according to sources familiar with discussions. The Donerail Group, a nascent New York-based investment firm headed by former Starboard Value executive Will Wyatt, has been in talks to buy Tribune Publishing since early August.

In June, Tribune Publishing — then known as Tronc — completed its $500 million sale of the Los Angeles Times and San Diego Union-Tribune to biotech billionaire Patrick Soon-Shiong, leaving it a smaller but virtually debt-free company. Soon-Shiong, who still owns 25 percent of Tribune Publishing, is in discussions to partner with McClatchy in a potential merger with the Chicago newspaper company, which would likely involve transferring his stake in Tribune Publishing to the new ownership group, sources said.

Sun-Times CEO Eisendrath resigns

By Robert Channick

ERIN HOOLEY/TRIBUNE 2017

Chicago Sun-Times Media CEO Edwin Eisendrath announced his resignation Wednesday, stepping down a little over a year after leading an investor group's purchase of the tabloid newspaper.

Eisendrath, a former alderman who partnered with the Chicago Federation of Labor and other investors to buy the money-losing Sun-Times, Chicago Reader and other assets in July 2017 for $1, told staffers in a statement that he tendered his resignation at a recent board meeting.

It is unclear what, if any, ownership stake Eisendrath has, but Sun-Times spokeswoman Kimberly Eberl said he will remain on the board.

Nykia Wright, who has been chief operating officer of Sun-Times Media since October 2017, has assumed the role of interim CEO effectively immediately, the company said.

Eisendrath's investor group stepped up to buy the Sun-Times after federal antitrust regulators rejected a bid by Chicago Tribune owner Tribune Publishing, then known as Tronc, to acquire its longtime rival.

In his statement Wednesday, Eisendrath said he has been "largely successful" in turning around the Sun-Times, which was losing millions of dollars per year at the time of the acquisition.

"Not only did we stop the (Tribune) merger, we successfully relocated, rebranded, restructured," Eisendrath said.

Part of that restructuring was the sale of the weekly Reader in June to an ownership group led by Chicago Crusader Publisher Dorothy Leavell. Terms of the deal were not disclosed.

Eisendrath said the company erased more than $8 million in annual structural losses and will be cash-flow positive by early next year.

"I'm honored to step into this role and build on the momentum we created this past year," interim CEO Wright said in a statement.

The Harvard-educated Eisendrath served as alderman for Chicago's affluent 43rd Ward, which includes parts of Lincoln Park, Old Town and the Gold Coast, from 1987 to 1993, when he resigned to become regional administrator for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

In 2006, Eisendrath unsuccessfully challenged then-Gov. Rod Blagojevich in the Democratic primary. Eisendrath made an unsuccessful Democratic primary bid for Congress against U.S. Rep. Sidney Yates in 1990.

bar areas. Many food halls focus on lunch crowds, but Galley Group said its locations also do large volumes of brunch, dinner and beverage sales.

Galley Group is immediately taking online applications from individuals or startup concepts interested in operating one of the five kitchens.

It will choose 10 contenders, whose pitches will be screened by a panel of Chicago restaurant experts before the five winners are chosen, Mantica and Benson said.

Concepts typically stay for a year or more. Some vendors then launch their own long-term restaurants or go into catering or consulting, they said.

"You can run a restaurant for the first time at a really low cost, and if you decide it's not for you, you haven't risked your financial well-being by investing hundreds of thousands of dollars," Benson said.

Galley Group will be the only ground-floor tenant in the Fulton Market building, McCaffery Interests executive Clayton McCaffery said. The firm, which will finish its conversion of the building in December, is seeking one or two office tenants to fill the second and third levels, he said.

The Vault, a co-working firm, had agreed to move into more than 20,000 square feet in upper floors before that deal recently fell apart, Crain's Chicago Business reported this week.

Chicago-based McCaffery Interests bought the building for $10.5 million in 2015.

Galley Group's deal is the latest in a long line of real estate deals transforming the area west of the Kennedy Expressway downtown, which was once dominated by meatpackers and food distributors.

After high-end restaurants flocked to Randolph Street years ago, the district in recent years has attracted major office tenants such as McDonald's headquarters and Google's Midwest office, as well as boutique hotels, retail and residential towers.

SLEEP SHERPA

Sleep Sherpa opened its first showroom in 2016 in Minneapolis. Its second is expected to open in Chicago's River North neighborhood later this month.

Mattress review website to open Chicago showroom

Sleep Sherpa plans to bring store to River North

By Lauren Zumbach
Chicago Tribune

Leesa, Saatva, Helix, Purple, Tuft & Needle, Yogabed, GhostBed, Oso, Bear — staying up to speed on the dozens of companies trying to sell you a mattress online could keep you up all night.

A new mattress store in Chicago wants to make it easier for shoppers to test-drive at least a handful of them.

As Mattress Firm shuts down more than 200 stores, including several in the Chicago area, the creator of mattress review website Sleep Sherpa is preparing to open a 2,500-square-foot showroom for online mattress brands in late November in the city's River North neighborhood.

Ben Trapskin, the Minneapolis-based founder of Sleep Sherpa, started reviewing mattresses and other sleep products about three years ago. Frequent moves in the previous couple years required mattress purchases, and the shopping experience left him unimpressed.

While many of the online-only mattress brands offered risk-free trials, returns were still a hassle, and products could be tough to compare online, he said.

Trapskin had no intention of getting into retail. But as his audience grew, he got the idea for a store where customers could try the different brands for themselves. He left his job as a librarian to focus on Sleep Sherpa, which makes money on commissions from mattress brands when visitors make a purchase. Trapskin opened his first bricks-and-mortar showroom in late 2016 in Minneapolis.

"This ... hopefully helps (people) make the right decision the first time," he said.

At the second location in River North, shoppers will be able to test mattresses from brands including DreamCloud, Nectar Sleep, Leesa, Brentwood Home, Luft, WinkBeds and Snuggle-Pedic, Trapskin said.

"We do cycle in some newer (brands) to see how customers react and get rid of some that don't resonate," he said. "It's a kind of curation of mattresses people are digging."

Most mattresses won't be available to take home immediately and will need to be ordered online. Trapskin plans to start stocking one popular brand, Nectar Sleep, about a month after the showroom opens and may add others if space permits. The store will also have pillows, mattress protectors, organic cotton sheets and adjustable beds.

At least some of Mattress Firm's woes have been blamed on having too many bricks-and-mortar stores. But where that chain tried to use a big footprint to make itself the go-to mattress seller in a city, Trapskin said Sleep Sherpa's concept is novel enough to make its store a destination.

Trapskin isn't the only one who has realized some shoppers aren't crazy about splurging on a new mattress without seeing what it feels like first. Only about 35 percent of the population is open to buying a mattress sight unseen, according to Wedbush Securities' consumer surveys.

Earlier this year, mattress-maker Casper, which began as an online-only brand, announced it would open 200 stores within the next three years. The company has stores in Chicago's Fulton Market district and at west suburban Oakbrook Center. Other primarily online mattress brands have opened showrooms or temporary pop-ups or partnered with other retailers willing to carry their products in stores.

But Sleep Sherpa appears to have the widest variety in a single location. One you won't find: Casper.

The company sued Trapskin in 2016, alleging Sleep Sherpa's reviews favored brands that gave him commissions on sales through the website. Casper was among the companies that provided commissions before it ended its affiliate relationship in 2015, according to the lawsuit. Trapskin declined to comment on the lawsuit, which has been settled.

Sleep Sherpa's website still drives most of the business, but Minnesota accounts for a disproportionate share of sales, which Trapskin chalks up to the store's presence.

If Sleep Sherpa's model succeeds in Chicago, Trapskin said he'd be interested in expanding further.

Trapskin said he chose the name Sleep Sherpa because he thinks of himself as a guide, like the Sherpas who led mountaineers up Himalayan peaks.

"I went into this not as a salesman, but as a guide," he said. "It's been a journey for me too. I'm not the sleep guru, but I'm on a journey and want to share what I learned."

Sterling Bay buys Lurie Hospital building

STERLING BAY

Chicago-based Sterling Bay bought the Stanley Manne Children's Research Institute on undisclosed terms.

The Chicago-based developer said it completed the purchase of the Stanley Manne Children's Research Institute, at 2430 N. Halsted St., after a competitive bidding process. It will lease the 119,415-square-foot facility back to Lurie until the hospital's research operations are consolidated in the Gold Coast neighborhood next summer.

Terms of the deal were not disclosed.

Sterling Bay plans to renovate the building, built in 1995 and expanded in 2003, for future tenants in the medical research field.

"We look forward to continuing to build on the City's reputation for achieving groundbreaking scientific discovery by providing the life science community with revitalized, state-of-the-art urban laboratory facilities on the North Side," Andy Gloor, Sterling Bay managing principal, said in a news release.

Sterling Bay's other Chicago properties include Prudential Plaza, 600 West Chicago, 875 North Michigan Avenue (formerly known as the John Hancock Center) and the Lincoln Yards development site, one of the potential contenders in Chicago for Amazon's second headquarters.

Stable premiums, more options for ACA

Health care among top concerns as voters go to polls

By Ricardo Alonso-Zaldivar

ERIC GAY/AP

Self-employed contractor Mike Hewitt said he has benefited from the Affordable Care Act.

WASHINGTON — The Affordable Care Act's sixth sign-up season opens Thursday amid stabilizing premiums and more choice for consumers.

Nationally, average premiums are going up only by low, single-digit percentages for 2019. In some states, and for some plans, premiums will decline. Fewer areas will see increases. Insurers also are expanding their participation.

A year ago, it wasn't even clear if former President Barack Obama's signature program would survive repeated efforts by President Donald Trump and Republicans to repeal it.

There have been changes. It might be more difficult finding help in enrolling, after the Trump administration sharply scaled back funding for sign-up counselors known as "navigators." Even so, independent community groups still guide consumers through the paperwork.

And in a change that takes effect Jan. 1, those who decide to opt out of health insurance won't be penalized come tax time.

Consumers have until Dec. 15 to sign up through HealthCare.gov.

Mike Hewitt plans to re-enroll. "God bless Obamacare," said the self-employed remodeling contractor from Austin, Texas.

The first year he signed up under the ACA, Hewitt fell off a roof he was working on, shattering his left heel and tearing an arm muscle. "It allowed me to get good health insurance to fix my body," said Hewitt, who's in his 50s. He believes the coverage has been worth the $290 he pays monthly in premiums.

"When you have it, it keeps you proactive on taking care of yourself," he said.

About 10 million people have private policies through HealthCare.gov and state-run insurance markets, with roughly 9 in 10 getting taxpayer-financed help to pay their premiums. An estimated 12 million more are covered through the ACA's Medicaid expansion, aimed at low-income adults.

Income-based tax credits to help pay premiums remain available. The HealthCare.gov website and call center will be up and running. Coverage is available even if you don't qualify for financial help, but many cannot afford to pay full freight, and self-pay customers have left the market in droves.

Democrats have made preserving the ACA's protections for pre-existing medical conditions a major issue. Trump and Republicans have been hitting hard against Sen. Bernie Sanders' "Medicare for All" plan, saying Democrats are out to destroy Medicare. Republicans haven't backed off their vow to repeal "Obamacare."

After repeal failed last year, the Trump administration and GOP-led Congress continued to chip away, making changes that could lead to fewer people enrolling. If younger, healthier people stay out of the market, it will increase taxpayers' cost of covering those who remain.

Among the major changes:

■ Repeal of the unpopular requirement that Americans get health insurance or risk fines, gone as of Jan. 1. Experts agree that will reduce enrollment, but differ by how much.

■ Greater availability of short-term health plans in most states. The Trump administration is allowing such plans to cover up to 364 days, and renewals up to 36 months. Premiums are much lower than for ACA plans, but pre-existing conditions are excluded and plans don't have to cover basics including prescription drugs.

■ Expansion of "association health plans" for small businesses and sole proprietors. These plans, which can be sold across state lines, are broadly similar to employer insurance. But it takes time to set up provider networks, and to gain approval from state regulators.

About 11.8 million people signed up during last year's open enrollment, only about 3 percent fewer than the final season under Obama.

Chicago to establish office to enforce laws on wages, sick leave

By Alexia Elejalde-Ruiz
Chicago Tribune

"Businesses do not succeed without those workers being the consumers that purchase their products."
— Ald. John Arena, 45th

The Chicago City Council on Wednesday unanimously approved the creation of an office dedicated to enforcing the city's minimum wage, paid sick time and anti-wage theft laws.

The Office of Labor Standards, which will be housed in the Department of Business Affairs and Consumer Protection, will respond to worker complaints, collect and distribute owed pay, and proactively investigate employers it believes could be violating the city's labor laws.

The law, which takes effect Jan. 1, designates five staff members, including a director, two investigators, a paralegal and an administrative employee. No budget has been approved for the office.

Currently, workers take complaints to the city's Department of Business Affairs and Consumer Protection, the agency responsible for issuing licenses to businesses and protecting consumers from fraud. Worker advocates say the department doesn't have the resources or personnel to effectively administer ordinances meant to protect low-wage workers. The state's Department of Labor does not enforce city laws.

"Existing paths to justice aren't meeting the needs of Chicago's most vulnerable workers," said Sophia Zaman, executive director of the Raise the Floor Alliance, a coalition of eight organizations that advocate for restaurant, domestic and temp workers and other low-wage employees.

The workers center Arise Chicago led the push for the new office and collaborated with the city on its design.

The office will issue an annual report listing the employers cited for violations, the amount of back wages recovered and other data. Employers found to have violated the laws will be barred from bidding for city contracts for a year.

The new office also will conduct community outreach to educate employers and employees of their rights and obligations. Half of the fine money collected from violators will go toward those outreach efforts.

The office is meant to enforce three major worker protection laws passed by the council since 2014. They include gradually raising Chicago's minimum wage to $13 an hour by 2019, allowing workers to earn paid sick time, and giving the city the ability to revoke or deny the renewal of business licenses for employers found guilty of wage theft. Wage theft can occur when people work off the clock or are not paid overtime.

A proposed Fair Workweek ordinance currently before a City Council committee, which would give shift workers more predictability in scheduling, also would be enforced by the Office of Labor Standards if it passes.

To Lamar Hendrix-Glass, who was laid off from Treasure Island's Hyde Park store when the grocery chain recently ceased operations, the new office lets employees know "the city has our back." He took an unpaid sick day in April for strep throat, not knowing that he had accrued paid sick time under city law because his employer never posted the required notification to inform workers of their new rights.

"Instead of just having to deal with it, now we know someone will help," said Hendrix-Glass, 30, who lives in the Auburn-Gresham neighborhood.

Ald. John Arena, 45th, one of 38 co-sponsors of the ordinance creating the new office, said there needs to be a shift in mindset that upholding employee rights is good for business. He went to Seattle to learn how it administers its Office of Labor Standards and was told it can improve the business climate.

"Businesses do not succeed without those workers being the consumers that purchase their products," Arena said.

Report: U.S. consumers not flipping phones as quickly

By Samantha Masunaga
Los Angeles Times

PATRICK SISON/AP

Android and iPhone customers have been keeping their phones a little longer as the cost has increased.

People are holding on to their aging smartphones longer, squeezing out a few more months of use before trading them in, a report indicates.

In the United States, iPhones traded in between July 1 and Sept. 30 were 2.92 years old on average, up from 2.37 years old the comparable period two years earlier, according to data from Hyla Mobile Inc.

Android users swapped their phones a little faster. At the time of trade-in, the average Android phone was 2.66 years old, up from 2.44 years old in the comparable period in 2016, Hyla said. Hyla, a company that focuses on the secondary-use market for smartphones, provides analytics and device trade-in programs for businesses.

Analysts said the rising cost might give U.S. consumers pause when they're deciding whether to upgrade devices. The iPhone XS, for example, starts at $999. The Samsung Galaxy S9 starts at $720. When the iPhone 7 debuted in 2016, it started at $649. That year, the Samsung Galaxy S7 was released and sold for about $700 without a contract, though carriers offered discounts.

Because of rising costs, carriers have eliminated previous deals that gave customers a subsidized phone upon signing a two-year contract. That was financially viable for carriers when phones cost $300 or $400, but not when they cost $800 to $1,200, said Biju Nair, chief executive of Hyla Mobile.

Instead, carriers now offer payment plans under which the buyer of a phone can pay a monthly fee for a certain time — say, two years — and then own it outright. Some people aren't eager to take on monthly fees for a new phone right after they've paid off the last one.

"When your payments are done, all of a sudden, you don't have to pay that additional fee," said Brad Akyuz, research director for NPD Group's connected intelligence research practice. "(There's a) psychological impact there."

From a tech standpoint, the industry recently "hasn't seen a major innovation out there that would foster users to immediately change their devices," he said.

Upgrades to phone features and specifications are often minimal between generations of the same device, and better software updates from Apple and Android have done a good job of enabling older devices to access some of the same features and security patches as newer phones, said Anthony Scarsella, mobile phones research manager at market intelligence firm IDC.

Repair services also have sprouted up to keep older phones working longer, he said. That might become a bigger factor in the future: This week, a rule change took effect that makes it easier for people to fix their own phones (or get a repair shop to do it) without breaking copyright law.

"When the average consumer is looking at these prices and looking at these features coming out of these new phones, they're kind of perceiving, 'Well, is there really that much difference?' " Nair said. "The general sense is, 'Well, my phone is currently good enough.' "

Analysts said they expect this trend to continue, at least until there is a major technological breakthrough. That might happen next year when more 5G devices are introduced to the market, Akyuz said.

"If and when carriers can come up with a really solid value play for 5G to have users understand why they should be paying extra, we might be seeing users go off their regular upgrade cycle," he said.

Savings Update

What happens to a forgotten CD?

Though some might find it hard to imagine, money socked away in CDs occasionally falls off the radar. Off the saver's radar, that is. But banks don't forget, and though you won't lose your money, you may not be able to claim it as easily as you'd like.

When a certificate's maturity date is soon approaching, your bank will remind you of the upcoming date, along with instructions for specifying what you want done with the funds. But if you neglect to provide instructions, most institutions will roll the money into a new CD of the same term. So if your maturing certificate had a five-year term, the bank will move the funds into a new five-year CD.

If you miss your maturity date, because you left mail unopened or you changed address and didn't receive the notice, there is usually a 10-day grace period during which you can still direct the funds. But if it's been months or years, you'll have to contact the bank to inquire where they moved your money.

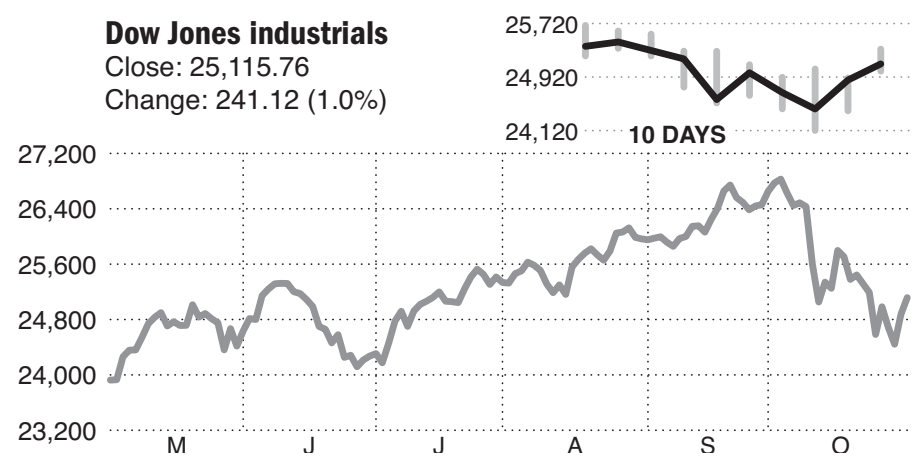

The good news is that the funds are still yours. But once they've been rolled into a new CD, you face two disadvantages. First, the interest rate on the new CD is not likely to be competitive, so you've given up your chance to earn more with a better certificate. Second, you'll be forced to either wait until the new CD matures, or pay an early withdrawal penalty. These penalties vary widely across banks, but can be steep.

Claiming a forgotten CD isn't complicated, but you'll almost certainly reduce your earnings by having neglected to act at maturity. So avoid penalties and lost earnings by putting maturity dates on your calendar, opening all financial mail promptly, and keeping your address up to date with financial institutions. WHITEY BULGER 1929-2018

By Denise Lavoie and Alanna Durkin Richer
Associated Press

BOSTON POLICE VIA AP

BOSTON — James "Whitey" Bulger, the murderous Boston gangster who benefited from a corrupt relationship with the FBI before spending 16 years as one of America's most wanted men, was slain in federal prison. He was 89.

Bulger was found unresponsive Tuesday morning at the U.S. penitentiary in West Virginia where he'd just been transferred, and a medical examiner declared him dead shortly afterward, according to the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Authorities have not released a cause of death, but Justin Tarovisky, a prison union official, said the death was being investigated as a homicide.

On Wednesday, an ex-investigator briefed on the case and speaking on condition of anonymity said that Fotios "Freddy" Geas, 51, a former Mafia associate and hit man from Massachusetts, and at least one other inmate are believed to have been involved in Bulger's killing.

Bulger, the model for Jack Nicholson's ruthless crime boss in the Martin Scorsese movie "The Departed," led a largely Irish mob that ran loan-sharking, gambling and drug rackets. He also was an FBI informant who ratted on the New England mob, his gang's main rival, in an era when bringing down the Mafia was a top national priority for the FBI.

Bulger fled Boston in late 1994 after his FBI handler, John Connolly Jr., warned him he was about to be indicted. With a $2 million reward on his head, Bulger became one of the FBI's "Ten Most Wanted" criminals, with a place just below Osama bin Laden.

When the extent of his crimes and the FBI's role in overlooking them became public in the late 1990s, Bulger became a source of embarrassment for the FBI. During the years he was a fugitive, the FBI battled a public perception that it had not tried very hard to find him.

After more than 16 years on the run, Bulger was captured at age 81 in Santa Monica, Calif., where he had been living in a rent-controlled apartment near the beach with his longtime girlfriend, Catherine Greig.

In 2013, he was convicted in the slayings, as well as extortion, and money-laundering after a sensational racketeering trial that included graphic testimony from three former Bulger cohorts: a hit man, a protege and a partner. He was sentenced nearly five years ago to two consecutive life sentences plus five years.

Bulger had just been moved to USP Hazelton, a high-security prison with an adjacent minimum security satellite camp in Bruceton Mills, W.Va. He had been in a prison in Florida before a stopover at a transfer facility in Oklahoma City. Federal Bureau of Prisons officials and his attorney had declined to comment on why he was being moved.

Bulger, nicknamed "Whitey" for his bright platinum hair, grew up in a gritty South Boston housing project and became known as one of the most ruthless gangsters in Boston. His younger brother, William Bulger, became one of the most powerful politicians in Massachusetts, leading the state Senate for 17 years.

In working-class "Southie," Jim Bulger had a kind of Robin Hood-like image among some locals, but authorities said he would put a bullet in the brain of anyone who he even suspected of double-crossing him.

"You could go back in the annals of criminal history and you'd be hard-pressed to find anyone as diabolical as Bulger," said Tom Duffy, a retired state police major.

"Killing people was his first option. They don't get any colder than him," Duffy said after Bulger was finally captured in June 2011.

Bulger was accused of strangling Debra Davis, the 26-year-old girlfriend of his partner, Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi, and Deborah Hussey, also 26, the daughter of Flemmi's common-law wife. In both cases, Bulger insisted on pulling out the women's teeth so they would be difficult to identify, Flemmi testified.

Dunne, David L.
David L. Dunne Sr. age 74 of Crete, Illinois passed away on October 30, 2018. Preceded in death by his parents Albert and Dorothy Dunne, his 1st wife Susan and 2nd wife Charmaine. Beloved husband to Rita (nee Conti). Loving father to Jennifer Lynn Dunne, Jeffery (Shyreen) Dunne, David (Georgia) Dunne, Christine (Louis) Longo, Cassandra Wessling, Ronald Ramirez and Amanda Perez. Cherished grandfather to Jacob, Jessica, Elizabeth, Avery, Kaya and Daven. Dear brother to Michael (Marilyn) Dunne, the late Raymond Allen Dunne and the late Judith Gorman.
So, here we are, the end of the road. For the most part all was well. Accomplishments were many after sincere efforts to do the right thing. Award winning Cub Scout, Boy Scout, and Explorer, earning enough merit badges to fill two sashes, being an Eagle Scout, and presented with the Order of the Arrow sash.
Played football during his freshman year at Calumet HS, but found his true niche in industrial arts eventually following in the footsteps of Moe and Shortlegs (AKA: Al Dunne, his Dad, and Uncle, Johnny Dunne). Learning the Pipefitter trade from two of the best, his skill was interrupted by military service in Germany in the Army during the mid-sixties. Upon return, he continued service to discharged G.I.'s by joining the Calumet Park post of the American Legion, eventually becoming post Commander. Resuming a career as a Fitter, he rose to become a craftsman and mentor to many including encouraging two nephews to join the trade.
Dave and I grew up in the same house, him being 4 years senior. However, we lived significantly different lives. As evidenced by his accomplishments detailed above, he was outgoing and focused. Me, not so much, mostly due to an early tragedy that befell our Mom and Dad. During WW II, Dad was a fitter at the Elwood Munitions Ordinance Plant. In 1942, they lost their first born four year old son, Raymond Allen, after an accidental drowning incident in the a creek in Wilmington, Illinois. They never recovered emotionally from the loss. As a result our upbringing was somewhat controlled.
In his early years, he was known by a couple of nicknames, "Choppy", and "Stormy". The first because he was a healthy boy, and the second because he was prone to fits of resistance. However, he met his match when confronting our sister, Judy, also known as "Red". Never one to back down, Judy sent Dave into the bathroom often to doctor scratches from well manicured nails. Judy passed away in 2003, leaving the family mantle to Dave. In recent years he hosted huge family gatherings after which were followed by blazing bon fires. Such events are nearly things of the past due to our mobile society. To Dave, it was his eternal search of the good times past.
Dave's service to his country and family are to be rewarded with military honors at Lincoln Cemetery. As we celebrate his life, we recognize that, quoting Shakespeare, "…we will not see his likes again!"
Dave was a volunteer for the Cancer Research Center in Homewood, member of the American Legion Post #1291 in Crete, board member for Thomas Cellini Huntington Foundation and the Pipefitter Local # 597.

‘You take this thing over right now’

How Nagy sternly challenges Trubisky behind the scenes

By Colleen Kane
Chicago Tribune

Matt Nagy pulled quarterback Mitch Trubisky aside near the Soldier Field sideline just before the Bears offense opened the second half Sunday against the Jets.

The coach placed his left hand on Trubisky’s lower back and leaned forward toward the left side of Trubisky’s helmet to speak. The Bears were leading the Jets 7-3 after a subpar offensive performance in the first half, and Nagy had a message to deliver.

“I’m going to challenge you right now, these two quarters, for greatness,” Nagy said.

“Yes, sir,” Trubisky responded.

“You got me?”

“Got you.”

The exchange was captured for the public to hear because Nagy was wearing a microphone for the game, and the Bears released the moment as part of his mic’d-up video Tuesday afternoon.

BUYER BEWARE

As Cubs consider bidding on pricey free agents Harper and Machado, the answer is simple: Neither

JOHN BAZEMORE/AP

In the Wake of the News

As Dodgers slugger Manny Machado admired the longest single of the World Series in Game 3, he cost himself more than a double by dogging it down the first-base line.

Machado’s free-agent price plunged during the postseason. His latest burst of laziness — and acknowledgement that hustling wasn’t his thing — was possibly the last straw for anybody asking if the infielder is worth $300 million.

He isn’t — not for organizations that truly care about creating the right clubhouse culture and playing the game the right way. Not for organizations that value winning championships.

Oh, one desperate major-league team still will argue talent trumps character and talk itself into paying a hitter capable of hitting .300 with 40 home runs the fortune his agent will demand. The Phillies need to make a splash, and the Yankees can’t help themselves from reaching into their bottomless money pit.

But it can’t be the Cubs if they want to resume playing baseball deep into October. For the franchise that embraces Eamus Catuli, two more Latin words: Caveat emptor. Buyer beware.

Lance Irvin walks out of the Jones Convocation Center gym at Chicago State, clasps his hands and glances toward the rafters.

“Every time I leave practice, I look up and say, ‘Thank you, Lord,’ ” he said. “I love practicing. It has its challenges. But I know I’m fortunate.”

The new basketball coach at Chicago State has tackled a long to-do list since he took over the beleaguered program in August. He had to order new equipment, then reordered it when the shipment got mixed up. Until he hired assistants and staff in September, Irvin organized weight training and study tables.

He crisscrosses the vast, verdant South Side campus to attend soccer games and meet professors and students, trying to drum up interest in a team that won only three games last season.

“Practice is the easy part,” Irvin said.

Bears kicking away playoffs

Remember that list of Bears quarterbacks who started during the Brett Favre era in Green Bay?

This is not the complete list because some guys had good seasons — Erik Kramer and Jim Miller, for instance — but here are the more illustrious names:

Peter Tom Willis, Dave Krieg, Rick Mirer, Steve Stenstrom, Moses Moreno, Shane Matthews.

Are you sick yet? Sorry, but there are more.

Cade McNown, Henry Burris, Kordell Stewart, Craig Krenzel, Chad Hutchinson, Jonathan Quinn.

Again, those guys started games for the Bears during Favre's indefatigable time in Green Bay. Started, not just made a roster. Started, people, do you hear me?

When it pulls up in Lake Forest, we'll call it the Pace Car because the Bears general manager is driving this sucker.

He also seems to be playing us for suckers because apparently all his placekicking passengers are required to wear big, floppy shoes.

It started with Connor Barth in the 2016 season, and then included Mike Nugent and Cairo Santos.

No Pace-inflicted post-Gould era would be complete without noting the disastrous Roberto Aguayo. He was so awful that the Bucs cut him a season after trading up to draft him. Pace immediately claimed him off waivers, an example of his embarrassing flailing to fill the position that should lead the team in scoring.

And then there is this year's stumble, Cody Parkey, who stepped out of the Pace Car flush with $9 million guaranteed.

And look, there's Parkey missing wide right from 40 measly yards at Soldier Field and failing to give the Bears a lead on their first drive against the Jets.

Parkey has missed three field-goal attempts in seven games this season, and would you look at that: Those three misses are as many kicks as Gould has missed since Pace dumped him three seasons ago.

I became a writer because I thought there would be no math involved, but I believe it works out that since Pace cut him, Gould has missed an average of one kick a season — 65 of 68 overall, 16 of 17 this year — while the newest kicker exiting the Pace Car has averaged about one miss every other game.

CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

And now here comes some sad symmetry:

Earlier this month, Gould hit from 51 yards. That marked his fifth made field goal from 50 or beyond since Pace got rid of him.

Earlier this month, Parkey missed from 51 yards, a kick that would have beaten the Dolphins in the Bears' first game after their off week. That marked the fifth missed field goal from 50 or beyond by Pace's replacement choices.

The good news is, Pace's choice of a kicker didn't cost the Bears against the Jets the way it cost them against the Dolphins.

But raise your hand if you fear it will cost the Bears during a division game in a couple of weeks.

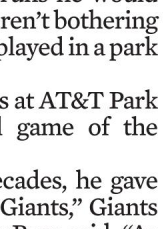

And raise your other hand if you think Pace's choice of kicker will cost the Bears a playoff berth.

WILLIE MCCOVEY 1938-2018

A sweet-swinging Hall of Famer

Associated Press

Willie McCovey, the sweet-swinging Hall of Famer nicknamed "Stretch" for his 6-foot-4 height and those long arms, died Wednesday. He was 80.

The San Francisco Giants announced McCovey's death, saying the fearsome hitter passed "peacefully" in the afternoon "after losing his battle with ongoing health issues."

A former first baseman and left fielder, McCovey was a career .270 hitter with 521 home runs and 1,555 RBIs in 22 major-league seasons, 19 of them with the Giants. He also played for the Athletics and Padres.

McCovey made his major-league debut at age 21 on July 30, 1959, after dominating the Pacific Coast League that year. He played alongside the other Willie — Hall of Famer Willie Mays — into the 1972 season before Mays was traded to the New York Mets that May.

In his debut, McCovey went 4-for-4 with two triples, two RBIs and three runs scored in a 7-2 win against Philadelphia — and that began a stretch of the Giants winning 10 out of 12 games.

McCovey batted .354 with 13 homers, 38 RBIs, five triples and nine doubles on the way to winning NL Rookie of the Year.

"You knew right away he wasn't an ordinary ballplayer," Hall of Famer Hank Aaron said, courtesy of the Hall of Fame. "He was so strong, and he had the gift of knowing the strike zone. There's no telling how many home runs he would have hit if those knees weren't bothering him all the time and if he played in a park other than Candlestick."

He had attended games at AT&T Park as recently as the final game of the season.

"For more than six decades, he gave his heart and soul to the Giants," Giants President and CEO Larry Baer said. "As one of the greatest players of all time, as a quiet leader in the clubhouse, as a mentor to the Giants who followed in his footsteps, as an inspiration to our Junior Giants, and as a fan cheering on the team from his booth."

Cubs should add depth, not distraction

In his postseason plea, Cubs President Theo Epstein sounded like a man committed to eliminating player entitlement, not inviting it. Epstein can fix the Cubs offense he deemed broken without abandoning the principles he believes built a winning environment. If the Cubs signed Machado despite all the obvious warning signs, manager Joe Maddon would have to change his motto to "Respect 70." A manager known for giving players freedom hardly seems like an ideal fit for a prima donna who lives by his own rules.

Any concessions Epstein made in the past with players such as reliever Aroldis Chapman — like them or not — concerned controversial situations off the field, not necessarily on it. How players performed between the lines always influenced the Cubs more than anything else. If the Cubs cut ties with shortstop Addison Russell as they should, for example, Russell's decline in production will factor into the equation as much as his suspension for violating MLB's domestic-abuse policy.

Machado never has been involved in anything illegal or inappropriate but broke many of the game's unwritten rules. Against the Brewers, Machado crossed the line by stepping on the back leg of first baseman Jesus Aguilar while running out a ground ball. Those familiar with Machado's antics throughout his career with the Orioles barely raised an eyebrow.

What makes anybody think Machado suddenly will become a guy who changes his behavior after his next contract? If anything, Machado's words and actions suggest getting paid only will empower the 26-year-old to be as lazy and dirty a player as he chooses.

Epstein can find wiser ways to spend Chairman Tom Ricketts' money — and not necessarily on Nationals outfielder Bryce Harper either. Just because Ricketts has the capital doesn't mean the Cubs have to spend it all on a single free agent, particularly with nine-figure contract extensions looming for homegrown stars Kris Bryant and Javier Baez.

Nor can the league's competitive balance tax, which increases to $206 million, be ignored, not even for a booming franchise that had baseball's fourth-highest payroll last season at $188.6 million. And shouldn't the disappointment of 2018 free-agent bust Yu Darvish serve as a cautionary tale?

Harper likely will command a contract as rich as Machado's. Agent Scott Boras made news over the weekend by kidding that he and Harper already know his next team, trolling everyone curious to see how the left-handed slugger's decision will affect baseball's balance of power.

Harper has the power to fix an offense that scored one or fewer runs in 40 games last season. But he also struck out more times (169) than any Cubs hitter. A team ready to re-emphasize launch angle would love to add the reigning 2018 Home Run Derby champion. A career slash line of .279/.388/.512 for a player who has averaged 32 home runs and 91 RBIs sure looks appealing. But as seamlessly as Harper would fit into the celebrity culture at Clark and Addison, Cubs fans might want him more than their team needs him.

The Cubs would be better served spending big to sign or trade for several players who increase roster depth and versatility. For the Cubs this offseason, seeking quality in quantity makes more sense.

In the debate about whether the Cubs should pursue Machado or Harper, the answer is an easy one.

Neither.

CUBS NOTES

Quintana, Kintzler will return in '19

By Mark Gonzales
Chicago Tribune

The Cubs on Wednesday exercised their $10.5 million option on left-hander Jose Quintana.

Quintana, who signed a five-year contract with two team options with the White Sox before the 2014 season, was 13-11 with a 4.03 ERA in 32 starts with the Cubs in 2018. This marked the sixth consecutive season Quintana made at least 32 starts.

Quintana, 29, is 20-14 with a 3.93 ERA in 46 starts since the Cubs acquired him in July 2017 in a five-player trade that sent top prospects Eloy Jimenez and Dylan Cease to the Sox.

In other contract news, reliever Brandon Kintzler picked up his $5 million player option Wednesday to stay with the Cubs.

A source confirmed Kintzler's decision after the Cubs declined a $10 million option for 2019.

The Cubs have until Friday to decide whether to pick up the options on left-hander Cole Hamels ($20 million) and reliever Pedro Strop ($6.25 million).

The Cubs hope Kintzler, a groundball maven, will regain his effectiveness after posting a 7.00 ERA in 25 appearances after joining the team. The Cubs acquired the right-hander July 31 in a trade with the Nationals, with whom he had a 3.54 ERA in 72 appearances in 2017-18.

Kintzler, 34, has a lifetime 3.48 ERA over nine seasons with the Brewers, Twins, Nationals and Cubs. He had 28 saves and was an American League All-Star with the Twins in 2017, but they dealt him to the Nationals at the trade deadline.

The Cubs also claimed left-handed reliever Jerry Vasto off waivers from the Royals. Vasto, 26, is 12-12 with 26 saves and a 3.79 ERA in 180 minor-league relief appearances covering five seasons in the Rockies and Royals organizations.

Vasto is 0-1 with an 8.31 ERA in six major-league relief appearances with the Rockies and Royals.

The Cubs' 40-man roster stands at 35.

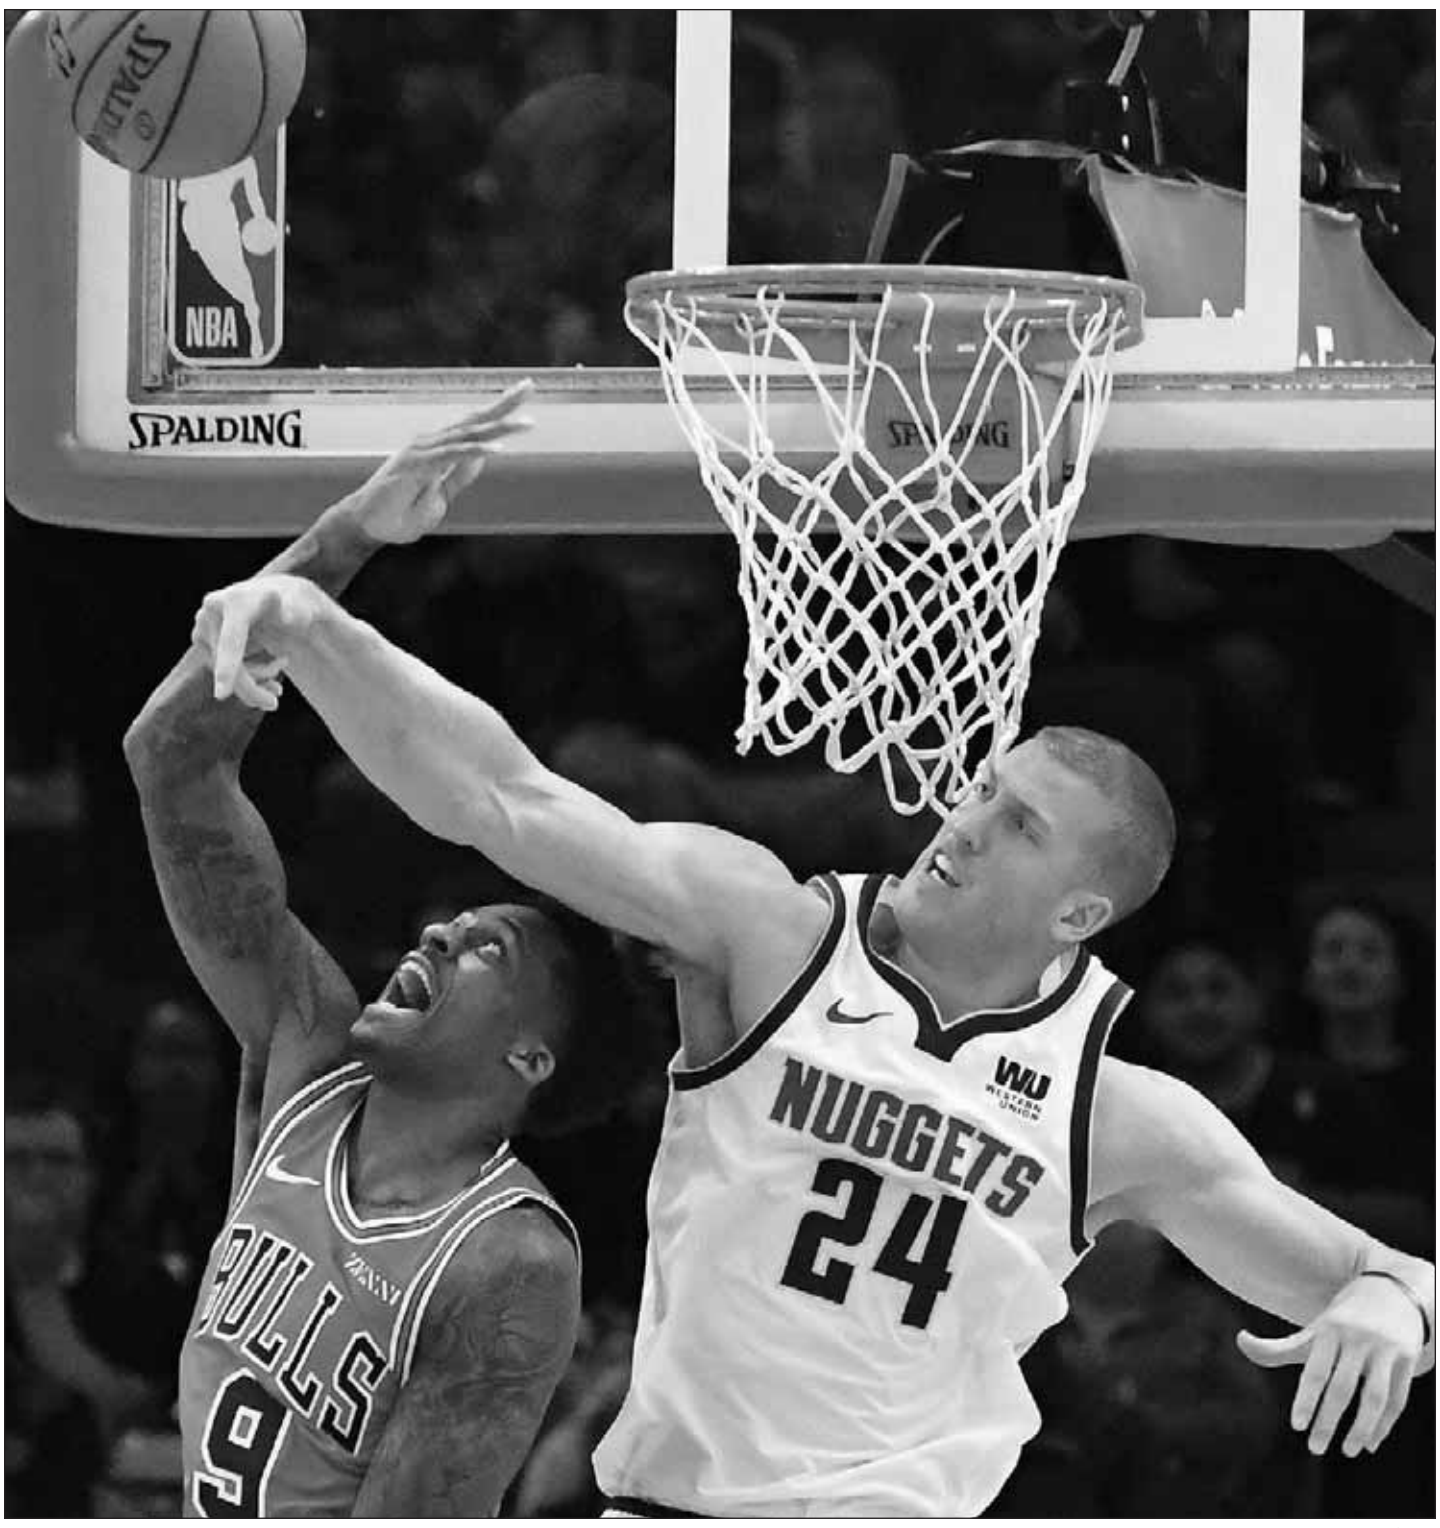

■ The Cubs announced two-year contract extensions with their minor-league affiliates, signing agreements with Triple-A Iowa, Double-A Tennessee, high Class A Myrtle Beach and low Class A South Bend through the 2022 season.

Parker starts, Nuggets finish

DAVID BANKS/AP

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

The first response came from Fred Hoiberg.

Two days after a defense-optional loss to the Warriors, the Bulls coach changed his lineup for Wednesday night's matchup with the powerful Nuggets, who dealt the Warriors their lone loss.

In came Jabari Parker. Out went Chandler Hutchison.

The next response came from the officiating crew, which whistled Parker for two fouls in the first 3 minutes, 14 seconds of the Bulls' 108-107 loss to the Nuggets in overtime at the United Center.

In came Hutchison. Out went Parker.

There were other responses.

Ryan Arcidiacono flipped momentum with a third-quarter stretch that featured hustle and three steals. Antonio Blakeney, who finished with 15 points in 14 minutes, drove the length of the floor to beat the third-quarter buzzer with a left-handed dunk. Zach LaVine posted his eighth straight game of at least 20 points with 28.

But the most important response came from Paul Millsap, who overpowered Justin Holiday to put back Nikola Jokic's missed jumper with 0.1 seconds left. The Nuggets had 17 offensive rebounds and a 23-8 advantage in second-chance points.

"I didn't make the right play," Holiday said. "That's on me."

LaVine rightfully pointed out that if Lauri Markkanen or Bobby Portis were healthy, they would be guarding Millsap and Holiday would be on a wing. But that overlooked the fact Parker was off the floor because of defense.

"We have to learn how to win," LaVine said. "It was a bounce-back (game) in terms of our fight. It still sucks. You play such a good game. You want that result."

The loss negated Wendell Carter Jr.'s night. Asserting himself at both ends for the third straight game, the rookie finished with a season-high 25 points, eight rebounds, five assists, three blocks and three steals while playing mostly strong defense against the matchup nightmare that is Jokic.

"We're eight games in now. I want to see what he looks like at 80," LaVine said. "It's going to be nice."

The Bulls almost prevailed in regulation. Parker's running 27-footer at the buzzer fell just short.

Parker didn't much take advantage of his first start as a Bull in the injury-ravaged team's fourth different lineup in eight games. He failed to score in the first half, getting yanked once for early foul trouble and a second time when Hoiberg angrily substituted Hutchison for him after a missed defensive assignment. He also airballed a wide-open 3-pointer in the second half.

Parker finished with six points on 3-for-10 shooting in 35 minutes.

With Hutchison finishing with eight points and seven rebounds in 30 minutes and drawing postgame praise from Hoiberg, who knows what the lineup will be on Friday for the Pacers. Arcidiacono, who has led the Bulls in assists five times, also closed over starter Cameron Payne, who had five turnovers.

"It's very tough," Carter said.

BULLS NOTES

Harrison trying to make most of his opportunity

By K.C. Johnson
Chicago Tribune

You can call it garbage time. Or you can call it an opportunity.

Shaquille Harrison isn't really calling it either. He's just playing hard, whenever given the chance.

"That's who I am. That's my identity. You're going to see that every night, even on my worst days. You're going to see that hard-nosed, tough guy," Harrison said. "As a basketball player, you should play hard for yourself and also to win."

With guards Kris Dunn and Denzel Valentine out injured, Harrison scored 10 points in the Bulls' blowout loss Friday night in Charlotte and 13 in Monday night's debacle against the Warriors. Signed Oct. 21 to a deal that doesn't fully guarantee until January, Harrison said he's "100 percent" convinced he belongs at this level.

"There's no doubt in my mind," Harrison said before sitting out Wednesday night's 108-107 overtime loss to the Nuggets at the United Center. "I compare myself to a lot of guys and have stood up to them. I'm long. I'm athletic. I have great size at my position. And I think I can help teams win."

Undrafted out of Tulsa, the 6-foot-4 guard bounced between the Suns and their G League affiliate the last two seasons before Phoenix waived him.

"The Bulls brought me here for a reason," he said. "I don't need to do more than what's being displayed. Try to continue to play hard, be a leader and be a playmaker."

Slow go: With Lauri Markkanen out of his elbow brace and Thursday marking five weeks since the Bulls issued a six- to eight-week timeline for his return, coach Fred Hoiberg fielded a question about the second-year forward's progress.

Despite no setbacks, Hoiberg said Markkanen is still "two to four weeks" away.

"He's getting on the track and doing some straight-ahead running. He feels good," Hoiberg said. "He doesn't have any pain with that. He's still a couple of weeks away from really doing anything as far as contact is concerned. But it's good to see him upping his activity."

Layups: Robin Lopez honored Halloween by riding into the United Center on a bicycle with E.T. in the front bike basket, a la the Elliott character from that classic movie. ... According to The Athletic, the Timberwolves declined the third-year option on Justin Patton, whom the Bulls selected for them with the 16th pick and then traded his rights in the June 2017 Jimmy Butler trade. The Bulls acquired the rights to Markkanen, along with Kris Dunn and Zach LaVine. ... Hoiberg coached Nuggets guard Monte Morris in college at Iowa State. "He's always making the right play, reliable 3-point shooter and never afraid of the big moment," Hoiberg said.

BLACKHAWKS 2 MINUTES IN THE BOX

Forward Alex DeBrincat

By Jimmy Greenfield | Chicago Tribune

COLUMBUS, OHIO – There's only so much to learn about a player from the stat sheet. So the Tribune will periodically take you deeper into the lives of the Blackhawks.

This time, we ask second-year forward Alex DeBrincat about life as a student at Lake Forest Academy, whether he can dunk a basketball and if he prefers the nickname "Brinksy" or "The Cat."

What's the most fun a teenager can have in Lake Forest?
Not much. There's some pretty good golf courses out that way. Golfing is pretty fun. Everything closes so early so it's not like you can do anything. I think even the McDonald's closes at 8 at night.

My dad has it at home.

How old were you and what did you dress up as the last time you went trick-or-treating?
I don't remember. I'm not a big Halloween guy so I'm sure I just threw a jersey on. I don't really like to dress up too much, especially as a kid. I was very simple. I wouldn't go buy a costume, I'd just throw something together last minute so I could go get some candy.

Aisle seat or window seat?
Aisle.

How close can you come to dunking a basketball?
Not very close. But if you lower the rim ...

What advice do you have for a 10-year-old Alex DeBrincat?
Take care of your body a little bit better. Eat better. There's a lot of things, just taking care of your body and having that nutrition aspect of life is pretty important.

What foods will someone always find in your cupboard or refrigerator?
Don't have much food around the house. I really don't have anything that I always keep in there. Just whatever I'm feeling when I'm at the store.

What was your first concert?
I've only been to one. Who was it? It was just this summer. Why am I blanking on it? Oh, my goodness, I'm totally blanking on it. It was pretty fun though.

Which nickname do you prefer: "Brinksy" or "The Cat"? And keep in mind Joel Quenneville always refers to you as "The Cat" when he's talking to reporters.
I've been "Brinksy" my whole life. But I like "The Cat." It doesn't bother me at all. I respond to both.

Pack GM: All factors considered in trades

Associated Press

SAM FARMER'S THURSDAY NIGHT PICK
Raiders (1-6) at 49ers (1-7)
8:20 p.m., FOX, NFL Network
49ers by 3
(O/U 45½)
The 49ers are beat up and beaten down, so go with the road team in this one, even though it's not really a road trip for the Raiders. Two bad teams. Go with the better, more experienced quarterback. Raiders 24, 49ers 17

In dealing Ha Ha Clinton-Dix and Ty Montgomery, the Packers traded away two players who recently spoke in varying degrees about their respective futures with the team.

What happens on the field always comes first, general manager Brian Gutekunst said Wednesday, though other factors aren't ignored either.

"So I think you take everything into consideration when you make these kinds of decisions," Gutekunst said before practice. "But performance comes first. "... But everything's taken into account. It's never usually just one thing."

Clinton-Dix, a starting safety, went to the Redskins in exchange for a 2019 fourth-round pick. Playing under the fifth-year option of his rookie contract, Clinton-Dix is eligible for free agency this offseason. He talked about his future in an interview Oct. 10 with the Wisconsin State-Journal.

"Right now, I'm playing each and every game like it's my last. I don't think I'm going to be here next year," Clinton-Dix said.

Montgomery, a fourth-year running back, was traded to the Ravens for a seventh-round pick in 2020. He moves on two days after fumbling a kickoff return with about two minutes left in a 29-27 loss to the Rams on Sunday after being told by coaches to take a touchback if the kick went into the end zone. The turnover cost the Packers a chance to drive for a winning score.

The moves didn't signify the Packers were already looking ahead to next year, Gutekunst said. "I don't necessarily think there's a message it sends to the locker room," Gutekunst said. "The decisions we make are always in the best interest of our team."

Tannehill still out: Dolphins quarterback Ryan Tannehill was ruled out of Sunday's game against the Jets, meaning Brock Osweiler will start for the fourth game in a row. Tannehill was limited in practice Wednesday.

Ex-Seahawks coach dies: Jack Patera, the first coach of the Seahawks, died Wednesday. He was at 85. The cause wasn't disclosed, but Patera had been battling pancreatic cancer. Patera was the Seahawks coach for parts of seven seasons.

NBA

Rose scores career-high 50 points for T-wolves

Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS – Derrick Rose scored a career-high 50 points, turning back the clock to his prime years with the Bulls and lifting the Timberwolves over the Jazz 128-125 on Wednesday night.

Rose was in tears after the game as he walked off the court serenaded by chants of "MVP! MVP!" from the home crowd. The 30-year-old point guard and Chicago native has been derailed by injuries since he was the 2011 NBA MVP.

Asked in an on-court interview what the feat meant to him, Rose said, "Everything, man. I worked my ass off. ... I did this for the franchise, the organization, the fans ... everybody."

He had 34 points in the second half and 15 in a tightly contested fourth quarter as the Wolves, playing without All-Star Jimmy Butler, held off the Jazz. Rudy Gobert missed a game-tying attempt in the final minute for Utah, and the Timberwolves grabbed the rebound to ensure Rose's big night wasn't wasted.

IN BRIEF

BASEBALL: The Dodgers and LHP Clayton Kershaw agreed to extend the deadline on his contract option decision until Friday afternoon. ... LHP David Price announced before the Red Sox's World Series victory parade that he declined his contract option that would have made him a free agent and he will stay with the team next season. ... The Nationals and RHP Trevor Rosenthal agreed to a one-year contract worth up to $8 million, The Associated Press reported. The 28-year-old former Cardinals closer missed all of last season after Tommy John surgery in 2017.

COLLEGES: Ahead of the men's basketball season, No. 15 Virginia Tech suspended senior F Chris Clarke indefinitely. The school didn't provide a reason for the move. Clarke averaged 8.2 points, 6.3 rebounds and 3.0 assists last season. ... Gonzaga junior F Killian Tillie underwent surgery for a broken ankle and will miss up to eight weeks. The third-ranked Bulldogs expect Tillie, who averaged 12.9 points and shot 58 percent overall and 48 percent from 3-point range last season, to miss almost all of the nonconference schedule. ... Wisconsin sophomore F Aleem Ford will be out indefinitely after undergoing surgery for a knee injury. ... Defending national champ Notre Dame received all 31 first-place votes in The AP women's basketball preseason poll. Connecticut was No. 2.

GYMNASTICS: Artur Dalaloyan of Russia won the all-around title, edging China's Xiao Ruoteng at the world championships in Doha, Qatar. Dalaloyan and Xiao, the 2017 all-around champion, both finished with a total of 87.598 points. Dalaloyan was awarded the gold medal after officials dropped the lowest score.

TENNIS: Rafael Nadal pulled out of his opening match at the Paris Masters because of an abdominal problem, meaning Novak Djokovic will reclaim the No. 1 ranking next week.

Lance Irvin battled cancer twice in the last eight years, enduring chemotherapy and a bone marrow transplant.

New coach has history in hoops transplant and months of hospital isolation has added layers of perspective.

It's also a testament to the bond between him and five siblings.

The same team

When Irvin called his younger brother Mike with devastating news in 2012, he barely had gotten out the words that he needed a bone marrow transplant. Mike simply asked where and when.

"I was excited. I can give him what he needs to go on," said Mike, the Mac Irvin Fire CEO. "My father always taught us we have to be there for each other. We always had to have each other's back. There was never a question."

Chicago basketball and the Irvin family are as interlaced as the strings of a net.

McGlother "Mac" Irvin and his wife, Louise, raised six children who grew up playing basketball and eventually entered sports-related careers.

Mac Irvin, who died in 2011, was known as the "Godfather" on the Chicago basketball scene. A former Xerox executive, he was one of the first to assemble a travel team of Chicago players in the early 1990s, driven by a desire to see kids from under-resourced neighborhoods earn college scholarships through sports.

Basketball was in the family blood — and often coming through the door. Bob Love and Tiny Archibald visited. Tim Hardaway would chow down on Louise's meals. Stephon Marbury, a friend of Nick Irvin, had sleepovers. Even Olympic track star Wilma Rudolph once visited their home.

"I wish we had kept a guest book," Lance said.

Mac Irvin Fire teams over the years have included such stars as Jabari Parker, Jahlil Okafor, Antoine Walker, Nazr Mohammed, Tommy Hamilton and Rashard Griffith.

The Irvin kids played for their dad's bitty basketball team before he started the Fire, not knowing then that they were absorbing his coaching philosophies.

"He was the hardest on us," Lance said. "He wasn't treating us special. If he yelled at you, I was going to get yelled at too. You had to play the right way."

Like the Jacksons in music or the Kennedys in politics, basketball is the Irvin family vocation.

Byron, a former NBA player, became a sports agent. Lance was an assistant coach for nine college programs before taking the Chicago State job. Mac Jr. played on the And1 tour and runs the Mac Irvin Lady Fire girls program. Nick is head coach at Morgan Park, winner of four state titles in the last six seasons. Cindy is a sports administrator for Chicago Public Schools.

"I guess it grew on us," Lance said. "And I guess it's a gift."

Even when rough backyard basketball games brought someone to tears, Louise would shut the door and shoo them back outside. They rolled as a crew to Fernwood Park's courts — later renamed for their father — and took on the neighborhood.

"We'd all get on the same team and beat everyone up," Nick said.

They always felt like a team. The older kids encouraged the younger ones in everything, from reading books to reading defenses.

"I always wondered why my parents had all these doggone kids," Lance said with a laugh.

'I'm not owning this'

A high school star at Julian in the 1980s, he had remained active and health-conscious. In 2010 at Southern Illinois, where he was an assistant coach, a player bumped into his chest during practice.

"I remember going behind some curtains and thinking I'm sick or something," he said.

A few days later, before a recruiting trip, Lance received a call from his doctor telling him not to leave.

A biopsy revealed leukemia, and Lance — expecting to be in the hospital for perhaps 24 hours or so — spent 40 days at Barnes-Jewish Hospital in St. Louis. For 27 days, he was confined to his floor for risk of infection.

"When they (diagnosed me), I'm like: 'Who are you talking to? I'm a machine,' " he said.

His wife, Paula, came to the hospital. They cried together. Suddenly, Lance wiped his tears and recalled his father's lessons on toughness.

"I was like: 'I'm not owning this. I don't own cancer. I know I have it, but I'm never going to claim it,' " he said. "A switch went off: 'OK. I'm ready. I'm in game mode now.' "

When Nick and Mike visited for the first time, Lance heard them worrying outside his door: "Is he going to be all right? Is he going to make it?" They prepared themselves to see their brother frail and wearing a hospital gown in bed.

They opened the door to see Lance in a chair wearing gym shorts and a T-shirt.

"Man, it was like he was about to go work out," Nick said. "I said, 'OK, my big bro is back.' "

Only 18 months later, during a checkup in 2012, Lance learned the cancer was back. Mike and Nick were tested after the first diagnoses to see if they were potential bone marrow matches. Mike's human leukocyte antigen (HLA) matched.

Only about 5 percent of potential donors on the registry identify as black, meaning black patients like Lance have the smallest chance to find a suitable match.

"It's a blessing," he said. "I feel fortunate. (Mike) didn't have to do it. And I really didn't even have to ask."

Bone marrow was transplanted from Mike's hip in a one-day process. Lance remained in the University of Chicago Medical Center for another 30 days. He saw boils develop on his arms, his hands darken and his arms bloat.

He forced himself to work out or at least take short walks in the hospital every day. He called the hospitals "hotels" as a mental trick. He reminded himself of overcoming a childhood stutter and severe knee injuries in high school.

His siblings encouraged him throughout the process. They talked about basketball, like they always do. Nick especially became a "master motivator," Lance said. He invited Lance to attend Morgan Park practices, where the team applauded and hugged him.

"I called him," Nick said, "and said: 'Get your ass out of bed. This is what we do. This is what Daddy taught us, our mom taught us. You're the best thing for the game of basketball. You're the best thing for me. You get me going. Now I'm going to get you going.' "

Lance joined Nick's staff at Morgan Park for six seasons, helping the Mustangs to those four Class 3A state titles after his remission while also serving as the school's dean of students. He is now cancer-free.

"We know his will and determination," Mike said. "We know if anyone had a chance of beating it, it was him."

'No bad jobs'

As a child living 10 minutes from campus, the first college game Lance attended was Chicago State versus Central State.

"We turned the corner, and the parking lot was packed," he recalled. "They had a band playing. It was a great atmosphere, a lot of people from the community."

Lance would like to see Chicago State buzz like that again, or at least hum. While he has an obvious pipeline to a top high school program and AAU program, he said he won't confine himself to city recruiting. He and his staff will look for transfers and any talented player who wants to help the Cougars win.

"This might not be your first choice, but I'm going to work you like it is your first choice," he said.

Lance, who played at Colorado State and Idaho, has worked as an assistant at DePaul (1992-97), Loyola (1998-2001), Illinois State (2002-03) and Southern Illinois (2008-12), among other stops. Chicago State is his first college head coaching gig.

The Cougars return only six players. Only three played more than 15 minutes per game, and none averaged more than six points. Chicago State went 3-29 last season and has only 13 victories over the last three seasons.

Lance is unfazed by those dismal odds.

"There are no bad jobs," he said. "You think of a stock that has been beaten up. But if you invest in it right, it becomes profitable. Some jobs, you might struggle more. But I'm blessed."

Can Northwestern upset Notre Dame?

Analysts Quinn, Neuheisel size up their chances

TEDDY GREENSTEIN
On college football

Brady Quinn called Northwestern's 31-17 triumph over Wisconsin on Saturday for Fox Sports. Rick Neuheisel had the mic for CBS Sports' broadcast of Notre Dame's 44-22 victory over Navy.

Both will monitor the prime-time duel between Notre Dame (8-0) and Northwestern (5-3) with great interest.

What will it take for the Wildcats to spring the upset Saturday in Evanston?

"Northwestern needs Clayton Thorson to play better," said Quinn, who set 36 program records as Notre Dame's quarterback from 2003-06. "Cannot turn it over three times."

Said Neuheisel, the former Colorado and Washington coach who now hosts a daily show on Sirius XM (Ch. 84): "Try to force Notre Dame to add pressure beyond the four-man rush team."

And a big-picture take from Neuheisel: "The Nebraska game was (believed to be) over, right? Kids who find ways to do what no one thought possible (like the Northwestern comeback against the Cornhuskers) will continue to believe they can get it done."

That was your first time seeing since Notre Dame in person since the 2012 national title game. What were your takeaways?
Neuheisel: They are darn good. Listen, being the best team in the stadium on that day is all you can ask for. If I'm playing out (potential) games in my mind, they have some holes. ... They are a fantastic tackling team but I still think they struggle to get off blocks. They are talented from the standpoint of a quarterback (Ian Book) and the offense in the RPO (run-pass option) world, but after you take away (receiver Miles) Boykin and if you can limit Dexter Williams, then what do you have left? But you can say that about every team. Book is really good, and (coaches) Tommy Rees and Chip Long deserve a lot of credit.

How do you limit Williams?
Neuheisel: You gang the box. What the QB run game is supposed to do is make it difficult for you. We saw it. Pittsburgh had a nice plan (the Irish rushed for just 80 yards on 38 carries in a 19-14 victory). That's on film. Pat Fitzgerald and (Pitt coach) Pat Narduzzi are two peas in a pod as defensive coaches. You stop the run first and make them beat you in the air.

Think Narduzzi will share everything with Fitzgerald, given they're in a different conference?
Neuheisel: Sure he will.

Ian Book has been sensational — a completion percentage of 70-plus in his first three starts and 80-plus in his last two.
Neuheisel: The beautiful thing is that the yards per attempt (8.7) is pretty high as well; he's not dinking and dunking. There are some glorified sweeps that help his passing numbers, but his ability to go from one side of the field to the other really benefits the play-caller. It's not just, 'Here's the coverage, hit this guy.' Book's ability to get through reads and go from one side to another is unique from a college football standpoint. Northwestern has to muster a pass rush.

Can you conceive of Northwestern winning?
Neuheisel: I couldn't conceive of Northwestern beating Rutgers only 18-15 and can't conceive of Northwestern winning the games it has won given the loss to Akron. It's the most Jekyll and Hyde team in college football. I put nothing past them and I know Notre Dame feels the same way — they are giving these guys full respect.
From Quinn:

Thorson tore it up against Michigan State (373 passing yards, 3 touchdownss) and Nebraska (455, 3 TDs) but has struggled back-to-back against Rutgers and Wisconsin (1 TD, 3 INTs). What's your take on him?
Quinn: If you're talking about him as a college quarterback, he is excellent and gives Northwestern a chance to win every game. He has won 32 games. He can take off and run. He can make all the throws and is pretty intelligent as far as handling the system. As an NFL prospect, what will hurt him is his tendency to hold onto the football. He needs to get it out sooner. And he tends to lock in on the first or second receiver. That affected him on the first and third interceptions (against Wisconsin). He telegraphed both. He's accurate at times, but I don't know how consistently accurate he is. Some completions (an underthrow to Ben Skowronek) are more catchable than perfect.

Brian Kelly says he's optimistic that linebacker Drue Tranquill will play despite suffering a right-ankle injury ankle against Navy. How big of a deal is that?
Quinn: It would be huge because he's kind of the quarterback (of the defense), making all the calls and getting guys lined up. He is good in coverage and in the box (against the run).

Will Northwestern be able to run against Notre Dame?
Quinn: I think they can but it comes down to how many attempts and how they go about it. Are they passing to set up the run? Will they be balanced early on? (Isaiah) Bowser is a tough, physical runner, a downhill guy. He's not going to juke you but he has a good sense for where they want him to go with the football and he abides by that. I'm surprised Drake (Anderson) didn't get more burn time. He and Solomon Vault are potentially the most effective against Notre Dame because of their speed. I would be shocked if Northwestern thinks it can jam it down the throat of Notre Dame.

The Washington Post

Maryland parted ways with football coach DJ Durkin on Wednesday evening, one day after he was reinstated. Durkin, who had been on administrative leave since Aug. 11 following media reports that outlined a culture of abuse, fear and intimidation that allegedly took place under his watch, was not fired for cause and will be bought out of his contract.

Maryland's football program and athletic department have been the focus of scrutiny for months, following the death Jordan McNair, a 19-year-old football player who suffered exertional heatstroke at a team workout in late May and died several days later.

An exhaustive probe into the culture of the football program also highlighted dysfunction within the athletic department.

The decision to part ways with Durkin came following pushback from lawmakers and some players who voiced their displeasure with his reinstatement on social media. Student leaders criticized the decision, as have faculty members in College Park.

The University of Maryland informed the board of regents of its decision to fire Durkin but did not consult with the board. Athletic director Damon Evans told the team after practice Wednesday, according to multiple people with knowledge of the situation. Matt Canada will continue in his role as interim coach of the football team.

Before Wednesday's news broke, Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan called on the state university system's governing board to reconsider its decisions, and said he was "deeply troubled by the lack of transparency."

University President Wallace Loh, who on Tuesday announced that he would retire from his post, said in a letter posted online that he met with campus leaders and the "overwhelming majority of stakeholders" voiced "serious concerns" about Durkin's return.

"This is not at all a reflection of my opinion of Coach Durkin as a person," he said. "However, a departure is in the best interest of the university, and this afternoon Coach Durkin was informed that the university will part ways."

Nagy offers few specifics on injuries

By Dan Wiederer
Chicago Tribune

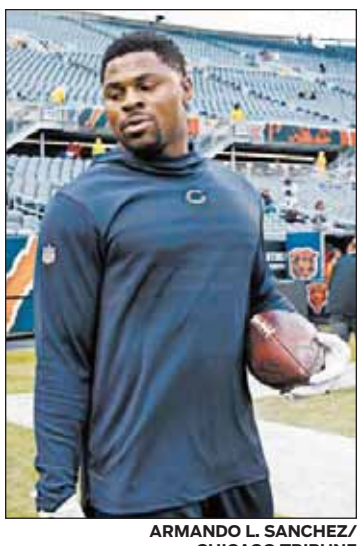

Before Khalil Mack sat out Wednesday's practice, Bears coach Matt Nagy said he expects the star outside linebacker to follow a similar routine to the last two weeks as the team gears up for Sunday's game against the Bills.

Mack, who is still recovering from a sprained right ankle he suffered Oct. 14 in Miami, sat out Wednesday and Thursday practices in Weeks 7 and 8 and did some on-field work on both Fridays. He played against the Patriots on Oct. 21 but was inactive against the Jets.

That marked the first time in five NFL seasons that Mack had missed a game. And he could miss a second game in Buffalo with the Bears vowing to remain cautious with how they approach Mack's recovery.

The team is cognizant of an important 12-day stretch in November in which they'll play three NFC North games, sandwiching a home game with the Vikings between two games against the Lions.

As for injured guard Kyle Long, Nagy carefully steered around revealing details of the guard's right foot injury. On Tuesday,

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/ CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Long was seen at Halas Hall wheeling around on a scooter with his right foot in a protective boot. But Nagy wouldn't offer specifics of Long's diagnosis on Wednesday before practice.

"We don't know the complete extent to it yet," he said.

Pressed on whether any bones in Long's right foot were broken, the coach didn't offer a direct answer.

"Well," he said, "I'm not going to get into the details of it. But there's an issue in regards to ... the tendon. There are some issues there."

Nagy said Long's right Achilles tendon isn't damaged. Nor is this current injury related to the season-ending right ankle injury Long suffered in 2016, a setback that has continued to bother him into this season. That injury included a torn peroneal tendon on the outside of his foot.

Still, regardless of the specifics, the Bears are preparing to be without Long for an extended period and are still having conversations on whether to place him on injured reserve.

"Those are decisions we're going through," Nagy said. "We're not there yet. And we don't need to be. Once we need to get to that point, then we'll decide what we need to do."

With Long out, guards James Daniels, Eric Kush and Bryan Witzmann will compete for playing time. Kush has started six games at left guard, and he can play right guard. He missed the Jets game because of a nerve problem in his neck and shoulder, and Daniels started in his place. Kush returned to practice Wednesday and was limited.

Receiver Allen Robinson (groin) sat out Wednesday's practice. Nagy said he and Mack will follow the same schedule this week.

Playing the slots: Quarterback Mitch Trubisky understands how altering his arm slot helps him. But he also acknowledges it can negatively affect throws.

This was a topic Wednesday after Trubisky had mixed success in varying his arm slot on several throws against the Jets. For him, it's a matter of consistency with mechanics while also not stifling his athletic instincts and creativity.

"Sometimes it got me in trouble," he said. "Sometimes it's pressure up front, you're trying to throw around a D-lineman, and it works. And then sometimes it comes out really sloppy. So ... it's just got to be more consistent.

"Finding the passing windows, a lot of the time it's bringing my feet instead of trying just to change my arm slot. So, the more consistent I can be, the more you'll see the completion percentage go up, and I'll just be a lot more consistent."

Nagy challenges QB

wearing the mic about five minutes after he put it on and didn't remember it was there until he was in his office after the Bears' 24-10 victory. So it was a glimpse of how the most important relationship within the Bears organization functions behind the scenes.

After Trubisky completed 5 of 13 passes for 116 yards in the first half, Nagy knew the offense needed a spark, and he challenged Trubisky to deliver.

"For what it's worth I just want him to know that I'm behind him and that I support him," Nagy said Wednesday at Halas Hall. "But I also want him to know that I'm going to put my thumb on him too. I expect him to be great, so I want to challenge him to do great things. There's no one on our football team that's going to accept the challenge more than him."

The conversation was all the more notable because of how Trubisky responded. He led two second-half scoring drives, completing one with a pretty 4-yard, back-shoulder touchdown pass to rookie receiver Anthony Miller.

He completed 11 of 16 passes in the half and finished with a turnover-free game and a 102.7 passer rating.

"Every single snap, every single game, every single week, you're striving for greatness," Trubisky said. "But I think when he pulled me aside it really just homed me in, made me that much more motivated to focus in and do what I had to do to help the offense and really get us going. I've got so much respect and love for Coach. He just said it, and I needed to make it happen. So I played a little bit better the second half, but I'm trying to be consistent."

Nagy has a different game-day balancing act when it comes to dealing with Trubisky in his first year as a head coach. He said he was used to sitting down with his quarterbacks and talking over each series.

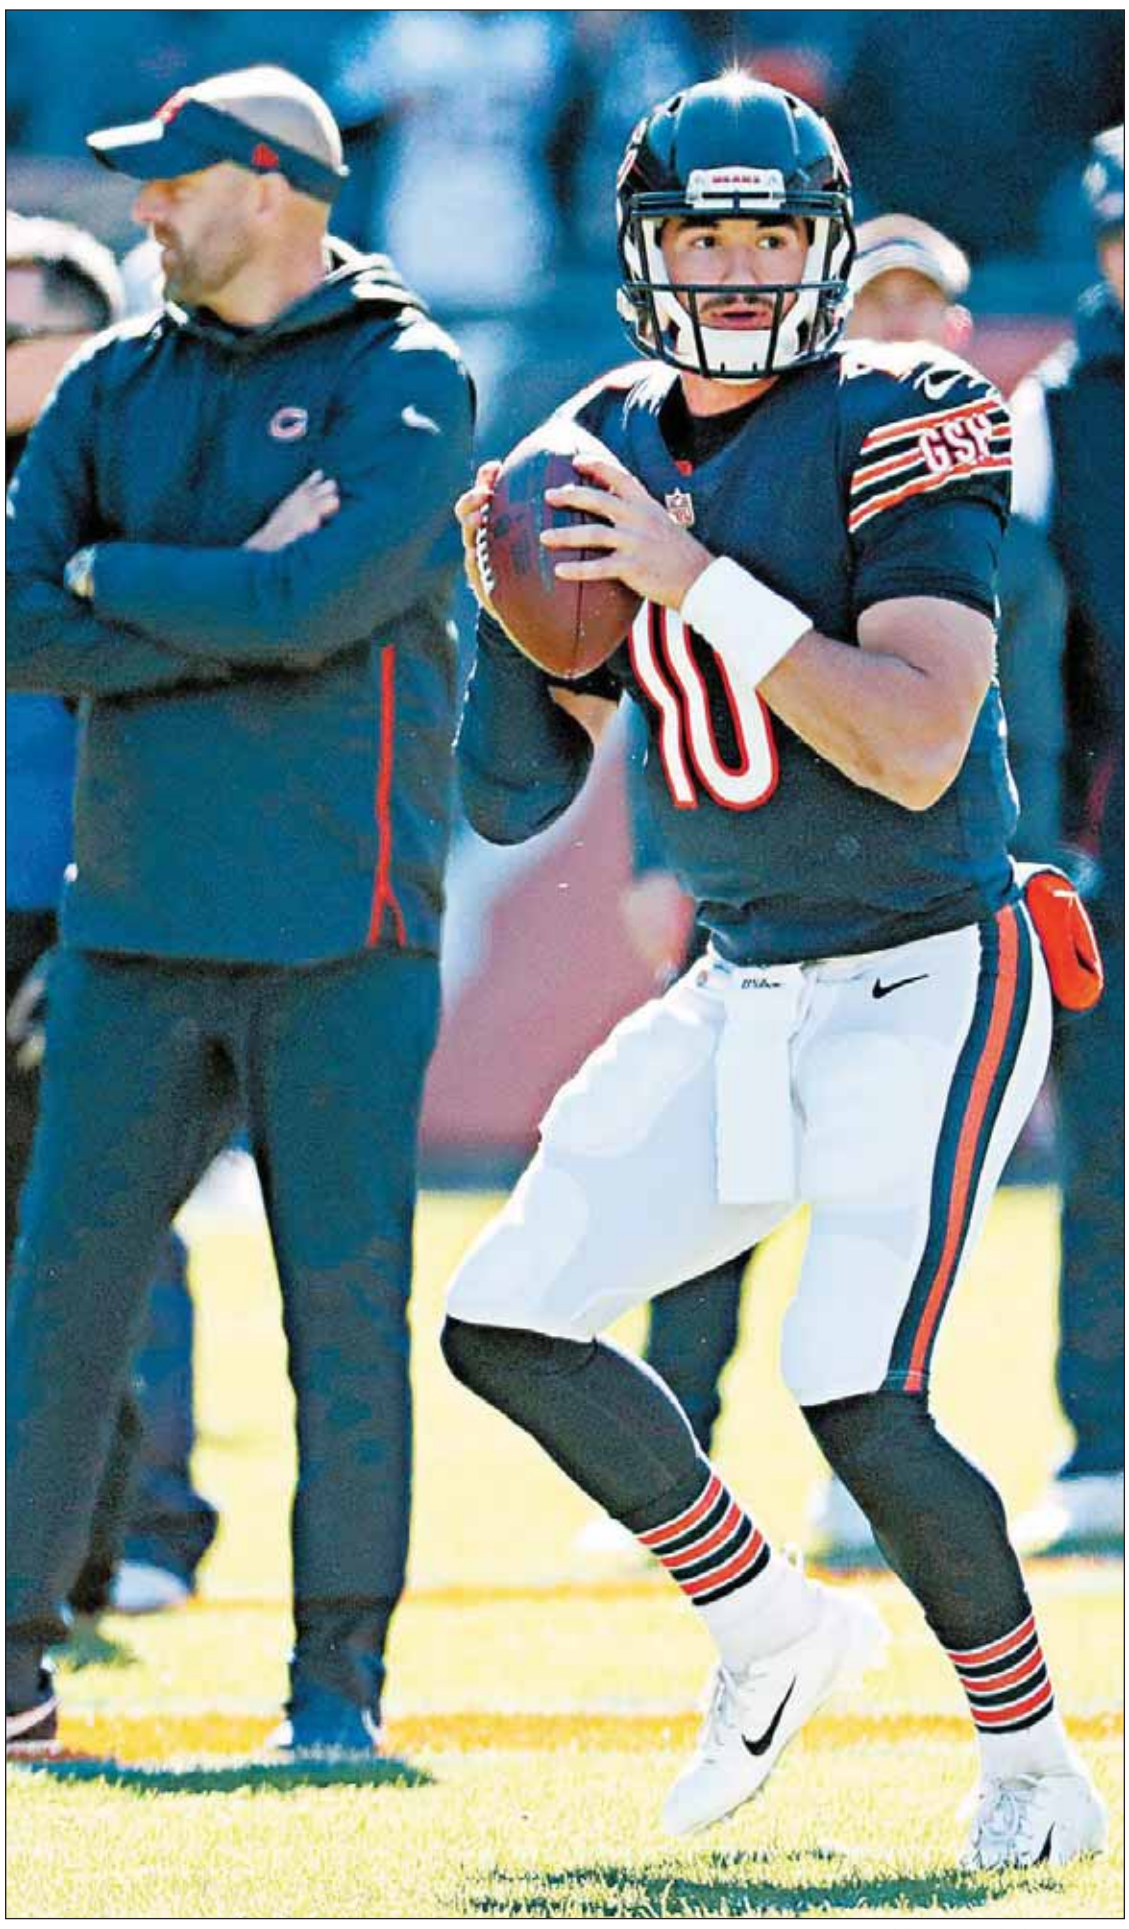

He now has an entire team to oversee. But he tries to pick his spots to address Trubisky.

"Every now and then, if I feel there's a time when I've got to talk to him and have a little one-on-one conversation, I'll do it," Nagy said. "I don't want to overdo it. I try not to because it just becomes noise that he doesn't hear. When I talk to him, I want it to mean something."

During weekday preparation, Trubisky said Nagy offers up challenges. For the Jets game, it was to be aggressive and finish, something Trubisky thought the Bears followed through on.

There have been times this season when Nagy has publicly praised Trubisky when heavier criticism also seemed valid, particularly after his performance against the Patriots. But Trubisky said he gladly accepts the critiques, good and bad.

"I love it," he said. "I think the best players, they want to be the hardest workers and they also want to be pushed the most. So we have a really good relationship, where I want him criticizing and I want him pushing me all the time. But we also have that loving relationship, and then we have that respect that goes both ways, that I know he just wants the best for me and I just want the best for him as well.

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

With coach Matt Nagy on the sidelines behind him, quarterback Mitch Trubisky warms up Sunday.

"I love it. I think the best players, they want to be the hardest workers and they also want to be pushed the most."

— Mitch Trubisky on challenges from coach Matt Nagy

"No hard feelings and no sensitivity when I'm being criticized, because he does want me to be great."

Nagy said he didn't mind being mic'd up. He understands that it's important for fans to witness authentic moments because he used to crave such information when he was a fan growing up.

The video showed more than just the after-halftime interaction with Trubisky.

Nagy told Taylor Gabriel he made a "special block" on Tarik Cohen's 70-yard touchdown. He yelled "Boom!" to punctuate a Roquan Smith tackle. He told Jordan Howard, "I promise you I'm going to get you going. I promise you."

And he also pulled Trubisky aside for a follow-up as the Bears' victory was winding down.

"What I asked you to do in the start of the third is what you just did, right?" Nagy said. "It's never always going to be 100 percent pretty, but you came through, and you made throws when you needed to and you got us going the right way. We grew today. We grew today. I love it."

Thursday night fever: 1-6 Raiders vs. 1-7 49ers

The 1-6 Raiders face the 1-7 49ers in this week's Fox and NFL Network prime-time showcase.

NFL ratings have been up this season — thanks largely to competitive games — but this is just the sort of dreary showdown that tests how devoted fans are.

The current line is: Don't you have something better to watch?

Even those who can't stand Joe Buck have to feel at least a little sorry for the guy having to call this game.

Thursday games rarely have been a favorite for the players, especially those whose teams are coming in on short rest, as the 49ers and Raiders are.

Niners cornerback Richard Sherman referred to them as a "poopfest" in The Players' Tribune a couple of years ago when he was with the Seahawks, comparing drawing a Thursday night game with "a middle finger" from the NFL.

But this week's Battle of the Bay is a throwback to when the league thought nothing of using Thursday nights as a dumping ground, often giving lesser teams national exposure — whether the nation wanted to be exposed to them or not.

You know, the way it seemed to be before this season.

That arrogant indifference to the audience was supposed to go away when Fox gifted the NFL earlier this year with a deal said to be worth $3.3 billion to air simulcasts of 11 NFL Network games per season through 2022.

In paying one-third more than CBS and NBC paid for Thursday games last season, Fox reportedly was given assurances it would get an improved slate of games.

Unfortunately, while NBC gets to change late-season "Sunday Night Football" matchups to offer more compelling games, Fox on Thursdays — like ESPN, with its "Monday Night Football" package — is stuck with whatever the league doled out in the spring.

What might once have seemed a so-so game can get a lot worse by midseason.

This one is downright awful.

The 49ers were bad enough when C.J. Beathard had to replace injured quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo, and have yet to win since.

Now there's a chance Beathard, who missed practice Tuesday with an injured right wrist and thumb that makes it hard for him to grip a ball, might have to sit against the Raiders.

That would mean the first regular-season NFL snaps for Nick Mullens, who, after going undrafted last year out of Southern Miss, spent all of last season and through Week 3 this year on the 49ers practice squad.

In short, Mullens seems unlikely to evoke memories of Joe Montana, Steve Young or even Colin Kaepernick, although anything is possible.

As for the Raiders, well, any organization that gives a 10-year, $100 million contract to lure Jon Gruden back to coaching yet offloads defensive superstar Khalil Mack to the Bears for draft picks and magic beans deserves whatever fate befalls it.

This week's "poopfest" stands in stark contrast to NBC's "Sunday Night Football" Patriots-Packers matchup, which pits future Hall of Famers Tom Brady and Aaron Rodgers against each other for only the second time.

That one has football fans talking.

This one has football fans groaning.

Things always could be worse, of course.

In fact, they might well be on the Nov. 12 edition of "Monday Night Football," which features the 49ers and the Giants.

It's another matchup of teams that currently have just one victory apiece, with the addition of oft-criticized rookie analyst Jason Witten and the rest of the ESPN crew.

That's a throwback game too.

Leggett raising awareness

Jets TE's charity educates about abdominal injuries

By Dennis Waszak Jr.

MELISSA NELSON-GABRIEL/AP

Brian and Kathy Haugen's son, Taylor, who died 10 years ago from an in-game injury to his abdominal area.

FLORHAM PARK, N.J. — Jordan Leggett remembers the sudden buzz on the sideline and in the stands as cellphones lit up with texts delivering the scary news.

"Everybody on the team where I was from was like, 'Oh, man, he must've just got like a big hit,' " the Jets tight end recalled. "We heard later that he passed away, so it was kind of a big deal."

Taylor Haugen was only 15 on Aug. 30, 2008, when he went out across the middle of the field for a pass, reached up and grabbed the football — and was immediately slammed into by two defenders, one to the front of his body and the other to his back. The impact to Haugen's abdominal area ruptured his liver and the Niceville High School wide receiver was rushed to the hospital, where he died a few hours later.

"The surgeons who worked on my child all night said it looked like a car crash," Kathy Haugen said in a telephone interview.

Leggett, who was a wide receiver for nearby Navarre High School in the Florida Panhandle, had never met Haugen, but was shaken by his stunning death. Ten years later, Leggett is honoring his memory with his "Touchdowns For Taylor" campaign, working with Haugen's parents and the Taylor Haugen Foundation to raise awareness about abdominal injuries in youth football and trying to educate parents, players and coaches about how to better prevent them.

Shortly after Leggett was drafted by the Jets in the fifth round out of Clemson last year, his agents asked if he was interested in supporting any charities. Leggett talked to someone from back home, and they mentioned the Taylor Haugen Foundation.

"It just brought back all those memories from back in high school because I was there (in Florida) when it happened," Leggett said. "So, it was just something I wanted to be a part of."

The 23-year-old Leggett started the "Touchdowns For Taylor" charity campaign last season through the sports fundraising platform Pledge It, with donors contributing money for every touchdown catch by the Jets this season.

"We've never been Jets fans in our entire lives," Brian Haugen said with a big laugh, "but we find ourselves rooting for the Jets to score touchdowns."

The Jets have 11 TD catches so far, with Leggett contributing to the total with the first of his NFL career in Week 4 against the Jaguars.

"Last year, I didn't get to play at all and my soon-to-be mother-in-law actually thought it would be cool to donate as much as my jersey number, so with 86, she'll donate $86 per touchdown," said a smiling Leggett, who missed last season with a knee injury. "We had a lot of touchdowns last year and she thought it was specifically just for my touchdowns, so it was kind of funny because she was the biggest donor."

Leggett and Haugen's parents met for the first time in July in Florida, where they were able to chat about life in the NFL, high school rivalries, chilly Northeast weather — and, most of all, Taylor, and their combined mission.

"He's just a great kid," Kathy Haugen said of Leggett. "He's a wonderful person and we're really honored that he wanted to do something to give back to his community and chose the foundation and our son's legacy to do it."

Added Brian Haugen: "He's a sweet soul."

They are all fiercely driven by the same goal: spreading the word that abdominal injuries are potentially life-threatening to anyone playing football. And there are ways of offering better protection.

"If you think about football, and I think this is the story that people don't get is with the chop-block rules and helmet-to-helmet contact, where are they going to hit?" Brian Haugen said. "The torso is now the target."

The Haugens have spent the last 10 years doing all they can to educate by speaking at conferences and workshops around the country and collaborating with medical experts and others in the college and NFL communities to learn more.

"The problem that needs to be fixed is, how do we avoid abdominal injuries, or at least try to better protect against them?" Brian Haugen said. "People say,Wow, that never happens.' No, dude, you don't get it. Kathy gets phone calls almost daily from parents across the country who see this thing that never happens.'

"It happens all the time."

One of the most frustrating aspects for the Haugens is that statistics on abdominal injuries and deaths from football-related hits at the high school level are largely incomplete or inaccurate. It's also a big reason the Haugens started the foundation bearing the name of their only child. They are pushing for consistent injury tracking and lobbying for better protection standards at the youth sports level.

"Logic would say that if you're going to protect the organ on top of your shoulders," Kathy Haugen said, "you would protect the organs within the middle of your body."

The Haugens support a product called the EvoShield shirt, which provides padded protection to the abdominal region and is worn by players at every level of the sport, including the NFL. They also started the Youth Equipment for Sports Safety (YESS) program to educate athletes and provide them with equipment to protect against abdominal injuries.

They have also developed a six-part "Pledge To Protect," which includes a goal of making sure that by 2028 everyone playing youth football throughout the United States is wearing abdominal protection equipment as an essential part of their sports gear.

"It's being aware that this is an injury that takes place, that there are steps as a parent you can take to make sure that your child is better protected," Kathy Haugen said. "Ask questions and ask your coaches — be engaged. You are your child's best advocate when it comes to safety."

The Haugens say they still wouldn't have prevented their son from playing the game he loved. But they stress they are educated now about the type of injuries that Taylor suffered — and they would know now how to better keep him safe.

And they, along with Leggett and their many supporters, want other families to learn how to protect their kids — and never experience the loss they did.

"I think it's always a terrible situation when parents have to bury their children," Leggett said. "But they took the terrible thing that happened to their son and they're trying to make it better for other families who have kids who are playing the sport of football, and they're trying to make it better for everybody else.

European Tour schedule provides for a big finish

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

The PGA Championship moving to May might have provided a strong finishing kick to the European Tour season.

The European Tour released a schedule for next year that still involves 31 countries on five continents with 48 tournaments, even if they are a little out of order. The biggest change was moving its flagship event, the BMW PGA Championship at Wentworth, from May to September.

Wentworth would have been one week after the PGA Championship. Now it is Sept. 19-22 and kicks off a stretch that includes the popular Dunhill Links Championship a week later, a Rolex Series event at the Italian Open, the French Open at Le Golf National, a World Golf Championships event in Shanghai and the final three Rolex Series events (Turkey, South Africa, Dubai) that conclude the Race to Dubai.

The French Open is no longer a Rolex Series event (with a $7 million purse) and has been moved from the heart of the continental European schedule in early summer to a fall date in October. The Irish Open at Lahinch and the Scottish Open at The Renaissance Club next to Muirfield lead into the British Open at Royal Portrush.

Abu Dhabi takes over as a Rolex Series event and will be the first event of 2019 (Jan. 16-19). It will be followed by Dubai and a new tournament called the Saudi International, where Dustin Johnson, Patrick Reed and Paul Casey are expected to play.

Another new event is the Kenya Open, which has been upgraded from a Challenge Tour event and will be the same week as The Players Championship. The European Tour also added the Vic Open, a PGA Tour of Australasian event in which men and women compete on the same course for the same prize money.

It also managed to save the British Masters, which Tommy Fleetwood will host at Hillside Golf Club next door to Royal Birkdale.

The European Tour remains the most global golf circuit. Just over half — 16 of 31 — of the countries it visits are in Europe. Because of the majors and World Golf Championships, the country that has the most European Tour events on the schedule is the United States.

Ariya's reign

Ariya Jutanugarn was so dominant this year on the LPGA Tour that she wrapped up the points-based Rolex Player of the Year award with three tournaments left.

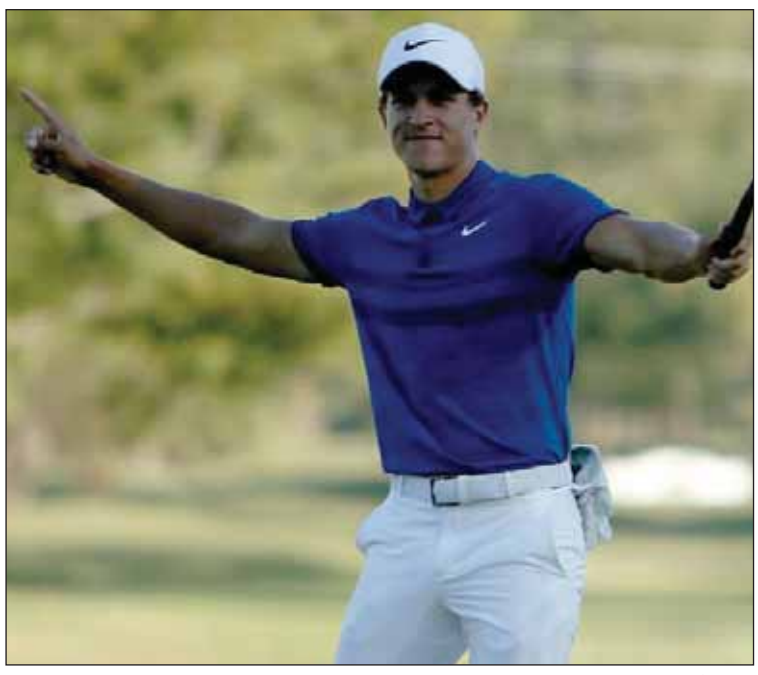

Jutanugarn, whose three victories include the U.S. Women's Open, has 219 points. That's 83 points ahead of Sung Hyun Park, meaning she cannot be caught. This is the second time in three years the big-hitting Thai has won the award.

"It feels great to win this award for a second time, and I'm really excited about that," Jutanugarn said. "I've played well this season and it's a huge honor for me to have my name on this trophy again."

Along with her three victories, Jutanugarn has finished in the top 10 in 60 percent of her tournaments (15 of 25).

She leads the money list with just under $2.5 million, has the lowest scoring average (69.38) and has been leading the Race to CME Globe every week since May 18. She also leads the LPGA Tour in total birdies (421).

Opposite fields

Cameron Champ showed off his awesome length at the 2017 U.S. Open, and now the 23-year-old Californian has his first PGA Tour victory. He poured it on down the stretch with big drives and big putts for a four-shot victory in the Sanderson Farms Championship.

The trick now is following it up.

The PGA Tour is deeper than ever, and a first victory anywhere is meaningful. Even so, opposite-field events are not always the best measure.

According to the Official World Golf Ranking, three events in the Web.com Tour Finals this year had a stronger field than the four PGA Tour events that were held the same week as the British Open and three World Golf Championships.

Dating to the start of the wraparound season in the fall of 2013, there have been 19 opposite-field events on the PGA Tour schedule. Thirteen were won by players who captured their first PGA Tour title. None of those 13 has yet to win again.

The list includes Tony Finau (2016 Puerto Rico Open), who went 2-1-0 in his Ryder Cup debut last month. Chesson Hadley was the only player ranked inside the top 100 in the world (No. 92 when he won the 2014 Puerto Rico Open). D.A. Points had the lowest ranking. He was No. 634 when he won Puerto Rico in 2017.

Bonus money

Xander Schauffele picked up $1.7 million for his first World Golf Championships title in the HSBC Champions, allowing the 25-year-old American to crack the $10 million mark in career earnings in just 58 starts.

He also might have some more cash coming his way.

Schauffele is an affiliate member of the European Tour, and his victory in Shanghai — considered his first title on the European Tour — moved him to No. 4 in the Race to Dubai, one spot behind Masters champion Patrick Reed. The Race to Dubai has three events left, and the top 10 are eligible for the $5 million in bonus money.

This truly could be considered bonus money because Schauffele has yet to play a regular European Tour event. His eight counting events on the Race to Dubai have been the four majors (he was a runner-up at the British Open and tied for sixth in the U.S. Open) and four WGCs.

Spieth returns

Spieth is making his first domestic start in the fall at the Shriners Hospitals for Children Open in Las Vegas this week, and he will follow that up with an inaugural appearance in the Mayakoba Golf Classic in Mexico.

The last time Spieth played a PGA Tour event before January was a tie for seventh in the 2015 HSBC Champions in Shanghai. He played the Dunlop Phoenix on the Japan Golf Tour and the Australian Open in 2014, and has played the Aussie Open each of the last three years, along with the unofficial Hero World Challenge.

This is about more than getting a jump on FedEx Cup points, however.

Divots

SKYiGOLF was launched Tuesday, a company geared toward helping PGA of America members and golf course owners with resources to run more efficiently and build loyalty among golfers.

Along with incentives to play more rounds and award a hole-in-one with a $10,000 prize at member facilities, SKYiGOLF said it would sponsor the first event on the Symetra Tour next year, a 72-hole event at Charlotte Harbor National in Florida.

The purse will be $250,000, the largest on the Symetra Tour, with net proceeds going to the Folds of Honor.

With a tie for 11th in the HSBC Champions last week, Billy Horschel became the 76th player to surpass $20 million in career PGA Tour earnings. Aaron Wise was voted PGA Tour rookie of the year for 2018.

He was the only rookie to win a tournament (AT&T Byron Nelson) and reach the Tour Championship.

Stat of the week

Eight players who have been No. 1 in the world are among the top 15 in this week's world ranking, the most since the ranking began in 1986.

Final word

"I've worked hard, but a lot of guys work hard and they don't get this. So for whatever reason, it's doing right at the right time. It's working out." — Scott Parel, a former computer programmer who has won twice this year on the PGA Tour Champions.

IN PERFORMANCE 'In the Canyon' ★★★ 1/2

An abortion controversy that only gets riskier

By Chris Jones
Chicago Tribune

Those of us who long ago hitched our covered wagons to the talent train that is Calamity West have been waiting for that play.

You know, the one that propels her toward what her talent deserves, ranging far beyond Jackalope or Steep Theatre, the one that establishes her as an essential Chicago-style voice. Her writing is funny and raw and always looking for a dumb risk that might well destroy, and sometimes does destroy, everything she is working so hard to create.

West, I've long thought, is a prairie-style antidote to the overeducated elitist writers and their boring East Coast MFA plays, workshopped and analyzed to within an inch of their lives. West writes raw. Her edges are rough.

"In the Canyon," which finally has matched West with the right kind of humanistic, disciplined, story-oriented director in Elly Green and the right kind of risk-taking designer in William Boles, is that play. I think. With one more draft.

West's work is always harder to grasp in the theater than I think she realizes; I've just read the script to "In the Canyon" three times. I think I finally understand it now. You won't have that option; you will have to concentrate after you've wandered in the bowels of the Edgewater armory where West plies her trade at the Jackalope Theatre. West could do more to help out the paying customer.

You might first want to read up on Keyser Soze. He's a menacing fictional character in the Kevin Spacey movie "The Usual Suspects," but he's also geek shorthand for a cinematic scenario wherein the screenwriter(s) basically change all the rules in the final reel — ensuring that their audience is Keyser Soze'd into an alternate reality. If that's what you're feeling as you read the news this week, with mounting dread in the pit of your stomach, then you really are going to

John Ronan's new building at IIT is unique, thoughtful but questions cloud its future

A new building at the Illinois Institute of Technology looks and works like no other building in Chicago. It exemplifies an emerging trend in architecture — a "dynamic facade" that can tune a building to its climate.

The second floor of the two-story, steel-framed structure is enclosed in a technologically sophisticated skin of white, pillowlike cushions that can automatically adjust to let in more or less natural light depending on the weather.

A close up view of the pillowlike facade.

Being inside the building's second floor is like being inside a cloud. On a gray day, you see ghostlike outlines of trees and adjoining structures. If you look at the pillowy walls too long, they create a disorienting moire effect. I wonder if it's going to drive the inhabitants crazy.

Maybe the building — the Ed Kaplan Family Institute for Innovation and Tech Entrepreneurship, also known as the IIT Innovation Center — is a glimpse of the future. Maybe not.

Regardless, it's a fascinating experiment — the latest chapter in Chicago's long-running story of exploring and exploiting the latest architectural technologies.

Dedicated last Thursday and more than 300 feet long, the center is the first new academic building on the South Side campus in more than 40 years. It sits on the north side of IIT's property, not far from 31st and State streets.

World War I in paper, puppets and animation

Project commemorates war's armistice on its 100th anniversary

War! What is it good for?

In the case of the Poetry Foundation and Manual Cinema's latest collaboration, it's good for "Three World War I Poems," a nine-minute video that commemorates 100 years since the World War I armistice. (The official anniversary is Nov. 11.)

The project, which includes illustrated paper puppets, black and white shadow puppetry and animation, showcases war and its aftermath through the lens of soldiers via John McCrae's poem "In Flanders Fields," Edward Thomas' "The Owl" and Wilfred Owen's "Dulce et Decorum Est."

"We wanted to give each one of them a different visual aesthetic," said Drew Dir, the video's director. "'The Owl' felt like a very psychological poem, so we wanted something that felt noirish and shadowy. For the Wilfred Owen poem, we wanted something that felt abstract and really simplified, pure action and energy — just to show the starkness of war. And for 'In Flanders Fields,' which has these really elegiac images in it, we wanted something that had more color in it and

Pink Floyd drummer Mason plans U.S. tour

Pink Floyd drummer Nick Mason is planning to tour North America next year to perform some classic Floyd songs, but don't expect "Comfortably Numb" or "Another Brick in the Wall."

Mason instead will be digging deep into the Pink Floyd archives to offer tunes not heard live in America for a long time, if ever. Nick Mason's Saucerful of Secrets will be jamming to pre-"Dark Side of the Moon" material.

"I really wanted to find something different and a bit quirky," Mason told The Associated Press.

The band — which includes Spandau Ballet guitarist Gary Kemp, longtime Pink Floyd touring bassist Guy Pratt, guitarist Lee Harris and keyboardist Dom Beken — formed this year in the United Kingdom after bandmates nudged Mason to make music again.

The new 25-date tour will kick off March 12 in Vancouver, British Columbia, and take the band to Washington, California, Arizona, Colorado, Texas, Florida, Georgia, Minnesota, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin, Missouri, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York and Washington, D.C.

The tour will mark Mason's first performances in North America since Pink Floyd played Giants Stadium in New Jersey in 1994 as part of the Division Bell Tour.

"I had no idea how much I was going to enjoy it," Mason said.

ASK AMY

Mom wants to re-parent teen's friend

Dear Amy: My 13-year-old daughter's best friend, "Heather," is an only child whose parents' lives revolve around her. She is spoiled with new clothes, makeup, extravagant trips, spending money and Starbucks at whim.

My daughter loves this girl but struggles with jealousy that I am not able to provide the same for her.

Even if I won the lottery, I wouldn't give all of this to my children, because I want them to grow up with solid values and coping mechanisms for not getting everything they want the minute they want it.

I have tried to tell Heather's mother that we can't afford these things because of our family's income, rather than point out that we have different parenting philosophies.

I tell her how much I am struggling and trying not to raise spoiled kids. I tell her I want my daughter to be grateful for what she has and to work for what she wants.

She responds that she gives Heather all she does because she works so hard in school and cleans her room without being asked.

Every time I think that this mom understands where I am coming from, she immediately goes back to her spending and spoiling ways! And Heather has started making comments to my daughter about my being cheap and too strict.

I don't think it's right for me to tell my daughter who she can be friends with. However, she knows how I feel about Heather and her parents, and she knows that if she compares or complains to me about it, I will stop inviting her friend to our home.

I am looking for any advice on how to talk to my daughter about reality, good financial values and how to handle this friendship without resentment and comparison.

— Grounded Mom

Dear Grounded: First off, stop trying to parent these other parents. They are raising their daughter the way they want to. Your input is judgmental and seems self-serving, as if you want them to do things differently in order to make things easier for you.

Thirteen-year-olds often struggle with questions of status. Adolescents frequently express the desire for and jealousy over material possessions.

Your only job is to convey your own values to your daughter, as in, "We know that Heather has all sorts of cool stuff, but there will always be someone around you who has more. And you are lucky enough to have more than others. I hope you can work on your jealousy, because it is making you unhappy in this friendship."

Your involvement in this other family's parenting is completely inappropriate. You are contributing to the problem, because you are telling your daughter that Heather and Heather's parents are responsible for her own negative feelings and behavior.

Dear Amy: I don't understand why my sister-in-law hates me, but my brother revealed that every time they have a fight, my name is on the table.

I have never borrowed money or asked her to do any favors for me.

My sister-in-law sent me and all of my siblings a nasty text today, and I am really mad about it. How can I deal with this without putting my brother in the middle?

— Upset

Dear Upset: Your brother has actually put you in the middle of this. Why did he tell you that he and his wife fight about you? And why do they fight about you? Is he talking to you about things that he should be discussing with her?

If you truly have no idea why you are a problem for your sister-in-law, then you should ask her, calmly and respectfully: "I've never understood what I do that bothers you so much. Do you want to talk about it?"

If all you receive in return is a snarl, then it might be time to block or mute her number from your phone. Don't make a big declaration or gossip with your siblings about it — just do it.

Dear Amy: "On the B-List" complained about receiving an invitation via text. She suggested Evites. Please remind readers that there are still many people who don't use technology the way they do!

An elderly relative of mine was devastated to miss our family reunion — it turns out that all of the invitations and information were emailed, and our relative does not have a computer!

Dear Sad: Great point.

'Scientific Method' ★★★

When: Through Dec. 2

Where: Rivendell Theatre Ensemble, 5779 N. Ridge Ave.

Running time: 90 minutes

In January 2018, Pew Research Center released the results of a study on women working in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) jobs that revealed 50 percent said they had experienced gender discrimination in the workplace. To get a sense of what that might mean at a visceral level, head over to Rivendell Theatre Ensemble's smart and sometimes gutting production of Jenny Connell Davis' "Scientific Method," now in a world premiere under Devon de Mayo's direction.

Davis' play provides the anecdotes to the real-world data as she traces the story of Amy Lee (Ashley Neal), a graduate student in a cancer research lab at fictional Garfield University run by Julian Milliard (Josh Odor), a man who has every expectation of winning the Nobel Prize someday. The rest of the world seems to share his high opinion of himself.

Amy, who says she comes from "the backwoods of the backwoods," just wants to continue working on her promising research into basal cell carcinoma. But when Julian returns from a conference in Honolulu with the news that she's been "scooped" by another (male) researcher at Stanford, her dreams of a prestigious post-doctorate fellowship and publication in Nature start circling the drain.

Meantime, she's trying to encourage a young black undergraduate, Makayla (Courtney Williams) to aim high for her own academic dreams. Makayla and Amy share a history of parents with cancer, which is what inspired them to go into the sciences in the first place. Hotshot grad student Danny (Glenn Obrero) seems to be in Milliard's good graces as much for his schmooze ability as for his (admittedly impressive) resume. And Marie Healy (Carmen Roman) is in her own competition with Milliard for a newly endowed chair in the department.

All of these threads of ambition tangle together when Amy finds out some unsavory truths about Milliard. Neal's growing anguish and rage — along with her realization of just how little power she has in this cliquish and male-dominated world — is almost painful to watch. Davis does a good job of suggesting just how often men advance on potential (and connections) while women struggle to be recognized for their achievements. (If you saw Madhuri Shekar's "Queen" at Victory Gardens a couple of years ago, some of these arguments will be familiar.)

Davis' story unfolds in a series of vignettes. The passage of time and the growing frustration of Neal's Amy is symbolized by a glass bowl filled with white marbles — each one representing a mouse that has died in the dead-end research project Milliard tosses her into after she's been scooped. They may as well represent her own dying dreams. He tells her "You're a great teacher," to which she responds "I'm a great scientist." It captures the pigeonholes women in STEM have been stuffed into for too long — and Amy realizes that Milliard mostly sees her and other women as technicians or teachers, but not peers.

Lauren Nichols' cool austere set provides a neutral contrast for the growing emotional turmoil and a backdrop for Anthony Churchill's projections of dividing cells. Later, as Amy reaches out to other former women assistants from Milliard's lab, the walls fill with text messages and other private correspondence, suggesting the "whisper network" that women resort to when they feel shut out of official channels.

While Neal is the nucleus of the show, she's well supported by the rest of the cast. Roman's tough no-nonsense professor, who warns Amy to avoid any talk of gender, peels off her emotional armor little by little to show us what decades of denying discrimination has cost her. Her urging Amy to "let the work speak for itself" is countered by Amy's sharp "The work can't speak for itself if it's silenced." At that moment, she's not just fighting for herself. She's fighting for the potentially life-saving research lost to petty academic gamesmanship.

Williams' Makayla (who rightly calls Amy out for not noticing how few black people are involved in their area of research) goes from uncertainty to determination. We see less of Danny's interior life. At one point, he even says, a la every reality show ever, "I'm not here to be anyone's buddy." But Obrero fills him out with a blend of youthful arrogance as well as genuine shock at what he learns about Milliard's way of operating in the world.

It takes a few scenes for Davis' story — which is initially top-heavy with scientific discussion — to find its emotional footing in de Mayo's staging. But when it does, it feels explosive and sorrowful all at once. Gasps of recognition — particularly from women — arose regularly from the audience at the performance I attended. This "Scientific Method" may inspire a very unscientific "burn it all down" response from those who know in their gut what it feels like to be passed over and kicked down by a sexist and racist institution.

BOOK REVIEW

How the Democrats lost Pennsylvania

Book focuses on impact of growing income gap

By Arlie Russell Hochschild
The Washington Post

A month after the 2016 election, Ben Bradlee Jr. began interviewing voters in Luzerne County, Pa., where Donald Trump won 77 percent of the vote. The county, a working-class Democratic stronghold, hadn't voted for a Republican president since 1988. Pennsylvania was one of three historically Democratic Rust Belt states that unexpectedly swung the election to Trump. By July 2018, Bradlee, a longtime reporter and editor for The Boston Globe, had talked to nearly 100 voters, most of whom felt that government and the Democratic Party had forgotten them. They had.

Among the flood of books explaining how we got Trump, "The Forgotten" serves as an unintended companion volume to Thomas Frank's "Listen Liberal: Or, What Ever Happened to the Party of the People?" Bradlee focuses on the impact of the growing income gap.

If we ignore the taxes the government collects and benefits it distributes, from the middle of the Great Depression through 1980, the top 10 percent of Americans received 30 percent of the nation's income growth, and the other 90 percent took in 70 percent of it. But from 1997 to the present, the top 10 percent took in all of the U.S. income growth, and the bottom 90 percent got none. This shift occurred partly under the watch of Presidents Bill Clinton and Barack Obama, and Trump surged into the void claiming leadership of what he called "the forgotten people," Bradlee writes. "Trump connected strongly to his aggrieved constituency," and nowhere more than in Luzerne County. Trump won the general vote in part because he captured Pennsylvania, with strong support in its northeastern corner. And within that region, Luzerne County led the way.

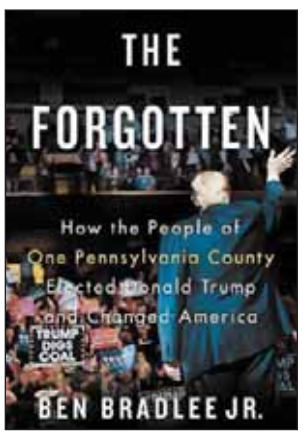

"It is not a stretch to say," Bradlee writes, "that this single county won Trump Pennsylvania — and perhaps the presidency."

Hazleton, the second-largest city in Luzerne, was once the site of fierce struggles to ban child labor in dangerous coal mines. In 1897, 19 striking miners were killed and 32 injured — an eruption that led to the birth of the United Mine Workers Union. Today, coal in Luzerne County is gone, and much of the manufacturing that replaced it is gone, too. Many young people have vanished, leaving behind older, more conservative voters. The young who remain work low-wage jobs with warehouse businesses such as Amazon, Cargill and American Eagle. The jobs are attractive to people coming from even poorer places. In 2000, only 5 percent of Hazelton's population was Hispanic, coming mainly from the Dominican Republic. Today they make up 52 percent of the population. County per-capita incomes are low, averaging $25,000, about $4,500 lower than the state average. If this weren't enough, the opioid crisis in Luzerne County accounted for 154 fatal drug overdoses in 2017 — a rate four times higher than in New York City.

'The Forgotten'

By Ben Bradlee Jr. , Little, Brown, 295 pages, $28

During the 2016 campaign Hillary Clinton seemed deaf to the hardships of Hazleton. Residents wanted realistic hope, but what they got from the Democratic Party was suggested by its choice of a campaign theme song — the Pharrell Williams tune "Happy" from the soundtrack of the animated film "Despicable Me 2."

Clinton lost women like hairdresser Donna Kowalczyk, a crime-fighting activist whose mother worked in cigar and sewing factories. Her father was a disabled alcoholic, and her husband maintained the grounds of a local university. "I used to be the most liberal person you could imagine, fighting for everyone else's rights," she told Bradlee. Her neighborhood fell under the blight of drug dealers, car thieves and prostitutes. This lifelong Democrat was now very unhappy. She "switched parties to vote for Donald Trump," Bradlee writes.

Brian Langan, a recently retired detective with the Pennsylvania State Police, also a born Democrat, had already turned right to vote for Ronald Reagan in 1980. In the 2016 election, he didn't believe that either party had much to offer. He told Bradlee: "I thought, Washington is broke, and I need someone to go down there with a sledgehammer. That was Donald Trump."

Curiously, Trump also drove a wedge between one conservative couple. Jess Harker was a nurse born into a pro-union Democratic household. But when she married Ray Harker, Bradlee writes, "he served as both her religious and political mentor," and Jess became an evangelical Christian Republican. When Trump emerged as the GOP nominee, she "went all-in for Trump." But to her husband, Trump "is a satanic fraud." In 2016 Jess voted for Trump, and Ray cast a defiant vote for Clinton. He now tunes in to Rachel Maddow's show on MSNBC and calls his wife a "Trump bot." Assessing Trump's impact on their relationship, Jess told Bradlee that "'strain' is too pleasant a word to describe what this has done to our marriage. It has torn, ripped at, and tried to squash anything we built. We were, and still can be, in serious trouble if we talk about Trump." The couple is in counseling.

"The Forgotten" reveals the political impact not so much of poverty as of decline — and not simply decline in wages but in well-being and self-respect, especially among white blue-collar men. Research shows that these men have also become more socially isolated, less likely to go to church and to marry. They experience what Princeton professors Angus Deaton and Anne Case identify as "deaths of despair" from suicide, drugs and alcohol at a greater level than blacks and Hispanics of the same age.

Along with their loss of self-respect has come a loss of faith that government run by either mainstream party could help them recover it. This is not a big-thesis book, nor a deep dive into new facts or ideas. But whatever the Russians did or the Koch brothers funded, this searing portrait shines a light on the disheartened voters the Democratic Party forgot.

like "In the Canyon," a play in which he functions, very weirdly, as a perverse symbol of hope.

For this is a rush of an Orwellian dystopian drama for progressives who see the current moment as a harbinger of fascistic, anti-feminist hate, a moment that must be fought against with every available weapon, and, should that describe you, I am going to strive not to spoil this likely cathartic experience. But here are the bones that get West's writerly meat.

We start in 2007; a young woman, maybe in Chicago, has just had an abortion and returned to her apartment. She finds little love from her partner or her roommate; the aftermath is one of vomit and nausea and vulnerability. But for Hope (ha!), played by Liz Sharpe, things are only going to get worse.

We go forward to 2017 and watch Hope have to sit in a church basement and deal with her conservative Christian family celebrating the victory of President Donald J. Trump. Her abortion — actually, she had two in her life — comes up. It is immutable.

By the end of intermission, we're in 2027 and past abortions mean present subpoenas. The world has deteriorated to the point where Hope seriously worries about the ethics of having brought a child, Wendy, into this world. At one point in this scene, a character expresses sadness that it no longer is possible to look things up.

I'm stopping there, although West has decades farther to go. Her themes include the creep of fascism, the demonizing of the opposition and, ultimately, the creation of an alternate reality, all of us having been slowly Keyser Soze'd, a con trick made all the easier by the government ensuring that you no longer can watch that movie. Or any film. This isn't a techno-dystopia, which you might expect. On the contrary. It posits a retreat to the Old West.

The multiple characters (played by Paloma Nozicka, Peter Moore, Andrew Swanson, Diego Colon, Helen Joo Lee, Shariba Rivers and Asia Jackson) come and go in these scenes and they're not always easy to track. Furthermore, West will need to guard against too much red-meat praise from the left, for her political goals actually need complex portraits of her enemies and human cracks in her heroines' armor. Most specifically, there yet is more to do with the final legacy of Hope, played by the fabulously real and ordinary Sharpe with such warmth, intelligence and vulnerability that you lament the lousy moment of her birth. She is the way into the play, and West needs better to understand that, even when all Hope is gone.

West's ultimate optimism — there is only so much dystopia you can take — actually manifests itself through recollection, the hope that when they come and take away your films and freedoms they still will be obliged to leave your memories alone and let you pass them on to your children. Sure. Hopefully.

Founder's death prompts reflection on book exchanges

By Nora Krug
The Washington Post

Every morning in Washington, D.C., I walk by two Little Free Libraries, sometimes more, depending on which way I go to the Metro. I love these tiny book cabinets as much for what they look like as for what's inside them. Each has its own personality, both inside and out, and it is always a little thrill to pop them open and see what wild mix of giveaways awaits me: Norman Mailer mingling with Jacqueline Susann; Danielle Steel leaning beside a book of psalms; the "Communist Manifesto" hanging out with "Diary of a Wimpy Kid."

The idea for the Little Free Library came from Todd Bol, who built his streetside book cabinet in 2009 as "a spiritual gesture" to his late mother, a schoolteacher. Bol died Oct. 18. There are now 75,000 book exchanges in the Little Free Library nonprofit group he created. "I put up my library and noticed my neighbors talking to it like it was a little puppy," Bol once noted. "And I realized there was some kind of magic about it."

I understand that magic. For months I have been taking pictures of the Little Free Libraries on my path — to see what's new, what's been taken, what's been languishing (a copy of Colleen McCullough's "Fortune's Favorites" just would not disappear from the library on my corner).

The organization's motto is "Take a Book, Leave a Book." And though I have a stash of books in the back of our car waiting for that rainy-day project in which my kids and I drop a handful of books in every Little Free Library we pass, I confess I probably take more than I give. How could I pass up a tattered copy of "Wordly Wise," the vocabulary book of my youth, or a yellowed copy of "Shiloh," which my 11-year-old son was reading at school? My 9-year-old daughter once grabbed a copy of "Clutter Control," which begged to be returned — and was.

Yesterday, after reading of Bol's death, my daughter and I tied a white ribbon around the knob on the Little Free Library on our corner, a gesture suggested by Bol's organization. Among the books inside was Junot Diaz's "The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao." On my walk home, I saw a construction worker who had grabbed the book after his shift and was reading it on the grass next to the book cabinet. "I heard it was good," he told me.

Some have criticized the Little Free Libraries as being concentrated in affluent, arrogantly literary neighborhoods "driven more so by the desire to showcase one's passion for books and education than a genuine desire to help the community in a meaningful way." There might be a grain of truth in that. But I prefer to think of Little Free Libraries as demonstrating the title of a book I recently saw inside one: "The Brighter Side of Human Nature."

TV series to explore Hudson murders

By Tracy Swartz
Chicago Tribune

The premiere episode of Geraldo Rivera's celebrity true-crime series will explore the 2008 murders of Oscar winner Jennifer Hudson's mother, brother and 7-year-old nephew.

"Geraldo Rivera's Murder in the Family," which is scheduled to premiere at 8 p.m. Saturday on the Reelz network, features fictionalized re-enactments and interviews with former Cook County Assistant State's Attorney James McKay; longtime entertainment journalist Alicia Quarles; and crime author Michael Benson. The re-enactments and interviews were filmed in Maryland, which is the area where the production team is based, though the murders took place in Chicago.

The hourlong episode is set to air just days after the 10th anniversary of the killings. Darnell Donerson, 57, and Jason Hudson, 29, were shot to death in their Englewood neighborhood home on Oct. 24, 2008.

Rivera

Julian King — the son of Jennifer's older sister, Julia — was abducted from the home and found fatally shot three days later in an SUV parked on the West Side.

William Balfour, who was Julia Hudson's estranged husband at the time, was charged in the triple murder. McKay was the lead prosecutor. A Cook County jury convicted Balfour in May 2012, and he was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. Balfour, 37, is serving his sentence downstate at the Pontiac Correctional Center.

Jennifer Hudson, meanwhile, has experienced much professional success in the last decade. The Burr Ridge resident is a coach on Season 15 of "The Voice," which airs Mondays and Tuesdays on NBC; and she will return as a coach on the upcoming season of "The Voice UK." She is slated to play Aretha Franklin in her biopic and has been cast in the big-screen adaptation of Andrew Lloyd Webber's stage musical "Cats."

Personally, though, the 37-year-old South Side native continues to battle in Cook County court with her ex-fiance, lawyer-turned-professional-wrestler David Otunga, over financial support and a parenting schedule for their 9-year-old son. The case, which was filed nearly a year ago, is set to go to trial here in March. A hearing is scheduled for Dec. 20.

Rivera, a Fox News correspondent, also dives into the family tragedies of celebrities Dylan McDermott, Kelsey Grammer, Donatella Versace, Woody Harrelson and Dave Navarro on his new show.

IIT

Designing a building at IIT, where the master modernist Ludwig Mies van der Rohe laid out an industrial-age expression of brick, steel and glass, is enough to give most architects sleepless nights. To much of the public, the campus is ugly, but architects revere it, especially its centerpiece, Crown Hall, a temple of steel and glass built in 1956.

In shaping the center, Ronan sought to update the lightweight appearance of Mies' buildings with the aforementioned cushions. They're made of a translucent material called ETFE (short for ethylene tetrafluoroethylene).

ETFE, which has previously been used on such prominent structures as the "Water Cube" aquatics center at the 2008 Beijing Summer Olympics, costs only a fraction of what glass costs. And it looks ethereal, the very opposite of stone.

"I wanted the building to float," said Ronan, who teaches at IIT's College of Architecture. "I wanted it to look like a cloud, as if it would float away if it weren't held down. I wanted to make Crown Hall look heavy."

The first floor, wrapped in a conventional glass and metal facade, contains brightly lit, clean-lined flexible spaces where undergraduates can dream up and make new products. The second floor hosts the Institute of Design, a graduate design school founded in 1937 as the New Bauhaus.

A wide bleacher stair, outfitted with colorful foam pads inspired by the Post-it notes that are a staple of communication at the institute, connects the two floors. It's one of several signals that the center, while respectful of the Mies legacy, is more joyful and less sternly Germanic than its IIT predecessors.

The center's pillowy skin is the most important sign of that shift in sensibility.

An advance over the nonadjustable sheathing for structures like the Water Cube, it consists of four layers that create three air chambers. A sophisticated pneumatic system can move the inner layer back and forth to adjust how much light and heat enter the building. The skin's techy sheen and the center's low-slung proportions are a perfect fit for the IIT campus.

The outdoor courtyard area at the new Ed Kaplan Family Institute for Innovation and Tech Entrepreneurship building .

So is the arrangement of the ETFE panels, which subtly alludes to the brick patterns of the Mies buildings. And the center's rounded corners gesture to Mies' famously articulated corners.

The design, in short, strikes the right balance between overly modest self-deprecation — a weak carbon copy of Mies — and indulgent self-expression.

How it wears over time, given the rigors of Chicago's climate and the tendency of students to treat buildings with something less than tender loving care, remains to be seen.

This much is clear: The center beautifully exhibits Ronan's capacity for layering spaces, a hallmark of the Poetry Foundation and the base of his otherwise bland new CNA high-rise in the Loop.

The Mies buildings stand like objects in a field of green. The center, in contrast, draws nature inward via two elegant, asymmetrically arranged courtyards.

The courtyards, filled with trees and framed by glass walls, serve as entrances. They seem likely to be destinations, not just voids, where students and teachers interact. Ronan calls them "collision nodes."

When you're inside the building, the courtyards help orient you. They also provide unimpeded views of the outdoors from most of the interior, including the ETFE-sheathed spaces on the second floor. That's good.

Panoramic views aren't a necessity, but people still need to be able to look outside and connect with the sky and nature. Without the courtyards, the center would be oppressive — a case of design dictatorship, where the occupants have to adjust to the architecture instead of the architecture accommodating them.

The jury is still out on whether the center is as user-friendly as it's supposed to be.

Here's what works: The spaces, airy and infused with shots of color, are pleasantly loftlike rather than harshly industrial. On the first floor, the spaces wend around the building's perimeter, from an "innovation alley" where ideas are hatched, to a "maker space" filled with saws and other machines, to an "idea shop" where parts are assembled.

Because the spaces are visible to passers-by, the center advertises its activities, its process. Modern architecture is often accused of being too abstract to effectively communicate its purpose. But the decoration of traditional buildings isn't the only way to communicate. Transparency can speak just as powerfully. Here, Ronan uses it to cement the center's identity as an "idea factory."

The building also strives to be flexible in intelligent ways. The interior isn't just a big dumb space. It's full of different kinds of spaces. Some are open, others more intimate, many able to be subdivided by curtains and movable partitions. The design gives people choices. It's not blandly "universal," as so many modernist spaces are.

Still, my checklist of unanswered questions is long. There are the acoustics, always a challenge in open-plan interiors. And how will Institute of Design faculty members adjust to having cubicles instead of offices? Most of all, there's the performance of the ETFE — whether it will reduce energy costs, as expected — and its impact on the building's users.

Denis Weil, the dean of the Institute of Design, told me he's gotten some blowback on the moire effect produced by the material. Once people learn not to stare at it, though, they adjust, he said.

Interestingly, the material also has been used for a greenhouse in Denmark. But people, unlike plants, have gotten used to those familiar things called windows.

Working in a cloud sounds cool, especially in the era of cloud computing. Yet it's going to take a while to determine whether IIT's latest design experiment is merely trendy or truly timeless.

The project took about six months to create from inception to completion, according to James Sitar, senior editor at the Poetry Foundation. The team chose three poems from about 20 that spoke to the experience of war — including explosions and poison gas; each vignette having a sort of gravitas that sticks with you after it concludes (and just wait until you see how deadly gas is portrayed — it's eerie). This is Manual Cinema's second project with the foundation this year (the first being "Poem (I Lived in the First Century of World Wars"), based on the Muriel Rukeyser poem of the same name).

"We wanted to make sure that the video could appeal to young and old," Sitar said of "Three World War I Poems." "We wanted something that could give a feeling to what it was like living then and to create more of an emotional, educational experience. A big part of the project is seeing how poets started to write differently about war. WWI was a really different style of warfare that the world had never seen before; war went from something that was a little less horrific to something that was just otherworldly, and poetry had to change to depict what war was like."

MANUAL CINEMA

The project includes illustrated paper puppets, black and white shadow puppetry and animation through the lens of John McCrae's poem.

Sitar said the Manual Cinema team's techniques with the video are nothing less than "spectacular." Dir and Sitar hope that anyone who is curious about watching a different visual style comes to the world premiere Monday.

"With WWI, we're sort of reaching a point where we're losing touch with living people who remember this time and who remember what it was like before that war," Dir added. "As with all historical tragedies, we're at the risk of repeating ourselves if we don't pay attention properly."

Sitar agrees.

"One thing that we discovered in this project is that even though we're covering poems that were written about 100 years ago about something that happened 100 years ago, that there are these parallels or threads that relate very much to today," he said. "One thing that we see over and over with the projects from Manual Cinema is just how much relevancy there is to poems from other times. The one thing we can't forget is poetry has been around for millennia and so much good poetry survives today because it still speaks to human experience today; there's things in poems that still inform our life."

The free premiere of "Three World War I Poems" will be held at Sleeping Village at 7:30 p.m. Monday. After the airing, Manual Cinema will have puppets from the video on hand for audience members to view and touch.

There are many rules regarding correct card play at bridge. One of these concerns the correct card to play when returning partner's suit. The rule says that you should play from "present count," meaning that if your current count, after playing one card already, is even, you should return a high card to tell partner that you have an even number of cards remaining in the suit. Alternatively, should you have an odd number of cards remaining, you should return a low card. When partner knows how many cards you have in the suit, he will also know how many cards declarer has in the suit. There are cases, however, when this rule must be broken.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1♦	Pass	1♥	Pass
1♠	Pass	1NT	Pass
3NT	All pass

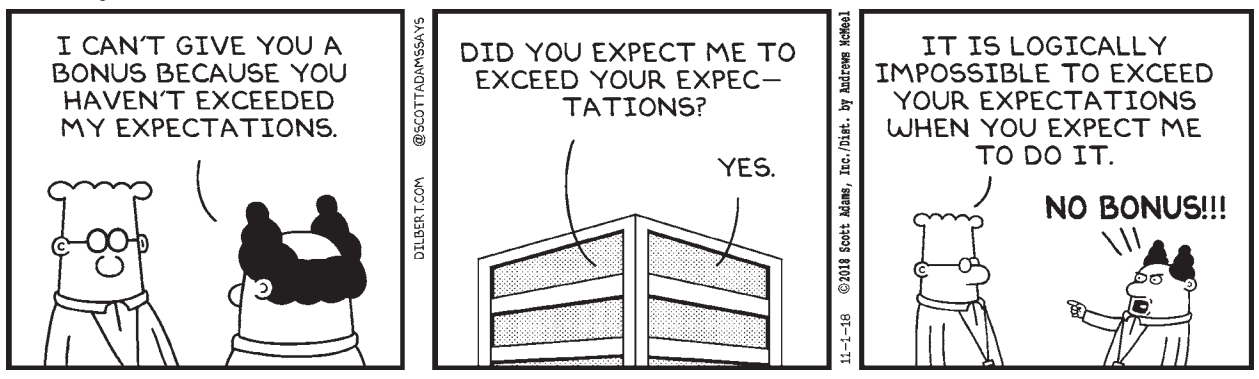

Opening lead: Four of ♣

Today's deal is from a team game at the recent World Championships held in Orlando. At one table, East won the opening club lead and returned his five of clubs, showing an odd number of cards remaining in the suit. Declarer played low and West could not take more than three club tricks plus the ace of spades. The lucky position in diamonds allowed declarer to emerge with nine tricks.

At this table, Italian expert Giorgio Duboin realized that he would never regain the lead and this would be his only chance to return partner's suit. He broke the rule and played back the 10 of clubs. This smoothly allowed the defense to take the first four club tricks. That, plus the ace of spades, meant down one for declarer. Well done!

NATIONAL FORECAST

We are headed into November, our fastest-cooling month, with the normal high temperature starting out Nov. 1 in the middle 50s and ending up at 40 degrees on Nov. 30. This October ended up rather cloudy and wet, with 49 percent of possible sunshine (normal is 57 percent) and a rainfall total of 4.79 inches, 1.64 inches above normal.

Cloudiness will prevail over much of our area Thursday as Chicago will be positioned on the northern edge of cloudiness associated with low pressure tracking east over the Ohio River Valley. There could even be a few periods of light showers or sprinkles south of Interstate 80 and an increasing amount of sun as you go north and farther west of the city.

Temperatures will dip into the 40s Friday, then slowly increase over the weekend.

FRIDAY, NOV. 2

ASK TOM

Dear Tom,

I just moved to Arizona after 72 years in Chicago, and the monsoons are a new experience. What causes them?

— Daniel Murphy, Chandler Ariz.

Dear Daniel,

The term monsoon refers to a seasonal change in wind direction driven by huge temperature differences that develop between land masses and a nearby ocean.

In winter, when the air over land is relatively cool and oceanic air is warm, air flows from land to water.

In summer, it's the opposite; air flows from water to land. Most people think of southern Asia when monsoons are mentioned, but the Arizona (and southwestern U.S.) monsoon is real, extending from about mid-July through mid-September.

Practical, creative uses for chalkboard paint

By Lauren White
HomeAdvisor

Are you a Post-It note champion, dependent on shreds of paper and junk mail envelopes for your to-do lists and appointments? Ditch the clutter and pick up a can of chalkboard paint — or hire a professional painter for an afternoon. Chalkboard paint is a quick and easy way to add creativity and practicality to your home. With this type of paint, you can get a beautiful chalkboard wall or door that will help you consolidate your thoughts and activities in a more attractive way than any dry-erase board. Here are five great ideas to get you started:

DREAMSTIME

Keep track of all your lists with a full wall of chalk paint. On your way out the door, just snap a photo of your lists and you won't forget a thing.

Wall calendars: Wall calendars are an amusing and useful way to centralize your schedule and the activities of family members. Keep track of appointments, leave fun messages and reminders, and jot down quick grocery lists that you can snap photos of on your way to the store. If you have kids, you can use fun drawings on your calendar to keep track of upcoming play dates, sleepovers, soccer matches and parent nights.

Pantry door grocery lists: Paint the inside or outside of your pantry door with chalk paint to help you keep track of your groceries — what you have, what you need and what you want. Make the chalk stick available to everyone so that the list is a collaborative effort among your family members and you won't have to track anyone down for their grocery needs. Having access to this immediate, shared list will ensure that you don't forget anything when it's time to go shopping. Plus, painting an interior door costs only $50 to $200.

Kid-proof tables: Chalk paint may not be right for your formal dining room table, but it's the perfect solution for smaller coffee tables or craft areas. Paint a chalkboard surface on a thrift store table or a low-cost option from Ikea. You'll save on construction paper — and fridge space — if you encourage your kids to draw right on the surface. Just be sure to remind them that your neighbors' tables aren't so chalk-friendly.

Chalkboard drawers and cabinets: You know where everything is in your kitchen, but it can be difficult to navigate for others — even those who live under the same roof! You've probably recognized this after asking your youngest to unload the dishwasher. Give your family and guests a road map with chalked-on labels for silverware, Tupperware, coffee mugs and dinner plates. You'll be able to keep track of what's in each place, entrust dishwasher duty to others and scribble impromptu lists as you go.

Interactive art: An entire chalkboard wall is a great way to inspire the inner artist in your child (or adult friends). If your home design won't mesh well with such a feature, choose a wall that won't affect your home's overall decor. Garages, your child's room or a spare bedroom are prime out-of-sight locations. If a chalkboard wall fits into your theme, like with modern farmhouse and rustic industrial design, consider incorporating it as a central fixture in your kitchen or living room. Having an interior wall painted professionally costs only $100 to $200, and you'll have a surface you can change with your mood, the season and your needs.

By Cathy Hobbs
Tribune News Service

When you walk into a home, what is the first thing you notice? Often the experience is shaped by the point of entry. Whether it's with a mirror placed in an entry hallway, a bench or artwork, creating an appealing point of entry can go a long way in making a positive first impression. The use of an entry console can create a subtle yet impacting look.

Glass: Glass consoles are ideal for areas where the entry may be small or narrow. Glass will help a smaller space feel more open without making it feel overwhelming or stuffed.

Narrow: Narrow consoles are perfect for long walls and entry hallways. If you have an especially long wall, a popular designer trick is to place identical consoles side by side to create the illusion of a single furniture piece. Artwork or mirrors above your console will help create a finished look.

Lacquer: Looking to create a sleek, modern look? Lacquer remains a popular finish and typically comes in matte and lacquer finishes.

Long consoles can also be used in living rooms to help hide entertainment equipment.

Wood: Wood is versatile and an ideal material for timeless elegance. If you are looking for a more formal and elegant look, wood can help provide a luxurious feel. Conversely, if an industrial look is more your taste, wood can also be an attractive choice.

Twins find joy living smaller — together

By Sandy Deneau Dunham
The Seattle Times

SEATTLE — When you upend your life, launch an unconventional adventure, discover valuable insights and end up in a book, for crying out loud, there likely will be questions.

Question 1

"Melinda lived on Mercer Island, and I lived in Kirkland," says Mary. "Melinda was single since the death of her husband; I have been single because of divorce. We have a home on Lopez Island, too. It was really stupid for two people to have three houses. We said: 'Why are we doing this?' "

From there, follow-up questions followed.

Mary and Melinda tinkered with the idea of sharing a home. They told Joe Schneider and Kim Clements of J.A.S. Design-Build (Kevin Price of J.A.S. had designed the sisters' Lopez home), "If you ever find a perfect house for us to downsize, let us know."

Schneider and Clements presented potential, anyway — right across the street from their Wallingford office — in the form of a sagging 1920s house that had sat empty and defenseless under invasion by icky syringes and greedy vegetation. Perfection would take considerable tinkering.

Question 2

"My first thought," says Melinda, "was, 'I'm giving up Mercer Island for this?' "

Yep. And Mary gave up Kirkland. (They kept the Lopez home.) And then they got down to work with J.A.S. designer Mike Freeman — remodeling and reimagining, but not razing.

"A lot of people would have said knock it down," Freeman says. "We tend to prefer to use what's there. There were lots of good materials to work with: first-growth fir, 800 years old — you can't replicate that."

Beams were salvaged, as were the front door and sliding windows.

"For the most part, we kept the structure, the stuff you can't see," he says. "One of the big tricks with a big, open kitchen/dining/office all-in-one is to not have any walls. To get to open space in here, which really did make sense, we retrofitted the entire front of the house into a truss system."

Question 3

"They said, 'It's 1,000 square feet; can you make it work?' " says Melinda.

It took some work — and some introspection — but, again: Yep.

"It's surprising in living a life how much you amass," Melinda says. "You think, 'That was a different time period; I'm evolved.' I had lots of frilly things before."

Adds Mary: "We threw a lot of stuff away in our old households. Especially the repeats. We both have similar taste. We donated a lot."

In the end, they saved what matters most: nostalgic things (a scale displayed on the storage wall separating the great room from the private wing "is the last thing my husband gave me," Melinda says), historic things (the clock at the end of the hall had hung in their family's grocery store in Utah), things they both love (blue-and-white porcelain) and things they both need (like clothing).

Question 4

The sisters share a closet. It is not huge. But it is enough.

"People say, 'Oh my God; that's all you have?' " says Mary. "We share clothes; that helps a lot."

The closet opens at both ends, linking the twins' bedrooms,

MIKE SIEGEL/SEATTLE TIMES PHOTOS

When sisters Mary Speckart and Melinda Lloyd downsized into a remodeled home, only their most special possessions came with them — including this clock.

A scale displayed on the storage wall near the kitchen "is the last thing my husband gave me," Lloyd says.

which both have bump-outs and are almost exactly equally sized ("Parity for the twins," Freeman says). The bedrooms are not huge, either. But they are enough.

Question 5 & 6

"For a house that's this size, why would we dedicate a whole lot of space for this area?" asks Freeman. "The bedrooms are a place for a bed. They're comfortably large enough to get around a bed."

Question 7

Did someone mention a book?

Yep! Seattle author Marc Vassallo has included the twins' inspiring home in his inspiring new book, "Little House in the City: Living Small Within City Limits."

It is not about "tiny houses." It is not about bashing big houses. It is a celebration of 37 new/remodeled/even backyard houses, all under 1,800 square feet and all within the borders of 20 cities, from Toronto to Savannah, Ga.

"I call small city houses 'the next little thing,'" Vassallo says.

Back in Wallingford, because the sisters love to entertain, gatherings naturally spill out onto the broad and welcoming front porch where, even on nonparty days, Ella their adorable dog "is our ambassador in the community," Melinda says. "Everybody is really, really great with walking by and saying hi. We go out and sit with her."

And therein lies a very fundamental answer to the making-a-small-space-work question.

"With a little city house, everything you need is decidedly not in your house," Vassallo says. "Rather, you're allowing your neighborhood and your city to become extensions of your home; this is something to celebrate."

Prepare plumbing for winter

By Paul F. P. Pogue
Angie's List

Colder weather is arriving soon — or even here already. Take precautions now to ensure your pipes and water supply remain in good order throughout the winter.

Plan ahead: If you have leaking pipes or faucets, hire a plumber now to fix the problem. Leaks in moderate weather become much bigger problems once temperatures drop below freezing.

Prepare your pipes with insulation, which provides the first line of defense against freezing. Insulation tubes from a hardware store should provide effective protection. Pay particular attention to pipes in unheated areas, those that have frozen in previous winters and pipes that have been repaired in the past year.

If your outdoor water faucets have a separate shut-off valve, close the valve, open the spigots to drain the lines and leave them open until spring.

If your faucets have a back-flow prevention device, be sure to disconnect it so that the water drains from the line.

Fill any exterior cracks or holes with spray foam insulation and caulking. Do the same with openings around outdoor faucets or hose bibs. This blocks cold air from coming in along the pipes, and it saves energy at the same time.

Preparing your vacation home: If you spend your winters in a different home, make sure you prepare the home you leave behind for bad weather. Vacation homes can suffer major damage if a frozen pipe springs a leak; you might not notice the water damage for months.

A burst main water line can wreak havoc when left unattended for months at a time. To prevent this from happening, turn off the water meter yourself using the meter key, or hire a plumber to do so properly. Open all of your faucets and valves to drain the pipes. Then, turn off the water using the shut-off valve inside your house and leave the faucets open.

Water can hide out in plumbing fixtures, so be sure to address those. Disconnect and drain your washing machine hoses and dishwasher drain lines. Drain all spray attachments and shower heads. Turn off the water heater and drain the tank entirely. Finally, flush your toilets and remove excess water from tanks and bowls.

What to do when the pipes freeze: Despite your best efforts, you may end up with frozen pipes anyway, so have a plan in mind for that event. First, close the main shutoff valve to prevent any leaks. Then find the source of the freeze. If one or two faucets don't work, the freeze is between the split from the main line. If none work, it's near the main water line. To thaw a pipe, Wrap the pipe in a towel doused with hot water, or warm it with a hair dryer on the lowest setting. Never use a flame.

Keep your plumber's emergency contact info handy in case you run into a problem you can't handle alone.

Winter is also a good time to review your emergency kit, which should contain (among other things) one gallon of water per person per day in the event of emergency or loss of water supply.

Lady palms kept indoors need sufficient indirect light

By Tim Johnson
Chicago Tribune

I purchased three lady palms late last year and thought they would look nice in the corners of my family room. The plants looked great for the first few months but now seem to be thinning out and looking a bit ragged with foliage that is a bit off-color, especially the plant that is in a darker corner. I thought these were low-maintenance plants that required little light. Is there something that I can do to improve their appearance?

— Allison Pendel, Libertyville

CHICAGO BOTANIC GARDEN

Remove lower leaves on the fronds of the lady palm as they yellow and trim off brown tips while keeping the natural shape of the leaf as needed.

The lady palm (Rhapis excelsa) is a small fan palm that can perform well indoors due to its tolerance of the lower light intensity, lower humidity and colder weather that are typical of a home's growing conditions. It grows from multiple stems, each topped with upright fronds. As the name implies, the fronds are split into fanlike segments. The lady palm is one of the best-suited to indoor cultivation of all the fan palms. There are a number of varieties of this palm to choose from.

This plant will grow best in bright, indirect light from a window or skylight all day long. It is likely that your plants are declining because of the low light where you placed them. Providing proper light levels is probably the most important factor to optimizing the performance of your palms. Remove lower leaves on the fronds as they yellow and trim off brown tips while keeping the natural shape of the leaf as needed. Sharp scissors work well for this. Palms lose inner and lower fronds in low light, so remove them as they thin out and begin looking bad. Avoid cutting back the tips of the stems since that is where the growing points are located. Cut out the entire stem when most of the fronds have been pruned off. This encourages new growth at the base of the plant if light conditions are adequate. This does sound unlikely in your situation.

Since the plants have lasted about a year in the room and are currently in decline, you are probably better off buying new plants once a year or so to keep the display looking good. Lady palms are widely available for purchase, so it is easy to find them in a variety of sizes. The light level needs to be increased for the plants to perform properly. If you have a sunnier spot in your home, try growing two sets of palms and rotating them between the darker family room and sunnier location every couple of months. Switching the plants between the corners of your room every two to three weeks may help too. The plants that are off display could be grown outside during the summer in their recovery period.

Lady palms are relatively slow-growing plants and need light fertilization that is best applied during the growing season. Use slow-release fertilizer in spring or a biweekly diluted liquid fertilizer. A plant that has an overall yellowish color may need fertilizer. Avoid fertilizing during the winter. Water the palms thoroughly as they prefer to stay moist but not waterlogged. If the growing medium is kept too wet, root rot and damage will eventually show up in the foliage with browning tips or spotting on the new growth.

Palms that are kept too dry can develop gray foliage and burned tips. Roots are typically clustered at the bottom of the container, so they may still be moist when the top of the medium is dry. Reduce watering to monthly or every other week depending on temperature and light levels in your home during the winter. Palms that are grown in low light levels require less watering year-round. Keep them out of cold drafts in the winter.

Get size right when building a shed

By Tim Carter
Tribune Content Agency

This shed has a metal skin to prevent wood rot on the side walls. When deciding on a size, remember that you'll need to access all the shed's contents.

Q: What can you tell me about outdoor sheds? I'm thinking it could end up being an outdoor retreat more than it might be for garden stuff and junk. How can you keep a shed cool that bakes in the sun all day? I want to make sure the shed is big enough, so please share sizing tips.

A: Sheds are popular. I've built more sheds than I can remember, and several stand out in my mind. My favorite shed of all time was the L-shaped Queen Anne Victorian one I built at my last house. It matched our home in every detail, including all the colors. My wife loved that shed. It even had a 6-foot wide overhead door so my garden tractor could go in and out with ease.

Based on the email that I get, I'd say the biggest mistake you might make when building or buying a prebuilt shed is that it's going to be too small. You may look at an 8-by-10-foot shed thinking it's enormous, but it's not. You need to keep in mind that you have to be able to get at things in the shed, so there has to be a clear floor area allowing you access.

If you're going to use the shed as a hideout from your significant other or the kids, it's very important that you use some graph paper to create a crude plan. Create scale cutouts of the furniture you'll have in the shed and make sure it fits. The easiest way to size one of these hideout sheds is to look at a room in your home that you feel is a perfect size. Make the shed the same size.

Before you get too far in the project, be sure you're allowed to build the shed. You need to check with your local government officials to see if there are any zoning restrictions. The last thing you need is a stop-work notice because you failed to get all the required permits to do the work.

You may feel the answer to keeping a shed cool in the heat of summer is just adding more insulation. That's folly. Insulation gets hot too, and it releases the heat slowly. The best way to keep the shed cool is to build a second roof over the shed. I know this sounds crazy, but it's true. The upper roof will shade the shed. You know this is the best way as you stand in the shade when possible to lower the heat gain on your body.

If you plan to have a wood floor system in your shed, be sure the floor joists and the plywood floor are treated lumber. You may not realize it, but you can buy plywood that's been treated with the same chemicals as regular timbers and decking made to resist water.

I've created a page at my website that has numerous shed planning videos and lots of other shed-building tips. Go to go.askthebuilder.com/sheds.

Q: I saw a show on TV that talked about using pocket doors. I've not seen one in decades. Are they still made? Better yet, are they really any good or do they rub and come off the track? I'm not interested in having a problem door, but the thought of a disappearing door intrigues me!

A: I tend to think most of what you see on cable TV home improvement shows is fantasy. But in this case, Becky was given a morsel of information about a great product.

Pocket doors are alive and well and they're better than ever. You wouldn't think it possible to constantly improve these devices that are hundreds of years old, but it's happening all the time.

I've installed countless pocket doors on my jobs and had two of them in the last home I built for my family. My daughter is building a new home now, and it will have at least five pocket doors.

I prefer the pocket door hardware that features three-wheeled trolleys. A trolley is what connects to the top of the door and then fits into a special track. These trolleys can't jump off the track, and the nylon rollers with precision ball-bearings will last for generations.

You can now get soft-close hardware for pocket doors. This is a popular feature that's been on drawers for quite some time. There's no more banging of doors in the pocket or out on the jamb if you equip it with the soft-close accessory.

Follow the simple installation instructions and you'll not have any rubbing. The key is to use thin studs that are capped in steel. This prevents warping. You can also buy an accessory kit that allows you to install thin plywood over the pocket so you can hang heavy pictures right next to the door opening.

I have pocket door videos and lots of tips for you on my website at go.askthebuilder.com/pocketdoortips.

Suburban housing advice for millennials with kids

By Ellen James Martin
Andrews McMeel Syndication

RON CHAPPLE/GETTY

After becoming parents, millennial city dwellers often look in the suburbs for a classic detached house.

Millennials are famously urban. Give them a city apartment near trendy restaurants, pubs and a Pilates studio, and they'll be content for years. Or so goes conventional wisdom.

But real estate analysts say something surprising happens to these young urbanites after they've had a child or two: They retreat to a suburban enclave in search of the same sort of classic detached house in which they were raised.

Though many millennials eventually make the predictable transition from city to suburbs once they become parents, real estate specialists stress that suburban living is not for everyone. They advise homebuyers to carefully ponder their housing moves before investing in a property.

Start by envisioning your ideal neighborhood.

Doro Kiley, a certified life coach who helps clients navigate major transitions, says that before starting a home search, families should first imagine their ideal neighborhood.

"Always begin by thinking about the end product — what you'd really like as opposed to what you would settle for," Kiley says.

Once you have a clear picture of your ideal neighborhood, begin factoring in such practical realities as your financial limits.

Next, imagine the ideal property.

Kiley says both partners should write down their respective visions of a dream house, including home features. They should combine the key elements of both into a single statement.

Written statements help people clarify their thinking and refine their plans as they move through successive drafts. This is also a way to help reconcile conflicting views.

Merrill Ottwein, a real estate broker and former president of the National Association of Exclusive Buyer Agents, suggests homebuyers try to reconcile their differences by distinguishing between wants and needs.

A couple with two school-age children and one parent who needs a home office for telecommuting might decide that a place with at least four bedrooms is a genuine need. But a formal dining room could easily fall into their "want" category.

Factor in commuting distances.

As Ottwein says, one of the most wrenching trade-offs many families face is between a larger, newer house with a longer commute, and a smaller, older place that's closer to the city center and the workplace of the primary breadwinner.

Buyers who consider an outer-tier suburb are often driven by the desire for a larger property or what they perceive to be better schools.

"Sadly, good schools often correlate with newer suburbs rather than older areas that are close in," Ottwein says.

But before you opt for a distant suburb, he strongly recommends you do morning and afternoon rush-hour test drives from your target area — to know what sort of traffic to expect.

As Ottwein says, buyers should disabuse themselves of the notion that the current level of traffic congestion on their path will remain static. The odds are traffic will worsen as the years go on.

Don't assume you'll need a huge yard.

Many parents hang on tightly to the hope that their kids will have as large a backyard as they had growing up. This aspiration can influence them to pick an outlying suburb at the expense of their convenience and commuting time.

But are the trade-offs necessary to acquire a large piece of land always worth it? Not in many cases, says Ottwein, noting that today's children often spend much more time in organized athletic and recreational activities than did their parents. "Today's kids are programmed to the hilt with team sports, music lessons and school events. They have little time for the sort of free backyard frolicking their folks remember so nostalgically," he says.
